Shares of stock

Shares of corporate stock which have been issued are "goods" within the statute of frauds. Comp. Laws, § 9516. Sprague v. Hosie, 118 N. W. 497, 499, 155 Mich. 30, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 874, 130 Am. St. Rep. 558.

Corporate stock is "goods, wares, and merchandise" within Civ. Code 1895, § 2693, par. 7, requiring contracts for the sale of "goods, wares, and merchandise" to the amount of $50 or more to be in writing. Hightower v. Ansley, 54 S. E. 939, 940, 126 Ga. 8, 7 Ann. Cas. 927.

Wearing apparel and personal ornaments

The words "goods and chattels" are ordinarily broad enough to cover all personal property, but gifts of necessary wearing apparel and personal ornaments by a husband to his wife are not within Code 1906, § 2522, providing that a transfer of "goods and chattels" between husband and wife is invalid as against third persons, unless in writing and acknowledged and filed for record as a mortgage; the object of the statute being to prevent the perpetration of frauds by pretended transfers between husband and wife, without affecting the duty of a husband to support his wife in a way suitable to her station and his condition in life. Kennington v. Hemingway, 57 South. 809, 810, 101 Miss. 259, 89 L. R. A. (N. S.) 541.

GOODS IN STORE

The term "goods in store," in a chattel mortgage, does not include an iron safe kept for use, and not for sale; it has reference only to merchandise and commodities kept on hand for purposes of sale. Curtis v. Phillips, 5 Mich. 112, 113.

GOPHER HOLING

The term "gopher holing," as used in mining, consists in drilling horizontal holes into the bank, charging them with dynamite or powder, attaching a fuse, and exploding the charge. Spino v. Butler Bros., 129 N. W. 590, 113 Minn. 328.

GOVERN

See Be Governed.

is to 'regulate by authority'; another, 'to direct or control.' To be "governed," therefore, is to be regulated by authority or to be directed or controlled, and the one regulated, directed, or controlled by the authority of another is subject to that other. An act passed at the June session, 1836, of the General Assembly, amending an act incorporating the New York, Providence & Boston Railroad Company, provided in section 2 that said corporation should be liable for damages from the burning of property by fire communicated by the engines. An act passed at the October session, 1846, further amending the original act of incorporation, authorized the railroad company to construct an extension of its existing railroad, and provided in section 9 that such railroad, when constructed, should be managed, governed, and protected in all respects by the provisions of the charter and amendments theretofore granted to the corporation. Held, that section 2 of the act of 1836 applied to the extension authorized by the act of 1846, and made the railroad company liable for a fire caused by an engine operating on the extension. Gorham Mfg. Co. v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 60 Atl. 638, 639, 27 R. I. 85.

The words "govern" and "regulate," as used in Const. art. 284, giving the Railroad Commission power to govern and regulate railroad tariff and service, should be given a broad meaning so as to invest the commission with sufficient authority to prevent the railroad from taking down and doing away with any part of its road, and hence the commission had power to order that a spur or switch be not removed, subject to review by the court. Railroad Commission of Louisiana v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., 35 South. 487, 489, 111 La. 133.

GOVERNED BY ILLINOIS CLASSIFICATION

The phrase "governed by Illinois classification," in a published rate filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, does not mean a classification subsequently adopted by the Illinois Railway Commission unless the words "as from time to time that classification may be changed" are added to the words "governed by Illinois classification," and that cannot be done unless such words are to be judicially imported into the published rate as filed, and since such a construction, if adopted, would authorize the state commission at any time, through changes of state classifications, to alter from time to time, and without the consent of the interstate carriers, interstate rates for interstate commerce, unless such interstate carrier instantly reconforms its tariff sheets to the changed classifications of the commission. The question of such construction is one on which judges might reasonably disagree. Standard Oil Co. of Indiana v. United States, 164 Fed. 376, 388, 90 C. C. A. 364.

GOVERNING AUTHORITY

Other governing authority, see Other.

GOVERNING BODY

The term "governing body," as used with reference to a city, means common council or other body performing legislative functions. Borough of Rutherford v. Hudson River Traction Co., 63 Atl. 84, 88, 73 N. J. Law, 227.

The term "governing body," as used in Const. art. 11, § 1, relative to the fixing of water rates, is to be understood in the same sense as the term "corporate authority" referred to in article 9, § 12, relative to the assessment and collection of local taxes, and means no more than that the official body thereby referred to is to have the power of performing the duty specified. In re Pfahler, 88 Pac. 270, 278, 150 Cal. 71, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092, 11 Ann. Cas. 911.

GOVERNMENT

See Branch of State Government; City Government; Full State Government; Good Government; Municipal Government; Permanent Form of Government; Representative Government; Republican Government; State Government.

"Government" is the exercise of authority in the administration of the affairs of a state, community, or society. Platt v. City and County of San Francisco, 110 Pac. 304, 309, 153 Cal. 74.

A "government" does not exist in a personal sense, or as an entity in any primary sense, for the purpose of acquiring, protecting, and enjoying property. It exists primarily for the protection of the people in their individual rights, and holds property not primarily for the enjoyment of property accumulations, but as an incident to the purpose for which it exists—that of serving the people and protecting them in their rights. Curley v. United States, 130 Fed. 1, 8, 64 O. C. A. 369.

GOVERNMENT BOND

A "government bond" is a contract which imports a loan of money by an individual to the government at a stipulated rate of interest payable at a designated time and place. The income and dividends of such a bond are generally supposed to be this interest. New York Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Baker, 59 N. E. 257, 259, 165 N. Y. 484, 53 L. R. A. 544.

GOVERNMENTAL ACT

A governmental use may include any act which the state may lawfully perform or authorize. There are, however, governmental acts to which certain immunities attach. In this sense a "governmental act" is one done in pursuance of some duty imposed by the state on a person, individual or corporate, which duty is one pertaining to the administration of government and is imposed as an absolute obligation on a person who receives no profit or advantage peculiar to himself for its execution. Markwardt v. City of Guthrie, 90 Pac. 28, 30, 18 Okl. 32, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1150, 11 Ann. Cas. 581 (quoting Platt v. City of Waterbury, 45 Atl. 154, 72 Conn. 531, 48 L. R. A. 691, 77 Am. St. Rep. 335).

GOVERNMENTAL DUTY

The duty imposed on the board of freeholders by Pub. Laws 1898, p. 877, § 30, providing that they "shall take care that detained witnesses shall be comfortably lodged," etc., is a "governmental duty" of a purely public character for the neglect of which no private action lies in favor of one specially damaged in the absence of statute confirming such right of action. Watkins v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Atlantic County, 62 Atl. 1134, 1135, 73 N. J. Law, 213.

GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTION

One of the "governmental functions of a municipality" is the supplying of a sufficient amount of water for its public uses, such as the watering of its streets and parks, the extinguishing of fires, and providing its citizens with a sufficient supply of water as pure as it can reasonably be made. Kirch v. City of Louisville, 101 S. W. 373, 375, 125 Ky. 391.

GOVERNMENTAL POWER

Municipal corporations have two classes of powers—the one, governmental, in the exercise of which their officers may not bind the municipality beyond their terms of office; the other, business powers, in the exercise of which they are governed by the same rules as individuals or private corporations. Tuttle Bros. & Bruce v. City of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, 176 Fed. 86, 99 C. C. A. 606.

A city exercises its business and not its governmental power in making a contract to accept the dedication of and grade streets and alleys within its limits. Tuttle Bros. & Bruce v. City of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, 176 Fed. 86, 88, 99 C. C. A. 606.

Municipal corporations have two classes of powers, the one "governmental," in the exercise of which their officers may not bind the municipalities beyond their terms of office, the other business or proprietary, in the exercise of which they are governed by the same rules as individuals or private corporations. The court said: "In the exercise of powers which are strictly governmental or legislative, the officers of a city are trustees for the public, and they may make no grant or contract which will bind the municipality beyond the terms of their offices, because they may not lawfully circumscribe the legislative powers of their successors. But in the exercise of the business powers of a city, the municipality and its officers are controlled by no such rule, and they may lawfully exercise these powers in the same way, and in their exercise the city will be governed by the same rules which control a private individual or a business corporation under like circumstances." A city exercises its business or proprietary power in purchasing water-works or contracting for their construction or operation. The power of a city to regulate or fix the rates which a water, gas, or railway company may collect of private consumers partakes of the nature of a governmental power and also of the nature of a business power. Omaha Water Co. v. City of Omaha, 147 Fed. 1, 5, 77 C. C. A. 267, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 736, 8 Ann. Cas. 614 (citing Illinois Trust & Savings Bank v. Arkansas City, 76 Fed. 271, 292, 22 C. C. A. 171, 182, 34 L. R. A. 518).

Municipal corporations have two aspects. In one their functions are chiefly ministerial, and relate to corporate interests only. These include the making of public improvements, the repair of such improvements, and the holding of property for corporate purposes. The officers of the municipality in exercising this class of powers are to be regarded as agents of the lesser public and the maxim of respondent superior applies. In the other aspect, the municipality is regarded as holding a quasi delegated sovereignty for the preservation of the public peace and safety and the prevention of crime. This includes the maintenance of a police force, the appointment of officers charged with the public health, the establishment of regulations for the suppression of vice, and other matters of public concern in which all people have a common interest. As to this class of powers the municipal officers are regarded as agents of the greater public and the maxim respondent superior does not apply. Barree v. City of Cape Girardeau, 95 S. W. 330, 332, 197 Mo. 382, & L. R. A. (N. S.) 1090, 114 Am. St. Rep. 763 (citing Donahoe v. Kansas City, 38 S. W. 571, 136 Mo. 657; Bullmaster v. City of St. Joseph, 70 Mo. App. 60; Maximilian v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468; Conrad v. Village of Ithaca, 16 N. Y. 158; Jones v. City of New Haven, 34 Conn. 1).

GRABBOT COTTON

Acts 1896, p. 172, c. 156, § 16, imposes a tax on all "lint cotton" annually grown in a levee district, etc., and Acts 1904, p. 126, c. 90, § 5, makes it unlawful for any person to remove from the district any "cotton" grown therein without first paying the levee tax thereon, and declares that the levee board may recover from the person wrongfully removing such cotton a certain penalty tax on each bale or hundredweight of "seed cotton" so removed. Held, that the words "lint cotton" in the first act and "cotton" and "seed cotton" in the second act were limited to "lint cotton" ginned by ordinary gins, and did not include "linter" or "Grabbot" cotton, obtained by reginning cotton seed and hard locks of cotton and cotton mixed with hulls, bolls, and other substances which could not be removed by ordinary ginning. Mississippi Levee Com'rs v. Refuge Cotton Oil Co., 44 South. 828, 829, 91 Miss. 480.

GRABIRON

A "handhold" or "grabiron" is a rod of iron placed diagonally on the top of a railway freight car about 12 or 15 inches from the edge, and fastened on with lag screws extending into the roof boards on the top of the car, to assist a brakeman in getting on and off the car. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Box (Tex.) 93 S. W. 134, 136.

In railroad parlance, a "grabiron" is an iron handhold near the top of the tender of a switch engine above the footboard, which enables employes to get on the engine while it is moving slowly and to stand securely on the footboard while the engine is moving. Pollard's Adm'x v. Kentucky & I. Bridge & R. Co. (Ky.) 97 S. W. 735.

An iron rod extending horizontally across the door near the center in the cab of a construction train is known as the "grabiron." Atlanta & B. Air Line R. Co. v. McManus, 58 S. E. 258, 259, 1 Ga. App. 302.

In army and navy

Under Act April 22, 1898, c. 187, § 6, providing that, where a state militia regiment enlisted during the Spanish War in a body as a regiment, the regimental officers shall have the same grade as when in the state service, the term "grade" means a step or degree in their office or rank, and has reference to the divisions of the one or the other or both, according to the connection in which the word is employed. Hawkins v. United States, 40 Ct. Cl. 110, 114.

In school

The law recognizes but three school "grades," namely, primary, grammar, and high school, and certificates authorizing teachers to instruct in these grades qualify the teacher for services only in the grade or grades covered by the certificate; hence it is in the statutory sense that the court must regard the term "grade" when seeking a limitation upon the powers of the board of education to transfer and assign teachers. Loehr v. Board of Education of City and County of San Francisco, 108 Pac. 825, 828, 12 Cal. App. 671.

Of railroad

Raising a railroad track two or three feet was "grading" and not surfacing, within the meaning of a contract, and whether grading was done before or after the track was made was immaterial. Snell v. Cottingham, 72 Ill. 161, 168.

A contractor agreed to furnish the work, tools, etc., to do "all the grading required for filling." Held, that the word "grading" is not synonymous with "filling." Manifestly the word was not employed in the technical sense of bringing the surface to a line or grade, but in the broader sense of including the excavating and filling contemplated by the agreement of the parties. Parrott v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co., 108 N. W. 352, 353, 127 Iowa, 419.

Of sidewalk

Buffalo City Charter, § 288, as amended, provides for the laying and relaying of sidewalks at the expense of abutting owners. Laws 1891, p. 221, c. 105, § 393, divides streets into carriage ways and sidewalks, and Buffalo City Ordinance, c. 4, para. 8, 9, declares that the owner or occupant may be required to grade and level the sidewalk in front of his premises between the street and curbs, and, on his failure to grade and level the sidewalk for ten days after notice, the same may be done at his expense. Held, that the words "laying or relaying" of a sidewalk, within section 288, have the same meaning as "grading or regrading" in section 8, in each case referring to original work on the sidewalk or street, and not to repair after the sidewalk is once laid or relaid. Konowski v. City of Buffalo, 115 N. Y. Supp. 467, 469, 131 App. Div. 465.

Of street or highway

Change of grade, see Change.

A complaint, in an action to reform a contract, alleging that the term "graded street" as used in the contract meant a street graded, graveled, guttered, curbed, sidewalked, and otherwise improved and placed in a finished and completed condition for travel and use thereof by the public and acceptable to the city, held to state the true import of the contract. Chapin v. Ross, 84 Pac. 53, 54, 2 Cal. App. 433.

The "grading" of a street is its physical opening. The ordinance to open is usually the first step, after which a jury is appointed and damages assessed and paid, and thereafter, when the city is in funds, the physical grading is done. The physical opening or grading is the depositing of dirt on the strip taken as the street, or the cutting out of dirt from that strip according as the grading consists of a fill or a cut. In re Sedgley Ave., 66 Atl. 546, 547, 217 Pa. 313.

Same—Change of level

The term "grade" in Gen. St. 1902, § 2051, making the municipality liable for special damages resulting from a change in a street grade, is used not to signify a level precisely established by mathematical points and lines, but the surface of the highway as it in fact exists; and any elevation or depression of this surface by municipal authorities resulting from an attempt to establish a grade is a change of grade which, if damages result, will support an action. Pickles v. City of Ansonia, 56 Atl. 552, 553, 76 Conn. 278.

Since the ordinary meaning of the term "grade" is the amount of difference between grade line and a level or horizontal line, and to grade a street is to bring the surface to the grade line, a village charter authorizing it to grade its streets did not include permission to erect a wall in the street to alter its grade, without ordinance or resolution, nor authorize the closing or withdrawal of any part of the street from public use. Hyland v. President and Trustees of Village of Ossining, 107 N. Y. Supp. 225-230, 57 Misc. Rep. 212.

GRADE CROSSING

When a railroad highway and a carriage highway intersect at a common grade, the "grade crossing" thus formed is established by the state through its agents, and a grade crossing is in the nature of a nuisance and cannot lawfully exist unless pursuant to state authority. Cowles v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 66 Atl. 1020, 1022, 80 Conn. 45, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1067, 10 Ann. Cas. 481.

GRADED SALARIES

The term "graded," as used in Const. art. 128, providing that justices of the peace and constables shall receive no fees in criminal matters, including peace bond cases, but in lieu thereof such salaries as may be fixed by the police jury and paid by the parish, which salaries shall be graded, means to allow a larger salary to one justice than to another according as he was liable to be called on to do more work than another, and such section not being self-executing, in that it prescribed no mode of grading, the making of a contract between the police jury and a particular justice of the peace fixing the amount of his salary was a proper method of grading. Klees v. Police Jury of Parish of St. Bernard, 39 South. 247, 248, 131 La. 263.

GRADING OUTFIT

The property attached in an action and the ownership of which was contested consisted of mules, horses, wagons, scrapers, and other implements usually termed "grading outfits." Hicks Co. v. Thomas, 38 South. 145, 149, 114 La. 219.

GRADUATE

By "graduating the license" is meant to regulate its amount according to the amount of the gross sales of the licensee, or on some other basis of proportion. Thus, under the general license law, the wholesale merchant pays $3,500 if his gross sales amount to seven millions or more, and $50 if they amount to a quarter of a million or less; and the retail merchant's license varies in the same way, from $3,500 to $5, according to the amount of his sales. State v. Rittenberg, 86 South. 330, 331, 112 La. 224.

GRADUATED TAX

"If different rates are levied on inheritances or bequests according to the degree of relationship of the heir or successor, the tax is sometimes called a 'graduated' or 'progressive' tax. 'Graduated or progressive taxation' is intimately associated with that of classification, and perhaps amounts substantially to the same thing. The progressive rule is applied to the income tax, which in principle is identical with the inheritance tax; the only difference being that the income tax is one upon property, while the inheritance tax is upon the right of succession." State ex rel. Foot v. Bazille, 106 N. W. 93, 96, 97, 97 Minn. 11, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 732, 7 Ann. Cas. 1056.

GRAFT

"Graft," as defined by the Century Dictionary, is a dishonest gain, acquired by private or secret practice, or corrupt agreement or connivance, especially in a position of trust, as by offering or accepting bribes; and the trial court correctly instructed that "graft" is a dishonest transaction in relation to public or official acts, an advantage which one person, by reason of his peculiar position or superior influence or trust, acquires from another. Quinn v. Review Pub. Co., 104 Pac. 181, 183, 55 Wash. 69, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1016, 19 Ann. Cas. 1077.

The term "graft" is but another name for dishonesty, corruption, or fraud. Merrimon v. Southern Pav. & Const. Co., 55 S. E. 366, 371, 142 N. C. 539, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 574.

The word "graft" in its generally accepted meaning, as applied to individuals, public officials, corporations, etc., imputes to the person, officer, or corporation charged with grafting dishonesty; dishonest gain by reason of public office, or public or private position; irregular or unlawful means of support; the use of office or position for personal gain; without rendering fair or compensatory service; to steal; to swindle. State v. Sheridan, 93 Pac. 656, 658, 14 Idaho, 222, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 497.

Where an alleged libelous article attacking correspondence schools of education was headed with the word "graft" and attacked the contracts and mode of doing business by such schools as unjust, harsh, etc., whether the term "graft" was used in its most reflective sense as involving wrongdoing and illegality, or in its nonobjectionable sense as a "soft snap," was for the jury. International Text-Book Co. v. Leader Printing Co., 189 Fed. 86, 89.

A newspaper article, charging that justice has been outdone, that it is a matter of self-exposure, self-ignorance, bad recollection, no bookkeeping, or downright graft on the part of the county officials, that, when things go wrong, the county judge has a very bad memory, and his graft continues to extract money from the taxpayers' pockets, touches the county judge in his office, and charges him with graft, and is libelous per se; the word "graft" meaning the fraudulent obtaining of public money unlawfully by the corruption of public officers. Dixon v. Chappell, 118 S. W. 929, 930, 133 Ky. 663.

"The word 'grafting' is commonly used to designate an advantage which one person, by reason of his peculiar position of superiority, influence, or trust, exacts from another. Craig v. Warren, 109 N. W. 231, 99 Minn. 246.

GRAFTER

A "grafter" is defined as one who grafts; a swindler or dishonest person; one who takes or makes graft or dishonest private gain, especially in positions of trust and in ways peculiarly corrupt. State v. Sheridan, 93 Pac. 656, 658, 14 Idaho, 222, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 497 (citing Standard and Century Dictionaries).

Bran

A fire policy on stock of "grain" in a building occupied as grain warehouse covers the part of the stock therein consisting of "bran," a product from grinding wheat. German Fire Ins. Co. of Peoria v. Walker (Tex.) 146 S. W. 606, 607.

GRAIN BROKER

Revenue Act, § 66 (Laws 1903, p. 407, c. 73) defining "grain broker" as a person, company, or corporation engaged in buying and selling grain for profit, was not to enable the Legislature to levy an occupation tax on grain dealers, and so avoid the provision of Const. art. 9, § 1, authorizing a tax on peddlers, auctioneers, and brokers. Central Granaries Co. v. Lancaster County, 113 N. W. 199, 200, 77 Neb. 319.

GRAIN ELEVATOR

As workshop, see Workshop.

A "grain elevator" is "a building equipped with improved apparatus for receiving grain in bulk off the cars of the railroad and placing it in such position as to be conveniently delivered to him who is to receive it from the railway company, whether in wagons to haul it to his mill or into boats to continue its transport to the consumer. It is merely a perfected freighthouse specially provided for grain in bulk." Where a railroad company, as a means of effectively performing its duty as a common carrier, and without any purpose of conducting a storage business, erects an elevator which it rented to certain grain buyers, who elevated and stored grain transported over the company's road at cost, and after the first year paid no rent therefor, such elevator was "necessarily" used in the operation of the railroad within a statute exempting property "necessarily" used in the operation of a railroad from taxation. *Chicago, St. P., M. & O. GRANDCHILD

The right of action against a person who causes damage to another "in case of death shall survive in favor of the minor children" of the deceased. Act No. 71, p. 94, of 1884. Minor grandchildren, under the statute, cannot recover damages for personal injuries to their grandfather, resulting in his death. Children are descendants in the first degree. "Grandchildren" are descendants in the second degree. "Children," under the codal definition, may include "grandchildren." But "minor" children do not include grandchildren who are minors, or those who are of age, or any other descendants more remote. Walker v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 34 South. 749, 750, 110 La. 718.

Where testator made devise to the grandchildren of his sons, testator being at the time 80 years of age and having no great-grandchildren, but having grandchildren, of whom he was extremely fond, the word "grandchildren" should be construed to mean testator's grandchildren. In re Stocum's Will, 94 N. Y. Supp. 588, 591, 592.

The status of parent and child is a correlative one, so that, where there is a legal child, there must have been a legal father, and hence the children of such legal child, whether natural or adopted, are the grandchildren of such legal father. Batchelder v. Walworth, 82 Atl. 7, 10, 85 Vt. 322, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 849.

Testator married a widow with three children, all of whom lived with testator for several years as members of his family, and referred to and called him "grandfather," and each of whom, at the time of testator's death, their mother having predeceased him, was married and had children. Testator's only surviving heir at law was a brother of the half blood, and his will, after providing for certain legacies and expenses, gave all the remainder of his estate to "my grandchildren." Held, that the testator, by the words "my grandchildren," meant the grandchildren of his wife. Coon v. McNelly, 98 N. E. 218, 219, 254 Ill. 39.

Thomas*, 53 South. 630, 633, 97 Miss. 697.

Where testator made devise to the grandchildren of his sons, testator being at the time 80 years of age and having no great-grandchildren, but having grandchildren, of whom he was extremely fond, the word "grandchildren" should be construed to mean testator's grandchildren. See Issue (Descendants).

As name of class

Where there are in a will no words importing a gift to a class as "grandchildren," except in the direction to make division among them at the period subsequent to the testator's death, the members of that class are to be ascertained as of the time fixed for the division. Stoors v. Burgess, 62 Atl. 730, 733, 101 Me. 26.

Posthumous child

Testator by the third clause of the codicil of his will created two life estates, one for the use of his daughter and the other for the use of his grandchildren, declaring that, if any of the grandchildren shall die leaving descendants living, such descendants shall take per stirpes the same interest they would have taken if the property were then to descend, and the rest should be managed and controlled by the trustee for the use of testator's surviving grandchildren without the right to convey, anticipate, or incur the same, etc. Held, that the word "grandchildren" as there used should be construed to include not only those born and living or having died leaving issue at testator's death, but also any who might be born to testator's daughter during her lifetime. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Douglas' Trustee, 120 S. W. 328, 329, 134 Ky. 374, 20 Ann. Cas. 993.

GRAND INQUEST

The term "grand inquest" has no other meaning than "grand jury"; the term "inquest" being used to indicate a body of men appointed by law to inquire concerning certain matters submitted to them. Geiger v. United States, 162 Fed. 844, 845, 89 C. C. A. 516.

A "grand jury" is one of the instruments through which the court acts in the enforcement of the laws. It is called by the court, and is always subject to be excused from further attendance on duty. Zinn v. District Court for Barnes County, 114 N. W. 475, 476, 17 N. D. 128.

The "grand jury" is a de jure body created by the Constitution (Const. art. 1, § 8). Kitts v. Superior Court of Nevada County, 90 Pac. 977, 980, 5 Cal. App. 462.

The order for a "grand jury" organized at an adjourned term, which is but a prolongation of the regular term, and not a special term, showing by its terms that it was made under Code 1896, § 5001, which has application solely to special terms, and not under section 5000, which confers the only authority for organizing a second grand jury at the same term of court, an indictment found by such grand jury is invalid and should be quashed. A "grand jury" constituted in any other manner than that prescribed by statute is illegal. A "grand jury" is not a mere assemblage of 15 or 18 persons in the jury box, congregated by an order of the court, or by their own volition, or at the summons or on the behest of an unauthorized person, but it is a constituent element of a circuit or city court, having criminal jurisdiction, sitting at a regular term, and drawn, selected, and summoned in a mode clearly prescribed, under the superintendence and in the exercise of the sound judgment of sworn officers of law. Fryer v. State, 41 South. 172, 173, 146 Ala. 4 (citing O'Byrnes' Case, 51 Ala. 25).

Examination of witnesses

"The 'grand jury' is simply a tribunal organized to make inquiry, and may call any person before it as a witness." State v. Shepherd, 106 N. W. 190, 191, 129 Iowa, 705.

As component part of court

See Court (Of Justice).

As grand inquest

See Grand Inquest.

Number of jurors

Accusation against a municipal officer authorized by statute may be presented by 12 members of the grand jury; the statute being silent as to the number that may present the accusation. Coffey v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 83 Pac. 580, 582, 2 Cal. App. 453.

Code 1897, § 5240, provides that from the number of grand jurors drawn the clerk shall draw seven names, and the persons so drawn shall constitute the grand jury for that term, and, if any person so drawn be excused or fail to attend on the second day of the court, the clerk shall draw other names until seven are selected. Held, that the fact that the court excused two of the persons summoned for grand jury duty before the seven had been drawn to form the jury was no objection to the grand jury as subsequently organized. State v. Johnson, 111 N. W. 827, 829, 136 Iowa, 601.

GRAND LARCENY

By Pen. Code, § 444, "grand larceny" is committed in either of the following cases: (1) When the property taken is of the value exceeding $50. (2) When the property is taken from the person of another. (3) When the property taken is a horse, mare, gelding, cow, calf, mule, goat, sheep or hog, or any neat or horn cattle. (4) When property taken is a bicycle. Buffehr v. Territory, 89 Pac. 415, 11 Ariz. 165.

"Grand larceny," as defined by Pen. Code, § 444, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 15, is larceny committed in either of the following cases: (1) When the property taken is of the value exceeding $50. (2) When the property taken is from the person of another. (3) When the property taken is a horse, mare, gelding, cow, steer, bull, calf, jack, jenny, goat, sheep or hog or any neat or horn cattle. (4) When the property taken is a bicycle. Territory v. Ruval, 84 Pac. 1096, 1097, 9 Ariz. 415.

Under Kirby's Dig. §§ 1821-1824, defining larceny as the felonious carrying away of the personal property, bonds, bills, banknotes, etc., of another, the stealing of a bank check of the value of $15 is grand larceny. Crossland v. State, 92 S. W. 776, 77 Ark. 544.

Under Rev. Pen. Code, §§ 605, 607, 608, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 175, c. 151, "larceny" is the taking of personal property accomplished by fraud or stealth and with intent to deprive another thereof. "Larceny" is divided into two degrees, the first of which is termed "grand larceny," the second, "petit larceny." Grand larceny is larceny committed in either of the following cases: (1) When the property taken is of value exceeding $20. (2) When such property, although not of value exceeding $20, is taken from the person of another. (3) When such property, although not of value exceeding $20, is a bull, steer, cow, heifer, or calf, or is a stallion, mare, gelding, horse or colt. Larceny in other cases is petit larceny. Under Rev. Pen. Code, §§ 605, 607, 608, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 175, c. 151, making it grand larceny to take property exceeding $20 in value, or when the property, though not of value exceeding $20, is a stallion, mare, gelding, horse, or colt, there is no variance between an information alleging larceny of a horse and proof of the larceny of a gelding, especially in view of Rev. Code Cr. Proc. § 569, providing that neither a departure from the form or mode prescribed as to any pleading nor error therein renders it invalid, unless it has prejudiced defendant, and section 229, providing that an indictment is sufficient if the act charged is clearly set out in ordinary and concise language, so as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. State v. Matejousky, 115 N. W. 96, 98, 22 S. D. 30.

Cr. Code 1896, § 5049, provides that if any person steals personal property of the value of $5 or more from or in any dwelling house he is guilty of "grand larceny." Held, that in order to constitute theft of that grade the property stolen must be of the value of $5 or more, and if less than that value the offense is "petit larceny," defined by Cr. Code 1896, § 5050. Thomas v. State, 46 South. 565, 566, 155 Ala. 92.

An instruction defining "grand larceny" in the language of Pen. Code, § 487, as "when the property taken is of a value exceeding $50; when the property taken is from the person of another; when the property taken is a bicycle, horse, mare, gelding, cow, steer, bull, calf, mule, jack or jenny"—is correct, in a prosecution for grand larceny, consisting in the alleged stealing of calves. People v. Ruiz, 77 Pac. 907, 908, 144 Cal. 251.

Where the value of property alleged to have been stolen was not material, proof of its value is not necessary, as courts and jurors will presume from the nature and character of the property proved to have been stolen that it had some value. Hence in a prosecution for grand larceny, under Rev. Pen. Code, § 608, subd. 2, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 175, c. 151, making a larceny from the person grand larceny, the presumption that the property stolen was of some value is sufficient to sustain a conviction. State v. Faulk, 116 N. W. 72, 73, 22 S. D. 183.

Where an automobile worth over $500 was taken from a street by the proprietor of a garage without authority of the owner, and withheld from the owner to enforce payment of a claim due from him, if any crime was committed, either in taking the car from the street or receiving or holding it, it was grand larceny, which is a felony under Pen. Code, § 530, subd. 3, making it "grand larceny" in the first degree to steal or unlawfully obtain in any manner whatever property worth more than $500, and section 533, making grand larceny in the first degree punishable by not exceeding 10 years' imprisonment. Greene v. Fankhauser, 121 N. Y. Supp. 1004, 1007, 137 App. Div. 124.

Act No. 124 of 1874, § 8, divides larceny into grand and petit larceny, and makes the larceny of property or money worth $100 or more grand larceny, punishable with imprisonment for not more than ten years, and the larceny of property under the value of $100 petit larceny, punishable with imprisonment for not more than two years. Act No. 64 of 1910 makes the stealing of cattle a specific offense, punishable with imprisonment for not less than one year. Held that, the two statutes being repugnant and the whole subject of cattle stealing being covered by the later one, the earlier one was repealed thereby by necessary implication in so far as cattle theft is concerned. State v. Hickman, 53 South. 680, 127 La. 442.

An instruction that "every person who with the intent to deprive or defraud the true owner of his property, or of the use and benefit thereof, or to appropriate the same to the use of the taker, or of any other person, takes from the possession of the true owner any mare, gelding or colt is guilty of 'grand larceny,'" contains a correct definition of the crime of "grand larceny." State v. Allen, 87 Pac. 177, 180, 34 Mont. 403.

Pen. Code, § 487, defines "grand larceny" to include the taking of property of another exceeding $50 in value, and section 532 de clares that every person who knowingly, and by false or fraudulent pretense, defrauds another of money, etc., is punishable in the same manner and to the same extent as for larceny of the money or property so obtained. Held that, where defendant was accused of obtaining by false pretenses a loan of $1,000, the state was not bound to show that defendant received the full amount alleged, but proof that she received an amount in excess of $50 was sufficient to sustain a conviction. People v. Osborn, 106 Pac. 891, 892, 12 Cal. App. 148.

An information before a Court of Special Sessions for theft of a cow not showing that the value thereof did not exceed $25 was insufficient basis for a warrant for petit larceny within the jurisdiction of the court, given under Cr. Code, § 56, subd. 1, to hear trials for petit larceny, but not of larceny in any other degree, inasmuch as under Penal Law (Consol. Laws, c. 40) § 1296, if property of more than the value of $25 is stolen, the crime is grand larceny in the second degree, triable only after indictment. People v. Jones, 126 N. Y. Supp. 1085, 1087, 142 App. Div. 180.

Grand larceny, the felonious stealing of property of another, being committed when the property exceeds $50 in value, and is taken from the person of another, or is one of a number of things, among which is a "steer," it is not necessary in case of a steer that it be taken from the person of another or the possession of the owner; so that the allegation of the indictment that it was taken from the possession of the owner is surplusage. People v. Hutchings, 97 Pac. 325, 326, 8 Cal. App. 550.

To warrant a conviction under Laws 1903, p. 372, c. 218, § 1, making the theft in the nighttime of any harness, grand larceny, it is not necessary that the property stolen comprise all the parts of a complete harness. State v. Wortman, 98 Pac. 217, 78 Kan. 847.

As expressly defined by Laws 1903, p. 372, c. 218, § 1, "grand larceny" consists of the "taking or carrying away any money, goods, right in action or other personal property or valuable thing whatsoever of the value of twenty dollars or more, or any horse, mare, gelding, colt, filly, ass, mule, neat cattle, sheep, goat, hog, or in the nighttime any domestic fowls, harness or saddles belonging to another." Ex parte Howard, 83 Pac. 1032, 1034, 72 Kan. 273.

In a prosecution for "grand larceny," an instruction, defining the offense as the wrongful and fraudulent taking the property of another and converting the same to his own use, was erroneous for omitting the element of felonious intent to convert the property taken to the use of the offender without the consent of the owner. State v. Weatherman, 100 S. W. 482, 483, 202 Mo. 6.

Pen. Code, § 484, defines larceny as a felonious stealing, etc., of the personal property of another. Section 487 declares that "grand larceny" is committed: "(1) When the property taken is of value exceeding $50; (2) when the property is taken from the person of another; * * * (3) when the property taken is 'one of certain enumerated animals or articles.'" People v. Roberts, 82 Pac. 624, 625, 1 Cal. App. 447.

An information, alleging that accused did take, steal, drive, lead, and entice away one steer branded as indicated, the property of a person named, of the value of $25, with a felonious intent on the part of the accused to deprive the true owner of his property and to steal the same, charges "grand larceny," as defined by Rev. Codes, § 8645, declaring that grand larceny is committed by any person taking and driving away domestic animals. State v. Biggs, 123 Pac. 410, 411, 45 Mont. 400.

"Grand larceny," under the act of 1874, is the larceny of any property of the value of $100, and is made punishable with imprisonment in any parish prison or at hard labor in the penitentiary at the discretion of the court for not more than 10 years. State v. Wall, 52 South. 556, 559, 126 La. 400.

"Grand larceny" is defined by Snyder's St. § 2594, as larceny committed when the property is of value exceeding $20 and when such property, though not of value exceeding $20, is taken from the person of another. The larceny of an animal punishable by section 2606 is a separate and distinct offense. Crowell v. State, 117 Pac. 883, 884, 6 Okl. Cr. 148.

Since, under Pen. Code, § 484, defining "grand larceny" as the taking of personal property from the person of another, asportation is not an essential element of the offense, an information charging that defendant feloniously took from the person of prosecutor certain gold coins, etc., was not objectionable for failure to charge an asportation thereof. People v. Lonnen, 73 Pac. 586, 587, 139 Cal. 634.

Kirby's Dig. § 1603, defines burglary as the unlawful entering of a house or other building in the nighttime with the intent to commit a felony. Section 2227 provides that an indictment must be direct and certain as regards the party charged, the offense charged, the county in which the offense was committed, and the particular circumstances of the offense charged, where they are necessary to constitute a complete offense. Sections 1821-1826 provide that larceny is the felonious stealing of the personal property of another, and shall embrace every theft which unlawfully deprives another of his property, and provides that the taking and removing of any personal property with intent to steal the same shall be deemed "larceny," and that where the value of the property stolen exceeds the sum of $10 punishment shall be by imprisonment in the penitentiary, and when it does not exceed the sum of $10 by imprisonment in the county prison. Held, that an indictment which charges accused, upon a date specified, in a certain county within the state, and during the nighttime of said day, in a certain house owned by a person specified, with breaking and entering with felonious intent to steal, take, and carry away the goods, wares, and merchandise, of the value of $11.06, of the personal property of the said owner, contrary to the statutes in such cases made and provided and against the peace and dignity of the state, is sufficient. McCarthy v. State, 119 S. W. 647, 648, 90 Ark. 384.

GRAND MAL

It appears that a person who has suffered from epilepsy in the major form, or "grand mal," as it is technically termed, in which the expression is usually through convulsions, may later pass into the stage of minor epilepsy, or "petit mal," which is the more dangerous form, because of liability to sudden attacks of maniacal paroxysms or of epileptic furor. The victim of such attacks is unconscious of his conduct, and usually, but not universally, will not remember what has occurred. People v. Egnor, 87 N. E. 906, 907, 175 N. Y. 419.

GRANITE

As mineral, see Mineral.

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, para. 117, 118, 30 Stat. 159, relating to granite, etc., "and other building or monumental stone," "hewn, dressed or polished," and "unmanufactured or undressed," was intended to cover the general subject of building and monumental stone; and granite monuments imported in sections dressed, ornamented, and polished abroad and ready to be set up and leaded or cemented together are dutiable under said paragraph 118 as "granite * * * dressed." Alexander Murphy & Co. v. United States, 162 Fed. 871, 872, 89 C. C. A. 561.

GRANITE LINOLEUM

"Granite linoleum" is that "in which the paste contains masses or spots of different colors, which colors remain separate in the completed fabric. The assemblage and relationship of these variously colored spots and masses is, however, casual. United States v. Scott & West, 164 Fed. 285, 287.

GRANITE QUARRY

See Undeveloped Granite Quarry.

GRANT

Admit synonymous

In a rule of court declaring that a rehearing shall not be "granted" after the lapse of the term at which the final decree is entered, and providing that, in nonappealable cases, a petition for a rehearing may be "admitted" before the end of the next term after final decree, the word "admitted" is synonymous with the word "granted," and the effect of the rule is to deprive the court of the power to grant a rehearing in any case after the lapse of the term next succeeding the entry of a final decree. Glenn v. Dimmock, 43 Fed. 550, 551.

Give synonymous

The ordinary and accepted meaning of "give" is synonymous with "grant." United States v. Bunch, 165 Fed. 736, 739 (citing Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 164 Fed. 376, 90 C. C. A. 364).

Of injunction

An order for an injunction pendente lite recited that the court, being fully advised, ordered that the injunction as prayed be granted, and that the same be continued until the hearing of the cause, and it was further ordered that on giving a bond "an injunction forthwith issue." Held, that the point that under the terms of the order it became necessary after the bond was filed and approved to issue a formal injunction order, and that inasmuch as this was not done there was in fact no injunction, and therefore no liability on the bond, was not well taken, the words "granting the injunction" being manifestly intended to operate as the injunction order itself on the filing and approval of the necessary bond. Collins v. Huffman, 93 Pac. 220, 225, 48 Wash. 184.

GRANT (In Conveyancing)

See Crown Grant; Express Grant; Imperfect Grant; Inclusive Grant; Perfect Grant; Public Grant.

All other grants, see All Other.

Implied grant of easement, see Implied Easement.

"To 'grant' * * * requires the conscious and understanding act of the intellect and will. If one does not know what he is about, his alleged grant is no grant." Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 164 Fed. 376, 890, 90 C. C. A. 364.

A grant in its own nature amounts to an extinguishment of the right of the grantor, and implies a contract not to reassert that right. Trustees of the Freeholders & Commonalty of Town of Brookhaven v. Smith, 90 N. Y. Supp. 646, 649, 98 App. Div. 212.

A "grant" is a generic term applicable to all transfers of real property (3 Washb. Real Prop. 181, 358) and may be applied to a party wall contract. Loyal Mystic Legion v. Jones, 102 N. W. 621, 624, 73 Neb. 342.

Rev. Codes 1905, § 4965, provides that a transfer vests in the transferee all the actual title to the things transferred which the transferor then has, unless a different intention is expressed or is necessarily implied. A transfer, as applied to real estate, is termed a "grant." North Dakota Horse & Cattle Co. v. Serumgard, 117 N. W. 453, 458, 17 N. D. 466, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 508, 138 Am. St. Rep. 717.

An instrument which does not purport to convey any present interest in an existing patent, or one for which an application is pending, is not a "grant" within Rev. St. U. S. § 4898. National Cash Register Co. v. New Columbus Watch Co., 129 Fed. 114, 116, 68 C. C. A. 616.

A "grant" of public lands is a solemn deed of the state under its great seal. Bowser v. Wescott, 58 S. E. 748, 749, 145 N. C. 56.

A "grant" confirming state title to land has a technical meaning under Virginia and West Virginia law. A public "grant" means an instrument by which the state, as sovereign, passes to an individual title to land before vested in the state. A patent is only another name for a land "grant." The instrument is indifferently called a patent or "grant" in the Virginias. State v. Harman, 50 S. E. 828, 833, 57 W. Va. 447.

The expression "grants," when employed in treaties, comprehends not only those which are made in form, but also any concession, warrant, order, or permission to survey, possess, or settle, whether evidenced by writing or protocol, or presumed from possession. The terms "grants" and "legitimate titles" employed in the protocol of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, providing that grants of land by the Mexican government should preserve their legal value, and that the grantee might cause their legitimate titles to be acknowledged before the American tribunals, was not limited to absolutely perfect grants, but embraced all character of titles, legal or equitable. Haynes v. State (Tex.) 85 S. W. 1029, 1040 (quoting and adopting definition in Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. [37 U. S.] 435, 9 L. Ed. 1113; State v. Russell, 85 S. W. 288, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 13).

Agree and agreement under seal synonymous

"It is settled that the word 'agree' may be read 'grant,' and an 'agreement under seal' construed to be a 'grant.'" Bailey v. Agawam Nat. Bank, 76 N. E. 449, 451, 190 Mass. 20, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 98, 112 Am. St. Rep. 296 (citing Hogan v. Barry, 10 N. E. 253, 143 Mass. 538; Ladd v. City of Boston, 24 N. E. 858, 151 Mass. 585, 21 Am. St. Rep. 481).

Assign synonymous

Rev. St. 1899, § 2933, provides that dower in a leasehold estate for a term of 20 years or more shall be granted and assigned as in real estate, and for a less term than 20 years shall be granted and assigned as in personal property. Held, that the words "granted" and "assigned," as so used, were synonymous, and mean only that the widow shall have the same dower in a leasehold estate of 20 years or more that she is entitled to in real estate, and that if the lease is for less than 20 years she has dower in it as she has in other personal property; the term of such leasehold being determined by the term named in the lease, and not by the portion of the term remaining at the husband's death. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 486, 499, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072.

Claim distinguished

A "claim" is, not only legally speaking, but in ordinary parlance, clearly distinguishable from a "grant" or a "title." A "claim" is defined in the Century Dictionary (verbo "claim") as "the thing claimed or demanded; specifically, a piece of public land which a squatter or settler marks out for himself with the intention of purchasing it when the government offers it for sale; as, 'He staked out a claim.'" "A 'grant,' on the contrary, has a distinctly broader meaning. It implies an acquired right, and is described by Mr. Bouvier as applicable to the conveyance of incorporeal rights. But in the larger sense the term comprehends anything that is granted or passed from one to another, and is applied to every species of property. It therefore necessarily implies a 'title' or vested right in the grantee from the grantor, or has a much more pregnant signification than a claim." Corkran Oil & Development Co. v. Arnaudet, 35 South. 747, 754, 111 La. 563.

Convey synonymous

The word "convey" or "transfer" as operative words in a deed is of equivalent signification and effect as "grant." State v. Kelliher, 88 Pac. 867, 868, 49 Or. 77 (quoting and adopting definition in Lambert v. Smith, 9 Or. 193; citing Field v. Columbet, 9 Fed. Cas. 12, 4 Sawy. 527).

In modern law, the terms "grant" and "convey," when used in instruments intended to alienate or transfer real estate, have substantially the same meaning. A deed, reciting that the grantor has "granted," bargained, and sold, is a substantial compliance with the statute providing that bargain and sale deeds for conveyance of land, reciting that the grantor does bargain, sell, and "convey," shall be adjudged an express covenant that the grantor had the fee. Blood v. Siefert, 80 Pac. 799, 801, 38 Wash. 643.

The word "grant," as used in Code 1899, c. 52, § 1, providing that every corporation, as such, shall contract and be contracted with by simple contract or specialty; purchase, hold, use, and grant estate real and personal, is the equivalent of "convey" and similar terms, and thus gives the corporation power to sell and convey equally broad with its power to purchase and hold. Germer v. Triple-State Natural Gas & Oil Co., 54 S. E. 509, 513, 60 W. Va. 143.

A deed reciting that the grantor does "give, grant, remise, release and forever quitclaim" all the right and title the grantor has or ought to have in and to the property described, is not a quitclaim deed, but under Shannon's Code, § 3672, providing that every grant shall pass all the estate of the grantor, it conveys the grantor's whole estate, and must be taken in connection with the chain of title on which it is based, whereby it must appear what estate was owned by the grantor, the word "grant" being equivalent to the word "convey." Hitt v. Caney Fork Gulf Coal Co., 139 S. W. 693, 696, 124 Tenn. 334.

While it may be that the word "conveyed" usually implies the passing of the legal title, it is not inaptly nor incorrectly used to describe a transfer of title, legal or equitable, and, whether used with a narrow and technical meaning or in a broad and general sense, is to be determined by the context and the circumstances under which the entire instrument or document in which it was found is framed. When a railroad company received full payment for lands granted to it by Act Minn. May 22, 1857, and executed an instrument by which all its equitable and substantial interests in them was transferred, the lands were "conveyed" within the meaning of the provision that the lands so granted should be exempt from taxation until "sold and conveyed." Winona & St. P. Land Co. v. State of Minnesota, 16 Sup. Ct. 83-85, 159 U. S. 531, 40 L. Ed. 247.

Covenant of warranty against incumbrances imported

By statute the words "grant or convey" in a deed carry with them an implied warranty that the estate conveyed is at the time of the execution of the deed free from incumbrances, unless restrained by express terms contained therein. Rotan v. Hays, 77 S. W. 654, 655, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 471.

Mortgaged property was conveyed by deed of gift, which was silent as to the mortgage, and the conveying words were, "give, grant, alien, and confirm." Held, that there was no covenant by implication against incumbrances, notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 1113, subd. 2, declaring that from the use of the word "grant" in any conveyance by which an estate of inheritance or fee simple is to be passed a covenant is implied that at the time of the execution of the conveyance the estate was free from incumbrances. In re Well's Estate, 94 Pac. 856, 857, 7 Cal. App. 515.

By the express provisions of Rev. St. 1901, par. 723, a conveyance of a fee simple in which the use of the word "grant" or "convey" is made impliedly covenants that the estate is free from incumbrance. Sherman v. Goodwin, 89 Pac. 517, 519, 11 Ariz. 141.

From the use of the words "grant" and "convey" in a deed the law implies a covenant that at the time of such conveyance the land is free from incumbrances, and taxes are included in the term "incumbrances" as here used. Bullitt v. Coryell, 85 S. W. 482, 483, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 42.

Where defendant C. and wife conveyed certain land in controversy in fee, with covenants of warranty, and thereafter purchased the land on foreclosure of a trust deed which they had previously given to secure a loan on the land, the title so acquired by them inured to the benefit of their grantee by estoppel, under Rev. St. 1895, art. 633, providing that the use of the words "grant" or "convey" in any conveyance by which an estate of inheritance or fee simple is passed implies a covenant that the estate is at the time of the execution of the conveyance free from incumbrances. Lowry v. Carter, 102 S. W. 930, 931, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 458.

The word "grant," when used in a conveyance, under the provisions of section 3120, Rev. Codes, implies the following covenants, and none other, on the part of the grantor, for himself and heirs, to the grantee, his heirs and assigns, unless restrained by express terms contained in such conveyance, to wit: (1) That previous to the time of execution of such conveyance the grantor has not conveyed the same estate or any right, title, or interest therein to any person other than the grantee; (2) that such estate is at the time of the execution of such conveyance free from incumbrances done, made, or suffered by the grantor, or any person claiming under him. Polak v. Mattson, 128 Pac. 89, 91, 22 Idaho, 727.

The word "grant" is synonymous with the word "give." Gurnsey v. Northern California Power Co., 94 Pac. 858, 862, 7 Cal. App. 534.

Under a warranty deed in the usual form with a provision that "the possession of said above-described premises to be given to party of second part, her heirs and assigns, on or before the 1st day of March, 1901," the word "given" must be construed as synonymous with the word "surrendered" or "granted." Beakey v. Schwitzgebel, 105 Pac. 42, 43, 81 Kan. 38.

"Give" and "receive" are synonymous with "grant" and accept. Where all these words appear in the same phrase, the principle of ejusdem generis forbids their being taken to indicate acts of antagonistic quality. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 164 Fed. 376, 390, 90 C. C. A. 364.

Ordinary and accepted meanings of "give" and "receive" are synonymous with "grant." United States v. Bunch, 165 Fed. 736, 739 (citing Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 164 Fed. 376, 90 C. C. A. 364).

Lease

Const. art. 15, § 8, provides that all tidelands within two miles of any incorporated city or town, and fronting on the waters of any harbor, estuary, bay, or inlet used for navigation, shall be withheld from "grant or sale" to private corporations, partnerships, or corporations. Held that, while the word "grant" has sometimes been used to include a lease for a term of years, the constitutional provision should be construed in its ordinary sense to refer to a conveyance of the title to property; and hence such provision did not prevent a lease of tidelands belonging to the state to private persons or corporations for a term of years. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 119 Pac. 1073, 1075, 161 Cal. 610, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 686; Same v. Nelson, 119 Pac. 1077, 161 Cal. 720.

License distinguished

Whether an instrument is a "license" or a "grant" depends upon the construction of the instrument as a question of law. If it merely confers a privilege to do an act or series of acts under the owner which, without permission, would be unlawful, it is a "license"; but if it grants exclusive possession of premises against the world, including the owner, it is not a license, but creates an irrevocable estate or interest in the land. City of Berwyn v. Berglund, 99 N. E. 705, 707, 255 Ill. 498.

The word "grant" is sometimes construed to include mortgage. Hanrion v. Hanrion, 84 Pac. 381, 382, 73 Kan. 25, 117 Am. St. Rep. 453.

St. 1898, § 2077, provides that, on a grant for a valuable consideration to one person, the consideration being paid by another, no trust shall result in favor of the person making the payment, but the title shall vest in the alienee. Held, that the statute applies only to real property, the "grant" contemplated being an absolute one, and hence does not apply to a mortgage to secure a note. In re Tobin's Estate, 121 N. W. 144, 139 Wis. 404.

Tax deed

A tax deed is not a grant under the section classifying the persons entitled to transfer of the state title to forfeited lands, under Const. § 3, art. 13, but is a good claim and color of title under the first and third classifications of such section. State v. Harman, 50 S. E. 828, 833, 57 W. Va. 447.

Transfer of incorporeal hereditament

An instrument reciting that, in consideration of $1.00 and a stated royalty, per ton, the owner of land granted to another all the bituminous rock, petroleum, asphaltum, and other minerals he might choose to take, while using the word "grant," is not a grant of land nor a lease, but a conveyance or a right in the nature of an incorporeal hereditament, which could be lost by abandonment. Payne v. Neuval, 99 Pac. 476, 478, 155 Cal. 46.

GRANT AND DEMISE

The words "grant and demise" in a lease for years created an implied warranty of title and a covenant for quiet enjoyment. Stott v. Rutherford, 92 U. S. 107, 109, 23 L. Ed. 486; Headley v. Hoopengartner, 55 S. E. 744, 747, 60 W. Va. 626.

The words "grant and demise" in a lease by an officer or agent of the law do not raise against such character of trustee a covenant by implication, though they do with individuals. Shannon v. Mastin, 114 S. W. 1127, 1128, 135 Mo. App. 50 (citing Webster v. Conley, 46 Ill. 13, 92 Am. Dec. 234).

GRANT, BARGAIN, AND SELL

The use of the words "grant, bargain, and sell" in a deed containing a covenant of warranty of title does not, in the state of Mississippi, amount to a covenant of seisin. Duncan v. Lane, 8 Smedes & M. (16 Miss.) 744, 753.

Under the direct provisions of Kirby's Dig. § 731, the words "grant, bargain, and sell" in a deed amount to a covenant that the grantor is seised of an indefeasible estate in fee simple, free from incumbrances done or suffered by the grantor. Seldon v. Dudley E. Jones Co., 85 S. W. 778, 74 Ark. 348.

The words "grant, bargain and sell," in a deed purporting to convey the fee, have, under Rev. St. 1899, § 907, the effect of a covenant that the grantor is seised of an indefeasible estate in fee, but unless the deed purports to convey the fee the words mean only a transfer of the estate. Waldermeyer v. Loebig, 121 S. W. 75, 76, 222 Mo. 540.

The words "grant, bargain and sell" in a deed have under the statute the force of covenants that the grantor is seised of an indefeasible estate in fee in the land conveyed, that the same is free from incumbrance done or suffered by the grantor, his heirs and assigns, and all claiming under him, and for further assurance to be made by the grantor, his heirs and assigns. Stoepler v. Silberberg, 119 S. W. 418, 420, 220 Mo. 258.

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 2793, providing that the words "grant, bargain and sell" in conveyances shall be construed as covenants that the grantor was seised with an indefeasible estate in fee, free from incumbrances, and for further assurances, such words create covenants of warranty which run with the land. Staed v. Roessler, 187 S. W. 901, 903, 157 Mo. App. 300.

The statutory covenants raised by the words "grant, bargain, and sell," when used in a conveyance of land, are not restricted in their scope by an express covenant of special warranty making no reference to the former covenants and not coupled with them in such a way as to modify their ordinary effect. Miller v. Bayless, 92 S. W. 482, 483, 194 Mo. 630 (quoting same case, 74 S. W. 648, 101 Mo. App. 487).

In the absence of any statutory provision, many of the courts of last resort have held that the words, "grant, bargain, and sell," when used in a conveyance in fee, do not imply any covenants. A deed, reciting that the grantor has granted, bargained, and sold, was a substantial compliance with Balinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4520, providing that bargain and sale deeds for conveyance of land, reciting that the grantor does bargain, sell, and convey, shall be adjudged an express covenant that the grantor had the fee. Blood v. Sielert, 80 Pac. 799, 800, 38 Wash. 643.

Where the words "grant, bargain, and sell," contained in a deed, are not limited by express words, they import a covenant by the grantor with the grantee, his heirs and assigns, that the land is free from incumbrances made or suffered by him, as expressly provided by Kirby's Dig. § 731. Crawford v. McDonald, 106 S. W. 206, 208, 84 Ark. 415.

The terms of a conveyance "grant, bargain, sell, and convey" are of sufficient recognized legal effect to carry all legal or equitable interests the grantor has in the land, together with all that is appurtenant or incident to it or beneficial to its enjoyment, and the effect of their use in a conveyance is to divest the grantor of any interest whatever possessed in and to water rights or riparian rights appurtenant thereto. Rianda v. Watsonville Water & Light Co., 98 Pac. 79, 80, 152 Cal. 523.

The statutory warranty attached to the words "grants, bargains, and sells," imports a covenant only against incumbrances done or suffered by the grantor, and not against incumbrances generally. Hood & Wheeler v. Clark, 37 South. 550, 141 Ala. 397.

A mortgage containing no express covenant or warranty, but using the statutory words "grant, bargain, and sell," implies the statutory warranty that the grantee was seised of an indefeasible estate in fee simple, free from incumbrances done or suffered by the grantor. New England Mortgage Security Co. v. Fry, 42 South. 57, 59, 143 Ala. 637, 111 Am. St. Rep. 62.

GRANTED AND LEASED

The words "granted and leased," used in a contract by which the grantor "granted and leased" to the grantees, their heirs and assigns, certain land for the purpose of a gas well, so long as it was used for the same, etc., amounted merely to a covenant for quiet enjoyment on the conditions stipulated in the contract. Shenk v. Stahl, 74 N. E. 538, 540, 35 Ind. App. 493.

GRANTED LANDS

Under Act March 16, 1897, § 11, providing that no more than 160 acres of any school or granted lands shall be offered for sale in any one tract, and section 4, defining the term "granted lands," which is not to include tidelands, it was held that, though unnecessary to sell tidelands in tracts of not more than 160 acres, tidelands having improvements thereon should be divided, in case of sale, with reference to such improvements, so that the purchaser can buy not only the land covered by the improvements, but unoccupied and unimproved adjoining land necessary for the convenient use and enjoyment thereof. Sullivan v. Calivert, 68 Pac. 363, 366, 27 Wash. 600.

GRANTEE

A "grantee" being a person to whom a grant is made (Black, Law Dict.), the word "grantee" as used in a party wall contract means the person or persons to whom the real estate might be conveyed by deed. Loyal Mystic Legion v. Jones, 102 N. W. 621, 624, 73 Neb. 342.

Rev. St. 1898, § 1198b enacted in 1896, provides that no action shall be brought by the owner for lands conveyed for the nonpayment of taxes by deed void on its face after the expiration of five years from the date of the recording thereof, etc. A tax deed, void on its face, was executed June 10, 1896, and recorded on the following day. At the same time, the grantee therein executed a warranty deed conveying the premises to a third person who recorded her deed in November following. The third person immediately took possession of the premises and remained in the actual possession for nearly 10 years. Held, that the owner's rights were barred, and the third person's title established, in view of section 4971, subd. 4, declaring that the word "grantee" may include every person to whom any interest passes by deed. Brunette v. Norber, 110 N. W. 785, 786, 130 Wis. 632.

Where a conveyance by A. and wife to B. and C., her husband, recited that it was to them and the heirs of their body, for the express purpose of a home for them for life, and for the welfare and comfort of their children, provided that, if B. and C. separated, the interest of C. in the land should cease, and provided that the grantees, with the written consent of the grantors, or the survivor of them, might sell the land and reinvest the proceeds in other lands, to be owned and held by them and their heirs in the manner provided in the deed, and provided that, if the grantees died, the land should revert to the grantors or the survivor, the grantor's widow may convey the property without requiring B. and C. and children to join in the deed, C. having separated from B., the grantees being B. and C. Louisville & A. R. Co. v. Horn (Ky.) 82 S. W. 567, 568.

GRANTOR'S LIEN

A "grantor's lien" is a right given to the grantor of land, who has conveyed title and reserved no lien, taken no security for the price other than the personal obligation of the grantee to subject the lien in equity to the payment of the price, when the rights of others are not injured, and it is equitable so to do. McKinnon v. Johnson, 45 South. 451, 452, 54 Fla. 533.

GRAPEFRUIT

Since shaddocks are not "grapefruit" for commercial purposes, a delivery of shaddocks is not a compliance with an order for "grapefruit" notwithstanding the scientific relation between the two classes of fruit. Abel v. Murphy, 91 N. Y. Supp. 28, 45 Misc. Rep. 628.

GRAPE PLANTS

"Grass" piquets, consisting of stacks of oats or of wheat, cut in the milk, and grasses died to imitate their natural color, mixed with palm leaves and other artificial leaves, bound at the end of the stems with wire, to be used for millinery purposes, are not taxable for duty as manufactures of "grass," but are properly assessed as "artificial or ornamental grains, leaves and flowers, and stems or parts thereof not specially provided for." Herman & Guinzeberg v. United States, 121 Fed. 201, 202.

GRASS SEED

Canary seed, which is botanically a grass seed, but is used principally as a bird seed, and which is not known commercially as grass seed, is not within the meaning of the words "grass seeds," as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 656, 30 Stat. 201, relating to grass seeds not specially provided for. Nordlinger v. United States, 127 Fed. 633, 634, 62 C. C. A. 409.

GRATUITOUS

GRATUITOUS BAILMENT

Where a carrier has become liable as warehouseman, such liability continues until it notifies the consignee that it will not insist on storage charges, from which time as a "gratuitous bailee" it is held only to slight care. Brunson & Boatwright v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 56 S. E. 538, 540, 76 S. C. 9, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 577.

GRATUITY

Damages to abutting property owners, caused by a change of grade of a bridge approach, authorized by statute to be paid by a city, do not constitute a gratuity, within the constitutional prohibition against giving "gratuities" from public funds. People ex rel. Hallock v. Hennessy, 131 N. Y. Supp. 327, 329, 146 App. Div. 440.

Gift distinguished

Cr. Code 1902, § 263, provides punishment for attempting to corrupt any juror, by giving, offering, or promising any gift or gratuity, with intent to bias the opinion or influence the decision of such juror. Held, that while the term "gift" usually denotes something tangible, "gratuity" is a larger term, and embraces, not only tangible things, but services, or any benefits of pecuniary value bestowed without claim or demand. Hence, where accused requested a juror to do what he could for one about to be tried, and agreed to bring certain customers who had been trading with him down and put them to trading with the juror if the juror cleared the person to be tried, there was such a promising of a gratuity as to bring the case within the statute. State v. Maddox, 61 S. E. 964, 965, 80 S. C. 452.

GRAVEL PIT CASE

A case in which an employé received an injury while engaged in excavating under an embankment for the purpose of tearing it down is a "gravel pit case." Ft. Smith & W. R. Co. v. Ketis, 110 Pac. 661, 664, 28 Okl. 696.

GRAVEL ROAD

As hard road, see Hard Road.

As highway, see Highway.

GRAVEYARD

A cemetery is none the less a "graveyard" because further interments become impossible. It only loses its character as a resting place of the dead when those already interred are exhumed and removed. The mere passage of a city ordinance prohibiting further interments in a graveyard did not constitute an abandonment thereof, especially where the bodies were not removed for 21 years. Kansas City v. Scarritt, 69 S. W. 283, 286, 169 Mo. 471.

GRAZE

Where sheep are being driven from one range to another, the occasional eating of grass as they go, or while stopped for a needed rest, is not "grazing" them, within Rev. St. 1887, § 1210, making it unlawful to herd sheep or permit them to graze within two miles of the dwelling house of the owner or owners of possessory claims. Phipps v. Grover, 75 Pac. 64, 65, 9 Idaho, 415.

GRAZING LAND

GREASE

"Grease" and oil are not identical in substance, in function, or in language. Sturtz v. Delaware, L. & N. Ry. Co., 74 Atl. 80, 81, 225 Pa. 249.

GREASY

A slippery condition of railroad rails is known as "greasy." Mayer v. Detroit, Y., A. A. & J. Ry., 116 N. W. 429, 430, 152 Mich. 276.

GREAT

GREAT BODILY HARM

"Great bodily harm," within the rule governing the right of self-defense, means more than mere injury by the fist such as is likely to occur in ordinary assault and battery. State v. Doherty, 98 Pac. 152, 154, 52 Or. 591 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3162).

The instruction that the "great bodily harm" sufficient to justify killing does not mean mere bruises inflicted by hands and feet correctly announces the law, though the one inflicting them be larger and stronger than the other. Waldrop v. State, 54 South. 66, 70, 98 Miss. 567.

The rule that "great bodily harm," in contemplation of law, does not mean such harm as may be inflicted by mere blows with the hands or feet, is subject to the modification that where deceased was a much larger and stronger man than defendant, so that defendant was liable to receive great bodily injuries at his hands, defendant was justified in using a deadly weapon to protect himself, though deceased was wholly unarmed. Hill v. State, 49 South. 145, 146, 94 Miss. 391; Id., 52 South. 630, 631, 97 Miss. 304.

A charge that accused might defend himself against unlawful attack, reasonably threatening injury to his person, by the use of all necessary and reasonable force, but no more than circumstances reasonably indicated to be necessary, that homicide is justified by law when committed in defense of one's person against unlawful and violent attack, made so as to produce a reasonable expectation of death or some serious bodily injury, that a reasonable apprehension of death or great bodily harm would excuse accused in using all necessary force to protect his life or person, and that it was not necessary that there should be actual danger, provided he acted upon a reasonable apprehension or appearance of danger, as it appeared to him from his standpoint at the time, was not misleading in the use of the term "great bodily harm" as well as the statutory phrase "serious bodily injury," the terms as used being identical in meaning. Ward v. State, 126 S. W. 1145, 1146, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 62.

GREAT BODILY INJURY

See Assault with Intent to Commit Great Bodily Injury.

The term "great bodily injury," as used in Cr. Code, § 17b (Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 2069), implies an injury of a graver and more serious character than an ordinary battery; and whether a particular case is within the meaning of the statute is generally a question of fact for the jury. Lambert v. State, 114 N. W. 775, 776, 80 Neb. 562.

Where there were no eyewitnesses to a homicide, nothing in the dying declaration of decedent tending to show that accused acted in self-defense, and the evidence for accused showed that as he was ascending the steps of a passenger coach with a bucket of ice water decedent, the colored porter, confronted him, and asked him what he was doing, whereupon accused told him that he had permission from the conductor to get the water, and that it was none of the porter's business, that the porter struck him on the side of the face, throwing him off the steps of the car and upsetting the bucket, and that accused, being terribly scared and fearing that the porter would follow up his attack, immediately shot him, and there was no evidence that decedent was armed with a deadly weapon, that accused was being attacked at the time of the shooting, or that he had any reason to apprehend that he was in danger even of great bodily harm—the question of self-defense was not in the case, since, to establish a case of justifiable homicide, it must appear that something more than an ordinary assault was made upon accused, but the danger must be one of great bodily injury that would maim, be permanent in character, or might produce death; the phrase "great bodily injury" being more than apprehension, however imminent, of a mere battery not amounting to a felony. Territory v. Ayers, 113 Pac. 604, 606, 15 N. M. 581.

GREAT CARE

See, also, High Care.

"Great care," such as is required of a carrier of passengers, such as the operator of a passenger elevator in an office building, is the care usually bestowed upon the matter in hand by the most competent, conscientious, prudent, and careful class of persons engaged in the business to which such matters belong, no matter how few such persons may be, if they are numerous enough to have a recognized existence as a class. Goldsmith v. Holland Bldg. Co., 81 S. W. 1112, 1115, 182 Mo. 597 (quoting and adopting definition in Shearman & R. Neg. [5th Ed.] § 47, par. 3).

The distinction in degrees of care, such as slight, ordinary, or "great," is unscientific and impracticable, as the law furnishes no definition of these terms which can be applied in practice. Pomroy v. Bangor & A. R. Co., 67 Atl. 561, 562, 102 Me. 497.

GREAT DANGER

The danger to which plaintiff was exposed in being upon the trestle of a bridge with a rapidly approaching train was that of a collision with such train, the result of which most probably and naturally would have been the destruction of his life, or the infliction of serious bodily injury on him, and may be called "great danger." Texas Midland R. R. v. Byrd, 90 S. W. 185, 188, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 164.

GREAT-GRANDCHILD

As grandchild, see Grandchild.

GREAT INCONVENIENCE

The mere question between the right to challenge three jurors and the right to challenge two juries and a half is not within the meaning of the expression "great inconvenience," as used in the statement that, where a proposed construction of a statute would occasion great inconvenience, that construction is to be avoided if another and more reasonable interpretation is present in the statute. Betts v. United States, 182 Fed. 228, 236, 65 C. C. A. 452.

GREAT MANY PERSONS

In an action for personal injury, received at a railroad crossing, the averment by plaintiff that the highway which crossed the railroad track and on which he was traveling at the time of the accident was the main highway between two specified places, and a "great many persons" were constantly traveling on said highway and crossing the tracks of the railroad company, uses a term so indefinite as to the number intended that it has no significance in pleading. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Barnes, 76 N. E. 629, 681, 166 Ind. 7, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 778.

GREAT PONDS

Any pond containing more than 10 acres is a "great pond" within the Colonial Ordinance of 1641-47, forbidding appropriation of great ponds to any particular person or persons. Conant v. Jordan, 77 Atl. 938, 939, 107 Me. 227, 81 L. R. A. (N. S.) 434.

Lakes and ponds of more than 10 acres in extent are known as "great ponds," and are under the ownership and control of the state, which at its discretion can authorize the diversion of their waters for public purposes, without providing compensation to riparian owners on the ponds or their outlets. American Woolen Co. v. Kennebec Water Dist., 66 Atl. 316, 317, 102 Me. 153.

China Lake, in Maine, is a "great pond," being of more than ten acres in extent, and hence with its waters is public property owned and controlled by the state for the benefit of the public. American Woolen Co. v. Kennebec Water Dist., 66 Atl. 316, 317, 102 Me. 153.

GREATER PORTION

The term "greater portion," used in Bankr. Act 1898, § 2, subd. 1, conferring jurisdiction over the estates of bankrupts who have had their principal place of business within the territorial jurisdiction of the court for six months preceding or the "greater portion" thereof, means the major part or more than half of the period named. In re Plotke, 104 Fed. 964, 966, 44 C. C. A. 282.

GREATER RATE

The term "greater rate," as used in Laws 1870, p. 14, appropriating funds to a corporation for the improvement of a river, and providing that it should construct a canal and locks, and after completion pass all steam boats at a charge not greater than 50 cents a ton, is equivalent to authorizing the corporation to charge that much. State v. Portland General Electric Co., 98 Pac. 160, 162, 52 Or. 502.

Rev. Codes 1899, § 4066, provides that the taking, receiving, reserving, or charging a rate of interest greater than is allowed by section 4064, when knowingly done, shall be deemed a forfeiture of the entire interest which the note, bill, or other evidence of debt carries with it, or which has been agreed to be paid thereon. In case the "greater rate" of interest has been paid, the person to whom it has been paid or his legal representatives may recover back in an action for that purpose twice the amount of interest thus paid from the person taking or receiving the same. Held, that the "greater rate" includes a recovery for the whole sum paid, whether legal or illegal, and is the same as the entire interest contracted to be paid. Waldner v. Bowdon State Bank, 102 N. W. 160, 171, 13 N. D. 604, 3 Ann. Cas. 847.

GREATEST NUMBER OF VOTES

The words "greatest number of votes" at a primary in the election law declaring that the person receiving the greatest number of votes at a primary as the candidate of a party for an office shall be the candidate of that party, necessarily include the votes for persons whose names are not printed on any ballot but are written in on the primary ballot of his party, as well as those that are written in and also printed on the ballot of some other party. State ex rel. Pray v. Yankee, 109 N. W. 550, 552, 129 Wis. 662.

GREATLY

The use of the word "greatly," in instructions, by calling attention to the injury by the repeated expressions "greatly injured," "greatly wounded," and "suffered greatly," is error, either to mislead the jury to understand there could be no recovery unless the injury was great, or to give them the impression that the trial judge considered the injury great. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lynch, 126 S. W. 362, 365, 187 Ky. 606.

GREEK FIRE

"Greek fire" is a term that was applied to explosives for centuries before the invention of gunpowder or blasting powder, and, in the absence of proof to the contrary, will be presumed to be an explosive of lower degree than gun or blasting powder. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Penman, 151 Fed. 961, 963, 81 C. C. A. 151.

GREEN GOODS

"Green goods" is a term applied to counterfeit money. People v. Marvin, 29 N. Y. Supp. 881, 882, 79 Hun, 810. See, also, People v. Reilly, 4 N. Y. Supp. 81, 84, 51 Hun, 624.

GREEN OR RIPE FRUIT

The term "green or ripe fruits," as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 262, 30 Stat. 171, indicates fruit in its condition as it is plucked from the tree. A. L. Causse Mfg. Co. v. United States, 143 Fed. 690, 691.

The first part of paragraph 262, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, 30 Stat. 171, imposing a duty per bushel on cherries and other fruits, "green or ripe," applies to those fruits, ripe or unripe, when imported in their natural condition. Causse Mfg.

Co. v. United States, 151 Fed. 4, 5, 80 C. C. A. 461.

GREEN TURTLE

As animal, see Animal.

GREEN WALL

A term used in building, to represent a wall in which the cement mortar had not fully set so as to make the wall solid. Scharff v. Southern Illinois Const. Co., 92 S. W. 126, 127, 115 Mo. App. 157.

GREENBACKS

The term "greenback" is a popular name applied to all United States Treasury notes. McDonald v. State, 58 S. E. 1067, 1068, 2 Ga. App. 633.

United States Treasury notes are commonly called "greenbacks." State v. Nellon, 78 Pac. 321, 324, 48 Or. 168.

The courts judicially know that the term "greenback" is the popular name used to designate a certain species of the currency of the United States. Jones v. State, 72 S. E. 518, 10 Ga. App. 59.

GREENSTICK BREAK OR FRACTURE

Where a rib breaks on one side, the opposite bending but holding fast and refusing to sever, it is called a "greenstick fracture." Gorman v. St. Louis Transit Co., 70 S. W. 731, 734, 96 Mo. App. 602.

"Greenstick break," as used in reference to a fracture of the jaw, means a crack without any separation of the bone. Commercial Telephone Co. v. Davis (Tex.) 96 S. W. 939, 940.

GRENADINE SYRUP

Claimant shipped in interstate commerce a compound labeled "Grenadine Syrup," composed of sugar, citric and tartaric acid, and the juices of certain fruits. Held that, since the word "grenadine" in its common acceptation does not mean a syrup made from pomegranates, but the term "grenadine syrup" is used in commerce to designate, not a syrup so made, but a syrup possessing a certain characteristic flavor and color, a purchaser of syrup so labeled was not entitled to expect to receive a syrup actually made from pomegranates, and that the syrup labeled was therefore not subject to forfeiture because of adulteration or misbranding. United States v. Thirty Cases Purporting to be Grenadine Syrup, 199 Fed. 932, 933.

GREYHOUND MOTION

"Greyhound motion" means the oscillation of a street car due simply to the speed and constant going, and not to any sudden or abnormal motion. Moskowitz v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 960, 963, 89 App. Div. 425.

GRIEVANCE

Other grievances, see Other.

GRIEVOUS

The word "grievous," as used in Civ. Code, § 134, defining extreme cruelty as inflicting "grievous" bodily injury, means painful. Ryan v. Ryan, 84 Pac. 494, 33 Mont. 406.

GRIFF

The word "griff" in the state of Louisiana has a definite meaning, indicating the issue of a negro and a mulatto. A person too black to be a mulatto and too pale in color to be a negro is a "griff." State v. Treadaway, 52 South. 500, 508, 126 La. 300, 139 Am. St. Rep. 514, 20 Ann. Cas. 1297.

GRINDING

The Standard Dictionary defines "grinding" as a reduction to fine particles or powder by crushing or friction. United States v. Graser-Rothe, 164 Fed. 205, 206.

GRIP

A device attached to cable cars to grasp the cable is called a "grip." Redman v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 84 S. W. 26, 27, 185 Mo. 1, 105 Am. St. Rep. 558.

GROCER

GROCERIES

As supplies, see Supply (Noun).

GROGSHOP

As defined in a legislative act as any place where intoxicating, vinous, or malt liquors are sold at retail, by "grog or tippling shop" was meant a place where intoxicating liquors are kept, and would not include a place where only a nonintoxicating malt liquor was sold. State v. Marou, 55 South. 472, 473, 128 La. 829.

GROOVE

A "groove" is defined as "a furrow, channel, or long hollow." Gordon, Strobel & Laureau v. Carnegie Steel Co., 126 Fed. 538, 540.

GROSS AMOUNT

The words "gross amount of premiums" received, as used in the statute, providing for the levy and collection of an occupation tax on corporations, etc., and requiring every fire insurance company to annually report "the gross amount of premiums received" in the state on property located there and from persons residing there, during the preceding year, and imposing an annual tax on the gross premium receipts, and declaring that the gross premium receipts are the premium receipts reported to the commissioner on the sworn statement, etc., include sums which a fire insurance company paid for reinsurance without proof that the companies in which it reinsured had the right to claim a portion of the premium at the time the insurance was effected, and include the sums returned to policy holders on the cancellation of policies, as provided therein; the word "gross" meaning whole, entire, total, without deduction. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Love, 108 S. W. 158, 159, 101 Tex. 376.

The term "gross amount of premiums," when used as the basis for payment of of an insurance license, means of the premiums actually received and earned. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth, 107 S. W. 802, 804, 128 Ky. 174 (quoting and adopting the definition in State v. Hibernia Ins. Co., 38 La. 464).

GROSS DAMAGES

In a complaint for the flowage of plaintiff's land by defendant's milldam under the mill acts "gross damages" are simply the equivalent of "annual damages," which are to be ascertained by the same mode and upon the same facts. Ingram v. Maine Water Co., 57 Atl. 893, 894, 98 Me. 566.

When the jury determined the damages for land taken for a municipal improvement, and then that resulting to property not taken, it did all that it could do, though the court pursuant to the statute submitted as a third item "the 'gross damages' to any land or property not taken (other than damages to a remainder by reason of its severance from the part taken)," as that means the same as damages accruing to the part remaining, and the parenthetical clause must, if it means anything mean that the damages to the remainder shall be assessed separate from the sum allowed for land actually taken. City of Tacoma v. Bonnell, 109 Pac. 60, 61, 58 Wash. 593.

GROSS EARNINGS

See Gross Earnings Tax.

See, also, Railroad Business.

The income derived by a railroad company from money deposited in banks, interest on securities, rentals upon the right of way, garnishee fees, commissions from in-insurance companies, rental from telephone companies, billboard privileges, sale of hay, stumpage, etc., is not "gross earnings" within Sp. Laws 1878, p. 802, c. 111, imposing a 3 per cent. tax on gross earnings in lieu of all other taxation. Amounts which might have been received had a railroad company charged itself at the usual rates for shipping its own supplies and material over its own lines are not "gross earnings" within such law. Amounts received from other railroad companies for the repair of cars, based upon actual cost, according to a reciprocal arrangement between them, are not "gross earnings" within such law. Amounts received for the sale of old material, supplies, and equipment, or of the surplus of supplies and material not necessary for a railroad company's own use, are not "gross earnings" within such law. Amounts received from other railroad companies for the use of work trains employed in construction work are "gross earnings" within such law. Amounts received by a railroad company for its cars employed in transportation in excess of the amounts paid by it for the use of cars of other companies are "gross earnings" within such law. Amounts received from lumber companies and other parties in moving, transferring, and switching cars at loading points are "gross earnings" within such law. The "gross earnings" is not limited to earnings derived from the operation of trains, but includes all earnings received by the railroad company while performing work incidental to or connected with the business of transportation, and which may reasonably be considered within the scope of its corporate power. State v. Minnesota & I. Ry. Co., 118 N. W. 679, 106 Minn. 176, 16 Ann. Cas. 426.

Gross receipts from labor and work train service, and materials furnished in maintaining, laying, surfacing, extending, and taking up spur tracks for private parties, is no part of the "gross earnings" forming the basis of the 3 per cent. tax, under Gen. St. 1894, § 1687. State v. Minnesota & I. Ry. Co., 118 N. W. 1007, 106 Minn. 176, 16 Ann. Cas. 426.

Under St. 1897, p. 504, c. 500, § 10, amending St. 1894, p. 768, c. 548, § 21, which required a street railroad company to pay a franchise tax computed on the "gross earnings," so as to provide that it shall pay for the privileges granted, and for use and occupation of the streets by its lines, a sum in each year depending on the dividend for that year, to be seven-eighths of 1 per cent. of the gross earnings of all its lines of railroads, in case the dividend does not exceed 6 per cent., with a certain amount to be added in case the dividend is larger, it is the earnings from the railway in the transportation of passengers, as distinguished from all other income incidental to the business, on which the tax is computed. Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 84 N. E. 845, 846, 199 Mass. 96.

A proportionate part of the property of telephone companies within the state resulting from its use in interstate commerce constitutes a part of its "gross earnings," on which it must pay the 3 per cent. tax provided by Gen. Laws 1897, p. 581, c. 314. Money collected by a telephone company from its patrons for other telephone companies with which it has traffic arrangements is not a part of its "gross earnings." Money received from messengers employed specially to call nonsubscribers to the telephone stations, and money collected from the company's patrons as messenger charges paid to persons in whose buildings the company's booths are located, are a part of the "gross earnings." State v. Northwestern Telephone Exch. Co., 120 N. W. 534, 537, 107 Minn. 390.

Amounts which the regular rates would have produced, had the telephone service which was in fact rendered without charge been charged for at the regular rates, is not a part of the "gross earnings." State v. Northwestern Telephone Exch. Co., 120 N. W. 534, 539, 107 Minn. 390.

The term "gross earnings" from its transportation or transmission business," as used in a statute imposing the franchise tax on the gross earnings of certain corporations, must have been intended by the Legislature to embrace all of the corporation's receipts derived from the use of its capital in the transportation business or elsewhere, even though it had been invested for business purposes in stocks or bonds of other corporations. State v. Central Trust Co., 67 Atl. 267, 271, 106 Md. 268 (People ex rel. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Roberts, 52 N. Y. Supp. 859, 32 App. Div. 113; Id., 51 N. E. 1093, 157 N. Y. 677).

Under Tax Law (Laws 1896, c. 908) § 186, imposing an annual tax on lighting and other companies of five-tenths of 1 per cent. of their gross earnings, and defining the term "gross earnings" as all receipts from the employment of capital, without any deduction, the definition having been added by amendment by Laws 1907, c. 734, § 3, the cost of raw materials used by a lighting company converted into gas and electric current is not to be deducted from the receipts of the company in determining its gross earnings. People ex rel. Westchester Lighting Co. v. Gaus, 92 N. E. 230, 231, 199 N. Y. 147.

Laws 1884, c. 252, § 8, provides that every railroad corporation organized, constructed, or extended thereunder shall pay a 3 per cent. gross earnings tax for the year ending the next preceding 30th day of September, and, after the expiration of five years, shall pay a 5 per cent. tax. Held, that the term "gross earnings" as so used was synonymous with "gross receipts" to be derived from fares; and hence the statute should be construed as applicable only to the company operating a railroad so organized, and not to its lessor. City of New York v. Thirty-Fourth St. Crosstown Ry. Co., 122 N. Y. Supp. 344, 346, 137 App. Div. 644.

GROSS EARNINGS TAX

See, also, Tax—Taxation.

The "gross earnings tax" provided for by Gen. Laws 1897, p. 581, c. 814, is a tax on the property of the corporation, and not on the corporation, or upon the right to engage in business. State v. Northwestern Telephone Exch. Co., 120 N. W. 534, 537, 107 Minn. 390.

The "gross earnings tax" imposed on a street railway by Acts 1882, p. 357, c. 229, includes as an element a tax on the easement of the company in the streets under a grant for that purpose, and the tax is on the corporation itself measured by the amount of its business, intended as a substitute for a direct tax on its intangible property, and no further assessment on its easement can be made without express legislative authority. United Rys. & Electric Co. of Baltimore v. City of Baltimore, 73 Atl. 633, 634, 635, 113 Md. 264.

GROSS INCOME

Where the charter of a railroad company required a payment of a percentage of earnings of its charter lines to the state, and in various sections of the charter referred to them as "gross proceeds," "gross receipts," or "gross income," all three terms were of equivocal import, but should be construed to mean the total receipts received by the railroad company from its charter lines, before anything was deducted for expenses of management. State v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 92 N. E. 814, 847, 246 Ill. 188.

Where a testator gave his wife and unmarried daughters the use of his residence, together with the total income of his estate after deducting taxes, the total income in view of the deduction of taxes meant the "gross income," which is the entire amount that the use of the principal yields, as contradistinguished from "net income," which means what is left of gross income after all expenses on behalf of up-keep are deducted. Schmidt v. Schmidt, 84 Atl. 629, 631, 80 N. J. Eq. 364.

GROSS INDIGNITY

The words "gross indignity" are more generally employed in proceedings for divorce than in criminal cases, and when so employed the indignity which will furnish good ground for divorce may be inflicted by acts or conduct rendering the condition of the injured party intolerable, and personal violence and conduct creating fear of bodily harm, it seems, is not a necessary element of the offense. A proposed instruction to the jury telling them that where one kills another though intentional but in passion, in the heat of blood, upon sudden provocation, by gross indignity of by threat of personal violence, was rightly rejected by the use of the disjunctive "or," the instruction would have justified the murder if only the deceased threatened the defendant with personal violence. State v. Crawford, 66 S. E. 110, 115, 66 W. Va. 114 (citing 14 Cyc. pp. 625, 626).

GROSS INJUSTICE

A proceeding which deprives a person of his property by means of a void tax is "gross injustice" within the meaning of Comp. St. 1907, § 5235, providing that a confirmation of a tax sale shall be denied where the taxes and assessments or a part thereof were based on proceedings wherein there had been gross injustice. State v. Several Parcels of Land, 116 N. W. 682, 683, 81 Neb. 770.

Comp. St. 1901, c. 12a, § 161, providing that the action of the board of equalization of the city of Omaha may be attacked for fraud, gross injustice, or mistake, in the use of the term "gross injustice," means an act so excessive in its nature as to deprive a citizen of his property or a part thereof without due process of law. Wead v. City of Omaha, 102 N. W. 675, 676, 73 Neb. 321.

GROSS MISTAKE

The words "palpably wrong" and "gross mistake of fact" are very comprehensive and elastic, and it is not necessarily true that the action of the Postmaster General may be reviewed when it is palpably wrong or when, through gross mistake of facts, he fell into a misapprehension of the facts. People's United States Bank v. Gilson, 161 Fed. 286, 294, 88 C. C. A. 332.

GROSS NEGLIGENCE

"Gross negligence" may be defined as "the want of slight care and diligence." Lothian v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 126 N. W. 621, 622, 25 S. D. 319; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Reeves, 126 Pac. 216, 218, 34 Okl. 468.

"Gross negligence" is the absence of slight care. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 122 S. W. 806, 809, 135 Ky. 462; Louisville St. Ry. Co. v. Brownfield (Ky.) 96 S. W. 912, 914; Louisville, H. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Kessee (Ky.) 103 S. W. 261, 264; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Roth, 114 S. W. 264, 268, 130 Ky. 759.

"Gross negligence" denotes a degree of carelessness greater than the degree implied by ordinary negligence and is sometimes used to denote wilful negligence or fraud, or the want of even a slight care and diligence, or of such diligence that even careless men are accustomed to exercise. Strong v. Western Union Tel. Co., 109 Pac. 910, 916, 18 Idaho, 389, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 409, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 55.

While "gross negligence" has often been defined as the absence of slight care, an instruction that "gross negligence is that kind of negligence which evinces a reckless disregard or reckless indifference to the safety of another or others" accurately defined the act of street car men in knowingly operating on a steep incline a car with a useless brake and relying entirely on the reverse electric current to control the car. The railroad company complained that the court defined "gross negligence" as "failure to take such care as a person of common sense and reasonable skill in like business, but of careless habits, would observe in avoiding injury to his own person or life under circumstances of equal or similar danger to those which may be under investigation." But a comparison of the two definitions shows that the difference was in favor of the company. Lexington R. Co. v. Johnson, 122 S. W. 830, 831, 139 Ky. 323.

Civ. Code, § 2175, prohibiting a carrier from limiting its liability for injuries resulting from gross negligence, was a part of Civ. Code 1872, which by sections 16 and 17 declared that there are three degrees of care and diligence, "slight," "ordinary," and "great," and three degrees of negligence, "slight," "ordinary," and "gross." "Slight care" was defined as that which is such as persons of ordinary prudence usually exercise about their own affairs of slight importance, and "gross negligence" was defined as that which consists in the want of slight care and diligence. These sections were repealed in 1874. Held, that such repeal cannot affect the construction of the words "gross negligence" as used in section 2175, as the intention of the Legislature at the time of the adoption of the latter section must control, and there is no warrant for holding that such words were intended to mean other than as the term is defined in the repealed sections. Walther v. Southern Pac. Co., 116 Pac. 51, 54, 159 Cal. 769, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 235.

In a suit in which an issue of gross negligence was involved, the trial court, in defining the term, instructed the jury that "gross negligence is the failure to take such care as a person of common sense and reasonable skill in like business, but of careless habits, would observe in avoiding injury to his own person or life, under circumstances of equal or similar danger to the plaintiff on the occasion under consideration." The appellate court in passing on this instruction, and the contention of the appellant that "gross negligence" should be defined as the want of slight care, said that it might be doubted if there was an appreciable practical difference between the two definitions, and that whatever the hazard of the particular employment might be, whether upon a railroad or elsewhere, the degree of care is required to correspond with the danger of the situation, and a definition given by the trial court, or its equivalent, should be applied in all cases where gross negligence was an element of the suit. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Board (Ky.) 77 S. W. 189.

The words "gross negligence," as used in an instruction in an action for wrongful death of an employe, means the failure to use such care as careless and inattentive persons usually exercise under similar circumstances as those under investigation. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Oane's Adm'r (Ky.) 90 S. W. 1061, 1064.

"Gross negligence" is a failure to use that degree of care that careless and inattentive persons would usually exercise under the circumstances as then and there existed. Moss v. Home Ins. Co. of New York (Ky.) 99 S. W. 308, 309.

Since officers charged with keeping the streets in repair are liable for injury caused by their indifference in failing to repair, they may by enactment be rendered accountable when such neglect is gross, which is the want of that diligence which even careless men are accustomed to exercise. Batdorf v. Oregon City, 100 Pac. 937, 940, 53 Or. 402, 18 Ann. Cas. 287 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3168).

The words "slight," "ordinary," and "gross," as applied to negligence, are not used in the decisions with the same meaning, or any definite and well-understood meaning. The words "gross negligence" are often used as the antithesis of "slight care," but in many relations the law only requires the exercise of slight care, and the failure to exercise it cannot be different in degree from the failure to exercise a very high degree of care where it is demanded by the law. The absurdity for such a standard for determining supposed degrees of negligence is manifest. It has been noted that "slight negligence" is not regarded as inconsistent with due care, and, if due care is exercised, there is no actionable negligence, and therefore, in a legal sense, no negligence at all. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Hamler, 74 N. E. 705, 709, 215 Ill. 525, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 674, 106 Am. St. Rep. 187, 3 Ann. Cas. 42 (citing Bloor v. Town of Delafield, 34 N. W. 115, 69 Wis. 273; Decker v. McSorley, 93 N. W. 808, 116 Wis. 643; Rideout v. Winnebago Traction Co., 101 N. W. 672, 123 Wis. 297, 69 L. R. A. 601).

The better doctrine is that care or the want of it is not to be measured arbitrarily according to fixed definitions as "slight care," "ordinary care," or "extraordinary care," or "slight negligence" or "gross negligence," although all these phrases are used somewhat loosely by courts and law writers; but it is to be measured by reasonableness, under all the circumstances of the particular inquiry. The only true measure is "reasonable care." And that expression has been declared by the courts in England and elsewhere to be synonymous with "ordinary care." "Reasonable care" is a relative term, and what is reasonable care in a given case depends upon many considerations. What would be reasonable care under some conditions would clearly be negligence in others. Reasonable care and vigilance vary according to the exigencies which require vigilance and attention. They relate to the work to be done, to the instrumentalities to be used, to the dangers that may result from their use, to the varying duties owed by those who supply or use them. And in all cases reasonable care means such care as reasonable and prudent men use under like circumstances. Caven v. Bodwell Granite Co., 59 Atl. 285, 287, 99 Me. 278 (citing Fletcher v. Boston & M. R. R., 1 Allen [83 Mass.] 9, 79 Am. Dec. 695; Bigelow v. Reed, 51 Me. 325; Palmer v. Lumber Ass'n, 90 Me. 93, 38 Atl. 108; Sawyer v. J. M. Arnold Shoe Co., 38 Atl. 333, 90 Me. 369; Cayzer v. Taylor, 10 Gray [76 Mass.] 274, 69 Am. Dec. 817; Cunningham v. Hall, 4 Allen [86 Mass.] 268; Holly v. Boston Gaslight Co., 8 Gray [74 Mass.] 123, 69 Am. Dec. 233).

"'Gross neglect' is a want of that care which every man of common sense, how inattentive soever he may be takes of his own property." Southern R. Co. v. Davis, 65 S. E. 131, 132, 132 Ga. 812 (quoting the definition in Civ. Code 1895, § 2900); Insurance Co. of North America v. Leader, 48 S. E. 972, 977, 121 Ga. 260.

By Civ. Code 1895, § 2900, "gross neglect" is defined as "the want of that care which every man of common sense, how inattentive soever he may be, takes of his own property"; the amount of diligence required is such as an ordinarily prudent person would use in his own affairs. Brown Store Co. v. Chattahoochee Lumber Co., 49 S. E. 839, 840, 121 Ga. 800 (citing Macon & Western R. Co. v. McConnell, 31 Ga. 133, 76 Am. Dec. 685; Macon & Western R. Co. v. Davis, 13 Ga. 68; Southern Mut. Ins. Co. v. Hudson, 38 S. E. 964, 113 Ga. 434).

Carelessness manifestly materially greater than want of common prudence is necessary to constitute "gross negligence." Devine v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 91 N. E. 522, 523, 205 Mass. 416.

"Gross neglect" means an absence of that diligence that ordinarily prudent men in the conduct of such business would have exercised. City of Franklin v. Caldwell, 96 S. W. 606, 606, 123 Ky. 528 (quoting and adopting the definition in Savings Bank v. Caperton, 8 S. W. 885, 87 Ky. 306, 12 Am. St. Rep. 488).

The "gross negligence," which excuses contributory negligence, means more than a mere epithet characterizing the degree of negligence of which the defendant may be guilty, and the theory on which a recovery is permitted by one guilty of contributory negligence on the ground of defendant's gross negligence is that where plaintiff's negligence has been discovered by the defendant, or should by the exercise of ordinary care have been discovered, in time to have avoided the injury, and the subsequent negligence of the defendant results in an injury to the plaintiff, his previous negligence is not a bar to a recovery. Strong v. Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co., 120 N. W. 633, 637, 156 Mich. 66.

Before "gross negligence" can be made out which warrants recovery notwithstanding the precedent contributory negligence of the plaintiff, the negligence of the latter must have been discovered, or the defendant must have neglected the most ordinary precaution in failing to discover it. Buxton v. Ainsworth, 101 N. W. 817, 818, 138 Mich. 532, 5 Ann. Cas. 146.

A motorman who allows his car to run down a sharp grade past a number of persons engaged in picking up packages on the edge of the track, at the place of a recent accident, with no control of the car and without sounding an alarm, is guilty of "gross negligence" justifying a verdict for injuries to one of the persons so engaged, though the latter may be guilty of contributory negligence. Rhymes v. Jackson Electric Ry., Light & Power Co., 37 South. 708, 85 Miss. 140.

"'Gross negligence' is sometimes defined as the entire absence of care." In an action against a railroad for injuries at a crossing, an instruction that "gross negligence" is sometimes defined as an entire absence of care does not put on defendant a greater burden of proof than the law requires. Thomasson v. Southern R., 51 S. E. 443, 447, 72 S. C. 1.

Gross negligence is not characterized by inadvertence in the lexical sense, but rather by absence of it. There are three degrees of negligence: First, slight negligence involving an absence of that degree of care and vigilance which persons of extraordinary prudence and foresight are accustomed to use; second, ordinary negligence, involving failure to exercise in any given situation such care as the great mass of mankind ordinarily exercise under the same or similar circumstances; and, third, gross negligence involving a failure to exercise any care to avoid inflicting injury to the person or property of others, recklessly or wantonly acting or failing to act to avoid such injury, evincing such utter disregard of consequences as to suggest a willfulness, substantially equivalent to intent, to injure and denominated such, constructively, and classibly with actual intent as regards duty to compensate for the injury. Astin v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 128 N. W. 265, 268, 143 Wis. 477, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 158.

The error in a charge, in an action for injuries in a collision at a crossing, which defines "gross negligence," within Civ. Code 1902, § 2139, relieving a railroad company from liability if the person injured was guilty of gross negligence, as the want of any degree of care for his own safety is not prejudicial, since the difference between want of slight care and the want of any care is too shadowy to affect the verdict of a jury of ordinary intelligence. Lee v. North Western R. Co., 71 S. E. 840, 89 S. O. 274.

Failure on the part of a locomotive engineer to see when he ought to have seen, and when the consequences of such failure might result in the death of a human being, may be found to be "gross negligence," within St. 1906, c. 463, pt. 1, § 63, rendering a carrier liable for the death of a passenger resulting from the gross negligence of its employes. Renaud v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 97 N. E. 98, 102, 210 Mass. 553, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 689.

Negligence of a carrier of passengers in leaving their personal safety to careless agents is "gross negligence." Jordan v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co., 92 Pac. 284, 286, 47 Wash. 503.

"The personal safety of railroad passengers should not be left to the sport of chance or the negligence of careless agents. Any negligence in such cases may well deserve the epithet of 'gross.'" Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Stibbs, 87 Pac. 293, 294, 17 Okl. 97 (quoting and adopting definition in Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. [55 U. S.] 468-485, 14 L. Ed. 502).

When carriers, such as the operator of a passenger elevator in an office building, undertake to convey persons by the powerful but dangerous agency of steam, public policy and safety require that they be held to the greatest possible care and diligence, and, whether the consideration for such transportation be pecuniary or otherwise, the personal safety of the passengers should not be left to the sport of chance or the negligence of careless agents. Any negligence in such case may well deserve the epithet of "gross." Goldsmith v. Holland Bldg. Co., 81 S. W. 1112, 1115, 182 Mo. 597 (quoting and adopting definition in Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. [55 U. S.] 486, 14 L. Ed. 502).

The use of the word "gross" in an instruction as to negligence is not prejudicial, where the pleadings show that plaintiff was put to work under a high bank and then the bank was pruned off on him. Logsdon v. Western Brick Co. (Ky.) 74 S. W. 706, 708.

The personal injury on which the action is based having occurred in Tennessee, the definition of gross negligence, authorizing punitive damages, approved by its Supreme Court, "such entire want of care as would raise a presumption of a conscious indifference to consequences," and not that approved by the Supreme Court of Kentucky, "the failure to take such care as a person of common sense and reasonable skill in like business, but of careless habits, would observe in avoiding injury to his own person or life, under circumstances of equal or similar danger to those which may be under investigation," should be given. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lynch, 126 S. W. 362, 365, 137 Ky. 696.

Lesser degree included

"'Gross neglect' is the highest degree of neglect now recognized by our statute, and, under a petition charging gross neglect, the plaintiff may recover for any lesser degree of negligence." Pendley v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. (Ky.) 92 S. W. 1, 2.

"Gross negligence" does not include ordinary negligence, and proof of the former does not prove the latter. Rideout v. Winnebago Traction Co., 101 N. W. 672, 674, 123 Wis. 297, 69 L. R. A. 601.

Ordinary negligence distinguished

See Ordinary Negligence.

As want of due or ordinary care

A characterization of defendant's negligence as "gross," in a declaration, does not change the legal effect of the allegation from what it would have been had the term "negligence" alone been used. Kelly v. Malott, 135 Fed. 74, 76, 67 C. C. A. 548.

"'Gross negligence' is a materially greater degree of negligence than mere lack of ordinary care." Manning v. Conway, 78 N. E. 401, 402, 192 Mass. 122.

A substantially and appreciably greater degree of negligence than failure to exercise ordinary care must be shown to prove the heedless and palpable disregard of the safety of others, characterizing that excess of ordinary negligence termed "gross" in Rev. Laws, c. 111, § 267, relating to liability for wrongful death caused by the gross negligence of a railroad company's agents or servants. Devine v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 91 N. E. 522, 523, 205 Mass. 416.

The term "gross," in a petition for negligence charging gross negligence in respect to an act complained of when there is no allegation of wanton and reckless conduct, is nothing but an epithet meaning no more than the failure to exercise ordinary diligence in the circumstances of the particular case. Clark v. Colorado & N. W. R. Co., 165 Fed. 408, 411, 91 C. C. A. 358, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 988.

There is no such legal degree of negligence as "gross negligence." The word "gross" in this connection is a mere epithet used to characterize one of the two legal classes of negligence mentioned. Purple v. Union Pac. R. Co., 114 Fed. 123, 130, 51 C. C. A. 564, 57 L. R. A. 700.

"The term 'gross negligence' undoubtedly describes colloquially a greater degree of carelessness than the term 'ordinary negligence'; but the legal significance of the term is difficult to ascertain. In one view gross negligence is deemed equivalent in law to fraud or to intentional wrong; in another it is deemed exactly synonymous with ordinary negligence; while in a third it is deemed to be applicable to those degrees of carelessness, whatever they may be, existent between ordinary negligence and willful negligence or fraud. * * * The doctrine that in a legal contemplation there is no distinction between gross negligence and ordinary negligence has certainly not been adopted uniformly by the courts which have considered negligence on the part of the telegraph company. In certain cases, gross negligence is evidently deemed the equivalent in legal contemplation of ordinary negligence. In many cases, however, gross negligence is used to denote a degree of carelessness greater than the degree implied by ordinary negligence and one of which the law takes distinct legal cognizance. It is thus used in those cases in which telegraph companies are permitted to limit their liability for losses occurring through their ordinary negligence, but at the same time are not permitted to limit their liability for losses occurring through their gross negligence. Unfortunately, in only one of these cases is an attempt made to define gross negligence or a test offered to distinguish it from either ordinary negligence or fraud. In the rest of these cases, therefore, it is impossible to determine whether gross negligence is deemed to be synonymous with willful negligence or fraud or to be applicable only to those degrees of carelessness, whatever they may be, existent between willful and ordinary negligence. * * * Gross negligence is the want of even a slight care and diligence. Gross negligence is the want of that diligence that even careless men are accustomed to exercise, and gross negligence is the want of that care which every man of common sense, however inattentive he may be, takes of his own property, and is nothing more than negligence with the addition of a vituperative epithet." Strong v. Western Union Tel. Co., 100 Pac. 910, 916, 18 Idaho, 389, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 409, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 55 (quoting and adopting definition in 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3168; Gray, Communication by Telegraph, § 37).

Negligence, to be "gross," must include an element of carelessness so great that the court or jury can say that there was not only an absence of the due care that should have been exercised, but also a great degree of negligence materially greater than that which would constitute ordinary negligence. Martin v. Boston & N. St. R. Co., 91 N. E. 159, 205 Mass. 16.

The term "gross negligence," under the statute relating to the negligence of employees, means negligence materially greater than the lack of ordinary care; but a finding of gross negligence should be sustained, where the injury likely to result from failure to do that which should be done will be fatal or very serious, so that a finding of gross negligence by a railroad company's servants is justified where an express train is run past a station without slowing up while a local train is stopping to discharge passengers. Renaud v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 92 N. E. 710, 711, 206 Mass. 557.

As want of necessary care

"Gross negligence" is the same thing as ordinary negligence with the addition of a vituperative epithet, and is a relative term which doubtless is to be understood as meaning a greater want of care than is implied by the term "ordinary negligence," but after all merely means the absence of care, that was necessary under the circumstances. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Stamps, 104 S. W. 1114, 1119, 84 Ark. 241 (citing Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489, 23 L. Ed. 374).

"'Gross negligence' is a relative term. It is doubtless to be understood as meaning a greater want of care than is applied by the term ordinary negligence, but after all it means the absence of the care that was necessary under the circumstances." Southern Ry. Co. v. Davis, 65 S. E. 131, 132, 132 Ga. 812 (quoting and adopting the definition in Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489, 23 L. Ed. 374); Raymond v. Portland, R. Co., 62 Atl. 602, 605, 100 Me. 529, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94 (quoting and adopting the definition in Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489, 23 L. Ed. 374).

"Gross negligence" is a relative term. It is doubtless to be understood as meaning greater want of care than is implied by the term "ordinary negligence," but it means the absence of care that is necessary under all the circumstances. The burden of proving "gross negligence" of a carrier of goods is sustained by proving that the goods were properly packed and delivered to the carrier and that they arrived in a damaged condition. Rieser v. Metropolitan Exp. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 170, 171, 45 Misc. Rep. 632 (citing in support of definition Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489, 23 L. Ed. 374).

"Gross negligence" by a bailee is nothing more than a failure to bestow the care which the situation demands. The omission of the reasonable care required is the negligence which creates the liability, and its existence is for the jury or for the court where a jury is waived. Booth v. Litchfield, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1009, 1012, 62 Misc. Rep. 279 (quoting and adopting the definition in Preston v. Prather, 11 Sup. Ct. 162, 137 U. S. 604, 34 L. Ed. 788).

"Gross negligence" is a relative term, and means a greater want of care than is implied by the term ordinary negligence. It, however, means only the absence of the care that was necessary under the circumstances. The absence of such care, however, crossing, without ringing a bell or blowing a whistle, or without any person on the cars to control or give warning, the watchman on duty giving no warning, was "gross negligence," which is a reckless or wanton disregard of the rights or safety of others, or the doing of an act intentionally or maliciously, and punitive damages were properly allowed. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Allnutt, 151 S. W. 14, 19, 150 Ky. 831.

Plaintiff while walking by the side of a railroad track in a street where there was plenty of room to have avoided a moving engine was struck by the tender of an engine approaching her from the rear. The engine was moving very slowly, and stopped within 10 feet after plaintiff was discovered to be in a place of danger. The engineer saw plaintiff as he approached, and was watching her until the time of the accident with nothing to obstruct his view. One of his hands was on the air brake lever, the other was ringing the bell continuously, and he testified that the air pump was making a noise that could be heard 85 or 40 rods, but that plaintiff proceeded along the path for 100 feet without looking to the rear, and that just before the injury she suddenly stepped between the rails, when the engine was not more than 10 feet from her. Held, that the engineer was not guilty of gross negligence, such term being defined to mean an intentional failure to perform a manifest duty in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life or property of another, a thoughtless disregard of consequences without the exercise of any effort to avoid them. Berry v. Harbor Springs Ry. Co., 138 N. W. 1038, 1040, 173 Mich. 181.

In an action against a street railroad company for damage caused by a collision between a steam road roller and an inter-urban car at a public highway, the court instructed that plaintiff could not recover unless the injury occurred by reason of the gross negligence of defendant and by that was not meant that the motorman actually intended to do the particular wrong complained of, that by gross negligence is meant intentionally failing to perform a manifest duty in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life and property of another, and also implies a thoughtless disregard of the consequences without the exercise of any effort to avoid them, and unless the motorman, after he saw plaintiff's steam roller upon the track, and had no reason to believe it would vacate the track, did nothing to prevent the collision, but ran on in reckless disregard of the consequences, the jury could not find for plaintiff. Held, that the instruction was not erroneous. Good Roads Const. Co. v. Port Huron, St. C. & M. C. Ry. Co., 138 N. W. 320, 324, 173 Mich. 1.

GROSS PREMIUM PLAN

The "gross premium plan" employed by a building association in taking the premium and determining the amount is where an amount or certain percentage determined on is deducted from the par value of the stock at the time of the loan, and the difference or balance is handed over to the borrower. The amount so deducted is often determined by receiving bids from various members who are desirous of anticipating the value of their stock by borrowing from the association some of its funds on hand. Fidelity Sav. Ass'n v. Bank of Commerce, 75 Pac. 448, 456, 12 Wyo. 815.

GROSS PREMIUMS

In Tax Law, § 187, Laws 1896, p. 859, c. 908, as amended by Laws 1897, p. 630, c. 494, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 297, c. 118, imposing a franchise tax on the gross amount of premiums received during the preceding calendar year by domestic insurance companies, the term "gross premiums" includes, in addition to all other premiums, such premiums as are collected from policies subsequently canceled and from reinsurance. People ex rel. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Miller, 85 N. Y. Supp. 468, 471, 88 App. Div. 218.

Gross premiums received by domestic insurance companies for business done in the state for the purpose of taxation, under Laws 1896, p. 859, c. 908, § 187, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 297, c. 118, § 1, imposing an annual state tax for the privilege of carrying on the business, and providing that the term "gross premiums" shall include such premiums as are collected from policies subsequently canceled and from reinsurance, do not include premiums unearned and paid in advance, but refunded on a cancellation of a policy. People ex rel. Continental Ins. Co. v. Miller, 70 N. E. 10, 11, 177 N. Y. 515.

The words "gross amount of premiums" received, as used in the statute providing for the levy and collection of an occupation tax on corporations, etc., and requiring every fire insurance company to annually report the "gross amount of premiums received" in the state on property located there and from persons residing there, during the preceding year, and imposing an annual tax on the gross premium receipts, and declaring that the gross premium receipts are the premium receipts reported to the commissioner, on the sworn statement, etc., include sums which a fire insurance company paid for reinsurance without proof that the companies in which it reinsured had the right to claim a portion of the premium at the time the insurance was effected, and include the sums returned to policy holders on the cancellation of policies, as provided therein; the word "gross," as defined in Webster's Dictionary, meaning whole, entire, total, without deduction. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Love, 108 S. W. 153, 159, 101 Tex. 376.

"Gross premiums" include the net premium and the loading, usually imposed on a policy, to pay expenses of the company and yield a profit to the insurer. Rose v. Franklin Life Ins. Co., 182 S. W. 613, 616, 153 Mo. App. 90.

GROSS PROCEEDS

Where the charter of a railroad company required a payment of a percentage of earnings of its charter lines to the state, and in various sections of the charter referred to them as "gross proceeds," "gross receipts," or "gross income," all three terms were of equivocal import, but should be construed to mean the total receipts received by the railroad company from its charter lines, before anything was deducted for expenses of management. State v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 92 N. E. 814, 847, 246 Ill. 188.

GROSS PROFITS

The "gross profits which must be deducted from the sales valuation of manufactured goods taken from a factory since the last inventory and previous to a fire, in order to determine how much must be added to the last inventory to show the value of the materials, etc., on hand at the time of the fire, means the difference between the sales valuation and certain costs and expenses of production; the actual net profits being such profits as finally remain after deducting all costs and incidental charges and expenses of every kind and description. Wells Whip Co. v. Tanners' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 58 Atl. 894, 896, 209 Pa. 488.

Net profits distinguished

"Net profits," participation in which constitutes a person a partner, contemplates a sharing of the loss as well as the profits, while "gross profits" mean the aggregate sales made after deducting cost, import duties, and carriage, and participation therein would not raise a presumption of partnership. Fechter v. Palm Bros. & Co., 133 Fed. 462, 469, 470, 66 C. C. A. 336.

GROSS RECEIPTS

Unearned premiums returned to the insured on the cancellation of the policy of insurance do not constitute any part of the "gross receipts" of the company by which the policy was issued, and need not be included in its return of gross receipts, under the provisions of Sess. Laws 1903, c. 73, § 58. State ex rel. Palmer v. Fleming, 97 N. W. 1063, 1069, 70 Neb. 523, 529.

Under Acts 30th Leg. 1st Ex. Sess. c. 18, § 11, requiring every one engaged in the wholesale liquor business to make a quarterly report showing the gross amount collected and uncollected from all sales made during the quarter next preceding, and to pay an occupation tax for the quarter beginning on the date of the report equal to one-half of 1 per cent. of "said gross receipts," the term "gross receipts," though ordinarily meaning the gross amount of cash received, here includes the gross amount collected and uncollected of all the sales, on which amount the percentage must be computed to determine the tax. Eppstein v. State (Tex.) 138 S. W. 1124, 1125.

Where the grantees of a telephone franchise agreed to pay the city 2 per cent. per annum of the "gross receipts" collected from the use of the telephone system, such earnings consisted not only of the rentals paid for the use of telephone instruments in the city, but also included a percentage received by the grantees of the proceeds of toll line business that required the service of the exchange in its transaction. All such income actually received by the grantees under contracts with the owners of independent connecting lines on account of the service of the exchange in the transmission or delivery of long distance business certainly belonged to the gross receipts of that exchange, and with respect to the tolls received by the grantees for long distance service over lines and exchanges operated entirely by them, the reasonable value of the services rendered by the exchange to that class of business should be regarded as part of the gross receipts of that exchange. City of Lancaster v. Briggs & Melvin, 96 S. W. 314, 315, 118 Mo. App. 570.

The term "gross receipts" in Laws 1884, c. 252, § 8, providing that every railroad corporation, organized, constructed, or extended thereunder shall pay a 3 per cent. of its "gross receipts" for the year, and after the expiration of five years shall make a like annual payment of 5 per cent. of the "gross receipts," means receipts from the operation of the railroad; that is, fares. City of New York v. Thirty-Fourth St. Crosstown Ry. Co., 122 N. Y. Supp. 344, 346, 187 App. Div. 644.

The "gross receipts" of a railroad for purpose of taxation are not necessarily those in fact received, but such receipts as would be received under a reasonably economical and prudent management. State v. Nevada Cent. R. Co., 81 Pac. 99, 102, 28 Nev. 186, 113 Am. St. Rep. 834 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Virginia & T. R. Co., 49 Pac. 945, 50 Pac. 607, 24 Nev. 80).

The "gross receipts" of the corporations named in Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 81, § 164, upon which the corporations named are to be taxed, means all the receipts arising from or growing out of the employment of the corporation's capital in its designated business or otherwise. State v. Central Trust Co., 67 Atl. 267, 271, 106 Md. 268 (citing People ex rel. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Roberts, 52 N. Y. Supp. 859, 32 App. Div. 113; Id., 51 N. E. 1093, 157 N. Y. 677; Commonwealth v. Brush Electric Light Co., 53 Atl. 1096, 204 Pa. 249).

A statute imposing a tax on railroads of a certain per cent. of the "gross receipts from all sources" means that which arises from the transportation of passengers, freight, and baggage, and includes the gross receipts arising from interstate commerce as well as from local traffic. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Davidson (Tex.) 93 S. W. 436, 455.

Where the charter of a railroad company required a payment of a percentage of earnings of its charter lines to the state, and in various sections referred to them as "gross proceeds," "gross receipts," or "gross income," all three terms were of equivocal import, but should be construed to mean the total receipts received by the company from its charter lines, before anything was deducted for expenses of management. State v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 92 N. E. 814, 847, 246 Ill. 188.

Illinois Central Railroad Charter (Priv. Laws 1851, p. 72) § 22, provides that it shall pay the state an amount equal to at least 7 per cent. of the gross receipts of the corporation in lieu of other taxes. Held, that the word "gross" meant the entire amount, the total sum, without any deduction of any kind, and therefore included receipts derived from the charter lines for transporting interstate commerce. State v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 92 N. E. 814, 825, 246 Ill. 188.

Where a railroad company, subject to a payment to the state of 7 per cent. on the gross receipts of its charter lines, maintained and operated hotels, eating houses, and dining cars for the benefit of its passengers, the receipts derived from such activities were a part of the "gross receipts" on which the state's percentage was to be determined. State v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 92 N. E. 814, 825, 246 Ill. 188.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 14, § 44, cl. 2, providing that the percentages of gross receipts of street railway companies, to be ascertained for the purpose of taxing, shall be based on the annual "gross receipts for each mile" of track, the computation is to be made by dividing the annual gross receipts by the entire number of tracks operated. Greenfield & T. F. St. Ry. Co. v. Town of Greenfield, 73 N. E. 477, 478, 187 Mass. 352.

GROSS SALES

GROSS TON

In common parlance, the word "gross," when applied to a ton, describes a long ton or a ton of 2,240 pounds. Where a charter party described the capacity of the ship as about 3,400 "gross tons" and fixed the freight rate at $8.00 per ton of 2,240 pounds, the representation as to the capacity of the ship should be construed as meaning 3,400 long tons. Wood v. Sewall's Adm'rs, 128 Fed. 141; Sewall v. Wood, 135 Fed. 12, 18, 87 C. A. 580.

The word "gross," as used in a contract by which a party agreed to mine certain bituminous rock and liquid asphaltum, in consideration of receiving therefor "the sum of fifty cents per ton," means a long ton, or a ton consisting of 2,240 pounds. Hale Bros. v. Milliken, 90 Pac. 365, 370, 5 Cal. App. 344 (quoting from opinion in Higgins v. California Petroleum Co., 52 Pac. 1080, 120 Cal. 629).

GROSS VIOLATION OF PROFESSIONAL DUTIES

The words "gross violation of professional duties" in Rev. St. 1899, § 8523, as amended, authorizing the revocation of the license of a dentist for "fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation in the practice of dentistry, or for gross violation of professional duties," are used to cover offenses similar to and belonging to the same general class as those denounced by the words "fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation," so that the statute is not invalid for uncertainty on the ground that the words "gross violation of professional duties" have no well-defined meaning. State ex rel. Williams v. Purl, 128 S. W. 196, 197, 198, 228 Mo. 1.

GROSSLY CARELESS

An instruction that, if the jury found there was no willful act nor wanton act nor grossly careless act, they could then only find actual damages, but if the jury found the injury was wantonly done in a grossly careless and reckless way, then plaintiff could recover punitive damages, was not error, on the theory that the words "grossly careless" imported negligence only; such words, construed with the context, being used to import recklessness. Howard v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 65 S. E. 245, 250, 83 S. C. 240.

GROSSLY IMPROBABLE STATEMENTS

The term "grossly improbable statements," as used in St. 1901, p. 56, c. 51, authorizing the revocation of the certificate of a physician by the board of medical examiners for unprofessional conduct, consisting of medical advertising in which "grossly improbable statements" are made, is too indefinite and uncertain to be capable of enforcement, where the statute fails to define the term in any way, but leaves it to the opinion of the then board of medical examiners in each particular case. Hewitt v. Board of Medical Examiners of the State, 84 Pac. 39-41, 148 Cal. 590, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315, 7 Ann. Cas. 750.

GROSSLY MISLEADING

A statement by the Board of United States General Appraisers that they departed from the ruling made in Boker v. United States, 124 Fed. 59, 59 C. C. A. 425, because it believed that the testimony there presented to the court was "grossly misleading," meant that the protestant in the case cited, who occupied the same position in the subsequent case, had varied his evidence in such wise that it was impossible to tell whether he falsified in 124 Federal or in this litigation. Hermann Boker & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 174, 175.

GROUND

See Break Ground; Depot Grounds; Fair Grounds; On the Ground; Public Grounds; Reasonable Ground; Soft Ground; Station Grounds; Unground.

The word "ground" is defined as meaning land; estate; possession; and in the plural, garden; land; field belonging to a homestead; land appropriated to some special use; and the limited meaning of the word "grounds," as connoting appurtenancy to a homestead or other building, is not ordinarily to be adopted unless it appears from the context that the word is employed in connection with some particular building or group of buildings, or that there is an intent to distinguish between the "grounds" and the other lands of the same owner. Trustees of Princeton University v. Wilson, 78 Atl. 398, 397, 78 N. J. Eq. 1.

See Property.

Electric current

By "ground," as used in describing difficulties attending the telephone service, is meant the interruption of the current by the crossing of wires or the breaking and falling of a telephone wire to the earth, or against some surface that acts as a conductor of electricity, and interrupts its continued flow along its proper wire. Dow v. Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Co., 106 Pac. 587, 588, 157 Cal. 182.

Electric wires are on a "ground circuit" when the current is carried to the end of the line upon a wire and there connected with the earth, through which it returns to the place of generation. If the wire at any intermediate point is brought into connection with the ground by any good conductor of electricity, the current will use the shorter line of travel thus established. When the wires are on a metallic circuit, the electric fluid travels its entire course on wires without coming into contact with the earth. A grounding of the circuit at any point will change the course of the current from the wire to the earth; the latter medium offering less resistance, and an electric current traveling the line of least resistance. Smith v. Missouri & Kansas Tel. Co., 87 S. W. 71, 72, 113 Mo. App. 429.

As protection against electricity, a wire is said to be "grounded" if it is in contact with moist earth. New Omaha Thomson-

Houston Electric Light Co. v. Johnson, 93 N. W. 778, 780, 67 Neb. 393.

GROUND FLOOR

Where a subcontractor agreed to furnish and set terra cotta arch blocks on all floors of a building except the "ground floor," and the building had a cellar, a basement, and seven stories above, the basement floor being on the level of the street, the basement should be regarded as the ground floor, and the contractor was not bound to set the blocks on that floor, and on being compelled to do so was entitled to charge therefor as extras. Isaacs v. Dawson, 75 N. Y. Supp. 337, 338, 70 App. Div. 232.

The expression, "come in on the ground floor," indicates a proposal to enter a business transaction on the same terms as the proposer is or is to be admitted. Mackenzie v. Seebarger, 76 Fed. 108, 114, 22 C. C. A. 83.

GROUND LOADER

Plaintiff when he sustained the injuries sued for, was employed in defendant's logging camp as a "ground loader"; his duty being to pull cars in place to be loaded with logs. Williams v. Levert Lumber & Shingle Co., 38 South. 567, 568, 114 La. 805.

GROUND OF DEFENSE

A demurrer that an answer does not state facts sufficient to constitute a "ground of defense" is sufficient, though the language of the statute is "cause of defense." Durbin v. Northwestern Scraper Co., 73 N. E. 297, 301, 36 Ind. App. 123.

GROUND OUTSIDE OF OR ADJOINING

Tenement House Act, Laws 1901, p. 910, c. 334, § 91, subd. 2, requires the ceilings of rooms in the basement of a tenement house occupied for living purposes to be at least 4½ feet "above the surface of the street or ground outside of or adjoining the same." Held, that the section does not authorize the occupancy for living purposes of cellar rooms whose ceilings are only two feet above the street surface, though they are over seven feet above the surface of an adjoining sunken court; the clause "ground outside of or adjoining the same" being intended to cover the case of a tenement house not abutting upon a street, or standing upon a lot of such conformation that as to some rooms a height of four feet and six inches above the curb level would not equal four feet and six inches above the ground outside of and adjoining the same. People ex rel. Cohen v. Butler, 109 N. Y. Supp. 900, 904, 125 App. Div. 384.

GROUND RENT

See Irredeemable Ground Rent.

A "ground rent" is a rent service and not a rent charge and, being so, is undoubtedly apportionable and may be partially released without extinguishing the whole. City of Baltimore v. Latrobe, 61 Atl. 203, 20k'. 101 Md. 621, 4 Ann. Cas. 1005 (citing Cuthbert v. Kuhn [Pa.] 3 Whart. 357, 31 Am. Dec. 513).

A ground rent, being an estate of inheritance in the rent of lands, is a freehold estate, and is a right to and interest in the lands, within the meaning of section 4158, Rev. St. 1892, relating to descent and distribution. McCammon v. Cooper, 69 N. E. 658, 659, 69 Ohio St. 368.

A "ground rent" is nothing more than a lien, or even a charge; it is an estate and is bound by the lien of a judgment or mortgage equally with the land. Rushton v. Lippincott, 12 Atl. 761, 764, 119 Pa. 12.

Where a contract for the sale of real estate reserved certain "ground rents," such term did not in itself mean a rent reserved under a lease for 99 years renewable forever. Ward v. Newbold, 81 Atl. 793, 794, 115 Md. 689, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 919.

GROUND TO BELIEVE

In a declaration of law in an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover an alleged preference, the phrase "ground to believe" is equivalent to the phrase "cause to believe," used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60, subd. b, 30 Stat. 562, providing that if a bankrupt shall have given a preference, and the person receiving it shall have had reasonable "cause to believe" that it was intended thereby to give preference, it shall be voidable by the trustee. Edwards v. Carondelet Milling Co., 83 S. W. 764, 766, 108 Mo. App. 275 (citing Benedict v. Deshel, 177 N. Y. 1, 68 N. E. 999, 11 Am. Bankr. Rep. 20).

GROUNDMAN

A "groundman," as applied to an employé of a telephone company, is of lower rank than a lineman, and his duties ordinarily are to assist the lineman, and to generally, as his name indicates, stay on the ground; but a lineman on a pole in the performance of his duty at the time he receives an electric shock, occasioned by the breaking of a wire, is entitled to recover as against the objection that he is a mere volunteer. Cumberland Telephone, etc., Co. v. Adams (Ky.) 91 S. W. 739, 741.

GROUND

See Sufficient Grounds.

The "grounds" on which an appeal from a justice of the peace is based, required to be stated in the appellant's statement on appeal by Rev. Justices' Code, § 100, are the grounds mentioned in Rev. Code Civ. Proc. § 303. Halvorsen v. Myren, 121 N. W. 782, 783, 23 S. D. 263.

Rev. St. 1899, § 7029, enacts that the notice to be served upon the contestee in an election contest shall specify the "grounds" upon which contestant intends to rely. Section 7033 provides that every court authorized to determine election contests shall do so in a summary manner without formal pleadings. A notice stated that contestor made contest on the ground that there were many illegal and fraudulent votes cast for contestee, the names of the voters and precincts wherein they voted being unknown, and that there were many legal votes cast for contestor and not counted for him, the name and precincts being unknown. Held, that the notice was insufficient for indefiniteness. The word "grounds," as used in the statute, can only mean substantive averments, informal perhaps, but in plain terms setting forth a cause of action upon which issue may be joined and which may, at least, tend to notify contestee of the charges he must face. Hale v. Stimson, 95 S. W. 885, 888, 198 Mo. 134.

A testatrix in one item of her will devised to trustees "my house and grounds," with all the buildings standing within such grounds, to be used for public purposes, and in a subsequent item gave the remainder of her estate to the trustees of a university, to be devoted to the construction "upon the grounds of the said university" of a building to be used for certain purposes. Held, that the term "university" was not used to designate any building or group of buildings, but the corporation, the preposition "of" denoting proprietorship and not location, and the word "grounds" evidently used in the latter item to express the rhetorical antithesis between "my house and grounds," used in the previous item, upon which a public hall and garden were to be established; and the establishment of the building upon the grounds "of the said university" will not be deemed to bear a limited or special meaning confining it to such lands as lie immediately adjacent to and are used in connection with the existing buildings of the university, but to embrace any land owned by the university so located as to make the building to be erected available for the purposes intended; and a tract not contiguous to the original and central campus upon which the existing university buildings are situated, but separated therefrom in part by a railroad, in part by a public street, and in part by land of other owners, the only communications between the tract and the central campus being by means of streets or lanes, would be "grounds of the said university," within the meaning of the will, where owned by the university. Trustees of Princeton University v. Wilson, 78 Atl. 393, 395, 78 N. J. Eq. 1.

GROUSE

Laws 1900, c. 20, § 140, defines "grouse" as used in the game law as including "ruffed grouse, partridge, and every member of the grouse family." People ex rel. Sils v. Hesterberg, 96 N. Y. Supp. 286, 290, 109 App. Div. 295.

GROUT

"Grout" is a thin watery concrete in which the proportion or bulk of water is large. Asbestos Shingle, Slate & Sheathing Co. v. H. W. Johns-Manville Co., 189 Fed. 608, 610.

The term "grout," as defined in Mahan's Civil Engineering, is applied to any mortar in a thin or fluid state; and the terms "concrete" and "beton" to mortars incorporated with gravel and small fragments of stone or brick. The difference between grout and concrete is stated, by the text-books to consist in the fact that grout is fluid enough, or prepared in such plastic condition as to flow readily, and thus may be employed in filling in cracks and apertures, where a more solid or resistant material, like concrete, could not be made to enter all parts of the opening, and where even tamping would not accomplish the desired object, if the space would allow that method of distributing the substance itself. Donaldson v. Rokhsament Stone Co., 170 Fed. 192, 193.

GROVE

The Century Dictionary defines a "grove" as a group of trees of indefinite extent but not large enough to constitute a forest; especially such a group considered as furnishing shade for avenues and walks. It is common knowledge that a grove is the nucleus of a park or pleasure ground for the people, so that a plan showing an open square marked, "A Grove," colored in green, with paths through it, and an announcement that the grove had been set apart as a public park, was sufficient to establish a dedication as a park; the fact that the word "grove" was used instead of "park" being immaterial. Morrow v. Highland Grove Traction Co., 69 Atl. 41, 42, 219 Pa. 619, 128 Am. St. Rep. 677.

GROW DUE

P. L. 1892, p. 369, authorizes mechanics and materialmen performing work on public buildings to file a notice and claim of lien for the amount due, and section 5, p. 371, declares that such lien extends to any funds which may be due or grow due to the contractor under the contract when the lien claim is filed. Held, that the phrase "be due or to grow due under the contract" clearly refers to the portion of the contract price which remains unpaid when the lien claim is filed. Somers Brick Co. v. Souder, 61 Atl. 840, 842, 70 N. J. Eq. 388.

GROWING CROPS

Growing ginseng, a plant, the roots of which are the marketable and valuable part, and which require 7 to 15 years to mature, is for purpose of taxation part of the real estate, and not personalty, or within St. 1898, § 1038, subd. 11, exempting from taxation a number of articles of personal property and "growing crops"; this evidently referring to annual crops, which are commonly treated like personalty. Kuehn v. City of Antigo, 120 N. W. 823, 824, 139 Wis. 132, 131 Am. St. Rep. 1043.

GROWLER

The term "growler" is slang United States for a vessel, as a pitcher, jug, pail, or can, brought by a customer for beer. Cullinan v. Horan, 102 N. Y. Supp. 132, 135, 116 App. Div. 711 (quoting Cent. Dict.).

GROWTH

Where one conveyed to another "all the timber and growth of timber" on certain land, with the privilege of at all times entering on the land and removing the timber, the instrument included timber to be subsequently grown; "timber" being defined as wood or forest land, and the term "growth" being defined as that which has grown or is growing, anything produced, a product, the words in such circumstance not being synonymous. Baker v. Kenney, 124 N. W. 901, 904, 145 Iowa, 638, 139 Am. St. Rep. 456.

The word "growth," as used in reference to the wood growing on a lot, though plainly generic in meaning, and including all the wood upon the lot, when used in a contract by the owner of land will not be construed by arbitrary definitions of the word, and the question will be as to what was intended by the party using it. Plaintiff offered to purchase defendant's standing "timber" for $700, to which defendant replied that she would not take less than $900 for the timber, after which plaintiff again wrote: "I agree to take it at your price and inclose check for $100. * * * I to buy all the growth." Held, that this letter was not an acceptance of defendant's offer to sell the "timber" for $900, in the absence of proof that the words "growth" and "timber" were used synonymously by both parties. Lord v. Meader, 60 Atl. 434, 435, 73 N. H. 185.

"Grubstake" contracts have sometimes been called prospecting partnerships, and are said to partake of the character of qualified partnerships. Yet, unless the agreement goes beyond the mere furnishing of supplies in consideration of a participation in the discoveries, the word 'partnership' is improperly used and is misleading. It is simply a common venture, wherein one, called the 'outfitter,' supplies the 'grub,' and the other, called the 'prospector,' performs the labor, and all discoveries inure to the benefit of the parties in the proportion fixed by the agreement. The prospector has the right to insist on the outfitter performing his part of the agreement as a condition precedent to participation in such discoveries. Should he fail to do so, the prospector may discover and locate for his own advantage, free from any obligation to the outfitter. * * * Is it essential to a right in property under a grubstake contract that such property be acquired by means of the grubstake furnished, and pursuant to such contract? * * * The 'grubstake' contract, properly speaking, applies to the search for and location of mines on the public domain. * * * We frequently encounter cases where the object of the venture is not only to search for and discover mines, but also to work and develop them, and conduct a general mining business. This is something more than a 'grubstake' contract. Such an agreement constitutes a partnership." Costello v. Scott, 93 Pac. 1, 7, 30 Nev. 43 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Linds. Mines [2d Ed.] § 858, p. 1565 et seq.).

A "grubstake" contract is an agreement between two or more persons to thereafter locate mines upon the public domain by their joint aid, effort, labor, or expense, whereby each is to acquire, by virtue of the act of location, such an interest in the mine as is agreed on in the contract. The title accrues to each as an original locator, though the location be made in the name of one or more of the parties only. Each party to the grubstake contract not named in the location notice becomes, nevertheless, an equitable owner and tenant in common with those named. Such a contract, when clearly established, will be enforced in equity. Marks v. Gates, 2 Alaska, 519, 523.

A "grubstake" contract is an agreement between two or more persons to locate mines upon the public domain by their joint aid, effort, labor, or expense, whereby each is to acquire, by virtue of the act of location, such an interest in the mine as is agreed on in the contract. The title accrues to each as an original locator, though the location be made in the name of one or more of the parties only. Such a contract, whether oral or written, when clearly established, will be enforced in equity. Elliott v. Elliott, 3 Alaska, 352, 365.

GUARANTOR

One who writes his name on the back of a nonnegotiable note to give credit thereto is a "guarantor," and is prima facie bound to pay the note on the principal's default, without demand or notice. Tilden v. Goldy Mach. Co., 98 Pac. 39, 9 Cal. App. 9 (quoting and adopting definition in First Nat. Bank of San Diego v. Babcock, 29 Pac. 415, 94 Cal. 93, 28 Am. St. Rep. 94).

The transferror of a nonnegotiable written contract does not, by signing his name on the back of it, make himself liable as maker, guarantor, or indorser, within Rem. & Bal. Code, § 6250, providing that the discounting of commercial paper, where the borrower makes himself liable as maker, guarantor, or indorser, shall be considered as a loan for the purpose of the chapter relating to usury. Thomson v. Koch, 113 Pac. 1110, 1111, 62 Wash. 438.

Where one appointed agent signs a contract containing stipulations as to his duties and compensation, and afterwards, in a different contract, signed by two other persons, to which the agent is not a signatory party, it is agreed that the signers thereof will, upon the agent's failure to pay and notice thereof, pay his indebtedness arising under the agency, the liability of the signers of the latter contract is that of "guarantors." Musgrove v. D. E. Luther Pub. Co., 63 S. E. 52, 54, 5 Ga. App. 279.

GUARANTY

See Conditional Guaranty; Continuing Guaranty; Continuous Guaranty; General Guaranty; Special Guaranty; Unlimited Guaranty.

"A 'guaranty' is a contract by which one person is bound to another for the due fulfillment of a promise or engagement of a third party." Miller v. Lewiston Nat. Bank, 108 Pac. 901, 909, 18 Idaho, 124.

The word "guaranty" has an established meaning, and ordinarily implies an undertaking by one person that another will perform some engagement. Bailey v. Miller, 91

N. E. 24, 45 Ind. App. 475 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3179).

Webster defines "guaranty" as: "In law and common usage: An undertaking to answer for the payment of some debt, or the performance of some contract or duty, of another, in case of the failure of such other to pay or perform; a guaranty; a warranty; a security. In law and common usage: To undertake or engage that another person shall perform (what he has stipulated); to undertake to be answerable for (the debt or default of another); to engage to answer for the performance of (some promise or duty by another) in case of a failure by the latter to perform; to undertake to secure (something) to another, as in the case of a contingency." Storey's defines it as: "A guaranty is an undertaking by one person to be answerable for the payment of some debt, or the due performance of some contract or duty, by another person, who himself remains liable to pay or perform the same." The court, with these and other definitions in mind, holds that an agreement between defendants and others by their agents as parties of the first part and plaintiff as party of the second part, reciting that plaintiff had made advances, and agreed to make further advances, to enable defendants to bid for certain property which was to be sold at judicial sale, and provided that a stated part of such advances should be secured by a mortgage on the property "to be acquired," and that when necessary powers of attorney were received the agreement should be supplemented by a formal mortgage; that the remainder of the sums advanced "shall be secured by the joint and several personal guaranty of said parties of the first part," and be paid in installments as therein specified, was not a guaranty. Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. Koehler, 187 Fed. 192, 200.

A "guaranty" is a promise to answer for the payment of some debt or the performance of some duty in case of the failure of another who is in the first instance liable to such payment or performance. Clymer v. Terry, 109 S. W. 1129, 1131, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 300; Cowan v. Roberts, 46 S. E. 979, 980, 134 N. C. 415, 65 L. R. A. 729, 101 Am. St. Rep. 845; Ruberg v. Brown, 51 S. E. 96, 98, 71 S. C. 287 (quoting and adopting definition in Carroll Savings Bank v. Strother, 22 S. C. 555); Ricker Nat. Bank v. Stone, 97 Pac. 577, 579, 21 Okl. 833 (quoting and adopting definition in Black, Law Dict. p. 550).

A "guaranty" is a promise to answer for the payment of some debt or the performance of some duty in case of the failure of another who is himself in the first instance liable to such payment or performance, and the debt or duty may be either present or prospective. J. L. Mott Iron Works v. Clark, 69 S. E. 227, 228, 87 S. C. 199.

"The definition of a 'guaranty' by text writers is an undertaking by one person that another shall perform his contract or fulfill his obligation or that, if he does not, the guarantor will do it for him. A guarantor of a bill or note is said to be one who engages that the note shall be paid but is not an indorser or surety." A guarantor of a note at its maturity, by writing his name across the back thereof, is not entitled to notice of nonpayment and failure of the payee to give notice of nonpayment until the maker, who was solvent at the maturity of the note, became insolvent, did not discharge the guarantor, though he was obliged to pay the debt and was unable to enforce payment thereon against his principal. Pfaelzer v. Kau, 69 N. E. 914, 916, 207 Ill. 116 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Pars. Bills & N. 117).

"Guaranty is an undertaking by one person that another shall perform his contract or fulfill his obligation, and that in case he does not do so the guarantor will do it for him. A guarantor of a bill or note is one who engaged that the note shall be paid." Northern State Bank of Grand Forks v. Bellamy, 125 N. W. 888, 890, 19 N. D. 509, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 149.

The word "guaranty" may be used to create an obligation to indemnify one against loss, and no recovery may be had on a contract to indemnify until actual damage is sustained. Norris v. Reynolds, 116 N. Y. Supp. 106, 108, 131 App. Div. 818.

A "guaranty" is a contract—an "aggregatio mentium." A letter stating, in answer to an inquiry as to the general standing of a certain person, that the writer regarded him as reliable and trustworthy, with whom the samples and sales of the addressee of the letter would be entirely safe, especially as all goods that might be shipped would come direct to the warehouses of the writer, and payment for such goods would be made by the writer to the addressee, did not constitute a "guaranty" by the writer of payment for goods which the addressee might ship to the person as to whose standing inquiry was made. W. T. Hughes & Co. v. Peper Tobacco Warehouse Co., 51 S. E. 793, 139 N. C. 158.

A "guarantor" does not contract that his principal will pay, but simply that he is able to do so. Before an action can be maintained against a guarantor, therefore, it must be shown that the principal is unable to perform. Musgrove v. D. E. Luther Pub. Co., 68 S. E. 52, 54, 5 Ga. App. 279 (quoting and adopting the definition in Mannry v. Waxelbaum Co., 33 S. E. 701, 106 Ga. 14, 17).

An agreement whereby S. turned over to defendant all of his book accounts, bills receivable, etc., and all the balance of the money, and defendant received them and stipulated as a consideration therefor that he would pay all the indebtedness of S., contracted on account of mercantile business conducted by him, was an agreement by defendant for the payment of his own debts, and not in the nature of a "guaranty." Grimsrud Shoe Co. v. Jackson, 115 N. W. 656, 659, 22 S. D. 114.

A state bank was chargeable with notice that the credit and resources of a national bank were being used unlawfully where the national bank's president had written the state bank obligating his bank unconditionally to pay all checks of the corporation not over $5,000, and the national bank afterwards wired that it would "protect" the corporation's checks for $5,000 weekly in excess of "present guaranty," and would pay checks in excess of "guaranty" during the current week, as "guaranty" does not signify an obligation of the bank to pay checks which it was its duty to pay. Merchants' Bank of Valdosta v. Baird, 160 Fed. 642, 645, 90 C. C. A. 388, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 526.

Where a witness, during his testimony in a personal injury action as to the safety of staging erected outside of a building, stated that the staging supported by iron hooks of the size named would hold a certain weight, and that he would "guarantee" it to hold that much, the use of the word "guarantee" was inapt and was used only as a strong expression of opinion. Lewis v. John Crane & Sons, 62 Atl. 60-63, 78 Vt. 216.

An "agreement to keep in repair" for a period of twelve months, contained in a contract for street paving, is a mere "guaranty" of good work, and not a contract for repairs within the meaning of a charter requiring repairs of streets and highways to be paid out of the general revenue of the city. Allen v. Labsap, 87 S. W. 926, 929, 188 Mo. 692, 3 Ann. Cas. 306.

Acceptance and notice thereof

A written and signed offer of guaranty made by one party to another is not a completed agreement until it is delivered to and accepted and acted upon by the party for whose indemnity it is given. Irving Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 64 Atl. 1071, 74 N. J. Law, 42.

The true test in determining whether a "guaranty" is in fact an offer of guaranty or an absolute guaranty is whether there is mutual assent. A guaranty signed by the guarantor without any previous request of the other party and in his absence, for no consideration moving between them except future advances to be made to the principal debtor, is, in legal effect, an offer or proposal on the part of the guarantor which requires an acceptance to complete the contract. Mr. Justice Gray summarizes the rule as follows: "A contract of guaranty, like every other contract, can only be made by mutual assent of the parties. If the guaranty is signed by the guarantor at the request of the other party or if the latter's agreement to accept is contemporaneous with the guaranty or if the receipt from him of a valuable consideration, however small, is acknowledged in the guaranty, the mutual assent is proved, and the delivery of the guaranty to him, or for his use, completes the contract. But if the guaranty is signed by the guarantor without any previous request of the other party, and in his absence, for no consideration moving between them except future advances to be made to the principal debtor, the guaranty is, in legal effect, an offer or proposal on the part of the guarantor, needing an acceptance by the other party to complete the contract." Standard Sewing Mach. Co. v. Church, 92 N. W. 805, 806, 11 N. D. 420 (quoting and adopting Davis Sewing Mach. Co. v. Richards, 6 Sup. Ct. 173, 115 U. S. 524, 29 L. Ed. 480).

As absolute agreement

To "guarantee the payment" of a sum of money, in an appropriate context, imports a direct undertaking to pay the sum in a given event and not a mere promise to become answerable for the default of another. Perkins-Goodwin Co. v. Hart, 83 Atl. 877, 878, 83 N. J. Law, 471.

On the insolvency of a trustee, his bondsmen entered into an agreement whereby the trustee made certain notes to cover the amount of his indebtedness to the trust fund and assigned a certain policy of insurance to secure the same; the said bondsmen agreeing to "guarantee to pay as the same becomes due all assessments and premiums" necessary to keep the insurance in full force so long as any of the notes remain unpaid. Held that, while the term "guarantee" was used in the agreement, the promise on the part of the defendants to pay the premiums was an original promise, and not a guaranty. Merritt v. Haas, 129 N. W. 379, 380, 113 Minn. 219.

As agree or promise

A building contract provided that the work and materials, except the mason work, should be sublet, and provided the time for making payments for the work sublet and the mason work. Plaintiff guaranteed the proper performance of such subcontracts and to save the owner harmless against all claims for damages arising in the construction of the building, and against all mechanics' liens. Plaintiff agreed and guaranteed that the building should be completed by March 1st, and, if not, to relinquish $10,000 of the $20,000 compensation payable. Plaintiff expressly guaranteed that the total cost of the building should not exceed a certain sum and that all saving of expense under that amount should inure to the owner, and all cost above it should be paid by plaintiff. The contract further provided that, in consideration of the performance of the foregoing agreements and conditions, in addition to the payments under the subcontracts and the cost of mason work mentioned, the owner agreed to pay plaintiff the sum of $20,000, which should be in full for the performance of the contract and the completion of the building at whatever time completed, including all office expenses, etc., $5,000 payable when the roof was tight, $5,000 when the work was practically finished, and the remaining $10,000 when completely finished according to the architect's certificate, and further provided that the owner should pay the actual cost of the mason work and architect's services, and required plaintiff to keep a set of books showing expenditures, etc. The owner claimed that the contract contained two independent agreements, the first of which was to furnish the labor and materials for the building in consideration of the cost thereof, and the second was the promises termed "guarantees," the consideration of which was $20,000 if the building was completed within the time specified, and $10,000 if not, and that as the building was not completed within the specified time, plaintiff could only recover the latter sum. Held, that the word "guarantee" was not used technically, but as a synonym of "agree" or "promise," and the contract constituted but one agreement, the consideration of which was the amount of the subcontracts, cost of mason work, and a lump sum of $20,000. Richard Deeves & Son v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 88 N. E. 395, 398, 195 N. Y. 824.

Where a building contract specified the exact construction desired, and stipulated that the floor was "to be 'guaranteed and kept in repair' for two years," the stipulation did not import an agreement to keep the floor water-tight, but meant only a guaranty that the work and materials which the defendant was to supply should remain in good order and condition for the specified time, and the defendant could not be held to guarantee that the prescribed mode of construction would produce a water-tight floor. Erickson v. George B. H. Macomber Co., 97 N. E. 615, 616, 211 Mass. 311.

As collateral agreement

"Of course, there is no dispute as to the primary meaning of 'guaranty.' It is a collateral undertaking to pay a debt or perform some other duty in case of the failure of another person who is, in the first instance, liable to such payment or performance. * * * But while this is the primary meaning, it is clear that the word may be used in such a connection with other words as to constitute an original contract or undertaking.

* * * Where defendant executed a note to plaintiff at the foot of which, on the same paper and on the same side on which it was written, two of his codefendants before delivery signed an indorsement as follows: "Waiving demand and notice, we hereby guarantee the payment of this note, any future payment on account of either principal or interest, not releasing us as guarantors," and plaintiff in advancing the money relied on the security given to the note by their signatures, all the defendants were joint and several makers primarily liable, and not "guarantors." Atwood v. Lester, 40 Atl. 867, 870, 20 R. I. 660 (citing and adopting Sturges v. Bank of Circleville, 11 Ohio St. 168, 78 Am. Dec. 296; Gallagher v. Nichols, 60 N. Y. 444; Dole v. Young, 24 Pick. [41 Mass.] 252; and Story, Prom. Notes, § 461).

A contract of "guaranty" of payment of a promissory note is a contract separate and apart from the note itself. Lemmer v. Guthrie Bros., 95 N. W. 1046, 1049, 69 Neb. 499, 62 L. R. A. 954, 111 Am. St. Rep. 561.

"Guaranty" is an undertaking to answer for another's liability and collateral thereto. It is a secondary, and not a primary, obligation." Where plaintiffs leased to defendant floor space in a store, the lease providing that the receipts by defendant should be turned over to plaintiff, that defendant guaranteed that the gross receipts from his business should amount to certain sums, and agreed to pay plaintiff a certain per cent. on the difference between the actual receipts and a certain sum, should the receipts be less than that sum, the word "guaranteed" was not used in a technical sense, but to express defendant's confident estimate as to the amount of the gross receipts. Shartenberg & Robinson v. Ellbey, 62 Atl. 979, 981, 27 R. I. 414.

As a concurrent agreement

The employment of the word "guaranty" implies, when it does not appear to the contrary, that the entire matter was one concurrent act, and the contract of guaranty was part of the original agreement, supported by the same consideration. Great Western Printing Co. v. Belcher, 104 S. W. 894, 895, 127 Mo. App. 183.

Consideration

A "guaranty" is an obligation to pay the debt of another on consideration of a benefit flowing to the guarantor. A contractor was under contract with the city of Albany to bore for it an artesian well. In order to obtain materials necessary to the completion of his contract, he requested the municipal authorities to pay to a dealer in such materials a portion of the amount that would be due him on the completion of his contract, up to a certain amount. This sum was in payment for materials already bought, but not paid for, as well as for materials subsequently to be purchased. The city agreed to do this, crossing, without ringing a bell or blowing a whistle, or without any person on the cars to control or give warning, the watchman on duty giving no warning, was "gross negligence," which is a reckless or wanton disregard of the rights or safety of others, or the doing of an act intentionally or maliciously, and punitive damages were properly allowed. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Allnutt, 151 S. W. 14, 19, 150 Ky. 831.

Plaintiff while walking by the side of a railroad track in a street where there was plenty of room to have avoided a moving engine was struck by the tender of an engine approaching her from the rear. The engine was moving very slowly, and stopped within 10 feet after plaintiff was discovered to be in a place of danger. The engineer saw plaintiff as he approached, and was watching her until the time of the accident with nothing to obstruct his view. One of his hands was on the air brake lever, the other was ringing the bell continuously, and he testified that the air pump was making a noise that could be heard 35 or 40 rods, but that plaintiff proceeded along the path for 100 feet without looking to the rear, and that just before the injury she suddenly stepped between the rails, when the engine was not more than 10 feet from her. Held, that the engineer was not guilty of gross negligence, such term being defined to mean an intentional failure to perform a manifest duty in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life or property of another, a thoughtless disregard of consequences without the exercise of any effort to avoid them. Berry v. Harbor Springs Ry. Co., 138 N. W. 1038, 1040, 173 Mich. 181.

In an action against a street railroad company for damage caused by a collision between a steam road roller and an inter-urban car at a public highway, the court instructed that plaintiff could not recover unless the injury occurred by reason of the gross negligence of defendant and by that was not meant that the motorman actually intended to do the particular wrong complained of, that by gross negligence is meant intentionally failing to perform a manifest duty in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life and property of another, and also implies a thoughtless disregard of the consequences without the exercise of any effort to avoid them, and unless the motorman, after he saw plaintiff's steam roller upon the track, and had no reason to believe it would vacate the track, did nothing to prevent the collision, but ran on in reckless disregard of the consequences, the jury could not find for plaintiff. Held, that the instruction was not erroneous. Good Roads Const. Co. v. Port Huron, St. C. & M. C. Ry. Co., 138 N. W. 320, 324, 173 Mich. 1.

GROSS PREMIUM PLAN

The "gross premium plan" employed by a building association in taking the premium and determining the amount is where an amount or certain percentage determined on is deducted from the par value of the stock at the time of the loan, and the difference or balance is handed over to the borrower. The amount so deducted is often determined by receiving bids from various members who are desirous of anticipating the value of their stock by borrowing from the association some of its funds on hand. Fidelity Sav. Ass'n v. Bank of Commerce, 75 Pac. 448, 456, 12 Wyo. 315.

GROSS PREMIUMS

In Tax Law, § 187, Laws 1896, p. 859, c. 908, as amended by Laws 1897, p. 630, c. 494, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 297, c. 118, imposing a franchise tax on the gross amount of premiums received during the preceding calendar year by domestic insurance companies, the term "gross premiums" includes, in addition to all other premiums, such premiums as are collected from policies subsequently canceled and from reinsurance. People ex rel. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Miller, 85 N. Y. Supp. 468, 471, 88 App. Div. 218.

Gross premiums received by domestic insurance companies for business done in the state for the purpose of taxation, under Laws 1896, p. 859, c. 908, § 187, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 297, c. 118, § 1, imposing an annual state tax for the privilege of carrying on the business, and providing that the term "gross premiums" shall include such premiums as are collected from policies subsequently canceled and from reinsurance, do not include premiums unearned and paid in advance, but refunded on a cancellation of a policy. People ex rel. Continental Ins. Co. v. Miller, 70 N. E. 10, 11, 177 N. Y. 515.

The words "gross amount of premiums" received, as used in the statute providing for the levy and collection of an occupation tax on corporations, etc., and requiring every fire insurance company to annually report the "gross amount of premiums received" in the state on property located there and from persons residing there, during the preceding year, and imposing an annual tax on the gross premium receipts, and declaring that the gross premium receipts are the premium receipts reported to the commissioner, on the sworn statement, etc., include sums which a fire insurance company paid for reinsurance without proof that the companies in which it reinsured had the right to claim a portion of the premium at the time the insurance was effected, and include the sums returned to policy holders on the cancellation of policies, as provided therein; the word "gross," as defined in Webster's Dictionary, meaning whole, entire, total, without deduction. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Love, 106 S. W. 158, 159, 101 Tex. 376.

"Gross premiums" include the net premium and the loading, usually imposed on a policy, to pay expenses of the company and yield a profit to the insurer. Rose v. Franklin Life Ins. Co., 182 S. W. 613, 616, 153 Mo. App. 90.

GROSS PROCEEDS

Where the charter of a railroad company required a payment of a percentage of earnings of its charter lines to the state, and in various sections of the charter referred to them as "gross proceeds," "gross receipts," or "gross income," all three terms were of equivocal import, but should be construed to mean the total receipts received by the railroad company from its charter lines, before anything was deducted for expenses of management. State v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 92 N. E. 814, 847, 246 Ill. 188.

GROSS PROFITS

The "gross profits which must be deducted from the sales valuation of manufactured goods taken from a factory since the last inventory and previous to a fire, in order to determine how much must be added to the last inventory to show the value of the materials, etc., on hand at the time of the fire, means the difference between the sales valuation and certain costs and expenses of production; the actual net profits being such profits as finally remain after deducting all costs and incidental charges and expenses of every kind and description. Wells Whip Co. v. Tanners' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 58 Atl. 894, 896, 209 Pa. 488.

Net profits distinguished

"Net profits," participation in which constitutes a person a partner, contemplates a sharing of the loss as well as the profits, while "gross profits" mean the aggregate sales made after deducting cost, import duties, and carriage, and participation therein would not raise a presumption of partnership. Fechteler v. Palm Bros. & Co., 133 Fed. 462, 469, 470, 66 C. C. A. 336.

GROSS RECEIPTS

Unearned premiums returned to the insured on the cancellation of the policy of insurance do not constitute any part of the "gross receipts" of the company by which the policy was issued, and need not be included in its return of gross receipts, under the provisions of Sess. Laws 1903, c. 73, § 58. State ex rel. Palmer v. Fleming, 97 N. W. 1063, 1069, 70 Neb. 523, 529.

Under Acts 30th Leg. 1st Ex. Sess. c. 18, § 11, requiring every one engaged in the wholesale liquor business to make a quarterly report showing the gross amount collected and uncollected from all sales made during the quarter next preceding, and to pay an occupation tax for the quarter beginning on the date of the report equal to one-half of 1 per cent. of "said gross receipts," the term "gross receipts," though ordinarily meaning the gross amount of cash received, here includes the gross amount collected and uncollected of all the sales, on which amount the percentage must be computed to determine the tax. Eppstein v. State (Tex.) 138 S. W. 1124, 1125.

Where the grantees of a telephone franchise agreed to pay the city 2 per cent. per annum of the "gross receipts" collected from the use of the telephone system, such earnings consisted not only of the rentals paid for the use of telephone instruments in the city, but also included a percentage received by the grantees of the proceeds of toll line business that required the service of the exchange in its transaction. All such income actually received by the grantees under contracts with the owners of independent connecting lines on account of the service of the exchange in the transmission or delivery of long distance business certainly belonged to the gross receipts of that exchange, and with respect to the tolls received by the grantees for long distance service over lines and exchanges operated entirely by them, the reasonable value of the services rendered by the exchange to that class of business should be regarded as part of the gross receipts of that exchange. City of Lancaster v. Briggs & Melvin, 96 S. W. 314, 315, 118 Mo. App. 570.

The term "gross receipts" in Laws 1884, c. 252, § 8, providing that every railroad corporation, organized, constructed, or extended thereunder shall pay a 3 per cent. of its "gross receipts" for the year, and after the expiration of five years shall make a like annual payment of 5 per cent. of the "gross receipts," means receipts from the operation of the railroad; that is, fares. City of New York v. Thirty-Fourth St. Crosstown Ry. Co., 122 N. Y. Supp. 844, 846, 137 App. Div. 644.

The "gross receipts" of a railroad for purpose of taxation are not necessarily those in fact received, but such receipts as would be received under a reasonably economical and prudent management. State v. Nevada Cent. R. Co., 81 Pac. 99, 102, 28 Nev. 186, 113 Am. St. Rep. 834 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Virginia & T. R. Co., 49 Pac. 945, 50 Pac. 607, 24 Nev. 80).

The "gross receipts" of the corporations named in Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 81, § 164, upon which the corporations named are to be taxed, means all the receipts arising from or growing out of the employment of the corporation's capital in its designated business or otherwise. State v. Central Trust Co., 67 Atl. 267, 271, 106 Md. 268 (citing People ex rel. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Roberts, 52 N. Y. Supp. 859, 32 App. Div. 113; Id., 51 N. E. 1093, 157 N. Y. 677; Commonwealth v. Brush Electric Light Co., 53 Atl. 1096, 204 Pa. 249).

A statute imposing a tax on railroads of a certain per cent. of the "gross receipts from all sources" means that which arises from the transportation of passengers, ment of a debt or the performance of a duty or contract by another person, while a "warranty" is an assurance of the title or quality of property. Gay Oil Co. v. Roach, 125 S. W. 122, 123, 98 Ark. 454, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914, 137 Am. St. Rep. 95.

The words with "guarantee against leakage" in an accepted order for a certain number of barrels of oil in effect state that the barrels are warranted against leakage; "guarantee" being used synonymously with warranty. Gay Oil Co. v. Roach, 125 S. W. 122, 124, 98 Ark. 454, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914, 137 Am. St. Rep. 95.

In popular parlance the words "guaranty" and "warranty" are used interchangeably without reference to any difference in meaning. While the term "warranty" is applied to a contract as to title, quality, or quantity of something sold, and the word "guaranty" is held to be a contract by which one person is bound to another for the fulfillment of a promise or engagement of a third party, the two words are derivatives from the same root and are identical in significance and effect. In the stipulation in a note given for the purchase money of a mule that the seller "does in no wise guarantee except in title," the word "guarantee" is used in the sense of a warranty. Branch v. James & Peddy, 60 S. E. 1027, 4 Ga. App. 90 (citing and adopting McNeel v. Smith, 22 S. E. 119, 106 Ga. 215; Jackson v. Langston, 61 Ga. 392).

A petition which alleges that defendant sold to plaintiff oil to be used as a cooling agent for the cylinder and engine of an automobile owned and operated by plaintiff; that defendant "guaranteed" that the oil was not inflammable and was safe as a cooling medium; that, believing in the truth of defendant's representations, plaintiff purchased the oil, and it was placed in his automobile; that the oil was inflammable and was not safe for use as a cooling medium; that it ignited, and plaintiff's machine was burned and destroyed; and that defendant's representations were knowingly false—stated a cause of action in contract, and not in tort; the averment that the oil was "guaranteed" to be noninflammable and safe being the equivalent of an averment that there was a warranty of the character and quality thereof. Conkling v. Standard Oil Co., 116 N. W. 822, 824, 138 Iowa, 596.

GUARANTY COMPANY

Since an "insurance company" exercises no special or exclusive privilege not allowed by law to natural persons, it is not like a "guaranty or surety company," which may by statute, be the sole surety in all cases where by law two or more sureties are required. An insurance company is not a guaranty or surety company on which Ky. St. 1899, § 4077, imposes a franchise tax. Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 74 S. W. 1050, 1052, 115 Ky. 787.

GUARANTY OF COLLECTION

See Guaranty of Payment and Collection.

Guaranty of payment distinguished

"The fundamental distinction between a 'guaranty of payment' and 'one of collection' is that in the first case the guarantor undertakes unconditionally that the debtor will pay, and the creditor may, upon default, proceed directly against the guarantor without taking any step to collect of the principal debtor, and the omission or neglect to proceed against him is not (except under special circumstances) any defense to the guarantor; while in the second case, the undertaking is that, if the demand cannot be collected by legal proceedings the guarantor will pay, and consequently legal proceedings against the principal debtor and a failure to collect of him by those means are conditions precedent to the liability of the guarantor, and to these the law, as established by numerous decisions, attaches the further condition that due diligence be exercised by the creditor in enforcing his legal remedies against the debtor." An agreement indorsed by the payee of notes on the notes and chattel mortgage securing them on assigning them, "by agreement with recourse after all security has been exhausted," is a "guaranty of collection." Smith v. Bradley, 112 N. W. 1062, 1063, 16 N. D. 306 (quoting McMurray v. Noyes, 72 N. Y. 523, 28 Am. Rep. 180).

GUARANTY OF PAYMENT

A letter written by the father of one of the makers of a note directed to the indorsee, reciting, "I have sworn off going on notes, but want to help my son, and, if he should not pay the $5,000 note, I will see that it is fixed and told the banker that I would," signed, etc., constituted a "guaranty of payment" of the note, according to its tenor and legal effect; the word "fixed" in such letter being used in the sense of "pay." McCauley v. Cross (Tex.) 111 S. W. 790, 791.

Guaranty of collection distinguished

Guaranty of collection distinguished, see Guaranty of Collection.

GUARANTY OF PAYMENT AND COLLECTION

Where a guaranty of a bond recited, "I hereby 'guarantee the payment and collection' of the said bond and mortgage and promise to pay the same at maturity," the covenant related to payment and not merely to collection, giving the holder an election to proceed in the first instance either against the principal or the guarantor. Loos v. McCormack, 93 N. Y. Supp. 1088, 1089, 107 App. Div. 8.

GUARANTY OF QUALITY

Where defendants, in the business of canning tomatoes, authorized a broker to dispose of the product in the Chicago market, and on the making of a sale the "bought" note given by the purchaser to the broker called for the "usual guaranty against swells and quality," and specified "terms regular, less one-half per cent. cash, ten days," but the "sold" note delivered by the broker to the purchaser did not contain such requirements, but called for "standard" tomatoes and "cash, less one and one-half per cent.," the notes did not fail to show a contract, on the theory that there was a material variance between the notes; it appearing that in the Chicago market, according to the usages of the trade, all such sales were made on "regular terms," meaning that the buyer was to have a credit of 60 days, with a discount privilege of 1½ per cent. in case of cash payment within 10 days, that a guaranty against swelling of the cans was customary, and that a guaranty of quality meant a "standard" can. Eau Claire Canning Co. v. Western Brokerage Co., 78 N. E. 480, 482, 218 Ill. 561.

GUARD

See Cattle Guard; Properly Guard; Railroad Cattle Gap or Guard; Securely Guarded or Fenced; Shuttle Guard.

The meaning of the word "guard" as a verb is suggested by the definition of the word as a noun, and that definition, as given in the Standard Dictionary, is: "Any one of various protecting or defensive devices for wearing or for attaching to an object as a machine or implement." The failure of a manufacturer to guard the cover of a vat in his plant while removed from the vat is not a failure to comply with the Factory Act, requiring an employer to guard vats in his plant, and the liability of the manufacturer for injuries resulting in consequence of the unguarded cover is governed by the common law. Bessler v. Laughlin, 79 N. E. 1033, 1034, 168 Ind. 38.

A self-feeding attachment to an ordinary rotary rip saw, which was a hand-feeding machine, usually and customarily operated and fed by hand, which attachment was a complicated machine, having an elaborate arrangement of belts, cogwheels, pulleys, and ratchets, some of which were in as much need of guarding as the saw itself, was not a guard such as was contemplated by the provision of the factory act requiring the operator of a factory, mill, or workshop where machinery is used to provide and maintain reasonable safeguards for all saws. McIntosh v. Sawmill Phenix, 94 Pac. 930, 931, 49 Wash. 152.

The "guard" or "spreader," the negligent removal of which from a rip saw was alleged as a cause of action, was used to prevent the danger every time the saw ripped a piece of timber of the piece flying back and striking some one. It stood a short distance beyond the saw and projected against the edge of the saw catching the piece of timber, if the "off bearer" helping to operate the machine failed to catch it. Such spreader or guard was a necessary part of the rip saw, and it was negligence to run the machine without it. Merritt v. Victoria Lumber Co., 35 South. 497, 500, 111 La. 159.

A "guard" is a brass rail that goes along over the brass plate under which clothes are pushed in a laundry mangle, designed to protect workmen in operating the machine. Coulter v. Union Laundry Co., 87 Pac. 973, 974, 34 Mont. 590.

GUARD WIRE

A "guard wire" is an appliance in common use for the purpose of preventing contact between trolley wires and other wires. Mahan v. Newton & B. St. Ry. Co., 75 N. E. 59, 61, 189 Mass. 1.

"Guard wires," as they are called, are wires placed directly above the top wires of telephone or telegraph or other system of electric wires, extended from pole to pole to secure protection against contact by means of sagging between the wires protected and those of some other system. Chicago Tel. Co. v. Northwestern Tel. Co., 65 N. E. 829, 340, 199 Ill. 324.

GUARDIAN

See Natural Guardian; Quasi Guardian. Discharge of guardian, see Discharge. Voidable appointment, see Voidable.

Under the statute prohibiting a saloon keeper from permitting a minor to visit or remain in the saloon unless accompanied by his father, mother, or guardian, a "guardian" is one occupying under the law that relation to the minor which the law creates between parent and child, or which is created by some order of court, and hence the leader and instructor of a band was not the guardian of minor members thereof. State v. Johnson, 121 N. W. 785, 787, 23 S. D. 293, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1007.

Under Pen. Code, § 290, making it a misdemeanor to admit children under 16 years of age to, or allow them to remain in, any place of entertainment injurious to health or morals, etc., unless accompanied by parent or guardian, the word "guardian" does not mean a guardian appointed by the court; and if children be sent or taken to a place of entertainment by a person other than their parents or legal guardian, such as elder brother or sister, or a neighbor or friend, he or she is their guardian for the time being within the statute, unless excluded for some reason by law. People v. Samwick, 111 N. Y. Supp. 11, 12, 127 App. Div. 209.

Where a will designates persons as "joint guardians of the estate of my three children," the term "guardian" has a definite signification, and the powers and duties of that functionary are regulated by statute, and he is subject to control and investigation by the surrogate. The functions which these persons would exercise pursuant to this will would be entirely those of guardianship, and their authority would end as to each child with his minority. There is nothing to indicate that the testator used the word "guardians" with any other than the ordinary signification. There is no attempt to create trustees. Kellogg v. Burdick, 96 N. Y. Supp. 965, 967, 110 App. Div. 472.

Gen. Laws 1896, c. 82, § 11, provides that an insane person may be removed to and placed in the Butler Hospital by their parents or parent or guardians, if any there be, and if not, by their relatives and friends on a certificate from two practicing physicians in good standing, etc. Held, that the term "guardian" included those of foreign, as well as domestic, appointment, so that a nonresident insane person might be properly confined in such hospital on the request of his nonresident guardian. In re Crosswell's Petition, 66 Atl. 55, 56, 28 B. L. 137, 13 Ann. Cas. 874.

GUARDIAN AD LITEM

Guardian including, see Guardian.

The guardian and next friend in conducting a civil action are a "species of attorney, whose duty it is to bring the rights of the infant to the notice of the court," and the authority of each is limited to the proceeding in which he is appointed. Williams v. Cleaveland, 56 Atl. 850, 853, 76 Conn. 426.

"There is no substantial difference between a guardian ad litem and a prochein ami. The former denomination is usually applied when the representation is for an infant defendant, and the latter where it is for an infant plaintiff." Valle v. Sprague, 78 S. W. 609, 610, 179 Mo. 393.

"A 'guardian ad litem' is a special guardian appointed solely for the purpose of carrying on litigation and preserving the interests of his ward in matters pending before the courts. He has no right to the possession of real property of his ward or to the rents and profits therefrom. He gives no bond and has only special duties. For the purpose of taking care of the estate a general guardian should be appointed." In re Robertson's Estate, 125 N. W. 1093, 1095, 86 Neb. 490.

GUARDIAN BY NATURE

Parents are guardians by nature and for nurture of all children born to them in lawful wedlock, under the laws of the state. In re Wright, 112 N. W. 311, 312, 79 Neb. 10.

GUARDIAN DE SON TORT

The term "quasi guardian" or guardian de son tort has been applied to persons who,

without legal appointment or qualification, assume the functions of a guardian by exercising control over the person, or estate, or both, of a minor. He is subject to all the responsibilities that attach to a legally constituted guardian or trustee. If he takes advantage of the confidence reposed, or of the means afforded him by such relation, by buying up outstanding debts of the estate, for instance, at an under rate, and using them with or without the sanction of a judicial proceeding to acquire in his own name the valuable lands of the infant wards, he is guilty of fraud and breach of trust entitling the infants to the interposition of a court of equity. He who arrogates to himself functions of a guardian will be held to stricter account in chancery than a regularly appointed guardian. So the agent or husband of an administratrix who assumes control and management of the estate, and uses the trust funds for his private purposes, makes himself liable to the infants as a trustee de son tort. Zeldeman v. Molasky, 94 S. W. 754, 756, 118 Mo. App. 106 (quoting and adopting the definition in Werner, Am. Law Guard. [1897] p. 76. Citing Griames v. Willson [Ind.] 4 Blackf. 331; Hanna v. Spott's Heirs, 5 B. Mon. [44 Ky.] 362, 48 Am. Dec. 132; Johnson v. Smith's Adm'r, 27 Mo. 591).

GUARDIAN OF THE PERSON

"A guardian of the person" is one who has been lawfully invested with the care of the person of an infant whose father is dead, and is considered as standing in the place of the father. Jordan v. Smith, 63 S. E. 595, 596, 5 Ga. App. 559.

GUARDIAN'S FEES

As costs, see Costs.

GUARDIAN'S SALE

As judicial sale, see Judicial Sale.

GUARDIANSHIP

"Guardianship" is a trust which is dual in its nature involving two distinct and separate functions, viz., the control of the person of the ward and the management of his estate. United States v. Hall, 171 Fed. 214, 218.

Under Act June 28, 1906, c. 3572, 34 Stat. 539, relating to the Osage Indians, an allottee of that tribe who has not received a certificate of competency as therein provided is in charge of a superintendent, and is an Indian over whom the Interior Department exercises "guardianship" within the meaning of Act Jan. 30, 1897, c. 109, 29 Stat. 506, which makes it a criminal offense to sell or give liquor to such an Indian. Mosier v. United States, 198 Fed. 54, 56, 117 C. C. A. 162.

GUESS

"Suppose" and "guess" are frequently used to express one's opinion, though more apt to express conjecture. Council v. Mayhew, 55 South, 314, 317, 172 Ala. 295.

The word "guess" technically implies a doubt; but, where a juror on his examination used such expression merely as a colloquialism, it was not to be understood in its literal or technical sense. Croft v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 109 N. W. 723, 726, 134 Iowa, 411.

The term "guess" imports uncertainty. It is at best a conjecture, a random judgment, and a guesser is one who gives an opinion without means of knowing. Stevens v. Cincinnati Times-Star Co., 73 N. E. 1058, 1061, 72 Ohio St. 112, 106 Am. St. Rep. 586.

GUESSING CONTEST

As lottery, see Lottery.

GUEST

See, also, Lodger.

A guest is a traveler or transient comer who puts up at an inn for a lawful purpose to receive its customary lodging and entertainment. De Lapp v. Van Closter, 118 S. W. 120, 122, 136 Mo. App. 475 (quoting Words and Phrases).

The universal rule seems to be that one cannot be the "guest" of a hotel unless he procure some accommodation. He must procure a meal, room, drink, feed for his horse, or at least offer to buy something of the innkeeper before he becomes a guest. Tulane Hotel Co. v. Holohan, 79 S. W. 113, 114, 112 Tenn. 214, 105 Am. St. Rep. 930, 2 Ann. Cas. 343.

The word "guests" in Acts 1899, c. 178, requiring every innkeeper or proprietor of every hotel over two stories in height to provide every lodging room above the second story used for the accommodation of "guests" a rope or rope ladder for the escape of the lodgers therein in case of fire, etc., includes a regular boarder. Adams v. Cumberland Inn Co., 101 S. W. 428, 429, 117 Tenn. 470.

Boarder distinguished

See Boarder.

Keeping horse sufficient

Where plaintiff did not stop or intend stopping at the defendant's inn, but stayed with a son-in-law, leaving his horse in charge of the defendant's hostler, he was not a "guest" of the inn, and they were not liable for the horse on its being stolen. Healey v. Gray, 68 Me. 489, 490, 28 Am. Rep. 80.

An innkeeper provided a lot and stables in which guests were permitted to keep their horses without charge, but charged for feed when furnished. Plaintiff drove into the lot, unhitched his mule, and placed it in a stable pointed out by a boy in charge, and left the premises without entering the inn or having any agreement with the keeper. He stated to the boy that he would return and feed his mule, and testified that he intended to take dinner at the inn with another person who accompanied him and who dined there, but that he was prevented from doing so by injury to the mule. Held, that plaintiff was not a guest of the inn so as to render the keeper responsible for the injury to the mule. Brewer v. Carswell, 64 S. E. 674, 676, 132 Ga. 563, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1107, 131 Am. St. Rep. 216, 16 Ann. Cas. 936.

Traveler

A traveler, who visits an inn to avail himself of any sort of entertainment offered, and is received by the innkeeper for the purpose of entertaining him, is a "guest," even though he does not register. Hill v. Memphis Hotel Co., 136 S. W. 997, 998, 124 Tenn. 376 (citing 22 Cyc. p. 1075; Overstreet v. Moser, 88 Mo. App. 72; Walling v. Porter, 35 Conn. 183; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Lowe, 44 N. W. 226, 28 Neb. 239, 6 L. R. A. 809, 26 Am. St. Rep. 325; Wintermute v. Clark [N. Y.] 5 Sandf. 247).

A "guest" is a transient who resorts to and is received at an inn for the purpose of obtaining the accommodations which it purports to afford. In some instances a "guest" is defined as a traveler or wayfarer. Any one away from home receiving the accommodations of an inn as a traveler is a "guest," and entitled to hold the innkeeper responsible as such. A "guest" is a traveler or transient comer who puts up at an inn for a lawful purpose to receive its customary lodging and entertainment. A "guest" is a traveler or wayfarer who puts up at an inn. It is said that it is not now deemed essential that a person should have come from a distance to constitute a guest. Distance is not material, and a townsman or neighbor may be a traveler, and therefore a guest, as well as he who came from a foreign country. De Lapp v. Van Closter, 118 S. W. 120, 121, 122, 136 Mo. App. 475 (quoting and adopting Overstreet v. Moser, 88 Mo. App. 72; Curtis v. Murphy, 22 N. W. 825, 63 Wis. 4, 53 Am. Rep. 242; citing 8 Words and Phrases).

GUEST (In Liquor Law)

Casual callers at a hotel to whom sandwiches are incidentally served with drinks are not "guests" within the meaning of Liquor Tax Law, § 31, subd. 2, providing that the keeper of a hotel may sell liquor to the guests of such hotel with their meals, in that they do not resort to the hotel for the purpose of obtaining a meal. In re Cullinan, 83 N. Y. Supp. 581, 582, 41 Misc. Rep. 3.

Where witness went to defendant's house to order milk, and while there was invited by defendant to sit at his table and drink whiskey with defendant and another, without demand for payment, it cannot be said as a matter of law that witness was not a "guest," defined to be a visitor or person received or entertained in one's house or at one's table without pay, so that the furnishing of liquor to him under such circumstances was violative of the local option law. People v. Hancock, 182 N. W. 443, 444, 166 Mich. 654.

Within the provision of the liquor tax law against the sale of liquor on Sunday, but excepting sales by the keeper of a hotel to his guests with their meals, or in their rooms, and defining "guest" as a person who, during the hours when meals are regularly served therein, resorts to a hotel for the purpose of obtaining, and actually orders and obtains, at such time, and in good faith, a meal, the test of who is a "guest" is his intent and desire to procure a meal, and it is essential that the guest should evince, at least apparently, a desire to partake of a meal. An act of a landlord in thrusting before a person, who has ordered only a drink, an unwanted, unordered, unpaid for, and uneaten sandwich, does not meet the requirement of the statute. Clement v. Beers, 110 N. Y. Supp. 99, 103, 126 App. Div. 1.

In a statute making it unlawful to sell liquor on Sunday, but providing that the holder of a tax certificate who is the keeper of a hotel may sell liquor to the guests with their meals, "hotel" is defined as a building regularly used as such for the feeding and lodging of guests, and "guest" is defined as one who in good faith, during the hours when meals are served, resorts to the hotel for the purpose of obtaining and actually orders and obtains, a meal. On a petition for the revocation of a liquor license, it was admitted that the premises conformed to the law with respect to the requirements of a hotel, but it was shown that on a Sunday agents of the excise department entered a sitting room at the rear of the barroom, and found the room furnished with tables, and people sitting about at tables ordering and being served with drinks, that the agents purchased sandwiches, which were served, and that they then purchased drinks. It appeared that that there were no knives or forks on the tables, and none of the usual appliances for a meal. Held, that the facts showed a violation of the statute. Clement v. Martin, 102 N. Y. Supp. 37, 38, 117 App. Div. 5.

In proceedings to cancel a liquor tax certificate because of sales made on Sunday, where respondent attempts to show sales made in a hotel, he must show sales to "guests" within Liquor Tax Law, § 31k, subd. 2, defining a "guest" as a person who, when meals are regularly served, resorts to the hotel and orders a meal in good faith, and the service of a sandwich costing five cents to a casual visitor who orders liquor does not constitute service to a "guest." In re Cullinan, 92 N. Y. Supp. 802, 803, 45 Misc. Rep. 497.

Under Liquor Tax Law, § 31, defining a hotel as a building regularly kept open for the accommodation of all able to pay for their entertainment and who, without any stipulated engagement as to the duration of their stay, or as to compensation, are supplied with meals, lodgings, and attention, and in which the only "other dwellers" are the family and servants of the hotel keeper, where a building contained rooms of the size and number required by the statute which were kept open and free for the accommodation of transient "guests" who might apply, persons who occupied some of such rooms continuously at a stipulated weekly or monthly rental should be regarded as "guests" and not "other dwellers" within such statute. Cullinan v. Clark, 93 N. Y. Supp. 256, 257, 46 Misc. Rep. 183.

Under Liquor Tax Law, § 31, excepting from the prohibition against the sale of liquor on Sundays sales by hotel keepers to guests, and defining a guest of a hotel as a person who, during the hours when meals are regularly served therein, resorts to the hotel for the purpose of obtaining and actually orders and obtains at such time in good faith, a meal therein, in order to be a "guest" a person must resort to a place for the primary purpose of obtaining in good faith a meal, which purpose, when effectuated by the service on the part of the hotel keeper of such meal, draws with it as an incidental and secondary matter the right to procure and serve liquors. Where the evidence showed that the liquor was sold on Sunday to persons who announced as their essential purpose the desire to procure liquor, and did not desire a meal, a verdict for the hotel keeper was against the weight of evidence, though there was evidence that his waiters insisted on serving with the liquor some trifling refreshments, which were carried away untasted. Cullinan v. O'Connor, 91 N. Y. Supp. 628, 630, 100 App. Div. 142.

GUIDE LINES

See Snub Ropes.

GUILTY

See Plea of Guilty.

A verdict of "guilty" implies a finding upon every element essential to constitute the offense as charged, but a verdict which convicts of but one of several essential elements of an offense is insufficient to sustain a conviction for the offense charged. Kimball v. Territory, 115 Pac. 70, 71, 13 Ariz. 310.

Under a statute requiring the jury in a bastardy proceeding to find whether accused be the father of such illegitimate child, a verdict of "guilty" authorizes a record that defendant was guilty, and the putative father of the child, since the verdict of "guilty" could mean nothing else than that he was guilty of the accusation. Gaskill v.

Overseer of Poor of Downe Tp., 86 N. J. Law, 356, 357.

The word "guilty," in a verdict finding defendant "guilty" of murder in the first degree, was a self-corrective clerical error for "guilty." Webb v. State, 34 South. 1011, 138 Ala. 53.

GUILTY AS CHARGED

Where a charge in an information respecting a threat to accuse another of a crime or offense was taken from the jury, and the case submitted upon another charge in the information respecting a threat to do injury to the person, property, business, or calling of another, a verdict finding accused "guilty as charged" must be construed as a conviction only of the offense submitted, the term "guilty as charged" meaning guilty as charged in the information under the court's instructions. State v. Schultz, 116 N. W. 259, 571, 135 Wis. 644.

An instruction, on a prosecution under an indictment charging burglary and larceny, that if the jury believe defendants alone, or with C., broke and entered the store of H., and that such breaking and entering was without the consent of H., and defendants, when the light was turned on, were in the act of stealing, they are guilty as charged regardless of who actually broke open the store, and of the fact that H. had agreed to pay C. for assisting in the detection and apprehension of defendants, is not erroneous, though the term "guilty as charged" means guilty of burglary, on the ground that the breaking and entering by C. was with the consent of H.; there not only being evidence that H. did not give his consent thereto, but such consent being expressly negatived by the instruction. Dees v. State, 42 South. 605, 606, 89 Miss. 754.

A verdict of "guilty as charged in the indictment," which charged grand larceny, fails to specify the degree as grand or petit larceny. McLane v. Territory, 71 Pac. 938, 8 Ariz. 150.

GUILTY CONNECTION

The words "guilty connection" have no definite meaning as descriptive of any particular offense. So a case stating that evidence was introduced to show a guilty connection between defendant charged with murder and his codefendant, the wife of deceased, does not show that any conspiracy was proved so as to render admissible evidence of her acts and declarations, showing merely her feelings toward her husband. State v. George, 29 N. C. 321, 324.

GUILTY OF ADULTERY

Where a husband had committed adultery and his offense had been condoned, he was not "guilty of adultery" within the meaning of a statute providing that if, in a suit for divorce for adultery, it appears that both parties have been guilty of adultery, no divorce shall be decreed. Storms v. Storms, 64 Atl. 700, 701, 71 N. J. Eq. 549.

GUILTY PARTY

The mere fact that a woman's prior undissolved marriage renders her subsequent marriage void does not make her "the guilty party" in a proceeding to nullify the marriage, within Pub. St. 1901, c. 175, § 13, authorizing an order against the guilty party providing for the support of a child. Bickford v. Bickford, 69 Atl. 579, 580, 74 N. H. 448.

A decree granting a wife a divorce for the husband's cruel and inhuman treatment concludes him as the "guilty party" within Code, § 3181, which provides that a divorce decree shall forfeit all rights of the guilty party under the marriage. Hamilton v. McNeill, 129 N. W. 480, 481, 150 Iowa, 470, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 604.

GUINEA FOWL

As poultry, see Poultry.

GULCH

As water course, see Water Course.

GUM

See In the Gum.

In an indictment for murder charging the killing to have been done with a "gum," the word "gum" cannot mean anything else than "gun," as there is no such thing as a "gum" with which a man could be shot. Simmons v. State, 48 South. 606, 607, 158 Ala. 8.

GUMBO

"Gumbo" is a character of earth which holds water for a great length of time. Jones & Jones v. Cooley Lake Club, 98 S. W. 82, 83, 122 Mo. App. 113.

GUN

See Parts or Fittings of Guns.

The word "gun" is a generic term and includes pistol. According to Webster's Dictionary, a "gun" is "any firearm for throwing projectiles by the explosion of gunpowder." In common usage the words "pistol" and "gun" are used interchangeably. State v. Barrington, 95 S. W. 235, 263, 198 Mo. 23.

As deadly weapon

See Deadly Weapon.

GUN COTTON

The explosive nitrate of cellulose made by digesting clean cotton in a mixture of nitric and sulphuric acid is commonly known as "gun cotton." Wolff v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 122 Fed. 944, 945.

GUNPOWDER

Rev. St. §§ 4475, 4476, relating to the packing and shipment of "gunpowder," include metallic cartridges containing gunpowder. United States v. Giordani, 163 Fed. 773, 778.

GUNSHOT WOUNDS

Where an indictment charged accused with inflicting a mortal wound on deceased "with a revolving pistol," and later charged that the wounds were "gunshot wounds," it was not fatally defective for indefiniteness and uncertainty; the term "gunshot wounds" being broad enough to include wounds made by a "pistol." State v. Barrington, 95 S. W. 235, 263, 198 Mo. 23.

GUT

Under Code 1904, § 1339, providing that the limits of lands lying on the shores of the sea, and the rights and privileges of the owners thereof, shall extend to low-tide mark, but no farther, the limits of marsh lying below high tide, to which the owner of the shore land is entitled, do not stop with a "gut" or channel which runs from a bay up across the marsh, in a direction more or less parallel with the shore, if such channel ebbs dry at ordinary low-water mark, but the part of the marsh to which he is entitled extends across such channel to ordinary low tide. Whealton & Wisherd v. Doughty, 72 S. E. 112, 114, 112 Va. 649.

GUTTER

The structures common to all highways for collecting surface water and keeping it out of the traveled part of the road are usually called "ditches" or "gutters" and are not sluiceways, within the meaning of a statute making towns liable for damages to any person traveling on a sluiceway by reason of any defect therein. Drew v. Town of Bow, 65 Atl. 831, 74 N. H. 147.

HABEAS CORPUS

The writ of habeas corpus is a common-law writ of ancient origin designed as a speedy method of affording a judicial inquiry into the course of any alleged unlawful custody of an individual or any alleged unlawful actual deprivation of personal liberty. Porter v. Porter, 53 South. 546, 547, 60 Fla. 407, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 867.

Habeas corpus is for the benefit of those unlawfully restrained of their liberties, and this means physical, and not moral, restraint. In re Dykes, 74 Pac. 506, 507, 13 Okl. 839.

"Habeas corpus" is a writ whose purpose is to procure liberation of those imprisoned, without sufficient or proper cause; it being the great prerogative writ. Ex parte Johnson, 98 Pac. 461, 464, 1 Okl. Cr. 414.

The "writ of habeas corpus" is used to institute a proceeding for the vindication of the right to personal liberty. State ex rel. Milwaukee Medical College v. Ohittenden, 107 N. W. 500, 507, 127 Wis. 468 (citing State ex rel. Durner v. Huegth, 85 N. W. 1046, 110 Wis. 189, 222, 62 L. R. A. 700).

"The writ of 'habeas corpus' is the remedy which the law gives for the enforcement of the civil right of personal liberty." Winovich v. Emery, 98 Pac. 988, 989, 83 Utah, 345 (quoting and adopting definition of Chief Justice Waite in Ex parte Tom Tong, 2 Sup. Ct. 872, 108 U. S. 559, 27 L. Ed. 826).

The purpose of proceedings in "habeas corpus" is to determine whether or not the person instituting them is illegally restrained of his liberty. In re Moyer, 85 Pac. 190, 192, 35 Colo. 159, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 979, 117 Am. St. Rep. 189.

A "writ of habeas corpus" "is the process provided by law for deliverance from illegal confinement. * * * In regard to extradition, this writ is indicated by the law itself as the special remedy available to the citizen against the misuse and abuse of that proceeding. * * * The law provides for no hearing to the alleged fugitive before the executives of the two states, and seems to recognize the fact that he has no redress except in this writ of high privilege—this writ of habeas corpus." Barriere v. State, 39 South. 55, 56, 142 Ala. 72 (quoting and adopting definition in Ex parte Slauson, 73 Fed. 667).

The writ of "habeas corpus" is a writ of right and is sometimes issued upon very informal application. There is no such practice as that of moving to quash such writ because of formal defects in the application. The inquiry in such cases is not as to the technical formality of a showing made to the court for the issuance of the writ but as to the legality of the alleged detention of the prisoner. In such inquiry, the parties are not confined to the matter specifically set forth in the application for the writ, but may go outside of these and inquire into any matter that affects the legality of a detention. Crooms v. Schad, 40 South. 497, 498, 51 Fla. 168.

The writ of "habeas corpus" is a summary proceeding to secure personal liberty. It strikes at unlawful imprisonment or restraint of the person by state or citizen, and by the most direct method known to the law learns the truth and applies the remedy. It tolerates no delay except of necessity, and is hindered by no obstacle except by the limits set by the law of its creation. People ex rel. Duryee v. Duryee, 81 N. E. 312, 314, 188 N. Y. 440.

"The writ of 'habeas corpus,' which has been denominated 'the great writ of liberty,' is not only to secure the right of personal liberty to one who has been illegally deprived thereof, but also to insure a speedy hearing and determination of the questions involved and as to the right of a petitioner to be released from imprisonment." Exceptions do not lie to the discharge of a prisoner upon habeas corpus. Stuart v. Smith, 644 Atl. 668, 664, 101 Me. 397.

The object of the writ of "habeas corpus" is to release a citizen from any illegal restraint of his liberty, and it is the proper remedy to secure the release of one alleged to be illegally restrained under a writ of ne exeat, where it appears a petitioner was in custody of the surety on his bail bond. Ex parte Messervy, 61 S. E. 445, 446, 80 S. C. 285.

One under arrest, but at large on bail, is entitled to a writ of "habeas corpus" the same as if the arrest was accompanied by actual imprisonment; the purpose of the writ being to test the right of the court or other body issuing the process to detain the person for any purpose by restraining him of his right to go without question. Mackenzie v. Barrett, 141 Fed. 964, 966, 73 C. C. A. 280, 5 Ann. Cas. 551.

As appellate in nature

The writ of "habeas corpus" is not endowed with the functions of a writ of error or other proceeding for the review and correction of errors. Hovey v. Sheffner, 93 Pac. 306, 308, 16 Wyo. 254, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227, 125 Am. St. Rep. 1087, 15 Ann. Cas. 318 (citing Kingen v. Kelley, 28 Pac. 36, 3 Wyo. 566, 15 L. R. A. 177; In re McDonald, 33 Pac. 18, 4 Wyo. 150; Miskimmins v. Shaver, 53 Pac. 411, 8 Wyo. 408, 49 L. R. A. 831; Fisher v. McDaniel, 64 Pac. 1056, 9 Wyo. 457, 87 Am. St. Rep. 971; Younger v. Hehn, 75 Pac. 443, 12 Wyo. 289, 109 Am. St. Rep. 986; Holli- baugh v. Hehn, 13 Wyo. 269, 79 Pac. 1044); Felts v. Murphy, 26 Sup. Ct. 366, 368, 201 U. S. 123, 50 L. Ed. 689 (citing Ex parte Bigelow, 5 Sup. Ct. 542, 113 U. S. 328, 28 L. Ed. 1005; Ex parte Lennon, 17 Sup. Ct. 658, 166 U. S. 548, 552, 41 L. Ed. 1110, 1112; In re Eckart, 17 Sup. Ct. 638, 166 U. S. 481, 41 L. Ed. 1085).

"The 'writ of habeas corpus' is a writ of liberty and not of error, and it will issue, not for the purpose of correcting errors in a proceeding of a court of competent jurisdiction, but rather for the purpose of determining the legality of the restraint." In re McMontes, 106 N. W. 456, 75 Neb. 702.

A writ of habeas corpus is available only to determine the question of jurisdiction and power of the custodian to hold petitioner against his will and cannot be utilized as a revisory remedy. Kroschel v. Munkers, 179 Fed. 961, 963.

The writ of "habeas corpus" cannot be used to perform the office of a writ of error or appeal, and should be limited to cases in which the judgment and sentence of the court attacked is clearly void. Ex parte Justus, 104 Pac. 933, 935, 3 Okl. Cr. 111, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483.

The writ of "habeas corpus" is not designed to operate as a writ of error or certiorari, dealing, not with irregularities or errors which render the proceeding voidable, but only such as render it absolutely void. Ex parte Patman, 95 Pac. 622, 624, 1 Okl. Cr. 141 (quoting Perry v. State, 41 Tex. 489).

The writ of "habeas corpus" is not in the nature of, nor is it to be used as a substitute for, proceedings in error. A finding or decision of the inferior court, no matter how erroneous, if it does not affect its jurisdiction, is not subject to attack in this collateral proceeding. The office of the writ is to determine the legality of the particular imprisonment, and the facts to be considered in determining that question are jurisdictional facts. Younger v. Hehn, 75 Pac. 443, 444, 12 Wyo. 289, 109 Am. St. Rep. 986.

"'Habeas corpus' cannot operate as an appeal or writ of error, and the examination into the imprisonment of a party under the sentence or order of a court is to extend only to the jurisdiction and authority to render the judgment." In re Clark, 78 Pac. 475, 476, 28 Utah, 268.

The writ of "habeas corpus" is not for the purpose of reviewing errors, and is only authorized in those cases where the court has acted without jurisdiction. People ex rel. Freeman v. Murphy, 72 N. E. 902, 904, 212 Ill. 584.

A writ of "habeas corpus" cannot be made the basis of a review of a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, where proceedings were had under a constitutional statute giving the court the authority to examine into the charges and to convict or acquit accused when the proceedings showed no attempt to exert the jurisdiction of the court in excess of its authority; the proceedings under the writ being confined to examination of the record with a view of determining whether the person was restrained of his liberty or is detained without warrant of law. Harlan v. McGourin, 31 Sup. Ct. 44, 46, 218 U. S. 442, 54 L. Ed. 1101, 21 Ann. Cas. 849.

"The writ of 'habeas corpus' is not the equivalent of an appeal or writ of error. It is not a proceeding to correct errors which may have occurred in a trial of the case below. It is an attack directly upon the validity of the judgment, and, as has been frequently said, it cannot be transformed into a writ of error." The silence of the Circuit Courts of Appeals (Act March 3, 1891 [26 Stat. 826, c. 517]), on the subject of "habeas corpus," prevents a Circuit Court of Appeals from issuing a writ of "habeas corpus" as an original and independent proceeding, although, in view of section 12 of that act, giving such courts the powers specified in Rev. St. § 716, it may issue such a writ in cases when necessary for the exercise of a jurisdiction already existing. Whitney v. Dick, 26 Sup. Ct. 584, 586, 202 U. S. 182, 50 L. Ed. 963.

A writ of "habeas corpus" cannot perform the function of a writ of error. Federal courts have no power to interfere by "habeas corpus" with the imprisonment of a person under a judgment of conviction of a crime in a state court, if that court had jurisdiction to try the case, and jurisdiction over the person of the accused, and did not lose such jurisdiction during the trial. The federal courts will not release, on habeas corpus, a person convicted of murder in the first degree in a state court, on the theory that that court lost its jurisdiction to proceed in the trial because it charged the jury, in accordance with the admission of counsel for the accused, that the only question for their consideration was the degree of murder of which the accused was guilty. Valentina v. Mercer, 26 Sup. Ct. 368, 370, 201 U. S. 181, 50 L. Ed. 693.

A proceeding by "habeas corpus" is a collateral attack on a judgment committing petitioner to custody, and cannot succeed unless the judgment is void for want of jurisdiction; the writ being unavailable for the correction of errors, no matter how gross. Tullis v. Shaw, 88 N. E. 376, 377, 169 Ind. 662.

The writ of "habeas corpus" will not issue unless the court under whose warrant petitioner is held is without jurisdiction, and it cannot be used merely to correct errors. Ordinarily the writ will not be granted when there is a remedy by writ of error or appeal, yet, in rare and exceptional cases, it may be issued, although such remedy exists. Riggins v. United States, 26 Sup. Ct. 147, 148, 199 U. S. 547, 50 L. Ed. 303.

As cause

See Cause (In Practice).

As civil or criminal proceeding

"Habeas corpus" proceeding is not intended to be summary and is not a "criminal proceeding" permitting admission to bail pending an appeal from the order dismissing the petition. Orr v. Jackson, 128 N. W. 958, 960, 149 Iowa, 641.

"Habeas corpus" proceedings are "civil" and not "criminal." Winnovich v. Emery, 93 Pac. 988, 989, 33 Utah, 345.

A proceeding in "habeas corpus" is in its nature civil. In re Jewett, 77 Pac. 567, 569, 69 Kan. 830.

A "habeas corpus" proceeding is a civil proceeding, and an order for the discharge of the prisoner made therein is appealable. Garfinkle v. Sullivan, 80 Pac. 188, 189, 87 Wash. 650.

The term "civil action" includes a proceeding in "habeas corpus" to determine the legality of an imprisonment or to determine the custody of an infant. Martin v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist., 86 Pac. 82, 83, 37 Colo. 110, 119 Am. St. Rep. 262.

As criminal case or cause

See Criminal Case or Cause.

Determination as to custody of children

The object of the writ of "habeas corpus" is to free a person from illegal restraint, and, when there is no such restraint, the writ cannot be used to decide a contest as to the right to the custody of a child, except when the contest is between the parents of the child. As stated by Chancellor Kent in Wollstonecraft's Case (N. Y.) 4 Johns. Ch. 80, the sole function of the writ, respecting the custody of a child, is "to release the infant from all improper restraint, and not to try, in this summary way, the question of guardianship, or to deliver the infant over to the custody of another; that it is only to deliver the party from illegal restraint, and, if the infant is competent to form and declare an election, then to allow the infant to go where it pleases, and, if too young to form a judgment, then the court is to exercise its judgment for the infant." In re Parker, 56 S. E. 878, 879, 144 N. C. 170 (citing Revisal 1905, § 1853; State v. Cheeseman, 5 N. J. Law, 445; State v. Clover, 16 N. J. Law, 419; Foster v. Alston, 7 Miss. 406).

Examination of jurisdictional questions

A writ of "habeas corpus" only reaches jurisdictional error; it cannot properly be made to perform the office of a writ of error. By the common law, if the court in any given case has authority, under any circumstances, to render judgment imprisoning the accused, the error in reaching the one pronounced is judicial, remedial by writ of error; if the court has no such authority, the error is jurisdictional, remedial by writ of habeas corpus. In case a judgment in any criminal action is grounded on an unconstitutional law, it has no legitimate basis and is void; hence a person imprisoned thereunder may obtain his release by writ of habeas corpus. Servonitz v. State, 113 N. W. 277, 278, 183 Wis. 231, 126 Am. St. Rep. 955.

HABEAS CORPUS AD SUBJICIENDUM

In England the writ of "habeas corpus ad subjiciendum" was one of the high prerogative writs by which English courts acquired jurisdiction of a person actually imprisoned or deprived of his liberty. Clifford v. Williams, 131 Fed. 100, 101.

HABEAS CORPUS AD TESTIFICANDUM

A writ of "habeas corpus ad testificandum" is not the high prerogative writ of habeas corpus, but is merely the ancient common-law precept to bring a prisoner into court to testify, and is the process of the court from which it is issued, though it emanates from a judge in chambers. In re Thaw, 166 Fed. 71, 75, 91 C. C. A. 657.

HABENDUM

The purpose of a "habendum" is to define the estate granted; and, if the whole instrument shows that it was intended by the habendum clause to restrict or enlarge the estate conveyed by the granting clause, the habendum controls. Pack v. Whitaker, 65 S. E. 496, 498, 110 Va. 122.

As contradicting or defeating estate granted

The office of the "habendum" in a deed is to lessen, enlarge, explain, or qualify the premises, but not to contradict or be repugnant to the estate granted therein. Bryan v. Eason, 61 S. E. 71, 73, 147 N. C. 284.

In Alabama the granting clause prevails over the recitals or "habendum" clause of a deed in case of conflict as to the estate conveyed. Dickson v. Wildman, 183 Fed. 398, 403, 105 C. C. A. 618; Id., 175 Fed. 580.

As enlarging subject-matter of grant

It is the office of the "habendum" in a deed to sometimes enlarge the estate granted, but never to extend the subject-matter of the grant, and nothing can be limited therein which has not been given in the premises; because the premises being the part of the deed in which the thing is granted, it follows that the "habendum," which is only used for limiting the certainty of the estate, cannot increase the gift, for in that case the grantee would in fact take nothing which was never given to him. A habendum clause in a deed reading, "To have and to hold the same * * * and all the estate * * * either now or which may hereafter be acquired, or the said grantee or his heirs and assigns," does not convey after-acquired property, but merely confirms in the grantee any estate in the land specifically granted which the grantor might thereafter acquire. Bessemer Irrigating Ditch Co. v. Woolley, 76 Pac. 1063, 1065, 32 Colo. 437, 105 Am. St. Rep. 91 (citing Manning v. Smith, 6 Conn. 289; 2 Greenl. Cruise, Real Prop. 349).

HABIT

See Intemperate Habits.

The "habit" of a person contemplates a course of conduct which is customary, and shows that he has acquired a tendency to pursue that course of conduct from frequent repetitions of the same acts, and does not contemplate occasional or exceptional acts. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Shane, 135 S. W. 836, 838, 98 Ark. 132.

Single or occasional acts

"An occasional excess in the use of intoxicating liquor does not constitute a 'habit' or make a man intemperate, within the meaning of a policy of insurance. * * * The 'habit' of using intoxicating liquor to an excess is the result of indulging a natural or acquired appetite by continued use until it becomes a customary practice. This 'habit' may manifest itself by delayed or periodical intoxication or drunkenness. When the general habits of a man are either abstemious or temperate, an occasional indulgence to excess does not make him a man of intemperate habits." Puls v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. of North Dakota, 102 N. W. 165, 166, 13 N. D. 559 (quoting and adopting definition in Bac. Ben. Soc. § 231). See, also, Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Exchange Bank of Macon, 126 Fed. 360, 361, 61 C. C. A. 310.

HABITATION

Change of habitation, see Change.

In the law of process and attachment "residence" and "habitation" are generally regarded as synonymous. A "resident" and an "inhabitant" mean the same thing. A person resident is defined to be "one dwelling or having his abode in any place"; an inhabitant, "one that resides in a place." Atkinson v. Washington & Jefferson College, 46 S. E. 253, 259, 54 W. Va. 32 (citing Drake, Attachment).

HABITUAL

ratified all contracts assumed to have been made by the husband, his agency might be implied. Marks v. Herren, 83 Pac. 385, 386, 47 Or. 603.

HABITUAL ASSOCIATION

Evidence that defendant occasionally went to the room of a prostitute at night for an immoral purpose did not show "habitual association" with a prostitute, within Pen. Code 1911, art. 636, providing that all male persons who habitually associate with prostitutes shall be deemed vagrants. Ellis v. State (Tex.) 145 S. W. 339.

HABITUAL AVOCATION

A nonresident of a county owned property there which he managed and received the rents from, and also collected rent from property which he owned as cotenant with another, receiving a commission from his cotenant for collecting the latter's share. He formerly lived and transacted business in the county, having an office in a dwelling house owned by him, and, when he was in the county collecting rents, he called at the office, upon which his business sign still remained. Held, that he was not engaged in regular business or "habitual avocation" or employment, within Code, art. 75, § 132, authorizing any one so engaged to be sued in the county in which the business is carried on. State, to Use of Gemundt, v. Shipley, 57 Atl. 12, 98 Md. 657.

HABITUAL CARNAL INTERCOURSE

Evidence of prosecutrix that she had intercourse with defendant six times while she was working in his family as general servant for seven months, and that four of such acts of intercourse occurred in the house, was insufficient to sustain an indictment charging "habitual carnal intercourse" without living together. Boswell v. State, 85 S. W. 1076, 1077, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 47, 122 Am. St. Rep. 731.

HABITUAL DRUNKARD

See Habitual Drunkenness or Intoxication; Habitual Intemperance.
See, also, Inebriate.

One is an "habitual drunkard," within the law making habitual drunkenness ground for divorce, who has a fixed and irresistible habit of drunkenness, having by frequent indulgence lost the power to control his appetite, and it is not necessary that he be continually drunk or that his drunkenness incapacitate him for work; for a man may be an habitual drunkard, and yet be sober for days and weeks. Tarrant v. Tarrant, 137 S. W. 56, 57, 156 Mo. App. 725.

Under Bouvier's definition of an "habitual drunkard," a person given to inebriety or the excessive use of intoxicating drink, who has lost the power or will, by frequent indulgence, to control his appetite for it, to be an habitual drunkard within the divorce laws it is not necessary that the person is constantly drunk or necessarily incapacitated to transact his business, but it is sufficient if he has a fixed habit of frequently and repeatedly getting drunk when the opportunity presents itself, or has lost the will power to resist the temptation. O'Kane v. O'Kane, 147 S. W. 73, 108 Ark. 382, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 655.

"One is an 'habitual drunkard' within the meaning of the divorce laws, who has a fixed habit of frequently getting drunk. It is not necessary that he be constantly or universally drunk, nor that he have more drunken than sober hours. It is enough that he had the habit so firmly fixed upon him that he becomes drunk with recurring frequency periodically, or that he is unable to resist when the opportunity and temptation is presented." Page v. Page, 86 Pac. 582, 584, 43 Wash. 293, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1054.

Inability to control appetite

"Habitual drunkards" are persons who have lost the power or will to control their appetite for intoxicating liquors or narcotics and have the fixed habit of drunkenness. Leavitt v. City of Morris, 117 N. W. 393, 395, 105 Minn. 170, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 984, 15 Ann. Cas. 961 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3202).

An "habitual drunkard," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 3017, imposing a penalty for selling to such a person after notice from his wife not to do so, is a person given to inebriety or the excessive use of intoxicating drinks to the extent that he has lost the power or will, by frequent indulgence, to control his appetite. Jackson County ex rel. Farley v. Schmid, 124 S. W. 1074, 1075, 141 Mo. App. 229.

HABITUAL DRUNKENNESS OR INTOXICATION

"Habitual drunkenness," within the Divorce Law (Comp. Laws, § 8621), means not that the person is in the habit of becoming intoxicated occasionally, but that his habit of indulging in intoxicating liquors is so firmly fixed that he becomes intoxicated as often as the temptation is presented by his being in the vicinity where liquors are sold. Lentz v. Lentz, 187 N. W. 229, 232, 171 Mich. 509.

"Habitual drunkenness," as a statutory ground for divorce, means an irresistible habit of getting drunk, a fixed habit of drinking to excess, such frequent indulgence to excess as to show a formed habit and inability to control the appetite. Garrett v. Garrett, 96 N. E. 882, 885, 252 Ill. 318. Occasional intoxication is not "habitual drunkenness." Donley v. Donley, 131 S. W. 356, 150 Mo. App. 660.

HABITUAL INTEMPERANCE

"Habitual intemperance," as a ground for separation, means the custom or habit of getting drunk; ordinary beer drinking, short of intoxication, furnishing no ground for such a charge. Schaub v. Schaub, 42 South. 249, 250, 117 Ga. 727.

Use of drugs

The morphine habit, contracted through the necessary use of the drug to alleviate unendurable pain, does not constitute "habitual intemperance," within Rev. Codes 1905, § 4054, defining habitual intemperance as ground for divorce to be that degree of intemperance from the use of morphine, etc., which disqualifies the person a great portion of the time from properly attending to business. Rindlaub v. Rindlaub, 125 N. W. 479, 484, 19 N. D. 352.

HABITUALLY

The use in the court's charge of the words "habitual" and "habitually," to qualify the alleged conduct of the husband in dealing with his wife's land, did not require the husband's acts to be so often repeated as to form a habit, but they meant that, if the wife ratified all contracts assumed to have been made by the husband, his agency might be implied. Marks v. Herren, 83 Pac. 885, 888, 47 Or. 603.

HAIR

HAIR PRESS CLOTH

Camel's-hair press cloth is dutiable as manufactures of "wool," under Tariff Act, rather than as "hair press cloth." Oberle & Henry v. United States, 165 Fed. 53, 55, 91 C. C. A. 139.

The provision in the Tariff Act for "hair press cloth" is not limited to fabrics composed of the same material (horsehair) as the other articles enumerated in said paragraph. E. & W. H. Caldwell v. United States, 141 Fed. 487, 488.

HALF

See Easterly Half; Eastern One-Half; East Half; West Half.

As half in quantity

Where there is nothing to suggest the contrary, the word "half" in connection with the conveyance of a part of a tract of land is interpreted as meaning half in quantity. Gunn v. Brower, 105 Pac. 702, 708, 81 Kan. 242.

The word "half," in its literal signification, is a quantitative term, and when applied to anything capable of division into two equal parts means one of those parts. Parol evidence is not admissible to prove that a conveyance of the "north half" of a tract of land was intended to mean half of the north and south length of the tract, and not to mean one-half of the area, since the word "half," used in reference to plats, other than those of a governmental survey, has no technical meaning, other than its ordinary meaning as a quantitative term. Robinson v. Taylor, 123 Pac. 444, 445, 68 Wash. 351.

The words "east half and west half" in a description in a deed naturally import an equal division; but they may lose that effect when it appears that at the time the deed was made some fixed boundary or monument divided the premises somewhere near the center, so that the words referred more properly to one of such parts than to a mathematical division which had never been made. People v. Hall, 88 N. Y. Supp. 276, 279, 43 Misc. Rep. 117; Gunn v. Brower, 105 Pac. 702, 708, 81 Kan. 242.

HALF BLOOD

The phrase "of the 'half blood'" necessarily signifies that the consanguinity is collateral rather than lineal. Finley v. Abner, 129 Fed. 734, 735, 64 C. C. A. 262; Finley v. Abner, 60 S. W. 911, 915, 4 Ind. T. 896.

As ordinarily understood by white people, a person of white and Indian parentage is deemed to be of mixed blood, without regard to the source of the Indian blood, and therefore, when, in a convention with Indians, "half or mixed bloods" are included, no distinction can be drawn between those who derive the Indian blood from the father and those who derive it from the mother. Sloan v. United States, 118 Fed. 283, 288.

HALF LINE VOYAGE

The "half line" plan in the fishing business is an arrangement between the owners of a fishing vessel and a master and his crew, whereby the master undertakes a fishing voyage, in which the gross proceeds of the catch, less certain deductions, are shared equally between the vessel and the master and crew; the latter half share, after payment for certain things charged to the master and crew as a body, being divided among them share and share alike. The voyage is a "half line voyage." Welch v. Fallon, 181 Fed. 875, 876.

HALF SECTION LINE

A road was ordered by the authorities of a county along a "half section line." In a contest over the location of such line between the owners of premises on opposite sides of the road, in which contest the county was not interested, it was held that the line of a division fence jointly built between the holdings of the contending parties, to which each party had occupied and maintained possession for more than 10 years, was rightly adopted by the trial court as the "half section line," within the meaning of the proceedings locating such road. Nance County v. Russell, 97 N. W. 320, 321, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 97.

HALF TURN

A "half turn," as used in the irrigation law, consists in the right to take water every 10 or 12 days for 19 or 20 hours, while a "whole turn" is the right to take water every 20 or 21 days for 39 hours. Bartholomew v. Fayette Irr. Co., 86 Pac. 481, 31 Utah, 1, 120 Am. St. Rep. 912.

HAND TOOL

An ordinary ladder is to be classed with other ordinary "hand tools." Sheridan v. Gorham Mfg. Co., 66 Atl. 576, 577, 28 R. I. 256, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 687.

HANDED DOWN

The term "handed down," as used in a record reciting that "the said indictment and proceedings are 'handed down' to the quarter sessions, there to be proceeded with according to the law," is equivalent to the term "ordered to be delivered," and such record is sufficient to give the quarter sessions jurisdiction; either form being sufficient to show that the trial and the indictment is committed to the inferior court. Engeman v. State, 23 Atl. 676, 678, 54 N. J. Law, 247.

HANDHOLD

A "handhold" is an iron rod intended to assist railroad employes in riding on the footboard of the engine. Pollard's Adm'r v. Kentucky & I. Bridge & R. Co. (Ky.) 97 S. W. 735. Or to assist them in getting on and off a car. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Box (Tex.) 93 S. W. 134, 136.

HANDMADE PAPER

The handmade papers covered by the Tariff Act, enumerating "writing, letter, handmade, drawing, * * * and typewriter paper," are not only those used as writing papers, but also that suitable for other uses, as handmade India transfer paper used for making lithographic transfers and in printing. Edward Benneche & Bro. v. United States, 153 Fed. 861, 862, 83 C. C. A. 43.

So-called "marbled paper," which is made by hand, held dutiable as surface-coated paper under the Tariff Act and not as "handmade paper." It is excluded from the latter paragraph because not ejusdem generis with the classes of paper there enumerated. Seyd v. United States, 152 Fed. 657, 658.

Handmade printing paper, suitable for books and newspapers, is more specifically provided for under the Tariff Act as "printing paper * * * suitable for books and newspapers," than as "handmade * * * paper," under said act. *Miller, Sloane & Wright v. HANDLEHandling freight

Defendant maintained a wharf structure at Nome, and was also engaged in the sale of coal for the joint account of itself and the seller. Defendant guaranteed the seller's advances in a sufficient sum to realize a net profit of 50 cents a ton on the coal sold and a further interest in the net proceeds of the sale of the coal and the profit in excess of 50 cents a ton; defendant regulating the selling price of the coal. Held that coal handled under such contract from vessels by means of defendant's wharf structure constituted "freight handled," within Act June 6, 1900, c. 786, § 29, 31 Stat. 330, 331, requiring persons maintaining public docks, wharves, and warehouses in Alaska to pay a license fee of 10 cents per ton on freight handled or stored. *John J. HAPPENAs happen to exist

The word "happen," in its strictest, literal sense, signifies an unexpected event. It is also not uncommonly used as synonymous with "occur," "take place," "exist," and "happen to be." And where an act provided that all vacancies in the State Board of Elections shall be filled by joint vote of the General Assembly, except vacancies occurring when it is not in session, when, if the office of only one member is vacant, the remaining members of the board shall fill the vacancy, and if they fail to do so it shall be filled by the Secretary of State, Comptroller, and Treasurer, and that if there be more than one vacancy it shall be filled by appointment by such officers, it was held, in view of the meaning of "vacant," which means "without an incumbent," regardless of when or how it became vacant, and of the words "occur" and "happen," which are synonymous and mean "existing" or "to be found," that the Comptroller, Secretary of State, and Treasurer were authorized to fill two or more vacancies in the board of elections during recess of the Legislature, whether such vacancies occurred during recess or while the Legislature was in session. Richardson v. Young, 125 S. W. 664, 686, 122 Tenn. 471 (citing Fritts v. Kuhl, 17 Atl. 102, 51 N. J. Law, 192).

Cas. 60 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Cyc. p. 879).

"Harboring thieves" means to give them shelter or lodging, or entertain them as guests. State v. Modlin, 95 S. W. 345, 346, 197 Mo. 376.

"Harboring," is defined by the International Dictionary, as giving refuge, shelter, or protection to; to furnish lodging for; and its use in a verdict in a prosecution for permitting an unmarried female to remain in a house of prostitution as the equivalent of the statutory description of the crime, "shall suffer or permit any unmarried female * * * to live, board, stop, or room in such house," is allowable. Hence a verdict finding defendant "guilty of harboring a female under the age of 18 years in a house of prostitution, in manner and form as charged in the indictment," is not defective for using "harboring" as an equivalent of "suffering or permitting to live, board, stop, or room," but is defective, in that it does not find that defendant is the keeper of the house, and that the female harbored is unmarried. A verdict finding defendant guilty or guilty as charged in the indictment is sufficient. People v. Lee, 86 N. E. 573, 574, 237 Ill. 272.

"* * * To harbor" is to receive clandestinely, or without legal authority, for the purpose of concealing him, that another, having the right to the legal custody of such person, shall be deprived thereof, * * * or, in a less technical sense, it is the reception of persons improperly." In an action for the abduction of a child, a witness was asked to state what the child told him, shortly before she went to defendants, as to what defendant had promised her if she would go there. Held, that the question was properly excluded as calling for hearsay evidence. Baumgartner v. Eigenbrot, 60 Atl. 601, 603, 100 Md. 508.

HARBOR (Noun)

As a boundary

A statute incorporating a township and fixing its boundaries as "on the southeast by New York Harbor," etc., fixes the boundaries of the township so as to include lands under the water of the harbor to the boundary line of the state, since a harbor is a recess in the coast line of a body of water in which ships can be sheltered, and it may extend to a line inside of which vessels may find protection, and the word has a more extended meaning than "shore," which when applied to a tide water bay usually means the part between ordinary high and low water marks. Leary v. Jersey City, 189 Fed. 419, 428.

HARD ACTION

The class of actions known as "hard actions" include penal actions and actions ex delicto, such as actions of slander, libel, and the like. Where the plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages only, a judgment for defendant will be affirmed. Cronemiller v. Duluth-Superior Milling Co., 114 N. W. 432, 433, 184 Wis. 248.

HARD DRINKER

One who at times indulges in the use of liquor to such an extent as to produce delirium tremens may be termed a "hard drinker." Reid v. Singer Mfg. Co., 107 S. W. 310, 311, 128 Ky. 50.

HARD LABOR

The Supreme Court, having appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases only as to questions of law when the punishment of death or imprisonment at hard labor may be inflicted or a fine exceeding $300 or imprisonment exceeding six months is actually imposed, has no jurisdiction of an appeal from a conviction of selling intoxicants without a license where the sentence was to pay a fine of $300 and costs, and be confined in the parish jail for six months, etc., the offense charged not being punishable by death or imprisonment at hard labor; Act No. 66 of 1902, making the selling of liquors without license punishable by fine not less than $100 or more than $500, and, in default of payment of fines and costs, by imprisonment within the discretion of the court or by fine and imprisonment, Act No. 107, of 1902, § 8, prescribing penalties for different grades of the offense of selling liquors without a license, imposing fines and imprisonment of less than six months, and Act No. 176 of 1908, § 3, imposing a penalty for selling intoxicants in quantities less than five gallons without license of a fine or by imprisonment in the parish jail for not exceeding two years, the term "hard labor" as used in the Constitution referring to such labor to be performed in the State Penitentiary. State v. Hamilton, 54 South. 482, 128 La. 91.

HARD ROAD

Gravel road

Where a certificate of a special tax levy made by the commissioners of highways designated the levy as for "hard" roads, and referred particularly to the vote taken on the petition, both of which were for levying a tax for "gravel" roads, there was no material variance between the certificate and the petition; a gravel road being a "hard road." People ex rel. Martin v. Robeson, 97 N. E. 687, 253 Ill. 456.

HARDPAN

A stratum of hard-baked clay is known as "hardpan." Newport v. Temescal Water Co., 87 Pac. 872, 873, 149 Cal. 531, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1098.

HARDWARE TRADE

A druggist, in so far as he sells cutlery, is engaged in the "hardware trade," and hence where plaintiff, a wholesale dealer, sold razors to defendant under a contract stipulating that plaintiff would insert an advertisement in a newspaper containing defendant's name as the selling agent of the razors for that town in the hardware trade, such stipulation amounted to a contract that defendant should be considered the sole agent for sale of the razors in the hardware trade at such point, and a sale of such razors to a druggist doing business in the same block as defendant during the period covered by the contract, and permitting such druggists to sell the razors at a less price than defendant was allowed to sell them, was a breach of the contract. Silberstein v. Gutteridge, 77 Atl. 792, 793, 80 N. J. Law, 117.

HARE'S COMBINGS

As to combings of loose or dead hair obtained in preparing rabbit or hare skins, which are commercially known as "hares' combings" or "fur waste," and which, after further treatment, are used as an adulterant in cheap hats, held, that they are dutiable as waste under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 463, 30 Stat. 194, and not as furs prepared for hatters' use under paragraph 426, 30 Stat. 151, nor free of duty as "furs, undressed," under section 2, Free

List, par. 561, 30 Stat. 194. United States v. Hatters' Fur Exchange, 153 Fed. 595, 596.

HARM

See Bodily Harm; Great Bodily Harm.

HARMLESS

See Hold Harmless; Save Harmless.

HARMLESS BEVERAGE

Nonintoxicating malt liquor is not a "harmless beverage." Ex parte Flake (Tex.) 149 S. W. 146, 154.

HARNES

To warrant a conviction under the law making the theft in the nighttime of any harness grand larceny, it is not necessary that the property stolen comprise all the parts of a complete harness. State v. Wortman, 98 Pac. 217, 78 Kan. 847.

HARVEST

Plaintiff rented to defendant about 1,200 acres of rice land at a rental of $5 an acre for all land covered by the lease and "harvested." The rice was actually raised and cut on 1,040 acres, and the residue was utilized for making levees upon which no rice was actually raised or harvested; the levees consisting of narrow strips of land about six inches high inclosing the land in small irregular areas for the purpose of retaining the water pumped upon the land for irrigation. The levees were essential to raising the rice crop on the irrigated land. Held, that the acreage utilized for levees was "harvested" within the meaning of the lease so as to entitle the owner to rent therefor; nothing in the lease showing a contrary intention. Reinking v. Goodell, 133 N. W. 774, 776.

HAS APPEALED

A notice that a party "has appealed" from a judgment is sufficient notice that he "appeals" from the judgment. The words "intends to appeal," "will appeal," or "give notice of their application to appeal" are equivalent to and have the same effect as the more direct phraseology of the statute—that is, each will effect an appeal. James v. James, 77 Pac. 1082, 35 Wash. 655 (citing Ranahan v. Gibbons, 62 Pac. 773, 23 Wash. 255; In re Murphy's Estate, 66 Pac. 424, 26 Wash. 222; Brown v. Calloway, 75 Pac. 630, 34 Wash. 175).

HAS BEEN

See Have Been.

HAT

Merchandise, consisting of wide braids or plaits of straw, fastened together so as to form rectangular strips measuring about 18 by 36 inches, are not dutiable as hats partly manufactured, under the Tariff Act, but as straw braids or plaits, "suitable for making or ornamenting hats," etc. Samuel Schiff & Co. v. United States, 140 Fed. 63, 64.

HAT CROWNS

Dutiable as articles composed of gelatin spangles, see Articles within Tariff Act.

HATCH

As appliances, see Appliances.

The principal purpose of a "hatch" on a vessel is to permit access to and from the respective decks which it connects. Jones v. Moran Bros. Co., 88 Pac. 626, 627, 45 Wash. 391.

HATCHET

As dangerous weapon, see Dangerous Weapon.

HATRED

See Public Hatred.

A publication charging that plaintiff's daughter attempted to become the master of her household, and that this quality was inherited from plaintiff, who had her husband in abject subjection, was actionable under the statute defining libel as a defamation in writing tending to expose one to public hatred, public hatred being public or general dislike or antipathy, and "hatred" meaning to have little regard for or to despise, and the conduct attributed to plaintiff is such as to bring a woman into general disrepute and ridicule. McDavid v. Houston Chronicle Printing Co. (Tex.) 146 S. W. 252, 259.

HAULING

The process of sticking lumber which consists of placing thin strips of wood between layers of boards or timber to secure circulation of air, and the consequent seasoning of the lumber without warping or decay, is not a necessary incident of hauling lumber but a distinct and independent branch of work, and a contract to "haul" will include loading and unloading, but will not include sticking, because not all lumber is required to be stuck. Under Rev. St. c. 93, § 46, giving a lien for cutting, hauling, rafting, and driving logs or lumber, a lien is not created for sticking lumber. Hutchins v. Blaisdell, 75 Atl. 291, 292, 106 Me. 92.

As carriage of goods in car or vehicle

According to Worcester's Dictionary, the word "haul" means: (1) To drag with force or violence, to pull, to draw, to tug, to drag; (2) to carry or convey in a cart or other vehicle. In section 2 of the Safety Appliance Act of March 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 Stat. 531, which makes it unlawful for any railroad engaged in interstate business "to permit to be hauled or used on its line any car 'used in moving interstate traffic,' not equipped with automatic couplers, the phrase "used in moving interstate traffic" does not mean that a car must be actually loaded and on its journey from one state to another in order to be within the provisions of the act, but only that it has been and is intended to be, so used whenever required, and it is a violation of the act to move such a car not equipped with automatic couplers from one state to another as a part of a train, although it is empty at the time; nor is the mere fact that it is destined to a repair shop a defense. United States v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 154 Fed. 516, 518.

Kind of conveyance

The term "hauled by wagon" does not, in the common acceptance of the term, mean transportation by rail or steamboat, and hence, where by the terms of a contract plaintiff was to receive for hauling stone 75 cents per cubic yard for every mile the stone was "hauled by wagon," transportation of the stone by rail or steamboat was not within the meaning of the contract. Campbell v. Trustees Cincinnati South. Ry. (Ky.) 6 S. W. 337, 338.

HAUTEVILLE STONE

As marble, see Marble.

HAVE

See May Have; To Have and to Hold.

In a vote of a municipality by which those voting decided "to have" a townhall, the term "to have" was a comprehensive term, including, not only the meaning of the phrase "to build," but any other method which might have been proposed for the establishing of a townhouse or townhall and were the proper words to carry into effect their intention "to have" and not build. Anderson v. Parker, 64 Atl. 771, 773, 101 Me. 416.

Ownership implied

The words "have" and "hold," in a will providing that the residue of the estate is devised to the testator's wife to "have, hold, use and enjoy" during her life, except a sum bequeathed to her absolutely, and the balance to her exclusive use for life, manifest an intention that she should receive the property into her custody and retain the same during her life. The language does not indicate an intention that she should encroach at her discretion on the principal. Scott v. Scott, 114 N. W. 881, 882, 137 Iowa, 239, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 716, 126 Am. St. Rep. 277.

Testator bequeathed all his property, real and personal, to his wife, to have, hold, use, and dispose of as she might see fit during her life, giving to her full power and authority to sell, convey, and transfer all or any part of the same, fully and absolutely, so as to pass complete title to purchasers or grantees from her, and that whatever of such property or its proceeds remained in her hands at her death should go to their daughters. Held, that though the words "to have and to hold," if standing alone, in connection with the words "during her life," would be effective to qualify the estate devised so as to vest the widow with a life estate only, yet when coupled with the words "use" and "dispose of" as she might see fit, they indicated that the whole title was intended for the widow's use and disposition, and hence the will conferred on her full authority to sell or mortgage the fee, under B. & C. Comp. §§ 5336, 5573, providing that a devise of real property shall be taken as a devise of all the testator's interest subject to his disposal, unless it clearly appeared from the will that he intended to devise a lesser estate. Bilger v. Nunan, 186 Fed. 665, 668.

According to the Century Dictionary, the word "have," one of the synonyms of "possess," may apply to a temporary or to a permanent possession of a thing. Thus it has been held that to have cigarettes in one's possession for smoking did not constitute owning or keeping cigarettes in violation of law. State v. Lowry, 77 N. E. 728-734, 166 Ind. 372, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 528, 9 Ann. Cas. 350.

Present time imported

As used in the statute providing that, in suits for the infringement of a patent, the federal court shall have jurisdiction in the district of which defendant is an inhabitant, or in any district in which defendant, whether a person, partnership, or corporation, shall have committed acts of infringement and have a regular and established place of business, the words "have a regular and established place of business" relate to the time of bringing the suit, and it is not necessary that defendant should have had a regular and established place of business within the district at the time the act of infringement was committed therein. Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Fox Typewriter Co., 158 Fed. 476, 483.

HAVE BEEN

In a statute which provides that the judge of the district court or judge pro tem., before whom a case "has been" or shall be tried, shall have power to sign and settle a case-made within one year from the making of any final order or the rendering of any final judgment if the same has been legally served upon the adverse party, notwithstanding that the term of office of any such judge or judge pro tem. may have expired after the rendition of any such judgment or the making of such order, provided such case-made has been served within the time previously fixed by such judge or judge pro tem., the words "has been" apply to different classes of cases: (1) To a case to be tried in the future, of which it may be said at a future time that it "has been" tried; (2) to a case which at the time the act took effect had been tried, and of which the trial judge still had jurisdiction to settle; and (3) to a case which, when the act took effect, had been tried, but of which the trial judge had lost all jurisdiction. In view of this meaning of the words, the statute has a prospective and not a retrospective operation and confers no power upon a trial judge, who had, prior to its passage, lost jurisdiction to settle a case-made. Walton v. Woodward, 84 Pac. 1028, 1029, 73 Kan. 238.

The words "have been or hereafter may be," in a statute by which titles to real property, vested in any person or persons who "have been or hereafter may be" in the actual, open, adverse possession, are declared good, unequivocally express an intention that the statute shall have a retrospective operation in the sense of giving effect to adverse possession occurring before it became a law, and prevent the application of the rule of interpretation that statutes are to be given a prospective rather than a retrospective operation. Schauble v. Schultz, 137 Fed. 389, 391, 69 C. C. A. 581.

In a bill for divorce a vinculo, filed June 16, 1906, in the county court of Cleburne county, which alleged that complainant, a resident of Cleburne county, was married May 3, 1906, and that he and his wife lived together until June 4, 1906, most of the time residing in Cleburne county, and that complainant "has been a bona fide resident of Cleburne county for more than three years," and that respondent's particular place of residence was unknown, the verb "has been," descriptive of past action, referred the residence to a period before the bill was filed, but did not make a part of the period so averred the year next before the bill was filed, and "most" signified, not all, but nearly all, of the time between the marriage and the date of the bill. The averment of more than three years' bona fide residence was insufficient as a jurisdictional averment of residence for "one year next preceding the filing of the bill," and hence that a decree entered on the bill was void on collateral attack. Martin v. Martin, 55 South. 632, 634, 173 Ala. 106.

HAVE CHARGE OF

A treasurer of a corporation, merely empowered by the by-laws to "have charge of and be responsible for" the securities of the corporation, has no authority to change the registration and sell certain of its bonds without special authority. Jennie Clarkson Home for Children v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 848, 353, 92 App. Div. 491.

An employé who had nothing to do with the starting of cars on a railway at a mine, and whose only duty was from his position on the ground to sprag the wheels of the cars, did not have charge of cars within Code 1896, § 1749, subd. 5, making an employer liable for injuries to an employé from the negligence of a person having the control of any car on a railway. Woodward Iron Co. v. Curl, 44 South. 969, 972, 153 Ala. 215.

HAVE FOR SALE

Where defendant was a jobber of candy and admitted that he had purchased candy from which samples shown to be adulterated were taken, that he had such candy at his place of business, and did not contend that the candy was bought for any other purpose than for resale in the course of his business, it sufficiently appeared that the candy was kept for sale within New York Sanitary Code, § 68, punishing any person who shall "have for sale" adulterated food in the city of New York. People v. Grenberg, 119 N. Y. Supp. 325, 326, 134 App. Div. 599.

HAVING

The word "having," in Rev. St. 1899, § 3018 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1729), which forbids a dramshop keeper to keep, exhibit, or use, or suffer to be kept, exhibited, or used in his dramshop, a piano, organ, or other musical instrument whatever, "for the purpose of performing upon or having the same performed upon in such dramshop," is not synonymous with "permitting," but imports making an arrangement to have an act done. Hence, while a Regina Concerto, which is a musical machine set playing by dropping a coin in a slot, and thereby releasing the spring setting the machinery in motion, is a musical instrument, and winding it up and dropping a coin in the slot constitutes performing on it, it is not such a musical instrument as the Legislature meant to designate in the statute, which meant the keeping of an instrument with the intention of the dramshop keeper to perform on it himself or engaging some one else to do so. Thiebes-Stierlin Music Co. v. Weiss, 121 S. W. 1099, 1101, 142 Mo. App. 598.

A statute providing that no person "having a * * * wife * * * shall" by his will devise to any charitable institution more than one-half of his estate after the payment of his debts refers to the family status of the testator at the time of his death, and not at the time of the making of his will, and the statute is confined to cases where a husband leaves a wife surviving; the word "having" being construed to mean "leaving." St. John v. Andrews Institute for Girls, 102 N. Y. Supp. 808, 820, 117 App. Div. 698, judgment modified St. John v. Andrews Institute for Girls, 83 N. E. 961, 965, 191 N. Y. 254, 14 Ann. Cas. 708.

HAVING NO HEIR

Where testator, dying in 1883, devises a farm to his son W. and his heirs, and "if W. has no heir" to F. or next nearest kin, the quoted expression is equivalent to "if W. shall die without issue," and, under the rules of construction existing before Act July 9, 1897 (P. L. 213), imports a general and indefinite failure of issue, so that W., the first taker, will take an estate in fee simple. Horton v. McCall, 82 Atl. 472, 473, 233 Pa. 405.

HAVEN

Waters inclosed in whole or in part by a breakwater or other artificial structure to afford a protected anchorage, as well as those so inclosed by natural land, constitute a "haven," within Rev. St. §§ 5346, 5361, 5362, making certain acts offenses against the United States when committed "upon the high seas, or in any arm of the sea, or in any river, haven, creek, basin or bay within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular state." Ex parte O'Hare, 179 Fed. 662, 665, 103 C. C. A. 220.

A "hawker" is one who sells wares by crying them in the streets. Eaton v. People, 104 Pac. 407, 408, 46 Colo. 361.

A "hawker" or "peddler" is an itinerant or traveling trader who carries goods about in order to sell them, and who actually sells them to purchasers by delivering the goods at the time of the sale, in contradistinction to the trader who has goods to sell and sells them in a fixed place of business. State v. Bayer, 97 Pac. 129, 131, 84 Utah, 257, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 297.

"Persons who travel from town to town, from one plantation to another, by land or by water, carrying to sell or exposing to sale any rum, sugar, or other goods, wares, or merchandises, are included in the general terms 'hawkers' and 'peddlers.'" "Hawkers and peddlers are persons who practice carrying merchandise about from place to place for sale, as opposed to traders, who sell at established shops." State v. Ivey, 53 S. E. 428, 430, 73 S. C. 282 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Belcher [S. C.] 1 McMul. 42).

The primary idea of a "hawker and peddler" is that of an itinerant trader, who carries goods about and actually sells them, in contradistinction to a "trader," who sells goods at a fixed place of business. Collender v. Reardon, 123 N. Y. Supp. 587, 589, 138 App. Div. 788 (citing Commonwealth v. Ober, 12 Cush. [66 Mass.] 493; 21 Cyc. p. 367).

The popular meaning of "hawker and peddler," and the meaning indicated by the derivation of the words, involves the idea both of carrying goods for sale and of an itinerant vender. Allport v. Murphy, 116 N. W. 1070, 1072, 153 Mich. 486.

A "hawker" or "peddler," as defined by Laws 1909, p. 293, c. 248, § 1, is one who has no fixed place of trade, but travels from place to place and from house to house, though he sells by sample and does not carry his wares with him, or even if he does not make an immediate sale, but enters into an executory contract for a future sale for future delivery. State ex rel. Mudeking v. Parr, 123 N. W. 408, 410, 109 Minn. 147, 134 Am. St. Rep. 759.

The words "peddler" and "hawker," within Kirby's Dig. § 5438, authorizing cities to license, etc., hawkers and peddlers, are used in the ordinary and common-law acceptance of the term and the sense in which the words are used in Const. art. 16, § 5, authorizing the General Assembly to tax such persons. City of Conway v. Waddell, 118 S. W. 398, 400, 90 Ark. 127.

One having a license under Laws 1896, p. 315, c. 371, for hawking and peddling, and having a permit from the clerk of a city to peddle within the city, has no right to set up boxes as a stand in a public street and maintain the same there for a considerable length of time; the business of "hawking and peddling" involving the practice of carrying merchandise from place to place for sale with brief temporary stops, and not including the right to take for any considerable length of time exclusive possession of any part of a highway. Eggleston v. Scheibel, 112 N. Y. Supp. 114, 115, 60 Misc. Rep. 250.

Local merchant

A grocer who takes orders for goods, fills them at his store, and delivers them by wagon to customers in a neighboring village is not a "hawker of goods by retail, by sample, or by taking orders, or otherwise," so as to be within the provision of an ordinance of the village imposing a license tax on such hawkers. Village of Scribner v. Mohr, 132 N. W. 734, 735, 90 Neb. 21, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1287.

Peddler synonymous

A "hawker" is one who sells wares from place to place, or by crying them in the street, and the word is used as synonymous with "peddler," in statutes regulating the vending of goods. Village of Scribner v. Mohr, 132 N. W. 734, 735, 90 Neb. 21, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1287.

The word "hawker" is synonymous with peddler, defined by Rev. St. 1899, § 8861, to be a person selling patents, patent rights, patent or other medicines, lightning rods, goods, wares, or merchandise, except pianos, organs, sewing machines, books, charts, maps, and stationery, and agricultural and horticultural products, including milk, eggs, butter, and cheese, by going from place to place to sell the same. State v. Looney, 97 S. W. 934, 936, 214 Mo. 216, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412.

Picture agent

An agent of a foreign corporation engaged in making portraits by photographic enlargement, who delivers such portraits to customers who have previously ordered the same made and collects therefor, is not a "hawker," within the meaning of an ordinance imposing a license tax on persons engaged in such occupations merely because, as an incident to delivery, he sells the customer a frame for the portraits if desired. "The leading primary idea of a 'hawker' or 'peddler' is that of an itinerant or traveling trader, who carries goods about in order to sell them, and who actually sells them to purchasers, in contradistinction to a trader who has goods for sale and sells them in a fixed place." Chicago Portrait Co. v. City of Macon, 147 Fed. 967, 969 (quoting and adopting definition in Emert v. Missouri, 156 U. S. 296, 15 Sup. Ct. 367, 39 L. Ed. 430, which quotes with approval the language of Chief Justice Shaw, of Massachusetts, in Commonwealth v. Ober, 12 Cush. 493).

Soliciting of orders for goods

Acts 1904, p. 108, No. 49, relating to license taxes of hawkers and peddlers, does not classify drummers representing foreign mercantile houses soliciting or selling by sample as hawkers or peddlers or impose license taxes on them. Saal v. Fortner, 49 South. 997, 998, 124 La. 112.

A city ordinance made it an offense to pursue the occupation of a hawker or peddler, without a license, and defined a hawker or peddler as including any person who should travel from house to house for the purpose of selling, offering for sale, or soliciting orders for goods, wares, or merchandise by sample. A New Jersey corporation engaged in the sale and distribution of teas and spices maintained a warehouse in another city in Michigan, from which its trade in Michigan was supplied. The corporation furnished defendant with a horse and wagon, and he solicited orders from door to door, and at intervals ordered from the warehouse in Michigan sufficient goods to fill the orders, whereupon he delivered the goods, collected the price, retained a commission, and remitted the balance. Held, that not having had a license, he was properly convicted under the ordinance. City of Alma v. Clow, 109 N. W. 853, 854, 146 Mich. 443.

Defendant was employed by a foreign corporation to take charge of a crew of canvassers to sell perfumery. The goods were shipped to defendant in complainant city, done up in packages containing 10 bottles. These were left by defendant's canvassers with householders or children to be retained or disposed of to others; premiums being given for sales. A collector employed by the corporation, with whom defendant had no connection, followed the canvassers and collected the proceeds of perfumery sold, etc.; the proceeds being forwarded to the corporation, which paid the expenses of defendant and her canvassing crew. Held, that defendant was a "hawker or peddler," within a city ordinance imposing a license tax on such persons selling drugs, toilet articles, perfumes, etc., and defining the term "hawker or peddler" as a person going about from house to house and offering to sell articles of trade or commerce to be delivered then or in the future. City of Muskegon v. Hanes, 112 N. W. 1077, 1078, 149 Mich. 460.

Webster defines a "hawker" as one who hawks; a peddler; to sell goods by outcry in the streets—and a "peddler" as one who sells by traveling; one who peddles; a traveling hawker; one who carries about small commodities on his back or cart or wagon and sells them. A farmer, with no other trade or occupation, is not a "hawker" or "peddler" because he slaughters his cattle, hogs, or sheep on his farm and retails them in the city. Ex parte Snyder, 79 Pac. 819, 822, 10 Idaho, 682, 68 L. R. A. 706.

A farmer who takes his farm products to a city and sells them from place to place is not a hawker or peddler within the understood meaning of such terms. The terms "hawker" and "peddler," as used by the courts of this country, are treated as equivalents in law. "Hawkers" and "peddlers" are persons who carry merchandise from place to place for sale, as opposed to traders, who sell at an established shop. City of St. Louis v. Meyer, 84 S. W. 914, 918, 185 Mo. 583 (citing Hall v. State, 23 South. 121, 39 Fla. 668; Commonwealth v. Ober, 12 Cush. [66 Mass.] 493; Blish. St. Crimes, § 1074; Fisher v. Patterson, 13 Pa. 336; City of South Bend v. Martin, 41 N. E. 315, 142 Ind. 31, 29 L. R. A. 531; Emert v. Missouri, 15 Sup. Ct. 367, 156 U. S. 296, 39 L. Ed. 430).

Lunch wagon proprietor

A person operating a lunch wagon at a fixed place in a street daily, between certain fixed hours, is not a "hawker," within a statute defining "hawkers" and "peddlers" as persons who travel about, either on foot or in wagons, carrying and exposing for sale goods. Commonwealth v. Morrison, 88 N. E. 415, 416, 197 Mass. 199.

Sale of theater ticket

Since a theater ticket is a mere license, evidence of a right to enter a theater and occupy a definite seat during a performance, and not merchandise, the offering of such ticket for sale does not constitute "hawking" and "peddling," so as to require a license for the sale thereof; such terms referring to the manner in which the business is carried on, and not to the business itself. People v. Marks, 120 N. Y. Supp. 1106, 1109, 64 Misc. Rep. 679.

"Haybote" is the right to a sufficient supply of wood for repairing hedges and fences. Anderson v. Cowan, 101 N. W. 92, 93, 125 Iowa, 259, 68 L. R. A. 641, 106 Am St. Rep. 306.

HAZARD

See Game of Hazard or Skill; Moral Hazard; Railroad Hazard.

Increased hazard, see Increased.

To engage in a wager of any kind is a "hazard," within Ky. St. 1908, § 1977, punishing one engaged "in any hazard or game," on which money is bet, won, or lost. One engaging in a shooting match on which there was money bet, won, and lost does not violate the statute, but engaging in the betting on the match constitutes the offense. Commonwealth v. Davis (Ky.) 102 S. W. 327 (quoting and adopting the definition in Cheek v. Commonwealth, 37 S. W. 152, 100 Ky. 21).

The word "hazard," as used in a statute forbidding any person to maintain any lottery, scheme, or device for the "hazarding" of money or valuable thing, means chance, and the chance referred to is that chance which is employed in connection with lottery schemes, where the attempt is to attain certain ends, not by skill or any known or fixed rules, but by the happening of a subsequent event, incapable of ascertainment or accomplishment by means of human foresight or ingenuity. If the result in a given transaction could be accomplished or foretold by the exercise of skill or foresight, its ascertainment would not be attributed to chance, but to the exercise of skill or foresight, and consequently to design. Chance and design are exactly opposite, and the presence of either will exclude the other. Where design enters into a transaction, it immediately partakes of the nature of contract, and will be governed by other princples. In the gaming sense there is no chance whatever where either party has means of knowing the result at the inception of the wager. There may be fraud, but not chance. The International Dictionary gives the general definition of chance as "the unknown or undefined cause of events that to us are uncertain or not subject to calculation; luck; fortune." 6 Cyc. p. 890, defines chance thus: "Possibility; hazard; risk; or the result or issue of uncertain and unknown conditions or forces neither understandingly brought about by one's act nor pre-estimated by one's understanding." Russell v. Equitable Loan & Security Co., 58 S. E. 881, 885, 129 Ga. 154, 12 Ann. Cas. 129.

As risk

The term "hazard," as used in a fire policy, means the incurring of the possibility of loss or harm for the possibility of a benefit; the insurer undertaking to indemnify the insured against the possibility of a loss by fire for an agreed consideration paid in advance; the hazard consisting of the possibility of a loss by fire indicated by the sum of all dangers resulting from the recognized exposure, including losses from incendiary fires communicated from other premises. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Dorroh (Tex.) 133 S. W. 465, 468.

"Hazard of litigation," to which a purchaser must not be subjected, refers to a hazard which is to be determined by the chance of successful attack, as viewed by the court in the suit for specific proceedings. Barger v. Gery, 53 Atl. 483, 485, 64 N. J. Eq. 263.

HAZARDOUS

HAZARDOUS NEGLIGENCE

Where one poured kerosene oil from a can on wood and kindling in a stove in which she knew there were live coals, and there was an explosion of the can, resulting in her being seriously burned, she was charged, as a matter of law, of being guilty of "hazardous negligence" precluding a recovery for the injury from the manufacturer of the oil on the ground that it was below the legal standard of safety. Riggs v. Standard Oil Co., 130 Fed. 189, 204.

HE

That a magistrate, in an order fixing bail, in two instances used the pronoun "he" for the pronoun "she" does not affect the magistrate's jurisdiction previously exercised in deciding that the evidence was sufficient to satisfy him that a crime had been committed and that there was sufficient cause to believe that defendants had committed it, and to issue a commitment thereon. People ex rel. Wilson v. Warden of City Prison, 107 N. Y. Supp. 1103, 1104, 123 App. Div. 288.

An instruction that a witness may be impeached by showing "he" or "she" has made different statements out of court, and that such impeaching evidence may be considered in determining the weight of the testimony of such witness, and "his" credibility, is not erroneous because of the use of the word "he," as, under the statute, terms denoting the male gender include also the female. Marek v. State, 94 S. W. 469, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 428.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3499, provides that any minor over 19 years of age may proceed before the district court of the county of his residence to have his disabilities as a minor removed. Article 3500 provides that if it shall appear that the grounds are sufficient, and that it is advisable for the minor to have his disabilities removed, a decree therefor may be entered. Article 3501 provides that after the removal of disabilities the minor shall be deemed of full age, except that he cannot vote, until he reaches the full age. Held, in view of article 3268, cls. 3, 6, providing that in construing civil statutes the masculine gender shall include the feminine and neuter, and that in all interpretations the court shall look for the intention of the Legislature, keeping in view the old law, the evil and the remedy, and of Final Title, § 3, providing that the rule that the revised statutes, though in derogation of the common law, shall be liberally construed, the use of the words "he" and "his" were not intended to exclude the female minor, and she can have her disabilities removed thereunder. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Wheeler, 116 S. W. 83, 86, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 603.

See Side Head.

An allegation that plaintiff was seriously and permanently injured through his "head," skull, eyes, and bruises to his right leg and body, does not include an injury to the organs of hearing. Keefe v. Lee, 90 N. E. 344, 346, 197 N. Y. 68, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837.

HEAD OF BUREAU

The person in charge of the branch office of the bureau for the collection of revenue from the sale and use of water in the borough of Brooklyn was not the "head of a bureau," within New York Charter, § 1543, providing that the heads of departments shall have power to remove certain officers, but that no head of a bureau shall be removed until he has been allowed an opportunity of making an explanation. People v. Oakley, 87 N. Y. Supp. 856, 859, 93 App. Div. 535.

HEAD OF COVE

The words "head of the cove," in their natural significance, mean that place farthest up the cove where the water stands at high water, and not down the cove at low-water mark at a place near the mouth of the cove. Whitmore v. Brown, 61 Atl. 985, 987, 100 Me. 410.

HEAD OF DEPARTMENT

See Head of Principle Department.

Civil Service Law (P. L. 1908, p. 235), which was adopted by the voters of Jersey City, specifies in section 11 that "unclassified service," which shall include "all heads of departments" elected by the governmental body of the city, are not subject to the provisions of the act. Jersey City Charter (P. L. 1871, p. 1094), in section 29, specifies the duties of the city clerk to include the custody of city books, etc., the countersigning of licenses, and all evidences of city indebtedness, the custody of the seal, acting as clerk to the board of aldermen and keeping the record of all ordinances, etc., and the issuance of all licenses and collection of fees therefor, etc. P. L. 1907, p. 34, authorizes the clerk, with the consent of the board of aldermen or common council, to appoint such clerks and assistants as the public business may require, and to fix the salaries of such assistants. P. L. 1895, p. 330, authorizes him to designate from the clerks in his office a clerk to act as city clerk during his absence or disability. Held, that such clerk is the head of a department of a municipality, and is therefore within the "unclassified service," and not entitled to hold office until removal or discharge within the terms of the act. Fagen v. Morris, 84 Atl. 1067, 1068, 83 N. J. Law, 8.

The words "head of a department" in the civil service act of 1908 (P. L. 1908, p. 235), providing that the head of a department, office, or institution in which a position classified under the act is to be filled shall notify the commission which shall certify the names of candidates, etc., refer to an officer having a clerical or other force under him appointed by him, and do not include the board of chosen freeholders created by P. L. 1900, p. 168, relating to the government of counties and creating a board of chosen freeholders, since the board is the county legislature and the classified service does not include officials with a fixed statutory term who are appointed by the board. McKenzie v. Elliott, 72 Atl. 47, 49, 77 N. J. Law, 43.

HEAD OF A FAMILY

As to what constitutes family in the phrase "head of a family," see Family.

One having a wife and three minor children is the "head of a family," within the exemption statutes. Garner v. Freeman, 42 South. 767, 769, 118 La. 184, 118 Am. St. Rep. 861.

The "head of the family" is generally the husband and father. Baum v. Turner (Ky.) 76 S. W. 129, 130. See, also, Blount v. Medbery, 94 N. W. 428, 429, 16 S. D. 562 (citing Comp. Laws 1887, § 2587).

According to Cobbeys Ann. St. 1903, § 6214, the phrase "head of a family" includes every person who is residing on the premises with him or her and under his or her care and maintenance, his or her minor child, or the minor child of his or her deceased wife or husband. Palmer v. Sawyer, 103 N. W. 1068, 1069, 74 Neb. 108, 12 Ann. Cas. 715.

Husband during absence or separation of wife

A divorced husband who by the decree has been deprived of the custody of his minor child, and is required to pay to the mother a stated sum for its support, which allowance is made a lien on the former homestead, is not the head of a family entitled to a homestead exemption, under the statute which exempts the homestead of the head of a family from forced sale, and defines the phrase "head of a family" to mean the husband or wife, when the claimant is a married person, or any person who has been residing on the premises with him, his child, a minor brother or sister, etc. Holcomb v. Holcomb, 120 N. W. 547, 548, 18 N. D. 561, 21 Ann. Cas. 1145.

Where a bankrupt and his wife had separated by mutual consent a short time before the bankruptcy, and she had received approximately half of the property, and had removed with an adopted child to another town, where she remained, leaving him with no property, except a small stock of merchandise, he ceased on such separation to be the "head of a family," within the meaning of the homestead provision of the Constitution of South Carolina, and is not entitled thereunder to the allowance of a homestead exemption out of the remaining property. In re Finklea, 153 Fed. 492, 493 (citing Fant v. Gist, 15 S. E. 721, 36 S. C. 576; Cooper v. Cooper, 24 Ohio St. 488).

Single person supporting relatives

Where decedent, after retiring from business, went to reside with his sisters, and furnished a part of the coal and provisions, he was under no obligation to support any of the members of the household, including complainant, a ward of one of his deceased sisters, and was not the head of the family so as to render his estate responsible for services rendered therein by the ward. Pearre v. Smith, 73 Atl. 141, 143, 110 Md. 531.

An unmarried woman occupying land as her homestead and supporting relatives, whom she is under moral obligations to care for, is the "head of a family," within the meaning of the exemption law. American Nat. Bank v. Cruger, 71 S. W. 784, 783, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 17.

A head of a family is one who contracts, supervises, and manages the affairs about the house, not necessarily a father or a husband. A person furnishing a home for himself, his mother, two minor brothers, and an invalid sister, and furnishing the groceries and money for their support, is the "head of a family," within the statute fixing the amount of wages which shall be exempt. Jarboe v. Jarboe, 79 S. W. 1162, 1163, 106 Mo. App. 459 (quoting Ridenour-Baker Grocery Co. v. Monroe, 43 S. W. 633, 142 Mo. 165).

Where defendant, a widow, had cared for her granddaughter for nearly 12 years since the child's birth at her home, and the child's parents were unable to care for her, and had surrendered the child to defendant, for whom she had a peculiar love, she was under a moral obligation to continue to support the child, and hence while so doing and living with the child on the premises in question was the "head of a family," and entitled to hold the premises exempt as a residence homestead. First Nat. Bank v. Sokolaki (Tex.) 150 S. W. 312, 314.

An unmarried man is the "head of a family" within the exemption laws, if he contributes in part to the support of those who have a moral, though not a legal, claim on him, or if he controls, supervises, and manages the affairs of the household. Forbes v. Groves, 115 S. W. 451, 452, 134 Mo. App. 729.

An unmarried man, living with his father and mother, his father owning a part of the household goods, and he a part, though supplying a part or all of the necessities, was not the "head of a family," within the homestead act. Fehd v. City of Oskaloosa, 117 N. W. 989, 139 Iowa, 621.

Under Const. S. C. art. 8, § 28, providing there shall be exempt "to every head of a family residing in this state, whether entitled to an exemption in lands or not, personal property to the value of $500," as construed by the state Supreme Court, the head of a family is one who controls, supervises, and manages a house and has living with him, and is supporting some person whom it is either his moral or legal duty to support; and a bankrupt who was a single man, living alone, and whose parents were living, is not the head of a family and entitled to the exemption because he was at the time of his bankruptcy paying the board and expenses of a sister at a school. In re McGowan, 170 Fed. 493, 494.

Widow

After the death of the husband, the mother is the head of the family, and, if the husband had a homestead, it passes to his wife. Harrelson v. Webb, 50 South. 833, 834, 124 La. 1007, 134 Am. St. Rep. 529.

Widow without children

Where all the children of a family have arrived at majority on the dissolution of the family by the permanent removal of its members and the death of the father, leaving the mother as the sole remaining member of the former family, such mother ceases to be the head of the family, within Const. 1885, art. 10, § 1, and she may, unless otherwise incapacitated, devise the same by her will. In re Advisory Opinion to the Governor, 55 South. 865, 867, 62 Fla. 7.

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 6704, which provides that "the homestead of every housekeeper or head of a family consisting of a dwelling house * * * which is or shall be used by such housekeeper or head of a family as such homestead shall * * * be exempt from attachment and execution," the primary object is the protection of the family as distinguished from the individual; and the term "family" implies dependence, and any number of persons more than one living together under the same roof with some one of their number as head, who controls the affairs of the household, and upon whom the others, or some of them, are by reason of legal or moral obligation dependent, constitute a family, and the person in control the "head of a family," and hence a widow who purchased land and resided thereon alone with no one depending upon her was not the head of a family within the statute. Elliott v. Thomas, 143 S. W. 563, 564, 161 Mo. App. 441.

Comp. St. 1909, c. 36, § 2, provides that if a claimant is not married, but is the "head of a family," within section 15, a homestead may be selected from any of his or her property. Section 15 provides that the phrase "head of the family," as used in the chapter, includes the husband when the claimant is a married woman, or every person who has resided on the premises with her and under her care and maintenance. A house and part of certain lots in an incorporated city were purchased by a widow whose only child was an adult married son, living in another state. She lived in the house and rented rooms, but had no one under her care and maintenance. Held, that she was not the "head of a family" so that her property would be exempt as a homestead. Brusha v. Phipps, 126 N. W. 856, 857, 86 Neb. 822.

Widower with adopted child

Where a granddaughter was living with her grandfather at his home at the time of his death, and he had supported and maintained her from her birth until his death, a period of about ten years, he was at the time of his death the "head of a family" residing in the state, and entitled to an exemption of the lots comprising his homestead from the payment of his debts. Adams v. Clark, 37 South. 734, 736, 48 Fla. 205.

Wife

Upon the insanity of a husband and his confinement in an asylum, his wife becomes the "head of the family," and may change her place of residence to another state, regardless of the fact that her husband remains in confinement in the state of her former residence. McKnight v. Dudley, 148 Fed. 204, 206, 78 C. C. A. 162 (citing Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 571, 583, 26 Sup. Ct. 525, 50 L. Ed. 867, 5 Ann. Cas. 1).

Under Rev. St. 1898, § 1154, defining the phrase "head of a family," as used in the homestead statute, to include the husband or wife when the claimant is a married person, and prescribing the circumstances under which others are deemed heads of families, when considered in connection with section 1149, providing that a failure to make the declaration of a homestead shall not impair the homestead right, and other sections declaring that, if a homestead claimant is married, the homestead may be selected from the separate property of the husband, or with the consent of the wife, from her separate property, and that it shall be the privilege of either husband or wife to claim a homestead, the husband is no more designated the head of a family than is the wife, and an answer by a wife, in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien against her property, which alleges that she is the head of a family, consisting of herself and husband and children, that the property is her homestead for herself and family, sufficiently pleads her homestead right as against a demurrer not challenging the answer for want of facts, but which proceeds on the assumption that no exemption of a homestead can be asserted against a mechanic's lien. Volker-Scowcroft Lumber Co. v. Vance, 88 Pac. 896, 897, 32 Utah, 74, 125 Am. St. Rep. 828.

A husband residing in South Dakota having mortgaged certain personalty to an Iowa bank, the property was voluntarily sold with the knowledge and consent of both husband and wife, and the proceeds, after paying the bank's claim, were deposited therein. The husband became insane, and was placed in an asylum in South Dakota, and there was no proof that he had ever been a resident of Iowa. The balance of the proceeds having been garnished in an action in Iowa against husband and wife, she moved to quash the garnishment before trial on the ground that the property was exempt, and that she had moved to and was a resident of Iowa. Held, that since the husband's insanity did not make the wife the head of the family or transfer title to the property to her, and the property never having been exempt to the husband because of his nonresidence, the wife could not successfully claim that it was exempt to her, and that the proceeds were not subject to garnishment. Union County Inv. Co. Messix, 132 N. W. 823, 826, 152 Iowa, 412.

The "head of a family" is one who controls, supervises, and manages the affairs about the house, but the husband is not always the head. So a liberal construction of our statutes for the purpose of preserving the home will consider the wife, who is supporting herself and her minor children, as the head of the family, when for any reason the husband is entirely incapacitated to take that position. Weatherington v. Smith, 112 N. W. 566, 568, 77 Neb. 369.

While a husband and wife are living together, the husband is the head of the family, and the house occupied by them may properly be denominated as his house, though the wife pays the rent and supports the husband. Patterson v. State, 69 S. E. 591, 8 Ga. App. 454.

Under article 244 of the Constitution of 1898, a right of exemption is granted to the extent and upon the things therein specified, not only to every "head of a family," but to every person having a person or persons dependent upon "him" or "her" for support. While it is true that the husband, so long as the marriage continues, is in one sense "the head of the family," it does not follow that the burden and duty of supporting the family does not under some circumstances rest upon the wife (Civ. Code, art. 2435), and that condition of things is shown to exist in this case. That fact with its legal consequences is not affected because the husband may give his time and attention to the conducting of the wife's business. The utmost that can be claimed is that he thereby contributes something towards his own support. Ginsberg v. Groner, 41 South. 569, 571, 117 La. 268.

In Indian treaties

The Indian treaty of 1855, providing for the setting apart of designated tracts of the Umatilla Indian reservation to families of Indians for permanent homes, and the allotment act of 1885, authorized an allotment to each head of a family, each single person over 18 years of age, each orphan child under that age, and each child under 18 not otherwise provided for. Held, that an Indian woman who was a member of one of the confederated tribes being married to a white person, became herself the head of a family, and her children of the half-blood were entitled to allotments. Smith v. Bonifer, 154 Fed. 883, 889 (citing Hy-yu-tse-mikin v. Smith, 194 U. S. 401, 24 Sup. Ct. 676, 48 L. Ed. 1039).

HEAD OF PRINCIPAL DEPARTMENT

Under civil service law (Laws 1895, c. 313), the tax commissioner in the city of Milwaukee, is the "head of a principal department," having power to appoint the ward assessors as his "subordinates" and the power to remove them, anything in the city charter, existing at the date of the enactment, to the contrary notwithstanding. State ex rel. Hayden v. Arnold, 138 N. W. 78, 83, 151 Wis. 19.

HEAD OF WATER

See Eight-Foot Head of Water.

"Head of water" is the quantity entering the intake of any canal or ditch. Hough v. Porter, 98 Pac. 1083, 1102, 51 Or. 318.

A "head of water" is that quantity which will flow each second through an opening one foot square. Watkins Land Co. v. Clements, 86 S. W. 733, 734, 98 Tex. 578, 70 L. R. A. 964, 107 Am. St. Rep. 653.

In view of the amendment of 1905 (Laws 1905, c. 339), a "sufficient" supply of water to run the mills, etc., did not mean the natural flow of the river, but only "sufficient water" for that purpose when the rights of others having property which might be affected by the use of the water were considered; the word "head" being used in the original act in the sense of "reserve," nor was it required that sufficient water be vented at any time without regard to the dam company's duty to the public of driving logs through the dam. Milo Electric Light & Power Co. v. Sebec Dam Co., 84 Atl. 941, 943, 109 Me. 427.

HEAD TO HEAD GAME

A game of dice, in which one person sits behind the table and takes all the bets of the persons playing on the outside, the dice being thrown by the parties alternately, is not an ordinary game of "craps," or what is termed as "head to head game," but is a "banking game," punishable under Pen. Code 1895, art. 388, providing that any person who shall bet at any gaming table or bank shall be punished. Faucett v. State, 79 S. W. 548, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 113.

HEADLINE

The "headline" of a newspaper or other publication is a summary of index of that which follows. An "article" is defined to be "a literary composition on a specific topic, forming an independent portion of a book or literary publication, especially of a newspaper, magazine, review, or other periodical." In a certain sense, the "headline" is a part of the "article" or chapter which follows, but, strictly speaking, it is separate, and the term conveys a different meaning than that of the "article" or chapter itself. Proof of a "headline" attached to a newspaper article is insufficient to sustain an allegation in an indictment charging that the "article" itself was libelous. Miller v. State, 99 S. W. 533, 81 Ark. 359 (quoting from Webst. Dict. and Cent. Dict.).

HEALTHY

The words "sound," "active," and "healthy," as used in a petition, in an action for personal injuries, alleging that, before being injured, plaintiff was a sound, healthy, and active woman, are comparative terms, and she was entitled to recover damages for such injury as aggravated a previously diseased physical condition. Green v. Houston Electric Co., 89 S. W. 442, 445, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 260.

HEAR

See, also, Audit.

"To 'hear' implies that some one is before the court to speak." Hoffman v. Newell, 20 N. Y. Supp. 432, 433 (quoting and adopting definition in Brown, Jur. § 41).

HEAR AND DETERMINE

In Portland Reincorporation Act (Sp. Laws 1903, p. 161) § 400, which prescribes the manner of making reassessment for an improvement when the original assessment is set aside, or the council is in doubt as to its validity, and directs that notice shall be given to owners of property who within 10 days may file objections, and at the time appointed the council shall "hear and determine" the same, the words "hear and determine" import a judicial investigation and settlement of an issue of fact implying weighing of testimony offered, and hence the statute is not complied with by referring objections to a reassessment to the committee on streets, after being read and adoption of their report that objections be placed on file and the reassessment affirmed. Applegate v. City of Portland, 99 Pac. 890, 891, 53 Or. 552 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3235).

The power of the General Assembly under Const. 1875, art. 6, § 12, and section 3 of the amendment to that article of 1884 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 243) to provide for the "hearing and determination" of causes by the courts to which they have been transferred, is not a power to confer jurisdiction upon a court which otherwise had no jurisdiction, but only authorizes transfers to a court of cases of which, by constitutional alterations in the law, the court had already been vested with jurisdiction. State ex rel. Dunham v. Nixon, 133 S. W. 336, 339, 282 Mo. 96.

HEARD

HEARING

See Final Hearing; On Hearing in Equity; Set for Hearing.

Any hearing, see Any.

"A 'hearing' includes the trial—a hearing on a motion or in a proceeding of any other character." State ex rel. Nissler v. Donlan, 80 Pac. 244, 247, 82 Mont. 256.

"Hearing" is technically applicable to chancery proceedings, and is used in contradistinction to "trial," which is properly applicable to law actions; but in modern usage the two words sometimes overlap in meaning. "Final hearing" is sometimes used to describe that stage of proceedings relating to the determination of a suit upon its merits, as distinguished from those of preliminary questions. However, "hearing" is frequently used in a broader and more popular significance to describe whatever takes place before magistrates clothed with judicial functions and sitting without jury at any stage of the proceedings subsequent to its inception, and may include proceedings before an auditor. An auditor is improperly appointed in a proceeding under a statute requiring that "all hearings shall be in open court." McArthur Bros. Co. v. Commonwealth, 83 N. E. 334, 335, 197 Mass. 137.

The essence of a "hearing," such as on a taxpayer's objections to a street improvement assessment, is the right, not merely the privilege to support one's contention or position by argument, however brief, and if need be by proof, however formal, before a tribunal authorized to act and willing and ready to do so. City and County of Denver v. State Inv. Co., 112 Pac. 789, 792, 49 Colo. 244, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 395.

Under Act May 18, 1901 (P. L. 191), authorizing the court of common pleas, on hearing, to issue mandamus to the commissioners of counties to proceed under the provisions of the act for the erection of a bridge, the term "hearing" means the session of any court, or of an adjunct thereof, for considering the proofs in a case, or the receiving of facts and arguments thereon for the sake of deciding correctly. Lewisburg Bridge Co. v. Union County, 81 Atl. 324, 329, 232 Pa. 255 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3237).

In Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, § 7, 26 Stat. 828, creating the Circuit Courts of Appeals, as amended by Act Feb. 18, 1895, c. 96, 28 Stat. 666, and Act June 6, 1900, c. 806, 31 Stat. 660, relating to appeals from Circuit and District Courts, and providing that "where upon a hearing in equity * * * junction shall be granted or continued or a receiver appointed, by an interlocutory order or decree * * * an appeal may be taken from such interlocutory order or decree," the phrase "hearing in equity" does not mean the trial of an equity cause on the merits; the right of appeal being given from an "interlocutory" order or decree, which means one entered pending the cause and before final hearing on the merits, and disposing of some intervening matter relating to the cause. Taylor v. Breese, 163 Fed. 678, 683, 90 C. C. A. 558.

In Act Cong. April 14, 1906, c. 1627, § 7, 34 Stat. 116, providing that where, on a "hearing in equity" in a District or Circuit Court or by a judge thereof in vacation, an injunction shall be granted or continued, or a receiver appointed by an interlocutory order or decree, an appeal may be taken within 30 days from the entry of the order, the phrase "hearing in equity" technically means the trial of the case, including the introduction of evidence, the argument of solicitors, and the decree of the chancellor, resulting in a final decree; but, as applied to proceedings resulting in an interlocutory order, within section 7, it means the hearing of the motion, the introduction of evidence thereon by affidavit or otherwise, the argument of solicitors, and the order of the chancellor. Root v. Mills, 168 Fed. 688, 689, 94 C. C. A. 174. So, where the court refused to read proper affidavits on an order to show cause why an injunction should not issue, and orders an injunction, there is a "hearing in equity," within this act, and the order is appealable. Shubert v. Woodward, 167 Fed. 47, 52, 92 C. C. A. 509. But where defendant had instituted suit at law against complainant for breach of contract, and complainant filed a bill on the equity side of the court for cancellation of the contract and to enjoin proceedings at law, and pending hearings on demurrer to the bill and other proceedings in the equity suit, the proceedings in the action at law were stayed by an agreement of counsel in open court, but counsel for defendant, on the overruling of a demurrer to complainant's bill, stated that defendant did not wish to be further bound by such agreement, and the court entered an order before trial restraining defendant from proceeding in the action at law until further order of the court, it was held that such restraining order was not an injunction granted or continued on a "hearing in equity," and was not, therefore, appealable under this act. Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 192 Fed. 517, 519, 113 C. C. A. 73. So, also, where a bill for the removal of trustees under a will and for the appointment of a receiver was filed October 25, 1907, and on the same day on an ex parte hearing a receiver was appointed. On November 2d defendants moved to modify such order of appointment to permit the trustees to collect certain income, which motion on November 9th was argued and denied. On December 5th defendants moved to discharge the receiver and dissolve an injunction incidental to the receivership, which was denied on February 21st, whereupon on March 2d defendants applied for permission to appeal. Held, that defendants, by their motion of November 2d to modify the order appointing the receiver, acquiesced therein, such application constituted a "hearing," within section 7, and hence defendant's application for appeal was too late. Root v. Mills, 168 Fed. 688, 689, 94 C. C. A. 174.

The "hearing" contemplated by Acts 1891-92, c. 510, providing that if, on a hearing, the county judge has reasonable cause to suspect that one has sold liquor without a license, the latter shall be required to enter into a bond for an observance of the revenue laws, means a sufficient inquiry to show probable cause to suspect, and the finding of an indictment, the appearance of accused to answer the same, and the giving of a bond required of him measure up to a compliance with the statute. Anderson v. Commonwealth, 54 S. E. 805, 105 Va. 533.

Testimony required

The word "hearing," in a by-law of a beneficial association, which provides for a hearing before the supreme board of trustees on death claims, the claimant to appear, give evidence to establish his claim, etc., means a right to present testimony and the right to hear and meet testimony presented against claimant, and, where a claim is rejected on testimony obtained when claimant was not present and of which he knew nothing, there was no hearing, though the claimant was permitted to introduce testimony tending to support the claim, and, where the association rejected a claimant's claim because of testimony admitted against objection and which the law positively prohibited, there was a denial of a hearing. Dick v. Supreme Body of International Congress, 101 N. W. 564, 566, 138 Mich. 372.

Where the petition was presented to and read by the board of supervisors, and petitioners' witnesses were present and a statement made as to what would be proved by them, it was a sufficient hearing of the parties within Code 1906, § 4400, providing that in a proceeding to lay out a street the court shall hear the parties, although the board refused to let the witnesses testify. Strahan v. Board of Sup'rs of Attala County, 44 South. 857, 91 Miss. 529.

Witness

The words "hearing" and "proceeding," as used in Acts 1897, p. 137, c. 14, § 6, providing that a person offending against sections 1 and 2, which define various offenses which are made felonies by section 7, is a competent witness against another person so offending, and may be compelled to testify upon "any trial, hearing, proceeding, or investigation" in the same manner as any other person, are terms that pertain to proceedings of a criminal nature and mark different steps in a criminal prosecution. Thus "proceeding" relates to proceedings before a grand jury when the state is proceeding by indictment or presentment; the word "hearing" may relate to the trial of the cause upon final hearing of a preliminary hearing before the committing magistrate; but in all cases the state contemplates the same sort of criminal proceeding against a person offending. Hence an offender can be compelled to testify only in some criminal trial, hearing, proceeding, or investigation of some offense under the act, and cannot be compelled to testify or be punished for contempt for failure to testify in a civil proceeding. Lindsay v. Allen, 82 S. W. 648, 649, 118 Tenn. 517.

Rev. Codes, § 1953, providing that on appeal from the county commissioners to the district court the matter must be heard anew, requires the district court to try the case as though originally brought therein, and it must be proved in the same way as before the commissioners, and the affirmative and burden of proof is with the same party. Gardner v. Blaine County, 99 Pac. 826, 827, 15 Idaho, 698.

HEARING DE NOVO

A statute providing that a proceeding shall be "heard de novo" implies that the proceeding has been already once heard before being called for hearing under the statute. Collier v. Carter, 60 Atl. 104, 105, 100 Md. 381.

HEARSAY EVIDENCE

"Evidence, oral or written, is called 'hearsay' when its probative force depends in whole or in part upon the competency and credibility of some person other than the witness by whom it is sought to produce it." King v. Bynum, 49 S. E. 955, 956, 137 N. C. 491 (citing Coleman v. Southwick [N. Y.] 9 Johns. 45, 6 Am. Dec. 253; State v. Haynes, 71 N. C. 79). See, also, Davis v. State, 61 S. E. 404, 405, 4 Ga. App. 318.

"Hearsay evidence" is that which is learned from some one else, whether by word of mouth or otherwise. In other words, it is anything which does not derive its value solely from the credit given to the witness himself, but which rests also in part on the veracity and competence of some other person. Thus, in a prosecution for receiving stolen property, evidence that B. told witness that he (B.) and other boys had stolen the property and had sold it to defendants, and that defendants had requested them to steal it and other property and bring it to them and had furnished means for stealing the property, was inadmissible as hearsay. State v. Levy, 68 S. W. 562, 563, 168 Mo. 521 (quoting and adopting definition in 3 Rice, Ev. 184). It is a mere recital by a third party. Thus, in an action by a bank to recover the proceeds of drafts purporting to have been drawn by it upon another bank, the monthly statement rendered by the drawee to plaintiff showing the amount of the drafts and the date of their payment was objectionable as hearsay. Clifford Banking Co. v. Donovan Commission Co., 94 S. W. 527, 532, 195 Mo. 262. And so, where a railway employé was injured while assisting colaborers to put a hand car on the track, remarks made just after the accident, by the foreman who did not see it, were "hearsay." St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Brisco, 100 S. W. 989, 990, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 321. But where a witness, while in the discharge of his duties as night foreman in a lumber yard, passed daily over a piece of a railroad track in the yard, his testimony that he had never heard of a broken main alleged to have caused the soft condition of the track at the place of an accident was not objectionable as "hearsay." Kirby Lumber Co. v. Chambers, 95 S. W. 607, 611, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 632. So, in an action against a carrier for conversion of corn alleged to be No. 2, evidence that witness sold the balance of the same lot to the dealers at the point of shipment of the corn in question, and that no complaint was ever made by any of the purchasers thereof, was not objectionable as "hearsay." St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Arkansas & Texas Grain Co., 95 S. W. 656, 660, 42 Tex. 125. And where it was shown that defendant had been riding a horse, had hitched it at a certain tree, and had attempted to get on the horse when pursued, evidence of a witness that on the evening after the killing he saw some horse tracks where a horse had been tied at the tree was not inadmissible as "hearsay." Doss v. State, 95 S. W. 1040, 1041, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 48.

Hearsay evidence denotes that kind of evidence which does not derive its value solely from the credit to be given the witness testifying, but rests in part on the veracity and competency of some other person from whom the witness may have received his information, and is inadmissible because the person on whose credibility the evidence rests did not make the statement under oath, because there is no opportunity to cross-examine him, and because it affords too great a latitude for deception or misapprehension. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Murphy, 150 S. W. 79, 82, 150 Ky. 176.

Under Rev. Codes, § 7862, providing that a witness can testify to those facts only which he knows of his own knowledge, etc., a witness may not give hearsay evidence which signifies evidence not founded on the personal knowledge of the witness; "hearsay" denoting the kind of evidence not deriving its value solely from the credit to be given a witness, but resting also in part on the veracity of others. State v. Crean, 114 Pac. 603, 607, 48 Mont. 47, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 424.

A sort of distinction is allowed between "hearsay" and "reputation." Yet "reputation" is nothing more than hearsay derived from those who had the means of knowing the fact, and may exist when those best acquainted with the fact are dead. Still it is a general rule that reputation is evidence as to general character as to the fact of legitimacy, relationship, pedigree, rights of common, rights of way, and all rights depending upon custom or prescription. Scott v. Blood, 16 Me. 192, 196.

HEAT—HEATING

See Properly Heat.

The words "heat" and "heating," as used in a ship's bill of lading in stating the causes of damage to cargo for which she will not be liable, are synonymous. The Good Hope, 197 Fed. 149, 150, 116 C. C. A. 573.

HEAT OF PASSION

See Sudden Heat and Passion.

"Heat of passion," in the law of homicide, means something more than mere anger or irritation. It means that at the time of the act the reason is disturbed or obscured by passion to an extent which might render ordinary men, of fair average disposition, liable to act rashly, or without due deliberation or reflection, and from passion rather than judgment. Ryan v. State, 92 N. W. 271, 275, 115 Wis. 488.

To constitute "heat of passion" as reducing murder to a lesser crime, the state of mind must be such that the suddenly, excited passion suspends the exercise of judgment and dominates volition so as to exclude premeditation and a previously formed design, though of short duration, but it is not essential that the transport of passion shall be so overbearing as to destroy volition or the reasoning faculty. Olds v. State, 33 South. 296, 299, 44 Fla. 452.

"Heat of passion" is not used in its technical sense in reference to murder in the second degree, where the intent to kill is in a heat of passion, but as a condition of the mind contradistinguished from a cool state of the blood. State v. Robertson, 77 S. W. 528, 539, 178 Mo. 496.

An instruction on the theory that the homicide, though intentional, was in the heat of blood or violent passion, and on sufficient provocation, reducing the offense from murder to manslaughter, was not bad because omitting the words "without malice," as "heat of passion" necessarily includes "without previous malice." State v. Crawford, 66 S. E. 110, 115, 66 W. Va. 114.

The words "when perpetrated without a design to effect death and in a 'heat of passion,'" in the statutory definition of manslaughter in the first degree, are employed by the Legislature merely to express the distinction between this degree of manslaughter and the more serious crime of murder. The phrases "in the heat of passion" and "without a design to effect death" should be considered as one clause descriptive of that "wickedness of disposition and hardness of heart" constituting the "malice aforethought" which has always been regarded as an essential element in murder. State v. Edmunds, 104 N. W. 1115-1117, 20 S. D. 135.

To reduce homicide from the degree of murder to that of manslaughter it must have been committed upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion, and, where a person who is sufficiently wronged by another to arouse in him that heat of passion which, if life were taken immediately, would make the crime manslaughter, after sufficient cooling time has intervened, kills deceased, the homicide will be deemed the result of deliberation; and where defendant was informed by his wife that she had committed adultery with deceased, the first time under violence, searched for deceased, took a journey by train to his home, and shot him 17 hours after he had been first informed, there had been a sufficient cooling time and his acts could not be said to have been committed in such "heat of passion" as would reduce the homicide to manslaughter. People v. Ashland, 128 Pac. 798, 801, 20 Cal. App. 168.

As caused by just or lawful provocation

"'Heat of passion' means a heated state of the blood, caused by a lawful or just provocation, which deprives one of the power of self control." State v. Brown, 79 S. W. 1111, 1112, 181 Mo. 192; State v. Forsha, 88 S. W. 746, 751, 190 Mo. 296, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 576.

The "heat of passion" contemplated by the statute, which would reduce a killing from murder in the first or second degree to manslaughter in the fourth degree, is that heat of passion which is produced by a lawful provocation, as that term was understood at common law. State v. Myers, 121 S. W. 131, 136, 221 Mo. 598 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Bulling, 15 S. W. 373, 16 S. W. 830, 105 Mo. 225). See, also, State v. Gieseke, 108 S. W. 525, 529, 209 Mo. 331.

The term "heat of passion," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 4361, defining manslaughter in the third degree, means such mental disturbance caused by a reasonably adequate provocation as would ordinarily so overcome and dominate or suspend the exercise of the judgment of an ordinary man as to render his mind for the time being deaf to the voice of reason, make him incapable of forming and executing a distinct intent to take life, and cause him uncontrollably to act from the impelling force of the disturbing cause, rather than from any real wickedness of heart; but, as so defined, the term is not inconsistent with intelligent action, implying a consciousness of what one is doing, and hence an instruction that "heat of passion" means a temporary dethronement of reason, engendered by provocation, and rendering the slayer incapable of forming a design to kill, was erroneous. Johnson v. State, 108 N. W. 55, 62, 129 Wis. 146, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809, 9 Ann. Cas. 923; Dillon v. State, 119 N. W. 352, 355, 187 Wis. 655, 16 Ann. Cas. 918 (citing Johnson v. State, 108 N. W. 55, 59, 129 Wis. 146, 160, 5 L. R. A. [N. S.] 809, 9 Ann. Cas. 923).

In a murder trial, it was not error to refuse to give as part of the definition of "heat of passion" a statement that heat of passion does not contemplate such overpowering disturbance as to destroy volition, the reasoning faculty, even temporarily, where "heat of passion" was completely defined, the omitted statement being merely illustrative. Dillon v. State, 119 N. W. 352, 355, 187 Wis. 655, 16 Ann. Cas. 918.

HEATSTROKE

The New International Dictionary treats the word "sunstroke" as a synonym of heatstroke, which it defines thus: "The effect produced upon the body by exposure to intense heat, whether from the sun, from furnaces, or from the atmosphere"—and the Universal Encyclopedia defines it as "fever due to excessive heat but most commonly to exposure and the direct heat of the sun; indirect solar heat or artificial heat may have the same effect." Continental Casualty Co. v. Johnson, 85 Pac. 545, 546, 74 Kan. 129, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609, 118 Am. St. Rep. 308, 10 Ann. Cas. 851.

HEAVY

One meaning of "heavy" is having the heaves, as heavy horses. Overhulser v. Peacock, 128 S. W. 526, 527, 148 Mo. App. 504.

HEAVY ARTICLE

Describing a stick as "heavy," in charging an assault by means likely to produce great bodily injury, imparts no certain information and is not a sufficient description of the means used. The term is relative. A stick, which in the hands of one person would be considered heavy, in the hands of another might be deemed light, and it might be heavy to the extent that it would be unwieldy and useless. A "heavy wooden stick" is not ex vi termini a deadly weapon. People v. Perales, 75 Pac. 170, 172, 141 Cal. 581.

HEDGING CONTRACT

"Hedging," as it is called, is a means by which collectors and exporters of grain or other products, and manufacturers who make contracts in advance for the sale of their goods, secure themselves against fluctuations of the market by counter contracts for the purchase or sale, as the case may be, of an equal quantity of the product or the material of manufacture. It is none the less a serious business contract for a legitimate and useful purpose that it may be offset before the time of delivery in case delivery should not be needed or desired." Cleage v. Laidley, 149 Fed. 346, 352, 79 C. C. A. 284 (quoting and adopting definition in Board of Trade v. Christie Grain & Stock Co., 198 U. S. 236, 25 Sup. Ct. 637, 49 L. Ed. 1031).

It is a manufacturer's and merchant's insurance against price fluctuation of materials, and no more damnatory than insurances of property and life. Board of Trade of City of Chicago v. L. A. Kinsey Co., 130 Fed. 507, 508, 512, 64 C. C. A. 669, 69 L. R. A. 59. See, also, State v. McGinnis, 51 S. E. 50, 52, 188 N. C. 724.

"Hedging," in transactions in buying and selling grain through a broker, means that the principal will, for all grain purchased by him, sell or obtain a contract through his broker to sell a like amount for future delivery. John Miller Co. v. Klovstad, 105 N. W. 164, 165, 14 N. D. 435.

HEED

The word "heed" means "hear," and hence where the petition, in an action for the death of a fireman in a collision between a hose wagon, responding to a fire call, and a street car, alleged that the company was negligent because its motorman did not pay any "heed" to the ringing of the gong on the hose wagon, and the evidence showed that the motorman did not hear the approaching hose wagon, the court properly submitted the question of the motorman's negligence in not hearing the approaching hose wagon in time to avoid the accident. Engvall v. Des Moines City Ry. Co., 121 N. W. 12, 14, 145 Iowa, 560.

HEEDLESS

The words "heedless" and "reckless" imply negligence. Thus a complaint for injuries caused by the explosion of a powder magazine, which alleges that the explosion was the result of the reckless and heedless act of defendant's servant in igniting the powder, alleges negligence. Fisher v. Western Fuse & Explosives Co., 108 Pac. 659, 661, 12 Cal. App. 739.

"An 'heir' is one upon whom the law casts an estate of inheritance immediately upon the death of the owner, and the rights of heirs are considered as arising at the moment of the death of the ancestor." In re Milliken's Estate, 55 Atl. 853, 206 Pa. 149 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Blackstone, 201; Williams, Executors, 404). See, also, Desloge v. Tucker, 94 S. W. 283, 286, 196 Mo. 587 (quoting and adopting definition in Brown v. Merchants' Bank of Appleton City, 66 Mo. App. loc. cit. 431).

The word "heirs" in its ordinary or customary sense means the kindred of the decedent upon whom the law casts the estate in real property in the absence of a devisee, and has reference to the law of succession. Hays v. Wyatt, 115 Pac. 13, 15, 19 Idaho, 544, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 397 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3241).

The word "heirs," as applied to persons who are to take in remainder, being a technical word having a definite legal signification, when unexplained and uncontrolled by the context, must be interpreted according to its technical import, as designating the person appointed by law to succeed to the realty in case of intestacy. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Hoppin, 94 N. E. 669, 671, 249 Ill. 406.

The word "heirs," while strictly defined to consist only of those of a decedent's kindred who on his death are entitled to inherit his real estate, is nevertheless often used by a testator to include those entitled to share both in his real and personal property. In re Line's Estate, 70 Atl. 791, 793, 221 Pa. 374, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 293.

In its legal and technical sense, the word "heirs" is understood as designating those appointed by law to succeed in case of intestacy, and, when occurring in a will unaccompanied by qualifying or explanatory expressions, it must be allowed that meaning, and those only come within the class so described, who would take under the intestate laws, and, where qualifying expressions are relied on to give another than the technical meaning, they must be so direct and unequivocal as to imperatively require such interpretation. In re Beck's Estate, 74 Atl. 607, 608, 225 Pa. 578. See, also, Ackerman v. Ackerman, 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 162, 167.

In its primary, technical meaning, the word "heirs" is used to express the relation of persons to some deceased ancestor and, when it is used in a will to point out legatees or devisees, its primary, legal meaning should be given to it, unless it is clearly shown to have been used in a different sense. Thus the word "heirs," in a devise for life with remainder to the devisee's heirs, was, in the absence of anything to the contrary, used in its ordinary legal sense, and could not be construed as meaning either the children of the devisee or her heirs living at the death of testator. Gerard v. Ives, 62 Atl. 607, 609, 78 Conn. 485.

The word "heirs" used in a will to point out legatees or devisees is given its primary meaning so as to include only those who, in the absence of a will, are by law entitled to inherit by descent, unless it clearly appears that testator used the word in a different sense. Nicoll v. Irby, 77 Atl. 957, 958, 83 Conn. 530.

The word "heirs" in a will may mean children, and it may mean some other class of heirs, not including all, where the context of the entire will plainly shows such purpose. Smith v. Winsor, 88 N. E. 482, 484, 239 Ill. 567.

In the civil law "heir" has a more extended signification than in the common law. The term is applied to all persons entitled to succeed to the estate of one deceased, whether by act of the parent or by operation of law, and whether the property be real or personal in its nature. Morin v. Holliday, 77 N. E. 861, 862, 89 Ind. App. 201 (quoting and adopting definition in Kelley v. Vigas, 112 Ill. 242, 54 Am. Rep. 235).

While the word "heirs" has its technical common-law meaning, restricting it to those who take by inheritance only, though by the civil law it applies to all persons who are called to the succession whether by the act of the party or by operation of law, the phrase "their heirs shall receive the succession," as used in a treaty, refers to the right of succession of those who receive by testament, as well as those who receive by operation of law. In re Stixrud's Estate, 109 Pac. 343, 349, 58 Wash. 839, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 632.

The word "heirs," when used in a conveyance to designate the class of persons to whom an estate is conveyed, should be given its technical meaning, unless some other language in the conveyance clearly shows that the word was intended to have a different meaning, or unless the circumstances of the case are inconsistent with such meaning. Irvin v. Stover, 67 S. E. 1119, 1121, 67 W. Va. 353.

The term "heirs" may be used as a word of limitation or as a word of purchase, according to the context. A deed executed by children to a widow according to an agreement for distribution, which granted unto her and her "heirs" and "assigns" certain land "during her natural lifetime," created but a life estate only; the use of the word "heirs" not bringing the instrument within the rule in Shelley's Case. Miller v. Mowers, 81 N. E. 420, 423, 227 Ill. 392.

The word "heirs" is sometimes used in its strict primary sense as including only one to whom an estate had already descended from a deceased ancestor, while in other cases it applied to one whose ancestor is living. "It is sometimes held to mean those who take only by right of blood relationship, and in other cases covers adopted children and persons not heirs of the body who take by operation of law. It has been used in a limited sense to designate children alone, or in a more comprehensive sense to include children and grandchildren and also husband and wife. It has been held to include legatees and next of kin as well as other classes of those who may become entitled to the property of another upon his death; the construction in each case depending upon the intention with which the term was used in the instrument or statute, and that is to be determined largely from the context of the instrument or statute and the circumstances surrounding or inducing the execution or enactment of the same." The term "unknown heirs," as used in the sections of the Code providing for service by publication in cases relating to real property and where the relief demanded is to exclude defendants from any interest, title, or estate in real property, means all kinds of heirs, including heirs of heirs of such defendants as well as the legatees of heirs. Howell v. Garton, 108 Pac. 844, 845, 82 Kan. 495.

"Heirs," in a state grant to the "heirs" of a certain person, are those who would have inherited the right granted had it existed at such person's death. Waterman v. Charlton, 120 S. W. 171, 172, 102 Tex. 510.

In a conveyance to grantees and heirs forever providing that one of said grantees shall have no power to sell or alienate or to subject the estate to his debts, "heirs" is a word of inheritance and not of purchase, and no title vests in the children of such grantors. Scott v. Noel (Ky.) 45 S. W. 517.

Testatrix devised her real estate to her daughter, then to her "heirs," but, if the daughter should die leaving "no heirs of her own," then the land should be sold and the money divided into equal parts, to be paid to others. Another clause made the daughter executrix. Held, that the word "heirs" in the first clause was used in its legal technical sense to mean all persons who would succeed to the estate in case of intestacy, but that the fee which would have been conveyed by such clause was limited by the subsequent provision that, if the daughter should die leaving no "heirs of her own," the property should be sold, etc., and, the daughter having been named as executrix, the death contemplated was one occurring at any time, and not necessarily before the death of the testatrix, so that the daughter took a base fee. Ahlfield v. Curtis, 82 N. E. 276, 277, 229 Ill. 139.

In a benefit certificate payable to insured's wife "and heirs," the word "heirs" has reference to the heirs of the beneficiary. Mutual Life Industrial Ass'n of Georgia v. Scott, 54 South. 182, 183, 170 Ala. 420.

In a will postponing disposition of testator's principal estate until after the death of his wife and his three children, there were clauses giving to the wife one-third of the income during her life, and distributing the remainder of the income to the children in specified shares. Then followed these clauses: "Item. Upon the death of my wife I do order that the one-third of the income hereby bequeathed to her shall be distributed among my surviving three children." "Upon the death of any of my three children, I do order the portion bequeathed to him or her to be distributed among his or her heirs." Held: That the word "heirs" is used as a substitutionary term, and, when taken in connection with the context, shows a testamentary intent that each installment of income, when it accrues (from and after the death of any of the three children and until the death of the last survivor), shall be distributed among those who, at the time it accrues, are appropriately to be described as "his or her heirs"; and that, where a deceased child of the testator leaves issue living at the time the income accrues, such issue are "his or her heirs," within the meaning of the clause. In re Smisson, 82 Atl. 614, 616, 79 N. J. Eq. 233.

Where a grantor in consideration of love and affection towards his son, and his son's heirs lawfully begotten, granted land to the son and his lawful heirs, to have and to hold unto the son "and the children of his body, their heirs and assigns," the son at the time having two children, the deed vested in the son an estate tail which was converted by the statute into a fee, it being presumed that the word "heirs" was used in the legal sense, excluding one from being an heir of a living person, and the word "children," though in legal acceptation a word of purchase, being equivalent in such deed to the word "heirs" or "issue." Wallace v. Hodges, 49 South. 812, 813, 160 Ala. 276.

Where the words, "heirs, administrators, and executors," or words of similar import, are added to the designation of a testamentary trustee by name, the will excludes the idea of a personal trust, as it is impossible for a testator to know who the heirs, administrators, and executors of a person named as trustee may be. Dodge v. Dodge, 71 Atl. 519, 521, 109 Md. 164, 180 Am. St. Rep. 508.

The words "heirs, legatees, devisees, administrators, executors and trustees," in Gen. Revenue Law 1902, §§ 21-41 (Laws 1902, pp. 49-57, c. 8), imposing on such persons an inheritance tax, comprises all of the persons who have succeeded to the property, the administrators and executors for the purpose of administration, the trustees to carry out any trust, and the heirs, legatees, and devisees at final distribution or at death so far as real estate is concerned. In re Macky's Estate, 102 Pac. 1075, 1078, 46 Colo. 79, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1207.

A claim against the city for the instantaneous death of plaintiff's intestate, through the city's negligence, stated that the claim was for damages sustained by his estate, legal representatives, and heirs, and that his estate, legal representatives, and heirs claimed a specified sum as damages. Held, that the words "legal representatives" were not used in their strictly technical sense as executors or administrators, nor was the word "heir" used in its primary and technical sense as one who, by reason of birth in lawful wedlock, inherits real property, but that the expression, "estate, legal representatives, and heirs," was used with the idea of using words broad enough in their significance to include all persons having claims against the city on account of the death, and hence the claim was sufficient as a basis for an action for the benefit of the widow under the statute. Moyer v. City of Oshkosh, 139 N. W. 378, 380, 151 Wis. 586 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3241, 3264; 5 Words and Phrases, pp. 4070, 4079).

Where testator by his will created two trust funds, the income of one to be paid, at the discretion of the trustee, to the beneficiary of the fund, and the principal and interest of the other, at the discretion of the trustee, to the beneficiary, and created also an accumulation of interest as to the latter fund, which was invalid, and directed, in one case, that at the death of the beneficiary the principal, with any accrued interest, should be paid to the testator's heirs, and, in the other, that any portion of the trust fund remaining at the death of the beneficiary and any income thereof should be paid to the testator's heirs, the funds were to be paid to those who answered the description of "heirs" at the time of the distribution of each fund. In re Southworth's Estate, 102 N. Y. Supp. 447, 448, 52 Misc. Rep. 86.

Laws 1895, c. 98 (Pol. Code, § 544), makes the amount incurred by a county for maintenance of an insane person in a hospital for the insane a charge against the estate of the insane person, provided that he "has no heirs within the United States dependent on said estate for support, and that no real property shall be sold during the life of the insane person." Held, that the statute did not exempt the whole estate where only part of the heirs were dependent on the insane person; the term "estate," as used therein, not being equivalent to "property" in the popular meaning, and the words "heirs dependent on said estate" not being equivalent to the words "person dependent on said estate"; so that, where only one heir was dependent on an insane person, the remainder of the estate left after the insane person's death was liable to the county's claim for maintenance. Minnehaha County v. Boyce (S. D.) 138 N. W. 287, 289.

As word of limitation

The words "heirs" or "heirs of the body," in their primary and strict legal meaning, are words of limitation, and not of purchase, and must be so construed, unless the language employed clearly indicates that they are intended to convey another and different meaning clearly indicated by the instrument. Newhaus v. Brennan, 97 N. E. 938, 940, 49 Ind. App. 654. See, also, Brown v. Brown, 101 N. W. 81, 82, 125 Iowa, 218, 67 L. R. A. 629.

Ordinarily, the word "heirs," or "heirs of their body," are words of limitation, and by their own force convey the idea of a fee-simple estate. Brumley v. Brumley (Ky.) 89 S. W. 182, 183.

The word "heirs" in a will is a word of limitation and not of purchase. In re Allison, 102 N. Y. Supp. 887, 891, 53 Misc. Rep. 222.

"The word 'heirs,' in order to be a word of limitation, must include all the persons in all generations belonging to the class designated by the law as 'heirs.'" De Vaughn v. Hutchinson, 165 U. S. 566, 578, 17 Sup. Ct. 461, 41 L. Ed. 827.

The word "heirs" used in the general legal sense is a word of limitation, and no intention of a testator, however clearly expressed, can change it into a word of purchase. Thus where testator devised a residue to his wife to have and to hold unto her and her heirs and assigns forever, but if she married again one-half of the estate should go to certain legatees, the widow took a fee. Rissman v. Wierth, 77 N. E. 108, 109, 220 Ill. 181, 110 Am. St. Rep. 243.

The word "heirs" is a word of limitation, and not of purchase, and, when used in a will, its legal intendment is to designate a class of persons who are to take in succession from generation to generation, the law effectuating this purpose by declaring a fee to pass to the first taker. Connor v. Gardner, 82 N. E. 640, 644, 230 Ill. 258, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 73 (citing Kales, Future Int. § 129; Schaefer v. Schaefer, 81 N. E. 136, 141 Ill. 337; Strawbridge v. Strawbridge, 77 N. E. 78, 220 Ill. 61, 4 L. R. A. [N. S.] 948, 110 Am. St. Rep. 226).

The word "heirs" in a will is one of limitation unless clearly used to designate individuals answering the description of heirs at the death of a party. Thus in a will by which testator devised realty described to his son in fee simple and by a codicil he revoked the gift and provided that the property should vest in the son for life, and, at his death, the remainder in fee simple should vest in his heirs, the word "heirs" was used as one of limitation, and, under the rule in Shelley's Case and Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 3994, providing that any estate which, according to common law, would be adjudged a fee tail, shall be a fee, the son took an estate in fee simple. Lee v. Lee, 91 N. E. 507, 508, 45 Ind. App. 645.

Unless it is necessary to effectuate the manifest intention of a testator, the word "heirs" is a word of limitation. Jabine v. Sawyer (Ky.) 78 S. W. 140, 141.

A devise or bequest to the testator's wife "and her heirs" lapses by the death of the devisee prior to that of the testator, so that the property descends as intestate property. The quoted words are words of limitation merely, and do not create a substituted devise. Farnsworth v. Whiting, 66 Atl. 831, 832, 102 Me. 296.

Where a remainder of one share of the residue of an estate was bequeathed to the life tenants, sisters and brothers mentioned or their heirs, the word "heirs" would be construed as a word of limitation, so that the brothers and sisters took the estate in fee. In re Bentz's Estate, 70 Atl. 788, 790, 221 Pa. 380.

Where a testator limited a remainder over in fee, in case his daughter should die without child or children her surviving, to his five children, or their heirs, if deceased, the word "heirs" was a word of limitation, and not of purchase. Ortmayer v. Elcock, 80 N. E. 339, 340, 225 Ill. 342.

The word "heirs," as used in a will providing that, if a daughter to whom all the real estate of testatrix was devised should die before her husband without having disposed of the property by will or leaving bodily heirs, the husband should take the real estate, with power to do with it as he desired, and providing that if the daughter should die, leaving heirs, before her father, he should enjoy the income during his life, and at his death it should return to the daughter's heirs, means children, and is to be construed as a word of limitation. Cralle v. Jackson (Ky.) 81 S. W. 669, 670.

"Where a freehold is limited to one life, and by the same instrument the inheritance is limited, either mediately or immediately, to the heirs of his body, the first taker takes the whole estate either in fee simple or fee tail, and the word 'heirs' or 'heirs of the body' are words of limitation and not of purchase." Snyder v. Greendale Land Co., 91 N. E. 819, 820, 48 Ind. App. 178.

In a trust deed providing that the trustee should sell the land and pay the proceeds to the sons of the grantor "and to their heirs and assigns," the word "heirs" is a word of limitation, and not of purchase. Armour v. Murray, 68 Atl. 164, 165, 74 N. J. Law, 351.

In deeds to property to the grantees and to their heirs and assigns and to the survivors or survivor, to them and the heirs and assigns of the survivors or survivor of them forever, the word "heirs" was not a word of purchase, but was used to designate the conveyance of an estate in fee, so that the deeds were not void as violative of the statute against perpetuities. Root v. Snyder, 126 N. W. 206, 211, 161 Mich. 200.

Where testator bequeathed to M. for life all of his property, etc., and at her death the remaining property to S. and her heirs, the word "heirs" was a word of limitation, and not of purchase, and constituted a devise of the remainder to S. in fee. Underwood v. Magruder (Ky.) 87 S. W. 1076, 1077.

Where an estate is so given that it is to go to every person who can claim as heirs to the first taker, the word "heirs" must be a word of limitation, and all heirs, taking as heirs, must take by descent. Cook v. Councilman, 72 Atl. 404, 407, 109 Md. 622.

The rule in Shelley's Case, is one of the "dogmas of the common law and is that, if one makes a limitation to another for life with the remainder over immediately or mediately to his heirs or heirs of his body, the heirs do not take remainders at all, but the word 'heirs' is regarded as defining or limiting the estate which the first taker has and his heirs take by descent and not by purchase. So, if a man by his will gives an estate to the devisee for life, with a remainder over to his own heirs, they do not, at common law, take as remaindermen by the will, but by descent as reversioners and heirs; that being regarded as the better title." Robinson v. Blankinship, 92 S. W. 854, 855, 116 Tenn. 394 (quoting and adopting definition in Washb. Real Prop. p. 525).

The rule in Shelley's Case, is "that when a freehold is devised to the ancestor for life, and by the same instrument it is limited, either mediately or immediately, to his heirs, or the heirs of his body, the word 'heirs' is a word of limitation, and not of purchase, and the ancestor takes the same in fee or in tail, as the case may be." Burton v. Carnahan, 78 N. E. 682, 683, 38 Ind. App. 612.

A devise to the bodily heirs named of testatrix's son, followed by a clause providing that such devisees shall not sell the land, which shall on their death revert to their "heirs," is within the rule in Shelley's Case, for the word "heirs" is a word of limitation and not of purchase, and the devisees take a fee-simple title. Seay v. Cockrell, 115 S. W. 1160, 1163, 102 Tex. 280.

Where a life estate is granted to one, with remainder to his heirs generally, the word "heirs," under the rule in Shelley's Case, must be construed as a limitation of the estate granted, and not as a word of purchase, and the grantee will take the entire estate granted. O'Connell v. Pinnacle Gold Mines Co., 131 Fed. 103, 110.

The word "heirs" is one of limitation and not of purchase though preceded by the word "lawful." Thus, where a will contained a codicil to the effect that testator desired to change a former provision, bequeathing certain land to his son so that the latter should have the use, benefit, and control of the lands during his lifetime only, and at his death the lands should go to his "lawful heirs," the son, under the rule in Shelley's Case, took a fee, although there were extrinsic facts indicative of the testator's intention to give only an estate for life. Deemer v. Kessinger, 60 N. E. 28, 29, 206 Ill. 57.

The term "lawful issue" is not a technical term, and when used in a deed does not necessarily bring the deed under the rule in Shelley's Case, like the word "heirs," which is always a technical word, necessarily bringing the deed under the rule regardless of intention. Hopkins v. Hopkins (Tex.) 114 S. W. 673, 676.

A deed, in its premises, named a wife alone as grantee, and the granting clause conveyed to her alone, and the habendum clause was that she should hold forever in fee simple, provided that, if she should die without heirs, then title to vest in her husband, if living, and, should he be dead, a certain share to vest in the next legal heirs of the wife, the remainder in the next legal heirs of the husband. Held, that the attempted limitation to the next legal heirs of the wife, remainder to the next legal heirs of the husband, was ineffective to create any estate in them, the word "heirs" being used as a word of inheritance and not of purchase, and hence a deed from the wife and husband would pass an absolute fee. Hamilton v. Sidwell, 115 S. W. 204, 206, 131 Ky. 423, 29 L. E. A. (N. S.) 961.

A deed by a mother to a son, which conveys land described to the son, his heirs and assigns, and provides that on the death of the son and his wife without issue the land shall revert to the mother or her heirs, creates a reversion in the mother, which is a present estate, and, while the estate conveyed to the son may not be defeated, yet if a defeasance comes the reversion is to the mother; the reversion to the mother or her heirs being in legal effect a reversion to her alone, and the word "heirs" being a term of limitation and not of purchase. Coomes v. Frey, 133 S. W. 753, 759, 141 Ky. 740.

Testator declared that his whole estate should be kept together until his youngest daughter should arrive at 21, should marry or die, and that when either of those events happened, the whole should be divided among testator's children living at the time, share and share alike, that the portions passing to sons or daughters should not be liable for their debts or contracts, or for any debts or contracts of any husband which either one of the daughters might thereafter marry, but should be for the sole separate use of them and the heirs of their bodies forever. Held, that the word "heirs" was a word of limitation, so that the ancestors would take the whole estate. Boyles v. Wagner, 74 S. E. 380, 381, 91 S. C. 188.

Where a will devises land to one to have and to hold during his natural life, and at his death to his lawful "heirs," the word "heirs" is a word of limitation notwithstanding the qualification by the phrase "at his death." Lacey v. Floyd, 87 S. W. 665, 667, 99 Tex. 112.

A deed named E. S. "an His Heirs" as "party" of the second part, and the granting clause conveyed to the "party, Thir heirs and assigns." The habendum clause was to "the party of the second part, there heirs and assigns," warranting the title to the "party of the second part and his heirs and assigns forever." The deed was drawn on a printed form, and the words and letters underscored inserted by a scrivener of little learning who did not understand the meaning of the words used. The deed did not show by its context that the word "heirs" was intended to mean "children." Held, that the word "heirs" was used as a word of limitation, rather than of purchase, and the deed granted a fee simple to "E. S." Big Sandy Co. v. Childers, 147 S. W. 14, 15, 148 Ky. 527.

A deed written on a printed form which recited that it was entered into between the grantor, "party of the first part," and a person named "and her heirs party of the second part," and that the party of the first part for a specified consideration conveyed unto the party of the second part, "there heirs and assigns," described property, to have and to hold the same unto the party of the second part, "there heirs and assigns," and that the party of the first part covenanted with the party of the second part to warrant the title unto the "party of the second part and ther heirs and assigns," passes the fee to the person named as grantee; the word "heirs" not meaning children. Senters v. Big Sandy Co., 147 S. W. 750, 751, 149 Ky. 11.

A deed by R. to his wife—the granting clause being, "I do hereby give, grant * * * to said E. for and during her natural life, with reversion to myself or assigns, after her death," and the habendum clause being, "To have and to hold * * * to said E. for * * * her life as her own separate property, free from * * * debts or liabilities of her husband; but after the death of my said wife, the property shall revert to me, if living, or if dead, to my heirs"—creates no estate in remainder in the children of the grantor and his wife, so as to deprive them of power to convey a fee-simple title to the property; the word "heirs" being used in its legal sense as word of inheritance and not of purchase. Dooley v. Goodwin (Ky.) 93 S. W. 47, 48.

Where a deed of gift recited that the grantors, in consideration of love and affection toward their son and his heirs lawfully begotten, granted described lands to the son and his lawful heirs, to have and to hold unto the son and the children of his body, their heirs and assigns, forever, and the son, at the time of the execution of the deed, had two children, it was held that the deed vested in the son an estate tail, which was converted by the statute into a fee; it being presumed that the word "heirs" was used in the legal sense, excluding one from being an heir of a living person, and the word "children," though in usual legal acceptance being a word of purchase, being equivalent to the word "heirs" or "issue." Wallace v. Hodges, 49 South. 312, 313, 160 Ala. 276.

Where a testator devised certain lands to his son, K. during his life, and after his death to be divided among his heirs as the law might direct, and further provided that, if any of the heirs of the testator should die leaving no lawful issue, their share or shares should be equally divided among the surviving heirs of the testator, it was held that K. took an estate in fee simple, defeasible on his death without issue him surviving; the word "heirs" being a word of limitation, and not of purchase. Kennedy v. Kennedy, 29 N. J. Law, 185, 187.

A husband conveyed land to his wife for life, remainder to their youngest son J. in fee, but if he died before maturity without issue, then to the next youngest son, to him and his lawful heirs or children forever, and in case he should die without children, then to the next youngest son and to his children, and so on to the next oldest son, and in the event of the death of all the sons without issue, then to the grantor's daughter and her heirs forever. The youngest son J. was never married, but survived his two older brothers, the oldest of which died leaving children. Held, that the deed did not indicate an intent of the grantor to ingraft contingent remainders to possible grandchildren onto the conditional limitations to his several sons, nor to make such possible grandchildren joint purchasers with their respective fathers, but that the explanatory clause appended to the grant to each son was intended to restrict the descent in each case to the next youngest son "then alive," the varying phrases referring to "heirs or lawful heirs, or children," being understood as words of limitation intended only to convey a contingent base fee to the son, and not as words of purchase to the grandchildren, so as to vest the title to the entire property in the surviving children of the oldest son on the death of the youngest son without issue. Farr v. Perkins, 55 South. 923, 926, 178 Ala. 500.

A woman, in contemplation of a second marriage, vested her real and certain personal property in a trustee, for her sole and separate use during the marriage, reserving to herself a power of appointment by deed, for reinvestment, and by last will and testament, and after providing, amongst other things, estates out of the same for a child by the former, and the children of the pending marriage in the event she died, living her contemplated husband, provided in the settlement that, in the event she survived such husband, "then, at her death, the said trust estates shall descend to and be conveyed over by the trustee to the heirs at law of (her) the said Sarah B., whoever they may be, and this deed terminate." Held, that the words "heirs at law" limited her own estate, as an equitable fee, and did not designate the child of the former or the children of the contemplated marriage as purchasers under the settlement; and hence that, upon the death of her husband, she might compel the trustee to reconvey to her the settled property free from the trust. Eaton v. Tillinghast, 4 R. I. 276, 280.

The question in explaining a will is not what the testator meant, but what is the meaning of his words, and, where technical phrases or terms of art are used, it is fair to presume that the testator understood them, and hence a general provision in a will that all the property devised and bequeathed, unless otherwise specifically stated, shall vest in the devisees, their heirs and assigns, in fee simple, must be construed as words of limitation fixing the estate of such devisees, and cannot be construed as equivalent to children, and as showing an intention to prevent lapse by prescribing a line of succession, for the word "heirs" in its technical sense is a word of limitation, and not of substitution. Galloway v. Darby (Ark.) 151 S. W. 1014, 1016, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 782.

As word of purchase or description

Where a trust is created, by which the trustee is directed to invest the fund in "property, real or personal," as he may deem expedient, and pay over the "rents, profits, dividends, interest, or income," and at the termination of the trust to pay the fund to the heirs at law of the first life tenant, the "heirs at law" should be construed to include only those who would take real estate if the life tenant had died intestate. Gardner v. Skinner, 80 N. E. 825, 826, 195 Mass. 164.

In a will which provided that certain lands given to testator's daughter were given for her natural life and after her death were to go to such person or persons as should be her heir or heirs of land held by her in fee simple, the words "heir and heirs" were designatio personarum who should take the remainder, and such persons do not take by descent as heirs of the daughter, but by purchase from the testator; the daughter taking only a life estate, and the rule in Shelley's Case not applying. Peer v. Hennion, 76 Atl. 1084, 1085, 77 N. J. Law, 693, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 945.

A deed recited that it was made between R. of the first part and R. T. and L. T. of the second part, and "witnesseth, that for and in consideration of certain sums, have bargained and sold unto the said R. T. with this intention, and this deed of conveyance, to be deeded to the present wife of L. T. and her heirs by said R. T., and if she has no legal heirs at her death to revert back to R. T.'s nearest heirs; said R. doth sell and convey unto the said R. T. for his wife L. T., their heirs and assigns forever, the following described tract of land. * * * To have and to hold unto the said R. T. for his wife L. T., their heirs and assigns, as above set forth forever." Held, that the word "heirs" (of L. T.) in the deed was a word of purchase and not of limitation, so that under the conveyance her heirs had a remainder in fee, dependent on the contingency that they survived her; otherwise the estate passed to the heirs of R. T. Ex parte Porter (Ky.) 97 S. W. 391.

Under Rev. Codes, § 3076, providing that when a remainder is limited to the heirs or heirs of the body of the person to whom a life estate in the same property is given, the persons who on the termination of the life estates, are the successors or heirs of the body of the owner for life are entitled to take by virtue of the remainder so limited to them, and not as mere successors of the owner for life, the rule in Shelley's Case is abrogated and the term "heirs" is changed from a word of limitation to one of purchase. Wilson v. Linder, 110 Pac. 274, 275, 18 Idaho, 438, 138 Am. St. Rep. 213.

A deed to A. B. for life and in remainder to the "heirs" of his body forever does not convey an estate in fee tail; it conveys only a life estate to A. B., and the remainder in fee vests immediately in those persons who will become the heirs of A. B. if they survive him, and they take by purchase, and not by inheritance. Blake v. Stone, 27 Vt. 475, 477; Smith v. Hastings, 29 Vt. 240, 244; Gilkey v. Shepard, 51 Vt. 546, 551.

The words "heirs at law," as used in a codicil which gave a certain sum in trust, the income to be paid equally to her sons, M. and J., so long as they might live and at the death of either or both to their "heirs at law," respectively, one-half to M.'s heirs and one-half to J.'s heirs, and at the death of their wives and children the property to be given directly and equally to the sons' grandchildren, was descriptive of the class thereafter defined as "wives and children." Wolfe v. Hatheway, 70 Atl. 645, 648, 81 Conn. 181.

In common parlance, the terms "heirs at law" and "lawful heirs" are used indiscriminately as synonymous and convertible terms, and, whenever either is used, they invariably refer to the heirs on whom descent is cast by law, and not to an heir by adoption. The relation of an heir by adoption is an exceptional and unusual one, and does not come within the ordinary and usual meaning of the words "lawful heirs," and those words ought not to be held ex vi termini to include an adopted heir. Hockaday v. Lynn, 98 S. W. 585, 589, 200 Mo. 453, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 117, 118 Am. St. Rep. 672, 9 Ann. Cas. 775 (citing Reinders v. Koppelman, 7 S. W. 288, 94 Mo. 338).

In a devise the word "heirs" in a general comprehensive sense includes all who stand in a relation to the ancestor that will entitle them to inherit on his death, and it includes an adopted child placed by the statute on an equality with children by birth for the purpose of inheriting from the adopting parent. The word "heirs" in a devise of real estate to testator's son, but, on his death without "heirs," to persons named, executed by testator who died before the statutes authorizing the adoption of a child and giving the child the right to inherit from the adopting parent, does not include adopted children of the son, though it means "children," and, on the death of the son without leaving children of his body, the property passes to the persons named. Wallace v. Noland, 92 N. E. 956, 957, 246 Ill. 535, 138 Am. St. Rep. 247.

It is only as to the adopting parent that the adopted child is made heir or next of kin by the statute (Comp. Laws 1897, § 8780) providing that an adopted child shall become the heir at law of the person adopting it, and the adopted child, therefore, is not heir by right of representation of the kindred of the person who adopted it. Van Derlyn v. Mack, 100 N. W. 273, 280, 137 Mich. 143, 66

L. R. A. 437, 109 Am. St. Rep. 669, 4 Ann. Cas. 879 (quoting Helms v. Elliott, 14 S. W. 980, 89 Tenn. 446, 10 L. R. A. 535).

Under St. 1876, p. 210, c. 213, providing that a person adopted shall take the same share of the property which the adopted parent could have devised by will that he would have taken if born to such parent in lawful wedlock, and that he shall stand in regard to the legal descendants, but to no other of the kindred of such parent, in such position as if so born to him, a child adopted after the enactment of such statute, whose adopted father died in 1903, was not entitled to take as the "issue" or "heir" of her adopted father under the will of her adopted grandfather. Blodgett v. Stowell, 75 N. E. 138, 139, 189 Mass. 142.

Alien

Under Acts 22d Gen. Assem. c. 85, providing, in sections 1 and 2, that nonresident aliens are prohibited from taking or acquiring title to real estate by descent, devise, purchase, or otherwise, but that any nonresident may acquire and hold real property on condition that within a certain time from its purchase he place the same in the possession of a relation who shall comply with certain conditions, nonresident aliens are not heirs at law of a testator who bequeathed his property to his "heirs" at law, for to constitute one the legal heir of another he must have inheritable blood, and in this case the statute prohibits such aliens from taking the testator's realty either by descent or devise. Mitchell v. Vest (Iowa) 136 N. W. 1054, 1056.

Blood relations

The word "heirs," when applied to real estate devised, means persons so related to one by blood that he would take the estate in case of intestacy. Bayley v. Beekman, 117 N. Y. Supp. 88, 89, 62 Misc. Rep. 567; Bayley v. Lawrence, 118 N. Y. Supp. 286, 288, 133 App. Div. 888.

When the right of the heir to have the property of his ancestor was secured by the Magna Charta, an "heir" was not understood to mean one entitled to take by statute of descent, but the term meant a child or relative by blood. Beals v. State, 121 N. W. 347, 351, 139 Wis. 544.

Under Act Cong. Feb. 8, 1887, c. 119, § 5, 24 Stat. 889, relating to the allotments of lands to Indians, and providing that they should be held in trust for a certain number of years for the Indian, and in case of death for his heirs, a white person, a member of the tribe by adoption, is an "heir," though not of Indian blood. Reed v. Clinton, 101 Pac. 1055, 23 Okl. 610.

Testatrix was survived by two sisters, a brother, and certain nephews, nieces, grand-nephews, and grandnieces. She devised her residuary estate to her sisters for life, and to the survivor for life, and on the survivor's death to the children then living of the two deceased sisters and to her brother, or to the heirs of either or any of them, if either or any of said children should die before such survivor, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike, per capita, and not per stirpes. Held, that the word "heirs" referred, both as to the realty and personality, to the children of deceased nephews, who succeeded to the shares of their deceased parents, and who did not share per capita with the surviving nephews and nieces. Bayley v. Beekman, 117 N. Y. Supp. 88, 89, 62 Misc. Rep. 567.

Testatrix gave legacies to persons related to her by consanguinity and also to relatives of her deceased husband, and directed "any money remaining after my debts and expenses are paid to be divided between my heirs by my family herein named," excepting N., who was a legatee related to her by blood. Held, that the words "my heirs by my family herein named" did not embrace legatees who were related to the testatrix's husband only, and that those of the legatees named in the will, except N., take under this clause who would have been entitled to the estate had the testatrix died intestate, in the proportion in which they would take under the statute of distribution. Jacobs v. Prescott, 65 Atl. 761, 762, 102 Me. 63.

Children

See Child—Children.

The word "heirs" has a fixed legal meaning, which must be given it when used in a will, unless controlled by the context, but it may also be used in a nontechnical sense, and, when the context requires that it be so construed to effectuate testator's intent, it may be given the meaning of "children." Castleberry v. Stringer (Ala.) 57 South. 849, 850.

"Heirs" are those persons whom the law declares are entitled to the estate of a deceased person. The term will not be held synonymous with "children" unless it is made to appear by other provisions of the instrument that such was the clear intention of the testator. Edmonds v. Edmonds' Devisees and Heirs (Ky.) 102 S. W. 311, 312.

"Heirs" has been held to mean "children" in cases where it clearly appeared from the context that children then living were meant by the conveyor or testator. Speight v. Askins, 102 S. W. 74, 75, 118 Tenn. 749. See, also, Middlesex Banking Co. v. Field, 37 South. 139, 144, 84 Miss. 646; Harkness v. Lisle, 117 S. W. 264, 267, 132 Ky. 767; Nutter v. Vickery, 64 Me. 490, 499; Stuttle & Weaver Land & Improvement Co. v. Barker (Ala.) 60 South. 157, 158.

The word "heirs" is often used with reference to persons bearing certain relations, such as that of children to living persons, but that is not a correct use of it, and it requires knowledge of the intention of a person so using it to enable the court to ascribe to it such a meaning. McFerrin v. Templeman, 120 S. W. 167, 168, 102 Tex. 530.

While the word "children" as a rule is used in deeds and wills as a word of purchase, it is frequently used as a synonym for "heirs," and this may always be shown by or deduced from a consideration of the whole instrument. Wilson v. Shumate, 113 S. W. 851, 852, 130 Ky. 663.

"The term 'heirs at law' may be construed as children or grandchildren where such a construction will effectuate the grantor's intention and is consistent with legal principles." Griffin v. Fairmont Coal Co., 53 S. E. 24, 45, 59 W. Va. 490, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115.

If it is apparent from the will that the testator used the words "heirs," "issue," and "children" interchangeably or synonymously, the court is warranted in construing them in like manner, so as to carry out the testator's intention. Stisser v. Stisser, 85 N. E. 240, 241, 235 Ill. 207 (citing Gannon v. Peterson, 62 N. E. 210, 193 Ill. 372, 55 L. R. A. 701; Butler v. Huestis, 68 Ill. 594, 18 Am. Rep. 589; Leiter v. Sheppard, 85 Ill. 242); Shropshire v. Gault (Ky.) 83 S. W. 590, 591; In re Beck's Estate, 74 Atl. 607, 608, 225 Pa. 578.

In order that the word "heirs," which has a fixed legal meaning as a word of limitation, may be construed as meaning "children," or be given a different meaning than that usually assigned to it, it must clearly and positively appear that it was so used. Lamb v. Medsker, 74 N. E. 1012, 1013, 35 Ind. App. 662.

"The word 'heirs' will be read as synonymous with the word 'children' and construed as a word of purchase when necessary to effectuate the purpose of the grantor in the deed." Thus in a deed, the consideration of which was paid by H., the words "and her children" in the granting and habendum clauses to "H. and her children" will be construed to be words of purchase and not of limitation, so that H. will take a life estate only and her children the remainder. McFarland v. Hatchett, 80 S. W. 1185, 1186, 118 Ky. 423.

The word "heirs" in a grant will be construed in the popular sense as meaning "children," when the entire grant shows clearly that such a meaning was in the mind of the grantor. Thus in a deed to the grantee and her heirs a restriction on alienation by the grantee is not alone sufficient to show clearly that the grantor used the term "heirs" as meaning children or otherwise than according to its recognized legal meaning. Hauser v. St. Louis, 170 Fed. 906, 908, 96 C. A. 82, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 426.

The words "heir of heirs," as used in Mills' Ann. St. Colo. § 1508, providing that for a wrongful death damages may be sued for and recovered by the "heir or heirs" of the decedent, are used in the sense of child or children; that is, lineal descendants. Patek v. American Smelting & Refining Co., 154 Fed. 190, 191, 88 C. C. A. 284, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 273; Hopper v. Denver & R. G. R. Co., 155 Fed. 273, 274, 84 C. C. A. 21 (citing Hindry v. Holt, 51 Pac. 1002, 24 Colo. 464, 39 L. R. A. 351, 65 Am. St. Rep. 235).

As used in a will making a bequest to testator's wife and the legal heirs of his son, and, in case his son should die without wife or heirs, then to the heirs of another, the words "heirs" and "legal heirs" meant "children." Knowles v. Knowles, 65 S. E. 128, 130, 132 Ga. 806.

As used in a deed conveying land, and retaining a life estate in the grantor with a right to dispose of the land with the consent of the grantee, the land after the grantor's death to belong to the grantee during her life, and at her death to descend to her heirs at law, the words "heirs at law" are synonymous with "children," and the grantee's children take a vested remainder. Tanner v. Ellis (Ky.) 127 S. W. 995, 997.

Deeds conveying land to A. "and the heirs of her body which she has or may have by B.," her husband, and to A. and the heirs of her body which "she has now or may have by B., my son," convey a fee simple to A. and her children by B. as tenants in common; the word "heirs" being so qualified as to leave no doubt that it was intended to mean "children." Reeves v. Cook, 51 S. E. 93, 95, 71 S. C. 275.

The word "heirs," in a provision that certain property should descend to testator's heirs and remain in their possession forever, and that his widow should have no dower in the land, but that it should be rented for the benefit of the heirs, was used in the sense of children. Robston v. Gray (Ky.) 97 S. W. 347, 348.

"Leaving no heir or heirs," within the terms of a will containing a limitation over in case my two sisters die "leaving no heir or heirs," is used synonymous with child or children, and the will must be construed accordingly. Fairchild v. Crane, 13 N. J. Eq. 106, 108.

Testator gave $10,000 in bonds to a son in trust for his daughter B. to pay to her the income for life and at her death the principal to be divided among his "heirs" in accordance to the number of children which each might then have, division to be per stirpes, and gave the residue to his son and two daughters, O. and N., and the children of the deceased daughter. Held, that the word "heirs" meant testator's children, and that the trust fund on the death of B. must be divided among the stocks, giving to each stock in proportion to the number of children of that stock; each of the three children of the testator being a stock, and the children of the deceased daughter being another stock. Cook v. Hart, 117 S. W. 357, 358, 135 Ky. 650.

The caption of a deed named the purchaser's wife and her children by him as the party of the second part. The granting clause recited that the conveyance was "to the party of the second part and heirs," and the habendum specified the "second party and her heirs." Held, that the deed being made with the evident purpose of providing for the wife and children, it should be regarded as a deed made by the purchaser, or as his will disposing of his estate for the benefit of the natural objects of his bounty; that the word "heirs" in the granting and habendum clauses mean all the wife's children by the purchaser, including after-born children; and that the wife took a life estate, and such children the remainder. Bowe v. Richmond (Ky.) 109 S. W. 359, 360.

The word "children" in a deed will be read as meaning "heirs," and construed as a word of limitation, and not of purchase, where it is apparent from the deed that the word "children" is used in the sense of "heirs," as where they are used interchangeably. Thus where the caption of a deed made the grantee named party of the second part. The granting clause conveyed to the party of the second part "and his children." The habendum clause read "unto the party of the second part, his heirs," etc., the grantee acquired the fee-simple title, for the word "children" was used in the sense of "heirs." Kelly v. Parsons (Ky.) 127 S. W. 792, 793.

The caption of a deed recited that it was entered into between the grantors, parties of the first part, and N. S. and heirs of S., parties of the second part, their heirs and assigns forever, and the habendum was to have and to hold, etc., unto the parties of the second part, their heirs and assigns forever, etc. N. S. had previously given to two children by her former husband their part of her estate and so had the deed prepared to exclude such children from participation in such land; the consideration having been paid by her. Held, that the word "heirs" was used in such deed in the sense of children, and that N. S. acquired a life estate only, remainder in fee to her children by S., then or thereafter born. Howard v. Sebastian, 136 S. W. 226, 227, 143 Ky. 237.

Decedent, being about to contract a second marriage and having four children by his first wife, executed a deed to certain real estate to them by name, describing them as his "heirs and all his heirs," as parties of the second part, and declaring that, in consideration of $1 and the affection for his "heirs and for the heirs of his body," he sold unto such four children by name the property described, followed by a clause that the conveyance included the entire part of the grantees in his real and personal property, and that they should never receive any more of his estate before or after his death. Held, that it appeared from a reading of the entire instrument that the grantor, by the use of the word "heirs," did not include children which he subsequently had by his second wife. Mullins v. Moberly, 140 S. W. 662, 663, 145 Ky. 477.

Testator devised land to M. "during her life, then to her bodily heirs, if any; but if she have none, back to her brothers and sisters." Held, that the word "heirs" in such devise was not limited to the devisee's "bodily heirs," but instead meant children, descriptive of a class; and therefore the devisee did not take the fee under the rule in Shelley's Case. Puckett v. Morgan, 74 S. E. 15, 16, 158 N. C. 344.

Testatrix, dying without children, declared that, should she die without heirs, her entire property was to go to her husband, to dispose of as he wished, and by a following clause declared that, should the husband die without will after her decease, the property was to go to her brother. Held, it being conceded, that "heirs" meant "children," that the first paragraph devised to the husband a fee simple in the real estate and an absolute estate in the personal property, with the right of absolute disposition, so that any limitation over was repugnant to the fee and void. Crutchfield v. Greer, 74 S. E. 166, 167, 113 Va. 232.

The premises of a deed to man and wife read "unto the party of the second part and to their heirs and assigns forever," but the habendum read "to have and to hold the said property * * * during the term of their natural lives, and after their death, to P. and B., and any other child or children that may be begotten" by grantee and his wife during marriage, "to them and their assigns forever." Held, that the word "heirs" in the premises was used in the sense of children, so that grantees only took a life estate with remainder over to their children. Acker v. Pridgen, 74 S. E. 335, 336, 158 N. C. 337.

In a will by which testator devised to his son J. certain real estate, "but should J. die leaving no heirs, then the said devised property to descend to" a brother and sisters of J., the word "heirs" must be construed to mean "children." Bradsby v. Wallace, 66 N. E. 1088, 1089, 202 Ill. 239.

In a deed to S., to hold in trust the land for the benefit of H. during his natural life, and, in the event of H. not leaving lawful issue, empowering the trustee to convey to the heirs of H., but, in case of lawful issue of H., then the trustee to make title to the "heirs of H." H. does not take a fee; the words "heirs of H." being simply a designatio personarum, meaning the lawful child or children of H. living at his death. Smith v.

Where, from the language of the instrument and the circumstances surrounding its execution, it appears that the maker in using the word "heirs" meant "children," it will be so construed. Thus the word "heirs," in a deed to the heirs of a living person, will be construed as meaning "children"; it appearing from other language of the deed and the circumstances surrounding its execution that it was used with such meaning. Roberson v. Wampler, 51 S. E. 835, 836, 104 Va. 380, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 318.

The word "heirs" in a devise to testatrix's daughter for life and after her death to be equally divided between another daughter and a son, to them and their heirs, share and share alike, is not to be construed to mean children, so that on the death of the daughter or son their respective interests would go to their respective children and not to their respective heirs generally, because of the words "share and share alike" occurring after the word "heirs." Fishburne v. Sigwald, 60 S. E. 1105, 1106, 79 S. C. 551.

Where a will gives property to the testator's daughters and their "bodily heirs or the living heirs of their bodies," with a provision as to how the property shall go if any of them should "die before having or leaving any heir," the testator, in using the word "heir," meant "child," or a definite failure of issue; and, when a daughter gave birth to a child, her estate became absolute, and the limitation over was extinguished. English v. McCreary, 48 South. 113, 114, 157 Ala. 487.

In a will, drawn for testator by a notary public, which gave the remainder of the property to testator's wife for life, and provided that after her death it should be equally divided between her heirs, the word "heirs" could not be construed to mean "children," unless it clearly appeared from the context that it was so intended, and it could not be so construed in the present case; nothing showing that it was intended to be used in that sense, so that the remainder would go to the widow's heirs living at her death. De Bardelaben v. Dickson, 51 South. 986, 987, 166 Ala. 59.

Where a deed named a widow and "her heirs" as the grantors, the word "heirs" will be taken as meaning children, and the deed is sufficient as against the objection that the grantors are not named in the body of the deed. Sloss-Sheffield S. & I. Co. v. Lollar, 54 South. 272, 274, 170 Ala. 239.

Where a husband executed a deed, in consideration of a sum of money and love and affection, to his wife for life, and at her death, to his "heirs," the grantee being the grantor's second wife, and the stepmother of his son, who survived both of them, the word "heirs" was not used in a technical sense, but in the sense of children as referring to the grantor's son, so that at the grantee's death the son took the property conveyed in remainder. Boone v. Baird, 44 South. 929, 930, 91 Miss. 420.

Where testator left his property to his wife and three children in equal proportions during their natural life, "and to the children and the heirs of their bodies" at the time of their death, and provided that, if they have no children or heirs of their bodies, it shall be again divided between his wife and children, "or such of them as shall survive, and to their heirs, share and share alike, * * * and all the children of my deceased children," the words "heirs" and "bodily heirs" mean children. Davenport v. Collins, 48 South. 733, 735, 95 Miss. 358.

A testatrix during the lifetime of her four children executed a will, giving to a daughter corporate stock for life, and declaring that at her death the same should be "equally divided among the heirs" of the four children. Held, that the word "heirs" was equivalent to the word "children," and the stock on the death of the daughter passed to the then children of the four children of the testatrix, though one of testatrix's four children was still living. Kalbach v. Clark, 110 N. W. 599, 602, 133 Iowa, 215, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 801, 12 Ann. Cas. 647.

After the marriage of a widow, her father executed a deed to her, her husband, and her heirs, and to the heirs and assigns of the "party of the second part." At the time of the conveyance the widow had two children, and thereafter another child was born to her and her second husband. Held, that the word "heirs," as used in the deed, should be construed to mean "children," and hence the deed conveyed to the widow and her second husband an estate in one-third of the land by the entirety, and vested a two-thirds interest in the widow's two children by her first marriage. Fullagar v. Stockdale, 101 N. W. 576, 578, 138 Mich. 363.

The word "heirs" in a will making a gift to "the heirs which my daughter * * * now has and which she may hereafter have" means her children. Spicer v. Connor, 132 N. Y. Supp. 877, 879, 148 App. Div. 334.

Under B. & C. Comp. § 5554, providing that a testator who fails to name or provide for his child, shall be deemed to die intestate as to such child, a testator who dies leaving children, and by his will leaves all his property to his wife "to have and to hold the same during her natural life or to sell and convey the said property for the benefit of herself and her heirs," dies intestate so far as his children are concerned; the word "heirs" used in the will not being the equivalent of "children." Neal v. Davis, 99 Pac. 69, 71, 58 Or. 423.

A testamentary gift to a designated sister of testator, to be divided into four equal parts, one to be retained by her, and the remaining three to be given to three sisters named, or their heirs, and, in the event either shall die leaving no heirs, the share shall go to the sisters or their heirs who shall be living, is a gift to the designated sister, who alone survived the other sisters, dying without leaving children before testator's death; the word "heirs" meaning children. Kalles v. Ewert, 94 N. E. 105, 106, 248 Ill. 612.

The word "heirs," as used in a deed from a husband to his wife for life, with remainder to his heirs at her death, or before marriage as his widow, means children. Shirey v. Clark, 81 S. W. 1057, 1058, 72 Ark. 539.

Where a will provided that, if a life tenant should die before 25 years, a certain portion of his income should go to his mother, and "the rest to be divided between the heirs living and the heirs of any deceased," the word "heirs," as first employed in the first sentence, means the children of testatrix, and, as secondly employed, the children or descendants of such of her children as may be dead. Dulaney v. Dulaney (Ky.) 79 S. W. 195, 197.

Testator bequeathed to a trustee $20,000, to pay the income thereof to testator's son during his life, and also $5,000 to the same trustee to pay the income thereof to a grandson during his life, and also bequeathed to the son all the residue of the estate, including the $5,000 bequest. A codicil provided that, after the decease of the son "and all of his lawful heirs, I give and bequeath, in equal shares, the said $20,000 in trust" to seven named nephews and nieces, "to them and their heirs and assigns forever." Held that, by the use of the word "heirs" in the expression "after the decease of my son and all of his lawful heirs," testator meant the "children" of the son, and it was the intention of the testator that the nephews and nieces should not take anything under the bequest until after the death of the son and all of his children, though there was no express disposition of the income accruing on the fund after the death of the son, as such income would fall into the residue, which by the terms of the will belonged to the son's estate. McAllister v. Hayes, 79 Atl. 726, 728, 76 N. H. 108.

In a will by which testator devised all his real estate to his widow so long as she should remain such, and then provided that certain of his real estate should not be sold or incumbered, and, on the death of the widow, should be owned and used by his children as equal co-owners, "but in case of the death of any one leaving heirs, then the share of such deceased child," in equal portions, should descend to his or her heirs, and, on the death of the children or any of them, the property should descend to their respective heirs in fee simple absolute, the word "heirs" in the clause, "in case of the death of any one leaving heirs," meant children or heirs of the body. Winter v. Dibble, 95 N. E. 1093, 1099, 251 Ill. 200.

A will devising the income of certain real estate to testator's daughter for life, and on her death one-half of the income to go to her issue, if any, and the balance to testator's surviving heirs, was not objectionable as creating a perpetuity; the word "heirs" being used in the sense of children, and the devise of the income, without limit, carrying the property itself. Guesnard v. Guesnard, 55 South. 524, 526, 173 Ala. 250.

Testator devised the income of certain real estate to his daughter for life, and provided that at her death, should she have issue, such issue should receive one-half of the income, and the other half be equally divided between testator's other heirs, as thereafter mentioned, but, should there be no issue of the daughter, then the property should revert to testator's estate, and the income be equally divided between his surviving heirs and the children of such of his heirs who had died leaving issue; that the property should not be sold, but should be kept as a source of income to his heirs. The balance of his real and personal property was given to specifically named persons. Held, that the word "heirs," as used in the will, meant children, and that the devisees under such clause took per capita, and not per stirpes. Guesnard v. Guesnard, 55 South. 524, 525, 173 Ala. 250.

Testatrix devised real estate to her daughter for life, and at her death to her heirs, and declared that the property should be free from any control of her husband, and should belong to the daughter and the heirs of her body, and should not be liable for any debts of the husband. Held, that the will, executed while the rule in Shelley's Case was in force, and while the married woman's law (Acts 1849-50, p. 63), under which a husband became the trustee of his wife's separate estate, was in force, created a fee-simple estate in the daughter; the word "heirs" or "heirs of the body" not meaning "children." Terry v. Hood, 55 South. 428, 424, 172 Ala. 40.

In a will by which testatrix gave to her husband "all my possessions, land, stock, farming implements, household and kitchen furniture, him all I have, his lifetime (if I leave know heirs)," with the request that, if testatrix left no heirs, he would give all to persons named, the word "heirs" was to be construed as meaning "children," and it was the intention of testatrix that the property should go to her husband for life, then to her children, should she leave any at her death, and then over to the persons named. Swindell v. Smaw, 72 S. E. 1, 156 N. C. 1.

"Heirs" in the Creek Law of Descent and Distribution, § 8, set forth in Perryman's Digest of 1900, providing that the surviving spouse shall be entitled to one-half of the estate of the other spouse, if there are no heirs, and an heir's part if there should be other heirs, means children. De Graffenreid v. Iowa Land & Trust Co., 95 Pac. 624, 634, 20 Okl. 687.

A conveyance to the "heirs" of a living person is a conveyance to his children as tenants in common, including a child en ventre sa mere; Code, § 1828, providing that a child unborn, but in esse, shall be deemed a person capable of taking by deed. At common law, where the limitation in the deed was simply to the heirs of a living person, and nothing else appeared to indicate the special intention of the grantor as to who should take, the deed was void, because no grantor was sufficiently designated. Our statute completely reversed this principle, and now, by virtue of its wise provision, such a limitation is conclusively presumed to, be intended for the children of the person named therein. The language of the statute is too plain for any possible doubt as to its true meaning. It is as follows (Code, § 1829): "Any limitation by deed, will or other writing, to the heirs of a living person, shall be construed to be to the children of such person, unless the contrary intention appear by the deed or will." Campbell v. Everhart, 52 S. E. 201, 203, 139 N. C. 508 (citing Broom's Legal Maxims [8th Ed.] p. 521, marg. p. 523). See, also, Condon v. Secrest, 62 S. E. 921, 923, 149 N. C. 201.

A will directed that testatrix's mother should have the entire use and control of the property during her life, and that the H. building should go to testatrix's brother, and the residue of her property, both real and personal, should "go to the heirs of my sister F." The will was drawn by an unskilled person unfamiliar with technical legal terms, and, when it was executed, sister F. was about 32 years of age, and testatrix's mother, the life tenant, was much older. Held that, in view of the improbability of sister F. dying before the life tenant so as to have "heirs" at the life tenant's death, that word would be construed as meaning "children," so that the sister's children would take a vested remainder in the residue of the property other than the H. building. Castleberry v. Stringer (Ala.) 57 South. 849, 850.

A deed recited that it was made between the grantors as parties of the first part and one L. and her two heirs as parties of the second part. The granting clause recited that, in consideration of love and affection, "I do hereby sell and convey" unto L. and her children certain described real property, the habendum clause reciting that it was to have and to hold with all appurtenances thereto, and that the party of the first part covenanted with the said party of the second part to warrant the title. It was also recited that the conveyance was to the heirs of L. for their lifetime, and after their death to their children. Held that, it being the obvious intention of the grantor that the two children of L. should take some estate, the word "heirs" should be construed as "children," and they take only a life estate with remainder to their children. Harkness v. Meade, 147 S. W. 10, 11, 148 Ky. 565.

Where a testator gave a nominal sum to each of his five children, gave the balance to his wife for life, or during widowhood, with a gift over, on her death or remarriage, to his "surviving heirs" equally, and provided that charges against his "heirs, their husbands or wives as contracted * * * by them with me," should be deducted from their share, and a daughter, whose husband was indebted to the testator, died before testator, leaving children, it was held that the words "surviving heirs" meant surviving children, and referred to such of testator's children as should be surviving at the date of their mother's death or remarriage, and that the children of the deceased daughter did not take. Howell v. Steelman, 74 Atl. 976, 977, 76 N. J. Eq. 423.

The granting clause of a deed was to the grantor's son H. and to his "heirs," "on the terms and conditions hereafter stated," the habendum clause to H. and his "heirs," the special warranty to H. and his "heirs," and the "terms and conditions hereafter stated" were: "The intention * * * is to vest sufficient title in * * * H. to the * * * property so that he can, during his life, use, occupy, and enjoy it * * * as completely as though he had a fee simple, and at his death his children are to have a fee-simple title. Should * * * H. die without issue, then the title * * * is to revert in us * * * if we are living; if we are not living, then according to the descent and distribution laws * * * such of our heirs are to receive and have the same title as he gets, and whoever inherits said property hereafter shall have a fee-simple title." Held, that the rule in Shelley's Case did not apply, so as to vest the fee in H.; it appearing from the subsequent terms and conditions referred to in the granting clause, and which are to be read as if incorporated in it, that the word "heirs" therein is used, not in its legal sense, but in the sense of "children" or "issue" of H. living at his death, who are to take by purchase, as remaindermen. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 122 S. W. 15, 16, 103 Tex. 15.

A deed by a father to his three sons in consideration of love and affection, and for the further consideration that his wife should control a part of the estate for her support, should she remain his widow, and which provided that the land should be equally divided between the sons, and should not be sold to any person "during lifetime, and after our death" the same should be equally divided "between the heirs of" the three sons, and which gave the privilege to the sons of selling to each other, and that in case of sales the heirs should have no claim, etc., conveyed the land to the sons, subject to the limitation that during the lifetime of the father and his wife the sons should not convey the land to a stranger, but might sell their respective parts to each other; the word "heirs" referring to the sons; and the word "of," following the word "heirs" in the quoted phrase, being inserted by mistake. Polley v. Adkins, 140 S. W. 551, 552, 145 Ky. 370.

In Laws (Ed. 1830) p. 333, tit. 77, c. 1, § 4, which provides that an executor shall account in money for the debts due the deceased, by him received, or which by due diligence might have been collected and received; that he shall also be charged in money with the appraised value of the goods and chattels of the deceased, or, if sold under a license, with the proceeds of the sale, provided that if there be any "personal estate" specifically bequeathed or undisposed of at the request of the heirs or legatees, or preserved for their greater benefit, and not wanted for the payment of debts, the executor or administrator shall be discharged therefrom by producing and delivering it to the heirs or legatees to whom it belongs; and Rev. St. 1842, c. 159, § 6, which provides that any property may be reserved at a sale, unless needed for the payment of debts, for the benefit or on the request of heirs or legatees, and that the administrator shall be discharged by delivering the same to persons entitled thereto—the word "heirs" includes minors, so that the guardian of a minor was authorized to accept from the executor choses in action as a part of his ward's estate in lieu of cash. Stevens v. Meserve, 61 Atl. 420, 422, 78 N. H. 293, 111 Am. St. Rep. 612.

Testator, by the eleventh clause of his will, bequeathed certain lands to the heirs of his brother A., naming his three children, and giving to each an undivided one-third. He then, in the same clause, bequeathed to the "surviving heirs" of the brother an undivided half interest in certain live stock, provided that if either of the "above-named children" should die without issue before testator's death the share of such child should go to the survivors, and if any should die childless such share should revert to the survivors; it being testator's intention that his estate should descend to the heirs of his own blood, except the property devised to his wife. He thereafter bequeathed all the residue of his estate, one-third to C. and his heirs, and one-third, share and share alike, to the surviving heirs of the brother referred to in the eleventh clause. Held, that the two clauses should be construed together, and that the words "surviving heirs" were used synonymously with the words "surviving children," and hence did not include the granddaughter of such brother, so as to entitle her to share under the residuary clause. Dunshoe v. Dunshoe, 96 N. E. 298, 300, 251 Ill. 405.

Testator, who left surviving him a sister and nephew and nieces, the children of a predeceased brother, devised all of his real and personal property equally between the two sons of a predeceased sister, share and share alike, without other claim to the estate as long as they or one of their lawful heirs lived, and provided that, if one should die before the other, the survivor should take his share, and that, if either devisee should have any lawful heirs, they were to have his share of the estate, and that, if both died without heirs, the property should revert. Held, that the word "heirs," construed in the light of the circumstances, was used in the will in the sense of "children," or heirs of the body, so that each of the devisees took a fee conditional, with remainder to the other in the event of his death without issue. Du Bose v. Flemming, 76 S. E. 277, 98 S. C. 182.

Collateral heirs or parents

Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 46, providing by sections 6, 14, and 21 for the descent of real estate, declares by section 27 that if, in the descending or collateral line, any parent shall be dead, a child or children shall, by representation, be considered in the same degree as the parent would have been if living, and shall have the same share of the estate as the parent would have been entitled to if living, "provided that there be no representation admitted among collaterals after brother's and sister's children"; and article 93, § 129, provides: "After children, descendants, father, mother, brothers and sisters of the deceased, and their descendants, all collateral relations in equal degree shall take, and no representation among such collaterals shall be allowed." Testatrix directed her estate to be converted into cash and distributed among her "heirs at law and next of kin, who should be entitled thereto under the laws of Maryland." Held, in a contest between the first cousins of the deceased and the children of a deceased first cousin, that the children of the deceased first cousin were not within the class described by the will and took nothing thereunder. Suman v. Harvey, 79 Atl. 197, 204, 114 Md. 241.

A testator provided in his will that certain real estate devised to his four sons in equal proportions should not be sold until the youngest child arrived at the age of majority, and, "in case either one of them shall die without heirs or legal representatives of his own, the survivors shall take his portion of the said estate equally." An infant son died after the death of the testator. Held, that the words "heirs of his own," when applied to the children of the deceased, meant lineal descendants or issue, and that the mother of the deceased child did not inherit its share of the real estate devised in the will. Coleman v. Coleman, 76 Pac. 439, 440, 69 Kan. 39.

In 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4828, providing that, when the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death, etc., the term "heirs" means the widow and children of the deceased, and does not include parents and collateral heirs. Copeland v. City of Seattle, 74 Pac. 582, 583, 88 Wash. 415, 65 L. R. A. 333. The words "heirs" and "personal representatives," as used in this statute, include only the widow and children of the deceased person, and do not authorize an action by the mother for the wrongful death of her unmarried adult son, on whom she was dependent. Manning v. Tacoma Ry. & Power Co., 75 Pac. 904, 34 Wash. 406. The Supreme Court, in construing the word "heirs" so as not to include "parents," did so upon the theory that it was limited in its scope to the persons theretofore specifically mentioned in the statute, and such decision was conclusive under the rule of stare decisis against the right of a surviving husband to maintain an action for the death of his wife. Johnson v. Seattle Electric Co., 81 Pac. 705, 706, 39 Wash. 211.

Rev. Codes 1905, § 7687, provides that, in an action for wrongful death, such damages shall be given as the jury think proportionate to the injuries resulting from the death to the persons entitled to recover. Section 7688 provides that the action shall be brought by the persons named, and in the order prescribed, the surviving husband or wife, if any, the surviving children, if any, the personal representative. Section 7689 provides that the amount recovered shall not be liable for decedent's debts, but shall inure to the exclusive benefit of his heirs at law in such shares as the judge shall fix. Held, that the term "heirs at law" is not limited to the husband or wife or children of decedent, but includes his brothers and sisters, for whose benefit an action may be maintained by the personal representative. Satterberg v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 121 N. W. 70, 71, 19 N. D. 38.

Under Rev. Codes N. D. 1905, § 5187, subsec. 2, providing that if the decedent leaves no issue, nor husband nor wife, the estate must go to the father, and, if he is dead, to the mother, and section 7688, authorizing an action for wrongful death, the recovery, under section 7689, inuring to the exclusive benefit of the heirs at law, the term "heirs at law" includes the father of the decedent who leaves no wife or children, and an action may be maintained for his benefit by the personal representatives of the decedent. Stangeland v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 117 N. W. 386, 387, 105 Minn. 224.

As creditor

See Creditor.

Descendants or issue

Descendant as including, see Descendant.

Issue as including, see Issue (Descendants).

One's heirs are his surviving descendants, capable of inheriting. Price v. Griffin, 64 S. E. 372, 373, 150 N. C. 523, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 935.

Where a testator directs that if his son shall have any lawful issue at his death the estate shall vest in his heirs forever, the word "heirs" means the same as lawful issue, and is not used in its legal sense. Harkleroad v. Bass, 36 South. 537, 538, 84 Miss. 483.

Where a will, after a devise to two persons, provides that, in case either should die leaving no heirs, the other shall be entitled to all, and the will as a whole shows a fixed purpose to devolve the entire estate upon these two devisees to the exclusion of all other direct descendants of the testatrix, the word "heirs" in the limitation over will be construed as meaning "issue" or direct descendants of the persons named; the words "heirs" and "issue" being convertible when such a construction is necessary to carry out the paramount intent of the testatrix. Brown v. Tuschoff, 138 S. W. 497, 499, 235 Mo. 449. See, also, Horton v. McCall, 82 Atl. 472, 233 Pa. 405.

Devisees or legatees

Devisee as including, see Devisee.

A legatee under a universal title is not an heir. Succession of Bossu, 38 South. 878, 879, 115 La. 13.

The term "heirs" may be regarded as a synonym of "legatees" when the will shows that it so intended. Kenan v. Graham, 33 South. 699, 700, 135 Ala. 585.

The word "heir" is technically distinguishable from "legatee" or "devisee," but is sometimes used "in its more general sense, as indicating the person upon whom property devolves on the death of another"; and hence, when the intention is clear, the word may sometimes be treated as equivalent to "legatee" or devisee. Taylor v. Perkins, 56 Atl. 741, 742, 72 N. H. 349 (citing Shapleigh v. Shapleigh, 44 Atl. 107, 108, 69 N. H. 577, 579).

While the word "heir" in a will may be construed to mean "devisee" when it refers to a relationship to the testator, it could not be so construed when used in a codicil and having reference to a relationship with another than the testator. Wells v. Fuchs, 125 S. W. 1137, 1140, 226 Mo. 97.

Where such is the intent of the will, the words "heirs" and "devisees" will be deemed to mean "legatees" when applied to gifts of personalty, and hence where gifts to certain persons were gifts of personalty or interests therein, but the gifts were given in terms "I give and devise," and the words "devise" and "devisees" were clearly used in the granting clauses of the will as intending to cover interests in personalty and the recipient of such interest, the recipients thereof will be deemed "devisees" within a provision of the will that, if any of the devisees should aid or attempt to prevent the proof of the will, all the expenses of probating it should be taken by the executor from the share of each one so attempting. Kayhart v. Whitehead, 76 Atl. 241, 242, 77 N. J. Eq. 12.

Civ. Code, § 1265, provides that a homestead, selected by one spouse in the separate property of the other without the consent of the latter, on the death of the owner goes to his "heirs or devisees." Code Civ. Proc. § 1474, provides that in such case the property passes on the death of the owner to his "heirs," and such section, having been amended in 1880 ten days after the amendment of section 1265 of the Civil Code, must be taken as the last expression of the legislative will, and, since the word "heirs" cannot be construed to include "devisees," as repealing by implication the part of section 1265 of the Civil Code which would permit the owner to dispose of such a homestead by devise to the exclusion of the rights of the surviving spouse or other heir at law. In re McGee's Estate, 97 Pac. 299, 300, 154 Cal. 204.

The statute prohibiting parties from testifying in actions by or against the "heirs" or legal representatives of a decedent does not include devisees and legatees. Emerson v. Scott, 87 S. W. 369, 370, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 65.

Where the sole legatee under a will was the mother of the decedent, assignments by her of money due as "heir at law" will be construed as transferring portions of the interest to which she is entitled under the will, and hence her assignee is one interested in that instrument, and as such entitled to petition for probate of the will and for the issuance of letters of administration to himself. In re Rankin's Estate, 127 Pac. 1034, 164 Cal. 138.

Distributees

The words "heirs" and "distributees," in Rev. St. 1893, § 2316, as amended by Act 1898 (22 St. at Large, p. 788), which makes heirs at law or distributees of a person the beneficiaries in an action for wrongful death where they were dependent on deceased for support, have the same meaning. To determine the heir, it is necessary only to inquire to whom, under the law of the land, the estate would pass in case of intestacy. Kitchen v. Southern Ry., 48 S. E. 4, 7, 68 S. C. 554, 1 Ann. Cas. 747.

The constitution and by-laws of a beneficial association provided that on the decease of a member in good standing the society should pay to the survivors, and that the treasurer should not pay death benefits before the proper "heirs" had been ascertained, and every member had the opportunity in his lifetime to inform the society as to his "heirs." Held, that the word "heirs" was used in a strict legal sense, and the beneficiaries were those to whom the personal property of the deceased would go in case of intestacy. Dielmann v. Berka, 97 N. Y. Supp. 1027, 1029, 49 Misc. Rep. 486.

The use of the word "heirs" in a will in reference to personalty, means those who take the personal estate of an intestate. In re Schnitzler, 114 N. Y. Supp. 934, 935, 61 Misc. Rep. 218.

The clause requiring equal division of the remainder among "the heirs of the W. family" meant that the remainder was to be given to those of testator's family who would be his heirs if he died intestate, such use of the word "heir" being a common and colloquial use, so that the widow of testator's brother cannot claim as a remainderman. In re Womersley's Estate, 127 Pac. 645, 646, 164 Cal. 85 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3252).

In a bequest of personalty, the word "heirs" means prima facie those who would have been entitled to it had the testator died intestate. Jacobs v. Prescott, 65 Atl. 761, 762, 102 Me. 63.

The word "heirs" in a will primarily is used in its legal or technical sense, and, unless the context shows a contrary intention, must be construed as meaning all those who in case of intestacy would be entitled by law to inherit on the death of the testator or ancestor named. Flint v. Wisconsin Trust Co., 138 N. W. 629, 631, 151 Wis. 231.

Where a patent issues from the United States "to the heirs" of a deceased person, and there is no act of Congress specifying or designating who shall be deemed heirs, in such case resort must be had to the laws of the state where the land is situated for the purpose of determining who were the heirs of the deceased. Powell v. Powell, 126 Pac. 1058, 1059, 22 Idaho, 531.

When a contract or a testamentary disposition passes property to persons described as "heirs," personal property will pass to those entitled to personal estate under the statute of distribution. Throp v. Throp, 61 Atl. 377, 378, 69 N. J. Eq. 530 (citing Leavitt v. Dunn, 28 Atl. 590, 56 N. J. Law, 309, 44 Am. St. Rep. 402; Reen v. Wagner, 26 Atl. 467, 51 N. J. Eq. 1).

Where the by-laws of an insurance company permit insurance in favor of one's "heirs," and a policy provides for payment to the insured's "heirs," the word "heirs" must be regarded as intended to describe those persons who would take in case of intestacy. Burns v. Burns, 82 N. E. 1107, 1108, 190 N. Y. 211.

When the word "heirs" is used in gifts of personalty, it should primarily be held to refer to those who would be entitled to take under the statute of distribution, such as children or next of kin. Vogt v. Vogt, 26 App. D. C. 46, 55.

Where a testator devises his estate in trust, and directs that on a final settlement the rest and residue thereof shall be divided and distributed and paid to his heirs at law in the same proportion as the same would have been paid to them if he had died without a will, the term "heirs at law" refers to the then heirs at law; that is, at the time of the authorized distribution. Hottel v. State, 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 702, 709.

"Heirs at law," as used in Kirby's Dig. §§ 6289, 6290, giving a right of action for death by wrongful act, and providing that the same shall be brought by the heirs at law of decedent where there is no personal representative and the amount recovered shall be for the benefit of the widow and next of kin, includes those receiving a distributive share of the estate and the beneficiaries of the action, and only one action may be brought for a person's death under the statute. McBride v. Berman, 94 S. W. 913, 79 Ark. 62.

The "surviving heirs" in a devise to a child, followed by the provision that on his death without bodily heirs the property shall go to the surviving heirs of testator, are the distributees under the statute of distribution in being at the death of the child, and until his death it cannot be ascertained who will take as surviving heirs. Barber v. Crawford, 67 S. E. 7, 9, 85 S. C. 54.

Grandchildren

In a will postponing disposition of testator's principal estate until after the death of his wife and his three children, there were clauses giving to the wife one-third of the income during her life, and distributing the remainder of the income to the children in specified shares. Then followed these clauses: "Item. Upon the death of my wife I do order that the one-third of the income hereby bequeathed to her shall be distributed among my surviving three children." "Upon the death of any of my three children, I do order the portion bequeathed to him or her to be distributed among his or her heirs." Held, that the word "heirs," as here used, included a grandchild of a deceased child of the testator. In re Smlsson, 82 Atl. 614, 616, 79 N. J. Eq. 233.

Where by the terms of a will testator left certain property to the "heirs" of his children, vesting the control of the property in the children until their death, and made no express provisions for after-born grandchildren, only the grandchildren living at the death of testator are entitled to share in the estate. Wyman v. Johnson, 59 S. W. 250, 251, 68 Ark. 369.

Stepchildren

A stepchild of a decedent is not his child and heir at law, within the meaning of the statutes of descent (Gen. St. 1906, § 2295). Houston v. McKinney, 45 South. 480, 481, 54 Fla. 600.

Heir apparent or presumptive

No one can be an heir during the lifetime of his ancestor. Templeman v. McFerrin (Tex.) 113 S. W. 838, 884; Gerard v. Beecher, 68 Atl. 438, 441, 80 Conn. 363, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 900; Westcott v. Meeker, 122 N. W. 984, 970, 144 Iowa, 811, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 947.

Heirs living at death of testator or ancestor

A bequest or devise to "heirs," or "heirs at law," goes to those who are such when testator dies, unless different intent is manifested. Welch v. Blanchard, 94 N. E. 811, 208 Mass. 523.

A devise to the testator's "lawful heirs" should be construed as referring to those who are such at the testator's death, unless a different intent is plainly manifested by the will. Hill v. Hill, 132 N. W. 738, 739, 90 Neb. 43, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 198; Harris v. Ingalls, 68 Atl. 84, 37, 74 N. H. 339.

A devise to "heirs" or "next of kin" is construed as referring to those who answer that description at the time of the testator's death or who would have taken, by descent, had he died intestate, unless a different intention is plainly manifested by the will. Summan v. Harvey, 79 Atl. 197, 199, 114 Md. 241.

Where a testator devised one-half of his property to his wife for life, remainder to his heirs at law, the property vested in those who were his heirs at law at the time of his death, for not only does the language show the testator's intent to have the gift become complete upon his death, but an "heir" is he upon whom the law casts an estate upon the death of the owner. Mitchell v. Vest (Iowa) 136 N. W. 1054, 1056.

Where there is a devise in trust to pay the net income to A. for life, with a discretionary power in the trustees to use part of such income to pay off a mortgage incumbrance upon the land, and, after the death of A., a devise in fee simple to her "heirs at law," held, that the testator used the words "heirs at law" to designate the persons who at the time of A.'s death would be her heirs at law, and that consequently the rule in Shelley's Case does not apply. Shugrue v.

The term "heirs at law" of a beneficiary of a mutual benefit certificate, as used in the society's by-law providing for the distribution of the proceeds of the certificate to insure "heirs at law," mean those who answered the description at the time of the death of the insured. Anderson v. Supreme Council Catholic Benevolent Legion, 60 Atl. 759, 760, 69 N. J. Eq. 176.

By the express provisions of statute, when a remainder is limited to take effect on the death of any person without heirs, the word "heirs" must be construed to mean heirs living at the death of the person named as ancestor. In re Korn's Will, 107 N. W. 659, 662, 128 Wis. 428; Schlereth v. Schlereth, 66 N. E. 130, 132, 173 N. Y. 444, 93 Am. St. Rep. 616.

Sess. Acts 1815-16, p. 82, abolished estates tail, and Rev. St. 1825, p. 216, and Rev. St. 1899, § 4592, provide that in cases where by the common law or the statute law of England any person might become seised in fee tail of any lands, etc., he shall have only a life estate, and the remainder in fee simple shall pass to the person next in line, and Rev. St. 1899, § 4593, provides that where a remainder in lands shall be limited to take effect on the death of any person without heirs or without issue or on failure of issue, the word "heirs" or "issue" shall be construed to mean heirs or issue living at the death of the person named as ancestor. Testator devised lands to his two sons and to their heirs and assigns forever, and provided that the same should not be sold before the younger of the two should become of lawful age, and that, should either of them die without issue, the survivor, his heirs and assigns, should take the part bequeathed to the son so dying, and that, in the event both should die without issue, then testator's surviving heirs should take. Held that, by the use of the word "heirs" in connection with the word "issue" testator created what would have been at common law or by the statute de donis an estate tail, or, Rev. St. 1899, § 4593, not being applicable to an executory devise, even if the estate was a fee simple in the first instance, it was cut down to a fee tail by the clause declaring that in case of the death of both sons without leaving issue the estate was to revert to the heirs of testator, the failure of issue referred to being an indefinite failure of issue, and hence, under section 4592, the two sons took a life estate, with remainder in fee to their children. Gannon v. Pauk, 83 S. W. 453, 457, 183 Mo. 265.

Under a will directing the investment of a sum of money for a daughter of testator during her life, and, at her death without issue, to be paid to "my (testator's) heirs," as part of the residuary estate, and dividing the residuary estate into five equal shares, for the benefit of each of testator's five children, the shares of the daughters being given to trustees, who were to pay the income thereof to the respective daughters during life, and, at the death of a daughter, without issue, her share was to go to "my (testator's) heirs" at law, and providing that the cestui qui trustent should not exercise any power over their respective interests, and should take only for life or for years, as the case might be, with remainder to their or to "my (testator's) heirs," on the death, without issue, of a daughter, after the death of one of the sons without issue, one-fifth of the fund invested for her went to the daughter's executrix, since the remainders were to the persons who were testator's "heirs at law" at his death. Rotch v. Rotch, 53 N. E. 268, 270, 178 Mass. 125.

A will executed by H. bequeathed to testator's wife all his property during her life, and provided that "at her death what of it that is left is to go equally to my heirs at law. My object is to keep my property in the H. family." The next paragraph gave testator's son $25 in addition to a home with testator's wife, and provided "this is in addition to his rightful share of my estate after the death of my wife." Held, that testator's son took a vested remainder, and not a remainder contingent upon his surviving testator's widow; the word "heirs" used in the first paragraph referring to testator's heirs living at the time of his death. Campbell v. Hinton, 150 S. W. 876, 150 Ky. 546.

Where testator left the residue of his estate in trust for the support of his daughter for life, and provided that, on her failure to make a will, the same should go to "her heirs at law," and the daughter died intestate without issue, the residuary estate passed on her death to those who were then her heirs at law, and not to those who would have been her heirs had she died when the testator did. Coffin v. Jernegan, 75 N. E. 958, 189 Mass. 503.

In a will directing executors to invest and keep invested a sum of money, pay the income to a nephew of testator during life, and on his death divide the trust fund among the nephew's heirs at law, the remaindermen take direct from the testator; the identity of the "heirs at law" being determined on the nephew's death, and including those who answer to that description in its strict legal meaning. In re Fay, 137 N. Y. Supp. 983, 984, 77 Misc. Rep. 514.

Heirs of the body

As used in a will giving land to testator's two sons, their heirs and assigns, forever, the word "heirs" is not used as "heirs of the body," and the sons took a fee. Gannon v. Albright, 81 S. W. 1162, 1163, 183 Mo. 238, 67 L. R. A. 97, 105 Am. St. Rep. 471.

The word "heirs," in a will whereby testator devised to his wife his dwelling house during widowhood, and, in the event of her marriage or death, the house should go to his son or his lawful heirs, and if he died without lawful heirs then to the children of testator's brother, must be construed to mean "heirs of the body," since there is a gift over to collaterals who would have been lawful heirs, and on the death of the son without issue, leaving a will, the children of testator's brother took the estate after the death of testator's widow. Mayer v. Walker, 63 Atl. 1011, 1012, 214 Pa. 440.

A devise to "heirs" on the death of a life tenant, especially in the case of a gift over upon death without heirs, may be confined to heirs of the body. Wallace v. Diehl, 95 N. E. 646, 647, 202 N. Y. 156, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 9.

"Under a deed, if the word 'heirs' is used in the granting clause, it may be cut down to mean heirs of the body of the donee, provided the words of appropriation are used in the context directly referring to the former word as if it should say 'to him and his heirs; that is, heirs of his body,' or if it should say 'to him and his heirs,' and then in a sentence closely following and referring to the gift say, 'to the aforesaid heirs of his body,' but, in the case of a will, words of direct reference are not necessary." Gannon v. Pauk, 83 S. W. 453, 456, 183 Mo. 265.

Though, where it appears under a will that heirs are to be ascertained as of a later date than testator's death, effect will be given the intent, ordinarily the term "heirs at law" refers to those who were or will be such at the testator or ancestor's death; and hence, where a will gave property to trustees to pay the income to a daughter for life, and provided that if she died without living descendants the remainder should "then" be distributed among testator's heirs at law, the heirs must be ascertained as of the testator's death, and not as of the daughter's—the term "heirs at law" appearing repeatedly in the will without qualification. That testator otherwise amply provided for those who were his heirs when he died does not show they were not entitled to share in the remainder. Boston Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Parker, 83 N. E. 307, 308, 197 Mass. 70.

of a remaining sister of deceased for life, and at her death a part thereof was to be conveyed to a certain person "if then living, but, if then deceased, to his heirs at law." Held, that the words "heirs at law" in the clause last quoted, referred to those who were such at the time of the death of the ancestor there mentioned, and not to those surviving at the period of distribution. Merrill v. Preston, 72 N. E. 941, 942, 187 Mass. 197.

Testator devised all his real estate to his widow so long as she should remain such, and then provided that certain of his real estate should not be sold or incumbered, and, on the death of the widow, should be owned and used by his children as equal co-owners, "but in case of the death of any one leaving heirs, then the share of such deceased child," in equal portions, should descend to his or her heirs, and, on the death of the children or any of them, the property should descend to their respective heirs in fee simple absolute. Held, that since the word "but" following the creation of the life estate in testator's children, marked the beginning of an exception, and was used in the sense of "except," "unless," "save," "yet," "still," "however," "nevertheless," the clause relating to the death of any of the children referred to their death during the lifetime of the widow, and that, as to children surviving her, no contingency longer existed, the word "heirs," in the last clause not being limited to heirs of the body, but referring to testator's heirs generally. Winter v. Dibble, 95 N. E. 1093, 1099, 251 Ill. 200.

Unless there is something contained in a policy of insurance expressing a contrary intention, then the words "heirs at law" of the insured must be taken in the ordinary legal sense to refer to those who are such at the time of his death. Where a policy contained the provision that the insurance should be payable to the "heirs at law" of the insured husband in case he outlived his wife who was beneficiary, on the death of the beneficiary the interest in the policy as such passed to the son as heir presumptive of the husband, and on the son's death to the "heirs at law" of the insured. Birge v. Franklin, 115 N. W. 278, 103 Minn. 482.

Husband or wife

The word "heirs" or "descendants," used in the creation of a separate estate of a married woman, will not, at her death, exclude the marital rights of the husband, except as to the children. Wood v. Reamer, 82 S. W. 572, 574, 118 Ky. 841.

Rev. St. 1909, § 350, providing that when a wife dies without any child or other descendants in being capable of inheriting, her widower shall be entitled to one-half of the property belonging to her at her death, absolutely, subject to payment of her debts, does not make the husband the wife's "heir" with respect to any of her property, but gives him an estate in the nature of dower; the word "heirs" meaning kindred who take an interest in real estate by the law of descent. Waddle v. Frazier, 151 S. W. 87, 89, 245 Mo. 391.

The words "heirs at law" in a will will be given their technical meaning, unless it appears from the entire will that they are used in a different sense, such as in the popular sense excluding testator's widow. Smith v. Winsor, 88 N. E. 482, 485, 239 Ill. 587.

The words "an heir," in a will devising real estate to testator's widow during widowhood and at her death to her son if he should outlive the widow, and, if the son should die without "an heir," his part should go to persons named, mean a child or its descendant, and does not mean the wife of the son surviving the son. Duzan v. Chappel, 84 N. E. 775, 776, 41 Ind. App. 651.

The phrase, "heirs at law," as used in the following clause, "whatever may remain of my estate shall be equally divided among the heirs at law of my said wife," includes the husband of the wife who had remarried after the death of the testator. Harris v. Rhodes, 180 Ill. App. 233, 235.

Where a will, after giving certain legacies, provided that the remainder of the estate should be distributed among the lawful heirs of testatrix according to law, the husband of testatrix was entitled to take as an heir. In English law the word "heirs" has always meant the person succeeding to the title to real estate on the death of another—one who succeeds to the title by force of law. A common definition is, "He upon whom the law casts an estate of inheritance immediately on the death of the owner." Turner v. Burr, 104 N. W. 379, 380, 141 Mich. 106.

"Husband and wife, though they may be entitled under our statutes to certain interests in the estate of each other, are not properly speaking 'heirs' of each other. The rights which the statutes give them respectively they do not take as 'heirs.'" Under a statute providing that, where a decedent leaves a widow and issue, one-third of his property shall be given to the widow, but, if he leave no issue, one-half shall be given to the widow, the widow does not take as "heir" of her deceased husband. Golder v. Golder, 49 Atl. 1050, 1051, 95 Me. 259.

A gift to testator's son's "heirs at law" under a will executed before the taking effect of Act March 26, 1895 (Laws 1895, c. 157), establishing a widow's right by descent in her deceased husband's real estate, does not include the son's widow. Houghton v. Hughes, 79 Atl. 909, 911, 108 Me. 233, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1287.

Under Pub. St. c. 125, § 1, providing for the descent of real property, a surviving husband is not entitled to take an interest in land as an "heir at law" of his deceased wife. Gardner v. Skinner, 80 N. E. 825, 826, 195 Mass. 164.

A devise of real estate to the "heirs" of a son does not include his widow. In re Raleigh's Estate, 55 Atl. 1119, 1122, 206 Pa. 451.

A patent to public land in Iowa, issued to the "heirs" of a deceased entryman under Timber Culture Act June 14, 1878, c. 190, 20 Stat. 113, which provided that, on the death of the entryman, his "heirs or legal representatives" might prove compliance with the conditions of the act and receive a patent, did not confer upon the widow of the deceased entryman any title to the land as heir, since under the law of Iowa, and the construction placed upon the term "heirs" by the land department, a widow, so far as her dower interest is concerned, there being direct descendants of deceased, is not an heir. Braun v. Mathieson, 116 N. W. 789, 790, 189 Iowa, 409.

Where a will directed that, on the death of testator's widow, all his estate then remaining should be divided into three equal parts, one to go to his son W. or to his heirs should he have died, the word "heirs" should be construed to mean "next of kin," or those related by blood, entitled to take the personal estate of one dying intestate, and did not include W.'s widow. Hess v. Zahn, 107 N. Y. Supp. 951, 953, 57 Misc. Rep. 515.

The term "heirs," as used in a will by which testatrix gave all her estate to two sisters for life, with remainder to the children of the sisters and a brother, or to their heirs in case of the death of any of the children before the survivor, referred only to children, and did not include the widow of a nephew dying before the surviving sister; the word "heirs" when applied to succession of personalty meaning next of kin, and, when applied to real estate, meaning persons so related to one by blood that he would take the estate in case of intestacy. Bayley v. Lawrence, 118 N. Y. Supp. 286, 133 App. Div. 888. See, also, Bayley v. Beekman, 117 N. Y. Supp. 88, 89, 62 Misc. Rep. 567.

The surviving noncitizen husband of a citizen of the Creek Nation who dies in possession of her allotment, set apart to her under Act. Cong. June 28, 1898, c. 517, 30 Stat. 495, prior to her certificate of allotment therefor, is, under the laws of descent and distribution of the Creek Nation, an "heir" of his deceased wife, and as such entitled to a "child's part" and to share and share alike therein with the children of his wife, whether they take by descent or by purchase. Sanders v. Sanders, 117 Pac. 338, 342, 28 Okl. 59.

By Pub. St. 1882, c. 124, § 1, a husband surviving his wife, who leaves no issue, takes her real estate in fee to the amount of $5,000. Testator's will required the income of his estate to be paid to his surviving children during their lives, and it was provided that upon the death of any son the income should be paid to the widow during her widowhood, and that upon the death of any daughter her share should be paid to the surviving husband, and that upon the death of any child leaving no surviving child or husband, or the death of any surviving husband, or marriage of any such widow, the shares should be paid to the issue of the deceased son or daughter, and in default of such issue to the heirs at law of the son or daughter. Held, that a surviving husband of a daughter took as his wife's "heir" up to the statutory amount; there being nothing to indicate that testator's general scheme was in all contingencies to limit his bounty to his own descendants. Gray v. Whittemore, 78 N. E. 422, 423, 192 Mass. 367, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1143, 116 Am. St. Rep. 246.

Under the laws of Ohio, a widow may be the heir of her deceased husband, and is included in the word "heirs" as used in a beneficial insurance certificate payable to the "heirs" of the husband. Burns v. Burns, 95 N. Y. Supp. 797, 800, 109 App. Div. 98.

Where decedent was survived by a widow and one child, such widow and child were his only heirs at law within Kirby's Dig. §§ 6289, 6290, providing for an action for wrongful death to be brought by the heirs at law of the deceased person, and were therefore the only necessary parties plaintiff. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Corman, 122 S. W. 116, 117, 92 Ark. 102.

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4628, provides that "the widow, or widow and her children, or child or children if no widow," of a man killed in a duel shall have a right of action against the person killing him, etc., and further provides that, "when the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, his heirs or personal representatives" may maintain an action for damages. The Supreme Court, in construing the word "heirs" so as not to include "parents," did so upon the theory that it was limited in its scope to the persons theretofore specifically mentioned in the statute. Held, that the decision was conclusive under the rule of stare decisis against the right of a surviving husband to maintain an action for the death of his wife. Johnson v. Seattle Electric Co., 81 Pac. 705, 706, 707, 39 Wash. 211.

The term "heir," as used in a statute making every illegitimate child an heir of the person acknowledging himself to be its father, is always appointed by the law. Its title is called into existence by the death of its ancestor, and its rights are governed by the law in force at the time of such death. Moen v. Moen, 92 N. W. 13, 15, 16 S. D. 210;

Morin v. Holliday, 77 N. E. 861, 862, 39 Ind. App. 201.

Where a child was born out of wedlock to an Indian woman, to whom Indian reservation lands were allotted, and such child survived her, he was her heir at law. Beam v. United States, 158 Fed. 474, 475.

Legal representatives

As legal representatives, see Legal Representatives.

As representative, see Representative.

The word "heirs" in articles of incorporation declaring that the object of the association is to provide for the families of deceased members, and that the certificate issued to a member shall entitle the "heirs or legal representative or designated beneficiary" to a specified benefit, is used in its proper sense. A distinction is clearly drawn between "heirs" and "legal representatives," and the use of the words is not mere tautology. Walker v. Peters, 124 S. W. 35, 36, 139 Mo. App. 681.

A will whereby testator devised his real estate to a trustee, and his heirs and assigns, for the benefit of the children of the trustee, with authority to manage it for their benefit, or at his option to convey the same to them, or to sell the same and hold the proceeds in trust, or pay the same over to the children at such times and manner as he shall deem most beneficial to them, imposes on the executors of the deceased trustee the duty of paying over the estate reduced to personalty to the beneficiaries; the word "heirs" including executors. Friedley v. Security Trust & Safe Deposit Co. (Del.) 84 Atl. 883, 886.

Natural offspring

See Natural Offspring.

Next of kin

Next of kin, including see Next of Kin.

The terms "heirs at law," when used with respect to personal property, may properly be regarded as meaning next of kin. Train v. Davis, 96 N. Y. Supp. 816, 820, 49 Misc. Rep. 162 (citing Tillman v. Davis, 95 N. Y. 17, 47 Am. Rep. 1; Woodward v. James, 22 N. E. 150, 115 N. Y. 346); In re Allison, 102 N. Y. Supp. 887, 891, 53 Misc. Rep. 222; Bayley v. Lawrence, 118 N. Y. Supp. 286, 288, 133 App. Div. 888; Bayley v. Beekman, 117 N. Y. Supp. 88, 89, 62 Misc. Rep. 567. See, also, Hess v. Zahn, 107 N. Y. Supp. 951, 953, 57 Misc. Rep. 515.

The common-law distinction between "next of kin" and "heirs at law" does not exist in our statutes of descent, but heirs at law are also the next of kin. L. T. Dickason Coal Co. v. Liddil, 94 N. E. 411, 413, 49 Ind. App. 40.

In a will by which testator devised the residue of his estate in trust for his wife for life, remainder to the children of his sisters, the "heirs and representatives" of any such children who died between testator's decease and the time of distribution to be entitled to such share or shares as their respective ancestors would have been entitled to receive if living, the word "heirs" must be construed to mean the same persons as "representatives," and both together should be construed to mean "next of kin." In re Nelson's Estate, 74 Atl. 851, 852, 9 Del. Ch. 1.

Testator gave money in trust for a nephew and niece to a trust company, the income to be paid quarterly to them during their lives, and on their deaths the principal to their respective heirs, with a provision that, if testator survived either of them, the principal of his or her portion should go to his or her heirs. The nephew died after testator, leaving a widow, but no issue. Held, that, as in a gift of personalty "heirs" are synonymous with "next of kin," the widow of the nephew was entitled to share. In re West's Estate, 63 Atl. 407, 408, 214 Pa. 35.

The term "next of kin" at least includes those entitled to take the personal estate in case of intestacy. While it is doubtless used sometimes as synonymous with the broad signification of "heirs at law," the term "heirs at law" is often used in its popular sense of including heirs in the legal sense, those on whom the law casts title to realty possessed by the intestate as the time of his death, and next of kin as well. Treating the latter term and the former only in their legal sense, the one refers to those who take the personalty of an intestate, and the other to those in whom the title to the realty possessed by the intestate vests immediately on his death. Under the statute there is very little difference between the two terms. In re Scaife's Will, 105 N. W. 920, 921, 126 Wis. 405.

Manner and amounts taken fixed

A devise of real estate to testatrix's nephew and "heirs" of a deceased niece equally gives an undivided half interest in the land to the nephew and an undivided half interest to the heirs of the niece per stirpes. Farley v. Farley, 115 S. W. 921, 922, 121 Tenn. 324.

Contingent remainder created

In a deed which granted land to H. and his wife for their lives, and during the life of the survivor of them, and at the death of such survivor, to the heirs of the body of the wife, their heirs and assigns, the words "heirs of the body" were words of purchase, and, as limited by the words "their heirs and assigns," did not indicate descendants of the life tenant who were to take in succession, but only the individuals who might be her heirs at her decease, and who themselves would become the ancestors from whom the succession would be derived, and from whom an estate in fee simple would descend, and, as it could not be ascertained who would be the heirs of the wife's body until her death, the interests of her heirs were contingent remainders during her life. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Hoppin, 94 N. E. 669, 671, 249 Ill. 406.

Testator conveyed certain real estate in trust for the use of his daughter and her husband, and the survivor of them, for life, with power to the survivor to devise the same among the children or descendants of the daughter and her then husband, with the power to the daughter and husband or survivor, with the consent of the grantor if living, otherwise with the consent of the grantor's wife if living, otherwise with the consent of the trustee if living, otherwise with the consent of the grantor's heirs, and on their objection with the consent of the orphans' court to sell the property and invest the proceeds on like trusts declared in the deed, that the fee-simple title to the property should become vested in the children and descendants of the daughter and her husband arriving at the age of 21, and, in default of such children or descendants, in trust for the grantor for life, with power to the grantor and his wife to devise to their children or descendants, in default of which in trust for such person or persons as were the grantor's heirs at law, and for their heirs forever. The daughter and her husband survived the grantor and her mother, but died without issue, and the power reserved to the grantor and his wife was not exercised. Held that the contingent remainders created by the trust deed vested in the heirs of the grantor, not as of the date of his death, but as of the date of the death of his daughter; the word "heirs" being used as designatio personae to ascertain the person or persons who are intended as the ultimate remaindermen, and not in any technical sense, nor as indicating a stirps or stock through which title is to be derived. The case falls within the class of those of Clagett v. Worthington (Md.) 8 Gill, 88; Demill v. Reid, 17 Atl. 1014, 71 Md. 175; and Larmour v. Rich, 18 Atl. 702, 71 Md. 369; Thom v. Thom, 61 Atl. 198, 199, 101 Md. 444.

Estate of inheritance created

The word "heirs" is indispensable to the conveyance of an estate of inheritance by deed and that no substitute is possible, unless the common law has been changed by statute. Ivey v. Peacock, 47 South. 481, 56 Fla. 440 (citing Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 37; Tiffany, Real Prop. § 20, 1 Wash. Real Prop. [6th Ed.] § 147).

Where the owner of a lot conveyed a nearby lot with a restriction that no building should be erected within certain limits without the consent of the grantor or her "heirs" the word "heirs" implied a heritable interest, so that the restriction was an appurtenance to the lot. Hemsley v. Marlborough House Co., 61 Atl. 455, 456, 68 N. J. Eq. 596.

Fee simple passed

At common law the word "heirs" was necessary to convey a fee-simple estate, no matter how plainly the intention so to do be expressed in other words of perpetuity. Hall v. Hall, 76 Atl. 706, 706, 106 Me. 389.

The ancient common-law rule was that the word "heirs" should appear, as indicating the grantee's estate, either in the premises or habendum, and generally, when appearing in the warranty clause alone, it would not enlarge into a fee a life estate conveyed in the premises or habendum. The modern rule in this state as to deeds executed prior to Acts 1879, c. 148 (Code, § 1280; Revisal 1905, § 946), providing for construction of a deed as a conveyance in fee, even without the word "heirs," was that, to carry out grantor's intent where it could be gathered from its face a deed should be construed to pass an inheritance in all cases when the word "heirs" was joined as a qualification to the name or designation of the bargainees, even in the clause of warranty, or when that covenant was confused with the premises or habendum, if by transposition, or by making a parenthesis, or in any way disregarding punctuation, such word could be made to qualify the words of conveyance in the premises, or the words "to have and to hold" in the habendum clause, even though thereby made to do double duty, but when there are no words of conveyance, or when the word "heirs" does not appear in any part, except in connection with the name of the bargainor, or with some expression such as "party of the first part," usual in the warranty or else where to designate grantor, the deed, if executed before the act of 1879, will be construed as vesting only a life estate in the bargainee, unless the instrument contains on its face conclusive intrinsic evidence that a fee was intended to pass. Following the description in a deed it continued: "The title to which I, the said I. W. W. (the grantor), of the first part, do warrant and defend against the lawful heirs of myself and any other person whatsoever, unto the said J. D. P. (the grantee), his heirs and assigns." Held that, though the word "heirs" appeared nowhere else in connection with the name of grantee, the deed conveyed a fee, and not merely a life estate. Carolina Real Estate Co. v. Bland, 67 S. E. 483, 485, 152 N. C. 225.

A deed prior to the statute of 1879 to convey a fee-simple estate was required to embrace the word "heirs" in connection with the grantee's name, and description in some way of his estate, and the mere use of the word in connection with the grantor's name was not sufficient. Boggan v. Somers, 67 S. E. 965, 966, 152 N. C. 390.

The term "heirs" is not necessary to convey an estate in fee simple. Ruhnke v. Aubert, 113 Pac. 38, 40, 58 Or. 6. Other words denoting the intention may be employed, such as a "devise of 'all my estate,' 'all my interest,' 'all my property,' 'my whole remainder,' 'all I am worth or own,' 'all my right,' 'all my title,' or 'all I shall be possessed of,' and many other expressions of like import, will carry an estate of inheritance, if there is nothing in the other parts of the will to limit or control the operation of the words. Snodgrass v. Brandenburgh, 71 N. E. 137, 72 N. E. 1030, 1031, 164 Ind. 59 (quoting from 4 Kent. Comm. [13th Ed.] 535).

The word "heirs," or its equivalent, is not necessary to create an absolute estate; every conveyance properly executed being construed to convey the fee, unless a less estate is mentioned and limited in it, when the courts will not, by construction, increase such estate into a fee simple, but, disregarding technical rules, will give effect to the maker's intention as far as lawful, if such intention can be gathered from its contents, under the express provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 3083. Cooper v. Mitchell Inv. Co., 66 S. E. 1090, 1091, 133 Ga. 769, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 291.

The word "heirs" is no longer necessary to create a fee. The word was long ago dispensed with by statute (Rev. St. 1890, § 4590). Ball v. Woolfolk, 75 S. W. 410, 412, 175 Mo. 278.

The word "heirs" may be taken to mean children when used in a will when the entire will and facts attending its execution make that its natural meaning. The use of the word "heirs" to pass a fee to the devisee under the will is unnecessary, and adds nothing to the quality of the estate devised, but it may be considered in ascertaining whether the intention was to vest a life estate in the devisee or the fee, when testator's intention is doubtful. Pratt v. Saline Valley R. Co., 108 S. W. 1099, 1105, 130 Mo. App. 175.

A deed conveying land to A. B. and others, trustees of a church, and their successors, in office forever, without using the word "heirs," manifested an intention to convey a fee, though the absence of the word "heirs" prevented a court of law from giving effect to it. Visitors M. E. Church of Cape Island v. Town, 20 Atl. 488, 489, 47 N. J. Eq. 400.

Where testator gave to a son and his heirs after him all his real estate, the son took an estate in fee simple; the word "heirs" not being used in the sense of "children." Nesbit v. Skelding, 62 Atl. 1062, 213 Pa. 487.

A deed recited that it was made between the grantor, named, party of the first part, and "W. and her heirs," of the second part, and that the first party conveyed unto "the said parties of the second part and assigns forever," and grantor agreed to warrant and defend "to the said parties of the second part, their administrators and assigns." The consideration was paid by grantee's husband. Held, that the deed conveyed the fee to the grantee, notwithstanding the use of the word "heirs." Burke v. Consolidated Coal Co., 147 S. W. 15, 16, 148 Ky. 573.

Where the granting clause of a deed conveyed lands to M. "during her life, grantee, and to her heirs and assigns, forever," and the habendum clause confirmed the same to M., and to her heirs and assigns, in fee simple, forever, it was declared that, if the granting clause of the deed was considered apart from the habendum, it would be difficult to hold that the word "heirs" should be considered as a word of purchase; that it was coupled with the word "assigns," and in this connection would be construed as meaning persons who would take from or through M., but that, when the words of the habendum were considered, the meaning was made clear and the deed conveyed a fee to M. and her heirs. Meacham v. Blaess (Mich.) 104 N. W. 579, 580, 141 Mich. 258.

Legacy vested

Where testator bequeathed to his wife for life the house in which he resided, at her death to be divided between his heirs per stirpes, the heirs took a vested estate in the remainder, at testator's death, and their interest was descendable in case of the death of any one of them during the continuance of the life estate, since the word "heirs" does not make the persons to take uncertain, and it is where the limitation is to the heirs of a person in existence that the remainder is contingent for uncertainty, and testator's heirs were his children and grandchildren. Well v. King (Ky.) 104 S. W. 380, 382.

Testatrix, by the fifth clause of her will, bequeathed money to be invested and the interest paid to testatrix's sister for life, and on her death, to testatrix's daughter, and, on the death of the daughter, the principal to be divided between the issue of the daughter, and, if no issue, then to testatrix's next of kin. The sixth clause devised the homestead to the executors, the rent thereof to be paid to the daughter during her life, and at her death the homestead to be conveyed to the child of such daughter, or the issue of such child, and, in the event of the failure of issue, then to testatrix's heirs at law. The seventh clause bequeathed the residue of the estate in trust, to be divided into two parts, and the income of one part paid to the daughter during her life, and, on the death of such daughter, the principal to be paid to her issue, and, if she leave no issue, to testatrix's next of kin. Held, that testatrix did not intend that her daughter should, in any event, take a vested remainder in the corpus of the trusts, subject only to her own life estate; the words "heirs at law" and "next of kin" not being used in their strict and primary meaning, viz., the persons who, in case of intestacy, would at the moment of testatrix's death succeed to her property. Salter v. Drowne, 98 N. E. 401, 402, 205 N. Y. 204.

Conflict of laws

Testator having died in Massachusetts, a compromise was entered into to terminate a contest of his will, which was approved by the court, providing that a certain fund should be set apart for the benefit of A., then a minor, not a party to the agreement, who was testator's granddaughter, and that on her death before the termination of the trust by lapse of time the fund "should be paid to her heirs at law," freed from the trust. A. thereafter moved from Massachusetts to New York, where she afterwards died. Under this agreement the persons entitled to take as "heirs at law" should be determined by the law of Massachusetts and not by the law of New York. Brandels v. Atkins, 90 N. E. 861, 862, 204 Mass. 471, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 230.

Where a policy of insurance payable to the insured's "heirs" was by its terms to be governed and construed according to the laws of Ohio providing that, when a person dies intestate and leaves no children or their legal representatives, the widow or widower shall be entitled as next of kin to all the personal property, etc., but, if the intestate leaves any children, the widow or widower shall be entitled to the first $400 and one-third of the remainder of the personal property subject to distribution, it was held that, though in New York "heirs" when applied to successors to personal estate means next of kin, and "next of kin" does not include a widow, under the policy and laws of Ohio the widow is entitled to personal property as "next of kin," and should share in the insurance with the insured's children. Burns v. Burns, 82 N. E. 1107, 1108, 190 N. Y. 211.

Personal property

In a gift of personalty to one for life and at her death to her "heirs," the word "heirs" is not a word of limitation, but indicates the class of whom ownership is vested subject to the life interest. Pillott v. Landon, 19 Atl. 25, 27, 46 N. J. Eq. 310.

The use of the term "heirs at law" in a bequest of personalty is not conclusive that it did not mean those entitled to take real estate by descent. Hartford Trust Co. v. Purdue, 79 Atl. 581, 582, 84 Conn. 256.

Decedent, owning all the capital stock and bonded indebtedness of a corporation, executed a deed of trust, conveying all but two shares to trustees in trust for her children, to continue for 20 years, or until decedent's death, if she should live longer than 20 years, during which time the profits should be paid to her, and, in the event she should die before the expiration of that time, the profits should be paid to her children or to their respective heirs at law, when not otherwise provided for in the deed. She specially provided for the interest in the trust to ultimately go to one of her daughters, and then declared that in case of the death of any of the other children before the expiration of the trust their interest should vest in his or her heirs at law, but that neither the children nor their heirs, during the continuance of the trust, should be authorized to sell their respective interests, etc. Held, that the word "heirs," or "heirs at law," was not used in such deed in its technical sense; and hence the interest of the children under the deed was not one of inheritance, which they could transfer by will. The words "heirs at law," as used in such deed, were intended only as a designation of the parties who would stand in the place of a deceased beneficiary, or one who would be entitled to inherit personal property in case of the beneficiary's death intestate; and hence, on the death of one of the children beneficiaries, leaving a widow but no children, one half of the beneficiary's interest passed to his widow and the other half to his brothers and sisters, and no part of it passed to his estate. Burr v. Burr, 143 S. W. 1096, 1099, 163 Mo. App. 395.

HEIRS AND ASSIGNS

The words "heirs and assigns," used in a will devising property to a person for her natural life, "and to her heirs and assigns forever," are technical words signifying a fee. Kendall v. Clapp, 39 N. E. 773, 163 Mass. 69.

The use of mere words of limitation will not prevent the lapsing of a devise on the death of the devisee before that of the testator, and the phrases in different forms, commonly used in a devise, such as "and his heirs," or "and his heirs or assigns," are words of limitation merely descriptive of the nature of the estate devised, and do not create a substituted devise. Farnsworth v. Whiting, 66 Atl. 831, 832, 102 Me. 296.

A patent issued by the state, which recites the issuance of land certificates and their assignment to designated persons as executors of a decedent, and which grants to such persons, "executors aforesaid," and to their "heirs and assigns," land described, passes title to them as individuals; the words "heirs and assigns" being at the time of the issuance of the patent essential to create an estate in fee, rendering it improper to disregard them and to substitute in their place the words "successors and assigns." Sanborn v. Loud, 113 N. W. 309, 310, 150 Mich. 151, 121 Am. St. Rep. 614 (citing Pfeiffer v. Rheinfrank, 37 N. Y. Supp. 1076, 2 App. Div. 574; Kanenbley v. Volkenberg, 75 N. Y. Supp. 8, 70 App. Div. 97; Innerarity v. Kennedy [Ala.] 2 Stew. 156; Jackson v. Roberts, 25 S. W. 879, 95 Ky. 410; Richardson v. McLemore, 60 Miss. 315; Towar v. Hale [N. Y.] 46 Barb. 361; Hannen v. Ewalt, 18 Pa. 9).

As used in a deed conveying land to W., "his heirs and assigns forever," the quoted words should be regarded as equivalent to words of inheritance so as to convey the fee under Rev. St. 1899, § 4590, dispensing with the necessity of using the word "heirs" or words of inheritance in the creation of a fee-simple estate; there being no clause in the deed indicating an intention to create a life estate and remainder. Tygar v. Hartwell, 102 S. W. 989, 990, 204 Mo. 200.

While the words "heirs and assigns" are not necessary in Missouri to create a devise of a fee simple, they were necessary at common law, and no more suitable terms can be chosen by a testator to emphasize his intention to give his estate absolutely. Hence under a will devising to testator's wife, her "heirs and assigns, forever," all his property with privilege of selling, and directing that at her death each of his daughters should have a certain sum, and that at the death of the wife or at any time when she might relinquish her interest in the property it should revert to testator's son, after his daughters should have received their proportion, the wife took a fee-simple estate in the land with full power to sell and convey it, and a perfect title to the testator's personal estate of every kind and character. Jackson v. Littell, 112 S. W. 53, 55, 213 Mo. 589, 127 Am. St. Rep. 620 (quoting and adopting Chew v. Keller, 13 S. W. 396, 100 Mo. loc. cit. 370; Rube v. Barnett, 12 Mo. 5, 49 Am. Dec. 112; Green v. Sutton, 50 Mo. 186; Tremmel v. Kleiboldt, 75 Mo. 255; Yocum v. Siler, 61 S. W. 212, 160 Mo. loc. cit. 289).

In a testamentary gift in trust to pay the income to testator's daughters for life, and on the death of either to transfer the part of the estate from which she had received the income, to her children, and to their "heirs, administrators, and assigns" forever, and on the death of a daughter without leaving children her portion to go to the surviving daughters and to their children, the quoted words must be taken as words of limitation and not as words of purchase, where the latter construction will make the remainder void under the statute of perpetuities existing at the date of the will executed in 1851 and at testator's death in 1852. Carpenter v. Perkins, 74 Atl. 1062, 1064, 83 Conn. 11.

Under a devise of the residue of testator's estate to specified persons, their "heirs and assigns," to be equally divided between such persons, the words "heirs and assigns," in the absence of any evidence that the idea of substitution was in the mind of the testator, are not words of substitution but of limitation merely, evidencing an intention to give the property absolutely; so that, on the death of one of the legatees in the lifetime of the testator, her legacy lapsed. Hand v. Marcy, 28 N. J. Eq. 59, 61.

A contract by a railroad company to pay the landowner, or "his heirs or assigns," for all stock killed or injured on a farm crossing may be enforced by a son and heir of such owner, who became owner of the farm, whether the contract be construed as a covenant running with the land or not. Livingston v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 120 N. W. 1040, 1043, 142 Iowa, 404.

HEIRS AT LAW

See Heirs; Their Heirs at Law.

The term "heirs at law" when used in a will means those taking real property by descent, unless it appears that the testator intended a different meaning, when that will prevail. Hartford Trust Co. v. Purdue, 79 Atl. 581, 582, 84 Conn. 256.

HEIRS FOREVER

A devise for life, and after devisee's decease to his lawful "heirs forever," conveys a fee under the rule in Shelley's Case. Pitchford v. Limer, 61 S. E. 789, 790, 139 N. C. 13.

In the absence of any clause in a will showing a contrary intent, a devise or bequest from a wife to her husband "to him and his heirs forever" lapses on the death of the husband in the lifetime of the testatrix; the words "heirs forever" being words of limitation and not of substitution. McKlerman v. Beardslee, 73 Atl. 815, 816, 72 N. J. Eq. 283.

HEIRS LAWFULLY BEGOTTEN

The words "heirs lawfully begotten of the body" and other similar expressions are appropriate words of limitation and must be construed as creating an estate tail which by statute is convertible into a fee simple unless from the entire will or deed it reasonably appears that they are not used in their technical sense but in the popular sense of children. Hall v. Moore (Ky.) 105 S. W. 414, 415 (citing Pruitt v. Holland, 18 S. W. 852, 92 Ky. 641; Prescott v. Prescott's Heirs, 10 B. Mon. [49 Ky.] 56; Lachland's Heirs v. Downing's Ex'rs, 11 B. Mon. [50 Ky.] 32; Robb v. Belt, 12 B. Mon. [51 Ky.] 643; Brown v. Alden, 14 B. Mon. [53 Ky.] 144; Johnson v. Johnson, 2 Metc. [59 Ky.] 331; True v. Nicholls, 2 Duv. [63 Ky.] 547; Breckinridge v. Denny, 8 Bush [71 Ky.] 523). See, also, Lawson v. Todd, 110 S. W. 412, 413, 129 Ky. 182 (quoting and adopting definition in Johnson v. Johnson, 2 Metc. [59 Ky.] 331).

HEIRS MALE

The words "male heirs" in a devise of land to a grandson of testator, during the devisee's natural life, and at his decease to the devisee's "male heirs," are words of limitation, and enlarge the estate devised to the grandson to an estate tail, under the rule in Shelley's Case, the clause of the statute of wills in relation to the creation and continuance of estates tail not being applicable to such a case. Cooper v. Cooper, 6 R. I. 261, 264.

HEIRS OF THE BODY

See, also, Bodily Heirs.

Ordinarily the words "bodily heirs" and "heirs of the body," when used in a deed, will be given their technical meaning, unless there is something in the instrument itself to whom, under the law of the land, the estate would pass in case of intestacy. Kitchen v. Southern Ry., 48 S. E. 4, 7, 68 S. C. 554, 1 Ann. Cas. 747.

The constitution and by-laws of a beneficial association provided that on the decease of a member in good standing the society should pay to the survivors, and that the treasurer should not pay death benefits before the proper "heirs" had been ascertained, and every member had the opportunity in his lifetime to inform the society as to his "heirs." Held, that the word "heirs" was used in a strict legal sense, and the beneficiaries were those to whom the personal property of the deceased would go in case of intestacy. Dielmann v. Berka, 97 N. Y. Supp. 1027, 1029, 49 Misc. Rep. 486.

The use of the word "heirs" in a will in reference to personalty, means those who take the personal estate of an intestate. In re Schnitzler, 114 N. Y. Supp. 934, 935, 61 Misc. Rep. 218.

The clause requiring equal division of the remainder among "the heirs of the W. family" meant that the remainder was to be given to those of testator's family who would be his heirs if he died intestate, such use of the word "heir" being a common and colloquial use, so that the widow of testator's brother cannot claim as a remainderman. In re Womersley's Estate, 127 Pac. 645, 646, 164 Cal. 85 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 8252).

In a bequest of personalty, the word "heirs" means prima facie those who would have been entitled to it had the testator died intestate. Jacobs v. Prescott, 65 Atl. 761, 762, 102 Me. 63.

The word "heirs" in a will primarily is used in its legal or technical sense, and, unless the context shows a contrary intention, must be construed as meaning all those who in case of intestacy would be entitled by law to inherit on the death of the testator or ancestor named. Flint v. Wisconsin Trust Co., 138 N. W. 629, 631, 151 Wis. 231.

Where a patent issues from the United States "to the heirs" of a deceased person, and there is no act of Congress specifying or designating who shall be deemed heirs, in such case resort must be had to the laws of the state where the land is situated for the purpose of determining who were the heirs of the deceased. Powell v. Powell, 126 Pac. 1058, 1059, 22 Idaho, 531.

When a contract or a testamentary disposition passes property to persons described as "heirs," personal property will pass to those entitled to personal estate under the statute of distribution. Throp v. Throp, 61 Atl. 377, 378, 69 N. J. Eq. 530 (citing Leavitt v. Dunn, 28 Atl. 590, 56 N. J. Law, 309, 44 Am. St. Rep. 402; Reen v. Wagner, 26 Atl. 467, 51 N. J. Eq. 1).

Where the by-laws of an insurance company permit insurance in favor of one's "heirs," and a policy provides for payment to the insured's "heirs," the word "heirs" must be regarded as intended to describe those persons who would take in case of intestacy. Burns v. Burns, 82 N. E. 1107, 1108, 190 N. Y. 211.

When the word "heirs" is used in gifts of personalty, it should primarily be held to refer to those who would be entitled to take under the statute of distribution, such as children or next of kin. Vogt v. Vogt, 26 App. D. C. 46, 55.

Where a testator devises his estate in trust, and directs that on a final settlement the rest and residue thereof shall be divided and distributed and paid to his heirs at law in the same proportion as the same would have been paid to them if he had died without a will, the term "heirs at law" refers to the then heirs at law; that is, at the time of the authorized distribution. Hosletter v. State, 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 702, 709.

"Heirs at law," as used in Kirby's Dig. §§ 6289, 6290, giving a right of action for death by wrongful act, and providing that the same shall be brought by the heirs at law of decedent where there is no personal representative and the amount recovered shall be for the benefit of the widow and next of kin, includes those receiving a distributive share of the estate and the beneficiaries of the action, and only one action may be brought for a person's death under the statute. McBride v. Berman, 94 S. W. 913, 79 Ark. 62.

The "surviving heirs" in a devise to a child, followed by the provision that on his death without bodily heirs the property shall go to the surviving heirs of testator, are the distributees under the statute of distribution in being at the death of the child, and until his death it cannot be ascertained who will take as surviving heirs. Barber v. Crawford, 67 S. E. 7, 9, 85 S. C. 54.

Grandchildren

In a will postponing disposition of testator's principal estate until after the death of his wife and his three children, there were clauses giving to the wife one-third of the income during her life, and distributing the remainder of the income to the children in specified shares. Then followed these clauses: "Item. Upon the death of my wife I do order that the one-third of the income hereby bequeathed to her shall be distributed among my surviving three children." "Upon the death of any of my three children, I do order the portion bequeathed to him or her to be distributed among his or her heirs." Held, that the word "heirs," as here used, included a grandchild of a deceased child of the testator. In re Smisson, 82 Atl. 614, 616, 79 N. J. Eq. 233.

Where by the terms of a will testator left certain property to the "heirs" of his children, vesting the control of the property in the children until their death, and made no express provisions for after-born grandchildren, only the grandchildren living at the death of testator are entitled to share in the estate. Wyman v. Johnson, 59 S. W. 250, 251, 68 Ark. 369.

Stepchildren

A stepchild of a decedent is not his child and heir at law, within the meaning of the statutes of descent (Gen. St. 1906, § 2295). Houston v. McKinney, 45 South. 480, 481, 54 Fla. 600.

Heir apparent or presumptive

No one can be an heir during the lifetime of his ancestor. Templeman v. McFerrin (Tex.) 113 S. W. 333, 334; Gerard v. Beecher, 68 Atl. 438, 441, 80 Conn. 363, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 900; Westcott v. Meeker, 122 N. W. 964, 970, 144 Iowa, 311, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 947.

Heirs living at death of testator or ancestor

A bequest or devise to "heirs," or "heirs at law," goes to those who are such when testator dies, unless different intent is manifested. Welch v. Blanchard, 94 N. E. 811, 208 Mass. 523.

A devise to the testator's "lawful heirs" should be construed as referring to those who are such at the testator's death, unless a different intent is plainly manifested by the will. Hill v. Hill, 132 N. W. 738, 739, 90 Neb. 43, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 198; Harris v. Ingalls, 68 Atl. 34, 37, 74 N. H. 339.

A devise to "heirs" or "next of kin" is construed as referring to those who answer that description at the time of the testator's death or who would have taken, by descent, had he died intestate, unless a different intention is plainly manifested by the will. Suman v. Harvey, 79 Atl. 197, 199, 114 Md. 241.

Where a testator devised one-half of his property to his wife for life, remainder to his heirs at law, the property vested in those who were his heirs at law at the time of his death, for not only does the language show the testator's intent to have the gift become complete upon his death, but an "heir" is he upon whom the law casts an estate upon the death of the owner. Mitchell v. Vest (Iowa) 136 N. W. 1054, 1056.

Where there is a devise in trust to pay the net income to A. for life, with a discretionary power in the trustees to use part of such income to pay off a mortgage incumbrance upon the land, and, after the death of A., a devise in fee simple to her "heirs at law," held, that the testator used the words "heirs at law" to designate the persons who at the time of A.'s death would be her heirs at law, and that consequently the rule in Shelley's Case does not apply. Shugrue v.

The term "heirs at law" of a beneficiary of a mutual benefit certificate, as used in the society's by-law providing for the distribution of the proceeds of the certificate to insure "heirs at law," mean those who answered the description at the time of the death of the insured. Anderson v. Supreme Council Catholic Benevolent Legion, 60 Atl. 759, 760, 69 N. J. Eq. 176.

By the express provisions of statute, when a remainder is limited to take effect on the death of any person without heirs, the word "heirs" must be construed to mean heirs living at the death of the person named as ancestor. In re Korn's Will, 107 N. W. 659, 662, 128 Wis. 428; Schlereth v. Schlereth, 66 N. E. 130, 132, 173 N. Y. 444, 93 Am. St. Rep. 616.

Sess. Acts 1815-16, p. 32, abolished estates tail, and Rev. St. 1825, p. 216, and Rev. St. 1899, § 4592, provide that in cases where by the common law or the statute law of England any person might become seised in fee tail of any lands, etc., he shall have only a life estate, and the remainder in fee simple shall pass to the person next in line, and Rev. St. 1899, § 4593, provides that where a remainder in lands shall be limited to take effect on the death of any person without heirs or without issue or on failure of issue, the word "heirs" or "issue" shall be construed to mean heirs or issue living at the death of the person named as ancestor. Testator devised lands to his two sons and to their heirs and assigns forever, and provided that the same should not be sold before the younger of the two should become of lawful age, and that, should either of them die without issue, the survivor, his heirs and assigns, should take the part bequeathed to the son so dying, and that, in the event both should die without issue, then testator's surviving heirs should take. Held that, by the use of the word "heirs" in connection with the word "issue" testator created what would have been at common law or by the statute de donis an estate tail, or, Rev. St. 1899, § 4593, not being applicable to an executory devise, even if the estate was a fee simple in the first instance, it was cut down to a fee tail by the clause declaring that in case of the death of both sons without leaving issue the estate was to revert to the heirs of testator, the failure of issue referred to being an indefinite failure of issue, and hence, under section 4592, the two sons took a life estate, with remainder in fee to their children. Gannon v. Pauk, 83 S. W. 453, 457, 183 Mo. 265.

Under a will directing the investment of a sum of money for a daughter of testator during her life, and, at her death without issue, to be paid to "my (testator's) heirs," as part of the residuary estate, and dividing the residuary estate into five equal shares, for the benefit of each of testator's five children, the shares of the daughters being given to trustees, who were to pay the income thereof to the respective daughters during life, and, at the death of a daughter, without issue, her share was to go to "my (testator's) heirs" at law, and providing that the cestuis qui trustent should not exercise any power over their respective interests, and should take only for life or for years, as the case might be, with remainder to their or to "my (testator's) heirs," on the death, without issue, of a daughter, after the death of one of the sons without issue, one-fifth of the fund invested for her went to the daughter's executrix, since the remainders were to the persons who were testator's "heirs at law" at his death. Rotch v. Rotch, 53 N. E. 268, 270, 178 Mass. 125.

A will executed by H. bequeathed to testator's wife all his property during her life, and provided that "at her death what of it that is left is to go equally to my heirs at law. My object is to keep my property in the H. family." The next paragraph gave testator's son $25 in addition to a home with testator's wife, and provided "this is in addition to his rightful share of my estate after the death of my wife." Held, that testator's son took a vested remainder, and not a remainder contingent upon his surviving testator's widow; the word "heirs" used in the first paragraph referring to testator's heirs living at the time of his death. Campbell v. Hinton, 150 S. W. 676, 150 Ky. 546.

Where testator left the residue of his estate in trust for the support of his daughter for life, and provided that, on her failure to make a will, the same should go to "her heirs at law," and the daughter died intestate without issue, the residuary estate passed on her death to those who were then her heirs at law, and not to those who would have been her heirs had she died when the testator did. Coffin v. Jernegan, 75 N. E. 958, 189 Mass. 503.

In a will directing executors to invest and keep invested a sum of money, pay the income to a nephew of testator during life, and on his death divide the trust fund among the nephew's heirs at law, the remaindermen take direct from the testator; the identity of the "heirs at law" being determined on the nephew's death, and including those who answer to that description in its strict legal meaning. In re Fay, 137 N. Y. Supp. 983, 984, 77 Misc. Rep. 514.

Heirs of the body

As used in a will giving land to testator's two sons, their heirs and assigns, forever, the word "heirs" is not used as "heirs of the body," and the sons took a fee. Gannon v. Albright, 81 S. W. 1162, 1163, 183 Mo. 238, 67 L. R. A. 97, 105 Am. St. Rep. 471.

The word "heirs," in a will whereby testator devised to his wife his dwelling house during widowhood, and, in the event of her marriage or death, the house should go to his son or his lawful heirs, and if he died without lawful heirs then to the children of testator's brother, must be construed to mean "heirs of the body," since there is a gift over to collaterals who would have been lawful heirs, and on the death of the son without issue, leaving a will, the children of testator's brother took the estate after the death of testator's widow. Mayer v. Walker, 63 Atl. 1011, 1012, 214 Pa. 440.

A devise to "heirs" on the death of a life tenant, especially in the case of a gift over upon death without heirs, may be confined to heirs of the body. Wallace v. Diehl, 95 N. E. 646, 647, 202 N. Y. 156, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 9.

"Under a deed, if the word 'heirs' is used in the granting clause, it may be cut down to mean heirs of the body of the donee, provided the words of appropriation are used in the context directly referring to the former word as if it should say 'to him and his heirs; that is, heirs of his body,' or if it should say 'to him and his heirs,' and then in a sentence closely following and referring to the gift say, 'to the aforesaid heirs of his body,' but, in the case of a will, words of direct reference are not necessary." Gannon v. Pauk, 83 S. W. 453, 456, 183 Mo. 265.

Though, where it appears under a will that heirs are to be ascertained as of a later date than testator's death, effect will be given the intent, ordinarily the term "heirs at law" refers to those who were or will be such at the testator or ancestor's death; and hence, where a will gave property to trustees to pay the income to a daughter for life, and provided that if she died without living descendants the remainder should "then" be distributed among testator's heirs at law, the heirs must be ascertained as of the testator's death, and not as of the daughter's—the term "heirs at law" appearing repeatedly in the will without qualification. That testator otherwise amply provided for those who were his heirs when he died does not show they were not entitled to share in the remainder. Boston Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Parker, 83 N. E. 307, 308, 197 Mass. 70.

of a remaining sister of deceased for life, and at her death a part thereof was to be conveyed to a certain person "if then living, but, if then deceased, to his heirs at law." Held, that the words "heirs at law" in the clause last quoted, referred to those who were such at the time of the death of the ancestor there mentioned, and not to those surviving at the period of distribution. Merrill v. Preston, 72 N. E. 941, 942, 187 Mass. 197.

Testator devised all his real estate to his widow so long as she should remain such, and then provided that certain of his real estate should not be sold or incumbered, and, on the death of the widow, should be owned and used by his children as equal co-owners, "but in case of the death of any one leaving heirs, then the share of such deceased child," in equal portions, should descend to his or her heirs, and, on the death of the children or any of them, the property should descend to their respective heirs in fee simple absolute. Held, that since the word "but" following the creation of the life estate in testator's children, marked the beginning of an exception, and was used in the sense of "except," "unless," "save," "yet," "still," "however," "nevertheless," the clause relating to the death of any of the children referred to their death during the lifetime of the widow, and that, as to children surviving her, no contingency longer existed, the word "heirs," in the last clause not being limited to heirs of the body, but referring to testator's heirs generally. Winter v. Dibble, 95 N. E. 1093, 1099, 251 Ill. 200.

Unless there is something contained in a policy of insurance expressing a contrary intention, then the words "heirs at law" of the insured must be taken in the ordinary legal sense to refer to those who are such at the time of his death. Where a policy contained the provision that the insurance should be payable to the "heirs at law" of the insured husband in case he outlived his wife who was beneficiary, on the death of the beneficiary the interest in the policy as such passed to the son as heir presumptive of the husband, and on the son's death to the "heirs at law" of the insured. Birge v. Franklin, 115 N. W. 278, 103 Minn. 482.

The word "heirs" or "descendants," used in the creation of a separate estate of a married woman, will not, at her death, exclude the marital rights of the husband, except as to the children. Wood v. Reamer, 82 S. W. 572, 574, 118 Ky. 841.

Rev. St. 1909, § 350, providing that when a wife dies without any child or other descendants in being capable of inheriting, her widower shall be entitled to one-half of the property belonging to her at her death, absolutely, subject to payment of her debts, does not make the husband the wife's "heir" with respect to any of her property, but gives him an estate in the nature of dower; the word "heirs" meaning kindred who take an interest in real estate by the law of descent. Waddle v. Frazier, 151 S. W. 87, 89, 245 Mo. 391.

The words "heirs at law" in a will will be given their technical meaning, unless it appears from the entire will that they are used in a different sense, such as in the popular sense excluding testator's widow. Smith v. Winsor, 88 N. E. 482, 485, 239 Ill. 567.

The words "an heir," in a will devising real estate to testator's widow during widowhood and at her death to her son if he should outlive the widow, and, if the son should die without "an heir," his part should go to persons named, mean a child or its descendant, and does not mean the wife of the son surviving the son. Duzan v. Chappel, 84 N. E. 775, 776, 41 Ind. App. 651.

The phrase, "heirs at law," as used in the following clause, "whatever may remain of my estate shall be equally divided among the heirs at law of my said wife," includes the husband of the wife who had remarried after the death of the testator. Harris v. Rhodes, 130 Ill. App. 233, 235.

Where a will, after giving certain legacies, provided that the remainder of the estate should be distributed among the lawful heirs of testatrix according to law, the husband of testatrix was entitled to take as an heir. In English law the word "heirs" has always meant the person succeeding to the title to real estate on the death of another—one who succeeds to the title by force of law. A common definition is, "He upon whom the law casts an estate of inheritance immediately on the death of the owner." Turner v. Burr, 104 N. W. 379, 380, 141 Mich. 106.

"Husband and wife, though they may be entitled under our statutes to certain interests in the estate of each other, are not properly speaking 'heirs' of each other. The rights which the statutes give them respectively they do not take as 'heirs.'" Under a statute providing that, where a decedent leaves a widow and issue, one-third of his property shall be given to the widow, but, if he leave no issue, one-half shall be given to the widow, the widow does not take as "heir" of her deceased husband. Golder v. Golder, 49 Atl. 1050, 1051, 95 Me. 259.

While the precise words, "heirs of the body," are not necessary to the creation of an estate tail, it is requisite that the heirs shall be limited to be procreated by, or begotten on, somebody certain, either by express words or by words amounting to so much. It results that a conveyance to A. and the heirs of the grantor and the heirs of the grantee, even though the grantor and the grantee are husband and wife, neither by express words nor by express implication creates an estate tail, which by virtue of the act of 1855 becomes an estate in fee simple. Ackerman v. Ackerman, 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 162, 166.

The words "heirs of her body" at common law, would create an estate tail, which by statute is changed to a fee simple; there being nothing in the instrument to show that the words 'heirs of her body' are not used in their ordinary sense." Hence where a will, after giving a life estate to testator's wife, provided that the remainder should descend to R. and the "heirs of her body," and there was nothing to show that the words were not used in their ordinary sense, the term "heirs of her body" will not be construed as synonymous with children but as intending to convey a fee-simple title to R. Young v. Amburgy (Ky.) 87 S. W. 802.

Where a testator devises to his daughter, now the wife of another, and to her heirs lawfully from her body begotten, and assigns forever, after the decease of his wife, all his estate, such daughter takes an estate tail in the premises on the death of her mother, as the words "heirs of her body" cannot be construed as meaning nothing more than an intention to exclude her husband. Doremus v. Zabriskie, 15 N. J. Law, 404, 409.

C. D. devised to his five daughters, each, an undivided seventh part of his estate; "the devises to my five daughters to be to them an estate for life, and to the 'heirs of their bodies' after them, and to their heirs and assigns of such heirs forever. But in case any of my said daughters shall die without issue surviving them, then my will is, and all such real estate as is herein devised to such of my children as shall so die without issue, shall then pass to such of my children as shall survive, and then to them and their heirs and assigns forever; it being my will and intent to give an estate in fee to such of my daughters as shall die leaving issue, and an estate for life only to such of them as shall die without leaving issue to survive them." Held, that the daughters, each, took an estate tail in their respective shares, with cross-remainders to survivors, upon the death of any of them without issue. Manchester v. Durfee, 5 R. I. 549, 554.

Blackstone says: A deed described the grantee as a married woman and the heirs by her then husband, and the grant was to "said party of the second part, her heirs and assigns." Held to convey a title in special tail which, under the statute, is converted into an estate in fee simple. Where lands and tenements are given to a man and the heirs of his body "on Mary, his now wife to be begotten," no issue can inherit, but such special issue as is engendered between them two and therefore is called a "special tail." Schrecongost v. West, 59 Atl. 269, 270, 210 Pa. 7 (citing 2 Blackstone, p. 114).

HELD

See Duly Called and Held; Regularly Held.

Stock Corporation Law, § 54 (Laws 1892, p. 1841), provided that stockholders should be liable to creditors to an amount equal to the stock held by them until the capital stock issued and outstanding should have been fully paid. In an action to enforce the liability of a stockholder, it appeared that a stock of goods had been transferred to the corporation under an agreement whereby, in consideration therefor, it was to issue to the owner and to defendant a certain amount of stock, and that defendant had forgiven certain indebtedness owing him by the transferee of the goods on account of the issue of the stock, and that defendant had been one of the directors of the corporation, his only qualification being the ownership of the stock in question. Held, that the stock was "issued" and was "held" by the parties, though no certificate or scrip representing the same had been issued. Flour City Nat. Bank of Rochester v. Shire, 84 N. Y. Supp. 810, 88 App. Div. 401.

As ownership or possession

The word "held," in Rev. St. 1890, § 2843, 2858, giving a lien for cutting wood and providing that persons entitled to such a lien shall not be required to identify any particular sticks but may maintain their lien against any or all of that class of property owned and "held" by the person from whom their pay is due, is used in the sense of custody or possession, so that there is no lien after the property has lawfully passed out of the debtor's possession to a third person. Turner v. Horton, 106 Pac. 688, 691, 692, 18 Wyo. 281.

Rev. St. 1898, § 1933, exempting from taxation property "held" by the board of education, means all property "owned" by the board and cannot be interpreted as intending only property used for school purposes. Wey v. Salt Lake City, 101 Pac. 381, 382, 35 Utah, 504.

HELD BY ANY POLITICAL PARTY, ORGANIZATION, OR ASSOCIATION

The words "held by any political party, organization, or association," as used in Pol Code 1895, § 113, providing that every political primary election held by any political party, organization, or association for the purpose of choosing or selecting candidates for office or the election of delegates for convenience in the state shall be presided over and conducted in the manner and form prescribed by the rules of the political party, organization, or association holding such primary election, by managers selected in the manner prescribed by such rules, are not used in a restrictive sense, but are employed epithetically, not with the intention of limiting the scope of the enactment, but with the purpose of extending it to every known form of political primary election, for every primary election is necessarily held by a party or by an organization or association of some kind for the purpose of making political nominations by ballot. The expression "primary election" ex vi termini carries with it all the meaning that the words "held by any political party, organization, or association" denote. Norton v. State, 63 S. E. 662, 666, 5 Ga. App. 586.

HELD FOR THE USE

When testator directed that his homestead and furniture and necessary provisions "be held for the use of my wife and other members of my family" so long as they should live, the term "be held for the use" required the trustees to keep the homestead and its appurtenances in repair, and maintain the furniture by repair or renewal, and furnish necessary provisions for the use of the remaining members of the family. Searles v. Fieles, 83 N. E. 991, 992, 197 Mass. 343.

HELD IN CUSTODY

An order directing the clerk to call a special term of court for the purpose of the trial of one B., "now 'held in custody' charged with a capital offense," sufficiently alleged that he was "confined in jail" within Kirby's Dig. § 1532, declaring that the judge of any circuit court may at any time hold a special term for the trial of persons "confined in jail" by a written order to that effect transmitted to the clerk, etc. Beard v. State, 95 S. W. 995, 996, 79 Ark. 293, 9 Ann. Cas. 409.

HELD IN RESERVE

A testator directed that all his bonds and stock and real estate should be converted into cash with the exception of certain real estate, "which should be 'held in reserve' for my widow, together with all household utensils, except the piano and music which I desire to be set apart for my stepdaughter for her sole and separate use." By the expression "held in reserve," the testator meant that the property specified was not to be converted, but that his wife was to have it, and the expression must be taken as equivalent to the term "set apart," which he used with reference to the piano and music. Birkbeck v. Wadsworth, 70 Atl. 998, 222 Pa. 154.

HELD IN TRUST

The phrase "to be held in trust" in a will whereby testator gave his residuary estate to a son "to be held in trust" by his executors and managed and cared for by them for the son's benefit, until he arrived at the age of 50 years, when the trust should continue in the discretion of the executors, etc., clearly implies possession by the executors. Higgins v. Downs, 91 N. Y. Supp. 937, 939, 101 App. Div. 119.

HELD OPEN

A county judge served with an injunction order restraining him from proceeding with a certain matter stated that he "held it open" and continued it. Held, that the terms "held it open" and "holding open" did not fall within a definition of adjournment to the effect that "an adjournment is no more than a continuation of the session from one day to another as the word itself signifies." People ex rel. Stryker v. Van Bergen, 81 N. Y. Supp. 274, 276, 40 Misc. Rep. 189.

HELD TO APPEAR OR ANSWER

In Code, § 8541, prescribing that an appearance in court may be (1) by filing a memorandum to that effect with the clerk, (2) or by entering an appearance in the appearance docket or the judge's calendar or announcing it to the court, or (3) by appearing for some special purpose connected with the case, and providing that no person shall be held to appear or answer on certain designated holidays, "the phrase 'held to appear or answer' should be construed with reference to the subject-matter of the section, and, as that concerns appearance in an action in response to the notice 'to appear,' must have been intended in the same technical sense," so as not to forbid a trial on holidays. Michel v. Boxholm Co-Operative Creamery, 105 N. W. 323, 324, 128 Iowa, 706, 5 Ann. Cas. 918.

HELL

"The word 'hell' is a synonym for all that is evil and corrupt in the grossest and basest sense of those terms." The words "they make these little children as corrupt as the fountains of hell," if meaningless alone, taken in connection with a statement that plaintiff had been bribed to testify as a witness against one party and in the interest of his adversary, impute perjury and are libelous. Atlanta News Pub. Co. v. Medlock, 51 S. E. 756, 758, 123 Ga. 714, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1139.

HELLER

The court may take judicial notice that a "Heller" is a modern Austrian copper coin, one two-hundredth of a crown, that its national equivalent is one two-hundredth of a florin, and its United States equivalent one-quarter of a cent, and that it is current. Czerney v. Haas, 129 N. Y. Supp. 537, 541, 144 App. Div. 430.

HELP

HELPER

The "helper" of an operator or pressman of a printing press is sometimes called a "press feeder." Doerr v. Daily News Pub. Co., 106 N. W. 1044, 97 Minn. 248.

Persons who haul ore and dump it in the furnace at a smelter are known as "helpers." Kotera v. American Smelting, etc., Co., 114 N. W. 945, 946, 80 Neb. 648.

HELPLESS

The Century Dictionary defines "helpless" to mean "Incapable of acting without assistance; incapable of self-support or self-defense; feeble; dependent; as, a helpless babe; a helpless, shiftless fellow." Webster defines the word as meaning "destitute of help or strength; unable to help or defend one's self; needing help; feeble; weak; as, a helpless infant." As these definitions show a wide range of application to the word "helpless," an allegation, in an action for the ejection of a passenger, that plaintiff's husband was "almost in a helpless condition," without alleging whether he was sick or drunk or lame, or any fact on which helplessness was predicated, was subject to demurrer as not being sufficiently specific to enable defendant to prepare its defense. Macon, D. & S. R. Co. v. Moore, 54 S. E. 700, 703, 125 Ga. 810.

HEMATITE IRON ORE

Not dutiable as pigments, see Pigments.

HEN

HEN HOUSE

"A chicken or 'hen house' is a building which is of a permanent and substantial kind and is well known in communities where poultry is raised as the building in which chickens and other poultry are housed." Indictment for burglary of a chicken or hen house need not allege that the house was specially made to keep such goods, merchandise, or other valuable things. Lucas v. State, 39 South. 821, 822, 144 Ala. 63, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412.

HENCEFORTH

Hereafter synonymous, see Hereafter.

HENCHMAN

A remark of the district attorney that a witness was a "henchman" of the defendant was not objectionable, the word "henchman" being used in the sense of "friend."

Davis v. State, 106 S. W. 144, 145, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 149.

HER

HER OWN USE

See For Her Own Use.

HERD

Driving sheep from one range to another is not "herding" them, within Rev. St. 1987, § 1210, making it unlawful for any person to herd sheep on the land of others. Phipps v. Grover, 75 Pac. 64, 65, 9 Idaho, 415.

HEREAFTER

See Now or Hereafter.

The word "hereafter" has a distinct meaning in our language and pertains to something that will occur in the future. Webster defines it as a future existence or state; in time to come or some future time or state, where under the terms of an original contract 10 per cent. of the contract price was to be retained until the final completion of the work and an assignment of the contract provided that the assignee should have all the compensation "thereafter accruing" the words "thereafter accruing" reserved the 10 per cent. earned at the time of the assignment of the contract to the assignor. Ercanbrack v. Faria, 79 Pac. 817, 818, 10 Idaho, 584.

The word "hereafter," as used in Laws 1891, p. 12, providing that hereafter in all cities of the second class after an excise license has once been granted to any person it shall not be requisite in order to give jurisdiction to grant renewals that a new application recommended by freeholders shall be presented, indicates an intent to confer jurisdiction to renew licenses when certain enumerated occurrences shall have happened in the future, and does not apply to existing licenses granted on past recommendations. Williams v. City of Bayonne, 25 Atl. 407, 409, 55 N. J. Law, 60.

Under Free Coal Act Jan. 15, 1908, c. 189, § 2, 32 Stat. 773, prescribing that the provision in the tariff act of 1897 for a duty on coal "shall not hereafter be construed to authorize the imposition of any duty upon anthracite coal," the term "hereafter" was not intended to be retroactive, and did not apply to coal imported before that date. Perkins Co. v. United States, 180 Fed. 935, 937.

Under Act May 27, 1908, c. 205, § 2, 35 Stat. 404, amending Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 15, 26 Stat. 138, it was prescribed that "hereafter" the parties litigant should be required to introduce all their evidence before the Board of General Appraisers, and cut off the right under said amended act, of a new trial in the Cir-cult Court on appeal from the board. Held, that this provision applied to cases decided by the board after May 27, 1908, even though, prior to that date, they had arisen and been submitted to the board for decision. Beer v. United States, 181 Fed. 402, 403.

Henceforth synonymous

The word "hereafter," as used in a statute providing "that hereafter in all prosecutions for murder, treason, or any offense, punishable by death or confinement in the public jail and penitentiary house, the venire facias shall command the sheriff or other officer, charged with its execution, to summon 24 good and lawful men," is synonymous with the word "henceforth," and is equivalent to the phrase "from and after the passage of this act," and speaks of the time when the law shall take effect, and not of the cases to which it shall be applied. It took effect instantly and operated immediately on all cases within its scope. Perry v. Commonwealth, 3 Grat. (44 Va.) 682, 635.

As relating to taking effect of statute

The word "hereafter," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 376, relating to limitation on justice's judgments "hereafter" docketed, relates to the time when such provision took effect. McMahon v. Arnold, 94 N. Y. Supp. 775, 776, 107 App. Div. 132.

Sess. Laws 1899, p. 235, No. 155, § 1, providing that no action shall "hereafter" be brought in any court of the state for personal injuries unless brought within three years from the occurrence on which the claim is founded, affects only such causes of action as accrued after the law took effect. Hathaway v. Washington Milling Co., 103 N. W. 164, 166, 139 Mich. 708.

Section 11, Act March 22, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 535), to regulate common carriers, provided for a State Railroad Commission composed of three commissioners to be elected at the following general election for two, four, and six years, one commissioner being thereafter elected at each general election for six years. Section 11 of Laws 1910, p. 51, provides for three commissioners, "who shall hereafter be appointed by the Governor," one to be appointed for a term beginning on the second Tuesday in January 1911, and one every two years thereafter. This act went into effect February 15, 1911, previous to which date the commissioner elected under the earlier act had taken office for the term commencing on the second Tuesday in January. Held, that the provision for the appointment of the commissioner by the Governor for that term was inoperative because impossible to carry out, the word "hereafter" referring to a time subsequent to February 15, 1911, at which time there was no vacancy, and hence the commissioner elected under the old act was entitled to the office for the six year term. Kendall v. People, 125 Pac. 596, 599, 53 Colo. 100.

HEREAFTER ESTABLISHED

Where there had been a crossing over a railroad by a road leading from an old ferry, and a contemplated crossing over the railroad was in a different place on the tracks, and was intended to accommodate more people, and was made at a highway leading from a bridge in course of construction near the exit from the bridge, it was a crossing "hereafter established," within the meaning of Act June 7, 1901 (P. L. 531), providing that all crossings "hereafter established" shall be above or below grade. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Bogert, 59 Atl. 100, 102, 209 Pa. 539.

HEREBY

As indicating acts in presenti

Where the local authorities of a town resolved that "consent is hereby given" to a traction company to construct a railroad, such phrase imparted a present grant and conditions attached were to be construed as subsequent. Manton v. South Shore Traction Co., 104 N. Y. Supp. 612, 613 (citing Rogan v. Walker, 1 Wis. 527; Schulenberg v. Harriman, 21 Wall. [88 U. S.] 44-60, 22 L. Ed. 551; Leavenworth, L. & G. R. Co. v. United States, 92 U. S. 741, 23 L. Ed. 634).

The words "hereby granted," in an act granting a right of way, import an immediate transfer of interest so that when the route is definitely fixed the title attaches from the date of act. Okanogan County v. Cheetham, 80 Pac. 262, 263, 37 Wash. 682, 70 L. R. A. 1027 (quoting and adopting St. Joseph & D. C. R. Co. v. Baldwin, 103 U. S. 426, 26 L. Ed. 578).

HEREDITAMENT

See Incorporeal Hereditament.

"Tenements and hereditaments" include every species of realty, as well corporeal as incorporeal. In Handley's Estate, 57 Atl. 755, 757, 208 Pa. 388.

The term "hereditaments" includes "anything that may be inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed. The word is almost as comprehensive as 'property.'" Moore v. Sharpe, 121 S. W. 341, 344, 91 Ark. 407, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 937 (quoting and adopting definition in And. Law Dict.).

The word "land" comprehends ground, soil, or earth, pastures, woods, springs, wells, lakes, ponds, and all things which have become a fixed part of the soil. The word "tenement," in its ordinary meaning, means a "house," which is the subject of tenure, and includes, not only corporeal hereditaments, which are or may be held, but also all inheritances issuing out of any of these inheritances, or concerning or annexed to or exercised within the same, though they lie not in tenure. "Tenement" is a word of greater scope than "lands," and though, in its vulgar acceptation, is only applied to houses and other buildings, yet, in its original, proper, and legal sense, it signifies anything that may be holden, provided it be of a permanent nature, whether of a substantial and sensible, or of an unsubstantial, ideal, kind. The term "hereditaments" includes rights unconnected with land, but generally used as the widest expression for real property of all kinds, being divided into real hereditaments, which are lands and tenements, and personal hereditaments, which are rights concerning neither lands nor tenements. As so defined, neither the term "tenement" nor "hereditament" includes in law a lease of lands for years. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 496, 494, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072.

HEREDITARY

HEREDITARY SUCCESSION

"Hereditary succession" is the title whereby a person on the death of his ancestor acquires his estate as his heir at law. Parrish v. Mills, 106 S. W. 882, 886, 101 Tex. 276 (quoting and adopting Barclay v. Cameron, 25 Tex. 233); Hannon v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 107 Pac. 835, 838, 12 Cal. App. 350.

HEREIN

Provision in a contract between a city and a railroad company, requiring the company to change street grades for the purpose of elevating its tracks, that each party to the contract should proceed to perform "the acts herein required" to be done, does not bind the city to pass an ordinance changing the street grade, such act not being mentioned in the contract. United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. v. Lewis, 59 Atl. 227, 228, 68 N. J. Eq. 437.

Where a deed contained the words "grant, bargain and sell," and thus included the statutory covenants raised by those words and also a single covenant of special warranty referring to the covenants "herein," such words had reference to the implied covenants and limited their operation; the deed containing no other covenants. Miller v. Bayless, 92 S. W. 482, 484, 194 Mo. 630.

As relating to act

In Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, 30 Stat. 555, § 38a, cl. 4, which, with stated exceptions, authorizes referees to perform such part of the duties conferred on courts of bankruptcy as shall be prescribed by their rules or orders, "except as herein otherwise provided," the word "herein" refers to the entire act, including the general orders prescribed by authority of section 30, and the provision must be construed in connection with General Order 12, § 3 (89 Fed. vii; 18 Sup. Ct. vi), which denies to a referee jurisdiction to grant an injunction to stay proceedings of a court or officer of the United States or of a state. In re Berkowitz, 143 Fed. 598, 601.

As relating to other provisions

St. 1906, c. 291, § 10, provides that the police commissioner of the city of Boston shall appoint a trial board, composed of three captains, to hear the evidence in such complaints against members of the force as the commissioner may deem advisable to refer to the board, and that the board shall report its findings to the commissioner, who may review the same and take such action as he may deem advisable; and it is provided that, "except as otherwise provided herein," all the powers previously conferred on the board of police are conferred on the police commissioner. Under the former statute the power to hear and determine everything under a complaint against a member of the force was lodged in the board of police, and the police commissioners issued licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquor, which power by chapter 291 is conferred on a licensing board. Held, that a contention that the word "herein" meant merely in section 10, so that the requirement of a trial board prevented the commissioner from exercising the power formerly belonging to the board of police was without merit, and the commissioner may hear complaints, and, after a finding of "guilty," discharge the member, without referring the complaint to the trial board. Welch v. O'Meara, 81 N. E. 264, 265, 195 Mass. 541.

HEREIN NAMED

A testatrix, after giving legacies to numerous persons, most of whom were related to her by consanguinity, and the rest as relatives of her deceased husband, directed, "any money after my debts and expenses are paid to be divided between my heirs by my family herein named," excepting N., who was one of the legatees related to her by blood. Held that the fact that the words "herein named" immediately follow the word "family" does not give to that word a meaning broad enough to embrace all the legatees named, as the words "herein named" may as well have been used to modify the whole clause "my heirs by my family" as the words "my family" alone. Therefore "my heirs by my family herein named" did not embrace those legatees who were related to the testatrix's deceased husband only, and those of the legatees named in the will, except N., take under such clause who would have been entitled to the estate had the testatrix died intestate, in the proportions in which they would take under the statute of distributions. Jacobs v. Prescott, 65 Atl. 761, 762, 102 Me. 63.

HEREIN PROVIDED

See As Herein Provided.

Except as herein provided, see Except.

HEREINAFTER APPOINTED EXECUTRIX

Testator devised all of his real estate to his wife for life, and then gave his "wife, hereinafter appointed executrix," full power to sell and dispose of any and all of the real estate. Held, that the words, "hereinafter appointed executrix," were merely descriptive of the person and not of the capacity in which the wife was to act in making sales of the property, and therefore did not limit the power of sale to his wife while acting as executrix. Stafford v. Washburn, 130 N. Y. Supp. 571, 575, 145 App. Div. 784.

"Hereinbefore" has a settled meaning. Webster's definition is: 'In the preceding part of this (writing, document, speech, and the like).' The Century Dictionary and Encyclopedia defines it: 'Before in this (statement, narrative, or document); referring to something already named or described.' 4 Words and Phrases, p. 5283, gives numerous definitions by the courts, all in accordance with those of the lexicographers." Taylor v. Insurance Co. of North America, 105 Pac. 354, 361, 25 Okl. 92, 138 Am. St. Rep. 906.

"Hereinbefore provided," in Rev. St. c. 29, § 40, providing that no person shall by himself, clerk, servant, or agent, directly or indirectly, sell any intoxicating liquors except as hereinbefore provided, relates back to section 26 of the chapter, which provides that the selectmen of any town and the mayor and aldermen of any city may appoint some suitable person agent of the town or city to sell intoxicating liquors purchased by them according to law, to be used for medicinal, mechanical, and manufacturing purposes, and no other, and all sales of intoxicating liquors except those made by a duly appointed and qualified town or city agent are in violation of law. State v. Intoxicating Liquors and Vessels, 63 Atl. 666, 667, 101 Me. 161.

HERETOFORE

See As Heretofore.

The word "heretofore," as used in an information alleging the offense to have been committed "heretofore" on a date specified, which is the same as the date of the filing of the information, is equivalent to a direct allegation that the offense was committed anterior to the filing of the information. Miller v. State, 115 S. W. 578, 579, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 174; Wilson v. State, 15 Tex. App. 150, 155.

The word "heretofore," as used in Laws 1903, p. 9, c. 7, authorizing every city heretofore incorporated under a special charter having less than 10,000 inhabitants to be determined by the last preceding United States census, and having power to make special assessments to construct sewers, to make such assessments in a specified manner, adds nothing whatever to the limitation of the class.

The only cities under special charter were those theretofore incorporated, and no other city was permitted by the Constitution to be so incorporated thereafter. Had the word been omitted, the class would have been precisely the same. McGarvey v. Swan, 96 Pac. 697, 704, 17 Wyo. 120.

Const. art. 2, § 28, as amended, which provides that the right of trial by jury as heretofore enjoyed shall remain inviolate, but that a jury for the trial of criminal or civil cases in courts not of record may consist of less than 12 men as may be prescribed by law, and that a two-thirds majority of such number prescribed by law concurring may render a verdict in all civil cases, and that, in the trial by jury of all civil cases in courts of record, three-fourths of the number of the jury concurring may render a verdict, is not limited to the rights of trial by jury given by the common law; the word "heretofore" meaning before and up to the time the Constitution was adopted, and applying to all civil cases wherein, at the time of its adoption, the right to a trial by jury existed, whether given by common law or by statute, and hence includes an insanity inquiry instituted under Rev. St. 1909, § 474, the right to jury trial in such proceeding having existed prior to the adoption of the Constitution. State ex rel. Peper v. Holtcamp, 138 S. W. 521, 522, 235 Mo. 232.

Where two orders extending the time for making and serving a case-made are made on the same day, one granting a 60-day extension from the date of the order, and the other 30 days from "the time heretofore granted," and an order of a prior date extending the time had been made. The word "heretofore" in such case will be construed to mean any time previous to the day of the making of the order, and will not include time in addition to that contained in another order made on the same day. Woods v. Coleman, 122 Pac. 234, 235, 32 Okl. 244.

A will provided that "any note or notes signed by me in favor of any person or persons and made payable by the terms thereof after my decease be recognized and treated as bequests in behalf of the payees therein respectively designated," to be paid out of the estate, and further provided "I have heretofore, and may hereafter adopt this means of designating the persons I wish to be numbered as beneficiaries under my last will." Held, that the will referred to the notes "heretofore" made as then in existence, so as to incorporate them as a part of the will; "heretofore" meaning "in time past;" "previous time;" "previously." Keeler v. Merchants' Loan & Trust Co., 97 N. E. 1061, 1064, 253 Ill. 528; In re Sexton's Estate, 162 Ill. App. 222.

Subject-matter of statute related to

The words, "heretofore erected," as in the act concerning roads (Rev. p. 1010, § 79), forbidding the pulling down or removal of any dwelling house, etc., heretofore erected and which may encroach upon any highway, refer to the time of the laying out of the roads and not to the time of the passage of the act. State v. Troth, 34 N. J. Law, 377, 382.

As theretofore

A contract for the sale of land for $40,000, payable in four equal payments, required the purchaser to pay "$10,000 (in addition to the sum of $10 herein paid)," etc., and provided that all sums paid herein shall apply to the purchase price, but, if the purchaser fails to comply with the conditions herein set forth, payments "heretofore" received, are to be forfeited as liquidated damages. Held, on forfeiture after two payments, the word "heretofore" would not be construed to limit the defendant's right to the $10 parenthetically referred to as "herein paid," but would be rejected as unnecessary or read as "theretofore," and include the $20,000 paid. Skookum Oil Co. v. Thomas, 123 Pac. 363, 366, 162 Cal. 539.

HEREUNDER

A lease for a fixed term, with the privilege of extending it for a fixed period, on the lessee so electing a specified time before the "expiration of the original term," stipulated that in the event of the total destruction of the premises the lease should terminate and the parties be freed from all liability "hereunder"; that the lessee should make improvements; that "at the expiration of the original term, * * * viz., the term expiring on" a designated date, the lessor would pay to the lessee the cost of the improvement; that the lessee "at the expiration of said term" should produce the original vouchers for the money expended in the improvements, etc. The premises were totally destroyed before the expiration of the original term. Held, that the lessee could not recover the cost of the improvements made by him; the phrase "expiration of the term" meaning the termination of the original term by lapse of time, and the word "hereunder" referring to the entire lease. Pringle v. Wilson, 104 Pac. 316, 317, 319, 156 Cal. 313, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1060.

HERITAGE

HERITABLE INTEREST

A "heritable interest" is one which is attached to the ownership of land. Hemsley v. Marlborough House Co., 61 Atl. 455, 456, 68 N. J. Eq. 596.

HERNIA

There is no kinship between the words, "orchitis, 'hernia,' freezing, and sunstroke," and no sort of relationship between them and the words "intoxicants, sleepwalking, narcotics," etc., as used in an accident policy providing that the insurance shall not cover injuries received while under the influence of, or resulting directly or indirectly from, intoxicants, sunstroke, vertigo, hernia, or any disease or bodily infirmity, and the phrase "disease or bodily infirmity" will not be limited by the preceding specific exceptions. Carr v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 75 S. W. 180, 183, 100 Mo. App. 602.

"Herpetiformis" is a skin disease. Hynds v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 97 N. Y. Supp. 705, 706, 111 App. Div. 339.

HERRING

Smoked herring, though salted before being smoked, are not dutiable as "herrings, pickled or salted," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 260, 30 Stat. 171, being a commodity distinct therefrom both commercially and in common speech. Mattlage v. United States, 139 Fed. 704.

HERSELF

See For Herself and Children.

HEXAMETHYLENTETRAMIN

As medicinal preparation, see Medicinal Preparation.

HIDES

"Hides" are distinguishable from "skins" by weight. If they weigh more than 12 pounds, they are known as "hides"; if less, they are known as "skins." An importer's protest against the liquidation of his entry of hides and skins "each of which weighs under 12 pounds; looking to you for the refund of duty on these 99 skins," is a sufficient reference to the provisions in the Free List Tariff Act for skins of all kinds. United States v. Helmrath, 145 Fed. 36, 75 C. C. A. 261.

HIDES OF CATTLE

The term "hides of cattle," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 437, 30 Stat. 192, is not used in a commercial sense, but according to the ordinary dictionary meaning of the words, and refers to the hides of domesticated animals of the bovine species, including those of the East India buffalo. "Cattle" are "domesticated bovine animals, as oxen, cows, bulls, and calves" or "live stock; domestic quadrupeds which serve for tillage and other labor or as food for man." In popular speech the term "cattle" is used in the United States in a restricted sense and is more specially applied to the group of so-called straightback "cattle" (cows, oxen, steers, and bulls) as distinguished from the hump cattle of India and Africa. United States v. Schmoll, 154 Fed. 734, 735 (citing Rosbach v. United States, 116 Fed. 781; J. H. Rosbach & Bro. v. United States, 122 Fed. 1020, 57 C. C. A. 678; United States v. Winter & Smillie, 134 Fed. 841, 67 C. C. A. 437); Schmoll v. United States, 157 Fed. 1005, 85 C. C. A. 679.

The hide of the mud buffalo of the Straits Settlements, an animal killed in the chase, is not within the provision for "hides of cattle" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 437, 30 Stat. 151, but is free of duty under section 2, Free List, par. 664, 30 Stat. 194, covering "hides not specially provided for." United States v. Winter & Smillie, 134 Fed. 841, 842, 67 C. C. A. 437.

HIGH

See As High As.

HIGH CARE

"High care," used in an instruction requiring the jury to believe that plaintiff used that high care which a person of ordinary prudence would have used, conveys the idea that a higher degree of care than ordinary care was imposed by law on him in that respect, if, indeed, it did not actually have that effect. St. John v. Gulf. O. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 80 S. W. 235, 237.

HIGH CRIMES AND MISDEMEANORS

Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, provides for extradition of a person charged with treason, felony or other crime. Gen. St. 1902, § 1566, provides that, when a demand shall be made on the Governor by the executive authority of another state for the surrender of a person charged in such state with any "high crime," certain proceedings shall be had thereon, and, if the Governor shall find that the demand is conformable to law and ought to be complied with, he shall issue his warrant, etc. Held, that the words "high crime" as so used were intended to be synonymous with the word "crime" as used in the federal Constitution, and hence were sufficient to include a conspiracy, whether it was a felony or a misdemeanor. Ross v. Crofutt, 80 Atl. 90, 91, 84 Conn. 370, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1295.

The term "high misdemeanors" includes criminal libel. Robert v. Police Court of City and County of San Francisco, 82 Pac. 838, 839, 148 Cal. 181.

HIGH DEGREE OF CARE AND DILIGENCE

The term "high degree of care," when used in an instruction which gave no standard of care, and thus deprived a comparison between "ordinary care" and a "high degree of care," held not to be the legal equivalent of "reasonable care." Van Blarcom v. Cen- tral Ry. Co. of New Jersey, 60 Atl. 182; 72 N. J. Law, 33.

Electric companies are bound to use reasonable care in the construction and maintenance of their lines and apparatus. This care varies with the risks to be apprehended from negligence. Where the wires carry strong and dangerous currents of electricity, and the result of negligence may be exposure to death or serious accident, a high degree of care is required. Under such circumstances, "reasonable care" and a "high degree of diligence" may be deemed to be synonymous. Gilbert et al. v. Duluth General Electric Co., 100 N. W. 653, 655, 93 Minn. 99, 106 Am. St. Rep. 430.

Laws 1901, p. 538, c. 96, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 117, c. 118, § 4, declares that by the term "high school" as used in the act is understood a school for at least one four years' course, properly equipped and teaching such subjects as are required for admission to college, technical school, and normal school. New Hampton Institution v. Northwood School Dist., 68 Atl. 538, 540, 74 N. H. 422.

HIGH SCHOOL BOARD

Pol. Code, § 1670, subd. 7, provides that the board of education in the city where a high school is established shall have control of that school, and such control is to be had, not as a board of education, but as a high school board. It constitutes a board of education for all purposes of controlling primary and grammar schools, but as to high schools it is regarded as constituting the "high school board." Such a distinction is required because under Municipal Act, § 798, the money obtained under the general levy provided for therein is to be paid out under the order of the board of education, under Pol. Code, § 1670, subd. 18. The taxes derived under subdivision 14 of such section are to be credited to the high school fund and paid out only on the warrants of the high school. Brown v. City of Visalia, 74 Pac. 1042, 1044, 141 Cal. 372.

HIGH SCHOOL BUILDING

As public building, see Public Building.

HIGH SEAS

The term "high seas" includes waters on the seacoast and without the boundaries of low-water mark. United States v. Newark Meadows Imp. Co., 173 Fed. 426, 428.

"After passing the jurisdictional limits of a state, a vessel is as much on the 'high seas' as if in the middle of the ocean." Rose v. Himely, 4 Cranch, 241, 288, 2 L. Ed. 608.

A collision which occurred off a foreign port, although within a marine league of the coast, was nevertheless on the "high seas" for the purposes of jurisdiction of a suit arising therefrom. The Kaiser Wilhelm Der Grosse, 175 Fed. 215, 217.

Bay, inlet, river, etc.

"High seas," as used in determining whether movables taken in war are "booty," which is the term used when they are taken on land, or "prize," used when taken on the high seas, includes coast waters without the boundaries of low-water mark, though within bays or roadsteads, waters on which a court of admiralty has jurisdiction. United States v. Dewey, 23 Sup. Ct. 415, 422, 188 U. S. 254, 47 L. Ed. 463 (citing United States v. Ross, 1 Gall. 624, 27 Fed. Cas. 899).

Great Lakes

Lake Michigan, which lies wholly within the territory of the United States, is not a "high sea" in the sense that it is open and uninclosed, and a free highway of adjoining nations or people. It is under the exclusive dominion of the United States and is free to the commerce of other nations not by nature but only by the grace of our government. Bigelow v. Nickerson, 70 Fed. 113, 117, 17 C. A. 1, 30 L. R. A. 336.

Harbor

"The term 'high seas' includes waters on the seacoast without the boundaries of low-water mark; and the waters of the port of Yokohama constitute, within the meaning of the statute [providing for the punishment of murder committed on the high seas], high seas." In re Ross, 11 Sup. Ct. 897, 902, 140 U. S. 471, 35 L. Ed. 581.

The waters inclosed between the shore and the government breakwaters in Lake Erie at the port of Buffalo, without as well as within the line designated on the government chart as "Buffalo Harbor Line," constitute a "haven," and not "high seas," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 5346 and an assault with a dangerous weapon committed on a vessel belonging to the United States or citizens thereof anchored in such waters is within the state, and not the federal, jurisdiction. Ex parte O'Hare, 179 Fed. 662, 663, 103 C. C. A. 220.

"Main sea" and "high sea" are synonymous. United States v. Newark Meadows Imp. Co., 173 Fed. 426, 428.

HIGH-WATER MARK

From evidence as to the height of water in a lake in different seasons and in different years, without the water marks on the soil or their elevation, it is impracticable to locate the high-water mark, defined as the line which the water impresses on the soil as the limit of its dominion. Merrill v. Board of Sup'rs of Cerro Gordo County, 125 N. W. 222, 224, 146 Iowa, 325.

A city, in using a lake as a source of water supply is not entitled to flood riparian lands by raising the level by means of a dam to the highest water mark; the "high-water mark" to which Rem. & Bal. Code, § 8005, permits use, meaning the ordinary high-water mark. Austin v. City of Bellingham, 126 Pac. 59, 61, 69 Wash. 677 (citing 4 Words & Phrases, p. 3290).

Fresh rivers not subject to tide may rise and fall at certain seasons and thus have defined high and low water marks. The "low-water mark" is the point to which the river recedes at its lowest stage, while the "high-water mark" is the line which the river impresses on the soil by covering it for sufficient periods to deprive it of vegetation and to destroy its value for agriculture. State ex rel. Citizens' Electric Lighting & Power Co. v. Longfellow, 69 S. W. 374, 377, 169 Mo. 109 (citing Gould, Waters [3d Ed.] § 45).

"The courts have attempted to define 'high-water mark' as the point below which the presence and action of the waters is so common, usual, and long continued in ordinary years as to mark upon the soil a character distinct from that of the banks with respect to vegetation as well as soil, stating that ordinary low water or low-water mark was the point at which the water receded at its lowest stage. These are more satisfactory definitions than those which leave a strip of land between the riparian owners and the water." City of Peoria v. Central Nat. Bank, 79 N. E. 296, 299, 224 Ill. 43, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 667 (citing Farnham, Water & Water Rights, § 67; Gould, Waters [3d Ed.] § 162; Seaman v. Smith, 24 Ill. 521).

By "high-water mark" is meant those points along the shore where water rises to such a height as may reasonably be anticipated, but does not include such extraordinary freshets as cannot be anticipated. Erdman v. Watab Rapids Power Co., 127 N. W. 487, 489, 112 Minn. 175.

As determining the boundary between the land of a riparian owner and the public, the high-water mark of a river not affected by the tide is the point below which the presence and action of the water are so common and usual and so long continued in all ordinary years as to mark on the soil a character distinct from that of the banks with respect to vegetation and the soil itself. The margin of the bed of a river which lies between high and low water mark is called the "beach" or "shore," which is actually a part of the bed of the river, and, when the river is at its full flow, whether caused by the tide or by the natural increase of waters by rains, floods, and the like, filling its natural bed to its highest reach of flow, it marks its high-water, while its lessened range of flow by summer heats shows its low-water, mark. Sun Dial Ranch v. May Land Co., 119 Pac. 758, 761, 61 Or. 205.

In tidewaters

The term "high-water mark" with reference to tidelands is the line on the shore which is reached by the limit of the flux of the usual tide. Taylor Sands Fishing Co. v. State Land Board, 108 Pac. 126, 127, 56 Or. 157.

HIGHBALL SIGNAL

One of the uses of the "Highball signal" in railroading is to direct the engineer on a train to go past a station without stopping. International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Stephenson, 54 S. W. 1086, 1087, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 220.

HIGHEST ABOVE BED OF RIVER

The bed of the river is that part between the banks worn by the regular flow of the water, and the expression "six feet in highest above the bed of the river" in a grant of a right to flow land by a dam of that height means six feet above the highest point of the river bed. Haigh v. Lenfesty, 87 N. E. 962, 963, 239 Ill. 227.

HIGHEST AND BEST USE

The words "highest and best," with relation to the use to which the property sought to be condemned was to be put, means "highest and best" in a financial sense. Freiberg v. South Side Elevated R. Co., 77 N. E. 920, 922, 221 Ill. 508.

HIGHEST BIDDER

See Next Highest Bidder.

Under Pol. Code, § 3897, providing that, when the state shall become the owner of property sold for taxes, the tax collector, in reselling it, shall sell the property to the highest bidder for cash, etc., the term "highest bidder" means the one who will make the highest cash bid for all the property, and not the person who will pay all the tax for the least amount of the land. Fox v. Wright, 91 Pac. 1005, 1006, 152 Cal. 59; Merchants' Trust Co. v. Wright, 118 Pac. 517, 518, 161 Cal. 149.

Under Laws 1898, c. 182, as amended, giving cities of the second class authority to sell a franchise at public auction to the "highest bidder," the personnel of the bidder is immaterial, and the highest bid must be accepted though the bidder, being a natural person, was unable, under the law, to construct and maintain the works or road to be operated under the franchise. Trojan Ry. Co. v. City of Troy, 109 N. Y. Supp. 779, 781, 783, 125 App. Div. 362.

HIGHEST DEGREE OF CARE

The "highest degree of care" signifies nothing short of the exercise of the utmost human skill and care. There can be no degree of care higher than the highest. Ilges v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 93, 94, 102 Mo. App. 529.

The terms "ordinary care," "utmost care," and "highest degree of care" are relative, and are applicable solely to the particular circumstances. Anderson v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 99 Pac. 91, 95, 15 Idaho, 513.

The expression the "highest degree of care" as the formulated rule in instructing the jury is lacking in definiteness and proper limitation, and, "to give clearness and definiteness as well as proper limitation this degree of care has been described as the care 'which a very cautious, prudent and competent person would exercise under the same circumstances.'" Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Keeling, 112 S. W. 808, 809, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 886 (citing Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Dotson, 38 S. W. 642, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 73; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Halloren, 53 Tex. 46, 37 Am. Rep. 744; Gary v. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co., 42 S. W. 576, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 129; Fordyce v. Withers, 20 S. W. 766, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 544; International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Welch, 24 S. W. 390, 86 Tex. 208, 40 Am. St. Rep. 829).

The "highest degree of care" required of common carriers for the safety of their passengers is the utmost care consistent with the nature of the carrier's undertaking and with a due regard for all other matters that ought to be considered in conducting the business. Gardiner v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 90 N. E. 534, 535, 204 Mass. 218.

The term "negligently," when applied to the failure of a carrier of passengers to perform its duty to safely carry its passengers, means the failure to use the highest degree of care; and the "highest degree of care" means the utmost care exercised by prudent and skillful persons in the management and operation of trains. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kemp's Adm'r, 149 S. W. 835, 836, 149 Ky. 344.

"The expression 'highest degree of care' is synonymous with and no broader than 'the utmost care.'" Hence an instruction that it was the duty of a railroad company to exercise the highest degree of care for the safety of its passengers was proper. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. George (Tex.), 60 S. W. 313, 314.

It is usual to use the word "highest" in instructions upon the degree of care required toward passengers, instead of "utmost," and the former should be used, though there may be but slight difference in their meaning. Quinn v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 118 S. W. 46, 48, 218 Mo. 545.

Rev. St. 1909, § 8523, provides that a person operating an automobile on a public highway shall use the highest degree of care that a very careful person would use under like circumstances to prevent injury to persons on the highway. Held, that the measure of care is to be determined according to the circumstances of the particular case; the statute requiring that the driver guard against all movement of persons likely to take place in the highway which a prudent man exercising high care should anticipate as likely to occur within the rationale of human experience. Bongner v. Ziegenhein, 147 S. W. 182, 185, 165 Mo. App. 328.

The term "highest degree of care," as used in relation to the carrying of passengers, means the degree of care which prudent persons, engaged in the business, usually exercise under similar circumstances. Louisville St. Ry. Co. v. Brownfield (Ky.) 96 S. W. 912, 914.

An instruction that by the term "highest degree of care" is meant that degree of care which a person possessed of the highest degree of care and prudence, engaged in the same kind of employment, would exercise under the same circumstances, is not an accurate definition of the duty owing by a railroad company to a passenger on one of its trains. Pecos & N. T. R. Co. v. Coffman, 121 S. W. 218, 220, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 472.

An instruction that a carrier owed the duty to a passenger to use the "highest degree of care" for his safety did not impose too great a burden on the carrier, where the court defined "highest degree of care," as such care as a very cautious or prudent person in a like business would exercise, under the same or similar circumstances. Pecos & N. T. Ry. Co. v. Trower (Tex.) 130 S. W. 588, 589.

"Highest degree of care," as used to define the duty of street railway companies, is meant the degree of care usually observed by men of reasonable skill and prudence in the control and management of street cars under similar circumstances. Louisville, H. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Kessee (Ky.) 103 S. W. 261, 264.

An instruction, in an action for injuries to a passenger, that defendant was bound to exercise the highest degree of care consistent with the operation of the railway and taking into consideration the existing conditions to prevent the injury, and that defendant was liable for the slightest negligence, covered all the substantial features of a refused instruction that defendant was not required to exercise the highest degree of care possible to avoid the accident, but only the highest degree reasonably practicable under the circumstances, and that by "highest degree of care" was meant that degree which would be exercised under like circumstances by careful and experienced conductors and motormen. Jordan v. Seattle, R. & S. Ry. Co., 92 Pac. 284, 285, 47 Wash. 503.

It was not error for the court, after instructing that if defendant's servants started a car without having exercised the "highest degree of care" "reasonably practiced" under the circumstances and conditions existing at the time and place in question to see that all persons who were in the act of boarding the car were in places of safety, and the negligent starting of said car threw plaintiff to the pavement and injured her, defendant was liable, to instruct that by the term "highest degree of care" as used in that instruction is meant that degree of care which would be exercised under like circumstances by careful, prudent, and experienced conductors and motormen generally. Foster v. Seattle Electric Co., 76 Pac. 995, 996, 35 Wash. 177.

An instruction in an action against a carrier for injury to a passenger, which, after asserting that, if defendant's motormen exercised the "highest degree of care" to avoid the accident which was reasonably practicable under the circumstances, this was enough, states that by the term "highest degree of care" is meant that degree of care which would be exercised under like circumstances by very careful, prudent, and experienced conductors and motormen generally, does not require too much by the use of the word "very." Connell v. Seattle, R. & S. Ry. Co., 92 Pac. 377, 378, 47 Wash. 510.

HIGHEST MARKET VALUE

Civ. Code, § 3333, provides that the measure of damages for breach of an obligation not arising from contract is the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not, and section 3336 provides that the detriment caused by the wrongful conversion of personalty is presumed to be the value of the property at the time of the conversion with interest, or, where the action has been prosecuted with reasonable diligence, its highest market value at any time between the conversion and the verdict without interest at plaintiff's option. Held, that the "highest market value" allowed by the statute meant its subsequent value in the condition it was at the time of the conversion, so that, in an action for damages for the conversion of ore by underground trespassing on plaintiff's land, plaintiff could not recover the value of the ore after the cost of milling it had been added, but only its value when mined and commingled with defendant's ore, though the conversion was intentional by defendant's agents; the circumstances not authorizing punitive damages. Lightner Min. Co. v. Lane, 120 Pac. 771, 777, 161 Cal. 689, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1093.

HIGHEST POSSIBLE DEGREE OF CARE AND DILIGENCE

"The phrase 'highest possible degree of care and diligence' does not mean all the care and diligence the human mind can conceive of; nor such as will render transportation free from any possible peril; nor such as will drive a carrier from his business." Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Brandon, 95 Pac. 573, 576, 77 Kan. 612 (quoting Indianapolis & St. L., etc., R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S. 291, 23 L. Ed. 898).

HIGHEST PREVIOUS INDEBTEDNESS

In an experience clause of a credit insurance bond, which provided that the insurer should be liable for an amount not exceeding the "highest previous indebtedness" for goods shipped within 12 months prior to the shipping of the first item upon which loss should occur, the phrase quoted meant the highest indebtedness which had been paid, and not merely the highest indebtedness contracted, though the experience clause was not mentioned in the application, but was included later at plaintiff's request. Pringle Bros. v. Philadelphia Casualty Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 330, 332, 153 App. Div. 180.

HIGHLY PRUDENT PERSON

A "highly prudent person" is a very prudent, cautious, and competent person. Thus, an instruction that a carrier must exercise toward passengers such a degree of care as a highly prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances did not require too high a degree of care. Gilmore v. Houston Electric Co., 102 S. W. 168, 169, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 815.

HIGH-TENSION SYSTEM

The "high-tension system" is a method of generating at the power house a large volume or current of electricity, but with a comparatively low voltage, and converting it into a small current or volume with an exceedingly high voltage, and carrying it out along the line on small wires, to be taken off at different points called "substations." At these substations the current is reconverted into the large volume again, with a pressure adjusted to the requirements of the trolley wire. The method of transmission of the current may be likened somewhat to transmitting water through pipes. Harrison v. Detroit, Y., A. A. & J. Ry., 100 N. W. 451, 452, 137 Mich. 78.

A "highway" is a public thoroughfare. Houston v. Zahm, 76 Pac. 641, 643, 44 Or. 610, 65 L. R. A. 799.

The word "highway" is a generic term "embracing all kinds of public ways, such as county and township roads, streets, alleys, township, and plank-roads, turnpike or gravel roads, tramways, ferries, canals, navigable rivers, including also railroads." Strange v. Board of Com'rs of Grant County, 91 N. E. 242, 243, 247, 173 Ind. 640.

"The word 'passageway' cannot be any broader in its signification than 'way' or 'highway,' and can have essentially no different meaning." Hence the reservation of the privilege of a passway, reading "passway" as "passageway," was merely the reservation of a way or right of passage over the ground. Chandler v. Goodridge, 23 Me. 78, 82.

Many courts have treated the terms "streets," "roads," and "highways," and related descriptive words, as synonymous in interpreting statutes: Board of Revenue of Jefferson County v. State ex rel. City of Birmingham, 54 South. 757, 759, 172 Ala. 138 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6250-6254, 6684).

The term "public highway," in the broad, ordinary sense, includes every common way for travel by persons on foot or with vehicles rightfully used on highways, which the public have a right to use either conditionally or unconditionally. Welrich v. State, 121 N. W. 652, 653, 140 Wis. 98, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1221, 17 Ann. Cas. 802.

The term "public highway" should be regarded as having been used in its general sense, unless there is a reason for believing it was used in its limited sense. Welrich v. State, 121 N. W. 652, 653, 140 Wis. 98, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1221, 17 Ann. Cas. 802.

Public highways are roads, streets, alleys, lanes, courts, places, trails, and bridges, laid out or erected as such by the public, or, if laid out or erected by others, dedicated or abandoned to the public, or made such in actions for partition of real property. Hartley v. Vermillion, 74 Pac. 987, 990, 141 Cal. 339 (citing Pol. Code, § 2618).

In "an act to revise, amend, and codify the statutes in relation to American roads, bridges and ferries, and destruction of thistles," the word "roads" is synonymous with "highways." City of Newton v. Board of Sup'rs of Jasper County, 112 N. W. 167, 168, 135 Iowa, 27, 124 Am. St. Rep. 256.

The word "highway," within Rev. St. c. 52, § 86, providing that no engine or train shall run across a highway near the compact part of a town at a speed greater than six miles an hour, unless the railroad maintains a flagman, a gate, or certain signals at such crossing, is not limited to ways established by county commissioners or municipal authorities, but is used in its more generic and popular legal sense. Moore v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 76 Atl. 871, 874, 106 Me. 297.

To constitute a "public highway" it must have a terminus, by which the public can enter it, and a terminus whence they can leave it. Manigault v. S. M. Ward & Co., 123 Fed. 707, 713.

A way to the incumbrance of which any person may set up a defensible claim or right is not a "public highway." It follows of necessity that such a claim or right cannot ripen into title as against the public by mere lapse of time or long-continued assertion. Lacy v. City of Oskaloosa, 121 N. W. 542, 545, 143 Iowa, 704, 81 L. R. A. (N. S.) 853.

Under Pol Code, § 1594, declaring all section lines within the state to be "public highways" as far as practicable, a section line road becomes an established public highway, without any action or procedure on the part of the county, which no one has the right to obstruct. Pol. Code, § 1594, declaring all section lines public highways as far as practicable, does not establish a highway on a section line where it is impracticable to construct it on such line, but any situation where it is reasonably possible to construct a highway is within the operation of that section. Lowe v. East Sioux Falls Quarry Co., 126 N. W. 609, 610, 25 S. D. 393.

"Public highways" are such only as come within the express provision of the statutes declaring them to be such in the common acceptance of the terms. Roads or ways are considered to be either public or private; but in the legal acceptance a way may be a road that is neither a "public highway" nor a private road or way under the statute. Territory v. Richardson, 76 Pac. 456, 457, 8 Ariz. 336.

Bridge

"A bridge is a part of the 'highway.'" Culbertson v. Abbeville County, 50 S. E. 33, 34, 70 S. C. 457.

Strictly speaking, there is no local ownership of public highway bridges in the absence of statutory provision therefor; they being parts of the general system of highways belonging to the state at large. Karr v. Board of Com'rs of Putnam County, 85 N. E. 1, 8, 170 Ind. 571.

Though the word "bridge" is used in every chapter and in almost every section of the statutes relating to highways, a distinction has always been made between bridges and other portions of the highway; the word "bridge" not being equivalent to or included in the term "highway." City of Flemingsburg v. Fleming County, 105 S. W. 133, 184, 127 Ky. 120.

A toll bridge is a public "highway" over which everybody has the right to pass; it being a franchise created for the use and convenience of the traveling public. In re

People, 128 N. Y. Supp. 29, 33, 70 Misc. Rep. 72.

"Bridges" are usually constructed across water courses or deep depressions across the roadway as a means of safe and convenient passage. While a bridge on a public road is a part of the road, it differs from the "road" strictly so called, and generally is much more expensive to construct and maintain, and often requires a greater outlay, than can be provided for from the road and bridge tax. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. v. People, 65 N. E. 715, 716, 200 Ill. 865.

Generally a public bridge will be regarded as a part of the common "highway" over a stream unless in the application of some statute a restricted meaning be indicated. A bridge built on a road located on the line dividing two counties from funds supplied in part by private subscriptions and the remainder by a township of one of the counties which, being a public utility, is accepted and adopted and used by the public as a part of the highway over the stream it spans, is a part of the highway, and expenses incurred in its repair are by the provisions of Laws 1874, c. 109, p. 176, to be borne jointly by the two counties. Board of Com'rs of Cloud County v. Board of Com'rs of Mitchell County, 90 Pac. 286, 289, 75 Kan. 750 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 8295).

A "public bridge" is an essential part of a road, and the erection of a bridge is but the laying out of a "highway." Where, by the extension of the corporate limits of a city, a public bridge, owned and controlled by a county, comes to be within such city, it becomes the duty of the city to keep the bridge in repair. Oavender v. City of Charleston, 59 S. E. 732, 734, 62 W. Va. 654 (quoting and adopting definition in Elliot, Streets, § 27).

Traction Act March 14, 1893, § 1, empowering street railway corporations to construct their lines over highways, etc., authorizes the construction of such lines over bridges, public bridges and their approaches being "highways," and the rebuilding as necessary any part of the roads over such highways and bridges, and hence the act necessarily limited the sole control over bridges previously existing in the board of chosen freeholders under 1 Gen. St. p. 305, § 1, and page 410, § 4. Public Service Ry. Co. v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County, 78 Atl. 235, 238, 78 N. J. Eq. 20.

Common and equal right to use

"A 'highway,' according to the common law, is a place in which all the people have a right to pass. A common street and public highway are the same, and any way which is common to all the people may be called a 'highway.'" Skinner v. Town of Weathersfield, 63 A. 142, 143, 78 Vt. 410 (quoting State v. Wilkinson, 2 Vt. 490, 21 Am. Dec. 560).

The fact that an ancient highway is rarely used except by a few persons to whom it affords an egress and ingress to their lands does not make it the less a "public highway." Small v. Binford, 83 N. E. 507, 510, 41 Ind. App. 440.

"Every public thoroughfare is a 'highway,' and a way open to all the people is a highway, whether it is, strictly speaking, public or private. Roads generally used by the citizens of a locality, but open to the general public, are public roads, although they may afford facilities for travel to only such persons as reside in the neighborhood, and may not be useful to the general public. * * * The character of the road does not depend upon its length, nor upon the places to which it leads, nor is its character determined by the number of persons who actually travel upon it." Dunn & Lallande Bros. v. Gunn, 42 South. 686, 690, 149 Ala. 583 (citing Elliott, Roads & Streets, §§ 1, 8, 11).

"Whatever may be the dimensions of a way, if it be opened to the free use of the public, it is a 'highway'; nor is its character determined by the number of persons who actually use it for passage. The right of the public to use the way, and not the size of the way or the number of persons who choose to exercise that right, determines its character. An alley of small dimensions, actually used by only a limited number of persons, but which the public have a general right to use, may be regarded as a public way. It is to be understood, of course, that the way cannot be deemed a public one so as to charge the local authorities with the duty of maintaining it, unless it has been legally established or accepted; but, if it is so established or accepted, it is to be considered one of the public ways, whatever may be its size or situation, provided it is suitable for any kind of travel by the public." Tise v. Whitaker-Harvey Co., 57 S. E. 210, 211, 144 N. O. 507 (quoting and adopting the definition in Elliott, Roads & Streets, § 24).

"A 'highway' is a public way open and free to any one who has occasion to pass along it on foot, or with any kind of vehicle." It is the generic name for all kinds of public ways, including among others, roads, streets, and alleys. No matter whether obtained by prescription or dedication, or under the right of eminent domain, it is a highway if there is a general right to use it for travel. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Atlanta, B. & A. R. Co., 54 S. E. 736, 746, 125 Ga. 529.

"The term 'highway' in its popular sense is a road or way open to the use of the public; a main road or thoroughfare. A way open to all people is a 'highway.' Though every public thoroughfare is a highway, it is not essential that every 'highway' should be a thoroughfare. A road which leads only to the residence of a single individual may be a 'highway.' Every thoroughfare which is used by the public and which in the language of English books is common to all the King's subjects is a 'highway.' They are created by legislative authority, by dedication, or by prescription. The construction of the term 'highway' when used in a statute depends upon the legislative intent, and no fixed rule in regard to its meaning can be given." Southern Ry. Co. v. Combs, 53 S. E. 508, 124 Ga. 1004 (citing Webster's International Dict.; Elliott, Roads & Streets [2d Ed.] § 1 et seq.).

The term "public highway" means more than the right of way over which a public highway may be established. It is a passage or road which every citizen has a right to use. The expression "public highway," used in Laws Dak. T. 1870-71, p. 519, c. 33, declaring that "all section lines shall be and are hereby declared public highways as far as practicable," was evidently intended to make every section line in the then territory and now state a "highway" over which the people of the state would have an easement and right of way, subject to the qualifications therein mentioned for the purpose of passing from one section of the state to another. Declaring section lines "public highways" means that they are roads which every citizen has a right to use. Lawrence v. Ewert, 114 N. W. 709, 710, 21 S. D. 580.

Control and repair by public

A "public highway" is one under the control of and kept by the public, and must have been established either by regular proceeding for that purpose or general use by the public for 20 years or dedicated by the owner of the soil. Bellview Cemetery Co. v. McEvers, 57 South. 375, 376, 174 Ala. 457.

A "highway," originally laid out as a public highway, retains its character as a public highway, though placed under the control of park commissioners, as authorized by St. 1893, p. 934, c. 300, and it is unlawful for one to operate his automobile on such highway without having the register number displayed thereon, as required by the State Highway Commission in its certificate of registration. Commonwealth v. Butler, 90 N. E. 360, 204 Mass. 11.

As created by user or dedication

It is the law of this state that any road or highway which has been continuously, openly, notoriously, and adversely used as a public road or highway by the general public under a claim of right for 10 years, where the same has been worked and kept up at the expense of the public, is a lawful road or "highway." Portland & S. R. Co. v. Clarke County, 93 Pac. 1083, 1084, 48 Wash. 509.

Proof that a highway has been used for general public travel for more than 20 years, and that it has been kept in repair by the public authorities, warrants the conclusion that it is a public highway by user under Pub. St. 1901, c. 67, § 1, declaring that "highways" are such as have been used for public travel for 20 years. Harriman v. Moore & Co., 67 Atl. 225, 227, 74 N. H. 277 (citing Stevens v. Nashau, 46 N. H. 192; In re Camp-ton, 41 N. H. 197, 198; Willey v. Portsmouth, 35 N. H. 303).

To establish a highway by user, the general public must have traveled a definite path without substantial change uninterruptedly for 10 consecutive years under an adverse claim of right. Smith v. Nofsinger, 126 N. W. 659, 661, 86 Neb. 834.

Rev. Code 1852, as amended 1893, p. 491, c. 60, § 1, declares that all public roads previously laid out as such, or made by lawful authority, or which have been used as such and maintained at the public charge for 20 years, are public highways. Held, that such section was descriptive of public highways existing at the time of its enactment, and did not apply to others subsequently laid out by public authority or private dedication. State v. Southard (Del.) 66 Atl. 372, 373, 6 Pennewill, 247.

The character of the use necessary to establish a "highway" by user has been often before the court. The use to be sufficient for that purpose must have actual uninterrupted, continuant use by the general public under a claim of right for a period of ten years. It must be adverse to the owner of the property, and while such owner is without disability in law to assert and enforce his rights, that use, by license or commission of the owner or while he is under disability, is not such a use as will create a public easement. Peterson v. Waske, 88 Pac. 206, 45 Wash. 307 (citing Shell v. Poulson, 63 Pac. 204, 23 Wash. 535; Megrath v. Nickerson, 64 Pac. 163, 24 Wash. 235; Yakima County v. Conrad, 66 Pac. 411, 26 Wash. 155; Wasmund v. Harm, 78 Pac. 777, 36 Wash. 170; Seattle v. Smithers, 79 Pac. 615, 37 Wash. 119).

To constitute a "highway" under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 3846, providing that all highways that have been used as such for not less than seven years, and have been worked and kept up at the expense of the public, shall be public highways, the highway must have been worked and kept up at public expense. State v. City of Seattle, 107 Pac. 827, 831, 57 Wash. 602, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1188.

It must be assumed that a road generally used by the public for 25 or 30 years is a public highway, and that it would be unlawful to obstruct it, even though there is nothing to show that it is what might be termed, in the meaning of the statute, "a county road," worked and maintained by the public authorities. Smith v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. (Ky.) 105 S. W. 96.

Acts 1902 (23 St. at Large, p. 906), declaring that roads laid out under statute or order of court or of commissioners shall be included under the definition of "highways," does not limit the jurisdiction of highway officers to such roads, but such jurisdiction extends to highways acquired by prescription. Township Com'rs of St. Andrews Parish v. Charleston Min. & Mfg. Co., 57 S. E. 201, 202, 76 S. C. 382.

A road that has been used by the public uninterruptedly for 20 years, with the knowledge and consent of the owner of the soil, becomes a public "highway." Bidinger v. Bishop, 76 Ind. 244, 254.

Proof that a road was commonly and largely used by the general public for a number of years, without more, will not support an allegation that it was a "public" highway or a "public" road. Johnson v. State, 58 S. E. 265, 267, 1 Ga. App. 195.

Under Laws 1871-72, p. 675, § 1, Laws 1883, p. 137, and Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, c. 121, § 1, providing that all roads used by the public as a highway for the period prescribed therein, varying in the different acts cited, are public highways, the intention of the former owner is immaterial in determining whether a road exists by prescription. Village of Peotone v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 79 N. E. 678, 681, 224 Ill. 101.

A certain way was a short cut-off between two roads. There was evidence justifying a finding that, though never laid out as a way, under the statute, it had been open, and commonly used by the public for travel for at least 40 years, and that the public had gained a prescriptive right of travel thereover. A railroad company, when it built its road, took a deed of the premises providing that the company would maintain a train crossing over the track at such place, and it appeared that the successor of such railroad company had kept the crossing open, planked, and at times it stretched a rope across the way while fast trains were passing, and maintained a sign at the crossing on which were the words "Railroad Crossing," which, as well as being a warning, was an invitation to the public to use the crossing. Held, that the crossing was a "highway" within Rev. St. c. 52, § 86, providing that no engine or train shall run across a highway near the compact part of a town at a speed greater than six miles an hour, unless the company maintains a flagman, gate, or certain signals there. Moore v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 76 Atl. 871, 873, 106 Me. 297.

Dedication of land for a highway must be accepted by public authorities or by user to create a "highway" and vest in the public a right of passage thereon, and mere travel by the public without action by the public authorities in repairing or maintaining the highway is insufficient. Smith v. Smythe, 90

The word "highways," as used in Rev. St. § 2477, granting a right of way for highways over public lands, should be construed in accordance with recognized local laws, customs, and usages, so that a highway dedicated thereby is not limited to the beaten track, but is 60 feet wide, as provided for the establishment of ordinary highways by Rev. Code, § 1339. City of Butte v. Mikosowitz, 102 Pac. 593, 594, 39 Mont. 350.

A "highway" acquired by prescription is a "public highway" within the statute against shooting a pistol at random on a "public highway," and it is not required that the highway shall be established by an order of the county court. Commonwealth v. Terry (Ky.) 86 S. W. 519, 520.

As an easement

A "highway," though common to all people, is said to be nothing but an easement in the lands over which it passes. The public have no other right in it than the right of passage with the powers and privileges incident to that right, such as digging the soil and using the timber and other materials found within the space of the road, in a reasonable manner, for the purpose of making and repairing the road and its bridges. The owner of the soil still retains his exclusive right in all the mines, quarries, springs of water, timber, and earth, for every purpose not incompatible with the public right of way. These rules must be taken with some limitation as to the streets of a city or large village. There are certain uses, such as the construction of sewers and the laying of gas and water pipes, to which the latter are generally applied. These uses, which are called "urban servitudes," are the necessary incidents of streets in large cities, and are paramount to the rights of the owner of the fee. Sweet v. Perkins, 101 N. Y. Supp. 163, 165, 115 App. Div. 784 (citing Thomp. Highw. pp. 25, 26).

See Ferry.

Gravel and macadamized road

Acts 1905, p. 521, c. 167, entitled "An act concerning highways," which was intended to be a compilation, revision, and codification of statutes relating to "highways," in which all the different systems of improving highways in force prior to 1905 were substantially reenacted, repealed by Implication Acts 1903, p. 255, c. 145, entitled "An act concerning gravel and macadamized roads." Findling v. Foster (Ind.) 81 N. E. 480.

As highway properly laid out

The term public road or "highway," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 2222, requiring railroad companies to blow locomotive whistles and to reduce the speed of trains after reaching a point 400 yards from a public road crossing, is not confined to a road laid out and established by county authorities by regular proceedings, but includes as well "highways" which came into existence by legislative action, by proceedings of the county authorities, by dedication, or by prescription. McCoy v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 62 S. E. 297, 298, 131 Ga. 378.

"Highways," as expressly defined by Pub. St. 1901, c. 67, § 1, "are only such as are laid out in the mode prescribed therefor by statute or as have been used as such for public travel thereon other than travel to and from a toll bridge or ferry for 20 years." O'Neill v. Town of Walpole, 66 Atl. 119, 120, 74 N. H. 197.

Impassable or unopened road

Merely platting a body of land into lots and streets, without more, is insufficient to lay off and open such streets, since the survey serves only to define the location of the streets, and the portions of land on such plat intended for public use become streets when they are put into condition for travel and the public is invited to use them. Until the street is so open for public travel, the land does not partake of the character of a "highway." Robins v. McGehee, 56 S. E. 461, 463, 127 Ga. 431.

When land is taken for highway purposes it does not become a "highway," within the meaning of the statute relating to the change of grade in the highway, until it has been made into one by working it to some grade and otherwise completing it for travel. Gorham v. City of New Haven, 58 Atl. 1, 2, 76 Conn. 700.

The term "highway," as used in Code, § 919, providing that any part of a plat may be vacated, provided it does not abridge or destroy any right of any proprietor therein, and declaring that nothing contained in the statute shall authorize the closing or obstruction of the highways, means a traveled street, as distinguished from the mere space laid out between lots and blocks, which may sometimes become such. It cannot be construed to mean a country road, for the plat contemplated is that filed within corporate limits, where a road is always a street. All streets are highways, but all highways are not streets. Chrisman v. Omaha & C. B. Ry. & Bridge Co., 100 N. W. 63, 65, 125 Iowa, 133.

Under P. S. 3824, requiring the filing of a certificate in the town clerk's office of the completion and opening of a highway, and providing that the day on which it is recorded shall be deemed the time of the opening of the highway, a road does not become a public highway until such certificate is filed, unless it is recognized as such by some unequivocal act of the town. Bacon v. Boston & M. R. R., 76 Atl. 128, 131, 83 Vt. 421.

Nature of use

The term "public highway," in a limited sense, means a way for general travel which is wholly public. Weirich v. State, 121 N. W. 652, 654, 140 Wis. 98, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1221, 17 Ann. Cas. 802.

A "public highway" is primarily for public passage. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Motz, 61 S. E. 1, 3, 130 Ga. 414.

A "highway" is a public way for the use of the public in general for passage and traffic in general without distinction. The restrictions on its use are only such as are calculated to secure to the general public the largest practicable benefit from the enjoyment of the easement, and the inconveniences must be submitted to when they are only such as are incident to a reasonable use under impartial regulations. When the highway is not restricted in its dedication to some particular mode of use, it is open to all suitable methods, and it cannot be assumed that these will be the same from age to age, or that new means of making the way useful must be excluded merely because their introduction may tend to inconvenience or even to the injury of those who continue to use the road after the same manner as formerly. Thus it was not per se an improper use of a highway to operate a traction engine with trailers thereon. McCarter v. Ludlum Steel & Spring Co. (N. J.) 63 Atl. 761, 766.

"In the most primitive state of society the conception of a 'highway' was merely a footpath. In a slightly more advanced state it included the idea of a way for pack animals. . . . And thus the methods of using public highways expanded with the growth of civilization, until to-day our urban highways are devoted to a variety of uses not known in former times, and never dreamed of by the owners of the soil when the public easement was acquired. Hence it has become settled law that the easement is not limited to the particular methods of use in vogue when the easement was acquired, but includes all new and improved methods the utility and general convenience of which may afterwards be discovered and developed in aid of the general purpose for which highways are designed. And it is not material that these new and improved methods of use were not contemplated by the owner of the land when the easement was acquired, and are more onerous to him than those in use." Kirby v. Citizen's Telephone Co., 97 N. W. 3, 6, 17 S. D. 362, 2 Ann. Cas. 152 (quoting statement in Cater v. Northwestern Tel. Exch. Co., 63 N. W. 111, 60 Minn. 539, 28 L. R. A. 310, 51 Am. St. Rep. 543).

"Public 'highways' are arteries of communication and of intertraffic in the commodities of the country. The means to accomplish these purposes change with the advance of civilization." As against the state, a natural gas company incorporated under the laws of Kansas, for the purpose of transporting and distributing natural gas for fuel, light, and power, may bury its pipe line in the public highway, where such use does not inconvenience, endanger, or obstruct public travel. State v. Kansas Natural Gas, Oil, Pipe Line & Improvement Co., 80 Pac. 962, 963, 71 Kan. 508, 114 Am. St. Rep. 507.

Neighborhood road

Revisal 1905, § 2567, subd. 5, requires railroads to keep highway crossings in such condition as not unnecessarily to impair their usefulness. Section 2569 requires railroads in crossing established roads or ways to so construct its works as not to impede the passage of persons or property along the same. Held, that a neighborhood road used as a mill and church road, and for the purpose of reaching a county seat, was within the terms "highways, established roads and ways," and hence, though not a public highway, it was the duty of a railroad company to keep a crossing upon the same in a safe condition. Goforth v. Southern Ry. Co., 57 S. E. 209, 144 N. C. 569.

Private way

A "highway" is a public way and not a private way. Culbertson v. Abbeville County, 60 S. E. 83, 84, 70 S. C. 457.

Const. art. 272, declares that all highways are "public highways" from which it follows that, though intended primarily for the purposes of the corporations by which they are built, the public have certain rights with respect to their use. McClanahan v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 35 South. 902, 904, 111 La. 781.

Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 4038, requiring service of notice of application for laying out a public highway, where an application prayed establishment of a public highway, the omission of the word "public" before the word "highway" in the notice was not fatal, where it was personally served, and there was no claim that landowners served did not know the object of the application, especially as the notice could apply to no other than a public highway; "highways" being public, as contradistinguished from private, ways. Gorham v. Johnson, 122 N. W. 181, 182, 157 Mich. 433.

"A 'public highway,' as contradistinguished from a private highway, is one under the control and kept by the public; dedicated for that purpose by the owner; used by the public for 20 years; or, established in a regular proceeding for that purpose." Dunn & Lallande Bros. v. Gunn, 42 South. 688, 690, 149 Ala. 583 (citing Lewman v. Andrews, 29 South. 692, 129 Ala. 174).

As expressly defined by Rev. St. Idaho 1887, § 850, "highways" are "roads, streets, alleys, and bridges laid out or erected by the public, or if laid out or erected by others dedicated or abandoned to the public." Under section 851, as amended by Sess. Laws 1893, p. 12, all roads used as highways for a period of five years, if worked and kept up at public expense, are "highways" by prescription, but a road constructed by private persons as a local road, and kept in repair by such persons, across which a gate is maintained, is not a public "highway." Palmer v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 83 Pac. 947, 949, 11 Idaho, 583.

Though a road is, in a large sense, a private way, where it provides at public expense a free and open highway by which the general public can go to and from a particular person's premises, as business or pleasure may require, it has all the legal characteristics of a "public highway." Board of Com'rs of Johnson County v. Minnear, 88 Pac. 828, 829, 72 Kan. 326.

As used in Railroad Law (Laws 1897, c. 754) § 62, providing that the authorities of any village, town, or city within which a street, avenue, or highway crosses, or is crossed by a railroad at grade, may petition the public service commission for discontinuance of the grade crossing and the separation of travel, etc., the words "street, avenue, or highway" import ways of a public character only, and that proceedings are authorized for the discontinuance of grade crossings only where a public street, avenue, or highway crosses a steam surface railroad at grade, and the railroad commissioners have no authority to charge a village with a part of the expense of eliminating crossings over streets or ways which were exclusively private. In re New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 98 N. E. 515, 200 N. Y. 121.

Railroad

A railroad is a "public highway," conducted and operated for the public's benefit. Heilbron v. St. Louis & Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas, 118 S. W. 610, 613, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 575.

A railroad is in many essential respects a public "highway," and the rules of law applicable to one are generally applicable to the other. Whalen v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 69 Atl. 390, 893, 108 Md. 11, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 130, 129 Am. St. Rep. 423.

The word "highways" in Const. art. 4, § 23, prohibiting the Legislature from passing any special or local law for laying, opening, working, or supervising highways, means ordinary roads, and not railroads. Sears v. Steel, 107 Pac. 8, 9, 55 Or. 544.

A railroad has the character of a "public highway," and the railroad corporation exercises the power of eminent domain for the public use, although the ownership of the property is in the company and not the public, and the public has no share in the profits of the business. Rothschild & Co. v. City of Chicago, 81 N. E. 407, 410, 227 Ill. 205.

The right of way of a railroad is not a "public highway," within the rule of construction of deeds to lands bounded by a public highway, in such sense as to make a deed calling for a right of way as a boundary convey the owner's interest in the land between the boundary of the right of way and the railroad track. Couch v. Texas & P. R. Co., 90 S. W. 860, 861, 99 Tex. 464.

The right of way of a railroad company is not a "public highway" within the constitutional provision exempting public highways from taxation, so that it would not be exempted on that ground from special assessments for street improvements. Gilsonite Const. Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 144 S. W. 1086, 1087, 240 Mo. 650.

A "railroad" is, in a sense, a "public highway," and the construction of a railroad over a strip of land by the consent of the owner of the same, or after condemnation proceedings, as the case may be, is the dedication of the same to a public use, and the operation of the same is in the interest of the public, and cannot be interrupted by an action to recover possession of any part thereof in the interest of a private party. Southern California Ry. Co. v. Slauson, 71 Pac. 352, 354, 138 Cal. 342, 94 Am. St. Rep. 68.

Railways are not "highways" within the meaning of a provision in the charter of a telegraph company giving it the right to occupy with its telegraph lines any of the roads, highways, streets, and waters within the state. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 123 Fed. 33, 59 C. C. A. 113; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 150, 151, 195 U. S. 594, 49 L. Ed. 382.

Railway rights of way are not made public property by charter provisions declaring the railways "public highways," so as to subject such rights of way to occupation by telegraph companies without the consent of the railway company, under Act July 24, 1866, c. 230, 14 Stat. 221, giving telegraph companies the right to construct, maintain, and operate telegraph lines through and over the public domain, and "over and along any of the military or post roads of the United States." Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 123 Fed. 33, 59 C. C. A. 113; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 133-142, 195 U. S. 540, 49 L. Ed. 312, 1 Ann. Cas. 517.

The right of way of a railway company is not exempt from local assessment for benefits upon the ground that by the Constitution and statutes railways are declared to be "public highways." The declaration in the Constitution that railways are "public highways" was not intended to throw them open as thoroughfares for pedestrians. Its object was to lay a foundation for legislative regulation or railways, but not to change the nature of the railroad property, or to divert it from the general purpose for which it was designed. Such declaration is in no sense a warrant to use the cars of the railway company without the payment of a reasonable compensation. Heman Const. Co. v. Wabash R. Co., 104 S. W. 67, 72, 206 Mo. 172, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 112, 121 Am. St. Rep. 649, 12 Ann. Cas. 630.

"Street railways are, in a certain sense, 'highways,' but not in the strict sense are they public ways; for their owners have private rights of property in the franchise, and they are operated for the private benefit of their stockholders. The public benefits from street railways are only incidental." Briden v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 65 Atl. 315, 317, 27 R. I. 569.

Railroad platform

A platform at a station, used by the public going to and from trains, and used by the public without objection in traveling from one street to another, and to other parts of the depot grounds, is a public highway, within an accident policy insuring against injury, while walking on a public highway, by actual contact with a moving conveyance. Rudd v. Great Eastern Casualty & Indemnity Co., 131 N. W. 633, 114 Minn. 512, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1205, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 606.

Street, alley, or town way

A "street" is a highway, but a "highway" is not necessarily a street; a street being a public highway in an incorporated town or city. Strange v. Board of Com'rs of Grant County, 91 N. E. 242, 247, 173 Ind. 640.

A public street in a city is a "public highway," and its uses belong to the public generally, and it cannot be said that such uses are limited to the municipality or to its citizenship alone. Alabama Western R. Co. v. State ex rel. Attorney General, 46 South. 468, 155 Ala. 491, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1173, 16 Ann. Cas. 485.

In Civ. Code Cal. § 536, which as re-enacted March 20, 1905, grants to both telegraph and telephone companies the right to construct their lines "along and upon any public road or highway," the word "highway" includes a street. Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Pomona, 164 Fed. 561, 573.

Many courts have treated the terms "streets" and "highways" as synonymous in interpreting statutes. Board of Revenue of Jefferson County v. State ex rel. City of Birmingham, 54 South. 757, 172 Ala. 138 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6250-6254, 6684 et seq.); State ex rel. City of Tusca- loosa v. Court of County Com'rs of Tuscaloosa County, 54 South. 763, 173 Ala. 724.

In 2 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, p. 1551, c. 42, § 40, providing that if, in the construction of the work of any drainage district, any public highway or railroad, or any part of the same, will be benefited, the commissioners may assess to such "public road" or railroad such sum as will be just in proportion to the benefits received, the words "public highways" were intended to mean "public roads," not the streets or alleys of a city or village. Drainage Com'rs of Dist. No. 1 v. Village of Cerro Gordo, 75 N. E. 516, 518, 217 Ill. 488.

In view of the use of the word "road" throughout the Code of 1897, where the word "highway" previously appeared in the statute, and of Code, § 48, par. 5, providing that the word "highway" and "road" may be held equivalent to "county highway," "county road," "common road," "state road," the word "roads," as used in Code section 2158, authorizing the construction of telephone lines along the public roads of the state and the erection of the necessary fixtures therefor, is equivalent to the word "highways," as used in a similar provision of Code 1873, § 1324, as amended by Acts 19th Gen. Assem. c. 104, and includes the streets and alleys of a city or town. East Boyer Telephone Co. v. Incorporated Town of Vail (Iowa) 129 N. W. 298, 299.

"The term 'highways' embraces city streets within the meaning of the statutes conferring upon telegraph and telephone companies the right to occupy the public highways of the state, unless a different intent is clearly indicated." Code Ala. 1896, § 2490, providing that the right of way is granted to any person or corporation having the right to construct telegraph and telephone lines within this state to construct them along the margin of public highways, confers upon a telephone company the right to construct its lines in the streets of a city, which are "highways" within the meaning of the statute. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Mobile, 162 Fed. 523, 528.

As used in the state Constitution forbidding grant of right to construct a street railroad within any city, town, or village or upon "public highways" without the consent of local authorities having control of the street or highway, the words "public highways" are clearly used to describe some public thoroughfare different from a street in a city, town, or village, and cannot be construed to mean streets; nor can they be held, with any degree of reason or force, to apply to streets in an unincorporated town or village as contradistinguished from the streets in an incorporated city, town, or village. If the desire had been to confine the power to grant authority to erect and operate street railways to the streets of cities, towns, or villages, the words "public highways," being superfluous and confusing, would never have been used. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Houston Electric Co., 122 S. W. 287, 289, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 170.

"The term 'highway' is generic, comprehending in its broadest sense every public way, from an alley to a railroad or a navigable river." The Legislature, in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7283d, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors by virtue of a license in any room, unless it is arranged with a window or glass door, so that the whole of it may be in view from the street or highway, did not use the word "highway" in an unrestricted sense, and a paved alley 16 feet wide passing through the middle of a block is not a highway. State v. Harrison, 70 N. E. 877, 878, 162 Ind. 542.

The term "highway" is a generic term and includes streets, alleys, and other public ways. The word "highways" in the title of Acts Ind. 1907, p. 249 (Burns' St. 1908, § 8962), entitled an act concerning actions against cities and towns on account of injuries from defective "highways" and bridges, is sufficiently broad to include in the body of the act provisions for actions for damages for injuries from any defect in any street, alley, highway, or bridge, and the act is not violative of Const. art. 4, § 19, providing that the subject of every act shall be expressed in its title. Gribben v. City of Franklin, 94 N. E. 757, 758, 175 Ind. 500.

Code, § 422, subd. 16, empowers the board of supervisors to discontinue any state or territorial highway, and subdivision 17 empowers them to establish or discontinue any county highway through or within the county. Section 751 empowers cities and towns to establish or vacate streets and alleys. Section 48, subd. 5, provides that the words "highway" and "road" include public bridges, and may be held equivalent to the words "county road," "county way," "common road," and "state road." Section 1507 provides that all public streets of villages are a part of the road. Held that, where a plat was made of land dividing it into lots, streets, and alleys prior to the incorporation of a town embracing the land platted, the streets and alleys became county roads subject to the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors, and though after the incorporation of the town the control may have passed to the city council, yet the incorporation of the town having been vacated, the control of the streets and alleys reverted to the board of supervisors. Chrisman v. Brandes, 112 N. W. 833, 835, 137 Iowa, 433.

Act June 16, 1886, providing that streets, lanes, and alleys in the city of Pittsburgh laid out by private persons shall be deemed public highways, does not apply to lands laid out as lots situated in a township and subsequently brought within the city limits. O'Donnell v. City of Pittsburgh, 83 Atl. 314, 318, 234 Pa. 401.

Pol. Code, § 2600, and Laws 1903, p. 66, c. 44, amending Pol. Code, pt. 3, tit. 6, art. 1, c. 2, provide that all streets are "public highways," so that Civ. Code, § 1000, authorizing telephone corporations to construct their lines along any of the roads by the erection of necessary fixtures, etc., authorizes their construction along the streets of a city. State ex rel. Rocky Mountain Bell Tel. Co. v. City of Red Lodge, 76 Pac. 758, 759, 760, 30 Mont. 338.

Civ. Code Prac. § 129, provides that no variance is material which does not mislead a party to his prejudice, and that a party claiming to be so misled must show such fact, when the court may order the pleading amended, and section 130 declares that, if such variance be not material, the court may direct the fact to be found according to the evidence and order an immediate amendment. Held that, where plaintiff alleged the maintenance of a nuisance by defendant in a highway of G. county, evidence that the place was a public street in a village, in the absence of a claim of surprise, did not constitute a material variance, a public street being a "public highway" of the county in a broad sense. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Smith, 118 S. W. 933, 935, 133 Ky. 732.

Trees as part of

Under a franchise authorizing a gas company to lay gas mains, etc., and requiring streets, highways, etc., to be left in as good condition as before the laying of the mains, etc., the term "highways" included any trees that might have been planted on them for shade or ornament. Robbins v. Hartford City Gaslight Co., 74 Atl. 113, 114, 82 Conn. 394.

Turnpike and toll road

In a general sense, the term "public highway" includes "toll roads"; in a limited sense, it does not. Weirich v. State, 121 N. W. 652, 653, 140 Wis. 98, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1221, 17 Ann. Cas. 802.

For most purposes, a "turnpike" is regarded as a highway, and it may be said to be generally so regarded when the term "highway" is used in a statute, unless the words and purposes of the act display a different legislative intent. Atlantic & S. Ry. Co. v. State Board of Assessors of New Jersey, 77 Atl. 609, 610, 80 N. J. Law, 83.

A turnpike road is a "highway," and a portion thereof within the limits of Baltimore is a "highway of Baltimore city" within Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 23, § 306, and Baltimore City Charter (Laws 1898, pp. 244, 272-274, 290, c. 123) §§ 6, 8, 10, 11, and 37, relating to the use of highways in such city by electric light and power companies, and the granting of franchises for that purpose. Patapsco Electric Co. v. City of Baltimore, 72 Atl. 1039, 1041, 110 Md. 306.

Waterway

"All streams in the state of sufficient capacity in their natural condition to float boats, rafts, or logs are deemed public highways, and as such are subject to the use of the public." Smart v. Aroostook Lumber Co., 68 Atl. 527, 531, 103 Me. 37, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1083 (quoting and adopting definition in Veazie v. Dwinel, 50 Me. 484).

All navigable streams within the state are "highways" to the extent and for the purpose of their navigability, and the state may enter upon and improve the beds of such streams. Mashburn v. St. Joe Improvement Co., 113 Pac. 92, 94, 19 Idaho, 30, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 824.

A navigable stream is not a "highway" in the sense that that word is used in the provision of Const. S. C. art. 3, § 34, forbidding the enactment of local or special laws "to lay out, open, alter, or work roads or highways," the word "highway" being used in its ordinary sense and equivalent to a public road. Manigault v. S. M. Ward & Co., 123 Fed. 707; Manigault v. Springa, 26 Sup. Ct. 127, 133, 199 U. S. 473, 50 L. Ed. 274.

A navigable river is, of common right, a "public highway." Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Williams, 148 Fed. 442, 447 (quoting Boston & M. R. R. v. Lowell & L. R. Co., 124 Mass. 368; Commonwealth v. Coombs, 2 Mass. 489).

"A navigable river is a 'public highway.' Our canals, open and free to all for navigation upon payment of the toll fixed by law as our turnpikes are for travel upon like terms, are, I think, in every sense public highways." German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Home Water Supply Co., 174 Fed. 764, 768, 99 O. C. A. 258 (quoting and distinguishing Robinson v. Chamberlain, 34 N. Y. 389, 90 Am. Dec. 713).

Const. art. 3, § 19, forbidding the passage of any special or local law authorizing the laying out, opening, altering, maintaining, or vacating roads, highways, streets, alleys, etc., does not use the word "highways" in a sense which would include navigable rivers, but rather as expressed in Rev. Codes, § 874, in force when the Constitution was adopted, providing that highways are roads, streets, or alleys and bridges, laid out or erected by, or dedicated or abandoned to, the public; and hence Laws 1911, p. 343, authorizing the construction of dams in the North fork of the Clearwater river, is not a violation of the constitutional provision. Grice v. Clearwater Timber Co., 117 Pac. 112, 113, 20 Idaho, 70.

A natural and navigable stream is a "highway," and to cut off the supply of water flowing therein is as effectual an obstruction of the highway as it would be to build a barrier across the same or to plow up or obstruct a public road. Hutchinson v. Watson, Slough Ditch Co., 101 Pac. 1059, 1063, 16 Idaho, 484, 133 Am. St. Rep. 125.

A river, in fact nonnavigable, which is declared by Laws 1844-45, p. 299, a public "highway," is not thereby made a navigable river within Rev. St. 1899, § 8278, as amended by Laws 1906, p. 234, § 1, and reenacted by Laws 1905, p. 180 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 8917), authorizing the improvement of a nonnavigable stream for the drainage of lands, for a "public highway" is a way open to all persons, and all streams which are actually capable of flowing and of permitting the passage of ordinary boats are navigable. Mr. Webster defines the word "highway" as a "public road; a way open to all passengers. Syn.—Way; road; path; course." State ex rel. Applegate v. Taylor, 123 S. W. 892, 913, 224 Mo. 393.

Rev. St. U. S. § 2476, makes all navigable rivers within the territory occupied by public lands "public highways." Johnson v. Johnson, 95 Pac. 499, 506, 14 Idaho, 561, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1240.

A stream to be a "public highway" for floatage must be capable in its natural condition and at the ordinary winter stages of water of valuable public use, and, if not, it is private property. Ordinary stages of water or natural conditions, within this rule, do not mean a continuous state of floatage or an average volume of water, but has reference to the natural flow of the water, and is applied to the stream in its natural condition without the application of artificial means, and is used in contradistinction to extraordinary or unusual floods. That which occurs with reasonable certainty, periodically, can hardly be said to be unusual, and much less is it extraordinary, and may be properly characterized as ordinary. Therefore a stream that is capable of floating logs unaided by artificial means during freshets or stages of water occurring with reasonable frequency and continuing long enough to make its use of commercial value is a "public highway" for that purpose; but a stream which is not such a way cannot be made one by the use of dams or other artificial means without first acquiring the rights of riparian proprietors. Kamm v. Normand, 91 Pac. 448, 450, 50 Or. 9, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 290, 125 Am. St. Rep. 698 (citing 1 Farnham, Waters, § 139).

The Willamette river, being navigable, is a public highway, and title to the bed and banks is in the state, for the benefit of the public. State v. Portland General Electric Co., 98 Pac. 160, 161, 52 Or. 502.

Acts Md. 1908, c. 148, confers power on the city of Baltimore to provide for the improvement of the P. river, to remove therefrom anything detrimental to navigation, and to regulate the erection and maintenance of bulkheads, etc., therein. The act also authorized the city to provide for the appointment of officers necessary to execute such powers, and to impose fines and penalties for breach of any ordinance in conformity with the act. Pursuant thereto, an ordinance was adopted directing the harbor board to require all defective wharves or bulkheads to be rebuilt or repaired within a reasonable time, to be prescribed by notice, and imposed a fine of $10 a day on any owner failing to comply therewith. Held, that navigable water within the corporate limits of a city and over which the city is given control is not a "highway" in the same sense as a city street, and that the city's mere omission to perform its duty imposed by such act to inspect a bulkhead in the P. river, which was dangerous to navigation, did not render the city liable for injuries to libellant's launch caused by grounding on certain of the submerged piles belonging to the bulkhead, nor for injury to and death of passengers on the launch caused by the same accident. State of Maryland v. Miller, 180 Fed. 796, 810.

The word "highways," in Const. art. 4, § 23, prohibiting special or local laws for laying, opening, working, or supervising highways, means ordinary roads and not canals. Sears v. Steel, 107 Pac. 3, 9, 55 Or. 544.

Laws 1899, p. 958, § 469, authorized a canal company to lease, sell, or discontinue its canal. The canal company conveyed the entire canal and its appurtenances to a steamboat company, with all the franchises of the grantor in connection with the ownership and operation of the canal. The steamboat company operated the canal for about three years, charging the tolls authorized by law, when it conveyed the east 12 miles of the canal to a manufacturing company, reserving to itself and its successor and a certain person named the right at all times when the canal was operated to use it for boats, light or loaded, without charges. The entire canal except such 12 miles was abandoned, but the grantee continued to use the 12 miles for itself and such persons as it saw fit to permit. Such 12 miles were a "public highway," and must be regarded, for the purpose of transportation, a public highway, to be operated under the restrictions placed on the original canal company by the act under which it was organized. New York Cement Co. v. Consolidated Rosendale Cement Co., 70 N. E. 451, 453, 178 N. Y. 167.

HIGHWAY AGENT

Under Laws 1893, p. 25, c. 29, § 3, a "highway agent" is a person under the direction of the selectmen, and having charge of the construction and repair of all highways and bridges within the town, with authority to employ the necessary men and teams and purchase timber plank and other material for the construction and repair of highways and bridges. O'Brien v. Town of Derry, 60 Atl. 843, 844, 73 N. H. 198.

HILARIOUS

If the word "hilarious," as used by a doctor in testifying that he had seen a certain man when he was drinking and that he became hilarious, does not have a barroom meaning that differs from its ordinary English meaning, as defined in the lexicons, it does not imply that such person was in a drunken condition. A power of attorney to confess judgment, contained in a lease made to a man and his wife, which appointed an attorney for "him" to enter "his" appearance, etc., is nevertheless to be construed as a joint power, and the word "him" read as "them," and the word "his" as "their." Barron v. Kimball, 124 Ill. App. 268, 271.

HINDER

Delay and defraud synonymous

"Defraud," "hinder," and "delay," as used in Code 1906, § 3099, are not synonymous, and a purpose to hinder and delay a creditor is therefore fraudulent within that section, although the debtor may honestly intend that all his debts shall ultimately be paid. Halfpenny & Hamilton v. Tate & McDevitt, 64 S. E. 28, 29, 65 W. Va. 296 (citing Edgell v. Smith, 40 S. E. 404, 50 W. Va. 349, 356).

HINDER AND DELAY

"By 'hindering and delaying' certain creditors in the collection of their debts is meant the doing of an illegal act which causes or presents an obstacle in the collection of the debt by a creditor. The act done by the debtor may not defraud the creditor in fact, and yet be fraudulent in law, because it hinders and delays creditors in the collection of their debts. Thus, for instance, a debtor may have property more than sufficient to pay all his debts, yet, if he puts his property out of his hands so that it cannot be reached by the ordinary process of law, it is 'hindering and delaying' in the eyes of the law, and a legal fraud. Such hindering and delaying of creditors in the collection of their debts the law denounces and treats as a fraud." Frank v. Minsterketter (Ky.) 99 S. W. 219, 220 (quoting Kellog v. Richardson, 19 Fed. 70).

HINDER, DELAY, AND DEFRAUD

A conveyance made to hinder and delay creditors is a conveyance "to hinder, delay, and defraud" such creditors within the meaning of Attachment Act, § 1. Adams v. Pease, 113 Ill. App. 356, 360.

Where two defendants in a slander suit mortgaged their land to their sisters, sold their personalty, and withdrew their bank accounts, the result of such acts was to "hinder, delay, and defraud" the plaintiff in the collection of his judgment against them. McCauley v. Shockey, 66 Atl. 625, 626, 105 Md. 641.

"This expression is familiar to the law of fraudulent conveyances, and was used at the common law and in the statute of Elizabeth, and has always been held to require, in order to validate a conveyance, that there shall be actual fraud; and it makes no difference that the conveyance was made for a valuable consideration if made for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or defrauding creditors, and this meaning is that which Congress intended in using the same in Bankr. Act, § 67e, so that a conveyance is not invalid under such subdivision unless actually fraudulent." Coder v. Arts, 29 Sup. Ct. 436, 443, 213 U. S. 223, 53 L. Ed. 772, 16 Ann. Cas. 1008.

HIRE

See Bailee for Hire; Contract of Hiring; Depositary for Hire; Let for Hire; Using for Hire.

The word "hire" is associated with the act of employment rather than reward for services, and in the latter connection is more on the plane of wages than of salary, though in a sense it comprehends both, and is also applied to engaging the use of property. One "hires" a coachman, a gardener, or a cook, or a carriage, and may be said to hire a superintendent, a bookkeeper, or a clerk, though it seems better in such instances to say engage or employ. The term is improperly applied to the securing of professional services—e. g., a lawyer's or a doctor's. First Nat. Bank of Wilkes-Barre v. Barnum, 160 Fed. 245, 248.

Though the primary meaning of the verb "to hire" is to procure the temporary use of an article for compensation, its secondary meaning is to grant such use. An ordinance forbidding any person to hire, or offer for hire, rolling chairs on a public way, used the verb "to hire" in its secondary sense, meaning to grant the temporary use for compensation. Harris v. Atlantic City, 62 Atl. 995, 996, 78 N. J. Law, 251.

The compensation received by a man who owned a team, wagons, and a plow, with which he worked by the day for different employers as he could obtain work, earning usually from nine to fifteen dollars per week, and working alone when he could not find work for his team, must fall within the meaning of either "wages" or "hire," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, cl. 27, 30 Stat. 545, defining a "wage-earner" to be one who works for wages, salary, or hire, at a rate of compensation not exceeding $1,500 per year. In re Yoder, 127 Fed. 894, 895.

The use of the term "hire," like the word "charter," is not inconsistent with the idea of a covenant or agreement only for freighting accommodations. Grimberg v. Columbia Packers' Ass'n, 83 Pac. 194, 197, 47 Or. 257, 114 Am. St. Rep. 927, 8 Ann. Cas. 491.

"Hiring" is expressly defined by Rev. Code Minn. 1905, § 5516, to be "a contract by which one gives to another temporary possession and use of property other than money for reward and the latter agrees to return the same to the former at a future time." Schlusser v. Great Northern R. Co., 127 N. W. 502, 508, 20 N. D. 406.

Where a liquor dealer sold liquor for delivery in a no-license town, and employed a servant, who was required, among other things, to deliver the liquor by a team owned by the seller, the wages paid to the servant for all of his services did not constitute "hire or reward" for the carriage of liquors, merely because such services might incidentally include the duty of delivering the liquor to the purchasers, within a statute prohibiting any person or corporation, with certain exceptions, from transporting liquors for hire or reward into a city or town in which certain licenses are not granted. Commonwealth v. Radocchia, 91 N. E. 856, 205 Mass. 455.

Employment distinguished

See Employment.

Salary distinguished

The term "hire" has application to the more menial, manual, or mechanical employments, and commonly implies employment for short periods, as a day or a week; while the word "salary" has reference to the more mental forms of employment and implies greater permanence of employment and payment at long intervals. State v. Duncan, 1 Tenn. Ch. App. 334, 339.

HIRE OF TEAMS

As materials, see Materials.

HIRED OUT

A statute providing that no child under the age of 14 years shall be "hired out" in any factory, etc., prohibits both the employment as well as the hiring out of a minor under such age, and therefore renders an employer knowingly employing or keeping in his employ a minor within the prohibited age guilty of a violation of the statute, making the employment itself illegal. Kirkham v. Wheller-Osgood Co., 81 Pac. 869, 870, 39 Wash. 415, 4 Ann. Cas. 532.

HIRING AT WILL

An employment without term, at a stated sum per week, is a "hiring at will," terminable by either party without notice. Warden v. Hinds, 163 Fed. 201, 203, 90 C. C. A. 449, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 529.

Where a contract of hiring is general or indefinite in its terms, it is prima facie a "hiring at will," and the burden rests upon the servant to prove that the hiring is for a definite term. Frank v. Manhattan Maternity & Dispensary, 107 N. Y. Supp. 404, 405.

A hiring at so much a year, no time being specified, is an indefinite hiring, and such a hiring is a "hiring at will," and may be terminated at any time by either party. Summers v. Phenix Ins. Co., 98 N. Y. Supp. 226, 228, 50 Misc. Rep. 181.

HIS

See, also, He.

In a will providing that, in case of the death of testator's two sons, "or either of them, without issue living at the time of 'his' decease, then the share of the one so dying without issue shall be divided equally between my grandchildren," the pronoun "his" refers to testator's sons and not to testator. Stokes v. Weston, 24 N. Y. Supp. 26, 27, 69 Hun, 608.

The word "his," as used in Ky. St. § 4208, providing that any tavern keeper, merchant, distiller, or druggist who shall violate any provision of this article, shall forfeit his license, includes a partnership and a corporation as well as an individual. Lewis & Potter v. Commonwealth, 121 S. W. 643, 644, 134 Ky. 837.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3499, provides that any minor over 19 years of age may proceed before the district court of the county of his residence to have his disabilities as a minor removed. Article 3500 provides that if it shall appear that the grounds are sufficient, and that it is advisable for the minor to have his disabilities removed, a decree therefor may be entered. Article 3501 provides that after the removal of disabilities the minor shall be deemed of full age, except that he cannot vote until he reaches the full age. Held, in view of article 3268, cl.

R. Co. v. Wheeler*, 116 S. W. 83, 86, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 603.

As their

Ky. St. 1903, § 457, provides that a word importing the singular number only may extend and apply to several persons or things as well as to one person or thing, and vice versa. Section 3514 provides that a police judge of a city of the fourth class shall be clerk of his own court, but may appoint a deputy clerk, and section 3515 declares that the council shall, by ordinance, fix the compensation of the police judge "for his services." Held, that the words "his services" might properly be construed to import "their services" and to authorize the council to make an allowance both to the judge and to the deputy clerk when appointed. Greenleaf v. Woods, 96 S. W. 458, 459, 123 Ky. 306.

A power of attorney to confess judgment, contained in a lease made to a man and his wife, which appointed an attorney for "him" to enter "his" appearance, etc., is nevertheless to be construed as a joint power, and the word "him" read as "them," and the word "his" as "their." Barron v. Kimball, 124 Ill. App. 268, 271.

See Not His Own.

The expression "his own," in a policy of fire insurance covering the product of a glass manufacturer's plant, "his own, or held by him in trust," refers to that absolutely belonging to insured. Burke v. Continental Ins. Co. of City of New York, 91 N. Y. Supp. 402, 403, 100 App. Div. 108.

Negligence of the attorney of defendant, whereby default judgment was rendered, is not neglect of defendant within Rev. St. 1895, art. 345, requiring his affidavit for removal of the case by certiorari from the justice's court to the county court, on the ground of injustice done him by the final determination, to show that such injustice was not caused by "his own" inexcusable neglect. Lucas v. Harrison (Tex.) 139 S. W. 659.

His own official misconduct

If a tax collector, in addition to posting advertisements of default in paying taxes in two or more public places, as required by Pub. St. 1901, c. 60, § 14, maliciously published similar notices in the papers, for the purpose of injuring the taxpayer, and not believing that such additional notices were necessary to a successful tax sale, he would be liable for damages caused thereby, though the taxes were in fact delinquent, and is not relieved from liability by section 16, providing that he shall not be liable for any cause except his own official misconduct; his malicious act being "his own official misconduct" within the statute. Hutchins v. Page, 72 Atl. 689, 690, 75 N. H. 215, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 182.

His own right

See Holder in His Own Right.

His own use and benefit

The phrase "his own use and benefit and for the use or benefit of no other person," as used in Pol. Code, § 3495, providing that an applicant for the purchase of school lands must state in his affidavit that he desires to purchase the same for his own use and benefit, and for the use and benefit of no other person, and that he shall have made no contract or agreement to sell the same, does not mean that the applicant must go into possession and occupy the land and personally devote it to the uses of which it is capable. It simply means that, when one makes application to purchase, he does so with the intention and purpose of deriving whatever profit or advantage may accrue through such purchase for himself alone, as contradistinguished from a purchase for the profit and advantage of some other person. As an element entering into that benefit, he may properly have in contemplation a sale of the land at a profit, some time after he has obtained the certificate of purchase, and when the law expressly authorizes such a sale. Henshall v. Marsh, 90 Pac. 693, 695, 151 Cal. 289.

His term of office

The phrase "his term of office," in Const. art. 4, § 26, creating legislative disability to change the compensation of public officers under certain circumstances, is ambiguous, and the question of whether it is synonymous with his incumbency of office under a particular election or appointment, or is synonymous with the full term of office created by Const. art. 7, is not so free from doubt as not to be open to solution by judicial construction. State ex rel. Bashford v. Frear, 120 N. W. 217, 219, 223, 138 Wis. 536, 16 Ann. Cas. 1019.

HISTORY

"History" consists largely, if not wholly, of the records, narratives, and statements of others, purely hearsay, and if the history of a stream be such as that therefrom floods of a given height may reasonably be anticipated by a party, such as a carrier, then such floods must be provided against. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Madden, Sykes & Co., 103 S. W. 1193, 1195, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 597.

The separation of the Methodist Episcopal Churches, the one north and the other south of a common boundary line, has been the subject of much discussion, in which the whole community was more or less interested and was an event that connected itself with, and formed a part of the "history" of the country, of which courts will take judicial notice. Malone v. La Croix, 41 South. 724, 725, 148 Ala. 657 (citing Humphrey v. Burnside, 4 Bush [67 Ky.] 215; Hart v. Bodley, Hardin [3 Ky.] 98; Creighton v. Bilbo, 1 T. B. Mon. [17 Ky.] 138).

HITCHED

See Not Hitched.

HOG

Proof that defendant received the carcass of a hog, which had been killed by another before defendant received it, constituted a fatal variance from an indictment charging defendant with receiving "one hog, the property of R.," since the term "hog," in the absence of an allegation to the contrary, would be presumed to mean a live animal. Hutchinson v. State, 88 S. W. 331, 332, 72 Ark. 640.

It is error to refuse to charge the theft of a dead hog does not constitute hog stealing. Paulk v. State, 63 S. E. 659, 661, 5 Ga. App. 567.

Where the evidence showed that accused did not kill the hog which he was charged with stealing, nor suggest that it be killed, and the intent to steal, if any, had been formed after the hog had been killed, he was not guilty of hog stealing, but the theft of the carcass was simple larceny. Moses v. State, 69 S. E. 575, 576, 8 Ga. App. 446.

HOIST

As appliance, see Appliance.

Labor Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 31) § 18, provides that a person employing or directing another to perform labor in the repairing of a house, building, or "structure" shall not furnish, erect, or cause to be furnished or erected, for such labor, scaffolding, "hoists," stays, or other mechanical contrivances which are unsafe, and which are not such as to give proper protection to a person so employed or engaged. Held that, where a car repairer was injured by the breaking of the handle of a ratchet jack with which the body of a freight car had been hoisted to permit repairs on the trucks, as the body was being lowered, the jack, while not a "hoist" within the statute, is nevertheless a "mechanical contrivance" furnished by the railroad company for plaintiff's use, and the car was a "structure" as to which the jack was being used; and hence the defective jack was within the statute. Corbett v. New York

Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 185 N. Y. Supp. 137, 139, 151 App. Div. 159.

HOISTING APPARATUS

A gin pole, to which was attached a block and fall used to haul beams to the third floor of a new building, the walls and girders of which had not yet been constructed, was not a "hoisting apparatus," within Laws 1897, p. 468, c. 415, § 20, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 851, c. 192, providing that, if hoisting apparatus is used within buildings in process of construction, the contractors and owners shall cause the shafts and openings in each fall to be inclosed by a barrier. McNeill v. Bottsford-Dickinson Co., 112 N. Y. Supp. 867, 869, 128 App. Div. 544.

HOLD

See Take and Hold; To Have and to Hold.

"To hold," when used in the habendum clause of a deed, includes the twofold idea of actual possession of the thing and being invested with legal title." In re Crofoot's Will, 187 N. Y. Supp. 430, 481 (quoting 4 Words and Phrases, p. 8317).

The word "hold," as it relates to real property, is to enjoy and possess. The word "hold," as used in a statute providing that aliens may hold real estate, relates to any kind of title, as by descent or purchase or otherwise. Cooke v. Doron, 64 Atl. 595, 597, 215 Pa. 393, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 659, 7 Ann. Cas. 502.

The meaning of the word "hold" as applied to real estate is somewhat different from the mode of acquisition. It has to do with the duration or tenure of the estate. Lehman v. State ex rel. Miller, 88 N. E. 365, 368, 45 Ind. App. 880.

A will giving all of testator's property to his widow, "to hold and use as she may see fit and proper," gave her absolute title, and not a mere life estate. In re Crofoot's Will, 137 N. Y. Supp. 430, 431.

Testator devised the residue of his estate to his wife "to hold and to have to her and her heirs and assigns forever," but, if she married again, then one-half of the estate should be sold and divided among named legatees. The will also provided that in case of the death of testator's wife, still remaining his widow, the residue of the estate then remaining should be divided among such legatees. Held, that the widow took her husband's estate in fee under the rule in Shelley's Case, and that on her death the property passed to her heir. Rissman v. Wierth, 77 N. E. 108, 109, 220 Ill. 181, 110 Am. St. Rep. 243.

HOLD COURT

See May Hold Court.

HOLD HARMLESS

A receipt to an administrator, containing an agreement to "hold him harmless" in case the estate which he represents does not pay enough on settlement to cover the amount received, is held equivalent to an agreement to return the amount in case the claim should be rejected. Gorman v. Nairne, 12 Ala. 338, 339.

HOLD OVER

See Unlawfully Hold Over.

HOLD UP

The expression "hold up," in its ordinary significance means a forcible detention of the person held with intent to commit robbery, and the necessary force is implied to carry the purpose into effect, even to the killing of the person held up, if necessary to the perpetration of the robbery or the escape of the robber, and deliberation and premeditation are necessary elements, and malice will be implied. State v. Anderson, 101 Pac. 198, 200, 53 Or. 479.

HOLDER

See Bona Fide Holder; Certificate Holder; Landholder; Lienholder; Property Holder; Registered Holder; Shareholder.

A "holder" of a bill or note, as the term is used in the law of negotiable instruments, means the payee or indorsee of a bill or note who is in possession of it, or the bearer who has acquired title by indorsement, as provided by Revisal 1905, § 2340. Steinhilper v. Basnight, 69 S. E. 220, 221, 153 N. C. 293.

The term "holder," as applied to a note, is properly applied to a person having possession of the paper and making the demand whether in his own right or as agent of another. Welch v. Kinney, 80 Pac. 648, 649, 46 Or. 406 (quoting and adopting Bowling v. Harrison, 6 How. 248, 12 L. Ed. 425).

"Holder" means the payee or indorsee of the bill or one who is in possession of it or the bearer thereof." Where an indorsee upon payment of a portion of the face of a note voluntarily surrendered it to the maker, the maker became (though he promised at the time to pay the balance) the holder within Negotiable Instrument Law, § 200, subd. 5 (Laws 1897, p. 744, c. 612), providing that a negotiable instrument is discharged when the principal maker becomes the holder in his own right at or after maturity. Schwartzman v. Post, 84 N. Y. Supp. 922, 923 (quoting definition in Negotiable Instrument Law [Laws 1897, p. 720, c. 612, § 2]).

Where notes payable to the order of the payee were not indorsed, or transferred by writing or parol to any one, the naked possession of the notes and the mortgage securing them, by a bank, of which the payee and mortgagee was cashier, did not prove title in the bank; Sanborn's St. Supp. 1906, §§ 1675, 1676-21, defining the holder of a note payable to order as the payee or indorsee in possession. Swanby v. Northern State Bank, 137 N. W. 763, 764, 150 Wis. 572.

Payment by a bank, of a check drawn on it, does not make the bank a holder within Negotiable Instrument Law, providing that an instrument is negotiated when it is transferred, so as to constitute the transferee a holder thereof. Aurora State Bank v. Hayes-Eames Elevator Co., 129 N. W. 279, 281, 88 Neb. 187; National Bank of Commerce of Lincoln v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 128 N. W. 522, 523, 87 Neb. 841.

Under section 51 of the negotiable instruments act, giving the holder of a negotiable instrument the right to sue upon it in his own name, and section 190 of the act, defining the word "holder," as used in the act, to mean the bearer, or the payee or indorsee of a bill or note who is in possession of it, read in connection with section 49, providing that the title to a note payable to the holder's order may be transferred without indorsement, and section 59, providing that every holder is deemed to be a holder in due course, unless excepted by the same section, an action on a promissory note may be maintained by the holder in possession. Callahan v. Louisville Dry Goods Co., 131 S. W. 995, 996, 140 Ky. 712.

Under Negotiable Instruments Act, April 4, 1902, § 51, providing that the holder of a negotiable instrument may sue thereon in his own name, and section 191, defining a holder as the payee or indorsee of a bill or note in possession thereof or its bearer, the payee or indorsee, of a note in possession thereof, though not the beneficial owner, may sue thereon in his own name by consent of the owner and for such purpose strike out his own and subsequent indorsements. R. M. Owen & Co. v. Storms & Co., 72 Atl. 441, 442, 78 N. J. Law. 154.

Under Negotiable Instruments Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 38) §§ 2, 324, defining a holder as the payee or indorsee of a bill or note in possession, and declaring that, where the holder of a check procures it to be accepted or certified, the drawer is discharged from liability, and independent thereof, a bank giving a customer credit on the deposit of a check drawn by him on another bank and obtaining a certification from the other bank may not, on the check being returned unpaid, hold the depositor liable thereon, the bank receiving the check as a deposit with a deposit slip and a delivery of the passbook containing a credit entry, and a credit on the bank's books. Lyons v. Union Exch. Nat. Bank of New York, 135 N. Y. Supp. 121, 124, 150 App. Div. 493.

Rev. St. 1909, § 10,023, provides that, to constitute notice of an infirmity in an instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it, such person to whom it is negotiated must have had actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith. Held, that the holder within such section, and in the rule that constructive notice is insufficient to impair the title of a bona fide holder for value, is limited to an indorsee, and has no application to the payee as the original holder of the instrument. St. Charles Savings Bank v. Edwards, 147 S. W. 978, 980, 243 Mo. 553.

A municipal improvement certificate wherein the city issuing it agrees to pay a named person or the "holder" thereof, providing that it should be receivable in payment of assessments, that it should be transferable by indorsement, is transferable only by indorsement; the word "holder" meaning a holder in one of the modes provided for in the certificate, viz., either by receiving it under the original issue or by endorsement. Winfield v. Mayer, etc., of City of Hudson, 23 N. J. Law. 255, 263.

"Byles on Bills says that 'holder' is a general word applied to any one in actual or constructive possession of the bill, and entitled at law to recover or receive its contents from the parties to it." A judgment taken under a warrant of attorney annexed to a note, authorizing confession of judgment "in favor of the 'holder,'" is not protected by the federal Constitution and laws, when sued on in another state, from collateral attack upon the ground that the party in whose behalf it was rendered was not in fact the 'holder,' because not the real owner of the note. Due process of law is wanting in proceedings by which judgment is taken in a state court under a warrant of attorney annexed to a note, authorizing confession of judgment "in favor of the 'holder,'" if the party in whose favor the judgment was rendered has ceased, before the commencement of the suit, to own the note, or to be entitled to receive the proceeds to its own use, since such judgment is, in legal effect, a personal judgment without service of process upon the defendants, and without their appearance in person or by an authorized attorney. National Exchange Bank of Tiffin, O., v. Wiley, 25 Sup. Ct. 70, 74, 195 U. S. 257, 49 L. Ed. 184.

Revisal 1905, § 2198, declares that when the holder of an instrument payable to his order transfers it for value without indorsing it, the transfer vests in the transferee such title as the transferor had, and the transferee acquires in addition the right to have the indorsement of the transferor, but for the purpose of determining whether the transferee is a holder in due course, the negotiation takes effect as of the time when the indorsement is actually made. Section 2208 provides that every holder is deemed prima facie a holder in due course, etc., and section 2340 declares that a "holder" is the payee or indorsee of a bill or note who is in possession of it, or the bearer thereof, and defines "bearer" as the person in possession of a bill or note payable to bearer. Held, that the holder of a draft payable to order, in the absence of proof of indorsement by the payee, was not a bona fide purchaser for value without notice. Mayers v. McRimmon, 53 S. E. 447, 448, 140 N. C. 640, 111 Am. St. Rep. 879.

Where a note gave the "holder or holders" a right to enforce payment, and in another portion of the instrument provided that the "holder or holders" might exercise the power to sell the collateral and apply the proceeds to the payment of the note, the phrase "holder or holders" is broad enough to include any person holding the note under the order of the payee. Richardson v. Winnisimmet Nat. Bank, 75 N. E. 97, 98, 189 Mass. 25.

Agent

Negotiable Instrument Law provides (section 30) that an instrument payable to order is negotiated by indorsement of the holder completed by delivery. Held, that the "holder" of a note before transfer was the payee, and not one who claimed to have possession of it as its agent, and attempted to transfer it by indorsement as agent of, or attorney in fact for, the payee, and not by his personal indorsement. Scotland County Nat. Bank v. Hohn, 125 S. W. 539, 541, 146 Mo. App. 699.

Under Rev. Codes, § 3508, authorizing the holder of a negotiable instrument to sue in his own name, the holder of a negotiable instrument, though for the purpose of collection only, may sue thereon in his own name. Craig v. Palo Alto Stock Farm, 102 Pac. 393, 394, 16 Idaho, 701.

Owner

Under New Jersey Negotiable Instrument Law (Act April 4, 1902, P. L. p. 614) § 191, defining a "holder" as the payee or indorsee of a bill or note who is in possession thereof, or the bearer thereof, the "holder" is not necessarily the owner thereof. R. M. Owen & Co. v. Storms & Co., 72 Atl. 441, 442, 78 N. J. Law, 154.

HOLDER FOR VALUE

See Innocent Holder for Value.

See, also, Bona Fide Holder.

A holder who takes commercial paper by way of security for pre-existing indebtedness is a "holder for value." Voss v. Chamberlain, 117 N. W. 269, 271, 139 Iowa, 569, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 106, 130 Am. St. Rep. 331.

One who takes negotiable paper in payment of an antecedent debt before maturity and without notice, actual or otherwise, of any defect, receives it "in due course of business," and becomes, within the meaning of commercial law, "a holder for value." Hamiter v. Brown, 113 S. W. 1014, 88 Ark. 97 (citing Tabor v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 8 S. W. 805, 48 Ark. 454, 3 Am. St. Rep. 241).

A mortgagee whose mortgage is given merely to secure antecedent debts is not a "holder for value" within the meaning of clause "e," in section 70 of Bankr. Act. July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 586. Empire State Trust Co. v. Trustees of William F. Fisher & Co., 60 Atl. 940, 941, 67 N. J. Eq. 602, 3 Am. Cas. 393.

An indorsee of an overdue negotiable promissory note taken as collateral security for a loan, made at the time, is a "holder for value," and is not affected by any equities between the maker and the payee of which he had no notice. Monett State Bank v. Eubanks, 101 S. W. 687, 124 Mo. App. 499 (citing Logan v. Smith, 62 Mo. 455; Deere v. Marsden, 88 Mo. 512; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Abernathy, 32 Mo. App. 211).

"One who takes commercial paper in extinguishment of a debt, surrendering the note of his debtor and the collateral, whether before or after the note becomes due, is a 'holder for value.'" Ward v. City Trust Co., 102 N. Y. Supp. 50; 52, 117 App. Div. 130.

Where a debtor gives a bank a note on which he is a second indorser, and the bank on receipt of the note extends time to the debtor, and applies the proceeds of the note as a credit to the debtor, and relinquishes bills of lading pledged as collateral, the bank is a "holder for value," if without notice of any infirmity in the instrument, or any right of set-off in connection therewith. Allentown Nat. Bank v. Clay Product Supply Co., 66 Atl. 252, 253, 217 Pa. 128.

A payee of a note, who on receiving it paid a specified sum to banks, which the maker owed, is a "holder for value" within Negotiable Instruments Law, § 26. Hermann's Ex'r v. Gregory, 115 S. W. 809, 811, 131 Ky. 819.

Under section 51 of the Negotiable Instruments Law of New York (Laws 1897, p. 727, c. 612), which provides that "value is any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract," and that "an antecedent or pre-existing debt constitutes value," an indorsee of an accommodation note, which took the same from another indorsee before maturity, in good faith, and without notice of any defense, as collateral security for an antecedent debt of the immediate indorser, is a "holder for value," or occupies the position of a "holder for value," and may enforce the note against the maker, although it surrendered no right in respect to the original debt, and although the note was invalid and illegal in its inception. In re Hopper-Morgan Co., 154 Fed. 249, 254.

Under Michigan Negotiable Instruments Law, § 27, providing that value is any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract, and an antecedent or pre-existing debt constitutes value and is deemed such, whether the instrument is payable on demand or at a future time, a person to whom a note has been pledged as collateral is a "holder for value" to the extent of the amount due him. Graham v. Smith 118 N. W. 726, 727, 155 Mich. 65 (citing Payne v. Zell, 36 S. E. 379, 98 Va. 294; Mersick v. Alderman, 60 Atl. 109, 77 Conn. 634, 2 Ann. Cas. 254; Brooks v. Sullivan, 39 S. E. 822, 129 N. C. 190).

Where a note to a bank, made by S. and indorsed by W. for the accommodation of C., was used by C. to take up his note, to the bank, indorsed by W., the bank is a holder thereof for value, within Rev. Laws, c. 73, § 46, declaring an accommodation party to a note liable thereon to a "holder for value," notwithstanding such holder, at the time of taking it, knew him to be only an accommodation party. Neal v. Scherber, 98 N. E. 628, 629, 207 Mass. 323.

Under Negotiable Instruments Act, §§ 25-27, providing that value is any consideration sufficient to support a contract, and that where value has been given for an instrument the holder is one for value, and where the holder has a lien on the instrument, he is a holder for value to the extent of the lien, a third person receiving from the payee a note as collateral security to save him against loss as surety for the payee is a "holder for value," and the maker of the note is liable only to the amount the third person must pay as surety. Jett v. Standafer, 137 S. W. 513, 514, 143 Ky. 787.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 73, § 41, providing that every negotiable instrument is deemed prima facie to have been issued for a valuable consideration, and every person whose signature appears thereon is deemed a party thereto for value, and section 42, providing that "value" is any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract, and that an antecedent or pre-existing debt constitutes value, and section 43, providing that, where value has at any time been given for the instrument, the holder is deemed a "holder for value" in respect to all parties who became such prior to that time, where defendant signed the note in suit and gave it to O. to enable him to take up a forged note indorsed to plaintiff by O., plaintiff could recover against defendant, for O. was liable as indorser of the forged note, whether he knew it was forged or not, and plaintiff had a right to accept defendant's note in settlement of O.'s liability. Jennings v. Law, 85 N. E. 157, 158, 199 Mass. 124.

Indorsee of a check received in payment of a past loan is a "holder for value," though valuable consideration, when applied to chattels, means something more than discharge of a debt, reviving when consideration for its discharge fails, and means parting with some value that cannot be actually restored by operation of law, leaving purchaser in a

An indorsee of a negotiable note taken as collateral security for a pre-existing debt, there being no extension of time of payment or other new consideration except such as may be deemed to arise from the acceptance of the paper, is a "holder for value" and in due course of business, and, in the absence of any circumstances charging him with notice, is protected against a claim of payment made to the original payee. Birket v. Edward, 74 Pac. 1100, 1101, 68 Kan. 295, 64 L. R. A. 568, 104 Am. St. Rep. 405, 1 Ann. Cas. 272.

Under Acts 1899, p. 146, c. 94, § 25, providing that "value" is any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract, a bank discounting a note and obtaining credit in favor of the indorser in a solvent bank for the amount of the discounted paper is a holder for value. Elgin City Banking Co. v. Hall, 108 S. W. 1068, 1072, 119 Tenn. 543.

Where a bank discounted a note for the payee, who was indebted to the bank on a note due at that time and charged to the payee's account, and the account was made good by the application of the proceeds of the discount, the bank was a holder for value under Negotiable Instruments Law, Laws 1897, p. 727, c. 612, § 54. Wallabout Bank v. Peyton, 108 N. Y. Supp. 42, 44, 123 App. Div. 727 (citing Joyce, Defenses Com. Paper, § 243; Mechanics' Bank v. Chardavoyne, 55 Atl. 1080, 69 N. J. Law, 256, 101 Am. St. Rep. 701).

Under Negotiable Instrument Law (Comp. Laws 1907, § 1577), which provides that an antecedent or pre-existing debt may constitute value, whether the instrument is payable at demand or at a future time, section 1578, which provides that, where value has at any time been given for the instrument, the holder is deemed a holder for value as to all parties who became such prior to that time, and section 1579, which provides that, where the holder has a lien on the instrument, he is deemed a holder for value to the extent of his lien, an indorsee of negotiable paper who received it before maturity as collateral for a pre-existing debt, without any further consideration, and without notice of equities or infirmities, is a holder for value, and will be protected against payments made to the original payee before maturity, and before the note was indorsed and delivered. Felt v. Bush (Utah) 126 Pac. 683, 689.

Where the indorser of a dishonored note delivered to the holder bank as collateral a demand note by himself and wife, in consideration of the bank's promise to forbear suing the indorser on the note, taking the demand note as collateral for the pre-existing debt made the bank a "holder for value" of the note as against the wife, an accommodation maker, under Rev. Laws 1902, c. 73, § 42, providing that a pre-existing debt constitutes "value," whether the instrument is payable on demand or at a future time, notwithstanding the demand note was payable to the bank. Lowell v. Bickford, 88 N. E. 1, 2, 201 Mass. 543.

Where the holder of a note for $2,000 surrendered it after a payment of $500 and accepted a new note for $1,500, executed by the makers and indorsed by a corporation, the holder of the new note was a "holder for value," within Negotiable Instruments Law (Laws 1897, p. 727, c. 612), § 52. Van Norden Trust Co. v. L. Rosenberg, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1025, 1029, 62 Misc. Rep. 285.

Holder in due course distinguished

The Negotiable Instruments Law (Samborn's St. Supp. 1906, §§ 1675, 1684) seems to distinguish between a "holder for value" and a "holder in due course." Section 1675 defines holder to mean the payee or indorsee of a bill or note who is in possession of it or the bearer thereof and defines value to mean valuable consideration. On the other hand, a holder in due course is defined in section 1676 to be one who has taken the instrument under the following considerations: (1) That it is complete and regular upon its face; (2) that he became the holder before it was overdue, and without notice that it had been previously dishonored, if such was the fact; (3) that he took it in good faith and for value; (4) that at the time it was negotiated to him he had no notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it; (5) that he took it in the usual course of business. Marling v. Jones, 119 N. W. 981, 983, 138 Wis. 82, 181 Am. St. Rep. 996.

HOLDER IN DUE COURSE

See, also, Bona Fide Holder.

A "holder in due course," as defined by the Negotiable Instruments Law, is one who has taken the instrument under the following conditions: First, that the instrument is complete and regular on its face; second, that he became the holder of it before it was overdue and without notice that it had been previously dishonored, if such was the fact; third, that he took it in good faith and for value; and, fourth, that at the time it was negotiated to him he had no notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it. Winter v. Nobs, 112 Pac. 525, 526, 19 Idaho, 18, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 302; Cedar Rapids Nat. Bank v. Myhre Bros., 107 Pac. 518, 519, 57 Wash. 596; Park v. Johnson, 119 Pac. 52, 54, 20 Idaho, 548 (quoting and applying Rev. Codes, § 3509); Iowa Nat. Bank v. Carter, 123 N. W. 237, 240, 144 Iowa, 715 (quoting and applying the definition in Code Supp. 1907, § 3060a52); Wilkins v. Usher, 97 S. W. 37, 38, 123 Ky. 696; Elgin City Banking Co. v. Hall, 108 S. W. 1068, 1071, 119 Tenn. 548; Weiss v. Riesser, 114 N. Y. Supp. 983, 986, 62 Misc. Rep. 292; American Nat. Bank v. Fountain, 62 S. E. 738, 739, 148 N. C. 590.

Negotiable Instruments Act 1902, § 52, declares that a "holder in due course" is a holder who has taken the instrument under the following conditions: That it is complete and regular upon its face; that he became the holder of it before it was overdue and without notice that it had been previously dishonored, if such were the fact; that he took it in good faith and for value; that at the time it was negotiated to him he had no notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it. Municipal bonds, complete and regular upon their face, were deposited with a bank as collateral to a loan made to the depositor, before maturity and for value, and the bank had no knowledge until long after they came into its possession that the depositor was not in legal possession and authorized to dispose of them. Held, that the bank was the "holder in due course" of the bonds. Borough of Montvale v. People's Bank, 67 Atl. 67, 68, 74 N. J. Law, 464.

Negotiable Instruments Act, art. 13, § 48, defines an accommodation party as one who has signed without recovering value to lend his name to another, and provides that he is liable to a holder for value, though the holder knew him to be only an accommodation party. Section 78 declares that every holder is deemed prima facie a holder in due course. Section 71, defining a "holder in due course," requires the instrument to be regular on its face, to have been taken in good faith, for value, before it was overdue, and without notice of previous dishonor, or of infirmity in the instrument or defect in title. Section 75 provides that to constitute notice of an infirmity in the instrument or defect in title, one must have actual knowledge thereof, or of such facts that his taking the instrument amounts to bad faith. Section 76 provides that a holder in due course holds free from defects in title of prior parties, and from defenses available among prior parties. Held, in an action on an accommodation check by an indorsee against the maker after he stopped payment, where the maker had been giving similar checks, and had never stopped payment before, and the indorsee had no communication with the maker before the stopping of payment, and there was no evidence of fraud of the payee, or defect in his title, it was proper to instruct that there was no evidence that the indorsee had actual knowledge of any infirmity or knowledge of such facts that its taking the check amounted to bad faith. Weant v. Southern Trust & Deposit Co., 77 Atl. 289, 293, 112 Md. 463.

Under Negotiable Instruments Law, § 55, defining a "holder in due course" as one who has taken the instrument in good faith and for value, and without notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it, one who acquires a note from a payee whose title is shown to have been defective, and who therefore, by section 59, has the burden of proving that he acquired title in due course, must show that he took the note, not only for value, but also in good faith, by showing the facts constituting good faith, and that at the time the note was negotiated to him he had no notice of the defect in the payee's title. Keene v. Behan, 82 Pac. 884, 886, 40 Wash. 505.

In view of the Negotiable Instrument Statute (section 1676—22), it was held that a "holder in due course" is one who takes commercial paper when (a) it is complete and regular upon its face; (b) who became the holder of the paper before it was overdue and without notice that it had been previously dishonored, if such was the fact; (c) and took it in good faith and for value; (d) and at the time it was negotiated to him he had no notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it; and (e) he took it in the usual course of business. So the transferee of commercial paper is not a "holder in due course," unless he has paid the full amount agreed to be paid therefor without notice of any infirmity in the instrument or in the title of the transferor, except to the amount thereof so paid. Hodge v. Smith, 110 N. W. 192, 195, 130 Wis. 326.

The Negotiable Instruments Act (Acts 29th Gen. Assem. p. 81, c. 130) provides that where an instrument is signed by a party in blank and delivered to another to be filled in and delivered to the payee, in order that it may be enforced, when completed, against the persons who became parties thereto prior to its completion, it must be filled in strictly in accordance with the authority given, unless, after completion, it is negotiated to a holder in due course, who may enforce it as if filled in strictly in accordance with the authority given. Section 3080a52 defines a holder in due course as one who has taken the instrument complete and regular, before maturity, without notice that at the time it was negotiated to him there was any defect in the title of the person negotiating it. Held, that where defendants signed a note in blank and delivered it to P., who filled in the blanks, making it payable to plaintiff, and delivered it to him, plaintiff was not a "holder in due course," and hence, where the note was not filled in by P. in accordance with his agreement with defendants, it was not enforceable by plaintiff against him. Vander Ploeg v. Van Zuuk, 112 N. W. 807, 808, 135 Iowa, 350, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 490, 124 Am. St. Rep. 275.

Under the Negotiable Instruments Act, which constitutes an antecedent or pre-existing debt a valuable consideration, and defining a "holder in due course," a bank taking notes as collateral security for a pre-existing indebtedness was a holder for value and in due course. State Bank of Halstad v. Bilstad (Iowa) 136 N. W. 204, 207.

Under Negotiable Instruments Act (Laws 1905, p. 250) § 59, providing that when it is shown that the title of any person who has negotiated an instrument was defective, the burden is on the holder to prove that he or some person under whom he claims was a holder in due course, and section 52, defining a "holder in due course" as one who took the instrument when it was complete and regular on its face, and before it was due, without notice of dishonor or infirmity or defect in the title of the person negotiating it, and in good faith and for value, in a suit on notes by the assignee where defendant showed that they were procured by fraud and were without consideration, the burden was on plaintiff to show that it was a holder in due course. Bank of Ozark v. Hanks, 125 S. W. 221, 223, 142 Mo. App. 110.

Negotiable Instruments Act, § 59, provides that, when it is shown that the title of any person who has negotiated the instrument was defective, the burden is on the holder to prove that he or some other person under whom he claims acquired the title in due course. Section 52 defines a "holder in due course" to be one who has taken the instrument under the following conditions: That it is complete and regular on its face; that he became the holder of it before it was overdue, and without notice of dishonor, in good faith, and for value; and that he had no notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of his indorser. Held, that where, in an action on bills of exchange, defendant showed that his acceptances thereof were without consideration, plaintiff indorsee had the burden of proving that it took the bills in good faith and for value and without any notice of infirmity in the instruments or defect in the title of the indorser. Johnson County Sav. Bank v. Mills, 127 S. W. 425, 426, 143 Mo. App. 265.

A bank taking indorsed notes as collateral security, without notice of the indorser's ownership, becomes a "holder in due course" within Negotiable Instruments Law, § 52, subsec. 4. American Nat. Bank v. J. S. Minor & Son, 135 S. W. 278, 279, 142 Ky. 792.

Under the Negotiable Instruments Law (Rev. St. 1909, §§ 10,022, 10,025, 10,029), providing that a "holder in due course" is one who takes an instrument before maturity in good faith and without notice of infirmities, that the title of a person negotiating an instrument is defective if he obtains it by fraud, duress, force, or for an illegal consideration, and that when it is shown that the title of any person who has negotiated an instrument is defective, the burden is on him to prove that he, or the person from whom he claims, acquired the title in due course, the burden of proving that he is an innocent purchaser for value devolves upon the holder of a note, where the maker has made a prima facie showing that the note was without consideration. Birch Tree State Bank v. Dowler, 145 S. W. 843, 844, 163 Mo. App. 65.

A bank, discounting a note with knowledge that it is void for usury, is not a "holder in due course," within Negotiable Instruments Law (Laws 1897, p. 732, c. 612) § 91, defining a holder in due course as one having no notice of any infirmity in the instrument and defect in the title of the person negotiating it; and it cannot recover thereon, notwithstanding Banking Law, Laws 1892, p. 1869, c. 689, § 55, fixing the rate of interest which a bank may lawfully charge and setting forth the penalties recoverable on a bank knowingly taking an unlawful rate of interest, not including a forfeiture of the entire debt, which applies only to notes on which a bank knowingly charges usury, and not to notes absolutely void for usury at their inception. Schlesinger v. Lehmaier, 99 N. Y. Supp. 889, 390, 50 Misc. Rep. 610.

A check was given contractors to pay off their men, on the supposition that the architect's certificate had been obtained. On discovery that the certificate had in fact been refused, payment on the check was stopped. On the evening of the same day the payees negotiated the check to plaintiffs who had previously cashed checks for the payees but had no definite knowledge as to their financial responsibility. The payees did not pay off their men and abandoned the work. Held, that the plaintiffs were "holders in due course," within the meaning of sections 91, 95, 96, of the Negotiable Instruments Law (Laws 1897, p. 732, c. 612). Siegmester v. Lisperard Realty Co., 107 N. Y. Supp. 158, 159.

Defendant gave a check to a person by mistake. The check was delivered to plaintiff as a loan without consideration. Held, that plaintiff was not a holder of the check in due course; Negotiable Instruments Law (Laws 1897, p. 732, c. 612) § 91, subd. 3, providing that to constitute one a "holder in due course" he must have taken the instrument in good faith and for value. Rosenthal v. Parsont, 110 N. Y. Supp. 223, 224.

Under Negotiable Instruments Law (Laws 1897, p. 727, c. 612) § 54, making absence of consideration a defense as against one not a holder in due course, and section 97, subjecting a note in the hands of one other than a holder in due course to the same defenses as if nonnegotiable, and section 91, defining a "holder in due course" to be one who has taken before maturity in good faith for value without notice of any defense, an answer in an action on a check, alleging that the check was an accommodation check, given without consideration, and taken by the first indorsee from the payee with knowledge of that fact, that such indorsee obtained the check from the payee without consideration and by extortion, and indorsed the same to another without consideration, who presented it for payment, which was refused, and who then indorsed it to plaintiff without consideration, and that plaintiff took it with knowledge of all the facts connected with its making and successive transfers and dishonors, states a good defense. Weiss v. Rieser, 174 N. Y. Supp. 983, 986, 62 Misc. Rep. 292.

Under Negotiable Instruments Law (Laws 1897, p. 731, c. 612), § 79, providing that the transfer of an instrument payable to order for value without indorsement obtains only the transferor's title, an assignment of a note payable to order, without indorsement, does not make the assignee a "holder in due course," as defined by Negotiable Instruments Law, §§ 2, 60, 61, 91 and 98. Manufacturers' Commercial Co. v. Blitz, 115 N. Y. Supp. 402, 404, 131 App. Div. 17.

Under Revisal 1905, § 2201, defining a "holder in due course" as one who takes a negotiable instrument, complete and regular on its face, before it is overdue and without notice of dishonor, in good faith and for value, and who at the time of transfer had no notice of any infirmity in it or defect in the title of the person negotiating it, and section 2208 thereof, providing that every holder is deemed prima facie a holder in due course, but, when it is shown that the title of any one negotiating the instrument was defective, the burden is on the holder to prove that he or some person under whom he claims acquired title as a holder in due course, etc., where fraud in procuring the note has been established, or there is a defect in the title of one negotiating it, the burden is on one suing thereon to show that he or one under whom he claims was a holder in due course, as defined by section 2201. American Nat. Bank v. Fountain, 62 S. E. 738, 739, 148 N. C. 590.

Under Revisal 1905, § 2202, providing that, where an instrument payable on demand is negotiated an unreasonable length of time after its issue, the holder is not deemed a "holder in due course," where a cashier's check was issued May 18, 1904, and indorsed May 23, 1906, the time was not unreasonable under the statute. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Summers, 55 S. E. 522, 524, 143 N. C. 102.

Where a bill is filed for the foreclosure of a mortgage, which was given to secure the payment of a note, which note provides for the payment of the interest quarter-annually, and the mortgage contains a provision to the effect that, upon default in the payment of any installment of interest, the whole amount of such note shall thereby become due and payable, and there is a positive allegation in the bill that, at the time of the purchase of the note by the complainant bank, which was prior to the maturity of the principal of the note, it had no knowledge that there had been any default in the payment of interest, or that there was any defense on the part of the mortgagor against the note and mortgage, the fact that no payments of interest were indorsed on note or accompanying mortgage did not make the note dishonored, and the complainant must be deemed a "holder in due course" of such note, under the provisions of section 2985 of the General Statutes of 1906, and its action in taking such note under such circumstances did not amount to bad faith, which is required by section 2989 of such General Statutes, wherefore a demurrer interposed to the bill upon such grounds is properly overruled. Taylor v. American Nat. Bank of Pensacola, 57 South. 678, 684, 63 Fla. 631.

The term "holder in due course" refers to due course of trade, and trade rests on an exchange of valuation. Under the law merchant a bona fide holder in due course of a negotiable instrument payable to bearer was one who gave valuable consideration for it before maturity and without notice of any infirmity in his grantor's title, and obtained it in due course of trade. Parsons v. Utica Cement Co., 73 Atl. 785, 788, 82 Conn. 833, 135 Am. St. Rep. 278 (citing Roberts v. Hall, 37 Conn. 205, 9 Am. Rep. 306).

To sustain the burden of showing that one was the "holder in due course" of certain bonds, it is necessary to show that such one took the bonds in good faith and for value, and without any notice of any defect in the title. Parsons v. Utica Cement Mfg. Co., 66 Atl. 1024, 1025, 80 Conn. 58.

Every holder of a promissory note is deemed prima facie to be a "holder in due course"; that is, it is presumed that he took the note in good faith and for value, without notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it. Louis De Jonge & Co. v. Woodport Hotel & Land Co., 72 Atl. 439, 440, 77 N. J. Law, 233.

Under B. & C. Comp. § 4454, providing that one is a "holder in due course" of a negotiable instrument who has taken the instrument under the following conditions: "That it is complete and regular on its face," etc.—the fact that at the time a check was transferred the payee stated that the drawer had asked him to wait two or three days for presentation of the check did not charge the indorsee with notice of any infirmity in the contract, such a request not being binding on the payee, and not varying the terms of the writing; and under section 4455, providing that, where an instrument, payable on demand, is negotiated an unreasonable length of time after its issue, the holder is not deemed a holder in due course, a check issued on a certain date and bearing that date, and negotiated at noon of the following day, was not overdue, so as to carry to the indorsee notice of its illegality or previous dishonor. Matlock v. Scheurman, 93 Pac. 823, 826, 51 Or. 49, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747.

A materialman sold materials to a contractor for several jobs and kept separate accounts for each job. He received from the contractor checks drawn by an owner payable to the contractor "on contract." Held, that the materialman was put on notice and was not a holder in due course, within Rem. & Bal. Code, § 3443, defining a "holder in due course" as one taking an instrument complete and regular on its face, and he could not, without notice to the owner, divert the proceeds of the checks, and charge him with a lien for the amount diverted. Hughes & Co. v. Flint, 112 Pac. 633, 634, 61 Wash. 460.

A "holder in due course," as defined by Rem. & Bal. Code, § 3443, subd. 3, is a holder who takes an instrument in good faith and for value. Scandinavian American Bank v. Johnston, 115 Pac. 102, 105, 63 Wash. 187.

Under L. O. L. § 5885, which declares that a "holder in due course" is a holder who has taken the instrument under condition that it is complete and regular upon its face, that he became the holder of it before it was overdue, and without notice of its previous dishonor, if such was the fact, that he took it in good faith and for value, and that at the time it was negotiated to him he had no notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it, a bank, which accepts and pays a check bearing the forged name of its depositor, on presentation by another bank, a holder in due course, does not itself become a holder in due course, since the check when so paid, had run its course and was no longer a check, but only a canceled voucher. First Nat. Bank of Cottage Grove v. Bank of Cottage Grove, 117 Pac. 293, 295, 59 Or. 368.

Under the express provision of L. O. L. § 5885, defining a "holder in due course," one who does not take a note in good faith, or for value, is not such a holder, and, as provided by L. O. L. § 5891, a note in the hands of such holder is subject to the same defenses as if it were nonnegotiable. Hull v. Angus, 118 Pac. 284, 286, 60 Or. 95.

As between the maker and indorsee of a note, the latter is deemed the "holder in due course" if it came into his hands for value in the ordinary course of business within a reasonable time after its date. Rev. Codes, § 5900, provides that a holder in due course is one who has taken the instrument complete and regular on its face, before it became due, and without notice that it had been previously dishonored, in good faith and for value, and without notice of any infirmity therein or defect in the title of the person negotiating it. Held, that where a note payable on demand was transferred to plaintiff at a time when payments indorsed thereon showed that the principal sum had been nearly paid in full, and that the maker and payee had regarded the obligation as matured long prior to its transfer, and plaintiff knew at the time he accepted it that there was a dispute between the maker and payee as to the amount due thereon, plaintiff was not a "holder in due course." Brophy Grocery Co. v. Willson, 124 Pac. 510, 512, 45 Mont. 489.

Where the holder of a check drawn on another bank deposited it to his account, and the bank of deposit credited it, and the depositor's account remained sufficient to pay the check in case of dishonor, the bank was not a holder of the check in "due course of business," within Laws 1897, p. 732, c. 612, § 91, so as to exclude defenses which the drawer of the check might have against the payee. Citizens' State Bank v. Cowles, 73 N. E. 33, 180 N. Y. 346, 105 Am. St. Rep. 765.

Where, after a note was indorsed and delivered by the indorser to the maker, and the latter altered it and delivered it to the payee, who took it without notice of the alteration, the indorser was liable to the payee under Rev. Laws, c. 73, §§ 69, 141 defining a holder in due course, and declaring that, when an instrument has been materially altered and is in the hands of a "holder in due course," not a party to the alteration, he may enforce payment according to its original tenor. Thorpe v. White, 74 N. E. 592, 188 Mass. 333.

An indorsee of a check for value and in good faith, before it was overdue and without notice of any infirmity or that payment had been stopped, was a "holder in due course," with all the rights appertaining thereto, under Rev. Laws, c. 73, § 69. Buzzell v. Tobin, 86 N. E. 923, 201 Mass. 1.

One who acquires title to negotiable paper, not only without consideration, but by an act which constitutes a fraud on the makers, is not a "holder in due course." Keegan v. Rock, 102 N. W. 805, 807, 128 Iowa, 39.

That a holder of a negotiable instrument may be a "holder in due course," he must take it in the usual course of business. Kipp v. Smith, 118 N. W. 843, 850, 137 Wis. 234.

Where there was no fraud in the inception of a note, and the holder had no knowledge, actual or constructive, of alleged fraud which induced the payee to indorse and transfer it, but received it in good faith, the holder was a "holder in due course" if he was a holder for value. Graham v. Smith, 118 N. W. 726, 727, 155 Mich. 65.

To constitute a "holder in due course" of a negotiable instrument payable to order, it is always required that the same shall be indorsed. Other requirements may, under given conditions be dispensed with, but indorsement of such an instrument is essential.

Thus it is provided in Revisal 1905, § 2198, that "where the holder of an instrument payable to his order transfers it for value without indorsing it, the transfer vests in the transferee such title as the transferor had therein and the transferee acquires in addition the right to have the indorsement of the transferor, but for the purpose of determining whether the transferee is a holder in due course, a negotiation takes effect as of the time when the indorsement is actually made." Under this definition the holder of a draft payable to order is not a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, in the absence of proof of indorsement. Mayers v. McRimmon, 53 S. E. 447, 448, 140 N. C. 640, 111 Am. St. Rep. 879.

Acts 1897-98, pp. 896, 910, c. 866, § 124 (Code Va. 1904, p. 1455, § 2841a), provides, in subsection 52, that a holder in due course is one who takes the instrument when it is complete and regular on its face, before maturity, for value, without notice of any infirmity; and subsection 53 expressly provides that the holder of an instrument payable on demand negotiated a reasonable length of time after maturity should not be regarded as a holder in due course. As only one class is excepted from the class of bona fide holders under subsection 53, a trustee under a deed of trust for creditors is a "holder in due course." Trustees of American Bank of Orange v. McComb, 54 S. E. 14, 15, 105 Va. 473.

Where a bank in the usual course of business took a check in good faith and without notice of any infirmity in it, paying the holder part of the proceeds and depositing the remainder to his credit, the bank was a "holder in due course" under St. 1909, § 3720b, subsecs. 51, 52. Choteau Trust & Banking Co. v. Smith, 118 S. W. 279, 280, 133 Ky. 418.

The purchaser of a draft complete and regular on its face was a "holder in due course," where the purchase was made before maturity of the draft, without notice that it had previously been dishonored, or that there was any infirmity in the instrument, or defect in the title of the person negotiating it, and where it was taken in good faith and for value. Bothwell v. Corum, 123 S. W. 291, 292, 135 Ky. 766.

Facts and circumstances as disclosed by the record in this case examined, considered, and held sufficient to put the receiver of an insolvent bank upon notice as to the fraud practiced in the inception and execution of a promissory note, and that such receiver is not a "holder in due course," within the meaning and purview of the statute. Brown v. Miller, 125 Pac. 981, 985, 22 Idaho, 307.

HOLDER IN HIS OWN RIGHT

Where defendant, the maker of a note, on the day it fell due, requested plaintiff, the second indorser, to take it up at the bank, and that defendant would pay plaintiff in a few days, and defendant thereafter in some manner acquired possession of the note without having paid it, he was not a "holder in his own right," within Negotiable Instruments Law (Laws 1897, p. 743, c. 612) § 200, providing that a negotiable instrument is discharged when the principal debtor becomes the holder at or after maturity in his own right, and was liable thereon. Korkemas v. Mackson, 116 N. Y. Supp. 85, 87, 181 App. Div. 728.

HOLDING

"Holding" describes and implies an act, event, and circumstance. Wells, Fargo & Co. v. McCarthy, 90 Pac. 203, 208, 5 Cal. App. 301.

HOLDING COURT

Acts 1888-89, p. 64, is not violative of Const. 1875, art. 3, § 19, providing that no bill shall be so altered or amended on its passage through either house as to change its original purpose; the change having been only from a bill to fix the time of "opening courts" to one to fix the time of "holding courts," and the terms as used in the connection being synonymous. Letcher v. State, 48 South. 805, 806, 159 Ala. 59, 17 Ann. Cas. 716.

HOLDING ELECTION

The word "holding" in the Australian ballot law, regulating the manner of "holding elections," has the same signification as when used in the term "holding court," or "holding a meeting." Getty v. Holcomb, 99 Pac. 218, 219, 79 Kan. 224.

HOLDING OPEN

A county judge, served with an injunction order restraining him from proceeding with a certain matter, stated that he "held it open" and continued it. Held, that the terms "held it open" and "holding open" did not fall within a definition of adjournment, to the effect that "an adjournment is no more than a continuation of the session from one day to another, as the word itself signifies." People ex rel. Stryker v. Van Bergen, 81 N. Y. Supp. 274, 276, 40 Misc. Rep. 139.

HOLIDAY

"The word 'holiday' means, first, a consecrated day, a general festival; and, second, a day on which the ordinary occupations are suspended, a day of exemption or cessation from work, a day of festivity, recreation, or amusement." State v. Shelton, 77 N. E. 1052-1054, 38 Ind. App. 80.

The word "holiday," within the rule that "continuously," as used in a bill of lading, entitling a ship to discharge continuously, means continuously during working days, which excludes Sundays and holidays usually observed, means a holiday created by general acceptance and observance, to which dignity it may arrive without the aid of statute law. Tweedie Trading Co. v. Pitch Pine Lumber Co., 156 Fed. 88, 89.

A charter party excepted "holidays" from the lay days for loading. B. & C. Comp. Or. § 3918, makes certain days legal holidays, "and every day appointed by the President of the United States or by the Governor of this state as a day of public fasting, thanksgiving or holiday." Held, that the provision included only such holidays as were customarily observed by a cessation of work but a series of days designated by the Governor as legal holidays on account of a financial panic were not within the exception. Schwaner v. Kerr, 170 Fed. 92, 99; Kerr v. Schwaner, 177 Fed. 859, 663, 101 C. C. A. 285.

A bill of lading provided that a carrier should not be liable for damages by fire occurring after 48 hours, exclusive of legal holidays, after notice of the arrival of the shipment; and notice was given Friday, July 1st, at 3 p. m., next before the destruction of a shipment by fire July 5th, at 1 a. m. Held, that the carrier was liable, there not having been 48 hours' notice under the bill of lading; the word "holidays" therein including Sundays, as well as the Fourth of July. Hussa Brewing Co. v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 139 N. W. 415, 416, 151 Wis. 666.

HOLOGRAPHIC WILL

Under Civ. Code Cal. § 1277, providing that a "holographic will" is one that is "entirely written, dated and signed by the hand of the testator himself," and that it "may be made in or out of this state and need not be witnessed," as construed by the Supreme Court of the state, such a will dated simply, "Oct. 1st, 1896," is sufficiently dated, although it does not state the place of its execution. Stead v. Curtis, 191 Fed. 529, 537, 112 C. C. A. 463.

A "holographic will" is one that is entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator himself. In re Fay's Estate, 78 Pac. 340, 341, 145 Cal. 82, 104 Am. St. Rep. 17 (quoting Civ. Code, § 1277).

HOME

See At Home.

The words "home or place of business," as used in Act Aug. 12, 1910 (Acts 1910, p. 134), prohibiting one without a license from carrying a pistol outside of his home or place of business, are broad enough to include any portion of a farm or plantation where one employs his time and makes his living, though technically the word "home" may mean the house wherein one resides. Coker v. State, 76 S. E. 103, 104, 12 Ga. App. 425.

Domicile distinguished

The word "domicile" is nearly synonymous with "home." Ex parte Petterson, 166 Fed. 536, 545.

"The word 'home' is undoubtedly the fundamental idea of domicile, though calling a place 'home' as a matter of fact may not be and often is not entitled to much weight." The word "home" is very frequently used with reference to a place other than the legal and permanent domicile. Pickering v. Winch, 87 Pac. 763, 765, 769, 48 Or. 500, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1159 (quoting and adopting definition in Jacobs, Domicile, § 72).

Maintenance and support included

A mortgagor's covenant to furnish a "home" upon the premises for a named person will be construed, according to a practical construction given by the parties, as requiring the grantee to furnish board and lodging; the beneficiary contributing such service as she can, and bearing the expense of her own clothing and doctor bills. Day v. Towns, 81 Atl. 405, 406, 76 N. H. 200.

A provision that beneficiaries should be provided with a "home" while they lived included everything necessary to maintain the home, such as paying of taxes and keeping it in proper repair, but not the purchasing of supplies. Long v. Mayes, 48 South. 523, 530, 94 Miss. 735.

"A provision in a will for a 'home' for certain persons is very uncertain in meaning. It may mean simply a place of abode, or it may mean coupled with support, or an abode with actual necessities of life. * * * The intention of the testator depends much on the situation of the parties, their ages, and all the existing circumstances. From the language used it is our opinion that the grantor intended simply to provide a place of abode for his children, provided that the property should be a home for the mother and children if she remained single, and if she should marry the place was to become the sole property of the children, but not to be divided among them until the youngest child became of age. In addition to this, it is provided that the place is still to be a home for the children if they can be kept together. This provision also evidences an intention that 'home' was to be used in the sense of 'abode,' merely because the grantor would hardly have made a support dependent upon the children being kept together." Stiles v. Cummings, 50 S. E. 484, 486, 122 Ga. 635.

As residence

See, also, Residence.

The words "residence" and "home" are not, as ordinarily used, synonymous; but when used, as in this case, with reference to a corporation and its general office, the word "home" is the equivalent of "residence." The affidavit herein for the change of the place of trial was sufficient. The change of the place of trial was not waived. State v. District Court of Clay County (Minn.) 189 N. W. 135, 137.

HOME PLACE

Pub. St. 1901, c. 138, § 1, provides that every person is entitled to $500 worth of his homestead as a homestead right. Held that, where a married woman and her husband own land in undivided halves and occupy it as their home, the wife is entitled to an exemption or homestead right to the extent of $500 in her half interest as against an execution levied against her, under section 3, making such homestead right exempt from levy or sale on execution; her undivided half of the premises being her "home place" or homestead. McLaughlin v. Collins, 78 Atl. 623, 624, 75 N. H. 557.

Testator owned two adjoining tracts aggregating about 150 acres, which were cultivated together as one tract, one of the tracts consisting of 54 acres, which he called the "home place," and the other tract of 96 acres, which adjoined it, he called the "W." place, one lying south of the other, and, if the will is construed as devising both tracts, the dividing line between them would give the northern side to one son, and the southern tract to the other. The will devised all of testator's realty and personality to his wife for life, and provided that, "after me and my wife is gone, I want my son J. to have the northern side of the dividing line of the home tract of land, and my son W. to have the south side of the said dividing line of said tract of land," and he further provided that the personality should be "equally divided among my other heirs." Testator gave all of his children something, giving those excluded from a share in his land the whole of his personality. Held, that the will devised the "W. place" as well as that ordinarily called the "home place" under the designation, "the home tract of land," so that there was no intestacy as to the W. tract. Austin v. Austin, 76 S. E. 272, 160 N. C. 367.

HOME PORT

Under the United States statutes requiring the name of the "home port" of a vessel to be painted on her stern, and defining the word "port" to mean either the port where the vessel is registered or enrolled, or the place in the same district where the vessel was built, or where one or more of the owners reside, a corporation having its principal place of business in Chicago, and offices in Paducah, sufficiently complies with such statutory requirements by painting on the stern of a vessel belonging to it the words "of Paducah, Kentucky." Commonwealth ex rel. Lucas v. Ayer & Lord Tie Co., 77 S. W. 686, 688, 117 Ky. 161.

Under the shipping laws, every vessel has what is called her "home port," to which she belongs, and which constitutes her legal abiding place or residence, regardless of her actual absence therefrom. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2808, provides that "every vessel, except as hereinafter provided, shall be registered by the collector of the collection district which includes the port to which such vessel shall belong at the time of her registry, which port shall be deemed to be that at or nearest to which the owner if there be but one, or, if more than one, the husband or acting and managing owner of such vessel usually resides." The home port of a vessel engaged in commerce on the high seas was therefore San Francisco, where the managing owner of the vessel resided there, although she had been temporarily registered in Washington, had received no permanent registration at San Francisco, and had never been in the waters of California, and though some of her owners resided without the state, and hence she was taxable in the city and county of San Francisco. Olson v. City and County of San Francisco, 82 Pac. 850, 851, 148 Cal. 80, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197, 118 Am. St. Rep. 191, 7 Ann. Cas. 443.

HOME RULE

The principle of "home rule," or the right of self-government as to local affairs, existed before we had a Constitution. Even prior to Magna Charta, some cities, boroughs, and towns had various customs and liberties, which had been granted by the crown, or had subsisted through long user, and among them was the right to elect certain local officers from their own citizens, and, with some restrictions, to manage their own purely local affairs. The supreme taxing power of the Legislature should not be crippled by the home rule provision of Const. art. 10, § 2, so as to take from the Legislature the right to create a new system of taxation, and bring in property of a new character, hitherto untaxed, with some other property incidental thereto, and worthless without it. People ex rel. Coney Island & B. R. Co. v. State Board of Tax Com'rs, 67 N. E. 69, 77, 174 N. Y. 417.

"Home rule" means that, as to the affairs of a municipality, which affects the relations of the citizens with their local government, they shall be freed from state interference, regulation, and control, that the system of public improvements, the building of streets or alleys the appointment of officers, the designation of their duties, and how they shall be performed, and all other matters purely of local interest, advantage, and convenience shall be left to the people thereof for their own determination. People ex rel. Attorney General v. Johnson, 86 Pac. 233, 238, 34 Colo. 143.

"Homestead" means the place of the house or home place; a home and the ground immediately connected with it; the seat of the family, owned and occupied by any resident of the state. In re Owings, 140 Fed. 739, 741 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.; Webst. Dict.).

The term "homestead" means that tract of land which, being within the statutory limitations as to quantity and value, is occupied and claimed as a homestead. White v. Spencer, 117 S. W. 20, 25, 217 Mo. 242, 129 Am. St. Rep. 547, 16 Ann. Cas. 598.

Our statute uses the term "homestead" in its commonly accepted meaning—the house and land where the family dwells. Melsner v. Hill, 138 N. W. 583, 584, 92 Neb. 435.

A "homestead" is a parcel of land on which a family resides and which is to them a home. Elliott v. Thomas, 143 S. W. 563, 564, 161 Mo. App. 441.

"A 'homestead' is a parcel of land on which the family resides, and which is to them a home. It is constituted by the two acts of selection and residence in compliance with the terms of the law conferring it. When these things exist bona fide, the essential elements of the homestead right exist, of which the persons entitled to it cannot be divested by acts or influences beyond their volition." Palmer v. Sawyer, 103 N. W. 1088, 1090, 74 Neb. 108, 12 Ann. Cas. 715 (quoting and adopting definition in Gallagher v. Smiley, 44 N. W. 187, 28 Neb. 189, 26 Am. St. Rep. 319). In view of the foregoing definition, neither the husband nor the wife can abandon the family homestead, and thereafter sell and convey the same to another, to the exclusion of the homestead right of an insane spouse. Weatherington v. Smith, 112 N. W. 566, 77 Neb. 369.

"A 'homestead' may be claimed in land of which a party is in possession under a contract to purchase, or under any equitable title, as well as if it were a legal title." Keith v. Albrecht, 94 N. W. 677, 678, 89 Minn. 247, 99 Am. St. Rep. 566 (citing Wilder v. Haughey, 21 Minn. 101; Kaser v. Haas, 7 N. W. 824, 27 Minn. 406; In re Emerson's Homestead, 60 N. W. 23, 58 Minn. 450).

Const. art. 16, § 51, providing that a "homestead" in a city, town, or village shall consist of a lot or lots not to exceed in value $5,000 at the time of their designation as the homestead, without reference to the value of any improvements thereon, provided the same be used for the purposes of a home or as a place to exercise the calling or business of the head of the family, exempts to the head of the family but one homestead. Harrington v. Mayo (Tex.) 180 S. W. 650, 652.

"The joint occupancy by husband and wife of a home, the title to which is in the wife, confers upon the wife a 'homestead' in the property, within the constitutional provision." Pullen v. Simpson, 86 S. W. 801, 802, 74 Ark. 592 (citing Thompson v. King, 14 S. W. 925, 54 Ark. 11; Willmoth v. Gossett, 76 S. W. 1073, 71 Ark. 594).

As designation of amount of land

A "homestead" is defined as follows: "A homestead not exceeding in value $2,000 consisting of the dwelling house in which the claimant resides, and its appurtenances, and the land on which the same is situated, not exceeding 160 acres of land to be selected by the owner thereof, and not in any incorporated city or village, or instead thereof, at the option of the claimant, a quantity of contiguous land, not exceeding two lots within any incorporated city or village, shall be exempt from execution or forced sales." Comp. St. 1901, c. 36. The first limitation imposed is that the homestead shall not exceed $2,000 in value; the next that it shall not exceed 160 acres of land not in any incorporated city or village, or, in lieu thereof, not exceeding two lots within such city or village. Tyson v. Tyson, 98 N. W. 1076, 1078, 71 Neb. 438.

Const. art. 19, § 1, Homesteads, mentions a homestead as provided by law, and Laws 1869, c. 21, the only provision on the subject, provides by section 1 that every head of a family shall be entitled to a homestead not exceeding $1,500 in value. Section 4 provides that the homestead, if a farm, may not exceed 160 acres. Section 5, as amended by Laws 1886, c. 83, providing that every owner of a homestead may dispose of it, provided that the sale shall be void unless participated in by the wife, places a restriction as to disposition only upon the homestead as limited in quantity. Section 6 provides that, when any creditor shall be of the opinion that a homestead is of greater value than $1,500, he may proceed as in ordinary cases, and, if it sell for more than $1,500, the excess shall be applied to his claim. Held, in view of that section and of the probate law, which provides for the disposition of a decedent's homestead which is of a value greater than $1,500, that a homesteader does not have a "homestead" in the whole 160 acres of land, where it is of greater value than $1,500. Jones v. Losekamp, 114 Pac. 673, 675, 19 Wyo. 83.

Actual occupancy, residence, and possession

The essential feature of the homestead act is that the premises must be "used and kept" as such, and when they are not so "used or kept" they cease to be "homestead," whether another has been acquired or not. Cushman v. Davis, 64 Atl. 456, 458, 79 Vt. 111.

The "homestead" intended by the Constitution to be exempted is a place of actual residence of the party and his family; and, though a temporary absence will not deprive a homestead claimant of his right, yet a permanent abandonment of the homestead as a place of permanent abode strips it of its homestead character. Matthews v. Jeacle, 55 South. 865, 867, 61 Fla. 686.

A debtor in failing circumstances, being the head of a family, concluded to surrender to his creditors the property he had occupied as a homestead, and to move to and make his home upon another tract of land which he owned, and which was so leased that he had a right to take possession of it at any time. He made such removal after delaying it between four and five months in order to assist his creditors in realizing upon his property, having made a general assignment. Before he moved, and before he had done any act in pursuance of his purpose to move, a judgment was rendered against him by a justice of the peace, and a transcript of it was filed in the district court. Held, that the property in question was not exempt from sale upon an execution issued on such judgment. Wm. H. Bush & Co. v. Adams, 84 Pac. 122, 72 Kan. 556.

Dwelling house necessary

A "homestead" necessarily includes the idea of a house for a residence. It may be a mansion, a cabin, or a tent; either being sufficient to bring the land under the protection of the homestead law. Flowers v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 117 S. W. 547, 548, 89 Ark. 506.

A "homestead" is the place of a home or house; that part of a man's landed property which is about and contiguous to his dwelling house. A homestead necessarily includes the idea of a house for a residence or mansion house. The dwelling may be a splendid mansion, a cabin, or tent. If there be either, it is under the protection of the law; but there must be a home residence before it and the land on which it is situated can be claimed as a "homestead." Merrell v. Harris, 46 S. W. 538, 541, 65 Ark. 355, 359, 41 L. R. A. 714, 67 Am. St. Rep. 929 (dissenting opinion citing Williams v. Dorris, 31 Ark. 466).

As stated in Williams v. Dorris, 31 Ark. 466, "a 'homestead' necessarily includes the idea of a house for a residence or mansion house. The dwelling may be a splendid mansion, a cabin, or tent. If there be either, it is under the protection of the law; but there must be a home residence before it, and the land on which it is situated, can be claimed as a homestead." Where a house was being erected on land with the intention to occupy it as a home, and the owner lived near by, and a stable and crib were furnished, and corn was hauled to the crib, and turnips were planted on a clearing, but the owner died without ever having actually occupied the house as a residence, this was insufficient to constitute it a homestead. Shell v. Young, 95 S. W. 798, 799, 78 Ark. 479 (citing Gill v. Gill, 65 S. W. 112, 69 Ark. 596, 55 L. R. A. 191, 86 Am. St. Rep. 213; Tillar v. Bass, 21 S. W. 34, 57 Ark. 179; Gibbs v. Adams, 89 S. W. 1008, 76 Ark. 575).

Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. Wash., § 5214, declaring that a "homestead" consists of a dwelling house in which the claimant resides, and the land on which the homestead is situated, the particular kind of a dwelling house is not material, but the premises must be actually intended to be used for a home. In re Thompson, 140 Fed. 257, 260.

As dwelling and adjoining land

"The 'homestead' referred to in the Constitution means the real property in or upon which the home is located and which is devoted to a use appropriate and usual to a home place. It may be a small lot and building in town or a section or more of farm land with its buildings, and it includes a palace as well as a hovel." Calmer v. Calmer, 106 N. W. 684, 686, 15 N. D. 120.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1287, 1289, providing for a "homestead" not exceeding $5,000 in value, to consist of the dwelling house and land on which it is situated, selected as provided by statute, there is no limit to a homestead except as to value, and a tract containing 524 acres of contiguous land is, if properly selected and of less value than $5,000, exempt, though part of it was acquired by pre-exemption and part as a desert claim, and though it was unfenced. Under the statute, water rights, ditches, etc., used appurtenant to the homestead, are a part of it and exempt. Payne v. Cummings, 80 Pac. 620, 621, 146 Cal. 426, 106 Am. St. Rep. 47.

A 40-acre tract of land, on which is situated a mill and gin used in the support of the owner's family, and which is contiguous to a 160-acre tract comprising the owner's farm and home residence, is, as against creditors, part of the "homestead." Carroll v. Jeffries, 87 S. W. 1050, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 126.

As the exemption right

See, also, Homestead Exemption.

The "homestead right" or privilege granted by statute, before it has ripened into a life estate by the death of the spouse holding the legal title, is a quality of exemption and freedom of the property embraced in the homestead from execution and forced sale, incumbrance, or alienation without the consent of both husband and wife. The right of homestead is a personal privilege, which may be waived or lost unless asserted in due time on all proper occasions. The statute providing for the selection and exemption of a homestead withdraws the land thus selected from forced sale, and prevents alienation without the consent of both spouses. But the statute treats the subject as one of exemption, rather than creation of any new estate in the property in the spouse not holding the legal title. Campbell v. Moran, 99 N. W. 498, 499, 71 Neb. 615.

A "homestead," as usually used in the statute, is established to secure a home free from the debts of the head of the family, and is inalienable by him, and is for the benefit of the family. The "homestead" of a Chickasaw Indian differs in no particular from the surplus or other half of his land, except in the length of time during which it is made inalienable. Hayes v. Barringer, 104 S. W. 937, 940, 7 Ind. T. 697.

As an estate

A "homestead interest" is not an estate in land. It has been sometimes spoken of in loose and inaccurate speech as an "estate," but only to characterize it as a right secured by law. It is an exemption of land under stated conditions. If the conditions do not exist, or, having once existed, are at an end, the exemption ceases. A wife occupying with her husband a homestead, the legal title to which is in him, is not an owner of the land within the meaning of Gen. St. 1901, p. 6013, relating to notice of proceedings in the estabishment of a highway. Mathewson v. Skinner, 71 Pac. 580, 581, 66 Kan. 309 (quoting and adopting Ellinger v. Thomas, 67 Pac. 529, 64 Kan. 180).

A homestead being purely statutory, there is no greater right or estate therein than the statute creates. The term "homestead," as used in the exemption statute (B. & C. Comp. § 226), is not the designation of a particular estate implying prohibitions and limitations not incident to ordinary titles, but only means "the home place" or "the house and adjoining grounds" where the head of the family dwells. Mansfield v. Hill, 108 Pac. 1007, 1008, 56 Or. 400.

A "homestead" is not an estate in land, but a mere personal right of the parties in whose favor it exists, and it may exist only upon the conditions defined by the Constitution and laws, which require that there must be a family in order to constitute a homestead within the statute, and the family must exist by authority of law, and not in violation thereof. Middleton v. Johnston (Tex.) 110 S. W. 789, 791.

Under St. 1898, § 2983, as amended, providing that a homestead exemption shall extend to land not exceeding a specified amount in value, and to any estate less than a fee held by any person by lease, contract, or otherwise, and that the word "homestead" used in the statutes shall be defined to be the estate or interest in land as set forth in section 1 of this act, a grantee in a deed which reserves to the grantor, his mother, the use and occupancy for life, has no present right of occupancy during the grantor's life sufficient to carry with it the privileges of homestead rights during the life of the grantor, though permitted to live with her on the premises. Reeves & Co. v. Saxton, 129 N. W. 784, 145 Wis. 10.

As freehold

See Freehold.

Intent as governing

An intention to devote, and an actual devotion, to the use of a home are prerequisites to an estate of homestead. The "homestead" must be "a home place." Styles v. Theo. P. Scotland & Co., 134 N. W. 708, 710, 22 N. D. 469.

Land constitutes a "homestead" where it is purchased with the definite intention of making it a homestead, and immediately after the purchaser and his family go into possession and continue to occupy it as their homestead. Stowell v. Kerr, 83 Pac. 827, 828, 72 Kan. 330.

Land never actually occupied

The purchase of a farm on which is situated a habitable residence, with intent at the time to make it the purchaser's "homestead" in the future at such time as he might be able to improve it to his liking, will not constitute the farm the "homestead" of the family from the date of the purchase. "The rule seems to be that there must be something more than mere intention to constitute property the homestead of the family. If, at the time the question arises, the property is not actually occupied for homestead purposes, there should at least exist the intention to make it a homestead, accompanied with some act or acts of preparation looking to its actual occupancy for such purpose. Mere intention, under such circumstances, will not be sufficient. * * * In order that property may be exempted as the homestead, it is required that the same shall be used for the purposes of a home." Johnson v. Burton, 87 S. W. 181, 182, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 249.

Terminated by lease

Property is not deprived of its character as a "homestead," under a statute exempting to every housekeeper or head of a family a dwelling house and appurtenances, and the land used in connection therewith, not exceeding a certain specified amount in value, by reason of the fact that the house was constructed into two separate living apartments, one of which was rented. Adams v. Adams, 82 S. W. 66, 67, 183 Mo. 396.

Where a lot (or part of a lot) with a house thereon, situated in an incorporated city, is rented for a money rent to a tenant, who is not a servant or an employé of the owner, with the intention that such house and lot shall become the home and residence of such tenant and his family, and they actually do become the home and residence of such tenant and his family, such house and lot cannot be considered as a part of the "homestead" and residence of the owner, so as to be exempt from legal process, although such lot may adjoin the homestead of the owner. Ashton v. Ingle, 20 Kan. 670, 671, 678, 27 Am. Rep. 197.

Business property is not a part of the "homestead" of a widow; it not being used as a place of business by her, and not having been so used since the death of her husband, but having been rented continuously since then. Morris v. Morris, 99 S. W. 872, 875, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 60.

Leasehold

A leasehold interest which may be sold on execution may constitute a "homestead." White v. Danforth, 98 N. W. 136, 137, 122 Iowa, 403.

More than one house

Under Civ. Code, § 1287, providing that the "homestead" consists of the dwelling house in which the claimant resides and the land on which it is situated, the homestead does not include such other land as has resting thereon, as a part thereof, a building or buildings devoted to other purposes than those of a family home. In re Levy's Estate, 75 Pac. 301, 303, 141 Cal. 646, 99 Am. St. Rep. 92.

Where four lots, all in one tract and purchased at one time for a home, contain two houses separated by a partition fence, but the value of the entire property was less than $1,000, such entire tract may constitute a "homestead," although the claimant was not actually residing on the property. In re Murphy's Estate, 90 Pac. 918, 917, 46 Wash. 574.

Noncontiguous land

Land owned by a debtor and controlled and used by him as a part of his homestead, though two miles from his residence, which is in a village, may be found to be part of his "homestead," within the statute exempting a "homestead" of not more than $1,000 in value. Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Reesor (Ky.) 91 S. W. 717, 719.

A "homestead" must be wholly urban or rural, so that one residing on a lot in a town cannot claim exempt as part thereof a disconnected tract outside the town. Parker v. W. L. Moody & Co., 96 S. W. 650, 651, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 492.

Under Const. art. 16, § 51, providing that the homestead shall consist of lots used for a home or as a place for the business of the head of a family, the "homestead" embraces the family residence and the place of business of the head of the family, and the lots constituting the homestead may be connected or disconnected, provided they are used for the purposes of a home, and one or more lots may be devoted to the business of the head of the family; but the portion devoted to the business must constitute one place, at which the business is transacted. Rock Island Plow Co. v. Alten, 116 S. W. 1144, 1145, 102 Tex. 366.

Where the head of a family owns and resides on lots in an addition to a city beyond the corporate limits, other land owned by him, situated several miles distant, but used in connection with the lots for the purposes of a home, is not deprived of its "homestead" character by the mere fact of the family residence being on the lots forming part of the addition to the city, in the absence of evidence that it was so surrounded with other residences as to have become a part of a town or village, so as to have lost its "homestead" character. Jolly v. Diehl, 86 S. W. 965, 966, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 549.

Plaintiff's husband owned a half interest in a lot containing 12 acres separated from his residence by two streets, 10 and 30 varas wide, respectively, with a narrow block between them, which was fenced in 1892, and since continuously used by him as a pasture, and, with the exception of two years, for raising garden vegetables, though at times he also raised some cotton thereon. One year the land was rented for cash, and one year on shares, to one who planted crops as directed, consisting of garden vegetables, etc., and some cotton. Part of the time cattle bought to sell were pastured with the regular domestic animals. Held, that the property was used "for the purposes of the home," within the meaning and intent of the Constitution and laws, and that the property was a part of the "homestead" of plaintiff and her husband. Lacour v. L. W. Levy & Co., 108 S. W. 190, 191, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 163.

Outbuildings and contiguous lands

"The statute defines the word 'homestead' as 'a dwelling house and appurtenances, and the land used in connection therewith.' In Webster's Dictionary it is defined as 'a person's dwelling place, with that part of his landed property which is about and contiguous to it.' But contiguity does not seem to enter into our statutory definition." Perkins v. Quigley, 62 Mo. 498, 503.

Under the act exempting a dwelling house in which the claimant lives, and its appurtenances, and the land on which it is situated, not exceeding 160 acres, a homestead may be composed of contiguous parts of different governmental subdivisions, and, where the buildings are situated upon only one of such subdivisions, that only does not necessarily constitute the "homestead." Tindall v. Peterson, 98 N. W. 688, 689, 71 Neb. 160, 8 Ann. Cas. 721.

The word "residence," like the word "homestead," is not confined merely to the dwelling house, but it may also include everything connected therewith used to make the home more comfortable and enjoyable. But the words "homestead" and "residence" cannot be intended to include some other and independent family's home and residence. One pleading that a tract of land was occupied at a certain time by himself as a homestead was estopped to assert that such tract was at the same time the homestead of another. Linn v. Ziegler, 75 Pac. 489, 490, 68 Kan. 528.

Two separate 10-acre parcels of land, touching only at the corners, between which is a regular roadway, may constitute a "homestead," though the residence and appurtenances are all located on one tract. Brixius v. Reimringer, 112 N. W. 273, 101 Minn. 347, 118 Am. St. Rep. 629.

When the "homestead" of a landowner is alluded to in common speech, it is never understood to be limited to the dwelling house or other houses within the curtilage, but embraces the tract of land on which is located the dwelling and tributary improvements. Hancock v. King, 66 S. E. 949, 950, 133 Ga. 734.

Partial use for business

A "homestead," if one exists, should be preserved, and there can be no sale of any portion of the building, if the result thereof will be to unreasonably interfere with the use and occupation of such homestead. Each case presented must be determined in great part on the particular facts involved therein. Where a two-story building is subject to convenient use as a residence by the owner, she should not be deprived of her homestead right of any part because she is using for her ordinary business the front windows and a portion of the room on the lower floor. Edmonds v. Davis, 98 N. W. 375, 376, 122 Iowa, 561.

Where a widow owns in fee a lot less than a half acre in size in an incorporated city, and resides thereon, making it her home and place of actual residence for many years prior to her death, and dies there, and such widow has several children, all of them over 21 years of age, but none of them reside with her except two unmarried daughters, who resided with their mother continuously up to the time of her death, making her home their home, and they having no other home or dwelling place but their mother's, both of such daughters being of age, and both of them, by sewing, earning enough to supply all of their wants except their food, which they ate at their mother's table, both of them continuously remaining under the protection of their mother's roof-tree and family fireside, one of them for several years prior to her mother's death acting as her nurse—the mother being in feeble health—and attending to her personal wants generally, while the other daughter attended exclusively to the duties of housekeeper and to her mother's outside business affairs, under these circumstances it was held that such widow was the head of a family, and that such lot upon which she resided and died was her "homestead." Caro v. Caro, 34 South. 309, 310, 45 Fla. 203.

The "homestead" of a man residing thereon with his adult daughter, who had abandoned her vocation as a schoolteacher in order to live with him and keep house for him, was exempt from judicial sale as the "homestead of the family," in the absence of any showing that the father was under any obligation to pay for the daughter's services. Fox v. Waterloo Nat. Bank, 102 N. W. 424, 425, 126 Iowa, 481.

"The homestead of a wife continues after her death for the benefit of the surviving husband. It exists so long as he continues to occupy the land, although he has neither family nor children living with him." Where a single woman contracted debts at a time when she was not living on property which she had inherited, and which she did not at the time claim as a "homestead," but she afterwards married, and she and her husband lived on rented property adjoining her land, which they cultivated and used for pasture, the land so used was exempt to her husband as a "homestead" after her death. Holder's Adm'r v. Holder, 87 S. W. 1100, 120 Ky. 802.

HOMESTEAD CLAIM

A "homestead filing" is a "homestead claim," and a "pre-emption filing" is a "pre-emption claim," within the meaning of acts granting rights in public lands. Hence a grant of public lands to aid in the construction of a railroad, which excepts therefrom such lands within the place limits as shall be found to have been "granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, pre-empted, or otherwise disposed of," did not attach to lands which were within the primary limits of the grant as fixed by the definite location of the line of road, but upon which at the time the map of definite location became effective, there were homestead and pre-emption claims filed in the proper land office, and remaining of record and uncanceled. Oregon & C. R. Co. v. United States, 148 Fed. 603, 605, 606, 78 C. C. A. 375 (citing Northern Pac. R. Co. v. De Lacey, 19 Sup. Ct. 791, 174 U. S. 634, 43 L. Ed. 1111; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Sanders, 17 Sup. Ct. 671, 166 U. S. 620, 41 L. Ed. 1139; Whitney v. Taylor, 15 Sup. Ct. 796, 158 U. S. 85, 39 L. Ed. 906; Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Dunmeyer, 5 Sup. Ct. 566, 113 U. S. 629, 28 L. Ed. 1122; Doolan v. Carr, 8 Sup. Ct. 1228, 125 U. S. 618, 31 L. Ed. 844; Monroe Cattle Co. v. Becker, 13 Sup. Ct. 217, 147 U. S. 47, 37 L. Ed. 72; Leavenworth, L. & G. R. Co. v. United States, 92 U. S. 733, 23 L. Ed. 634; Bardon v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 12 Sup. Ct. 856, 145 U. S. 535, 36 L. Ed. 806; United States v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 13 Sup. Ct. 152, 146 U. S. 570, 36 L. Ed. 1091).

By Act March 2, 1889, 25 Stat. 1008, forfeiting certain unearned land in the State of Michigan, prior sales or disposition of any such lands by the land department under color of the public land laws were confirmed, with a proviso that nothing therein contained shall be construed to confirm any sales or entries of lands upon which there were bona fide pre-emption or homestead claims on the 1st day of May, 1888, arising or asserted by actual occupation of the land under color of the laws of the United States, and all such pre-emption and homestead claims are hereby confirmed. "While the term 'homestead claim' is sometimes used to denote a more familiar application at the local land office, obviously this is not the purport of the term as used in this section, for it is defined by the succeeding words, 'arising or asserted by actual occupation of the land.' This obviously includes cases in which the party is on the 1st day of May, 1888, in the actual occupation of land with a view of making a homestead on it under the laws of the United States." Edwards v. Begole, 121 Fed. 1, 7, 57 C. C. A. 245 (quoting and adopting definition in Lake Superior Ship Canal, Railway & Iron Co. v. Cunningham, 15 Sup. Ct. 108, 155 U. S. 354, 39 L. Ed. 183).

HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION

Rev. Codes 1899, § 3605, providing for homestead and that the house in which the homestead claimant resides and the land on which it is situated shall be exempt from judgment lien and execution, is not a definition of the term "homestead," but a definition and limitation of the "homestead exemption." Calmer v. Calmer, 106 N. W. 684, 685, 15 N. D. 120.

HOMESTEAD FILING

As homestead claim, see Homestead Claim.

HOMESTEAD LOAN ASSOCIATION

A "homestead loan association" is a sort of expedient resorted to for the more convenient prosecution and control of the peculiar copartnership business for which it was organized. Broch v. French, 116 Ill. App. 15, 18.

HOMESTEAD PURPOSES

See Homestead.

HOMESTEAD RIGHT

As real estate, see Real Property.

A "homestead right" is an interest in land. Where a testator gave to his daughter and two sons, each, a one-third interest in buildings, and devised to his daughter the portion of the tract owned by him upon which the buildings stood, and to one of the sons the middle portion of the tract and one acre near the buildings, and to the other son the remaining portion of the tract and one acre near the buildings, there is no connection between the interest of the latter son in the remaining portion of the tract and his interest in the buildings and the acre near it, which will support a homestead claim by him in the remaining portion of the tract. Barbo v. Jeru, 119 N. W. 580, 583, 155 Mich. 353 (citing Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Cronk, 52 N. W. 1035, 93 Mich. 49).

"A 'homestead right' is not an estate in land, but the privilege of exemption from execution of such an estate as the holder has; and hence the nature or quantum of a debtor's estate in his homestead is immaterial in determining whether it shall be exempt. Turner v. Brownings Adm'r, 107 S. W. 318, 319, 128 Ky. 79 (citing Pryor v. Stone, 70 Am. Dec. 344, note).

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 3616, providing that the homestead of every householder consisting of a dwelling house, etc., shall be exempt from attachment and execution, and section 3617, making the excess of the value allowed as a homestead subject to execution, the "homestead right" during the life of the owners of the fee may, by way of analogy, be defined as a privilege, an exemption from levy and sale under execution.

Pub. St. 1901, c. 138, § 1, provides that every person is entitled to $500 worth of his homestead as a homestead right. Held that, where a married woman and her husband own land in undivided halves and occupy it as their home, the wife is entitled to an exemption or "homestead right" to the extent of $500 in her half interest as against an execution levied against her, under section 3, making such homestead right exempt from levy or sale on execution, her undivided half of the premises being her "home place" or homestead. McLaughlin v. Collins, 78 Atl. 623, 624, 75 N. H. 557.

"Homicide" is the killing of one human being by another. State v. Wiggins (Del.) 76 Atl. 632, 634, 7 Pennewill, 127; State v. Underhill (Del.) 69 Atl. 880, 882, 6 Pennewill, 491; *State v. "Homicide" is the killing of one human being by the act or culpable omission of another, and a person, to be subject of homicide, must be in existence by actual birth, having been completely expelled from the body of the mother, and must thereafter have been alive before the infliction of the injury. Cordes v. State, 112 S. W. 943, 947, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 204.

"Homicide" is the destruction of the life of one human being by the act, agency, procurement, or culpable omission of another. The destruction of life must be complete by such act or agency; but although the injury which caused death might not under other circumstances have proved fatal, yet if such injury be the cause of death without its appearing that there has been any gross neglect or improper treatment by some other person other than defendant, such as the physician, nurse, or other attendants, it would be "homicide." Stovall v. State, 108 S. W. 699, 701, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 30.

To convict for any degree of culpable "homicide," it must be shown that decedent has been killed. Lott v. State, 131 S. W. 553, 555, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 162.

To convict for any degree of culpable "homicide," it must be shown that the killing was criminally caused by accused's act or agency. Lott v. State, 131 S. W. 553, 555, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 162.

Where the state's evidence was to the effect that the defendant shot and killed deceased on his refusal to obey an order not to approach defendant, while the defendant testified that as he was about to shoot at a tree a bystander pulled the gun to one side, whereupon it was accidentally discharged and killed deceased, this evidence does not raise the issue of negligent "homicide." Jones v. State (Tex.) 95 S. W. 539.

The term "homicide," as used in Code, § 5314, providing that an attorney appointed by the court to defend a person indicted for homicide, or any offense the punishment of which may be life imprisonment, shall receive certain pay from the county for his services, is used distinctively, is generic in character, and needs no interpretation. It does not refer to its punishment, and an attorney is entitled to such pay for defending one indicted for homicide, though a prior trial had amounted to an acquittal of all degrees of homicide, except manslaughter, which is not punishable by life imprisonment. Tomlinson v. Monroe County, 112 N. W. 100, 101, 184 Iowa, 608.

As crime

See Crime.

Grades

"Homicide" is the killing of any human creature, and is of three kinds—justifiable, excusable, and felonious. State v. Brinte (Del.) 58 Atl. 258, 262, 4 Pennewill, 551; State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 538, 7 Pennewill, 479; State v. Watson (Del.) 82 Atl. 1086, 1087.

The killing of a human being by another under any circumstances constitutes a "homicide," as an etymological analysis of the word itself will plainly show; but whether a homicide is murder or any other like crime depends necessarily on the circumstances under which it is committed. People v. Mar Gin Suite, 108 Pac. 951, 958, 11 Cal. App. 42.

"Homicide" is murder, unless it be attended with extenuating circumstances, which must appear to the satisfaction of the jury. If A. assaults B., giving him a severe blow, or otherwise making the provocation great, and B. strikes him with a deadly weapon, and death ensues, the law, in deference to human passion says this is 'manslaughter.' * * * If the 'provocation be slight, and it can be collected from the weapon used or any other circumstances that the prisoner intended to kill or do great bodily harm, and death follows, it is murder.'" State v. White, 51 S. E. 44, 48, 188 N. C. 704 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Smith, 77 N. C. 488).

"Homicide" is manslaughter in the first degree, when committed, without a design to effect death, in the heat of passion, but in a cruel and unusual manner, or by means of a dangerous weapon. Where a homicide was committed with a dangerous weapon with a design to effect death, and after a lapse of time sufficient for passion to subside, the crime was "murder," and not "manslaughter." State v. Towers, 118 N. W. 361, 362, 106 Minn. 105.

Under Pen. Code, § 179, defining "homicide" as the killing of one human being by the act, procurement, or omission of "another," and section 180, providing that homicide is either murder or manslaughter, and section 193, subd. 3, making a homicide manslaughter in the second degree when due to the act, procurement, or culpable negligence of any "person" which does not constitute murder or manslaughter in the first degree, a corporation may not be indicted for manslaughter, since the word "another" means another human being, and since the word "person" does not include a corporation. People v. Rochester Ry. & Light Co., 88 N. E. 22, 24, 195 N. Y. 102, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 998, 183 Am. St. Rep. 770, 16 Ann. Cas. 837.

As murder

The word "homicide," as used in Code, § 5314, providing that an attorney appointed by the court to defend a person indicted for homicide, or any other offense the punishment of which may be life imprisonment, shall receive certain pay from the county for his services, is not equivalent to "murder"; and the attorney is entitled to pay for defending one indicted for homicide, although a prior trial has amounted to an acquittal of all degrees of homicide except manslaughter, which is not punishable by life imprisonment. Tomlinson v. Monroe County, 112 N. W. 100, 101, 184 Iowa, 608.

HOMICIDE BY MISADVENTURE

"Homicide by misadventure" is the accidental killing of another, where the slayer is doing a lawful act unaccompanied by any criminally careless or reckless conduct. State v. Watson (Del.) 82 Atl. 1086, 1087.

"Homicide by misadventure," constituting excusable homicide, is the accidental killing of another where the slayer is doing a lawful act, unaccompanied by any criminally careless or reckless conduct. State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 539, 7 Pennewill, 479.

HOMICIDE CASE

A stenographer, appointed by a board of coroners and entitled to receive an amount per folio for all transcripts made for the use of the district attorney's office, on being directed to make transcripts for all "homicide cases," could recover the statutory compensation for the transcripts furnished in all cases of death, whether from negligence or otherwise; but on the stenographer including in his claim compensation for transcripts in cases of "constructive homicide," it was wrongfully assumed that he had no right to recover for cases of such description. Strassner v. City of New York, 89 N. Y. Supp. 669, 670, 6 App. Div. 370.

HOMICIDE IN SELF-DEFENSE

See Self-defense.

HONES

Lexicographers uniformly agree that the word "hones" and the word "whetstones" in their descriptive force each implies a stone used for sharpening edged tools, instruments, etc., by friction. The one unit of similarity between the two is that the stones must be articles used for sharpening edged tools. The provisions for "hones" and "whetstones" in paragraph 574, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, 80 Stat. 193, include only articles used in sharpening edged tools. R. J. Waddell & Co. v. United States, 135 Fed. 211, 213.

Articles of bone stone, which are used in polishing marble and lithographic stones, and which are not shown to be known commercially as "hones," are not free of duty as "hones" under the Tariff Act, but are dutiable as unenumerated manufactured articles. R. J. Waddell & Co. v. United States, 135 Fed. 211, 213.

HONEST

HONEST BELIEF

The expression "honest belief," as used in the rule that a defendant, in a prosecution for homicide defended on the ground of self-defense, must have had an honest belief of the existence of danger, does not differ from the expression "reasonable belief." Both are used conjunctively and disjunctively by different courts. Just how a belief can be reasonable and not be an honest belief, as applied to the law of self-defense, cannot be perceived. Webster defines "reasonable" as meaning "just; honest." State v. Churchill, 100 Pac. 309, 314, 52 Wash. 210 (quoting Tillery v. State, 5 S. W. 842, 24 Tex. App. 251, 5 Am. St. Rep. 882).

The use of the language "sound reason," "honest belief," in connection with instructions as to self-defense, can only be understood to mean that defendant must actually, in good faith, have thought that he was in danger of losing his life or suffering great bodily harm, and that he had reason and cause for such belief. Robinson v. Territory, 85 Pac. 451, 456, 16 Okl. 241.

HONEY

Judicial notice should be taken that "glucose" is an element entering into many different articles of food and is not used by itself as such. "To the ancients 'honey' was known by the name of 'glucose,' and it is still somewhat difficult to draw the line of demarcation. Furthermore, it is a matter of common knowledge that honey deposited by the honey bee is on occasion almost entirely pure 'glucose,' dependent upon the food which the bee may eat." People v. Berghoff, 95 N. Y. Supp. 257-259, 47 Misc. Rep. 1.

HONOR

See Office of Honor or Profit.

HOOD

A "hood" used in connection with a rip-saw is a tin or sheet iron cap partly covering the saw, and preventing the board from flying up, while the saw is cutting it, and striking the operative. Dean v. St. Louis Woodenware Works, 80 S. W. 292, 294, 106 Mo. App. 167.

A "hood" is an iron block used in connection with a pile driver and placed over the top of the pile being driven to prevent the weight from splitting it. Huston v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co., 107 S. W. 1045, 1046, 129 Mo. App. 576.

HOOK

HOOKER

The term "hooker," when used in connection with railroad work and dealing with the construction of bridges, is equivalent to the term "topman." Southern Indiana Ry. Co. v. Harrell (Ind.) 66 N. E. 1016, 1017.

Tubular bells, without a stiffening or loading device, emit inharmonic sounds technically called "hooplike vibrations." Durfee v. Bawo, 118 Fed. 853-855.

HOP CLOTH

The term "hop cloth," contained in Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894, c. 349, § 2, Free List, par. 424½, 28 Stat. 539, was only inserted as another name for burlap, to which such paragraph related. Corbitt & Macleay Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 648, 652.

HOPE

The word "hope," used by testator in a will to express his desire that the executor will conduct a fund in a specified manner, testator having power to command, will not be construed as precatory only, but as a command clothed in the language of civility, and to impose on the executor an enforceable duty, sufficient to create a trust. Trustees of Pembroke Academy v. Epsom School Dist., 75 Atl. 100, 101, 75 N. H. 408, 87 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646.

HOPPER

HOPPER BOTTOM

"Hopper bottoms" of railroad gravel cars are bottoms which open out, so that the contents of the cars may be emptied on the track. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jackson, 109 S. W. 478, 480, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 573.

HORN

A "deer which has no horns" protruding through the skin, so that they can be seen and ascertained to be horns, is not a "deer having horns," within the statute making it an offense to kill wild deer not having horns. State v. St. John, 59 Atl. 826, 827, 77 Vt. 176.

HORSE

See Bay Horse; Work Horse.

"All the authorities agree that the word 'horse' is a generic term, ordinarily including in its signification the different species of that kind of animals, and generally it is sufficient in charging larceny to describe an animal by the name of the class to which it belongs." State v. Matejousky, 115 N. W. 96, 98, 22 S. D. 30.

Under Pen. Code 1901, art. 881, relating to theft of a horse, "the genus 'horse' includes a stallion, mare, gelding, etc." Beard v. State, 83 S. W. 824, 825, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 183 (citing State v. Morales, 21 Tex. 298; McKenzie v. State, 25 S. W. 426, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 568, 40 Am. St. Rep. 795; Cummins v. State, 12 Tex. App. 121; Smith v. State, 39 S. W. 933, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 342).

As cattle

See Cattle.

As chattel

See Chattel.

Colt

The term "horse," in its generic sense, embraces all the different varieties of that animal, however diversified by age, sex, or condition. As a general rule, when a statute names adult animals only, the young are included under the same description. Under a statute making it grand larceny to steal a "mare," the stealing of a female colt is grand larceny. Miller v. Territory, 80 Pac. 321, 322, 9 Ariz. 123.

Mare

The word "horse" includes the female sex of that genus. A complaint charging the killing of a horse is sustained by proof that the animal was a mare. Southern Ry. Co. v. Pogue, 40 South. 565, 566, 145 Ala. 444.

Notwithstanding Pen. Code, § 487, providing that the larceny of a horse, mare, gelding, etc., is grand larceny, proof of the theft of a mare does not constitute a variance from an information charging the theft of a horse, since the word "horse" is used in its generic sense, and includes all animals of the horse species, whether male or female. People v. Melandrez, 88 Pac. 372, 373, 4 Cal. App. 396 (quoting and adopting definition in People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 52).

As merchandise

See Merchandise.

Mule

The word "horse" is generic, and includes mules and asses as species; but the term "mare" is not descriptive of a female of the species mule. McLamb & Co. v. Lambertson, 62 S. E. 107, 109, 4 Ga. App. 553.

The term "work horses," used by the constitutional exemption provision, includes mules. McElveen v. Golings, 41 South. 229, 116 La. 977, 114 Am. St. Rep. 574 (citing Ray v. Hayes, 28 La. Ann. 641; Goldsmith v. State, 1 Head [38 Tenn.] 156).

As tool

See Tools—Tools of Trade.

HORSE POWER

While the term "horse power" designates a definite amount of mechanical force, it may also be used in connection with a given head of water, to designate a definite quantity of water. Given the head and the mechanical power to be produced in terms of "horse power," the equivalent quantity of water can in theory be ascertained by mathematical calculation. In practice, however, allowance must be made for inevitable leakage, friction, and other inevitable losses in converting the water into mechanical force. Union Water Power Co. v. Inhabitants of Lewiston, 65 Atl. 67, 71, 101 Me. 564.

The unit of power, called the "watt," equals 10,000,000 units of power in the C. G. S. system, or one ampere times one volt. One horse power is 746 watts or $\frac{3}{4}$ kilowatts. Peoria Waterworks Co. v. Peoria Ry. Co., 181 Fed. 990, 1001.

Pounds pressure distinguished

The terms "horse power" and "pounds pressure," as applied to steam, are entirely different in meaning and application; "horse power" expressing quantity of steam, and "pounds pressure" the quality of pressure at which the steam is delivered. Fox v. Coggeshall, 88 N. Y. Supp. 676, 679, 95 App. Div. 410.

HORSE STEALING

The offense of "horse stealing," denounced by Act No. 80, p. 38, of 1892, is a mere unlawful and malicious trespass committed on the horse, mule, or ox of another. It does not fall within the definition of an attempt to steal. State v. Gouvernale, 86 South. 817, 112 La. 956.

If accused acquired possession of horses under a false and fraudulent pretense of hiring them, and with a felonious intent to convert them to his own use and to deprive the owner permanently of them, he was guilty of "horse stealing" within Ky. St. 1903, § 1195, without proof of a subsequent sale or other wrongful disposition by accused; but, if he hired the horses in good faith and was prevented from returning them by the owner's act in having him arrested, he was not guilty. Smith v. Commonwealth, 112 S. W. 615, 616, 129 Ky. 433.

Obtaining possession of a horse under pretense of hiring it, without intending to return it, and with the felonious intent to convert it and deprive the owner permanently of it, is "horse stealing," without a subsequent sale or other wrongful disposition of the horse; but if he hired the horse in good faith, with intention of returning it, and was prevented from doing so by the owner's act in having him arrested, he is not guilty. Walklate v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 118 S. W. 814, 315.

HORSEBACK

In mining parlance, the term "horseback" means that the actual deposit has been forced up into a ridge or hill by the uneven surface of the underlying strata of rock. The effect of the horseback is to compress the coal, and the vein is thinner at the horseback than elsewhere, and it not infrequently happens that the vein is entirely pinched out by the horseback. Jones & Adams Co. v. George, 81 N. E. 4, 5, 227 Ill. 64, 10 Ann. Cas. 285.

When referring to land underlaid by coal, the term "horsebacks" means faults in the coal stratum. Lloyd v. Catlin Coal Co., 71 N. E. 335, 338, 210 Ill. 460.

HOST

To establish the relation of "host" and "guest" at an inn, the traveler must visit the inn to avail himself of the entertainment offered, and the innkeeper must receive the traveler to entertain him, and it is not necessary that the traveler should register. Hill v. Memphis Hotel Co., 136 S. W. 997, 998, 124 Tenn. 376.

HOSTILEHOSTILE FIRE

An ordinary fire in a stove is deemed, with relation to fire insurance, a "friendly" and not a "hostile" fire; but where a fire in a stove ignited the soot in the chimney, and the smoke and soot from the burning chimney escaped into the room and damaged property, the fire in the chimney was a "hostile fire." O'Connor v. Queens Ins. Co. of America, 122 N. W. 1038, 1040, 140 Wis. 388, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1081, 17 Ann. Cas. 1118 (citing Way v. Abington Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 43 N. E. 1032, 166 Mass. 67, 32 L. R. A. 608, 55 Am. St. Rep. 379).

HOSTILE POSSESSION

Within the rule that to constitute adverse possession it is necessary that the possession be "actual, continuous, notorious, and hostile," "Hostile" means opposed and antagonistic to the claims of all others. Bradbury Marble Co. v. Laclede Gaslight Co., 106 S. W. 594, 599, 128 Mo. App. 96.

The word "hostile," within the rule that adverse possession must be "hostile" in its beginning, means hostile as a matter of law. Purtle v. Bell, 80 N. E. 350, 352, 225 Ill. 523.

An instruction, where defendant claims title by adverse possession, that he must show open, actual, continuous, notorious, exclusive, and hostile possession for a period of 10 years before action brought as against all parties, and defining the word "hostile" as meaning a holding possession, claiming to hold against all other claimants, is not prejudicial to defendant. Taylor v. Hover, 108 N. W. 149, 150, 77 Neb. 97.

Adverse possession synonyms

In ejectment, a charge to find for plaintiff unless defendant had been in "uninterrupted, continuous, adverse, and hostile possession," etc., was not erroneous in using the word "hostile" in addition to "adverse," as the two words mean the same in law. Weller v. Wagner, 79 S. W. 941, 943, 181 Mo. 151.

HOSTLER

A "hostler," in railway parlance, is one employed in taking the locomotives as they come into the yard, and are left by the engineer who has been in charge, to the roundhouse, or other place of shelter, security, or repairs, or for supplies, and bringing them out again, as occasion requires, to the place where the engineer assumes charge for the purpose of making his trip. He is also more or less employed in conducting the engine about the yard for the purpose of shifting cars in making up trains and in distributing them. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Doty, 133 Fed. 866, 867, 872, 67 C. C. A. 38.

One charged with the duty of operating a yard engine in switching and making up trains and the like is called in railroad parlance a "hostler." Though his duties and work be confined to the depot yard, he is as much an "engineer" as one operating an engine from point to point on a line of railroad. Howard v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. (Ky.) 90 S. W. 950, 951.

A "hostler" is an employé of a railroad company whose duty it is to take engines that have just arrived from the custody of the engineer and fireman and run them into the roundhouse. Loomis v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 75 N. E. 228, 229, 182 N. Y. 380.

A locomotive engineer, whose duty is to relieve the engineers that come in off the road, take the train and put it away, and carry the engine to the shop and put it up, is called a "hostler." Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Goodson, 45 S. E. 680, 681, 118 Ga. 833.

HOT

"Bad blood," which produces a cherished intention to deliberately kill, is not to be confused with "hot blood," excited by a sudden and unexpected emergency, with which the slayer, through no fault of his own, is unfortunately confronted. Jenkins v. State, 51 S. E. 598, 600, 128 Ga. 523.

HOT WIRE

The term "hot wire" is used in electricity to describe a wire charged with a dangerous voltage of electricity. Potts v. Shreveport Belt Ry. Co., 34 South. 103, 110 La. 1, 98 Am. St. Rep. 452.

An inquiry by an employé of a telephone company sent out to fix a defective telephone, whether there was "anything hot on it" is an inquiry whether the wires of the telephone which he was sent out to fix had become surcharged from any cause with a dangerous quantity of electric fluid. Dow v. Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Co., 106 Pac. 587, 588, 157 Cal. 182.

"Hotchpot" is bringing into the estate an estimate of the value of advancements made by him to his children, that the whole may be divided in accordance with the statute of descent. Lindsley v. McIver, 48 South. 628, 629, 57 Fla. 466.

HOTEL

See Apartment Hotel; Public Hotel.

A "hotel" is a place where lodging is furnished to transient guests, as well as one where both lodging and food are furnished. Metzler v. Terminal Hotel Co., 115 S. W. 1037, 1038, 135 Mo. App. 410.

Where a building consisted of a barroom, grocery store, six bedrooms, two dining rooms, and a kitchen, and was occupied continuously by a family consisting of a husband and wife and five children, and two others, guests being accommodated at night only occasionally, it was not a bona fide "hotel" within San Jose City Ordinance July 1, 1908, regulating the issuance of liquor licenses. Richter v. Lightston, 118 Pac. 790, 791, 161 Cal. 260, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1028.

An indictment for playing cards in the "hotel" of L. N. is merely descriptive of the place, and not of the essence of the place, since the word "hotel" may mean a private boarding house or other building designated as a "hotel." State v. Kyer, 46 S. E. 694, 695, 55 W. Va. 46.

A corporation incorporated to do a general hotel business has authority to take over the business of one operating a café in a hotel building owned by the corporation, together with the bar and cigar stand in connection therewith, for the power to do a general hotel business necessarily includes the authority to buy and sell refreshments, cigars, wines, etc.; a "hotel" being defined as a place for the accommodation of travelers with food and lodging. Judell v. Goldfield Realty Co., 108 Pac. 455, 457, 32 Nev. 851.

Hotels are established and maintained for the purpose of serving the public. The opening of a hotel is an invitation to the public to become its guests. Hotels are not conducted for the social enjoyment of the owners, but for the convenience of the public; that is, those whose business or pleasure may render it necessary that they shall ask and receive food and shelter at a place of public entertainment for compensation. A "hotel" is a quasi public institution. A contract between competing proprietors of hotels in a town, whereby one of them agreed to keep his hotel closed for three years, reserving the right to rent the same for offices and to roomers, and whereby the other agreed to pay a specified sum monthly to the former during the three years, is in restraint of trade and illegal, because the hotel is a quasi public institution. Clemons v. Meadows, 94 S. W. 13, 14, 123 Ky. 178, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 647, 124 Am. St. Rep. 389.

Act 33d Gen. Assem. c. 168, providing for the inspection of hotels, and declaring that every structure kept, used, advertised, or held out to the public to be an inn, hotel, or public sleeping house, or place where sleeping accommodations are furnished for hire to transient guests, in which ten or more sleeping rooms are used for guests' accommodation, shall be defined to be a "hotel" within the act, is not unconstitutional, as arbitrary in its classification of hotels. Hubbell v. Higgins, 126 N. W. 914, 916, 148 Iowa, 36, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 822.

A building is a "hotel" within the meaning of the term in Laws 1897, c. 312, p. 233, relating to the liquor traffic, when it is used and kept open for the feeding and lodging of guests, and there are at least six furnished bedrooms for their occupancy, and no other dwellers therein but the family and servants of the hotel keeper. In re Brewster, 83 N. Y. Supp. 564, 565, 85 App. Div. 235.

A house having 24 bedrooms and a dining room containing the required amount of space, and with adequate kitchen facilities, and harboring between 30 and 40 people, was a "hotel," within Laws 1897, p. 234, c. 312, § 31, cl. "k," authorizing a holder of a liquor tax certificate, who is a keeper of a hotel, to sell liquor on Sunday to his guests with their meals. In re Cullinan, 87 N. Y. Supp. 660, 661, 93 App. Div. 427.

Under the Liquor Tax Law excepting from the general prohibition against the sale of liquor on Sunday keepers of hotels who may sell liquors to guests, and defining a hotel as a building which, among other things, contains a certain number of bedrooms with certain requirements, sales by the keeper of a hotel which does not comply with the requirements of the law, because of deficiency in the number of rooms, in the area of some of these which did exist, an insufficient thickness of partitions, failure of legal entrances to bedrooms, etc., are illegal, and cannot be justified on the ground that an excise agent told him that his building was sufficient in its structure and conditions to enable him to conduct business as a hotel keeper and to bring him within the exception of the statute. Cullinan v. O'Connor, 91 N. Y. Supp. 628, 630, 100 App. Div. 142.

Under the Liquor Tax Law, defining a "hotel" as a building regularly kept open for the accommodation of all able to pay for their entertainment, and who, without any stipulated engagement as to the duration of their stay, or as to compensation, are supplied with meals, lodgings, and attention, and in which the only other dwellers are the family and servants of the hotel keeper, the fact that certain dwellers in the building pay a stipulated weekly or monthly sum for their entertainment does not deprive an establishment otherwise within the terms of the statute of its character as a hotel. Cullinan v. Clark, 93 N. Y. Supp. 256, 257, 46 Misc. Rep. 188.

Under the Liquor Tax Law, defining a "hotel" as a building regularly used and kept open as such for the feeding and lodging of guests, stating the manner of such use, and the structural requirements of the building when situate within a city, evidence that the building had 25 rooms fitted with all the accouterments of a hotel, but not showing what such accouterments were, did not show that the building was a hotel. In re Cullinan, 92 N. Y. Supp. 802, 45 Misc. Rep. 497.

In a statute making it unlawful to sell liquor on Sunday, but providing that the holder of a tax certificate who is the keeper of a hotel may sell liquor to the guests with their meals, "hotel" is defined as a building regularly used as such for the feeding and lodging of guests, and "guest" is defined as one who in good faith, during the hours when meals are served, resorts to the hotel for the purpose of obtaining and actually orders and obtains a meal. On a petition for the revocation of a liquor license, it was admitted that the premises conformed to the law with respect to the requirements of a hotel, but it was shown that on a Sunday agents of the excise department entered a sitting room at the rear of the barroom, and found the room furnished with tables, and people sitting about at tables ordering and being served with drinks, that the agents purchased sandwiches, which were served, and that they then purchased drinks. It appeared that there were no knives or forks on the tables, and none of the usual appliances for a meal. Held, that the facts showed a violation of the statute. In re Clement, 102 N. Y. Supp. 37, 40, 117 App. Div. 5.

The Liquor Tax Law permits the sale of liquor in hotels on Sunday. Section 31 requires all buildings used as a hotel under the act to conform to the laws and regulations relating to hotels, including all regulations pertaining to the building and other departments, and subdivision 2 (page 236) thereof requires buildings to be used as a hotel under the act to contain at least 10 bedrooms above the basement. The building code of the city of New York regulates the erection and construction of various classes of buildings, and, in prescribing what buildings shall be subject to the provisions thereof, section 10 defines a "hotel" as every building used for supplying food, etc., and containing more than 15 sleeping rooms above the first story. Held, that the definition of a hotel in the building code applied only to the provisions of that code, and a hotel containing 10 bedrooms above the basement complied with the liquor tax law, though it did not contain more than 15 rooms above the first floor as provided by the building code, and hence a statement in an application for a license to sell liquor in such a building that it conformed to the regulations relating to hotels was not false so as to justify the revocation of the certificate. In re Clement, 118 N. Y. Supp. 392, 394, 129 App. Div. 229.

On an application for a liquor tax certificate, the fact that the building where the business was to be conducted had only five bedrooms instead of six, that one of these was materially deficient in floor area and air space, that four had no independent access by a door leading into a hallway, and that the premises failed in other respects to comply structurally with Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1910, c. 494) § 30, cl. "n," defining a "hotel," was ground for refusing the certificate. People ex rel. Higgins v. Hegeman, 135 N. Y. Supp. 90, 94, 75 Misc. Rep. 163.

Boarding house distinguished

The fact that the house is open for the public, that those who patronize it come to it by the invitation, which is extended to the general public, and without previous agreement for an accommodation, and without any previous agreement as to the duration of their stay, marks the important distinction between a "hotel," or inn, and a boarding house. Under a statute entitling all persons to full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations of inns and eating houses, a place where meals are served to whoever applies at prices charged to all is an eating house. Humburd v. Crawford, 105 N. W. 330, 128 Iowa, 743 (quoting and adopting Fay v. Pacific Imp. Co., 26 Pac. 1099, 28 Pac. 943, 93 Cal. 253, 16 L. R. A. 188, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198, and citing Schouler, Bailm. p. 253).

Private lodging house distinguished

"There is a clear distinction between a mere 'private lodging house' and a 'hotel' where no meals are served. Such a 'hotel' or inn is a house the proprietor of which holds out that he will receive all travelers and sojourners who are willing to pay a price adequate to the sort of accommodation provided and who come in a situation in which they are fit to be received. The keeper of such a house is bound, without making any special contract therefor, to provide all to the limit of his facilities at a reasonable price; but the proprietor of a 'private lodging house' is not bound to receive all who apply, but he has the right to select his guests, contracting specially with each." *Nelson v. A bay window built up from a foundation wall is a part of a "house," within a building restriction covenant. Righter v. Winters, 59 Atl. 770, 772, 68 N. J. Eq. 252.

A showcase set in a vestibule of a building, under the floor of the first story. It was five or six feet square and six or eight feet high, with a cover on it and a door in it, on which was a lock. From four to six men could stand up in the case. It was not attached to the building and could be moved. Held, that it was not a "house," within Pen. Code 1895, art. 843, making it burglary to unlawfully enter a house. Clark v. State, 120 S. W. 892, 893, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 494.

An owner of land conveyed a part by deed, retaining the rest; the deed providing that no dwelling house should be erected upon the premises. The grantee built a structure thereon, on the first floor of which was a garage and a boiler house, and on the second floor bedrooms and a bathroom, occupied by the servants of a lessee. Held, in an action to enjoin the use of the building as a dwelling house or habitation, and to compel it to be torn down and removed, that the four walls and the roof of the structure constituted a "house," and that the interior arrangement determined that a portion of it was a "dwelling house," and that complainant was entitled to enjoin the use of any part of the house as a dwelling house, although not to compel its removal. Goater v. Ely, 82 Atl. 611, 612, 80 N. J. Eq. 40.

Laws 1897, p. 467, c. 415, § 18, provides that one employing another to furnish labor in the erection, repairing, etc., of a house, building, or structure, shall not furnish or erect for performance of such labor unsafe scaffolding, ladders, or other mechanical contrivances, and section 19 requires all scaffolding to be constructed so as to bear four times the maximum weight to be placed thereon. Plaintiff, while repairing a car 47 feet long, 8½ feet wide, and 16 feet high, jacked up about 6 feet above the floor of the shops, and around which was erected a staging of "painter's horses," like ladders with rungs about 12 inches apart, and planks placed on them about 8 feet above the floor, was injured by breaking of a plank. Held, that "house," in common speech, embraced every structure designed for human habitation, but in a legal sense was even more comprehensive, and "building" included every form of artificial house, as well as many other structures, and "structure," in its broadest sense, included any artificial production composed of parts joined together in a definite manner, and, in view of the meaning of the terms, and of the language of the statute, the word "structure" used therein did not include merely structures similar to those mentioned, and included the car on which he worked when injured. Caddy v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 88 N. E. 747, 748, 195 N. Y. 415, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 30.

Apartment, office, or room

A house alleged to have been burglarized was a storehouse with two wings. In one of the rooms hay had been stacked as high as the joists making a partition in the room, and here the beer stolen at the time of the burglary was stored. The parts of the room divided by the hay each had an outside entrance and were in the possession of different persons. A person could go from one part to the other by climbing over the hay through a space between the joists and the roof of the building. Held, that an instruction that each end of the room so divided was a separate "house," within the law relating to burglary, was proper. Kinney v. State (Tex.), 148 S. W. 783, 784.

The word "house," used in the term "disorderly house," may mean a single room in a house or building, or any place used as a shelter for disorderly conduct. Walt v. People, 104 Pac. 89, 92, 46 Colo. 136 (citing State v. Garity, 46 N. H. 61).

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 843, which is a part of the chapter punishing burglary, and which provides that a "house" within the statute is any building or structure erected for public or private use, one compartment in a cold storage plant is a "house" within such statute, and one stealing meat stored therein is guilty of burglary. James v. State, 140 S. W. 1086, 1087, 68 Tex. Cr. R. 559.

Pen. Code 1895, art. 388b, makes it a felony for any person to keep any premises, building, place, or room for the purpose of being used as a place for gambling with cards; and Vagrancy Act (Acts 31st Leg. c. 59) § 1, subd. "k," declares that every keeper of a house of gambling or gaming is a vagrant. Held, that there is a distinction between the offense of keeping a "room," denounced by Pen. Code 1895, § 388b, and keeping a "house," denounced under the vagrancy act, for "room" and "house" are not synonymous or convertible terms, so that the vagrancy act does not repeal the provision of the Penal Code. Parshall v. State, 138 S. W. 759, 766, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 177.

Chicken house

A chicken house is within a statute making it burglary to enter a "house" or other building with intent to commit a felony. Evidence that defendant took chickens from a "coop" by cutting a hole in the wire around it did not sustain a charge of burglary, under such statute, making it burglary to enter any house or building, as a chicken coop is not necessarily a house. Gunter v. State, 96 S. W. 181, 182, 79 Ark. 432, 116 Am. St. Rep. 85.

Curtilage or land included

The word "house" imports land. State ex rel. Post v. Board of Education of Clarksburg School Dist., 76 S. E. 127, 128, 71 W. Va. 52 (citing Devlin, Deeds, § 863).

The term "buildings" or "houses" includes the real estate on which they are situated, unless the general meaning of the term is modified by the language of the context. A devise of all the rents of a building carries the property itself, there being nothing in the statutes to prevent the operation of such rule. Gidley v. Lovenberg, 79 S. W. 831, 835, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 203.

Where a lessee under a gas lease agreed to equip the "house" of the lessor for the use of natural gas, he was not required to furnish lights outside the house, between the "house" and a spring on the premises. Gillespie v. Iseman, 59 Atl. 266, 267, 210 Pa. 1.

Where buildings on land consisted of an erection 1½ stories high with three rooms, and this erection was very nearly completed, and in the rear and annexed thereto was another erection one story high designed for a kitchen, and annexed to that was another designed for a washroom and other appendages, the entire structure was a "house," within the meaning of a contract of sale by which the "house" was to be finished. Hovey v. Luce, 31 Me. 346, 350.

Ginhouse

Where there was no question that the house which was burned was a ginhouse, a definition by the court in its charge that a "house" is any building, edifice, or structure inclosed with walls and covered, whatever be the material used for the building, was sufficient and not misleading, and was in accord with Pen. Code 1895, art. 757. Allen v. State, 137 S. W. 1133, 1136, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 501.

A "house" is defined by Pen. Code 1895, art. 757, as a "building, device or structure inclosed with walls and covered, whatever be the material used for building." Within this definition it is held that a gin set up on posts, and the lower part used for the engine, the upper part entirely inclosed with walls, with an opening at one end of the gin room, out of which the bales of cotton were rolled, which opening had no doors which could be closed, constituted a "house." Caddell v. State, 97 S. W. 705, 706, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 380.

Porch

To steal articles of value from the porch of a building used as a restaurant, the porch being used as a part of the restaurant, is "larceny from the house." Johnson v. State, 58 S. E. 684, 2 Ga. App. 405.

Premises

See Premises.

Railroad car

Pen. Code 1895, art. 838, states that the offense of burglary is committed by entering a "house" by means and under conditions enumerated. Article 849, part of the same chapter as article 838, provides a penalty for an attempt to commit burglary. Article 851, part of the following chapter, makes it penal for one, by the means enumerated in article 838 and under certain conditions, to enter a vessel, steamboat, or railroad car, but does not in terms make or define this to be burglary. The chapter containing article 851 makes no provision relative to attempts. Held, that an attempt to break and enter a "railroad car" is not an offense. Summers v. State, 90 S. W. 310, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 90.

Shed

A shed was a "house," within the burglary statute, though it was entirely closed by planking, and had no door, so that one could not enter without pulling off the planking. Crow v. State, 85 S. W. 1057, 1058, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 25.

Warehouse platform

Theft of articles from a warehouse platform, used to carry goods into the warehouse and remove them therefrom, as well as for temporary deposit of goods, is larceny from the "house." Wilson v. State, 70 S. E. 1125, 9 Ga. App. 297.

Wharf

A "house" or building, within Pen. Code 1895, §§ 178, 179, defining larceny from a house, is a structure having a roof and lateral inclosure in which persons live or work, animals are confined, or property is stored; and a wharf where vessels discharge their cargo, covered by a roof, but otherwise wholly uninclosed, is not within the statute. McCabe v. State, 58 S. E. 277, 278, 1 Ga. App. 719.

HOUSE AND LOT

My house and lot, see My.

HOUSE BOAT

As dwelling house, see Dwelling—Dwelling House.

Within a marine insurance policy covering a "house boat," a house boat was a vessel manifestly not intended for navigation on the ocean. It is commonly defined as a boat fitted up as a house and commonly more or less resembles one in form and arrangements for permanent or temporary habitation. Such boats have long been the only dwellings of many thousands of people in the waters of eastern countries intended either to be stationary or to be moved by towing or by oars or sweeps. Fulton v. President, etc., of Insurance Co. of North America, 127 Fed. 413, 416 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.).

HOUSE NUMBER

See Street and House Number.

HOUSE OF ANOTHER

The phrase "the house of another," used in defining arson, means the house of the accupant, and not of the owner of the fee. Heard v. State, 94 S. W. 605, 606, 116 Tenn. 713.

HOUSE OF COMMON PROSTITUTION

"Houses of common prostitution" are public places. They are places to which all men may resort without invitation, and any house maintained for the indulgence of vice, and to which all may resort day or night for indulgence therein, is a public place, and the approaches which are furnished, and which are generally used in order to reach such places, are public ways. No public place whose existence is devoted exclusively to vice can claim immunity from the peaceful presence of officers upon its public passageways and approaches, with a view of suppressing it. Pon v. Wittman, 81 Pac. 984, 989, 147 Cal. 280, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 683.

HOUSE OF CORRECTION

A "house of correction" is designed for the reformation of youthful criminals. Ex parte Watson, 72 S. E. 1049, 1052, 157 N. C. 340.

HOUSE OF ILL FAME

See Reputed House of Ill Fame; Sporting House.

See, also, Bawdyhouse; Lewd House.

There is no difference in meaning between the two expressions "house of ill fame" and "lewd house or place for the practice of fornication or adultery." Cotton v. City of Atlanta, 73 S. E. 683, 684, 10 Ga. App. 397.

HOUSE OF LEGISLATURE

The word "house" is used in the Constitution in varying senses to three entities, namely, the place of legislative session, the total elected membership of a branch of that department, and the body, whether upper or lower, as legally constituted to perform its legislative functions. State ex rel. Woodward v. Skeggs, 46 South. 268, 270, 154 Ala. 249.

HOUSE OF PROSTITUTION

Operating house of prostitution, see Operate.

HOUSE OF PUBLIC WORSHIP

House used exclusively for public worship, see Exclusively Used.

The parish of a house of a church was situated near it and used in connection with it for the observance of various religious services usually deemed essential in the support of public worship, which was the primary purpose of its erection. The building subserved all the religious uses for which it was erected and was maintained as a house of public worship so far as the needs and convenience of the church required. Held, that it was a "house of public worship," within Pub. St. 1901, c. 55, § 2, exempting such places from taxation, though it was occasionally used for secular entertainments, such use not interfering with its use for religious purposes, and though a fee was received for such secular use, the statute not contemplating that a building should be exclusively used for public worship to be exempt. St. Paul's Church v. City of Concord, 75 Atl. 531, 532, 75 N. H. 420, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 910, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 350.

HOUSE OF RELIGIOUS WORSHIP

The use of the Bible in the public schools does not make the schoolhouse a "house of religious worship." Hackett v. Brooksville Graded School Dist., 87 S. W. 792, 798, 120 Ky. 608, 69 L. R. A. 592, 117 Am. St. Rep. 599, 9 Ann. Cas. 86.

The property of a corporation organized to secure the maintenance in the city of evangelical preaching for the young and destitute, etc., consisting of a building, valuable parts of which are not used for religious worship and have no relation to a religious use, and parts of which are used in part for worship by a church organization under a lease, or license, or contract, not making the corporation a trustee for the religious organization, is not exempt from taxation, under Rev. Laws, c. 12, § 5, cl. 7, exempting a "house of religious worship." Evangelical Baptist Benevolent & Missionary Soc. v. City of Boston, 90 N. E. 572, 573, 204 Mass. 28.

HOUSE OF USUAL ABODE

See, also, Usual Place of Abode.

The term "house of usual abode," as used in the statute relating to service of process, means a person's customary dwelling place or residence, and presumptively, in the case of a married man, the house of his usual abode is where his wife and family reside. Lorin v. Hicks, 133 N. W. 575, 576, 116 Minn. 179.

In its relation to the question "to whether a summons has been left at the house of his usual abode," the quoted term means one's fixed place of residence for the time being, the place where defendant is actually living at the time, and may be synonymous with "residence." But ordinarily "usual place of abode" is a much more restricted term than "residence" and means the place where the defendant is actually living at the time when service is made. Service at the dwelling house of defendant, which is not described as his usual place of abode, is not sufficient. The purpose of the use of the term in an act relating to the service of process has primary reference to the place where the defendant is usually to be found. Therefore "usual place of abode" means "present place of abode." As defined in this state, the term means the customary or settled place of residence. In the case of a married man, the "house of usual abode" is prima facie the house wherein his wife and family reside. Berryhill v. Sepp, 119

N. W. 404, 405, 106 Minn. 458, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 344 (citing Missouri, K. & T. Trust Co. v. Norris, 63 N. W. 634, 61 Minn. 256; State v. Toland, 15 S. E. 599, 600, 36 S. C. 515; Du Valm v. Johnson, 89 Ark. 182, 192; Walker v. Stevens, 72 N. W. 1038, 52 Neb. 653; Mygatt v. Coe, 44 Atl. 198, 199, 63 N. J. Law, 510; Ser v. Bobst, 8 Mo. 506, 507; Earle v. McVeigh, 91 U. S. 508, 23 L. Ed. 398; Madison County Bank v. Suman's Adm'r, 79 Mo. 527, 530).

HOUSE OF WORSHIP

The erection of a vestry or parish house is not the erection of a "house of worship," within the meaning of a will giving a legacy on condition of an additional sum being raised for the erection of a new house of worship. If a house of public worship was erected containing a vestry within its walls, it would not be contrary to the provisions of the will; but if a fund was raised for the erection of a meetinghouse and vestry which might be separate structures, with no provisions showing what part of the fund was to be used for the meetinghouse and what part for the vestry, the fund as a whole would not be for the erection of a house of worship. Trustees of the Ministerial Fund of the First Parish in Cambridge v. First Parish in Cambridge, 71 N. E. 74, 75, 186 Mass. 85.

HOUSE OFFAL

Under a city ordinance providing that no person shall collect house offal or carry the same through the streets of the city, except the one duly appointed by the sanitary committee, the term "house offal" includes refuse food and swill, though none of it be in a decayed condition. State v. Robb, 60 Atl. 874, 875, 100 Me. 180, 4 Ann. Cas. 275.

HOUSE SERVANT

Workman distinguished, see Workman.

HOUSE SLANT

A "house slant" is merely a "Y" on the sewer pipe and of the same thickness as the pipe. When an ordinance provides for house slants for a sewer pipe of a specified internal diameter, it is necessarily understood, in the absence of any further specifications as to dimensions, as requiring house slants of that thickness which is ordinarily used with sewer pipes of the specified internal diameter. Sheedy v. City of Chicago, 77 N. E. 539-541, 221 Ill. 111.

HOUSE WRECKER

Persons known as "house wreckers" buy buildings and demolish same for the use of the materials. Morris v. Lurie, 103 N. Y. Supp. 213.

HOUSEBREAKING

The offense of "housebreaking," under the statute, making every person who in the daytime shall enter a dwelling house, with intent to steal, guilty of housebreaking is complete when the house is entered with the specific intent to steal, and the actual stealing or attempt to steal property therein is but evidence of such intent, and the allegation in the indictment of ownership of the property in the house is mere surplusage. State v. Simpson, 104 Pac. 244, 82 Nev. 188, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 115.

"Housebote" is the right to a sufficient supply of wood to repair and burn in the house. Anderson v. Cowan, 101 N. W. 92, 93, 125 Iowa, 259, 68 L. R. A. 641, 106 Am. St. Rep. 303.

HOUSEHOLD

See, also, Family.

The words "family" and "household" are often interchangeably used. A family is a collective body of persons living in one house and under one manager. It consists of those who live with the pater familias. Pearre v. Smith, 73 Atl. 141, 142, 110 Md. 531.

The word "family" is of flexible meaning, and its meaning varies as it may arise under the homestead laws, exemption laws, etc., its primary meaning being a collection of persons who live in one house and under one head or management, and in that sense it is frequently said to be synonymous with "household." Webster gives the primary meaning as "persons collectively who live together in a house or under one head or manager; a household including parents, children, and servants, and it may be lodgers or boarders;" but the cases do not generally sustain the inclusion of the latter. To constitute the family relation between persons living together it must be permanent and domestic in character, and not temporary. It embraces a household composed of parents, children, or domestics; in short, every collective body of persons living together within one curtilage subsisting in common and directing their attention to a common object. Robbins v. Bangor Ry. & Electric Co., 62 Atl. 136, 141, 100 Me. 496, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 963 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2673, and cases cited).

Servants in the family are part of "household," within the meaning of the statute as to family expenses chargeable upon the wife's property. Perkins v. Morgan, 85 Pac. 640, 641, 36 Colo. 360.

HOUSEHOLD ARTICLE

See Family Article.

As baggage, see Baggage.

HOUSEHOLD EFFECTS

See Household Furniture and Effects.

The term "household effects," as used by a revenue agent in the statement filed by him of property belonging to a person omitted from taxation, means all the furnishings of one's house. Commonwealth v. Glover, 116 S. W. 769, 774, 132 Ky. 588.

The provision for "household effects used abroad * * * not less than one year," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 504, 30 Stat. 196, includes automobiles. Hillhouse v. United States, 152 Fed. 163, 164, 81 C. C. A. 415.

St. 1909, § 4260, obligates a county revenue agent to cause to be listed for taxation all property omitted by the assessor and other taxing officer, and provides that he shall file a statement of property omitted, and that such statement shall contain "a description and value of the property proposed to be assessed." A revenue agent acting under such statute filed a statement of property belonging to a person named omitted from taxation, and such statement specified "accounts" of a stated value, 200 shares of railroad stock of a specified value in a number of railroads named, 350 shares of foreign industrial stock of a stated value in a number of corporations named, 25 traction bonds of a specified value in a number of railroad companies named, 20 railroads bonds of a stated value of a number of railroads named, 18 industrial bonds of local corporations of a stated value, 28 industrial bonds of a stated value in a number of corporations named, a certain amount of cash on hand, household effects, library, pictures, and jewelry, each of a value specified. Held, that the statement was sufficient as to the cash, household effects, library, pictures, and jewelry, as the "household effects" are universally understood to mean all the furnishings of one's residence, and "library" means such books or works of literature, science, art, or business as one may have in his residence or office, and "pictures" include all of the paintings, drawings, and sketches on the walls of one's residence or office building, and "jewelry" includes the rings, pins, and other ornaments worn by the taxpayer, his wife, and other members of his family dependent upon him and for whose taxes he is responsible, but the statement as to the rest of the property was not sufficiently definite to comply with the requirements of the statute. Commonwealth v. Glover, 116 S. W. 769, 774, 132 Ky. 588.

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE

"Household furniture" has no broader meaning than "household goods," and in the construction of wills and contracts the former phrase has been held to describe articles that are in the house for the common use of the household, or for ornament, and which are not consumed in using. Lamb v. King, 62 Atl. 493, 494, 73 N. H. 400.

Linoleum, which is an article customarily used as a floor covering in dwellings, is, though it is knowingly sold to cover the floor of a store, "household furniture," within the meaning of Gen. St. 1902, § 4864, providing that the requirements that contracts of conditional sales shall be in writing, describing the property and conditions of sale, and be acknowledged and recorded, shall not apply to household furniture. Boston Furniture Co. v. Thoms, 61 Atl. 949, 950, 78 Conn. 273.

The provision for "house or cabinet furniture, of wood, wholly or partly finished, and manufactures of wood," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, par. 208, 30 Stat. 168, is intended to cover all finished manufactured wooden articles, however different they may be in nature or appearance from "house or cabinet furniture"; and wood flour, a completed product, already prepared for use, is therefore not to be excluded under the rule of ejusdem generis. Nairn Linoleum Co. v. United States, 151 Fed. 955, 956.

Piano

An exemption from execution of "household and kitchen furniture" would include a piano. Utz v. Insurance Co. of North America, 122 S. W. 318, 319, 139 Mo. App. 153 (citing Alsop v. Jordan, 6 S. W. 831, 69 Tex. 300, 5 Am. St. Rep. 53).

A piano is "household and kitchen furniture" within the exemption statute, when used as furniture in housekeeping. Where a married man abandoned housekeeping, with a view of leaving his residence, and placed his piano in the salesroom of a music dealer for sale, the piano was not exempt from execution as "household and kitchen furniture." McCoy v. Thompson (Tex.) 138 S. W. 1062.

A piano, used as a means of support by the widow and minor children of a decedent, may be set apart to the widow and minor children, under Code 1896, § 2072, authorizing the setting apart to the widow and minor children of a decedent of "household furniture" necessary for the use and comfort of the family. Phillips v. Phillips, 44 South. 391, 392, 151 Ala. 527, 125 Am. St. Rep. 40, 15 Ann. Cas. 157.

China, linen, and plate

Insurance of $1,300 on "household and kitchen furniture," useful and ornamental," includes a Japanese vase valued at $500, although not specifically named. Utz v. Insurance Co. of North America, 122 S. W. 318, 319, 139 Mo. App. 153 (citing Bowne v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 46 Mo. App. 473).

A "silver card receiver used on hat rack" is "household furniture," within Code 1896, § 2072, authorizing the setting aside to the widow and minor children of a decedent of his "household furniture." Phillips v. Phillips, 44 South. 391, 392, 151 Ala. 527, 125 Am. St. Rep. 40, 15 Ann. Cas. 157 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3364, 3365).

A bequest of "household furniture" includes silverware. Scoville v. Mason, 57 Atl. 114, 115, 76 Conn. 459.

Hotel or restaurant furniture

Plaintiff, who had previously kept a restaurant at the home occupied by himself and wife and rented to lodgers rooms fitted with common household furniture, formed a partnership, and the firm continued the business. All of the rooms in the house, if required, were available for the accommodation of guests or lodgers. Held, that the furniture, having become partnership property for use in running a hotel, ceased to be "household furniture," within Rev. Laws 1902, c. 102, § 53, providing that a mortgage of household furniture on which interest is charged at the rate of 18 per cent. or more per annum made to secure a loan of less than $1,000 shall not be valid unless it states with substantial accuracy the amount of the loan, terms, etc.; and hence a mortgage of such property is valid, even if it fails to set out the actual transaction with substantial accuracy. Colby v. Bissell, 84 N. E. 313, 198 Mass. 315.

Wearing apparel

A bequest of "household furniture" does not include mere garments and articles of clothing. Scoville v. Mason, 57 Atl. 114, 115, 76 Conn. 459.

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE AND EFFECTS

A will disposed of all a testator's real estate, consisting of four separate parcels, and made eight specific bequests or dispositions of personal property. Then followed a clause by which he bequeathed "all the household furniture and effects." A large portion of testator's personal property was not included within the specific bequests. Held, that the words "and effects" were limited by their context to "household effects" and did not convey to the legatee thereof the personal property not specifically disposed of. Gallagher v. McKeague, 103 N. W. 233, 234, 125 Wis. 116, 110 Am. St. Rep. 821.

HOUSEHOLD GOODS

"Household goods" is a wider term than "furniture," including everything about the house that is usually held and enjoyed therewith, and that tends to the comfort and accommodation of the household. Webb v. Downes, 101 N. W. 966, 967, 93 Minn. 457.

Books, paintings, etc.

Under a contract for carriage of "household goods," the carrier is not liable, in the absence of gross negligence, for injury to a valuable oil painting, included in the shipment without the carrier's knowledge, where the carrier had filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission a tariff including a rate for paintings three times the amount of the rate of household goods; the shipper being presumed to know the classification. Stokes v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 132 N. Y. Supp. 428, 429, 74 Misc. Rep. 402.

Piano

Under Pub. St. 1901, p. 62, c. 2, § 2, providing that in the construction of statutes words and phrases shall be construed according to the common and approved usage of language, pianos are "household goods," within the meaning of Pub. St. 1901, p. 443, c. 140, § 23, providing that no lien reserved on personal property sold conditionally, and passing into the hands of the purchaser, "except a lien upon household goods," shall be valid against attaching creditors or subsequent purchasers without notice, unless the seller takes and records a memorandum witnessing the lien, etc. Lamb v. King, 62 Atl. 493, 494, 73 N. H. 400.

Pub. St. 1901, c. 140, § 23, requiring a memorandum of a conditional sale of personalty to be recorded, expressly excepts from its operation "a lien upon household goods created by a lease thereof, containing an option in favor of the lessee to purchase the same at a time specified." Held, that a piano, the subject of a conditional sale, kept for use in a family, is an article of "household goods" within the statute, whether kept for the use of a landlord's family in a hotel or in a private house; the question of whether it is so kept being one of fact. Wood Piano Co. v. Huckins, 78 Atl. 614, 615, 75 N. H. 611.

Clothing

Wearing apparel is not necessarily included within the term "household goods," when the question of good faith or fraud in fixing the value of such goods in a contract for carriage is involved. Larsen v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 110 Pac. 983, 986, 38 Utah, 130.

HOUSEHOLD REMEDIES

The term "household remedies" is synonymous with "family medicines," "domestic remedies," etc., and includes such things as camphor, quinine, paregoric, spirits of turpentine, castor oil, saltpeter, epsom salts, etc., but not a preparation containing sulphuric acid. Lewis v. Brannen, 65 S. E. 189, 190, 6 Ga. App. 419.

HOUSEHOLDER

A juror who owns and controls a room is qualified as a "householder." Mays v. State, 96 S. W. 329, 332, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 165.

As freeholder

"Householders" is not synonymous with "freeholders," as the latter term is used in a constitutional provision that compensation for property taken for public use shall be ascertained by a jury or board of not less than three freeholders. Grossman v. Patton, 85 S. W. 548, 550, 186 Mo. 661.

As head of family

The term "householder," as used in statutes exempting property from execution, has a well-defined meaning, and imports the master or head of a family who reside together and constitute a household. O'Reilly v. Erlanger, 92 N. Y. Supp. 56, 57, 46 Misc. Rep. 278 (citing Chamberlain v. Darrow [N. Y.] 46 Hun, 48, 51).

One keeping house with a hired servant, doing the cooking and housework for him in a house in which he made his home and residence and which he rented from a corporation bearing his name, in which he owned a majority of stock and controlling interest, was a "householder" within the statute, so as to qualify him as a surety on a bond for discharge of an attachment. Goldfield Mohawk Mining Co. v. Frances-Mohawk Mining & Leasing Co., 102 Pac. 963, 965, 31 Nev. 348; Same v. D. Mackenzie & Co., 102 Pac. 967, 31 Nev. 359.

Housekeeper synonyms

The word "housekeeper," as used in Rev. St. 1909, § 6704, is synonymous with "householder," and it was not the intention to grant the exemption to two distinct classes of persons, but the terms "housekeeper" and "head of a family" apply to the same persons, so that a right of homestead cannot attach unless it appear that the person asserting the right then has one or more dependent persons living with him, and hence a widow living alone upon land purchased after the death of her husband, and with no one dependent upon her is not a "housekeeper" entitled to a homestead. Elliott v. Thomas, 148 S. W. 563, 564, 161 Mo. App. 441.

HOUSEKEEPER

See Private Housekeeper.

According to the standard dictionaries, a "housekeeper" is a woman who oversees the work of servants in a house, either as a mistress or as an upper servant. As is said in Edgcomb v. Buckhout, 46 N. E. 991, 146 N. Y. 322, 28 L. R. A. 816: "Generally speaking . . . the term 'housekeeper' has reference to services performed in the taking care of a house in connection with the inmates residing therein; but exactly what special and particular duties are to be regarded as embraced within the term must almost always be decided by the duties which are actually performed under the agreement as made." Schrader v. Beatty, 55 Atl. 958, 206 Pa. 184.

Where a husband, in an action for injuries to his wife, specified that the services of his wife, which he lost owing to her injuries, and which he was obliged to employ others to perform, consisted of the duties of "housekeeper" in their dwelling, which she performed for him and their family, it was error to allow him to prove that she assisted him in his duties as janitor, which consisted of cleaning and lighting the halls and the household duties as well. Keenan v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 61, 63, 118 App. Div. 56.

Householder synonyms

See Householder.

HOUSEWIFE

A "housewife" is the mistress of a family; the wife of a householder; a female manager of domestic affairs. Whether the keeper of a house of ill fame is a housewife, as stated by her in an application for a policy of insurance, is for the jury. Perry v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 106 N. W. 860, 861, 143 Mich. 290 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.).

HOW

Under a charter providing that a city should not be liable for injuries received on its streets or public places, unless the injured person should notify the city in writing "when, where, and how" the injuries occurred, a notice stating that plaintiff slipped and fell on the public highway is defective in failing to state how (i. e., through what defect in the walk) the injuries occurred. Stoors v. City of Denver, 73 Pac. 1094, 19 Colo. App. 159.

HUB-BAND

A "hub-band" is an iron ferrule attached to the ends of a vehicle hub for the protection of the ends, and shielding the nut which holds the wheel on the axle. Higgin Mfg. Co. v. Murdock, 132 Fed. 810, 812, 65 C. C. A. 466.

HULL

See Oat Hulls.

In article 11 of the inland rules (Act June 7, 1897, c. 4, 30 Stat. 98), which requires a vessel 150 feet or more in length when at anchor to carry a light forward "at a height of not less than twenty and not exceeding forty feet above the hull," etc., the word "hull" includes the fore-castle deck. The Europe, 190 Fed. 475, 479, 111 C. C. A. 307.

Under article 11 of the Inland Navigation Rules (Act Aug. 19, 1890, c. 802, 26 Stat. 324), providing that a vessel of 150 feet or upward in length, when at anchor, shall carry a white light forward not less than 20 feet above the hull, where a vessel has a fore-castle reaching far back on her deck and a poop extending far forward, they are to be deemed a part of her hull. The Europe, 175 Fed. 596, 608.

HUMANITARIAN

HUMANITARIAN DOCTRINE

See, also, Discovered Negligence; Discovered Peril; Last Clear Chance.

The foundation of the humanitarian doctrine is the principle that no person has the right knowingly or negligently to injure another, when he knows, or should know if he is reasonably careful, that his fellow is in danger of injury at his hands, and he possesses the means of removing that danger. Ross v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 112 S. W. 9, 12, 132 Mo. App. 472.

If the negligence of both parties co-operate there is usually no liability, except for the "humanitarian or 'last chance' doctrine," which means that, though the injured party may have been negligent in placing himself in a position of peril, yet if defendant, by ordinary care, did see, or could see, him in time to have averted injury, defendant is liable. Matz v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 117 S. W. 584, 591, 217 Mo. 275.

The "humanitarian doctrine" presupposes negligence or contributory negligence on the part of the party invoking the rule, and, in its essence is that, conceding that plaintiff was guilty of negligence, yet if defendant knew of his peril in time to save his life or limb, by ordinary care, then it was his duty to exercise such care, and a failure to so do renders him liable. Hall v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 118 S. W. 56, 66, 219 Mo. 553.

The "humanitarian doctrine" proceeds upon the precepts of humanity and of natural justice, to the end that every person shall exercise ordinary care to preserve another after seeing him in peril or about to be in peril, when such injury may be averted without injury to others. Dey v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 120 S. W. 134, 136, 140 Mo. App. 461.

The "humanitarian doctrine" takes the imperiled person where it finds him and makes one liable for injuring him where he saw, or in the exercise of reasonable care should have seen, the peril and failed to do what he reasonably could to avoid injuring him. Shipley v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 128 S. W. 768, 775, 144 Mo. App. 7.

The "humanitarian doctrine," or last clear chance doctrine, is somewhat of an exception to the general rule of law, by which an injury caused by the joint negligence of the wrongdoer and the person injured is not actionable. Murphy v. Wabash R. Co., 128 S. W. 481, 485, 228 Mo. 56.

Under the humanitarian doctrine, that the negligence of the person injured contributed to place him in peril, is no defense, since the operator of the threatening instrumentality must exercise the care of a reasonably careful person to avoid the accident. Nipper v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 129 S. W. 439, 441, 145 Mo. App. 224.

The "humanitarian doctrine" does not impair the rule that contributory negligence bars a recovery, where such negligence continues to operate as a proximate cause of the injury, but permits a recovery only where, though plaintiff voluntarily imperiled himself, defendant with knowledge of his peril and opportunity to avoid injuring him, negligently or wantonly injured him. Laughlin v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 129 S. W. 1006, 1010, 144 Mo. App. 185.

The "humanitarian doctrine" is bottomed on the theory that plaintiff was at the time of the injury negligent, but that defendant by the exercise of ordinary care could have prevented the injury, but failed to do so. Nivert v. Wabash R. Co., 135 S. W. 33, 36, 232 Mo. 626.

The humanitarian doctrine requires one to use ordinary care to protect another from impending peril, consistent with ordinary care for the safety of himself and those in the conveyance of which the former has charge, whether the peril results from contributory negligence or not. Smith v. Heibel, 137 S. W. 70, 74, 157 Mo. App. 177.

The humanitarian rule takes no account of how the danger was created, but confines itself to the question whether a reasonably careful and prudent man, in the situation of the operator of the threatening instrumentality, would have discovered and averted the danger had he exercised reasonable care. Rush v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 137 S. W. 1029, 1031, 157 Mo. App. 504.

The humanitarian rule which may be invoked against railroads or street railroads for injuries to persons on their tracks applies where, regardless of the cause of the perilous condition of the traveler, the railroad's servant in charge of the engine or car, in the proper performance of duty, could have discovered the danger and averted it, but negligently or wantonly failed to perform that humane duty. Shelton v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 493, 495, 167 Mo. App. 404.

An instruction that if the jury find from the evidence that plaintiff was negligent in attempting to cross the street, yet if they further find that defendant's agent or servant in charge of the car alleged to have inflicted the injury either saw or, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have seen the danger of plaintiff's position in time to have avoided the collision, but failed to exercise care and negligently allowed the car to collide with plaintiff and injure her, then plaintiff is entitled to recover presented what is known as the "humanitarian" or "last chance" doctrine. Hough v. St. Louis Car Co., 123 S. W. 83, 86, 146 Mo. App. 58.

A petition, which alleged that deceased was in the act of crossing defendant's railroad track at a public crossing, and while in the exercise of due care defendant's servants so negligently ran its locomotive over its railroad at the public crossing that deceased was struck and killed, does not state a cause of action under the "humanitarian doctrine"; the constitutive facts of a charge of negligence under that rule being that the injured person was in a situation of peril, and that the operators of the engine or crew had notice of such peril in time, by the exercise of reasonable care, to have averted the injury, and that the injury was the result of their failure to exercise due care. Wilder v. Wabash R. Co., 146 S. W. 837, 839, 164 Mo. App. 114.

Under the "humanitarian or last chance doctrine" it is the duty of a motorman in charge of a running street car to keep a vigilant watch ahead, and where he sees, or by the exercise of due diligence could have seen, the peril of a party to have avoided injuring him, and fails to do so, the company will be liable. Gebhardt v. St. Louis Transit Co., 71 S. W. 448, 450, 97 Mo. App. 373.

HUMBUG

In determining whether or not the word "humbug" was libelous per se, the court said: "The word 'humbug' has become accepted as good English, and has an approved and well-understood meaning, as imposter; deceiver; cheat. Cent. Dict.; Worcester's Dict.; Standard Dict.; Stormonth's Dict.; Imperial Dict.; March's Thesaurus. Writers of pure and elegant English, like Lowell and Whipple, use it without the apology of quotation marks or of italics. In Nolte v. Herter, 65 Ill. App. 430, the appellant uses the word 'humbug' in conversation, and the court say: 'Humbug is an imposition; imposture; deception; and as a verb, signifies to impose upon; to cozen; to swindle—all implying intention to misrepresent by the assertion of what is not the actual condition, or the suppression or concealment of what is.' " McDonald v. Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n, 98 N. Y. Supp. 116, 117, 111 App. Div. 465.

A complaint in an action for libel alleged that plaintiff and defendant were the only hardware dealers in the town, and that plaintiff had been there several years, that defendant published in a newspaper then circulated in and around the town that a certain hardware dealer, but not himself, in the town, had sold a defective stove, representing it to be of fine quality and one of the best on the market, and that the stoves sold by his competitor were of no account, that the purchaser of the stove gave it to the drayman to haul away, and then purchased one of defendant's stoves, which were worth a dozen of plaintiff's, and further alleged that while it might be, as had been said, that the American people liked to be humbugged, and that some dealers still think so, yet the great majority prefer a square deal. Held, that the publication was a distinct charge that plaintiff was guilty of unfair and dishonorable practices, and charged him with deceiving the public in his business transactions; the word "humbug" meaning an imposition under fair pretenses; something contrived to deceive; to impose on; to cozen; to swindle. Ramharter v. Olson, 128 N. W. 806, 808, 26 S. D. 499, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 253.

HUMILIATION

Allegations in a petition, in an action against a sheriff and his deputy, that they wrongfully and unlawfully entered into a house and premises occupied by plaintiff under a lease and dispossessed him, and put his household goods and personal property in the public highway, and so put plaintiff to great trouble and distress, properly authorize a recovery for humiliation and mortification, or any phase of "mental anguish," since the word "distress," being a generic term, includes anguish or suffering, both of mind and body, and since "humiliation" and "mortification" are simply phases of mental anguish. Perkins v. Ogilvie, 146 S. W. 735, 738, 148 Ky. 309.

HUNYADI

The owner of a trade-mark or trade-name in the words "Hunyadi Janos," for a natural bitter water, is not entitled, in the absence of fraud or unfair competition, to enjoin a manufacturer of an artificial bitter water from advertising and labeling the product, "Artificial Hunyadi"—especially since the word "Hunyadi" has become a generic name for mineral waters of a certain type, coming from a more or less extensive district, if not from anywhere in Hungary. Saxlehner v. Wagner, 30 Sup. Ct. 298, 216 U. S. 375, 54 L. Ed. 525.

HURL

A person who throws a missile into a coach in a moving train while standing on a platform of the coach, violates Laws 1900, p. 141, c. 103, making it punishable for a person to "hurl any missile into a moving train." State v. Ray, 89 South. 521, 522, 87 Miss. 183.

HURRY UP

A direction from plaintiff's foreman to "hurry up," as plaintiff was adjusting the gangplank leading from a freight car to the depot platform, which was not square with the car door or flush with the platform, preparatory to trucking freight over it, was not negligence; it merely being an order to work faster, and not implying that plaintiff should not straighten the plank. Silvia v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 89 N. E. 1061, 1062, 203 Mass. 519.

Proc. § 1474, providing that if a homestead, selected by the husband and wife or either during coverture and recorded while both were living, was selected from the community or from the separate property of the one selecting it or joining in its selection, it vests, on the death of the husband or wife, absolutely in the survivor. The words "husband" and "wife," as used in section 1474, mean, respectively, a man who has a wife and a woman who has a husband, and do not mean an unmarried man or woman; and the word "survivor," as therein used, refers to the husband and wife as such, and means that, upon the death of the husband as a husband or the wife as a wife, the homestead shall vest absolutely in the survivor of such marriage relation, so that the survivor must be a surviving spouse, and the surviving individual after the dissolution of the marriage is not within the statute. *Zanone v. HUSBAND'S DOWER

The "husband's dower" is a statutory life estate substituted for the common law tenancy by the curtesy (Acts 1904, p. 261, c. 151) and, in order that this estate shall vest on the death of a wife intestate, it is not necessary that issue shall have been born or that the wife shall have been seised of the property in deed. *Snyder v. HYDRO EXTRACTOR

A "hydro extractor" or whizzer, used for drying knit goods, is a machine consisting of a perforated metal basket, 40 inches in diameter, attached to a shaft so that it will revolve at a rapid rate of speed. Thayer v. Utica Knitting Co., 75 N. E. 577, 578, 188 N. Y. 18.

HYGEIA

The word "Hygeia" is the name of the mythological Goddess Hygeia, the daughter of Esculapius. She was the goddess of health. From her name we derive the noun "hygiene" and the adjectives "hygeian" and "hygienic." It will thus be seen that while the name Hygeia may suggest purity and health, just as the names of other mythological deities suggested their characteristics, such name "Hygeia" has never become an adjective and a descriptive word any more than the adjective "martial" has made the name Mars a descriptive word, and it does not fall within the principle that precludes the exclusive use of words of description as trade-marks. Hygeia Distilled Water Co. v. Consolidated Ice Co., 144 Fed. 139, 141.

The word "Hygeia" is not used in the English language as a word of descriptive or qualifying import. "It is a noun, not an adjective, a name, not an epithet, and accordingly it has been applied, of course but appellatively, to a planetoid that was discovered in 1849. Its association in thought to the concept of health is natural and probable." On the question as to whether the name may be lawfully appropriated as a trade-mark, "Hygeia" is not "hygienic." The two words have not the same meaning. Consolidated

Ice Co. v. Hygela Distilled Water Co., 151 Fed. 10, 11, 80 C. C. A. 506.

HYOSCIN HYDRABROMATE

"Hyoscin hydrabromate" is a chemical salt whose use is solely medicinal, and in its preparation alcohol is necessarily used. Schering v. United States, 119 Fed. 472.

HYPNOTISM

As prescribing remedies for the cure of disease, see Prescribe.

"Hypnotism" is defined to be a name applied to a condition, artificially produced, in which the person hypnotized, apparently asleep, acts in obedience to the will of the operator; and we are told by the authorities upon the science that upon awakening there may be a vivid recollection of all that happened during the apparent sleep." Austin v. Barker, 96 N. Y. Supp. 814, 818, 110 App. Div. 510.

"Hypothecation," when applied to maritime transactions, is perhaps about the same as bottomry or respondentia, though it is usually predicated of a loan by the master on the vessel, freight, or cargo, made in order to raise money for the necessities of the voyage, to secure any debt or engagement without a delivery or possession. The shipowner's lien for the carriage of goods, or for freight money, is dependent upon possession. Such lien is not an "hypothecation" of the cargo which will remain a charge upon the goods after the shipowner has parted with possession. Portland Flouring Mills Co. v. Portland & Asiatic S. S. Co., 145 Fed. 687, 692.

The mortgage of a ship on the stocks, raised and building, to be built and completed afterwards, as security for advances made and to be made, without actual possession or delivery, is not available, by way of "hypothecation," against attaching creditors. Goodenow v. Dunn, 21 Me. 86, 93.

"Hypothecation" is defined as the "privilege to take and sell by judicial process in order to satisfy your demand." The Pleroma, 175 Fed. 639, 640.

HYPOTHESIS

See Reasonable Hypothesis.

HYPOTHETICAL QUESTION

It is a general rule that "hypothetical questions" put to experts should be based upon the facts which the evidence tends to show. The question need not be based upon conceded facts, nor is technical accuracy required in framing the questions. If they are entirely without the support of evidence, they should be excluded. Ordinarily opposing counsel will not be slow in re-examination of the witnesses to correct the hypothesis upon which the question is based, if it be incorrect. In propounding such a question, counsel may assume the facts in accordance with his theory of them. It is not essential that he state the facts as they exist, but the hypothesis should be based on a state of facts which the evidence tends to prove. Under familiar rules of practice, each side has its theory as to what is the true state of facts, and assumes facts, or can prove them, to the satisfaction of the jury, and, so assuming, shapes "hypothetical questions" to experts accordingly. A "hypothetical question," not entirely accurate in its assumptions, and not assuming all the facts which the evidence in the case tends to prove, yet which is a fair résumé of the facts supported by some evidence which plaintiff's counsel evidently considered as favorable to his version of the case, is not objectionable as being an unfair summing up of the evidence or as eliminating important facts supported by the evidence and including facts not so supported. Order of United Commercial Travelers of America v. Barnes, 90 Pac. 293, 295, 75 Kan. 720.

While the question should have for its basis some principle or at least possible theory to be deduced from the evidence in the case, counsel had a right to frame the question to accord with their theory of what the material facts are as shown by that evidence and in so doing may omit facts which from their point of view have no material bearing upon the subject. Where there is evidence in the record of a criminal case of all the facts embodied in a "hypothetical question" asked of a medical expert, an objection that it is not founded on the facts proven by the prosecution is properly overruled, as it is not necessary that the question should embrace all the evidence in the case. People v. James, 90 Pac. 561, 562, 5 Cal. App. 427 (quoting and adopting People v. Hill, 48 Pac. 712, 116 Cal. 586, and citing and adopting 2 Jones, Ev. § 372).

I

A mortgage, though using the pronouns "I" and "my," being signed by both husband and wife, included the wife as well as the husband, though she was not named in the body of the instrument, and was therefore sufficient to cover the grantors' homestead interest in the land. Bray v. Ellison (Ky.) 83 S. W. 96, 97.

While the words "I" and "my" in a mortgage ordinarily refer to the actor or speaker, who expresses himself through the draftsman, the connection in which they are used may sometimes make it doubtful to whom they refer, and they will not be considered to have been so used, where the effect would be to burden the mortgagee with a condition which the mortgagor could not impose. Jones v. Norria, 60 S. E. 714, 715, 147 N. C. 84.

I BEAMS

Certain iron girders used in the construction of buildings are called "I beams." Louisville R. Co. v. Esselman (Ky.) 93 S. W. 50, 51; Detroit United Ry. v. Board of State Tax Com'rs, 98 N. W. 997, 999, 136 Mich. 98.

I BELIEVE

"The words 'I believe' ordinarily indicate that what follows them is merely the opinion of the witness; but this is not always so. They may be words of caution, in which event the evidence is admissible, notwithstanding the statement may be prefaced by these words." A statement of a witness in relation to an act which took place in his presence: "It seems to me that he closed the door behind him, but I cannot say positively that he did close the door; I was so far away"—is not subject to objection on that ground that it is opinionative. *Mimbs v. I WANT HER TO HAVE

The phrase "I want her to have," as used in a will which, after describing a certain person, recited, "I want her to have $3,000 and then I want her to have an equal share with my brothers and sisters," is equivalent to the words "give" or "bequeath." In re Smith's Estate, 94 N. Y. Supp. 90, 92, 46 Misc. Rep. 210.

I WILL

Decedent executed an instrument reciting: "I hereby grant, bargain, sell, convey and warrant" to G. (his wife) "her lifetime the following described property," and at the end of G.'s life "I will" this property" to B. (a daughter) "all of her lifetime, and after her (B.'s) lifetime said described property goes to her children and their heirs and assigns forever." Held, that the instrument, having been executed and acknowledged as a deed, should have been considered as one and not as a will. It was intended to take effect after death, the phrase "I will" not destroying the character of the instrument as a conveyance, and it should be construed as a conveyance to a succession of donees then living, and to the heirs of the body of the remaindermen, as authorized by Code 1892, § 2436. Brinson v. Sandifer, 42 South. 89, 90, 90 Miss. 41.

I WILL SEE YOU PAID

Where plaintiff refused to sell lumber to a contractor until defendant stated to plaintiff, "I will see you paid," it imported a collateral promise to answer for the debt of another. East Baltimore Lumber Co. v. K'Nessett Israel Aushe S'Phard Congregation, 59 Atl. 180, 181, 100 Md. 125.

ICE

ICE CREAM

A provision of a sanitary code adopted by a city board of health that no owner, lessee, or occupant of any restaurant, etc., which shall purchase milk or cream from any person or corporation not having obtained a license as therein provided, shall use, sell, or dispose of any milk, cream, or ice cream without obtaining a license, only requires a person selling ice cream to obtain a license where it is made from milk or cream purchased from an unlicensed person or corporation, and not where the ice cream itself is so purchased, since, while "ice cream" is mostly cream or milk, it is a manufactured article with other ingredients, and is not covered by the term "milk or cream." Syracuse Ice Cream Co. v. City of Cortland, 138 N. Y. Supp. 838, 339, 153 App. Div. 456.

ICHTHYOL

Inasmuch as, technically and commercially, the term "ichthyol" includes no other ichthyol compounds than ichthyol ammonium, the unqualified enumeration of "ichthyol" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 626, 30 Stat. 199, should not, in the absence of words indicating an intention to include such compounds, be held to include ichthyol sodium. Merck & Co. v. United States, 177 Fed. 482, 483.

IDEA

The word "idea" is frequently used as a substitute for the word "intention," especially by careless talkers. Lewis v. Paull, 42 Ala. 136, 144.

IDEM SONANS

The well-understood meaning of the term "idem sonans" is "sounding the same; substantially identical in sound." Cleveland, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Pierce, 72 N. E. 604, 605, 34 Ind. App. 188 (quoting Anderson's Law Dict. p. 520).

Names are said to be "idem sonans" if the attentive ear finds difficulty in distinguishing them when pronounced, or if a long-continued usage, as by corruption or abbreviation, has made them identical in pronunciation. State v. Johnson, 79 Pac. 732, 734, 70 Kan. 861; Graton v. Holliday-Klotz Land & Lumber Co., 87 S. W. 37, 41, 189 Mo. 322 (quoting and adopting rule in Robson v. Thomas, 55 Mo. 582); Title Guaranty & Surety Co. of Scranton, Pa., v. Commonwealth, 133 S. W. 577, 581, 141 Ky. 570 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3380).

The rule of "idem sonans" is that absolute accuracy in spelling names is not required in legal documents or proceedings, but that if a name as spelled in the document, though different from the correct spelling thereof, conveys to the ear when pronounced, according to the commonly accepted methods, a sound practically identical with the sound of the correct name as commonly pronounced, the name as thus given is a sufficient designation of the individual referred to, and no advantage can be taken of a clerical error. Kelly v. Kuhnhausen, 98 Pac. 603, 604, 51 Wash. 193, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1093; Davison v. Bankers' Life Ass'n, 150 S. W. 713, 715, 166 Mo. App. 625 (quoting 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3380).

The foregoing rule also applies where the duty devolves upon the eye instead of the ear to distinguish the names. Kelly v. Kuhnhausen, 98 Pac. 603, 604, 51 Wash. 193, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1093.

No matter how names are spelled, if the attentive ear finds difficulty in distinguishing them when pronounced, or common and long-continued usage has by corruption or abbreviation made them identical in pronunciation, they are "idem sonans." Macomber v. Kinney, 128 N. W. 1001, 1005, 114 Minn. 146; Maier v. Brock, 120 S. W. 1167, 1172, 222 Mo. 74, 133 Am. St. Rep. 513, 17 Ann. Cas. 673.

Where two names are spelled differently, but sound alike in their pronunciation, they are regarded as the same, under the doctrine of "idem sonans." Bloomer v. Cristler, 123 Pac. 966, 967, 22 Colo. App. 238.

Unquestionably the doctrine of "idem sonans" may be invoked to cure immaterial variations in the spelling of a name. But the doctrine is inapplicable unless the combination of letters and syllables produce the same sound as the true name. Steinman v. Jesse, 62 S. E. 275, 276, 277, 106 Va. 567.

Whether one name is "idem sonans" with another depends upon pronunciation and not on spelling, and depends less on rule than on usage. The term does not necessarily mean that the two names to which it is applied are pronounced precisely alike but that, when one of them is uttered, it may readily be taken for the other. Roland v. State, 56 S. E. 412, 413, 127 Ga. 401 (citing People v. Flick, 26 Pac. 759, 89 Cal. 144; Chapman v. State, 18 Ga. 736; Jeffries v. Bartlett, 75 Ga. 230; Biggers v. State, 34 S. E. 210, 109 Ga. 105; Washington v. State, 39 S. E. 298, 113 Ga. 698; Veal v. State, 42 S. E. 705, 116 Ga. 589).

IDENTICAL

Where a contract for the sale of onion seed contained a provision that if the seller found that, if "identical" contracts did not exist between the buyer and certain other growers, the contract should become void, and the court found that contracts substantially identical with the contract in question did exist between buyer and others mentioned, the contract was not void notwithstanding verbal conditions in the minor details. "The finding of the court that the other contracts of Braslan were substantially identical with that of the defendants is equivalent to a finding that they were identical in all matters of substance. The meaning of the word 'identical' as here used is to be determined by the context and by the apparent purpose for which it is used. Manifestly it was not the intention of the parties that those other contracts should be identical in date, or in the names of the parties, or in the amount or description of the seed contracted for, but identical merely in matters pertaining to the purpose of the contract and in the terms upon which it was entered into." Bernard v. Sloan, 84 Pac. 232-235, 2 Cal. App. 737.

Where a brokers' association adopted a new constitution in a new name, elected new officers, changed the amount of dues, and transferred the assets of the old to the new association, the two associations were not "identical," and hence members of the old association were not ipso facto members of the new. Konta v. St. Louis Stock Exch., 87 S. W. 969, 972, 189 Mo. 28.

IDENTIFICATION

See Certificate of Identification.

As selection, see Select—Selection.

Imputable negligence is sometimes called "identification" from analogy to the Roman law. Duval v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 46 S. E. 750, 751, 184 N. C. 331, 85 L. R. A. 722, 101 Am. St. Rep. 830.

"Identification" is almost always a matter of opinion or belief. Germinder v. Machinery Mut. Ins. Ass'n, 94 N. W. 1108, 1109, 120 Iowa, 614.

IDENTIFY

A railroad engine which set out a fire near the right of way is "identified" when it is shown to have been the engine which probably caused the fire; it not being necessary that the engine should be known by its number, size, or shape from all other engines, since the identification is not to distinguish it from other engines generally but to point it out as the engine that caused the injury. Shelly v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 60 Atl. 581, 582, 211 Pa. 160.

Where the stenographer who took the testimony of a witness, since deceased, was also dead at the time the testimony was sought to be used, and no one could be found who could read the stenographer's notes or testify to the correctness either of the notes or to the transcript or to the fact that the transcript embodied the testimony of the witness given at the former trial, it was not "identified," as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 3146, and was inadmissible. Pew v. Johnson, 88 Pac. 770, 772, 35 Mont. 173, 119 Am. St. Rep. 852.

IDENTITY

"Identity" means the condition of being the same with something described, claimed, or asserted. City of St. Louis v. Williams, 139 S. W. 340, 344, 235 Mo. 508 (dissenting opinion by Valliant, J., quoting and adopting definition in Webst. Dict.).

Of association or organization

The word "identity," when applied to associations or organizations formed by agreements between individuals, means the distinctive thing or entity, dependent on the relations formed and which has only a legal existence; and the legal creation, while the result of a compact in some form among the contracting parties, has an existence distinct from the individuals composing it. Clark v. Brown (Tex.) 108 S. W. 421, 439.

Of name

See Idem Sonans.

In order to apply the evidentiary rule that "identity of names" is prima facie evidence of identity of persons, the names must be in fact identical, and this identity must extend to the Christian names; mere identity of initials not being sufficient. A marriage certificate showing that George W. Bowman, of Haleystown, Md., then 25 years of age, was married to Catherine McGranagan, of East Harrisburg, Pa., did not prove that such persons were identical with G. Walter Bowman, of Hagerstown, Md., who at that time was 27 years of age, and Catherine Bowman, née McGranagan, who then actually lived in Hagerstown. Bowman v. Little, 61 Atl. 223, 226, 101 Md. 273.

Of patent

Formal "identity" of claims is not necessary to constitute "identity" of a United States and a foreign patent, within the purview of Rev. St. § 4887, providing that no person otherwise entitled shall be deprived from receiving a patent for his invention or discovery by reason of its having been first patented by the inventor or his representatives in a foreign country, unless the application for the foreign patent was filed more than seven months prior to the filing of the application in this country, in which case no patent shall be granted in this country, but substantial identity of the invention as governed by the claims is sufficient. United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Duplessis Shoe Machinery Co., 148 Fed. 31, 34.

Of time

When there is no date affixed to a guaranty, so that it is left uncertain whether it was written after the instrument guaranteed was executed and delivered, parol proof may be admitted to show "identity of time"; that is to say, that the guaranty was written and signed at the time of the execution and delivery of the note. Klopsterman v. United Electric & Power Co., 60 Atl. 251, 252, 101 Md. 29.

IDIOT—IDIOCY

An "idiot" or natural fool is one that hath no understanding of his nativity, and therefore is by law presumed never likely to obtain any. A man is not an "idiot" if he have any glimmering of reason, so that he can tell his parents, his age, or the like common matters. An "idiot" is a natural fool or fool from his birth; a human being in form, but destitute of reason or the ordinary intellectual powers of a man; a foolish person; one unwise. An "idiot" is one having no power of mind whatever. "Idiocy" is that condition of mind in which the reflective, or all, or a part of the affected powers are either wanting or manifested to the least possible extent. "Idiocy" is that condition in which a human creature has never had from birth any, or the least, glimmering of reason, and is utterly destitute of all intellectual faculties in which man in general is so eminently and peculiarly distinguished. Hauber v. Leibold, 107 N. W. 1042, 1044, 76 Neb. 706 (citing In re Owings, 1 Bland [Md.] 870, 17 Am. Dec. 311; Webster's Dict.; Bicknell v. Spear, 77 N. Y. Supp. 920, 38 Misc. Rep. 389; Bouv. Dict.; quoting and adopting definition of Blackstone, cited in Clark v. Robinson, 88 Ill. 498, 502).

In a prosecution for unlawfully having carnal knowledge with an idiot, the court instructed that an idiot was "a natural fool; a fool from birth; a human being in form but destitute of reason from birth and of the ordinary intellectual power of man," as the word "fool" is defined by Webster to be "one destitute of reason or of the common powers of understanding; an idiot; a natural; a person deficient in intellect; one who acts absurdly or pursues a course contrary to the dictates of wisdom, one without judgment; a simpleton; a dolt." Held, that while the words "a natural fool," "a fool from birth" might well have been omitted, they did not prejudice accused, and the instruction as a whole clearly defined the term "idiot," though it might be more aptly defined as one who has been from birth or infancy deficient in mental capacity, and destitute of the ordinary intellectual powers. Sandefur v. Commonwealth, 137 S. W. 504, 505, 143 Ky. 655.

Imbecility distinguished

"Imbecility" has been used to denote different grades of mental weakness, but as used in the Code (Civ. Code 1895, §§ 3267, 3268), in respect to testamentary incapacity, it means a complete or total imbecility, with which is being contrasted weakness of intellect less than that. The difference between "imbecility," as thus used, and "idiocy" is generally said to be that the latter is congenital, while the former arises from subsequently causes, such as old age, disease, or accident. Slaughter v. Heath, 57 S. E. 69, 73, 127 Ga. 747, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1.

As insane person

See Insane—Insanity.

IDLE

See Loiter, Loaf, and Idle.

The word "idle," used in a fire policy covering a manufacturing plant, refers to the stopping of the machinery and mechanism in general by which the manufacturer is affected. Brehm Lumber Co. v. Svea Ins. Co., 79 Pac. 34, 35, 38 Wash. 520, 68 L. R. A. 109.

IDLE AND DISORDERLY

The neglect by a married woman of her duties as a wife, whether she is supported by her husband or by some other person, may constitute criminal idleness, as well as her neglect of the duty of earning her own living. A defendant may be convicted of being an "idle and disorderly" person, under Pub. St. c. 207, § 29, including as such "those persons who neglect all lawful business, and habitually misspend their time by frequenting houses of ill fame, gaming houses, or tippling shops," though she was supported by her husband or some other person. Commonwealth v. Tay, 48 N. E. 1066, 1067, 170 Mass. 192.

IDLE AND INOPERATIVE

Certain mining property, consisting of a quartzmill, hoist building, bunkhouse, assay office, and other buildings necessary and constituting a part of the entire system, were insured against fire. The policies specified specific amounts upon the mill and contents, and upon the other buildings and their contents, and contained the following warranties: "Warranted by the assured that at all times when the property herein described shall be 'idle or inoperative,' a constant day and night watchman shall be kept on duty, provided that, if such property be idle or shut down for more than 30 days at any one time, notice must be given to this company and permission to remain idle for such time must be indorsed hereon, or this policy shall immediately cease and determine." "This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void if a building herein described, whether intended for occupancy by the owner or tenant, be or become vacant or unoccupied and so remain for ten days." Held: (1) The property described in the policies referred to and included the entire system, and not the particular property specified as the "mill," which, under the evidence, was not shut down and "idle" within the meaning of the warranties. Central Montana Mines Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 99 N. W. 1120, 1122, 92 Minn. 223.

A fire policy on a sawmill and electric light plant, requiring that at all times when the property remained "idle or inoperative" a constant day and night watchman should be kept on duty, and that, if the property was idle or "shut down" for more than 30 days at a time, permission should be obtained and indorsed on the policy. Held, that the words "idle or inoperative" should be construed as synonymous with "shut down," to mean a cessation of operation from the ordinary running of the plant, and not merely the usual shutting down for the night, or over Sunday, or on a holiday; and hence the policy was not broken by the insured's failure to keep a watchman on duty while the plant was temporarily shut down over Sunday.

Tillamook Lumbering Co. v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 175 Fed. 508, 510.

IDLER

An "idler" is a loose pulley on which a power belt may operate when not used to drive the machine for which it is provided. Owensboro Wagon Co. v. Poling (Ky.) 107 S. W. 264, 265; McCreery v. Union Roofing & Mfg. Co., 119 N. W. 738, 739, 143 Iowa, 303.

IF

Under a will directing that testator's interest in certain property should be divided between two persons named, with the provision that if either should die his share should go to the one remaining, if both, to E. or his mother, if living, and then to E., the first two persons named on surviving the testator took a fee, the contingency of their death being referable to the time of testator's death, as she knew the devisees must die at some time, and when she used the word "if" she must have referred to some definite time or occurrence. Holmes v. Stanhope, 66 Atl. 146, 147, 217 Pa. 68.

Condition imported

"The word 'if,' in legal as in ordinary phraseology, imports a condition." In re Alexander's Estate, 85 Pac. 308, 309, 149 Cal. 146, 9 Ann. Cas. 1141.

The word "if" is commonly used to express a condition in the case of a conditional limitation. Matlock v. Lock, 73 N. E. 171, 178, 88 Ind. App. 281.

As when

The word "if" in a will may be construed to mean "when" to advance the apparent intention of the testator; and words are not construed as importing a condition if fairly capable of another interpretation, particularly where a construction of the language as importing a condition precedent will defeat the plain intention of the testator. Hyde v. Rainey, 82 Atl. 781, 784, 233 Pa. 540, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 726.

Where synonymous

IF ABLE

The phrase "if able," in Rev. St. c. 18, § 51, providing that, when any person is affected with any disease or sickness dangerous to the public health, the local board of health may remove him to a separate house and there care for him at his charge, if able, relates to the pecuniary ability of the party at the time the expenses were incurred. Inhabitants of Greenville v. Beauto, 58 Atl. 1026, 1027, 99 Me. 214.

IF ANY

Where the court expressly directs the jury to take into consideration the physical pain and mental anguish, "if any," in their determination of the damages, the words quoted are to be read and implied in all parts of the instruction. Wells v. Missouri-Edison Electric Co., 84 S. W. 204, 207, 108 Mo. App. 607.

The words "if any," as used in Pub. Acts 1903, p. 338, § 50, authorizing creditors and stockholders of an insolvent corporation to apply to the court for the appointment of a receiver, and empowering the court, on its being satisfied from the affidavits, and after such notice to the corporation, if any, as the court may prescribe, to proceed to hear the proof which may be offered by the parties, and if upon such hearing it appears, etc., it may issue an injunction to appoint a receiver, may have reference to those cases of great emergency when it is necessary to appoint a receiver without notice in order to preserve the property from destruction, but such words do not have the effect to dispense with notice in any other cases than those excepted by prior decisions. Ensley Development Co. v. Powell, 40 South. 137, 141, 147 Ala. 300.

IF BY LAW SUCH RECORDING OR REGISTERING IS REQUIRED

The words "if by law such recording or registering is required," in the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, defining a preference, and providing that the four months' period within which a transfer of property of the character defined shall constitute a preference shall not expire until four months after the date of the recording or registering of the transfer, if by law such recording or registering is required, must mean the same as they would if the words "to make the transfer valid as against the person executing it," or "to make the transfer valid as against the general creditors of the person executing it," were added after the word "required." The word "required" does not mean the same as "permitted" or the same as the words "required in any case or for any purpose." In re Hunt, 139 Fed. 238, 286.

IF DESIRED BY CREDITORS

The words "if desired by the creditors thereof," in a will by a member of a firm giving his property to trustees to use in securing extension or payment of his liabilities as member of the firm or as indorser, providing that such liabilities are intended to be chargeable on the trust estate for the full amount of the obligations of the firm, if desired by the creditors, means if the creditors thereof signify such desire by the presentation of their claims to the trustees. Smith v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. (R. L.) 67 Atl. 795, 796.

IF ESTABLISHED

The words "if established," in an instruction that it is contended by the defendant here that at the time of the commission of the homicide he was at a place other than the scene thereof, and consequently that it was impossible that he should have committed the same, this particular contention constitutes and is termed in law an alibi and, if established, is a perfect refutation of any crime charged, did not make the instruction insufficient as in effect telling the jury that it rested with the defendant to prove that contention by a preponderance of the evidence, but the words should be construed to mean, as they were manifestly, when read by the light of the other instructions, so intended, that, if the proof in favor of the contention of alibi was of that degree that it would create a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt, then such alibi would be established and the accused entitled to an acquittal. People v. Mar Gin Sule, 103 Pac. 951, 958, 11 Cal. App. 42.

IF FOR ANY REASON

The words "if for any reason" are general. According to Lord Bacon, "all words, whether they be in deeds or statutes, or otherwise, if they be general and not express and precise, shall be restrained unto the fitness of the matter and person." Where plaintiff subscribed money for reorganization of a corporation in consideration that he should be given the position of business manager, and should render competent and efficient services, and, if for any reason he should not be given such position, the other parties would purchase his stock, the words "any reason" mean any reason other than the plaintiff's failure to render competent and efficient service. Hall v. Hardaker, 55 South. 977, 979, 980, 61 Fla. 267.

IF HIS ADDRESS IS KNOWN

The expression, "if his address is known," in Rev. St. 1899, § 10571, providing for a warehouseman giving notice by mail to the owner of goods stored, if his address is known, of sale of the goods for storage, means if his address is known or could be ascertained by reasonable inquiry. Ward v. Moor Transfer & Storage Co., 95 S. W. 964, 965, 119 Mo. App. 83.

IF IN ANY CASE

The claim of one whose title under a Mexican land grant is perfect and complete, and who is therefore not bound under the act of March 3, 1891, to apply to the court of private land claims for confirmation, is not cut down to the extent that the land has been patented by the United States to third parties, because he appeared and prayed confirmation in a suit brought against him by the United States under the authority of section 8 of that act, to remove the government's doubt as to title or boundaries, on the theory that the language of section 14, giving that effect to such patents "if in any case" it shall appear that the lands or any part thereof, decreed to any claimant under the act, shall have been sold by the United States, applies not only to the proceeding brought by the claimant himself for confirmation, but also to the proceeding on behalf of the government, in which the court is to determine the matter, subject to all lawful rights adverse to the claimant or possessor, and as between such claimant and possessor and any other claimant or possessor, and subject in this respect to all the applicable statutory provisions. Richardson v. Ainsa, 31 Sup. Ct. 23, 24, 218 U. S. 289, 54 L. Ed. 1044.

IF IT APPEARS

The phrase "if it appears," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2623, providing that if it appears to the surrogate that the will was duly executed, and that the testator at the time of executing it was in all respects competent and not under restraint, it must be admitted to probate, is equivalent to a requirement that the fact of competency must be established by sufficient evidence. In re Goodwin's Will, 88 N. Y. Supp. 734, 95 App. Div. 183.

"Section 2623 of the Code of Civil Procedure expressly provides that, 'if it appears to the surrogate' that the will was duly executed and that the testator at the time of executing it was, in all respects, competent to make a will and not under restraint," then it must be admitted to probate. "The phrase 'if it appears to the surrogate,' as used in this section, implies that there must be some evidence given tending to show that the person who made the will was competent to make it, and at the time of its execution not under restraint. Evidence is the only way by which a fact can be made 'to appear' to one acting in a judicial capacity." In re Schreiber's Will, 98 N. Y. Supp. 483, 484, 112 App. Div. 495.

IF NEEDED

In subscribing for corporate stock, defendant agreed to pay the sum in certain installments, beginning on the call of the board of directors, and a specified amount every 60 days thereafter, "if needed," until the whole amount was paid. The prospectus which was made a part of the contract recited that "$1 per share is to be paid at the time of subscribing, $1 per share at the call of the board of directors, and $1 per share every 60 days thereafter, until by sale of the lots of the company such payment should be declared unnecessary by the board of directors." Held, that the words "if needed" did not render the time for payments indefinite. Williams v. Matthews, 48 S. E. 861, 862, 103 Va. 180.

IF NO AGREEMENT IS REACHED

The words "if no such agreement is reached," in Laws 1901, c. 406, § 1436, providing for condemnation of real estate if no such agreement with the owners thereof is reached, implies only the absence of agreement, and an attempt to acquire the property by purchase is unnecessary. In re City of New York, 91 N. Y. Supp. 987, 992, 45 Misc. Rep. 184.

IF NONE

The words "if none," as applied to a failure of issue, mean an indefinite failure of issue; and so where testator, dying in 1883, devises a farm to his son W. and his heirs, and "if W. has no heir" to F. or next nearest kin, the quoted expression is equivalent to "if W. shall die without issue," and under the rules of construction existing before Act July 9, 1897, imports a general and indefinite failure of issue, so that W., the first taker, will take an estate in fee simple. Horton v. McCall, 82 Atl. 472, 238 Pa. 405.

IF POSSIBLE

The qualifying phrase "if possible," in Gen. St. §§ 471, 472, declaring it unlawful for any president, director, etc., or other officer of any banking institution to receive deposits, with knowledge that the bank is insolvent, and making it the duty of every such officer, "if possible," to know the condition of the bank, has application to the discovery of wrong conditions by reasonable examination, and does not serve to excuse the want of all examination by a competent director. In short, the requirement of the statute is that the examination must be made, and must be of such a character as would result in a knowledge of the condition of the bank if such knowledge could possibly, within the range of reasonable frequency and thoroughness, be obtained. Forbes v. Mohr, 76 Pac. 827, 829, 69 Kan. 842.

The lexical meaning of the word "possible" is "capable of being done; not contrary to the nature of things"; and the condition of a contract providing that timber should be cut the first winter, "if possible," as expressed in the words "if possible," is to be interpreted with reference to the thing to be done, the cutting and removing of the trees as timber. Brown v. Bishop, 74 Atl. 724, 729, 105 Me. 272.

IF REASONABLE

The words "if reasonable ship," as used in a telegram to a buyer of cattle, reading, "If reasonable ship tomorrow four to six loads marketers," meant that the person addressed was not to buy unless the price was in his judgment reasonable. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. N. Lehman & Bro., 67 Atl. 241, 242, 106 Md. 318, 14 Ann. Cas. 736.

IF RESIDING IN THE COUNTY

The words "If residing in the county," as used in Civ. Code Prac. § 53, providing that, "If defendant be of unsound mind the summons must be served on him and on one of the following named persons, if residing in the county, viz.: * * *"—refer to the county where defendant is when served. Bayne v. Stratton, 115 S. W. 728, 730, 131 Ky. 494.

IF SATISFIED

Domestic Relations Law, Laws 1896, p. 227, c. 272, § 63, provides that "if satisfied" that the moral and temporal interest of the child will be promoted thereby, the judge or surrogate must make an order allowing and confirming an adoption, reciting the reasons therefor, etc. Held, that the words "if satisfied," at the beginning of the section, constituted a clear grant of discretionary power. In re Ward's Estate, 112 N. Y. Supp. 282, 284, 59 Misc. Rep. 328.

IF SHE REMAINS UNMARRIED

Under a statute providing that the words in a will referring to death or survivorship relate to the time of testator's death, unless possession is actually postponed, when they must be referred to the time of possession, a provision in a will providing that testator's child, "if she remains unmarried," should have all that belonged to testator refers to the date of testator's death. In re Alexander's Estate, 85 Pac. 308, 309, 149 Cal. 148, 9 Ann. Cas. 1141.

IF SURVIVING

The words "if surviving," relating to the beneficiary in a life insurance policy, did not change the nature or character of the interest of the beneficiary as long as the beneficiary lived, but only affected the question of who was entitled to the money in case the beneficiary died before the assured. Where a particular person is named in a policy, without any such or similar words of qualification, the interest of the beneficiary is a vested interest; and this being so, if the beneficiary dies before the assured, that vested interest passes to the legal representatives of the owner of such vested interest, and the interest is not divested or impaired by reason of the death of the beneficiary. Where a life policy provided that it was to be paid, upon the death of the insured, to his daughter, "if surviving," if not, to his legal representatives, the daughter had a vested interest upon the issuance of the policy, liable to be defeated by the happening of a condition subsequent; and the legal representatives had a contingent interest, depending upon the divestiture of the daughter's vested interest, which they were required to prove before they were entitled to the proceeds of the policy. United States Casualty Co. v. Kacer, 69 S. W. 370, 373, 169 Mo. 301, 58 L. R. A. 436, 92 Am. St. Rep. 641 (citing Cent. Dig. p. 2391, § 1470 et seq.).

IF THEN LIVING

See Then Living.

IF TITLE IS TAKEN

Defendant then not having title to certain real estate contracted with a broker that if he sold the same, the broker should be entitled to receive $150 commission, "if title is taken." Held, that the phrase quoted should be held as a matter of law to refer to the taking of title by the purchaser obtained by the broker and not to the taking of title by defendants from the person from whom they were to derive title. Thiel v. Schonzeit, 93 N. Y. Supp. 883, 884, 104 App. Div. 151.

IF YOU FIND

Instructions are predicated upon the supposition that the jury finds certain facts to be proved or disproved. To accomplish the purpose of an instruction, the formal words "if you shall believe from the evidence" or "if you shall find from the evidence" and the like are employed in written instructions by trial courts to direct and convey to the minds of the jury that they are to found their findings on the particular evidence of the case, and, to require them to directly regard the testimony for such purposes, the use of the term "if you so find" in an instruction that "if you so find that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence," etc., was not objectionable as tending to lead the jury to believe that in the court's opinion the evidence established the existence of certain facts or the relative weight and value of the evidence upon any issue. The expression is a formal use of words obviously intended and meaning to direct and require the attention of the jury to the evidence tending to prove or disprove the particular facts. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Cleland, 110 S. W. 122, 125, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 499.

IF WHEN

The words "if when," in N. Y. Code Cr. Proc. § 143, relating to limitations and providing that, "if when" a crime is committed the defendant is out of the state, an indictment may be found within the term therein limited, etc., show that the paragraph is a dependent sentence, depending upon something that has preceded it to determine its meaning, and is to be construed with section 142, providing terms of limitation. People v. Sewell, 107 N. Y. Supp. 882, 884, 56 Misc. Rep. 250.

IGNORANCE

"Ignorance" is lack of knowledge. Scott v. Ford, 80 Pac. 899, 900, 45 Or. 531, 68 L. R. A. 469 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

IGNORANCE OF FACT

"Ignorance of fact" is the want of knowledge of the fact in question. Ignorance of fact must be excusable; that is, it must not arise from the intentional neglect of the party to investigate them. An error of fact takes place either when some fact which really exists is unknown, or some fact is supposed to exist which really does not exist.

This has been denominated "ignorantia facti," thus indicating, in practical effect at least, that an error of fact and an ignorantia facti are substantially one and the same thing. Scott v. Ford, 80 Pac. 899, 900, 45 Or. 531, 68 L. R. A. 469 (quoting and adopting Bouv. Law Dict.; Mowatt v. Wright [N. Y.] 1 Wend. 355, 360, 19 Am. Dec. 508; Hurd v. Hall, 12 Wis. 135, 139).

IGNORANCE OF LAW

See, also, Knowledge of the Law.

The maxim, "Ignorantia juris neminem excusat," does not apply to a matter of law arising on the doubtful construction of a grant. New York & Cleveland Gas Coal Co. v. Graham, 75 Atl. 657, 660, 226 Pa. 348.

"It is a common maxim, familiar to all minds, that 'ignorance of the law' will not excuse any person, either civilly or criminally." Barlow v. United States, 7 Pet. 404, 411, 8 L. Ed. 728.

The maxim "ignorance of the law excuses no one" has not been applied in Kentucky with the rigor that it has been applied elsewhere, and the doctrine has never been carried further than that where one pays money under a mistake as to his legal liability therefor, which in law, honor, or conscience ought not to be retained, it ought to be recovered back. A widow who is given anything by her husband's will must renounce it within one year from probate unless the time be extended by the chancellor, or she will be deemed to have accepted its provisions and precluded from claiming her dotal or distributive share of the estate, though she may have been ignorant of her rights. Logsdon v. Haney (Ky.) 74 S. W. 1073.

"Ignorantia legis neminem excusat" is a rule of necessity and is limited in its scope by the reason of it. Such reason is that otherwise mere ignorance in fact of the law would furnish immunity from punishment for violation of the Criminal Code and immunity from liability for actual loss for violations of personal and property rights. Topolewski v. Plankinton Packing Co., 126 N. W. 554, 561, 143 Wis. 52.

"It would be impossible to administer the law if ignorance of its provisions were a defense thereto. There are cases, undoubtedly, where ignorance of the law, united with fraudulent conduct on the part of others, or mistakes of fact relating thereto, will be regarded as a defense, but there must be some element, other than a mere mistake of law, which will afford an excuse. In addition there ought to be no negligence in attempting to discover the facts." Utermehle v. Norment, 25 Sup. Ct. 291, 197 U. S. 40, 55, 49 L. Ed. 655, 3 Ann. Cas. 520.

"Ignorance of a fact may sometimes be taken as evidence of a want of criminal intent, but not ignorance of the law." Rey- nolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 167, 25 L. Ed. 244.

IGNORANT

In law, the name of a person consists of one given name and one surname; the two, using the given name first and the surname last, constituting such person's legal name; and to be ignorant of either the given or surname is to be ignorant of the person's name within Code Civ. Proc. § 148, providing that when plaintiff shall be ignorant of the name of a defendant, such defendant may be designated in any pleading or proceeding by any name and description, and that, when his true name is discovered, the pleading or proceeding may be amended accordingly, and that plaintiff must state in the verification of his petition that he could not discover the true name, and the summons must contain the words "real name unknown" and a copy thereof be personally served upon defendant. McNamara v. Gunderson, 181 N. W. 183, 184, 89 Neb. 112.

ILLEGAL—ILLEGALLY

Where the law prescribes proceedings to be had by an officer or tribunal in cases pending before them, the omission of such proceedings is to act "illegally," or if the tribunal, when determining matters before it which are within its jurisdiction, proceeds in a manner contrary to law, it acts "illegally," but, if a discretion is conferred on the tribunal, its exercise cannot be illegal, nor, if it is clothed with authority to decide on facts submitted to it, can its decision be illegal, whatever it may be, if the subject-matter and the parties are within its jurisdiction. Iowa Loan & Trust Co. v. District Court in and for Polk County, 127 N. W. 1114, 1116, 149 Iowa, 86.

If a tribunal, when determining matters within its jurisdiction, proceeds contrary to law, it acts "illegally," within Code, § 4154, so that certiorari will lie; but if a discretion is conferred upon the inferior tribunal, its exercise cannot be illegal. Finn v. Winneshek Dist. Court, 123 N. W. 1066, 1068, 145 Iowa, 157.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3397, empowering any court of competent jurisdiction to adjudge a local option election to be void when it is made to appear from the evidence that the election was "illegally or fraudulently conducted," an election was "illegally," though not "fraudulently," conducted where a sufficient number of merely illegal votes were cast to affect the result. Whaley v. Thomason, 93 S. W. 212, 214, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 405.

ILLEGAL ASSESSMENT

The "illegal assessments" for which a party has a remedy by petition under the provisions of section 1542, Rev. St., are assessments wherein, independently of the exercise of a discretion as to value, there appears error in matter of law, the remedy given by the statute does not extend to individual assessments made by a tax assessor where the alleged illegality is confined entirely to, or results solely in an excessive valuation of the property, whether such excessive valuation resulted from an erroneous exercise of judgment as to value or from the adoption of an erroneous principle in placing value. Jackson County v. Thornton, 33 South. 291, 292, 44 Fla. 610 (citing Shear v. Commissioners, 14 Fla. 146).

ILLEGAL COMBINATION IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE

A resolution of the New York Stock Exchange, a voluntary association organized to furnish facilities to its members in buying and selling stocks and bonds for others on commission, which prohibits any member from transacting any business with or for any member of a rival exchange, not adopted through any bad motives, but to protect its own interests, is not an "illegal combination in restraint of trade," in violation of Laws 1899, p. 1514, c. 690. Helm v. New York Stock Exch., 118 N. Y. Supp. 591, 593, 64 Misc. Rep. 529.

ILLEGAL CONTRACT

Where a contract under which a municipality obtains property is not only void, but is prohibited as bad in itself, it is illegal, being an agreement with an unlawful object, the property cannot be recovered back, as in case of a mere void contract; but a contract, made by the town council of Ft. Deposit for the purchase of property for about $4,000, while void for want of ratification by the electors, under Ft. Deposit Charter (Acts 1890-91, pp. 594, 598; Acts 1896-97, pp. 972-974, 1265-1267), providing that no contract for the purchase of real or personal property above the amount of $1,000 shall be valid without ratification of the electors, is not illegal, and a seller may in appropriate proceedings recover back his property. General Electric Co. v. Town of Ft. Deposit, 56 South. 802, 804, 174 Ala. 179.

ILLEGAL FEE

The term "illegal fees," as used in a statute providing for the punishment of an officer charging and collecting illegal fees, is not limited to fees obtained from any specific source or sources, nor that are charged and collected by an officer who is authorized by law to collect fees for specific services, but includes also illegal fees collected from the state, county, or municipality by a public officer for private gain, as well as those collected from a private individual. Skeen v. Craig, 86 Pac. 487, 491, 81 Utah, 20.

ILLEGAL OFFICIAL ACT

Any illegal official act, see Any.

ILLEGAL VOTE

The phrase "illegal votes," in an action to contest an election, alleging generally that "illegal votes" were cast and counted, does not sufficiently show why the votes cast were illegal, as to whether they were voted by persons who were not residents or by persons who had theretofore voted at the same election, and amounts only to a conclusion of law, and the pleader should state the facts from which, if true, the court can say and find that the votes were illegal in law. Robertson v. Board of Com'rs of Grant County, 79 Pac. 97, 99, 14 Okl. 407.

The term "illegal votes," as used in Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1111, subd. 4, authorizing an election contest on account of illegal votes, clearly includes votes cast by persons not privileged to vote and votes not entitled to be counted because not cast in the manner provided by law, and it is equally clear that a vote is not illegal because of the commission by the candidate or the election officers of any impropriety or offense, without the participation of the voter. Bush v. Head, 97 Pac. 512, 514, 154 Cal. 277.

ILLEGALITY

Illegality is predicable of radical defects only, and signifies that which is contrary to the principles of the law, as distinguished from mere rules of procedure. It denotes complete defects in the proceedings. State v. Norton, 48 S. E. 464, 465, 69 S. C. 454.

Ultra vires distinguished

"The words 'ultra vires' and 'illegality' represent totally different and distinct ideas. It is true that a contract may have both those defects, but it may also have one without the other; for example, a bank has no authority to engage, and usually does not engage, in benevolent enterprises. A subscription made by authority of the board of directors and under the corporate seal for the building of a church, or college, or an almshouse would be clearly ultra vires, but it would not be illegal. If every corporator should expressly assent to such an application of the funds, it would still be ultra vires; but no wrong would be committed, and no public interest violated. So a manufacturing corporation may purchase ground for a schoolhouse, or a place of worship for the intellectual, religious, and moral improvement of its operatives. It may buy tracts and books of instruction for distribution amongst them. Such dealings are outside of the charter; but, so far from being illegal or wrong, they are, in themselves, benevolent and praiseworthy. So a church corporation may deal in exchange. This, although ultra vires, is not illegal, because dealing in exchange is, in itself, a lawful business, and there is no state policy in restraint of that business." Arkansas Valley

& W. R. Co. v Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 96 Pac. 765, 767, 21 Okl. 322.

ILLEGITIMATE

ILLEGITIMATE CHILD

At common law an "illegitimate child" was the child of no one, "filius nullius," or filius populi, not even entitled to a name unless he gained one by reputation. In re Garr's Estate, 86 Pac. 757, 760, 31 Utah, 57.

In Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2630a, which provides that an illegitimate child or children of any man dying intestate, and having acknowledged such child or children during his lifetime as his own, shall inherit his estate, and shall be deemed to be the heir or heirs of such intestate in the same manner as if such child or children had been legitimate, except that the section shall not apply where the father left surviving legitimate children or descendants of legitimate children, the words "illegitimate child or children" included grandchildren who were the lawful descendants of such illegitimate child or children, so that where the father of a bastard son and daughter, both of whom he had duly recognized, died without legitimate children, the children of the daughter, who predeceased the father, were entitled to share with the son in the father's realty. Morin v. Holliday, 77 N. E. 861, 863, 39 Ind. App. 201.

M. and F., slaves, cohabited as husband and wife, and there was born to them J. Thereafter M. cohabited with H., a slave, and there was born to them W. and S. At a still later date M. cohabited with P., a slave, and there were born to them three children. J. alleged that his mother and father, F. and M., lived together as husband and wife after their emancipation, and that he thereby became their legitimate child. Cobbey's Ann. St. 1907, § 4932, provides that, if an illegitimate child shall die intestate without issue, his estate shall descend to his mother, or, in case of her decease, to her heirs at law. Held, that W. was an illegitimate child, whose estate must be disposed of as such; that S., his full brother, if living, under section 4932, would take the estate as the sole heir of his mother, but as he was not living his children represented him and took as his representatives; that the children born to M. and P. were without interest in the estate; and that J., the child of M. and F., was without interest in the estate, whether legitimate or illegitimate. Speese's Heirs v. Shores' Estate, 116 N. W. 493, 494, 81 Neb. 536.

ILL-GOVERNED

A house is "ill-governed," within the meaning of the statute, creating the offense of keeping a common, ill-governed, and disorderly house, if it be habitually not well-governed; that is, if the law be habitually not there observed. Walt v. People, 104 Pac. 89, 91, 46 Colo. 136.

ILLCIT COHABITATION

"Illicit cohabitation" is a crime at common law. It is not committed by a single act, or even occasional acts, of intercourse. There must be a living together. This living together need not be for any particular length of time, even a single day has been held sufficient. But there must be a cohabitation, an abiding together. There must be that familiar and easy relationship between the parties which characterizes the relation of husband and wife. If this relationship is shown, no matter what other may also at the same time exist, the parties are guilty. The question always is upon all the evidence whether the relationship was such as to induce the belief that they were dwelling together as husband and wife, each receiving from the other such sexual privileges as usually arise out of that relationship. State v. Cassida, 72 Pac. 522, 523, 87 Kan. 171 (citing and adopting Hall v. State, 53 Ala. 468).

ILLNESS

See Serious Illness; Severe Illness or Sickness.

"Illness," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 964, providing that the illness of counsel, when there is but one, or of the leading counsel, when there is more than one, is a sufficient ground for a continuance, is, as defined in Century Dictionary, an attack of sickness; an ailment; malady or disease. "The illness of counsel contemplated by the law is such a physical condition, resulting from sickness, malady, or disease, as would prevent counsel from properly attending to his duties as such. It does not mean any mere indisposition, but indisposition of such character as to disqualify a person from the discharge of those delicate and responsible duties which devolve upon counsel in the trial of a case. The determination of whether such an illness in fact exists as is contemplated by the law is reposed in the trial judge before whom the motion for a continuance is made. If the counsel who is ill is absent, evidence should be heard as to his condition, and, where the condition of counsel is in question, the court is authorized to determine this question like all other questions of fact submitted to its decision. If counsel who makes the motion is himself present in court, making and urging the motion in his own proper person, the judge may determine the question by the condition of counsel as it appears to him. Especially would this be the case where counsel had been engaged for a number of days in the trial of other cases before the same judge, who was thus enabled to determine by a trial, in the nature of a trial by inspection, whether counsel's condition on the day the motion is made is essentially different from what it was on other days when he was actively engaged in the conduct of other cases, without complaint as to physical inability. The judge based his refusal to continue the case upon the ground that the energy, activity, and general appearance of counsel at the time that he made the motion was such as to impress him with the fact that, while counsel might have been laboring under an indisposition from cold and work in the other cases, he was still mentally and physically competent to discharge the duties incumbent upon him in the coming trial. The judge states that this impression, made at the time that the motion was made, was emphasized and confirmed by the able manner in which counsel conducted the case through a tedious trial of three days. In addition to this, if the statement of counsel as to his condition is considered in its entirety, it is apparent that he was not ill at all within the sense of the statute. He had a slight cold, probably some huskiness in his voice; but he was suffering under no attack of sickness, disease, or malady, within the meaning of the word 'illness' as it is ordinarily understood. He was merely tired, and this condition of body and mind is not sufficient to postpone the trial of a case, unless it reaches the point where mind and body are so exhausted that the duty in hand cannot be performed with justice to those to whom the duty is due. All who have ever been engaged in the practice of law can appreciate that counsel very often are required to perform their duties when they are physically and mentally tired; but the business of the courts would become blocked if such a condition was recognized as a ground for continuance, when the tired condition of counsel was short of exhaustion, mental or physical. During a term of court continuing for two weeks, counsel, who are engaged in every case that is tried during that time, of course become tired and more or less exhausted. The same is true of the judge and the jurors, and all others upon whom the responsibility of the administration of the law rests. But a case must not be postponed on account of the physical condition of counsel being affected by the work in the line of his profession or otherwise, unless the physical condition brought about by the work is such that further effort would imperil his health, or an attempt to perform the duty under the circumstances would result in injustice to those interested in the performance of a duty owed to them. This matter, as all matters relating to the continuance of cases upon similar grounds, is addressed to the discretion, judgment, and humanity of the trial judge, and nothing appears in the record which authorizes us to say that this discretion has been abused in the present case." Rawlins v. State, 52 S. E. 1, 11, 12, 124 Ga. 31.

A general question in an application for life insurance, calling for information concerning former illnesses, does not require the disclosure of an illness of a trifling, temporary, or unimportant nature. Gruber v. German Roman Catholic Aid Soc. of Minnesota, 129 N. W. 581, 582, 113 Minn. 340.

Illness, when applied to the warranty of an insured in a life policy, that he was of sound health, and had never had consumption, means a disease of such a character as to affect the general soundness of the system, and not a mere temporary indisposition which does not undermine and weaken the constitution. Schofield's Adm'x v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 64 Atl. 1107, 1110, 79 Vt. 161, 8 Ann. Cas. 1152.

Under Civ. Code, § 3533, which states the maxim that the law disregards trifles, an insurance policy was not invalidated by answers of the insured, in her application, that she had not been confined to her house by illness or consulted a physician since childhood, though, about two years prior to the application, she had been confined to the house by an acute cold, causing suppressed menstruation and a soreness and congestion of the womb, at which time a physician paid her one visit, as "illness" contemplated in the application is a disease or ailment which affects the soundness and healthfulness of the system. Poole v. Grand Circle, Women of Woodcraft, 123 Pac. 349, 350, 18 Cal. App. 457.

An application for an accident policy warranted that insured had never received indemnity for any accident or "illness," except a specified sum for a sprained ankle. He had in fact previously had an operation for chronic appendicitis for which he had received from another insurance company an indemnity of $225 for the time he was absent from his work. Held, that since the term "illness" is defined as a disorder of health, or sickness, meaning a disease, or ailment of such a character as to affect the general soundness and healthfulness of the system seriously, and not a mere temporary indisposition which did not tend to undermine or weaken insured's constitution, whether the operation for chronic appendicitis was an illness within such definition was for the jury. Miller v. Maryland Casualty Co., 193 Fed. 343, 349, 113 C. O. A. 267.

The word "illness," as used in a question in connection with an application for insurance, "Give full particulars of any illness you may have had since childhood," is open to interpretation. No man ought to give lasting regard to all his little ailments, bruises, aches, and pains. He cannot fix them in his memory if he would. They do not affect the risk in life insurance, and the insuring company cares nothing about them. Therefore illness clearly means something more than a temporary indisposition, slight and trivial in its nature, and which does not really affect the soundness of the system, substantially impair the health, materially weaken the vigor of the constitution, or seriously derange the vital functions. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Brubaker, 96 Pac. 62, 64, 78 Kan. 146, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 362, 130 Am. St. Rep. 356, 16 Ann. Cas. 267.

ILLUSORY APPOINTMENT

"Where, by the terms of an instrument, a power is given to appoint property to or among certain persons, the amount that each is to receive being left to the discretion of the donee of the power, and where none of the beneficiaries can be excluded, and where a mere nominal share is appointed to one or more of them, such an appointment is termed 'illusory.'" The doctrine of "illusory appointment" will not be adopted to invalidate the execution of a power of appointment under which merely nominal shares were given to several of the objects of the power which left what each should take to the donee's discretion. Hawthorn v. Ulrich, 69 N. E. 885, 887, 207 Ill. 430 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bouv. Law Dict. p. 769).

ILLUSTRATION

See Pictorial Illustration.

IMBECILE

An "imbecile," as the term is ordinarily used and understood, is one who is mentally weak rather than insane. Cable v. Drew, 78 Pac. 427, 429, 70 Kan. 136.

An "imbecile" is defined as one destitute of strength either of body or mind; one who is weak, feeble, impotent, decrepit. "Imbecility" is defined as the quality of being imbecile; feebleness of body or mind. An "imbecile" is neither a lunatic nor an idiot. The word, however, is not of exact meaning, and imbecility is not a disqualification for making a will providing the testator has the capacity which the courts require and that is not determined by any mere generalization of the testator's capacity, but is to be determined from his acts in reference to the particular business in hand. McGown v. Underhill, 101 N. Y. Supp. 313, 316, 115 App. Div. 638.

"An 'imbecile' is neither a lunatic nor an idiot. He is defined as one destitute of strength either of body or mind; one who is weak, feeble, impotent, decrepit. * * * It is not a word of exact meaning. * * * Imbecility, as distinguished from idiocy or lunacy, is usually incident to extreme age, and is generally the result of a gradual decay of the mental faculties." Barnes v. Waterman, 104 N. Y. Supp. 685, 691, 54 Misc. Rep. 392 (quoting and adopting definition in McGowan v. Underhill, 101 N. Y. Supp. 316, 115 App. Div. 642; Messenger v. Bliss, 35 Ohio St. 587, 592; 22 Cyc. p. 1112).

The adjective "imbecile," as used in Pub. Acts 1895, p. 667, c. 335, providing that no man or woman, either of which is epileptic, imbecile, or feeble-minded, shall intermarry or live together as husband and wife when the woman is under 45 years of age, is used with an uncertain meaning. The word does not clearly indicate an idiot or a person non compos mentis, for such a person cannot marry by reason of his incapacity to give the requisite assent. Does the Legislature mean by imbecile or feeble-minded person one who has been reduced to a condition of imbecility or feeble-mindedness through epilepsy, or by an epileptic person one whose disease has taken the form of imbecility or feeble-mindedness? It is suggested that the Legislature had in mind a bodily condition which often descended from parent to child. The provisions of the act imply this, but the implication extends as well to the adjectives "imbecile" and "feeble-minded" as to the adjective "epileptic." Gould v. Gould, 61 Atl. 604, 612, 78 Conn. 242, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 531.

IMBECILITY

See Corporal Imbecility.

"Imbecility" has been used to denote different grades of mental weakness, but as used in the Code (Civ. Code 1895, §§ 3267, 3268), in respect to testamentary incapacity, it means complete or total imbecility, with which is being contrasted weakness of intellect less than that. The difference between "imbecility," as thus used, and "idiocy" is generally said to be that the latter is congenital, while the former arises from subsequent causes, such as old age, disease, or accident. Slaughter v. Heath, 57 S. E. 69, 73, 127 Ga. 747, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1.

IMITATION

See Colorable Imitation.

IMITATION BUTTER

The words "in imitation of," used in St. 1898, § 4607c, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 185, c. 151, making it an offense to sell certain articles "in imitation of yellow butter," imply a conscious imitation in the manufacture thereof. Meyer v. State, 114 N. W. 501, 504, 134 Wis. 156, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1061.

IMITATION LACE

Collars and cuffs composed of braids sewn together and ornamented with cords and threads held dutiable as "wearing apparel * * * in imitation of lace," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule J, par. 339, 30 Stat. 181. It is not necessary that articles coming within this provision should be imitation lace as known to the trade. United States v. D. S. Hesse & Bro., 158 Fed. 407, 85 C. C. A. 517.

IMITATION MALT LIQUOR

To sell, give away, barter, or otherwise furnish an "imitation" or "substitute" for malt liquor does not constitute an offense against the laws of Oklahoma, unless such imitation or substitute contains as much as one-half of 1 per centum of alcohol, measured by volume. Ex parte Hunnicutt, 123 Pac. 179, 185, 7 Okl. Cr. 213.

IMITATION MAPLE SUGAR

Rev. Laws, c. 75, § 16, provides that no person shall sell any article of food which is adulterated. Section 17 defines the term "food" to include all articles, simple, mixed, or compound, used in food or drink by man, and section 18 declares that food shall be deemed adulterated if any substance has been mixed with it, so as to reduce, depreciate, or injuriously affect its quality, strength, or purity, or if an inferior or cheaper substance has been substituted for it wholly or in part, or if it is an imitation of or sold under the name of another article, but that such provisions shall not apply to mixtures or compounds not injurious to health and which are recognized as ordinary articles or ingredients of articles of food, if every package sold or offered for sale is distinctly labeled as a mixture or compound with the distinct name of each ingredient therein. Held, that blended maple sugar "part maple and part granulated," itself a well-known article in the trade as a commercial unit of food bought and sold as such, was neither an adulterated food nor an imitation within the statute. Adams v. New England Maple Syrup Co., 97 N. E. 85, 86, 210 Mass. 475.

IMITATION PARCHMENT

Grease-proof paper, used chiefly for wrapping meat, butter, lard, and other oleaginous substances, and which, though it can be printed upon, is not suitable as printing paper for books and newspapers, is known as "imitation parchment," and is not dutiable as printing paper under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 396, 30 Stat. 187. Germania Importing Co. v. United States, 142 Fed. 215.

IMITATION PRECIOUS STONES

"An 'imitation of precious stone' may be a manufacture of glass, but the latter is not necessarily an imitation of a precious stone, or, more narrowly, an imitation of a precious stone within the meaning of a tariff statute. Every resemblance would not make such imitation, and the suggestion of the counsel for the United States is not without its weight, that the capability and purpose of setting must be considered." United States v. Morrison, 21 Sup. Ct. 195, 179 U. S. 456, 461, 45 L. Ed. 275.

Pierced imitation pearls are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 408, 30 Stat. 189, relating to "beads of all kinds, not threaded or strung," rather than under paragraph 435 (30 Stat. 192), as imitations of precious stones. United States v. Weinberg, 139 Fed. 1006.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 435, 30 Stat. 192, for imitations of precious stones, held to cover imitation whole and half pearls, including such as have been strung on wire for purposes of manufacture. United States v. Weinberg, 139 Fed. 1006.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 435, 30 Stat. 192, for imitation precious stones not exceeding an inch in "dimensions" does not exclude stones exceeding an inch in a single dimension. To be excluded they must exceed an inch in more than one direction. Albert Lorsch & Co. v. United States, 146 Fed. 379, 76 C. C. A. 651.

Lenses not ground and polished but molded to a spherical form are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 109, 30 Stat. 158, as "imitation precious stones." United States v. Robinson, 140 Fed. 968, 969.

IMITATION ROSES

Dutiable as artificial flowers, see Artificial Flowers.

IMITATION SILK

Imitation silk yarn, which is made from cotton waste, subjected to a chemical process, whereby it loses its identity as cotton, and which resembles silk yarn in quality, texture, and use, is held, by virtue of the similitude clause in section 7, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 205, to be dutiable at the rate applicable to silk yarn, under paragraph 385 of said act (chapter 11, § 1, Schedule L, 30 Stat. 185). All yarns of this character, whether made from silk waste or from cotton waste, are known as "imitation silk," and the fabric woven therefrom is known as "nearsilk." Von Bernuth v. United States, 133 Fed. 800, 801.

IMMATERIAL

See Irrelevant, Immaterial, and Incompetent.

"Immaterial" is defined by Webster to mean "unimportant," "without weight or significance." Faulkner v. Bridget, 86 S. W. 483, 484, 110 Mo. App. 377.

The words "material" and "not material" are absolutely contradictory in that they exclude all middle ground and together include everything thinkable. Bennett v. Ware, 61 S. E. 546, 550, 4 Ga. App. 293 (dissenting opinion by Powell, J.).

IMMATERIAL ALLEGATION

Concerning the rule which governs what may be termed "immaterial allegations," and distinguishes them from mere surplusage, it is said that: "The statement of immaterial or irrelevant matter or allegations is not only censured, as creating unnecessary expense, but also frequently affords an advantage to the opposite party, either by affording him matter of objection on the ground of variance, or as rendering it incumbent on the party pleading to adduce more evidence than would otherwise have been necessary. It is therefore of the greatest importance in pleading to avoid any unnecessary statement of facts, as well as prolixity in the statement of those which may be necessary. If a party take unto himself to state in pleading a particular estate, where it was only required of him that he should show a general or even a less estate, title, or interest, the adversary may traverse the allegation, and, if it be untrue, the party will fail." 1 Chit. Pl. p. 325, § 252. The meaning of "immaterial" is that the thing pleaded is unnecessary to plaintiff's action; that he could have succeeded without reference thereto; but, when he sees fit to set forth such matter, then it becomes material. It is an immaterial thing made material by the act and choice of the pleader. Dunlap v. Kelly, 78 S. W. 664-666, 105 Mo. App. 1.

IMMATERIAL MATTER

The phrases "immaterial matters" and "collateral attendant facts" are primarily not absolutely synonymous, for collateral attendant facts may be material; but, when used in an instruction, where the phrase

"collateral attendant facts" is placed in antithesis to the phrase "material facts," they by every fair rule of construction become, for the nonce, equivalent in meaning. Blanchard v. State, 69 S. E. 313, 8 Ga. App. 419.

IMMEDIATE

See Within Immediate Knowledge.
See, also, Remote—Remoteness.

The word "immediate," strictly construed, excludes all intermediate time. It has been held to mean "within such convenient time as is required for doing the thing." Inhabitants of Robbinston v. Inhabitants of Lisbon, 40 Me. 287, 288.

The condition precedent on which one who has made a contract of sale of groceries accepts the buyer's offer to cancel the contract and turn the goods over to another, that he have an "immediate" wire routing, is not performed by the sending of a telegram after a day had elapsed. Van Camp Packing Co. v. Smith, Rouse & Webster, 61 Atl. 284, 285, 101 Md. 565.

A policy indemnified a telephone company against damages to any person not employed by the assured from the operation of the telephone plant. It was stipulated that the policy should not cover loss from liability for injuries suffered otherwise than during "the immediate doing of the work of construction." The telephone company while putting up a line trimmed a tree on the land of a third person. The owner refused to permit the trimming of the remaining trees unless the tree already cut was trimmed as he desired. While the employés of the telephone company were trimming the tree a person not employed by the company was accidentally killed, and the telephone company was compelled to pay for his death. Held, that the accident happened during "the immediate doing of the work of construction," and the indemnity company was liable. Camden & Atlantic Telephone Co. v. United States Casualty Co., 75 Atl. 1077, 1078, 227 Pa. 242.

As direct

See Direct.

As instantaneous

Under Insolvency Act (St. 1880, p. 83, c. 87), § 7, providing that a copy of the order adjudicating one insolvent and appointing a time and place for a meeting of creditors shall be served "forthwith" by mail on all creditors, proof that the order was mailed four days after its making, but prior to the first publication thereof in a newspaper, and more than 30 days before the time fixed for the creditors' meeting, shows a compliance with the statute; the term "forthwith," like the term "immediate," not being construed as a time immediately succeeding, without an interval. Newlove v. Mercantile Trust Co. of San Francisco, 105 Pac. 971, 976, 158 Cal. 657.

As word of causation

In an accident policy agreeing to pay a certain indemnity for the immediate continuance and total loss of time necessarily resulting from injuries, the word "immediate" will be construed as applying to causation, and not to time. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Branham, 70 N. E. 174, 176, 34 Ind. App. 243.

Proximate synonymous

"Proximate" is synonymous with "immediate." Texas & P. R. Co. v. Coutourie, 135 Fed. 465, 473, 68 C. C. A. 177 (citing And. Law Dict. 155).

The words "proximate" and "immediate" are synonyms and are each the antonym of "remote." Herke v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 125 S. W. 822, 823, 141 Mo. App. 613.

In instructions as to the causal connection between defendant's negligence and plaintiff's injury, the use of the word "direct," instead of the word "proximate," is not error; the word "proximate" being synonymous with "direct" and "immediate." Sivertson v. City of Moorhead, 138 N. W. 674, 675, 119 Minn. 467.

IMMEDIATE AMENDMENT

In the statute providing that, where the variance is not material, the court may direct the fact to be found according to the evidence, or may order an immediate amendment, without costs, the words "immediate amendment," by necessary implication, exclude the necessity for service and further hearing. Malonchi v. Nicholani, 82 Pac. 1052, 1053, 1 Cal. App. 690.

IMMEDIATE CAUSE

In an action for wrongful death, the court's use of the words "immediate and proximate cause" in an instruction submitting plaintiff's theory of the case was not objectionable, since the words "immediate" and "proximate" were synonyms and the antonym of "remote"; the word "proximate," when connected with the word "immediate," being readily understood by the jury. Herke v. St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co., 125 S. W. 822, 823, 141 Mo. App. 613.

Under the maxim that it were infinite for the law to judge the causes of causes, and their impulsions, one of another, therefore it contenteth itself with the immediate cause, and judgeth of acts by that without looking to any further degree, the term "immediate cause" is not capable of perfect or general definition, and, even if it had an ascertainable logical meaning which is more than doubtful, it would not follow that the legal meaning is the same. Rodgers v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 88 Pac. 885, 75 Kan. 222, 10

IMMEDIATE CONSEQUENCES

"For the purpose of civil liability, those consequences, and those only, are deemed 'immediate,' 'proximate,' or 'natural and probable,' which a person of average competence and knowledge, being in the like case with the person whose conduct is complained of, and having the like opportunities of observation, might be expected to foresee as likely to follow upon such conduct." "This principle is commonly expressed in the maxim that 'a man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts,' or, in the terms of a judicial statement, 'a party must be considered, in point of law, to intend that which is the necessary and natural consequence of that which he does.'" Rodgers v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 88 Pac. 885, 75 Kan. 222, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 658, 121 Am. St. Rep. 416, 12 Ann. Cas. 441 (quoting with approval from Pol. Torts).

IMMEDIATE DEATH

Rev. St. 1903, c. 89, § 9, giving a right of action for wrongful or negligent death, is designed to cover cases of immediate death, which includes both instantaneous death and death preceded by total unconsciousness following immediately upon the accident, irrespective of the duration of such unconsciousness. Perkins v. Oxford Paper Co., 71 Atl. 476, 480, 104 Me. 109.

IMMEDIATE DELIVERY

"Immediate delivery," as to coal, has a trade meaning among coal shippers, and means during the current month in which the offer is made and accepted. Feeley v. Boyd, 76 Pac. 1029, 1030, 143 Cal. 282, 65 L. R. A. 943.

"Immediate delivery," as used in a statute requiring immediate delivery and change of possession, while not requiring a delivery instantan, requires delivery within a reasonable time according to the character of the property, its situation, and all the attending circumstances, so that the fact that the seller took the buyer to the barn 10 days after the sale and pointed out the property to him did not constitute an "immediate delivery" within such requirement. Guthrie v. Carney, 124 Pac. 1045, 1048, 19 Cal. App. 144.

Determination of what constitutes "immediate change and delivery" and "actual possession," within Rev. St. 1887, § 3021, providing that a sale of personal property is fraudulent when not accompanied by an immediate delivery and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the property transferred, is not governed by any fixed rule, but is purely a question of fact to be determined by the jury, or the court in case the jury is waived from all the evidence in each particular case. Rapple v. Hughes, 77 Pac. 722, 725, 10 Idaho, 838.

IMMEDIATE FAMILY

A benefit certificate in a beneficial association provided that the society would pay to the beneficiary named, provided he was the lawful beneficiary of the member at the time of his death, a certain sum of money. The society's charter declared that its purpose was to render pecuniary aid to its members and beneficiaries in the following order: (a) To such person or persons of the "immediate family" of the member as by him designated; (b) to such persons or person, in default of such family, of the blood relatives of such member as by him designated; and (c) in default of any designation by the member or out of the order named, to such family or relatives who are heirs at law, etc. At the time decedent became a member, he was unmarried and resided with his father, whom he named as his beneficiary, but prior to his death he married plaintiff, established a new family, and died without changing the beneficiary in his certificate. Held, that the relationship of the beneficiary to the member was to be determined at the time of the member's death, at which time his "immediate family," within section 1, subd. 1a, of the society's charter, consisted of his wife and his own household, so that she, and not the father named in the certificate, was entitled to the benefit. Davin v. Davin, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1012, 1013, 1014, 114 App. Div. 396.

Under the charter of a beneficial association, authorizing a member to designate, as the recipient of the benefit payable on his death, a person of his "immediate family," or, in default of such family, one of his blood relatives a daughter of insured living with him as a member of the same household, with him as its head, may be designated as beneficiary, as one of his immediate family, though she be of age, so that he is not legally bound to support her and she is not under his legal control. Though the daughter is more than 21 years of age and before the death of her father left his home, intending to make a living for herself and using her own earnings for her own benefit, and though the father left a widow and minor children, who had been, and were at his death, a part of his household, dependent on him, such daughter had not necessarily ceased to be a member of the father's "immediate family," and so not entitled to take his death benefit as his designated beneficiary. The primary meaning of the word "family," as used in our language to specify a definite group of persons, is "the collective body of persons who form one household under one head and one domestic government, including parents, children, and servants" (quoting and adopting definition in Century Dict.). In construing a writing in which the word "family" is used, this primary meaning should be assumed.

ed in determining the expressed intention of the writer unless there is something in the context to show that it is used in some other meaning. The same person may be either a member of the "immediate family" of the insured or one of his "blood relatives." Both groups are composed of persons of the same "family" with the member; in the former reference being had to the primary meaning of family as denoting members of the one household, gathered around one head, and in the latter to "family" as denoting individuals related through descent from one stock. Family is frequently used to denote those connected by the tie of common descent as well as that of a common household. The words "immediate family" is used in this connection to indicate a group of persons of which the insured is one connected as one family and from which is excluded any member who has become separated from the group as constituting one household, and "immediate family" certainly includes all persons bound together by the ties of relationship and parents and children living together as members of one household under one head. Dalton v. Knights of Columbus, 87 Atl. 510, 511, 512, 80 Conn. 212, 125 Am. St. Rep. 116, 11 Ann. Cas 568 (citing Town of Cheshire v. Town of Burlington, 31 Conn. 326, 329; Hart v. Goldsmith, 51 Conn. 479, 480; Wood v. Wood, 28 Atl. 520, 63 Conn. 324, 327; Crosgrove v. Crosgrove, 8 Atl. 219, 69 Conn. 416, 422; Knights of Columbus v. Rowe, 40 Atl. 451, 70 Conn. 545, 550; Hoadly v. Wood, 42 Atl. 263, 71 Conn. 452, 456).

IMMEDIATE FLIGHT

A trespasser, voluntarily withdrawing from premises on which he may be trespassing when ordered to do so, is in "immediate flight," under Rev. Code 1852, amended to 1893, p. 939, c. 128, § 21, authorizing an arrest by an officer, with or without warrant, of any trespasser on the premises of another, either on the premises or in immediate flight therefrom. State v. Johnson (Del.) 78 Atl. 606, 607, 2 Boyce, 49.

IMMEDIATE FUTURE

The words "immediate future," referring to the business or wants of a community and the uses of the property condemned, which may reasonably be expected, "contemplate that the especial use must be valuable, practical, and available within a reasonable time." Where there was no dredging of a river at any point within two miles of the owner's land, as was necessary to make it navigable, and the possibility of dredging was very remote, any available use of his land, based on navigation of the river by large vessels, was too speculative to be considered either in fixing the value of the land taken, or damage to the land not taken. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Alexander, 91 Pac. 626, 629, 47 Wash. 131.

IMMEDIATE INFLUENCE

A charge that the expression "immediate influence of sudden passion," as used in the statute defining manslaughter as voluntary homicide, committed under the immediate influence of sudden passion arising from adequate cause, means that the provocation must arise at the time of the commission of the offense, and the passion must not to be the result of a former difficulty or provocation, was not erroneous where the evidence tended to show that the killing resulted from a prior difficulty, since it followed almost literally the language of Pen. Code 1911, art. 1129, subd. 1, and was applicable to the facts in the case. Burns v. State (Tex.) 145 S. W. 356, 365.

IMMEDIATE ISSUE

"Immediate issue," as used in Rev. St. § 4200, providing that no estate in lands shall be granted by deed or will to any person but such as are in being, "or to the immediate issue or descendants of such as are in being at the time of making such deed or will, and all estates given in tail shall be and remain an absolute estate in fee simple to the issue of the first donor in tail," includes only the children of a person in being. Dungan v. Kline, 90 N. E. 938, 940, 81 Ohio St. 371 (citing Turley v. Turley, 11 Ohio St. 173).

The primary and usual meaning of the term "issue," when used as a word of purchase, is descendants of every degree, and is not equivalent to "immediate issue," which, by the settled construction of the statute against perpetuities, means only children. Bartlett v. Sears, 70 Atl. 33, 36, 81 Conn. 84.

IMMEDIATE NOTICE

Of default of employé

An employer's liability bond provided that the insurer should indemnify the employer against fraudulent or dishonest acts of the employé amounting to embezzlement or larceny, subject to the condition that the insurer should be notified in writing of any fraudulent or dishonest act on the part of the employé, which might involve a loss for which the company was responsible, immediately after the occurrence of such act should have come to the employer's knowledge. Held, that the notice required was one which would charge the employé with the commission of a felony, and hence the employer was not bound to give such notice until it had acquired knowledge sufficient to justify a reasonable man in making such a charge. "Immediate notice" (that is, instantaneous notice) is not required to be given, but only such notice as reasonable diligence, under the circumstances of the case, require should be given after knowledge of the facts is obtained. Ætna Indemnity Co. v. J. R. Crowe Coal & Mining Co., 154 Fed. 545, 549, 83 C. C. A. 431.

Of default of principal to surety

Conditions requiring "immediate notice" upon the occurrence of loss or default have been held satisfied by notice given within two days to two months; the time varying with the circumstances of the particular cases. Van Buren County v. American Surety Co., 115 N. W. 24, 28, 137 Iowa, 490, 126 Am. St. Rep. 290 (citing Perpetual Building & Loan Ass'n v. United States Fidelity & Guarantee Co., 92 N. W. 686, 118 Iowa, 735; Harnden v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co., 41 N. E. 658, 164 Mass. 382, 49 Am. St. Rep. 487; Niagara Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 100 Ill. 644; Woody v. Old Dominion Ins. Co., 31 Grat. [72 Va.] 362, 31 Am. Rep. 782; Knickerbocker Ins. Co. v. Gould, 80 Ill. 388; Kentzler v. American Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 60 N. W. 1002, 88 Wis. 596, 43 Am. St. Rep. 934).

A requirement in a contractor's bond that the obligee shall give "immediate notice" to the surety of any default by the contractor is equivalent to a requirement of reasonable notice, and what is reasonable notice under a requirement in a contractor's bond that the obligee shall give "immediate notice" to the surety of any default by the contractor is a question of fact for the jury. Thomason v. Keeney, 70 S. E. 220, 221, 8 Ga. App. 852.

Of loss or accident

The word "immediate," in an insurance policy, in respect to giving notice of any accident or injury for which a claim is to be made, means as soon as practicable under the circumstances of the case, in the absence of some unmistakable limitation to the contrary. Cady v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 113 N. W. 907, 960, 134 Wis. 322, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260.

"The phrases 'immediate notice,' 'notice forthwith,' 'as soon as possible,' 'as soon as practicable,' used in policies of guaranty insurance, providing that notice of loss shall be given to the insurer by the insured within a certain designated time, have practically the same meaning, to wit, that the insured shall with all promptitude, considering the probable amount of the loss, and the probability of the 'risks' endeavoring to escape, give notice to the insurer of the occurrence of the loss." Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Western Bank (Ky.) 94 S. W. 3, 5 (quoting and adopting definition in Frost, Guaranty Ins. § 104).

A provision in an accident insurance policy that "immediate written notice" shall be given to the company of any accident or injury for which claim is made required notice to be given within a reasonable time, and where the insured lived for 72 days after an accidental injury, during which time he was in full possession of his faculties, his failure to give any notice of the accident before his death, without any excuse therefor appearing, as a matter of law defeated any right the beneficiary would otherwise have had to recover on the policy for his death. Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. Nax, 142 Fed. 653, 655, 73 C. C. A. 649.

Same—Reasonable time

Where a policy of health insurance requires that "immediate written notice" of the disease or illness shall be given to the company, a notice given within a reasonable time under the circumstances of the particular case will satisfy the requirement of the policy. Reynolds v. Maryland Casualty Co., 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 456, 458.

Under a policy requiring that, in case of accident, written notice should be sent the insurer "as soon as possible," the words quoted are substantially equivalent to "forthwith" or "immediate," which in this connection mean that such notice shall be sent with reasonable promptness. Everson v. General Accident Fire & Life Assur. Corp., Limited. of Perth, Scotland, 88 N. E. 658, 660, 202 Mass. 169.

The word "immediate" in a provision of an accident policy, requiring immediate notice in writing of any accident or injury to be given to the company, will not be construed literally, but only to require notice within such time as beneficiary can reasonably obtain information upon which to base it. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Bethel, 131 S. W. 523, 528, 140 Ky. 609.

Due diligence by insured resulting in notice to the insurer of loss under a fire policy within a reasonable time after the fire, under all the circumstances of the case, is a compliance with a requirement of the policy that "immediate notice" of the loss be given. Will & Baumer Co. v. Rochester German Ins. Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 606, 608, 140 App. Div. 691.

A policy requiring the giving of "immediate notice" of a loss to the insurer requires the giving of a notice within a reasonable time. Downs v. German Alliance Ins. Co. (Del.) 67 Atl. 146, 147, 6 Pennewill, 166 (citing Trask v. State Fire & Marine Ins. Co. of Pennsylvania, 29 Pa. 196, 72 Am. Dec. 622).

In a fire insurance policy, providing that the assured should give "immediate notice" and render a particular account of the loss, the word "immediate" meant within a reasonable time in view of all the attending circumstances. Carey v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 40 Pac. 91, 92, 27 Or. 146.

The word "immediate," as used in a policy of accident insurance, requiring an "immediate notice" of an accident, means a reasonable time after the accident, under the circumstances of the particular case. Hughes v. Central Acc. Ins. Co., 71 Atl. 923, 924, 222 Pa. 462; Columbia Paper Stock Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 75 S. W. 320, 322, 104 Mo. App. 157.

In an accident insurance policy requiring "immediate notice" of accident and injury to be given to the company, the word "immediate" means such convenient time as is reasonably necessary under the circumstances to do the thing required. Where an accident resulted in death, and the beneficiary gave no notice until 29 days after she learned of the accident, the notice was insufficient. Foster v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 75 N. W. 69, 70, 99 Wis. 447, 40 L. R. A. 833.

Same—Two to six days

"Immediate notice" by one insured under an accident policy, means notice within a reasonable time. On April 29, 1905, plaintiff suffered an accidental injury, but did not realize the seriousness thereof or that it would prevent him from following his occupation until May 1, 1905, whereupon he gave notice thereof under his accident policy on the succeeding day. Held, that such notice was given within a reasonable time, and constituted compliance with the provision of the policy requiring "immediate notice." Young v. Railway Mail Ass'n, 103 S. W. 557, 559, 126 Mo. App. 325.

Same—One to two months

Where a policy requires the giving of "immediate notice" of the injury, the notice must be given within a reasonable time, compliance with the requirement being treated as a condition precedent to the right of assured to maintain an action on the policy, and, without a showing of good cause therefor, the failure of the insured to give notice until six weeks after the injury constitutes in law a breach of the condition requiring "immediate notice." Myers v. Maryland Casualty Co., 101 S. W. 124, 126, 128 Mo. App. 682.

A policy insuring the owner of a building against liability for injuries sustained by passengers in an elevator in the building provided that, on the occurrence of an accident and on receipt of any notice of a claim on account of an accident, insured should give "immediate notice" in writing to the insurer. Held that, where insured knew of an accident immediately after its occurrence, and within a month knew that the injured person intended to hold him for damages, but gave insurer no notice until two months thereafter, and then merely by means of a telephone message as to the occurrence of the accident, insurer was not liable, though the word "immediate" qualifying the word "notice" must necessarily be given a reasonable construction, having regard to the circumstances of the particular case, and it meant within a reasonable time. Barclay v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., 105 Pac. 865, 867, 46 Colo. 558.

Same—Four or more months

"Immediate notice," within the meaning of an employer's liability insurance policy, means notice within a reasonable time. A notice after eight months was not within a reasonable time and was not a compliance with the policy. Deer Trail Consol. Min. Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co., 78 Pac. 135, 136, 36 Wash. 46, 67 L. R. A. 275.

"Immediate written notice," as used in an indemnity policy, required immediate written notice of accidents and injuries, together with all other information of the insured relating to the accident, and was not fulfilled by notice not given until seven months after an accident for which a liability was sought to be imposed. National Const. Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 57 N. E. 350, 351, 176 Mass. 121.

IMMEDIATE POSSESSION OR RECORDING

"Immediate possession" of a chattel mortgage means with reasonable dispatch. Hardcastle v. Stiles & McClay, 55 Atl. 104, 105, 69 N. J. Law, 551.

"Immediate possession," essential to the validity of a chattel mortgage, means as soon as may be by reasonable dispatch under the circumstances of the case. Brockhurst v. Cox, 64 Atl. 182, 183, 71 N. J. Eq. 703.

IMMEDIATE RECORDING

"Immediate recording" of a chattel mortgage means with reasonable dispatch. Hardcastle v. Stiles & McClay, 55 Atl. 104, 105, 69 N. J. Law, 551.

"Immediate recording," essential to the validity of a chattel mortgage, means as soon as may be by reasonable dispatch under the circumstances. An unexplained delay of 15 days in recording a mortgage renders it invalid as against the mortgagor's creditors. A chattel mortgage was dated May 2d and was delivered to the mortgagee May 3d. It was filed for record May 18th. The mortgagee could either by messenger or mail have easily recorded the mortgage on the 4th or 5th of May. No attempt at any explanation for the delay was made. Held, that the mortgage was invalid as against the creditors of the mortgagor. Brockhurst v. Cox, 64 Atl. 182, 183, 71 N. J. Eq. 703; Roe v. Meding, 33 Atl. 394, 53 N. J. Eq. 350.

IMMEDIATE REPORT

Where plaintiff required defendant, its general agent, to make an "immediate" report on policies he was holding beyond the period authorized by his contract, which provided that it should terminate immediately on defendant's failure to fulfill its conditions, defendant, though entitled to a reasonable time to comply with the demand, was not entitled to 24 hours therefor, it appearing that the report could be made in much less time. State Life Ins. Co. v. Schwarzkopf, 84 S. W. 353, 354, 109 Mo. App. 383.

IMMEDIATE TRANSPORTATION

To make a carrier liable for baggage delivered to it, it must be delivered and accepted for transportation within a reasonable time before departure of the train, so that, if an issue was submitted in an action for loss of baggage as to whether the trunk was received for "immediate" transportation, the court should have instructed that the term "immediate" did not have its usual meaning of "instantly, forthwith, nothing intervening either as to place, time, or action," but rather meant within a reasonable time having due regard to the circumstances. Williams v. Southern Ry. Co., 71 S. E. 346, 351, 155 N. C. 260 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3393).

IMMEDIATE VICINITY

Where a contract ancillary to the sale of a business provided that the stockholders of the seller would not again engage in a similar business for a period of 10 years in the territory, or the "immediate vicinity of the territory," dealt in by the corporation, or operated in by it or its agents, or the "immediate vicinity of such territory," the localities guarded against were restricted to those in which the selling company had establishments for doing business, and the immediate vicinity thereof, and did not include all parts or every one of the United States in which a former customer resided, or into which the corporation's correspondence had extended, or through which an agent of the company had traveled. Davis v. A. Booth & Co., 181 Fed. 81, 82, 89, 65 C. C. A. 269.

IMMEDIATELY

See As Soon as Practicable; At Once.

The word "immediately" is defined by Webster as "without intermediary; in direct connection or relation; in a way to concern or affect directly or closely; without the intervention of any person or thing; proximately; directly; closely." Under Code Civ. Proc. § 320, Gen. St. 1909, § 5914, providing that no party shall be allowed to testify in his own behalf in respect to any transaction or communication had personally by such third party with a deceased person when the adverse party is the executor, administrator, heir at law, surviving partner, or assignee of such deceased person, where they have acquired title to the cause of action immediately from such deceased person, etc., a plaintiff, who is suing to recover real estate claimed by her by virtue of being the wife of the decedent, where the defendants are the grandchildren and great-grandchildren of decedent, and who acquire their interest in the real estate, through the daughter of the decedent, is not prohibited from testifying to communications and transactions had personally with the decedent, as the parties adverse to her did not acquire their title to the cause of action immediately from the decedent. Williams v. Campbell, 113 Pac. 800, 801, 84 Kan. 46.

The word "immediately," as used in a will providing, "And immediately at her death, I give, devise, and bequeath all of my said property, or the proceeds thereof in case of the disposal thereof, * * *" implies that, upon the death of the life tenant, the estate shall vest at once in the remaindermen and determines the power of the executors to sell under the provisions of the will. Stebbens v. Turner, 105 N. Y. Supp. 945, 947, 55 Misc. Rep. 587.

The phrase "at the time of sale," as used in Rev. Codes 1899, § 5894, providing that the mortgagor or his assignor may redeem at the time of sale of personal property on foreclosure, should be construed to convey the same meaning as "immediately" would convey if used in the same connection. Brown v. Smith, 102 N. W. 171, 173, 13 N. D. 580.

As soon as practicable

"Immediately" means "as soon as practicable," and conversely it is proper to construe "as soon as practicable" to mean "immediately." Chicago, B. & Q. R. v. Richardson County, 100 N. W. 950, 952, 72 Neb. 482 (citing Huff v. Babbott, 15 N. W. 230, 14 Neb. 150; Lydick v. Korner, 12 N. W. 838, 13 Neb. 10).

As forthwith or instantly

"Immediately," according to Webster, means "at once; without interval of time." Cody v. Norton Coal Co., 66 S. E. 83, 84, 110 Va. 363.

In a recital in the bill of exceptions that "immediately" upon the reading of the verdict the sentence was passed, the word "immediately" means instantly; at once. McCullough v. State, 73 S. E. 546, 548, 10 Ga. App. 403.

The words "immediately thereafter" contained in the provision of the statutory bond required to be given under section 2 of the Insolvent Debtors Act (2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 2825) by an insolvent debtor petitioning for the benefit of the Insolvent Laws, that he, the debtor, will, if refused a discharge, surrender himself immediately thereafter to the sheriff or keeper of the jail of said county, construed to have the meaning of "directly" or "at once," after the debtor's discharge has been refused. Braden v. Rosenstone, 83 Atl. 906, 907, 83 N. J. Law, 251.

The word "immediately" as applied to an accident policy providing that the injury should "immediately" prevent the insured from the prosecution of his business, is not synonymous with "instantly," and "without delay," but a disability is immediate, when it follows directly from an accidental hurt within such time as the processes of nature consume in bringing the person affected to a state of total incapacity to prosecute every kind of business pertaining to his occupation. Order of United Commercial Travelers of America v. Barnes, 80 Pac. 1020, 1024, 72 Kan. 293, 7 Ann. Cas. 809.

Under Act March 3, 1899, c. 425, § 15, 80 Stat. 1152, which provides that, whenever a vessel is wrecked and sunk in a navigable channel, it shall be the duty of the owner of such sunken craft to "immediately" mark it with a buoy beacon. The owner of a canal boat which was sunk in New York bay, who received notice of the sinking at once and could have had it marked as required by statute within an hour, is liable for the damages caused by a passing vessel coming into collision with the wreck six hours later, when it was still unmarked. The Anna M. Fahy, 153 Fed. 866, 867, 83 C. C. A. 48.

The word "immediately," as used in a request for an instruction, in an action for the death of a pedestrian at a crossing, to the effect that if deceased "entered upon and on the track immediately in front of a rapidly moving train," etc., means without lapse of time, instantly, at once, without intervention of anything as a medium; directly. This is the common acceptance of the term, and doubtless the one which would have been given application by the jury, if they had been allowed to consider the charge. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Ploeger (Tex.) 93 S. W. 226, 229.

As within reasonable time

The word "immediately," whether occurring in contracts or statutes, refers to the act that must be performed within such convenient time as is reasonably requisite, and what is a reasonable time must be determined from the facts of the particular case. Meyers v. Dunn, 104 S. W. 852, 354, 126 Ky. 548, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 881 (citing Lincoln v. Field, 16 S. W. 288, 54 Ark. 471; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Reichert, 58 Md. 261; Pittsburgh, V. & C. Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 101 Pa. 192; Martin v. Pifer, 96 Ind. 245; Kent v. Miles, 27 Atl. 194, 65 Vt. 582).

The word "immediately" will not be construed strictly according to its literal meaning, but will be held to mean within a reasonable time in view of the circumstances of each case. Peterson v. Hansen, 107 N. W. 528, 530, 15 N. D. 198.

"Immediately" does not mean instantaneously, but requires action to be taken within a reasonable time. Lucas v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 109 N. W. 191, 193, 181 Iowa, 669, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1016.

The terms "immediately" and "forthwith," as used in contracts, are to be liberally construed. They never mean the absolute exclusion of any interval of time but only that no unreasonable length of time shall intervene before performance. A contract for the sale of goods calling for a delivery "immediately" was complied with by delivery within a reasonable time. Claus-Shear Co. v. E. Lee Hardware House, 53 S. E. 433, 434, 140 N. C. 552, 6 Ann. Cas. 243.

Where the contract called for shipment by the seller "immediately" after the latter part of a certain month, time of shipment was of the essence. The word "immediately," as employed in a contract which calls for shipment immediately, means, ordinarily and unexplained, "forthwith; at once"; and while the celerity implied from such terms excludes the idea of reasonable time, as understood in legal parlance, where no time is specified, some appreciable time must be allowed under a contract containing such terms, which necessarily lapsing time would be a reasonable time in a sense referable to the urgent words. Clauss Shear Co. v. Alabama Barber Supply Co., 56 South. 49, 50, 1 Ala. App. 664.

One desiring to rescind a contract for fraud must do so immediately upon discovering the fraud, "immediately," however, meaning a reasonable time, under the circumstances, within which to do the things necessary to rescind, and not to deliberate whether to rescind, and one induced to make a contract for territorial rights for a cigar vending machine by fraud could not rescind on that ground three months after discovering the fraud; that period being too long for merely consulting with attorneys and having them prepare a notice of rescission. Long v. International Vending Mach. Co., 139 S. W. 819, 820, 158 Mo. App. 662.

Defendant's assignor, to assist a clothing house to settle with its creditors, including defendant, took a mortgage on its stock for $1,700, specified in a note, and as a part of the same "transaction," upon execution and delivery of the note and mortgage, delivered to the mortgagor's attorney his signed personal checks, payable to the creditors, part of which were filled out and mailed the same day and the rest within a few days as soon as the proper amounts were ascertained and paid by him on presentment; the amount so paid being $1,650, which, with a previous debt due the mortgagee, exceeded the sum for which the mortgage note was given. The affidavit accompanying the mortgage was that it was made to secure the debt specified in the condition thereof, and for no other purpose, and that the same was a just debt, honestly due and owing from the mortgagor to the mortgagee. Held, in a suit by an attaching creditor of the mortgagor to enjoin foreclosure of the mortgage, that a "transaction" meant a group of facts so connected as to be referred to by a single legal name, that it need not be confined to what was done in one day, nor at one time, nor at one place, and that its immediateness was tested by a logical connection and not by closeness of time, and that the word "immediately" implied such convenient time as was reasonably requisite for completing the thing done; and hence that the affidavit conformed to the purpose of the mortgage and verified the justice and validity of the debt sought to be secured thereby. Herald &

Globe Ass'n v. Clere Clothing Co., 84 Atl. 23, 25, 86 Vt. 141.

As a relative term determined by use

The word "immediately" is a relative expression; and it is not sufficient, in order to render declarations admissible as part of the res gestæ, to show that they were made "immediately" after the transaction, without showing, at least approximately, how nearly they were connected therewith in point of time. Pool v. Warren County, 51 S. E. 328, 329, 123 Ga. 205.

There is no precise definition, so far as time is concerned, of the word "immediately." In every case the meaning depends upon the circumstances of the case and the act to be performed. St. 1906, p. 23, c. 19, § 3, requiring the Governor "forthwith," on the filing, on or before September, 15th, of the list of corporations delinquent in payment of their license tax, to issue a proclamation that the charters of such domestic corporations and the right of such foreign corporations will be forfeited unless the tax be paid on or before November 30th, and section 4 requiring that the proclamation shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State "immediately" and the Secretary shall cause it to be "immediately" published in two daily newspapers of the state, is satisfied as to dispatch by the proclamation being issued September 18th and published September 21st. Lewis v. Curry, 103 Pac. 493, 156 Cal. 93.

In relation to disability after injury

Where a person is bitten in the thumb by a dog, and the use of the hand was interfered with from the moment of the bite, and so continued until death ensued two weeks later, he was "immediately disabled," within the meaning of an accident insurance policy. There was no break in the continuity of the consequences of the injury and no intervening cause in the resulting disability, and the word "immediately," under such circumstances, does not mean accidental. Farner v. Massachusetts Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 67 Atl. 927, 928, 219 Pa. 71, 123 Am. St. Rep. 621 (citing Ritter v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 39 Atl. 1117, 185 Pa. 90).

In a contract to indemnify a person, in case of accident, for injury sustained by violent means which shall, "independently of all other causes, immediately, wholly, and continuously prevent him from the prosecution of any and every kind of business pertaining to his occupation," the word "immediately" is not synonymous with "instantly," "at once," and "without delay." A disability is immediate, within the meaning of such contracts, when it follows directly from an accidental hurt, within such time as the processes of nature consume in bringing the person affected to a state of total incapacity to prosecute every kind of business pertaining to his occupation. Order of United Com- mercial Travelers of America v. Barnes, 80 Pac. 1020, 1023, 1024, 72 Kan. 293, 7 Ann. Cas. 909.

In a policy insuring against loss of time for injuries through external and accidental means which shall, independently of all other causes, "immediately" and wholly disable the insured from transacting any business in his occupation, the word "immediately" refers to proximity of time with the injury and is used in the sense of "presently without lapse or material delay," and insurer is not liable where an insured, injured by a fall, was able for about two months to attend to his business, but at the end of that time became totally incapacitated by a stroke of paralysis which was a direct result of the accident. Merrill v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 64 N. W. 1039, 1040, 91 Wis. 329.

Where an accident policy only insured against bodily injuries caused through external, violent, and purely accidental means, causing "at once," and continuously after the accident, total inability to engage in any and every labor or occupation, etc., the term "at once" or "immediately" should be construed as adverbs of time and not causation, and were not intended to mean "reasonable time," but rather "presently," or without any substantial interval between the accident and disability. Continental Casualty Co. v. Ogburn, 57 South. 852, 853, 175 Ala. 357.

"Immediately," in stipulations relating to disability following an accident, signifies "presently" or "on the happening of the accident." The word is introduced to prevent uncertainty as to the cause of disability. If an interval elapses, some obscure ailment may supervene and produce physical or mental enfeeblement, which will be attributed to the accident and an unjust liability fall on the insurance company. If eight days passed before the plaintiff was unfit for work or business, he was not "immediately" disabled, within the meaning of the policy. Wall v. Continental Casualty Co., 86 S. W. 491, 499, 111 Mo. App. 504 (citing Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Ass'n of America v. Jones, 60 Ill. App. 106; Williams v. Preferred Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 17 S. E. 982, 91 Ga. 698; Merrill v. Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., 64 N. W. 1039, 91 Wis. 329).

An accident policy which provides for an indemnity on total disability by reason of an injury which shall "immediately" disable the insured does not cover such disability where the injury did not wholly disable the insured till 22 days after the accident. Laventhal v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 98 Pac. 1075, 1076, 9 Cal. App. 275.

In relation to distance

An assignment of mineral leases covering real estate "immediately surrounding" Mound City was properly interpreted to include a lease of land situated half a mile distant from the townsite. Rhodes v. Mound City

Gas, Coal & Oil Co., 104 Pac. 851, 80 Kan. 762.

In relation to judicial proceedings

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 825, providing that, when an order for change of venue has been made, the clerk shall "immediately" make out a transcript of the record and transmit the same to the clerk of the court, to which the removal is ordered, the transcript should be made out and transmitted in such convenient time as is reasonably necessary for the performance of such duties; the purpose of the statute being to prevent unreasonable delay or negligence in the transmission of the transcript, and to secure an early opportunity for the trial of the cause in the court to which the venue has been changed. Llewellyn v. Spangler, 88 S. W. 1021, 1023, 109 Mo. App. 396.

In relation to payment of bid at sale

Under Sand. & H. Dig. § 7119, providing that a sale of school lands shall be for cash, and, if any bidder shall fail to pay, the collector shall "immediately" resell, where a bidder was allowed an hour after his bid in which to procure the money and make the payment, a finding that the payment was made "immediately" was justified. Brown v. Toler, 50 S. W. 696, 697, 66 Ark. 361.

Where bids at a tax sale were made on November 15th, just before the close of the day, and the full consideration was paid on the next day, there was a compliance with Rev. Laws 1905, § 937, that the payment be "immediately" and "forthwith." Minnesota Debenture Co. v. Scott, 119 N. W. 391, 394, 106 Minn. 32.

In service of process or notice

A provision of a bond given by a building contractor to secure the faithful performance of a contract for the construction of certain buildings, and which provided that they should be completed by a certain date, requiring the obligees to notify the surety "immediately after" any default by the contractor which might create liability on the bond, was complied with by service of a written notice, four days before the expiration of the time for completion of the buildings, that they would not be completed within the time, which was at that time apparent from their condition. Empire State Surety Co. v. Hanson, 184 Fed. 58, 59, 107 C. C. A. 1.

If the notice be required to be "forthwith" or "as soon as possible" or "immediately," it will meet the requirements, if given with due diligence and without unnecessary and unreasonable delay, of which the jury are ordinarily to be the judges. To give the notice a literal interpretation would, in most cases, strip the insured of all hope of indemnity, and policies of insurance would become practically engines of fraud. Upon a bond to secure a contractor's performance before November 17th, requiring the owner to give the surety company immediate notice of the contractor's failure, notice sent on November 21st, and received on November 24th, was a sufficient compliance with the conditions of the bond. Routt v. Dils, 90 Pac. 67, 69, 40 Colo. 50 (quoting and adopting 2 May, Ins. [3d Ed.] § 462).

The word "immediately" means without the intervention of other events; forthwith; directly. A notice 11 days after the known failure of a contractor to complete the performance of his agreement is not an immediate notice thereof. Millard Const. Co. v. Deichea, 134 N. Y. Supp. 998, 1006, 150 App. Div. 71 (citing National Surety Co. v. Long, 125 Fed. 887, 60 C. C. A. 623).

Under Insolvency Act (St. 1880, p. 83, c. 87) § 7, providing that a copy of the order adjudicating one insolvent and appointing a time and place for a meeting of creditors shall be served "forthwith" by mail on all creditors, proof that the order was mailed four days after its making, but prior to the first publication thereof in a newspaper, and more than 30 days before the time fixed for the creditors' meeting, shows a compliance with the statute; the term "forthwith," like the term "immediate," not being construed as a time immediately succeeding, without an interval. Newlove v. Mercantile Trust Co. of San Francisco, 105 Pac. 971, 976, 156 Cal. 657.

Plaintiff, on obtaining notice of an accidental injury for which it was liable, immediately notified defendant insurer thereof, giving full information of all the facts from which the insurer could know what and how defenses might be made to the action. Thereafter a summons was filed in the injury action, returned as served on plaintiff by delivering a copy to a person described as plaintiff's secretary, but who in fact was neither an officer nor agent of plaintiff company. Plaintiff had no knowledge of the summons or suit, or that a default had been taken, until nearly a year thereafter, when immediate notice was given to insurer, requesting it to appear and defend, and informing it concerning the falsity of the return. Defendant denied liability, because the summons had not been immediately forwarded to it, under a provision of the policy requiring assured to immediately forward any summons or other process as soon as it had been served, etc. Held, that there was a substantial compliance with the contract by assured. Frank Parmelee Co. v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 166 Fed. 741, 743, 92 C. C. A. 408.

IMMEDIATELY AND EXPEDITIOUSLY

In Laws 1903, p. 207, § 1, which imposes a duty on officers, when informed by any citizen that an offense against the laws of the state is being committed or is about to be committed, to "immediately and expeditiously" proceed to the place where the alleged offenders are to be found and to arrest them, it is perceived that the duty is not alone to proceed immediately and expeditiously to the place where the alleged offenders are to be found, but also to arrest them. Were it not for the insertion of the words "immediately and expeditiously," the only duty imposed would be to arrest, because of the impossibility of making an arrest without coming to the place where the offenders are to be found. Such words were evidently inserted for the purpose of compelling prompt action on the part of the officer. The purpose of the statute is to provide for the arrest of the offender, and hence an information against a policeman, alleging that he refused to proceed to the place where alleged offenders were to be found, was insufficient. State v. King, 72 Pac. 657, 658, 28 Mont. 268.

IMMIGRANT

See Alien Immigrant; Person Arriving in the United States.

An unmarried man who immigrated to the United States in 1892, with the intention of making his home there, remaining about two years, working at his trade, and then, being taken ill, returning to his native country, remaining about 10 months, doing no work, and then in 1895 returning to the United States, was not an "immigrant" on his return in 1895. Under the Alien Contract Labor Law, as amended by Act March 3, 1903, 32 Stat. 1214, § 4, c. 1012, a man who entered the United States as an immigrant from Germany when young, remaining continuously domiciled, and working in this country for 12 or more years, although without becoming naturalized, and who then went temporarily into Canada, and within two weeks enters into a contract for labor, is not an immigrant on his return. United States v. Aultman Co., 143 Fed. 922, 926, 927.

Act Cong. Feb. 20, 1907, c. 1134, § 20, 84 Stat. 904, provides that any "alien" who shall enter the United States in violation of the law, and such as become public charges from causes existing prior to landing, shall, on the warrant of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be deported at any time within three years after the date of entry. Held, that the word "alien," was not synonymous with "immigrant," but was intended as a broader term, and included a Russian unmarried woman, who entered the United States in 1897 or 1898, and remained therein continuously until March, 1908, when she returned to Russia, after having engaged in prostitution for a considerable time, and who attempted to re-enter the United States in June, 1908, she being within three years thereafter an alien of the excluded classes and subject to deportation. Ex parte Hoffman, 179 Fed. 839, 841, 103 C. C. A. 327.

IMMIGRANT AGENT

An "Immigrant agent," within the meaning of the act of the state of Georgia levying a tax upon the occupation of "immigrant agent," is "a person engaged in hiring laborers within the state, but to be transported and employed beyond its limits." Musco v. United Surety Co., 90 N. E. 171, 174, 196 N. Y. 459, 134 Am. St. Rep. 851.

IMMIGRATE

"Immigrate" means to move into a country for the purpose of permanent residence. An alien immigrant to the United States is an alien who comes or removes into the United States for the purpose of permanent residence, but aliens composing the crew of a vessel visiting our sea ports are in no sense immigrants. Moffitt v. United States, 128 Fed. 375, 380, 63 C. C. A. 117 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.; United States v. Sandrey, 48 Fed. 550).

IMMIGRATION

"Immigration" is the passing or removing into a country for the purpose of permanent residence. The legislation contained in the various statutes that have been passed, relating to immigration, is clearly directed against the immigration into this country of certain classes of persons who come in with the intent of entering into and becoming a part of the mass of its citizens or population. Moffitt v. United States, 128 Fed. 375, 380, 63 C. C. A. 117 (quoting and adopting Cent. Dict.; United States v. Burke, 99 Fed. 895).

IMMINENT

IMMINENT DANGER

In an action by a person using a threshing machine against the manufacturer thereof for injuries from negligent construction of a deck thereon, through which plaintiff fell, a charge that plaintiff must prove that the deck as constructed was imminently dangerous to life or limb of those operating the machine, and that defendant knew it to be so; that the term "imminent danger" is such danger as must be instantly met, and which cannot be guarded against by calling on others for assistance; and that this is the kind of danger that persons must be subjected to, to be in imminent danger, under the claim of plaintiff—was not misleading, as indicating that the danger should involve an instant consummation rather than be impending. Pierce v. C. H. Bidwell Thresher Co., 122 N. W. 628, 629, 158 Mich. 358.

IMMINENT AND APPARENT DANGER

The words "imminent and apparent danger," as used in the law of self-defense, mean such overt, actual demonstration as would make the killing of another apparently necessary to prevent death or great bodily harm. The danger must be unavoidable according to the facts and circumstances as they honestly appeared at the time to the defendant, but it is not necessary that the danger should have in fact existed at the time, if the defendant had reason to believe and did believe that it existed, but no words of abuse can be excuse for an assault. State v. Gray, 79 Pac. 53, 54, 46 Or. 24.

IMMORAL

IMMORAL PURPOSE

Any other immoral purposes, see Any.

The importation of an alien woman into the United States in order that she may live with the person importing her as his concubine is for an immoral purpose, within the meaning of Act Feb. 20, 1907, c. 1134, 34 Stat. 898, making it a crime against the United States to import alien women for the purposes of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose. United States v. Bitty, 28 Sup. Ct. 396, 208 U. S. 393, 52 L. Ed. 543.

IMMOVABLE

Ordinarily speaking, a growing crop is not movable but "immovable property," but, under the statute relating to privileges in the administration of a succession, crops growing on the land at the death of decedent are held to be movable property. National Bank of Commerce v. Sullivan, 41 South. 480, 485, 117 La. 163 (citing Weill v. Kent, 28 South. 295, 52 La. Ann. 2141).

IMMOVABLE BY DESTINATION

Property immovable by destination is such movables as cannot be removed without breaking the building to which they are attached, under the express provisions of Civ. Code, arts. 468, 469. Bank of Lecompte v. Lecompte Cotton Oil Co., 51 South. 1010, 1011, 125 La. 844.

"Immovables by destination" are all movables which are permanently attached to realty by the owner and the movables which are placed thereon by the owner for its service and exploitation. Morton Trust Co. v. American Salt Co., 149 Fed. 540, 541.

IMMUNITY

See Personal Immunity; Privileges and Immunities; Right, Privilege, or Immunity; Special Privilege or Immunity.

An "immunity" is freedom from duty or penalty. Leatherwood v. Hill, 89 Pac. 521, 523, 10 Ariz. 243.

"Immunity" does not mean that no acts in fact were ever done, but that there may be no prosecution in respect thereto. Immunity does not wipe out the history of events. United States v. Swift, 186 Fed. 1002, 1017.

"The 'privileges and immunities' which are protected by the constitutional inhibition concern the personal and private rights of the citizen, such as his right to acquire and possess property, to pursue ordinary callings, and secure happiness and safety, etc., and do not include within their meaning the right to hold office. The state may decline to confer official power on residents of other states without depriving such non-residents of any 'privilege' or 'immunity' protected by the Constitution of the general government." In re Mulford, 75 N. E. 345, 346, 217 Ill. 242, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 341, 108 Am. St. Rep. 249, 3 Ann. Cas. 986.

The fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the federal Constitution operate on state action only, and the privilege and immunity clause applies to privileges and immunities arising out of the nature and essential character of the federal Government, and granted or secured by the Constitution, and the provision is satisfied if all persons similarly situated are treated alike in privileges conferred or liabilities imposed; the words "immunity" and "privilege" referring to a right conferred peculiar to some individual or body, or an affirmative act of selection of special subjects of favors not enjoyed by citizens in general under the federal Constitution or laws. Hammer v. State, 89 N. E. 850, 851, 173 Ind. 199, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 795, 140 Am. St. Rep. 248, 21 Ann. Cas. 1034.

"The right to be appointed and act as an executor is not a 'privilege' or 'immunity,' the denial whereof is prohibited by the federal Constitution." In re Mulford, 75 N. E. 345, 346, 217 Ill. 242, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 341, 108 Am. St. Rep. 249, 3 Ann. Cas. 986.

Exemption from taxation

The word "immunities," as used in a statute declaring that a reorganized corporation shall "possess all the powers, rights, immunities, privileges and franchises" which were possessed by the original corporation, is an apt term to express the intention of the Legislature that an exemption from taxation conferred on the original corporation should be included in the rights vesting in the new corporation. Wicomico County Com'rs v. Bancroft, 185 Fed. 977, 979, 982, 70 C. C. A. 287.

An act for the consolidation of corporations, providing that the new corporation should have all the powers, privileges, and "immunities" possessed by each of the corporations and special immunity from general taxation of one of the corporations, was not one of the franchises and could not be claimed by the new corporation. State v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 66 Me. 488, 514.

IMPAIR

"The lexical definition of 'impair' is 'to make worse; to diminish in quantity, value, excellence, or strength; to lessen in power; to weaken; to enfeeble; to deteriorate.'"

To "impair" is to diminish, decrease, or deteriorate, and to allege that ability to earn money has been impaired, coupled with the statement that the cause that produced that result is permanent, is the assertion of the fact that the impairment likewise is permanent, and therefore raises the issue of a permanent deterioration in earning capacity and satisfies the rule that loss of earnings, being in the nature of special damages, must be specially pleaded. Goodloe v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 96 S. W. 482, 485, 120 Mo. App. 194.

"Anything which makes the exercise of a right more expensive or less convenient, more difficult or less effective, 'impairs' that right." The statute making it an offense for a civic league or members thereof to publish the results of an investigation of character or qualifications of candidates for public office, without stating in full on what facts the report or recommendation is based, with the names and addresses in full of all persons furnishing the information concerning such candidate and a full statement of the information furnished by them, is unconstitutional as impairing the liberty of speech and of the press. Ex parte Harrison, 110 S. W. 709, 710, 212 Mo. 88, 126 Am. St. Rep. 557, 15 Ann. Cas. 1.

The term "impair" means to weaken or diminish, within Laws 1890, c. 565, p. 1131, § 162, as amended by Laws 1892, c. 676, p. 1416, providing that no examination, request, or advice of the state board of railroad commissioners, or any investigation or report made by it, shall impair the legal rights, duties, or obligations of any railroad corporation, or its legal liabilities for negligence. Baruth v. Poughkeepsie City & W. F. Electric Ry. Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 822, 823, 89 App. Div. 324.

IMPAIRED ABILITY

The expression "impaired ability" to labor and earn money and the expression "impairment of his ability" to labor and earn money convey the same idea to the mind, and the use of the expression "impaired ability" instead of "impairment of his ability" in an instruction, in an action for injuries, was not calculated to mislead the jury. Dallas Consol. Electric St. Ry. Co. v. Ely (Tex.) 91 S. W. 887, 889

IMPAIRING OBLIGATION OF CONTRACT

See, also, Obligation of Contract.

The law does not impair the obligation of a contract if neither party is relieved thereby from performing anything of that which he obligated himself to do, but, if either party is absolved from performance, the obligation is impaired, whether effected directly or indirectly. State ex rel. National Bond & Security Co. v. Krahmer, 117 N. W. 780, 783, 105 Minn. 422, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 157.

The obligation of a public corporation to contract is "impaired," within the prohibition of the federal Constitution, when the power of taxation conferred by law is withdrawn or lessened by subsequent legislation, leaving the creditors without adequate means of satisfaction. State of Louisiana ex rel. Hubert v. City of New Orleans, 30 Sup. Ct. 40, 43, 215 U. S. 170, 54 L. Ed. 144.

Impairment by a state of the obligation of a contract must be by legislation subsequent to the making of the contract enacted either directly by the Legislature of the state or, through delegation, by one of its municipalities. If an ordinance of a municipality is relied on as constituting an impairment of the obligation of a contract, it must be shown to have been enacted pursuant to, or under color of, legislative authority from the state, granted either subsequent to the contract or, if prior, of continuing effect. A mere repudiation of a contract by a municipal corporation or a denial of liability thereon, whether by ordinance or otherwise, is not an "impairment of the obligation" of the contract. American Telephone & Telegraph Co. of Alabama v. Town of New Decatur, 176 Fed. 133, 135.

"Where the Legislature has reserved the right to amend, alter, or repeal any and all corporate charters, the withdrawal of an exemption from taxation does not 'impair the obligation of any contract.'" Const. 1846, art. 8, § 1, provides that corporations may be formed by special acts and that all acts passed may be altered or repealed. The charter of the Pratt Institute (Laws 1887, c. 398) provides that it shall possess the powers and privileges and be subject to the liability of a corporation conferred by Rev. St. (1st Ed.) pt. 1, c. 18, tit. 3, and section 8 thereof provides that the charter of every corporation shall be subject to alteration, suspension, or repeal. Laws 1896, c. 908, repealing special exemptions granted the Pratt Institute in its charter, does not impair the obligation of any contract. Pratt Institute v. New York, 91 N. Y. Supp. 136, 138, 99 App. Div. 525 (citing Cooley, Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] p. 396).

The action of a state in enlarging, restricting, or destroying the corporate existence of a town does not impair contract obligations within the meaning of the Constitution. Sargent v. Clark, 77 Atl. 337, 83 Vt. 523.

Change of remedy

The obligation of a contract is impaired within the federal Constitution by an act preventing enforcement of the contract, or materially abridging the remedy for enforcing it which existed when it was entered into and which does not supply an alternative remedy equally adequate. Acts 1908, c. 305, recognizing the obligation of stockholders of a corporation to its creditors, requiring enforcement by a bill in equity on behalf of all creditors against all the stockholders in the state, and protecting a creditor whose action at law has been abated from loss of the costs of the action by providing that they shall be taxable in the proceedings in equity, though changing the form of the remedy of an existing creditor to enforce unpaid stock subscriptions, is not invalid as impairing the obligation of a contract, for it gives the creditor an alternative remedy equally adequate. Pittsburg Steel Co. v. Baltimore Equitable Soc., 77 Atl. 255, 256, 113 Md. 77.

"The obligation of a contract" is impaired, in the constitutional sense, by any law which prevents its enforcement, or which materially abridges the remedy for enforcing it, which existed when it was contracted, and does not supply an alternative remedy equally adequate and efficacious." McNamara v. Keene, 98 N. Y. Supp. 860, 862, 49 Misc. Rep. 452 (citing McGahey v. Virginia, 10 Sup. Ct. 972, 135 U. S. 662, 34 L. Ed. 304; People ex rel. Reynolds v. Common Council of City of Buffalo, 35 N. E. 485, 140 N. Y. 300, 37 Am. St. Rep. 563; Lewis Pub. Co. v. Lens, 88 N. Y. Supp. 841, 86 App. Div. 452).

The protection against the "impairment" of the obligation is absolute, and all legislative acts which work that result, whether by directly changing its terms or indirectly by rendering it ineffective, and of less value through a change of remedies, are prohibitive. Blakemore v. Cooper, 106 N. W. 566, 569, 15 N. D. 5, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1074, 125 Am. St. Rep. 574.

"Any law which in its operation amounts to a denial or obstruction of the rights accruing by a contract, though professing to act only as a remedy, is directly obnoxious to the prohibition of the Constitution." "Whatever belongs merely to the remedy may be altered according to the will of the state, provided the alteration does not 'impair the obligations' contracted, and it does not impair it, provided it leaves the parties a substantial remedy, according to the course of justice as it existed at the time the contract was made." Gen. St. Kan. 1868, c. 23, § 32, provided that, on return nulla bona of an execution against a corporation, it might be issued against any stockholder to an extent equal in amount to the stock held by him. An act approved in January, 1899 (Laws 1898-99, p. 85, c. 10), amending the former statute, provides that on the return of an execution nulla bona a receiver shall be appointed, who shall sue all the stockholders for the benefit of all creditors. Held that, as against a creditor of a Kansas corporation who obtained a judgment prior to the latter statute and was seeking to satisfy his claim under the former statute, the latter was inoperative as "impairing the obligation of contract." Pusey & Jones Co. v. Love (Del.) 66 Atl. 1013, 1015, 6 Pennewill, 80, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 953, 130 Am. St. Rep. 144 (citing Cooley, Const. Lim. [8th Ed.] pp. 344-346).

Pol. Code, § 3443, as amended, so as to provide an additional method for contesting the right of one to purchase public land, on the ground that, at the time of application to purchase, the land had been reclaimed and made fit for cultivation (the method being by action by one who had occupied the land for 10 years before the application), though retroactive in applying where an application to purchase was made and a certificate of purchase was issued prior to adoption of the statute, "impairs" no obligation of contract, as it merely gives a new remedy. "A change in the law to this extent affects only remedy, and disturbs or impairs no existing legal right. The cases uniformly hold that, as long as vested rights are not impaired, retrospective laws giving new and additional remedies for existing rights, or giving a remedy at law where one previously existed in equity only, or vice versa, are valid. As said in Rich v. Flanders, 39 N. H. 304, a party has no right to complain of these things as violations of the Constitution, so long as the laws leave him a competent court bound to administer justice to him according to the rights the law gave him, when his right of action or defense became invested." Boggs v. Ganeard, 84 Pac. 195-199, 148 Cal. 711.

Exemption laws

Statutes lessening exemptions, being favorable to a creditor, do not impair any contractual obligation; to "impair" being to weaken or diminish in some way the power which the court had when the contract was made to enforce it if specifically enforceable or to give damages for its breach. Brearley School v. Ward, 94 N. E. 1001, 1003, 201 N. Y. 358, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1215, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 251; Id., 128 N. Y. Supp. 614, 138 App. Div. 838.

Police regulations

The constitutional prohibition of state laws "impairing the obligation of contracts" does not restrict the power of the state to protect the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, as the one or the other may be involved in the execution of such contracts. Meffert v. State Board of Medical Registration & Examination, 72 Pac. 247, 250, 66 Kan. 710, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 811 (quoting and adopting definition in Mugler v. Kansas, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. R. A. 205).

"The interdiction of statutes 'impairing the obligation of contracts' does not prevent the state from exercising such powers as are vested in it for the promotion of the common weal, or are necessary for the general good of the public, though contracts previously entered into between individuals may thereby be affected. This power, which, in its various ramifications, is known as the police power, is an exercise of the sovereign right of the government to protect the lives, health, morals, comfort, and general welfare of the people, and is paramount to any rights under contracts between individuals." The obligations of an agreement to remove an existing dam from a navigable stream, and to allow the stream to remain open and unobstructed, are not unconstitutionally impaired by a state statute subsequently enacted in the exercise of the police power to subserve the drainage of lowlands, authorizing the construction of a dam across the stream by the very person making such agreement. Manigault v. Springs, 26 Sup. Ct. 127, 130, 199 U. S. 473, 50 L. Ed. 274.

IMPAIRING RIGHT TO PRIVATE PROPERTY

The phrase "impairing the right to private property," in the organic act of the territory which inhibits the passage of any law "impairing the right to private property," does not interfere with the power of the Legislature to protect property and promote morals and good order. The possession and enjoyment of all rights are subject to such reasonable conditions as may be deemed by the governing authority essential to the safety, health, peace, good order, and morals of the community; and, while the Legislature may not constitutionally declare that void which in its nature is and under all circumstances must be entirely harmless, it may place such reasonable restrictions on the right of an owner in relation to his property as becomes necessary to conserve the interests of the public and to prevent frauds among individuals. Sess. Laws 1903, p. 249, c. 30, § 1, regulating the sale of stocks of merchandise in bulk, does not impair the right to private property. Williams v. Fourth Nat. Bank of Wichita, Kan., 82 Pac. 496, 497, 15 Okl. 477, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, 6 Ann. Cas. 970.

IMPAIRMENT

"Loss of time," as an element of damages for a personal injury means time totally lost because of the inability of the injured person to follow any wage-earning occupation and is more than the impairment of the power to earn money, as "impairment" implies that he can perform some services and his ability to earn money, though reduced, is not totally destroyed. Blue Grass Traction Co. v. Ingles, 131 S. W. 278, 281, 140 Ky. 488.

IMPAIRMENT OF MENTAL FACULTIES

There is a clear distinction between "mental suffering" and "impairment of the mental faculties." Gagnier v. Fargo, 96 N. W. 841, 843, 12 N. D. 219.

IMPANEL

As swearing jury

The word "impaneled" means the final formation by the court of the jury. It is the act that precedes the swearing of the jury and which ascertains who are to be sworn. It cannot be presumed that the grand jury was sworn from the statement that it was "impaneled." State v. Hurst, 99 S. W. 820, 123 Mo. App. 39 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Ostrander, 18 Iowa, 446).

In a record reciting that the jury was "impaneled" to try the cause, the word "impaneled" does not imply that the jurors were sworn. In American practice the word "impaneled" is used of a jury drawn for trial for a particular case by the clerk as well as a general list of jurors returned by the sheriff. The record on appeal in a criminal case, which recites merely that 12 persons, naming them, were selected as a jury out of a panel of qualified jurors, and that the jury returned into the court the verdict, "We, the jury," etc., does not show that the jury was sworn as required by Rev. St. 1899, § 2627, and a conviction based thereon cannot stand. State v. Mitchell, 97 S. W. 561, 562, 199 Mo. 105, 8 Ann. Cas. 749.

IMPARLANCE

See General Imparlance.

IMPARTIAL

IMPARTIAL JURY

Const. art. 6, § 28, giving accused a right to trial by "an 'impartial' jury," gives him a right to trial by jurors qualified to dispose of the case on the testimony presented to them. A jury is not "impartial" whose members are already so impressed with the guilt of the accused that evidence will be required to overcome such impressions. People v. Mol, 100 N. W. 913, 915, 137 Mich. 692, 68 L. R. A. 871, 4 Ann. Cas. 960 (citing Stephens v. People, 38 Mich. 739; Smith v. Eames, 3 Scam. [4 Ill.] 76, 36 Am. Dec. 515).

An "impartial jury" is a jury that must be composed of 12 impartial men. If one of such jurors is incompetent because of actual bias entertained by him against the accused, and conceals such incompetency on his voir dire, the jury as a whole is vitiated. State v. Mott, 74 Pac. 728, 730, 29 Mont. 292.

IMPEACH—IMPEACHMENT

See Successfully Impeached; Collateral Impeachment.

The rule is that jurors cannot impeach their own verdict, but this does not prevent a party showing by affidavits of jurors that the insertion in the answer in a special verdict was by mistake, and that the jury agreed on the opposite answer. Such evidence did not impeach the verdict of the jury, for that is not the written paper filed, but is the agreement which the jury reached, and the former, like most records or writings, is but the expression of evidence of some mental conception. Hence it may well be said that a showing that such writing is not correct is not impeachment of the verdict itself. Wolfram v. Town of Schoepke, 100 N. W. 1054, 1056, 123 Wis. 19, 3 Ann. Cas. 398.

IMPEACHMENT OF WASTE

See Without Impeachment of Waste.

IMPEACHMENT OF WITNESS

Proof of the conviction of a witness of a felony as permitted by Civ. Code Prac. § 597, is an impeachment of the general reputation of the witness within section 599, providing that evidence of the good character of a witness is inadmissible until his general reputation has been impeached. Shields v. Conway, 117 S. W. 340, 341, 133 Ky. 35.

Strictly speaking, the words "successfully impeached," when used in this connection, mean no more than the word "impeached." If a witness is impeached at all, he is "successfully impeached," while an attempt to impeach may, of course, be either successful or unsuccessful. Chicago City R. Co. v. Ryan, 80 N. E. 116, 117, 225 Ill. 287 (citing Powell v. State, 29 S. E. 309, 101 Ga. 9, 65 Am. St. Rep. 277; Smith v. State, 85 S. E. 59, 109 Ga. 479; Commonwealth v. Welch, 63 S. W. 984, 111 Ky. 530; Beedle v. People, 68 N. E. 434, 204 Ill. 197).

The word "impeach," as used in Louisiana Code of Practice (Act 126, 1908, § 1), providing that the parties shall be entitled to examine their opponent after cross-examination and shall not be held as vouching for the credibility of such opponents or as estopped from impeaching the testimony given, includes all that would be meant if the word "rebut" were added, since to impeach the testimony of a witness or to impeach a judgment means to show that it is erroneous. Pratt v. McCoy, 52 South. 151, 152, 125 La. 1040 (citing 21 Cyc. p. 1737).

The credibility of a witness is for the determination of the jury, and it was not error to instruct that a witness may be believed though impeached for general bad character, if the jury believe the witness has sworn to the truth, the use of the word "impeached" being the equivalent of "attacked" or "assailed." Ector v. State, 48 S. E. 815, 316, 120 Ga. 543.

As attempt to impeach

The word "impeached" is frequently used as synonymous in meaning with the words "attempted to impeach." Where a witness is contradicted as to a material matter, or evidence is offered showing that he has made statements at another time inconsistent with his testimony as to a material matter, he is not thereby impeached, according to the more restricted significance of the word, unless the jury believe from the contradiction, or from the proof of inconsistent statements made at another time, that he has willfully sworn falsely as to the material matter in reference to which he has been contradicted or in reference to which it is charged he has made inconsistent statements at another time. Chicago City R. Co. v. Ryan, 80 N. E. 116, 117, 225 Ill. 287 (citing Gullihier v. People, 82 Ill. 145; Swan v. People, 98 Ill. 610; Hoge v. People, 6 N. E. 796, 117 Ill. 35; Perkins v. Knisely, 68 N. E. 486, 204 Ill. 275; Beedle v. People, 68 N. E. 434, 204 Ill. 197).

Conflict of evidence

A party may contradict his own witness, for contradiction is not impeachment, as impeaching evidence is that which is directed solely to the question of the credibility of the witness. De Noyelles v. Delaware Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 138 N. Y. Supp. 855, 858, 78 Misc. Rep. 649.

The newly discovered evidence on which new trial is sought is not "impeaching evidence," merely where it contradicts the testimony of opposing witnesses. Hughes v. Rhode Island Co. (R. I.) 87 Atl. 450.

Testimony tending to contradict material testimony given by a prosecutrix was substantive in character, and it was error to instruct that such evidence was called "impeaching evidence" and was for the purpose of casting doubts upon the truth of her testimony. State v. Dolan, 109 N. W. 609, 610, 132 Iowa, 196.

IMPEDE

A bare attempt, without success, to induce a third person to do what he could to influence jurors in a pending case in a federal court did not obstruct or "impede" the administration of justice, so as to constitute a contempt, punishable under Rev. St. § 725, under the rule that, to constitute such contempt, the act done by the accused must naturally and directly tend to such destruction. As stated in United States v. Seeley, 27 Fed. Cas. 1010; "To 'obstruct,' independent of the acceptance the word has obtained in the criminal law, would seem to stand ex vi termini a direct and positive interposition, which prevented, or tended to prevent, the action of the officer or court in respect to a matter then to be proceeded in. 'Impede' must necesin making cheese by hand, are tools and "implements," within the meaning of the exemption laws. Fish v. Street, 27 Kan. 270, 272, 274.

Horse and wagon

A buggy and harness belonging to an insurance agent, used by him with his horse to carry on his business, are exempt as tools and "implements" used and kept to carry on a trade or business, exempted under subdivision 8 of section 3 of the act relating to exemptions. Wilhite v. Williams, 21 Pac. 256, 257, 41 Kan. 288, 13 Am. St. Rep. 261.

Lumberman's appliances

"Implements" are things necessary to any trade, without which the work cannot be performed. A portable engine and boiler, with saw attachments, with which one makes his livelihood, and on which he depends exclusively therefor, and which he uses and keeps for the purpose of carrying on his business of lumberman, are "implements," within Mills' Ann. St. § 2562, relative to exemptions. Eckman v. Poor, 87 Pac. 1068, 38 Colo. 200 (citing And. Law Dict.; Stemmer v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., 49 Pac. 588, 53 Pac. 498, 33 Or. 65).

A traction engine and the saws, belt, carrier, and other appliances commonly used in connection with such an engine for sawing logs and making lumber are "tools" and "implements," within the meaning of subdivision 8, § 3018, Gen. St. 1901, and are exempt from execution. Reeves & Co. v. Bascue, 91 Pac. 77, 78, 76 Kan. 338, 123 Am. St. Rep. 187.

IMPLICATION

See Amendment by Implication; Necessary Implication; Plain Implication; Repeal by Implication.

"Whatever is implied in a contract is as effectual as what is expressed. 'Implication' is but another name for intention, and if it arises from the language of the contract when considered in its entirety, and is not gathered from the mere expectation of one or both of the parties, it is controlling." Brewster v. Lanyon Zinc Co., 140 Fed. 801, 809, 72 C. C. A. 213.

IMPLIED ADMISSION

In an action brought by the plaintiff to recover for services alleged to have been rendered on the defendant's farm at her request and for her benefit, the defendant admitted on cross-examination that, after the plaintiff's claim had been made known to her, she mortgaged the farm for $900 for the purpose of taking up a mortgage given by her husband on property belonging to him, but on redirect examination the inquiry whether in giving this mortgage she had any purpose to defeat the collection of the plaintiff's claim was excluded by the court. Held: (1) That, if the testimony be called purely collateral, it was not for the plaintiff to call out collateral facts which might prejudice, and then object to an explanation of them. (2) That the testimony that the defendant had given the mortgage under such circumstances might operate as an "implied admission" of liability on her part, and was therefore material and not purely collateral evidence. Pelkey v. Hodgdon, 67 Atl. 218, 219, 102 Me. 426 (citing 1 Wigmore, Ev. § 282; 1 Encyc. of Evidence, p. 366; Heneky v. Smith, 10 Or. 349, 45 Am. Rep. 143).

IMPLIED AMENDMENT

"Implied amendments" is a convenient phrase used to indicate that rule of construction by which a repugnant provision in a constitution or statute modifies or abrogates an earlier one. People ex rel. Elder v. Soura, 74 Pac. 167, 168, 31 Colo. 369, 102 Am. St. Rep. 34.

IMPLIED AUTHORITY

"Implied authority" is that which the principal intends his agent to possess, and which is proper, usual, and necessary to the exercise of the authority actually granted. It includes all such acts and things as are connected directly with and are essential to the business in hand. Dispatch Printing Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, 124 N. W. 236, 240, 109 Minn. 440.

IMPLIED CONSENT

In Const. art. 1, § 21, authorizing the Legislature to provide for waiving of a jury where the consent of the parties is given, an "implied consent" is sufficient, and there is an implied consent where a party defaults or where, after appearance in the action, he fails to appear at the trial or does not deny the plaintiff's claim. State ex rel. Clark v. Neterer, 74 Pac. 668, 670, 33 Wash. 535.

Exemption laws should be liberally construed, and under Laws 1901, p. 365, § 269, extending the homestead exemption to a tenant in common having a homestead on the land with the consent, "express or implied," of his cotenant, the cotenant's acquiescence under such circumstances as raise a presumption of consent, is sufficient; proof of consent directly given viva voce or in writing being unnecessary. Bartie v. Bartie, 112 N. W. 471, 473, 132 Wis. 392 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1349).

IMPLIED CONTRACT

See Contract Implied by Law; Contracts Implied in Fact.

A contract is "implied" where the agreement is matter of inference and deduction. Gillan v. O'Larry, 106 N. Y. Supp. 1024, 1027, 124 App. Div. 498; Indianapolis Coal Traction Co. v. Dalton, 87 N. E. 552, 554, 43 Ind. App. 330.

A contract is implied where one party receives benefits from the other under such circumstances that the law presumes a promise on the part of the person benefited to pay a reasonable price for the same. Jones v. Tucker (Del.) 84 Atl. 1012.

An "implied contract" is one which the law infers from the facts and circumstances of the case, but it will not be inferred in any case where an express contract would for any reason be invalid. When the law lays on one a duty to another, it creates a promise from the former to the latter to discharge the duty. The limit of the doctrine is that where, from the nature of the case, not merely from inability of the party, there could not be a contract in fact, the law does not undertake to create the impossible. Graham v. Tucker, 47 South. 563, 564, 56 Fla. 307, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 531, 131 Am. St. Rep. 124 (quoting Chase v. Second Avenue R. R. Co., 97 N. Y. 384, 49 Am. Rep. 531; Bish. Cont. [2d Ed.] §§ 182, 186).

An implied contract is one which reason and justice dictate, and which, therefore, the law presumes that every person undertakes to perform, and a contract may be implied from circumstances or from the conduct of the person sought to be charged. Ottumwa Mill & Construction Co. v. Manchester, 115 N. W. 911, 912, 139 Iowa, 334.

Of implied contracts there are two kinds, first, where a man takes property and the owner waives the tort and sues in assumpsit, i. e., where there is no meeting of minds; second, where the parties meet, and their meeting results in an unexpressed agreement. Harley v. United States, 25 Sup. Ct. 634, 198 U. S. 229, 49 L. Ed. 1029.

The term "implied contract" has been used to denote not only contracts implied in fact (that is, obligations where the mutual intention to contract, although not expressed, is implied or presumed from the acts of the parties or from surrounding circumstances), but also to denote that class of obligations imposed or created by law without the assent of the party bound, and sometimes even notwithstanding his actual dissent, upon the ground that they are dictated by reason and justice. Harty Bros. & Harty Co. v. Polakow, 86 N. E. 1085, 1086, 237 Ill. 559.

The plaintiff, a real estate agent, was requested by the defendant to secure for her a tenant for one or more years of her estate. He secured a tenant, under a written lease, "to hold for five seasons as follows: 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906, and 1907, June 1st to October 15th." The lease provided that, in the event of the property being sold, " * * * this lease to be determined and ended at the end of the season immediately following the contract of sale." The plaintiff executed the lease for the defendant as her agent. He was paid an annual commission of $150 for each of the years 1903 and 1904. The premises were sold by the defendant during the season of 1904. There was no express contract for commissions, either as to time or amount. Held, that the defendant is not liable to the plaintiff for commissions, as upon an "implied contract," for the years 1905, 1906, and 1907. Mears v. Jones, 67 Atl. 555, 557, 102 Me. 485.

A seller of a traction engine for use by the buyer in the performance of his contract with the government under the reclamation act (Act June 17, 1902, c. 1093, 32 Stat. 388), who as mortgagee for the price remained the owner with right to possession for the failure of the buyer to pay at maturity the first note for the price, could, on the government taking possession, as authorized by section 7 of the act, of the contractor's machinery and completing the work, sue the government for the value of the use of the engine either on an "implied contract" to pay therefor, or on its constitutional obligation within the Tucker act (Act March 3, 1887, c. 359, 24 Stat. 505), authorizing actions on claims founded on the Constitution or on contracts, express or implied. United States v. Buffalo Pitts Co., 198 Fed. 905, 906, 114 C. C. A. 119.

As contract

See Contract.

Express contracts compared

An "implied contract" requires, the same as an express contract, the element of a mutual meeting of the minds and of an intention to contract, and the two classes of contracts differ only in methods of proof, and an "implied contract" is established by proof of circumstances from which the intention to contract is implied as matter of fact, and the implication arises on legal principles, and is conclusive in the absence of something efficiently displacing it, as a presumption of law. Wojahn v. National Union Bank of Oshkosh, 129 N. W. 1068, 1077, 144 Wis. 648.

The terms "express contracts" and "contracts implied in fact" are used to indicate, not a distinction in the principles of contract, but a difference in the character of the evidence by which the contract is proved, and the same elements are essential in each case. Fordtran v. Stowers, 113 S. W. 631, 634, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 226.

As implied by law

"By reason of the relation of parties or the existence of an obligation or duty, a contract may be implied by law which a party never actually intended to enter into, and the obligation of which he did actually intend never to assume." A contract between a common carrier and a passenger is implied from the fact of receiving the passenger to carry for hire, and an action by the passenger against the carrier from personal injuries caused by negligence is an action on an "implied contract," within the municipal court act. Chudnowski v. Eckels, 88 N. E. 846, 847, 232 Ill. 812.

An implied contract is one where liability exists from implication of law arising from facts and circumstances independent of agreement or presumed intention based on the doctrine of unjust enrichment; the implied agreement being one defining the duty rather than his intention. Board of Highway Com'rs, Bloomington Tp., v. City of Bloomington, 97 N. E. 280, 284, 253 Ill. 164, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 471.

The term "implied contract" includes not only contracts in fact, but also that class of obligations imposed or created by law without the consent of the party bound, and in some cases even notwithstanding his actual dissent, called also "constructive contracts," or "contracts implied by law." Harty Bros. & Harty Co. v. Polakow, 86 N. E. 1085, 1086, 237 Ill. 559.

"Implied contract" is applied to obligations imposed or created by law, regardless of the assent of the party bound, on the ground that they are dictated by reason and justice, and are allowed to be enforced by an action ex contractu, and are not contract obligations in the true sense, but are clothed with the semblance of contract for the purpose of the remedy, and are described by the term "quasi contract" or "constructive contract." Leonard v. State, 120 S. W. 183, 187, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 307.

IMPLIED COVENANT

An owner who divides his lands into lots and streets, as shown by a map filed by him with the county clerk, and who sells lots as shown thereon, does not, in the absence of a neighborhood scheme calling for the erection of but one building on a single lot, "impliedly covenant" not to sell the lands except in the parcels delineated on the map, but he may subdivide the land into smaller tracts and sell them in such parcels or devote any part of the same to public uses as streets, parks, etc., but he does impliedly covenant not to use the land designated as streets, and a purchaser of a lot may enjoin a change either in the location or width of the streets without first showing that the first will result in depreciation of the value of the lot purchased. Herold v. Columbia Investment & Real Estate Co., 67 Atl. 607, 608, 72 N. J. Eq. 857, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1067, 129 Am. St. Rep. 718, 16 Ann. Cas. 580.

"An 'implied dedication' is one arising by operation of law from the acts of the owner. It may exist without any express grant, and need not be evidenced by any writing, nor, indeed, by any form of words, oral or written. It is essential, however, that the donor should intend to set the land apart for the benefit of the public, for there can be no dedication unless there is present the intent to appropriate the land to the public use. The intent which the law means, however, is not a secret one, but is that which is expressed in the visible conduct and open acts of the owner. If the acts are such as would fairly and reasonably lead an ordinarily prudent man to infer an intent to dedicate, and they are so received and acted upon by the public, the owner cannot, after acceptance by the public, recall the appropriation. Regard is to be had to the character and effect of the open and known acts, and not to any latent or hidden purpose." Tise v. Whitaker-Harvey Co., 59 S. E. 1012, 1013, 146 N. C. 374 (quoting and adopting Elliott, Roads & S. [2d Ed.] §§ 121-123, et seq.).

An "implied dedication" is one arising by the operation of law from the acts of the owner and is founded on the doctrine of equitable estoppel. It is essential that the owner intended to set the land apart to the use and benefit of the public, but this need not be evidenced by deed, and it is enough that there has been some clear, unequivocal act or declaration evidencing an intention to set it apart for a public use, and that there has been an acceptance on the part of the public. Evans v. Scott, 83 S. W. 874, 877, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 373 (citing Elliott, Roads & S. [2d Ed.] § 123).

IMPLIED EASEMENT

Easements by "implied" grant are those which are strictly necessary to the principal thing granted, and mere convenience is not enough. McSweeney v. Commonwealth, 70 N. E. 429, 430, 185 Mass. 371.

An "implied grant of easement" in favor of a grantee arises from circumstances where, at the time of the conveyance, the grantor was the owner of land constituting both the dominant and servient estates. Brown v. Dickey, 75 Atl. 382, 384, 106 Me. 97.

An "easement by implication" arises only from necessity, as where the owner of land sells a part of it to another, and the part so sold is wholly surrounded by the land of the vendee, so that the purchaser is entitled to a right of way for ingress and egress. Where an easement, consisting of an alleged right of way through certain doors, capable of being closed, connecting the rotunda of a hotel with plaintiff's saloon, did not exist by express grant, it could not be implied from the fact that the owner of the room in which the saloon was operated, who was also a part owner of the hotel, had caused such doors to be placed according to plans and specifications prepared for the hotel with the consent of the other owners thereof; additional means of access to the saloon having been provided. Beiser v. Moore, 84 S. W. 219, 222, 73 Ark. 296 (citing 2 Bl. Comm. 36).

IMPLIED EMANCIPATION

An "implied emancipation" results where the parent, by his acts or conduct, impliedly consents that the minor may leave home and shift for himself; the father, under these circumstances, however, being authorized to renounce the same within a reasonable time. Rounds Bros. v. McDaniel, 118 S. W. 956, 958, 133 Ky. 669, 134 Am. St. Rep. 482, 19 Ann. Cas. 326.

IMPLIED INVITATION

See Licensee by Implied Invitation.

An "implied invitation" to use dangerous premises, as distinguished from a mere "license," arises where some benefit accrues or is supposed to accrue to the party extending the invitation, or the invitation is in the interest of both parties, or the going on the premises is upon the business of the owner. In other words, where a servant in going to his work has but one way to go, and that way is on the master's premises, and that way is in fact dangerous, and he knows it, and the knowledge of the danger and the use of the way is alleged to have been known to the master, he is more than a licensee, and he cannot, as a matter of law, be said to have assumed the risk, or been negligent in so doing, where the negligence counted on is running of a train in violation of an ordinance owing to the rule that in such case there is no assumption of the risk. Cleveland, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Powers, 88 N. E. 1073, 1077, 173 Ind. 105 (citing Northwestern El. R. Co. v. O'Malley, 107 Ill. App. 599; Plummer v. Dill, 31 N. E. 128, 156 Mass. 426, 32 Am. St. Rep. 463; Dixon v. Swift, 56 Atl. 761, 98 Me. 207; 29 Cyc. p. 454).

IMPLIED LICENSE

Where the owners of adjoining real estate entered into a contract for the common construction of a hotel, each reserving the right to use the ground floor portion, except the rotunda, and doors were constructed between the rotunda and a saloon operated in a room owned by one of such co-owners, the operator of the saloon had an "implied license" to use the rotunda as a passageway to the saloon so long as the doors remained open. Belser v. Moore, 84 S. W. 219, 222, 73 Ark. 296.

An "implied license" to use or cut timber from real property partakes of the nature of an estoppel, and may be found to exist from the representations of the owner, or from silence, where the owner sees and knows the extent of an act or acts done on his property, and fails to object thereto. Stevens v. Howerton, 96 N. E. 968, 970, 49 Ind. App. 151.

IMPLIED MALICE

A charge in a prosecution for murder, defining "implied malice" as that which the law infers from or imputes to certain acts, however suddenly done, is correct. Burns v. State (Tex.) 145 S. W. 356, 362; Sue v. State, 105 S. W. 804, 809, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 122.

"Implied malice" is that legal implication of malice which arises in cases of homicide, where one man willfully and deliberately kills another, although express malice cannot be shown. Turner v. State, 126 Pac. 452, 457, 8 Okl. Cr. 11 (quoting 4 Cooley, Bl. Comm. 195).

"Implied malice" is that which the law infers from or imputes to certain acts, however suddenly done. Thus, when the facts do not establish express malice beyond a reasonable doubt, nor tend to excuse or justify the act under the law of justifiable homicide, nor tend to reduce the offense to manslaughter. Sue v. State, 105 S. W. 804, 809, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 122.

"Implied malice" in the law of homicide is an inference or conclusion of law from the facts found by the jury. State v. Powell (Del.) 61 Atl. 966, 971, 5 Pennewill, 24; Same v. Mills (Del.) 69 Atl. 841, 842, 6 Pennewill, 497; Same v. Brown (Del.) 61 Atl. 1077, 1078, 5 Pennewill, 339; Same v. Wiggins (Del.) 76 Atl. 632, 635, 7 Pennewill, 127; Same v. Di Guglielmo (Del.) 55 Atl. 350, 351, 4 Pennewill, 336.

"Implied malice" in the law of homicide, is an inference or conclusion of law from facts found by the jury. Where the killing was done under the influence of a wicked and depraved heart, or with a cruel and wicked indifference to human life, the law implies malice. State v. Borrelli (Del.) 76 Atl. 605, 606, 1 Boyce, 349.

"Legal or implied malice (as distinguished from ill will or 'malice' in the vernacular sense of the word) is defined to be the intentional doing of a wrong act without just cause or excuse." An instruction which states that malice does not mean mere spite, hatred, or dislike, but that condition of mind which makes a person disregard the rights of others by doing an act without just cause or provocation, is erroneous. Ickenroth v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 162, 166, 102 Mo. App. 597.

"Implied malice" as an element of homicide includes that general malignity and reckless disregard of human life which proceed from a heart devoid of a just sense of social duty and fatally bent on mischief. Where the fatal act is done deliberately or without adequate cause, the law presumes that it was done with malice. State v. Tilghman (Del.) 63 Atl. 772, 773, 6 Pennewill, 54.

"Implied malice" is such as arises or may be inferred from the intentional doing of an unlawful or wrongful act with a wrongful purpose. Burns v. Commonwealth, 124 S. W. 409, 412, 136 Ky. 468.

"Malice," as an element of murder, contemplates wickedness and excludes a just or legal cause of excuse. It is "expressed" where there is positive direct evidence showing that at the time of the killing it was really entertained and "implied" where the evidence does not directly show that the malice was entertained at that time but is necessarily indirectly implied from the circumstances and facts which have been proved. State v. Lee, 60 S. E. 524, 525, 79 S. C. 223.

A charge defining "implied malice" in a portion thereof excepted to stating, in the language of Pen. Code 1895, arts. 51, 717, that "the instrument or means by which a homicide is committed are to be taken into consideration in judging the intent of the party offending," and that, "if the instrument be one not likely to produce death, it is not to be presumed that death was designed, unless from the manner in which it was used such intention evidently appears," and adding that the act of killing must be unlawful and with implied malice as defined, and if the design to kill is formed in a mind excited by passion or disturbed by any inadequate cause, and cooling time has not elapsed before the execution of that design, the homicide will be of no greater magnitude than murder in the second degree, etc., is sufficient as against the objection that the court failed to define adequate cause, which it did define in its instruction on manslaughter. Manning v. State, 98 S. W. 251, 253, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 211.

As arising from abandoned heart or lack of provocation

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, the evidence shows no considerable provocation in the killing, or the circumstances attending it show an abandoned and malignant heart, then malice is implied. State v. Fleming, 106 Pac. 305, 313, 17 Idaho, 471.

An instruction that malice is "implied" from a wanton and willful act done without legal provocation is a correct statement of the law. State v. Thompson, 56 S. E. 789, 791, 76 S. C. 116.

"Malice," within the definition of murder in Pen. Code, § 187, as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, is "implied" when no considerable provocation appears, or when the circumstances attending the killing show an abandoned and malignant heart. People v. Frank, 83 Pac. 578, 579, 2 Cal. App. 283.

As arising from deliberate, cruel acts

"Implied malice" is an inference or conclusion of law from the facts proved, and is implied by law from every unlawful, deliberate, and cruel act committed by one person against another, however sudden the act may be. State v. Underhill (Del.) 69 Atl. 880, 882, 6 Pennewill, 491.

"Implied malice," essential to constitute murder in the second degree, is an inference from the facts proved, and is implied by law from every deliberate cruel act committed by one against another, however sudden the act may be. State v. Cephus (Del.) 67 Atl. 150, 151, 6 Pennewill, 160.

Malice as an element of murder, may be implied from the deliberate selection and use of a deadly weapon, or from any deliberate, cruel act committed by the assailant against his victim, no matter how sudden such act may be; and whenever such act from which death ensues is proven, unaccompanied by circumstances of justification, excuse, or mitigation, the law presumes that the homicide was committed with malice, and it then devolves on accused to show that the killing was not malicious, and that the act was not murder. State v. De Paolo (Del.) 84 Atl. 213, 214.

"Implied malice" means that which may be inferred from the acts and facts shown. Thus, when a wanton, wicked, cruel, or revengeful act is shown, the inference or implication may be drawn that the person who did such an act was actuated by malice. And when one person assaults another with a deadly weapon (that is, a weapon that will likely produce death), the law presumes malice from that fact alone, in the absence of proof, either direct or implied, to the contrary. The selection and use of a weapon, such as a revolver, in a deadly manner, without legal excuse, raises a presumption and is evidence of malice. State v. Hayden, 107 N. W. 929, 931, 131 Iowa, 1.

"Implied malice" in murder cases may be proved by a deliberately formed design to kill, by the preparation of the weapon or other means for doing great bodily harm, by circumstances of brutality attending the act, or by previous hostility, or threats and declarations of intention to kill or to do serious injury. Esterline v. State, 66 Atl. 269, 270, 105 Md. 629.

As arising from unlawful killing

"Implied malice" is where a man without any cause whatever, regardless of law and society, suddenly shoots down another man. The law implies malice. He has a depraved heart. State v. Reeder, 51 S. E. 702, 704, 72 S. C. 223.

"Implied malice" is an inference or conclusion of law from an unjustifiable and inexcusable killing done without design or premeditation, but under the influence of a depraved heart, or with a reckless disregard of human life. State v. Watson (Del.) 82 Atl. 1086, 1088.

"Implied malice" is that malice presumed by law from an unexplained and intentional killing, when there are no facts which showed express malice nor circumstances which would excuse, mitigate, or justify the killing. Hernandez v. State, 110 S. W. 753, 755, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 468.

"Implied malice" is that which the law infers from or imputes to certain acts. Thus, when the fact of an unlawful killing is es-established, and there are no circumstances in evidence which tend to establish the existence of express malice, nor which tend to mitigate, excuse, or justify the act, then the law imputes malice." Thomas v. State, 74 S. W. 36, 38, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 111 (quoting with approval from Boyd v. State, 12 S. W. 737, 28 Tex. App. 137).

"Implied malice" is that which the law infers from or imputes to certain acts, however suddenly done. Thus, when the fact of an unlawful killing is established, and the facts do not establish express malice beyond a reasonable doubt, nor tend to mitigate, excuse, or justify the act, then the law implies malice, and the murder is in the second degree. McLin v. State, 90 S. W. 1107, 1108, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 549; Rice v. State, 103 S. W. 1156, 1168, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 255.

An instruction that implied malice might be inferred from the fact of an unlawful killing, given in connection with the general charge of the court defining "implied malice," is not error. Friday v. State (Tex.) 79 S. W. 815, 816.

In a prosecution for homicide, the court correctly charged that "implied malice is constructive malice, and not a fact to be proved specifically. It is an inference or conclusion, founded upon the facts and circumstances of the case as they are ascertained to exist, thus: When the proof shows an unlawful killing, and no evidence has been adduced establishing the existence of express malice on the one hand, or which tends to establish any justification, excuse, or mitigation on the other, the law implies malice, and the murder is of the second degree. But in this connection you are charged that where an indictment charges murder on implied malice alone, and the evidence establishes or tends to establish express malice as a fact, it is not to be understood that such proof would on the one hand be incompetent, nor on the other that it would create a variance from the allegation in the indictment; but such evidence, notwithstanding it shows express malice, would in such case be sufficient to warrant a conviction for murder in the second degree, since express malice comprises and embraces implied malice, just as murder of the first degree embraces murder of the second degree." Wilson v. State, 90 S. W. 312, 315, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 50.

Pen. Code 1901, § 172, declares that "murder" is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought. Such malice is express or implied. Section 173 declares that all murder perpetrated by poison or by any other kind of wilful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or which is committed in the perpetration of certain crimes, is murder in the first degree, and all other kinds of murder are in the second degree. Held, that the word "other" in section 173 was used to supply the sense of addition to the enumeration; and hence an instruction that it was not essential to a verdict of murder in the first degree by poison that there should be proof that defendant administered the poison to decedent with a specific intent to kill him was proper; malice being implied. Eytling v. Territory, 100 Pac. 443, 445, 12 Ariz. 131.

In a prosecution for murder, the court instructed that the next lower grade of homicide than murder in the first degree is murder in the second degree; that malice is necessary to murder in the second degree, but the distinguishing feature, so far as the element of malice is concerned, is that for murder in the first degree, malice must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt as an existing fact, while in murder in the second degree malice will be implied from an unlawful killing. The next instruction defined "implied malice" as that which the law infers from or imputes to certain acts, however suddenly done, as when the fact of an unlawful killing is established, and the facts do not establish express malice beyond a reasonable doubt, or tend to mitigate, excuse, or justify the act, then the law implies malice, and the murder is in the second degree, and the law does not define murder in the second degree further than if the killing is shown to be unlawful, and there is nothing in the evidence on the one hand to show express malice, nor on the other hand to reduce the killing below the grade of manslaughter, then the law implies malice, and the homicide is murder in the second degree. Held that, considering both instructions, the first did not assume that there was an unlawful killing, but the instruction properly presented the law on second degree murder. Barton v. State, 111 S. W. 1042, 1044, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 443.

Intent

Implied or constructive malice is an inference or conclusion of law from the facts found by the jury, and, among these, the actual intention of the prisoner becomes an important and material fact; for, though he may not have intended to take away life or to do any personal harm, yet he may have been engaged in the perpetration of some other felonious or unlawful act from which the law raises the presumption of malice. State v. Brinte (Del.) 53 Atl. 258, 262, 4 Pennewill, 551.

IMPLIED NOTICE

"Implied notice" or legal notice is the same as constructive notice. Cooper v. Flesher, 103 Pac. 1016, 1020, 24 Okl. 47, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180, 20 Ann. Cas. 29.

"Legal or implied notice" is the same as "constructive notice," which, according to Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, c. 28, § 12, is notice imputed by the law to a person not having actual notice. "Implied notice" does not include either positive knowledge or information so direct as to necessarily carry conviction to the mind of the person notified, and neither does it belong to that class which depends on legal presumption, but it is substantial evidence from which the jury, after estimating its value, may infer notice. Cooper v. Flesner, 103 Pac. 1016, 1020, 1021, 24 Okl. 47, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180, 20 Ann. Cas. 29 (quoting Wilson v. Brown, 15 N. Y. 354; Wade, Notice, §§ 3-5).

IMPLIED POWERS

An "implied power" of a corporation is one that is directly and immediately appropriate to the execution of its express powers, and not one that has but a slight, indirect, or remote relation to the specific purposes of the corporation. People v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 84 N. E. 368, 372, 233 Ill. 378, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 604, 122 Am. St. Rep. 181, 18 Ann. Cas. 285.

"Implied powers" of corporations presumptively exist only to an extent necessary to enable them to carry out express powers granted and to accomplish the purpose of their creation, and an incidental power is one that may be immediately appropriate to the execution of the specific power granted, and not one that has some slight or remote relation to it. Robert Gair Co. v. Columbia Rice Packing Co., 50 South. 8, 11, 124 La. 193.

A testator made the following provisions in his will: "Item. I give, devise and bequeath to my wife, E. A. M. all my estate both real and personal wherever found and however situate for her use during life. Item. At the death of my said wife, whatever may remain of said estates, I give, devise and bequeath to my daughter, E. A. Y." Held, that a power of sale by the life tenant was annexed by "implication" to the devise of the life estate in the first item, and that it sufficiently appears that the testator intended the power of sale to extend to both the real and the personal estate. The devise of whatever "should remain of said estate" was not a devise of whatever should remain of his estate in general but whatever should remain of the real estate and of the personal estate. The word "estates" in the plural naturally has this significance, and in this case it expressed the real intention of the testator. By saying that only so much of the real estate as might "remain" at the death of the wife should pass to the daughter, testator expressed a purpose that the use given to the wife should extend to a sale of the property subject to the use, if she wished to sell the same or the proceeds of the property was needed for her support. Unless this construction is placed on the language, there is no practical significance in the use of the word "remain." Young v. Hillier, 87 Atl. 571, 572, 103 Me. 17, 125 Am. St. Rep. 233.

IMPLIED PROMISE

A so-called "implied promise" is, in truth, no contract at all except by legal fiction. It is a disputable legal presumption raised on considerations of equity and custom. Fitzpatrick v. Dooley, 86 S. W. 719, 721, 112 Mo. App. 165.

An "implied promise" exists where equity and justice require a party to a contract to do or refrain from doing a particular thing, where the covenant on one side involves a corresponding obligation on the other, where by the relation of the parties and the subject-matter of the contract a duty is owing by the one not expressly bound by the contract to the other in reference to the subject of the contract, and where it may be rightfully assumed that it would have been made if attention had been drawn to it. Marvin v. Rogers, 115 S. W. 863, 866, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 423.

Plaintiffs, who were subcontractors for the stone for a municipal bridge, in performing alleged extra work and furnishing higher grade stone than required by the contract, had knowledge that the bridge and highway district looked to the contractors to furnish the stone, and understood that plaintiffs were furnishing the same to the contractors and were to receive their pay only from them, who were the only ones having any right to look to the district for payment. Plaintiffs made out their bills for extra work and presented them monthly to the contractors, of which fact the district was informed; and plaintiffs did not understand that they were furnishing such extras on the credit of the district. Held, that there was no "implied promise" on the part of the district to pay for the extras. Beattie v. McMullen, 67 Atl. 488, 496, 80 Conn. 160.

IMPLIED REPEAL

See Repeal by Implication.

IMPLIED REVOCATION

8 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, c. 148, par. 17, declaring that no will shall be revoked otherwise than by burning, canceling, tearing, or obliterating the same, by the testator himself, or in his presence, by his direction, or by some other will, and no words spoken shall revoke any will, did not abrogate the common law as to implied revocation of a part of a will by a conveyance by the testator in his lifetime of the property devised. Phillippe v. Clevenger, 87 N. E. 858, 859, 239 Ill. 117, 16 Ann. Cas. 207.

"Ademption" has to do with the subject-matter of bequests and is entirely distinct from an "implied revocation" of the terms of a will. "Ademption" involves action upon the part of the testator, the doing of some act with regard to the subject-matter which interferes with the operation of the will (that is, he anticipates the gift there made by bestowing it during his lifetime upon the legatee or disposes of the subject-matter in some way which puts it out of the question to follow his directions as set forth in the will), while "implied revocation" is founded upon a presumed and neglected duty upon the part of the testator, or upon a change in his family relations. The reason which lies behind the doctrine, as defined both in the common law and in the statutes is that some obvious injustice may be prevented; that some moral duty, which has been overlooked, it is presumed, by the testator, may be discharged. A bequest to "my wife, M. B.," is not revoked by implication because subsequently the wife procured an absolute divorce. In re Jones' Estate, 60 Atl. 915, 923, 211 Pa. 364, 69 L. R. A. 940, 107 Am. St. Rep. 581, 3 Ann. Cas. 221.

IMPLIED TRUST

An "implied trust" is one which arises by operation of law. Norton v. Bassett, 97 Pac. 894, 895, 154 Cal. 411, 129 Am. St. Rep. 162.

"Implied trusts" arise by an implied agreement between the parties as to the trust intended. Stevens v. Fitzpatrick, 118 S. W. 51, 55, 218 Mo. 708.

An "implied trust" is one which the facts and circumstances of the case force upon the notice of the court by the mandate of the law and compels its recognition. Orton v. Knab, 3 Wis. 576, 596.

"Implied trusts" are those arising when trusts are not directly declared in terms, but the court from the whole transaction and the words used implies that it was the intent of the parties to create a trust. Lehrling v. Lehrling, 115 Pac. 556, 557, 84 Kan. 766.

An "implied trust" is one which is deducible from a transaction, as a matter of clear intention, but not in the words of the parties, or which is superinduced upon the transaction by operation of law, as a matter of equity, independent of the particular intention of the parties. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Smith, 147 S. W. 54, 55, 103 Ark. 145; Jones v. Byrne, 149 Fed. 457, 463; In re Harper, 133 Fed. 970, 974 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Bouv. Dict. 754).

"Implied trusts" and resulting or constructive trusts are creatures of equity and take form whenever title is obtained by means of chicanery, deceit, or other variety of fraud, actual or constructive. In such cases mere forms will be disregarded, and equity will ascertain and act on the substance of things, regarding that as done which should have been done. Sanguinetti v. Rossen, 107 Pac. 560, 562, 12 Cal. App. 623.

"Implied trusts" are of two species; one denominated a "resulting trust," and the other a "constructive trust." In the first class are those trusts which attach to a legal estate acquired by consent of the parties, not in violation of any fiduciary duty or trust relation, for the common benefit of both trustee and cestui que trust. This trust arises out of, and is declared in favor of, the intent of the parties creating it. Its inception is in good faith and in furtherance of fair and honest dealing. The other species of implied trusts, which is called "constructive trusts," is one imposed by a court of equity for the purpose of enforcing an equitable right as against the fraudulent intent of the trustee ex maleficio. This latter class of implied trusts have their origin in the bad faith of the trustee and are imposed by a court of conscience to defeat his wrongful ends. Hanson v. Hanson, 111 N. W. 368, 372, 78 Neb. 584.

Trusts are classified into two general divisions, "direct or express trusts" (that is, those springing from agreement of the parties), and into "constructive or implied trusts" (that is, those created by the rules and principles of equity). Under this latter class, fall all of those trusts known distinctively as implied or constructive, as well as those called resultant; in short, all those that do not spring from the agreement of the parties. * * * A constructive trust is one not created by any words, either expressly or impliedly evincing a direct intention to create a trust, but only by the construction and operation of equity in order to satisfy the demands of justice." Newman v. Newman, 55 S. E. 377, 379, 60 W. Va. 371, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 370.

Under Civ. Code 1895, § 8152, "implied trusts" are such as are inferred by law from the nature of the transaction or the conduct of the parties. A petition alleging that E., being the owner of land, conveyed the same to defendant to secure an indebtedness of $375, that the conveyance was made by a deed absolute on its face but upon the following trusts and conditions: Defendant to hold the title to the property to secure him in the payment of the indebtedness without interest and to sell the same after the death of E., and, after deducting from the proceeds of sale the amount of the indebtedness, to pay the balance to the children of E. in equal proportions—that E. died intestate, owing no other debts than that to defendant, that there has been no administration upon E.'s estate, that such estate is of the value of $3,000, that defendant denies that he holds such property in trust but claims the absolute title thereto, does not set forth a trust inferred by law "from the nature of the transaction or the conduct of the parties," but the facts alleged amount to an express trust. Eaton v. Barnes, 49 S. E. 593, 594, 121 Ga. 548.

If a mother buys lands with her own funds, and causes the title to be made to her son under an understanding and agreement that the property is to be hers, and that the son will make to her such conveyance as she may require, a trust in favor of the mother will be implied. Wildar v. Wildar, 75 S. E. 654, 655, 138 Ga. 573.

IMPLIED WAIVER

"Implied waiver" is akin to estoppel in pais, and is the intentional relinquishment of a known right, or such conduct as warrants an inference of its relinquishment, and a waiver occurs when one in possession of a right with knowledge of the facts does something inconsistent with its existence, or of his intention to rely on it. Marquette County Sav. Bank v. Koivisto, 127 N. W. 660, 682, 162 Mich. 554.

An "implied waiver," of a forfeiture for instance, is where one party has pursued such a course of conduct, with reference to the other party who has incurred the forfeiture, as to evidence an intention to waive the same, or where the conduct pursued is inconsistent with any other honest intention than an intention to waive the forfeiture, and the one who has incurred the forfeiture has been induced by such conduct to act upon the belief that there has been a waiver, and has incurred trouble and expense thereby. Astrich v. German-American Ins. Co., 181 Fed. 13, 20, 65 C. C. A. 251.

An "implied waiver" of proofs of loss is one which may be inferred from circumstances, as where the conduct of the insurer is such as to induce delay or render the production or correction of the proof useless or unavailing by a distinct denial of liability and refusal to pay upon a specific, substantive ground, unconnected with the proof of loss, before the time had expired within which the insured was bound by the terms of the policy to present formal proofs, or to induce in the mind of the insured a belief that no proofs will be required, or that those already furnished, though defective, are satisfactory and therefore sufficient. Frost v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. of London and Edinburgh, 60 Atl. 803, 806, 77 Vt. 407.

IMPLIED WARRANTY

"A warranty is 'implied' where, from the circumstances surrounding the parties at the time of the sale or from the nature of the thing sold, the law assumes it to be just that the buyer should be protected, in addition to the contract of sale, by a further implied contract or guaranty on the part of the vendor, and so raises by implication a warranty on the seller's part." Haines v. Neece, 92 S. W. 919, 923, 116 Mo. App. 499.

The prohibition of a contract of sale against any agreement, condition, or stipulation, not contained in the contract, does not cover "implied warranties" which are not matters of agreement but arise by operation of law. A written contract for the sale of binder twine, which in terms contains no warranties of quality, but contains a provision that no agreement, verbal or otherwise, not contained in the written contract will be recognized unless approved by the vendor in writing, does not exclude the warranties which arise upon such sales under Rev. Codes 1899, §§ 3976, 3978, relating to latent defects and merchantability. Hooven & Allison Co. v. Wirtz, 107 N. W. 1078, 1080, 15 N. D. 477 (citing and adopting Hoe v. Sanborn, 21 N. Y. 563, 78 Am. Dec. 163; Kellogg Bridge Co. v. Hamilton, 9 Sup. Ct. 537, 110 U. S. 114, 28 L. Ed. 86).

"The principles applicable to sales of personal property, when the buyer has had an opportunity to examine before buying, may be stated as follows: The buyer must avail himself of opportunity and make reasonable use of his senses to discover defects. Failing to do this, he is without just cause of complaint if the article purchased is blemished with defects, the existence of which could have been ascertained had he performed his duty. No agreement of the seller to warrant against such defects will be 'implied.' * * * With respect to defects, the existence of extent of which are not discoverable upon ordinary inspection, but which are known to the seller, an agreement to warrant will be implied from representations of soundness. The seller is not permitted to take unfair advantage from his superior knowledge. If, before sale, the buyer discloses to the seller his intention to purchase the article for a special use, the latter, in making the sale at a sound price, agrees by implication that the article is free from hidden defects that would impair its usefulness for such purpose. Even want of knowledge of such defects will not relieve him, for his liability as a warrantor infixes the contract of sale by his assurance, express or implied, that the article is suitable for the purpose of its intended use." Moore v. Koger, 87 S. W. 602, 603, 113 Mo. App. 423.

Where a written contract of sale contains an express warranty, there is no further "implied warranty" involved in the sale. Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Hodges (Ky.) 90 S. W. 580.

Where a merchant engaged in general mercantile business sold a boom of logs, and his agent graded and scaled and delivered them to the purchaser, who inspected them before running them through its mills, there was no "implied warranty" as to the soundness of the logs, and the purchaser could not recover for damages to its mill on account of iron imbedded in the logs. Ketchum v. Stetson & Post Mill Co. 78 Pac. 1127, 1128, 33 Wash. 92.

Where defendants wrote that they had booked plaintiff's order for a car load of corn, the corn to be loaded and sent to destination as promptly as railroad facilities would permit, the contract was an executory one, and there was an "implied warranty" on defendants' part that the corn would be sound and merchantable on arrival at the place of delivery. Atkins Bros. Co. v. Landa, 95 S. W. 949, 950, 119 Mo. App. 119 (citing 2 Mechem, Sales, § 1340; Babcock v. Trice, 18 Ill. 420, 68 Am. Dec. 580; Howard v. Hoey [N. Y.] 23 Wend. 350, 35 Am. Dec. 572; Murchie v. Cornell, 29 N. E. 207, 155 Mass. 60, 14 L. R. A. 492, 31 Am. St. Rep. 526; Rodgers v. Niles, 11 Ohio St. 48, 78 Am. Dec. 290).

"Where a manufacturer contracts to supply an article which he manufactures, to be applied to a particular purpose known to him, so that the buyer necessarily trusts to the judgment and skill of the manufacturer, there is an 'implied warranty' that it shall be reasonably fit for the desired purpose. This implies that the material and workmanship shall be good, and the vendor is liable in such case for any latent defect not disclosed to the purchaser arising from the manner in which the article was manufactured." The Nimrod, 141 Fed. 215, 216 (citing 2 Benj. Sales, 988-993; Hoe v. Sanborn, 21 N. Y. 552, 78 Am. Dec. 163; Snow v. Schomacker Mfg. Co., 69 Ala. 111, 44 Am. Rep. 509; Kellogg Bridge Co. v. Hamilton, 8 Sup. Ct. 537, 110 U. S. 108, 28 L. Ed. 86; Nashua Iron & Steel Co. v. Brush, 91 Fed. 213, 33 C. C. A. 456; Gage v. Carpenter, 107 Fed. 886, 47 C. C. A. 39; Pullman Palace-Car Co. v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 15 Sup. Ct. 503, 157 U. S. 108, 39 L. Ed. 632).

Where a known, described, and defined article is ordered of a manufacturer, although it is stated to be required by the purchaser for a particular purpose, still, if the known, defined, and described thing be actually supplied, there is no "implied warranty" that it shall answer the particular purpose intended by the purchaser. Beggs v. James Hanley Brewing Co., 62 Atl. 373, 375, 27 R. I. 385, 114 Am. St. Rep. 44 (citing Benj. Sales, § 657; 1 Parsons, Cont. 589; Seltz v. Brewer's Refrigerating Mach. Co., 12 Sup. Ct. 46, 141 U. S. 510, 35 L. Ed. 837).

IMPLICIT NOTICE

Notice to the purchaser of a note may be of two kinds, "explicit notice" of the fraud or illegality, and "implicit" or "general notice." If the purchaser of notes at the time of buying them had notice or knowledge of some illegality or fraud which vitiated them, though he was not apprised of its nature, this would be such "general notice" as would affect his title. Mere negligence, however gross, not amounting to this willful and fraudulent blindness, will not of itself amount to notice; but the jury may and should consider the fact of such negligence as it may tend to prove such "general notice" Mack v. Starr, 61 Atl. 472, 473, 78 Conn. 184.

IMPORT—IMPORTATION

Owner of import, see Owner.

The word "imported" means at least prima facie dutiable. United States v. White, 171 Fed. 775, 777.

To "import" liquor into a county is to bring such liquor across the county line, either by one's self or by an agent. State v. Williams, 61 S. E. 61, 68, 146 N. C. 618, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 299, 14 Ann. Cas. 562.

Where alcoholic liquors imported from a foreign country were stored in New York, their transmission to New Orleans was not an "importation," but a "transportation," within the Wilson Act (Act Cong. Aug. 8, 1890, c. 728), though the storing in New York was only temporary and the liquors were originally intended for New Orleans. State v. Frederick De Bary & Co., 58 South. 892, 894, 130 La. 1090.

An indictment charging that defendants conspired and agreed with another with a view to lessen and destroy full and free competition in the sale of coal oil "imported into this state" was a charge of an agreement in reference to oil already imported and not oil to be imported. Standard Oil Co. v. State, 100 S. W. 705, 711, 117 Tenn. 618, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1015.

Acts 1903, p. 268, c. 140, prohibiting agreements between persons or corporations with a view to restrict competition in the "importation or sale of articles imported into the state," or in the manufacture or sale of articles of domestic growth or of domestic raw material, or which tend to advance or control the price or cost to the producer or consumer of any such article, and providing penalties for the making of such agreements, being intended only to apply to intrastate commerce, was not in violation of Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, vesting in Congress the power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, etc. The phrase "importation or sale of articles imported into this state" was intended to include and describe, among the articles of commerce to be protected, those which had been imported from other states and countries, commingled with the common mass of property in this state, and no longer articles of interstate commerce. State ex rel. Cates v. Standard Oil Co. of Kentucky, 110 S. W. 565, 580, 120 Tenn. 86.

Rev. St. § 3082, imposes a penalty on any person who shall fraudulently or knowingly import or bring into the United States any merchandise contrary to law. Section 2802 imposes a penalty whenever any article subject to duty is found in the baggage of a person arriving within the United States which was not at the time of making entry therefor mentioned to the collector. Held, that the term "import or bring" does not require that the offense designated in section 3082 should be complete before the merchandise is landed, so as to exclude cases within section 2802, where the entry is not made till after the baggage is landed, but includes the whole act of bringing dutiable articles into the United States. United States v. Cheabrough, 176 Fed. 778, 782.

As arrival at port of entry or harbor

"Importation," as used in the Tariff Law, means the bringing into this country from a foreign country, and cannot be complete until the vessel has reached the end of her voyage and has performed her office of carrier or bringer with the intention of delivering her cargo to the consignees. The whole scheme of the Tariff Laws and general statutes regulating collections contemplate that importation shall precede entry. United States v. Edwin S. Hartwell Lumber Co., 142 Fed. 432, 436, 78 C. C. A. 548.

The "importation date" is undoubtedly the date of the arrival of the merchandise in a port of entry of the United States, and not the date of liquidation, or even of entry. Franklin Sugar Refining Co. v. United States, 178 Fed. 743, 747.

Bring distinguished

See Bring.

IMPORT A CONSIDERATION

"At common law, negotiable instruments are said to 'import a consideration' (that is, in the absence of evidence on the point, it will be presumed that there was a sufficient consideration); and it is for the party denying the existence of a consideration to show that there was none. This is true even if no consideration is recited on the face of the instrument, and words, such as 'value received,' are wanting." McGuffin v. Coyle, 86 Pac. 962, 964, 16 Okl. 648, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 524 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Page, Cont. § 279).

IMPORTER

Where a railroad company whose line extended across the boundary between Mexico and the United States, pursuant to authority of its directors, appointed two agents to receive and enter at a customs port of the United States all goods imported by or consigned to the company, and one of such agents made the declaration on a consular invoice of goods, as agent of the railroad company, and the other as consignee made the entry, paid the duty with money of the company, and received the goods, the company may be held as "importer" or consignee for an additional duty assessed on a reliquidation, and it was error to direct a verdict for the company. United States v. Mexican International R. Co., 151 Fed. 545, 549, 81 C. C. A. 61.

IMPORTS

The term "imports" always implies the idea of goods, wares, or merchandise manufactured, produced, or prepared in one jurisdiction and carried into another for the purpose of sale. Cook v. Marshall County, 98 N. W. 372, 373, 119 Iowa, 384, 104 Am. St. Rep. 283.

The terms "imports" and "exports" apply only to articles imported from foreign countries, or exported to them. Red C. Oil Mfg. Co. v. Board of Agriculture, 172 Fed. 695, 706 (citing Pittsburgh & S. Coal Co. v. State of Louisiana, 15 Sup. Ct. 459, 156 U. S. 590, 39 L. Ed. 544).

The term "imports" covers nothing not actually brought within the limits of a country. Goods shipped in good order in a foreign country and which become utterly worthless during the voyage are not imported into the United States, even though the decayed remnants are not thrown overboard, but are brought into the port of entry with the remainder of the cargo; and sugar shipped from Porto Rican ports on April 8, 1899, when Porto Rico was a foreign country, but which did not arrive at the port of New York until April 17th, after Porto Rico had passed by treaty to the United States, was not subject to the duty prescribed on articles imported from foreign countries. American Sugar Refining Co. v. Bidwell, 124 Fed. 683, 685 (quoting and adopting definition in Lawder v. Stone, 23 Sup. Ct. 79, 187 U. S. 281, 47 L. Ed. 178).

"While foreign liquors imported according to the regulations of Congress remain in the cask, bottles, etc., in the original form, then the importer may sell them in that form at the port of entry or in any other part of the United States; nor can any state law hinder the importer from doing so; nor does it make any difference whether the imported article pay a tax on its introduction or was admitted as a free article; until it passes from the hands of the importer, it is an 'import' and belongs to regulated foreign commerce and is protected." Acts 1899, p. 175, c. 93, § 1, prohibiting the docking of horses and the importation and use of them, in so far as it prohibits the importing from other states of docked tailed horses, or the using of them while they are still owned by the person who brought them into the state, violates the federal Constitution, giving Congress the right to regulate commerce between the states. Stubbs v. People, 90 Pac. 1114, 1119, 40 Colo. 414, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1071, 122 Am. St. Rep. 1068, 13 Ann. Cas. 1025 (quoting and adopting Thurlow v. Massachusetts, 5 How. [46 U. S.] 589, 12 L. Ed. 256).

"Imports" can cover nothing which is not actually brought into our limits; that is the whole amount which is entered at the custom house, and all which goes into the consumption of the country; that, and that alone, is what comes in competition with our domestic manufactures. The "additional" duty imposed by Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 5, 30 Stat. 205, on articles of merchandise imported into the United States, and upon which an export bounty has been paid by the country of Production, and which it is provided shall be "equal to the net amount of such bounty," is leviable only upon the article or merchandise which enters the United States, and in case of merchandise dutiable by weight, and as to which the bounty as declared by the Secretary of the Treasury, is also by weight, such as sugar, where the quantity entered at the custom house, as shown by the official weigher, is less than that shown by the foreign invoice, the "additional" duty, like the regular duty, is assessable only on the quantity so entered, and the cause of the loss or shrinkage is immaterial. Franklin Sugar Refining Co. v. United States, 142 Fed. 376, 378, 73 C. C. A. 476 (quoting and adopting Marriott v. Brune, 9 How. [50 U. S.] 619, 18 L. Ed. 282).

IMPORTANT CASE

An action for libel by the president of a borough, charged with being personally interested in paving contracts, is an "important case," within Laws 1901, p. 1462, c. 602, as amended, providing that where it appears that, because of the importance of a case, a special jury is required, the court may order it to be so tried. Coler v. Brooklyn Daily Eagle, 117 N. Y. Supp. 273, 274, 133 App. Div. 300.

IMPOSE

Under sections 29 and 30 of the war revenue act of July 1, 1898, c. 448, 30 Stat. 464, 465, as amended by Act March 2, 1901, c. 806, § 10, 31 Stat. 946, 948; which provided for a tax on legacies, to become "due and payable in one year after the death of the testator," and to be a lien, etc., such tax did not become a lien and was not "imposed" until one year after the testator's death; and hence legacies left by a testator who died within one year prior to July 1, 1902, at which time the act repealing such sections took effect, are not taxable thereunder, the repealing act of April 12, 1902, c. 500, § 8, 32 Stat. 97, saving only taxes which had been "imposed" prior to its taking effect. Eldman v. Tilghman, 136 Fed. 141, 143, 69 C. C. A. 139.

Within the meaning of Act April 12, 1902, c. 500, § 8, 32 Stat. 97, repealing War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, § 29, 30 Stat. 464, which provided for legacy taxes "to become due and payable in one year after the death of the testator," but excepting from its operation all taxes "imposed" by said section 29 prior to the taking effect of the repealing act, on July 1, 1902, a tax was "imposed" one year after the death of a testator and where such year expired prior to July 1, 1898, the tax was collectible although not assessed until after such date. Title Guarantee & Trust Co. v. Ward, 184 Fed. 447, 449, 107 C. C. A. 41.

A legacy tax under War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, § 29, 30 Stat. 464, was not "imposed" within the meaning of the saving clause of the repealing act of April 12, 1902, c. 500, § 8, 32 Stat. 97, until its assessment, and there remained no power to make a valid assessment after July 1, 1902, when the repealing act took effect. Farrell v. United States, 167 Fed. 639, 641.

The War Revenue Act of June 13, 1898, c. 448, §§ 29, 30, 30 Stat. 464, 465, as amended by Act March 2, 1901, c. 806, §§ 10, 11, 31 Stat. 946, 948, provided for a tax on legacies to become due and payable in one year after the death of the testator and to be a lien and charge on his property for 20 years. Such provisions were repealed by Act April 12, 1902, c. 500, §§ 7, 8, 32 Stat. 97, with a saving clause as to all taxes imposed thereby prior to July 1, 1902, when the repeal took effect. Act June 27, 1902, c. 1160, § 3, 32 Stat. 406, prohibited the further assessment or imposition of any tax under said act, "upon or in respect of any contingent beneficial interest which shall not become absolutely vested in possession or enjoyment" prior to July 1, 1902, and required the refunding of taxes previously collected on any such interests. Held, that where a testator who died in December, 1901, bequeathed a share of his residuary estate in trust, the income to be paid to a son during his life, the life estate of the son in the income of the trust property became absolutely vested in enjoyment at once on the death of the testator, and subject to the tax; that the tax was "imposed" by the statute itself at the time of such vesting without reference to the time when it became due and payable, or to any act of assessment by the internal revenue officers, which was merely an administrative detail necessary to fix the amount but not affecting the time when the tax was imposed or became a lien. Westhus v. Union Trust Co. of St. Louis, 164 Fed. 795, 797, 90 C. C. A. 441.

IMPOSED DUTIES

"Imposed duties" for the neglect of which a city may be liable are those which are superadded to merely governmental functions like the special private corporate duty to maintain streets in a safe condition for public travel, or the duty to maintain and manage corporate property so that city employees shall have safe places in which to work. Edson v. City of Olathe, 105 Pac. 521, 523, 81 Kan. 328, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 861.

IMPOSSIBLE

The word "impossible" is defined in the Standard Dictionary as "impracticable in the nature of the case." The phrase "practically impossible" expresses only that meaning which would be ascribed to the word "impossible" standing alone, and does it with exactness and aptitude. Clevenger v. Matthews (Ind.) 75 N. E. 886, 887.

IMPOSSIBILITY

See Next Thing to an Impossibility; Physical Impossibility.

IMPOSTS

"Imposts" are terms commonly applied to levies made by governments on the importation or exportation of commodities, frequently being called duties. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 342, 349, 220 U. S. 107, 55 L. Ed. 389, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1312.

IMPOTENCY

"Impotency," as a cause for divorce, means an incurable defect, and not every temporary or occasional incapacity, but permanent and lasting inability for copulation. Bunger v. Bunger, 117 Pac. 1017, 1019, 85 Kan. 564, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 126.

IMPRACTICABLE

Where the holder of an interchangeable mileage ticket, stipulating that coupons from the ticket would not be honored on trains, except from nonagency stations and agency stations not open for sale of tickets, failed to exchange coupons for a ticket at an agency station where the train stopped several minutes, or to make any attempt to exchange for a ticket, though he knew that the train would stop for several minutes, he could not tender coupons from the ticket, because it was not "impracticable" for him to make the exchange; "impracticable" being defined as incapable of being effected from lack of adequate means. Des Portes v. Southern Ry. Co., 69 S. E. 148, 149, 87 S. C. 160 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 8443).

IMPRESSION

See Matter of Impression or Opinion.
Device, print, or impression, see Device.

The word "impression" is equivalent to the word "mistake" in an instruction, in an action for reformation of a deed for mutual mistake, stating that plaintiffs were entitled to a verdict if the parties were at the time of the execution of the deed under the "impression" that the deed described other property. Metcalfe v. Lowenstein, 81 S. W. 362, 364, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 619.

The word "impression," as employed in defining "'moral certainty' as a state of 'impression' produced by facts," does not vary essentially in meaning from "conviction." "Impression" itself is a stamping in upon the mind. People v. Lew Fook, 75 Pac. 188, 141 Cal. 548.

As inference or recollection

The "impression" of a witness, though it may convey the idea of a certain degree of recollection, is an equivocal term, and the information which the witness assumes to give may have been derived from others or from an unwarrantable deduction of the mind from premises not well established. Clark v. Bigelow, 16 Ma. 246, 248.

"Impressions" of a witness were properly admitted in evidence as expressions in qualification of memory, where they were merely the product of an imperfect recollection, and not an inference, an unwarranted deduction of the witness' own mind, or derived from others. Tichnor Bros. v. Barley, 134 N. Y. Supp. 129, 130, 149 App. Div. 871.

Opinion distinguished

An "impression" is only a deduction drawn from an assumption of a fact, while an opinion is predicated on the existence or nonexistence of a fact; and where a witness, who was interrogated as to an alleged lost paper, was unable to say whether or not he had ever seen the paper, no error was committed in refusing to permit him to testify as to what his "impression" was in regard to it. Cross v. Aby, 45 South. 820, 822, 55 Fla. 311 (quoting and adopting definition in Chaires v. Brady, 10 Fla. 133).

An "opinion," within the meaning of Bates Ann. St. § 7278, providing that, if a juror has formed an opinion, the court shall thereupon proceed to examine him on the grounds of such opinion, etc., is well defined as being a conclusion or judgment held with confidence but falling short of positive knowledge, and, while an "opinion" and an "impression" are alike in mind, there is an essential difference between the two in degree: an impression, as applied to this subject-matter, being correctly defined as a notion, remembrance, or belief, especially one that is somewhat indistinct or vague. Lindsey v. State, 69 N. E. 126, 131, 69 Ohio St. 215.

Within Gen. St. p. 853, § 205, providing that it shall be good cause of challenge to a juror that he has formed or expressed an opinion on the issue, or any material fact to be tried, an "impression," depending only on the newspaper account, of the truth of which he had no knowledge, is not an "opinion." State v. Medlicourt, 9 Kan. 257, 279 (citing 1 Burr's Trial, 416; Holt v. People, 13 Mich. 224; State v. Potter, 18 Conn. 166; Smith v. Eames, 3 Scam. [4 Ill.] 79, 36 Am. Dec. 515; Gardner v. People, 3 Scam. [4 Ill.] 85; Leach v. People, 53 Ill. 311; State v. Kingsbury, 58 Me. 238; Morgan v. State, 31 Ind. 193).

IMPRESSION-RECEIVING BAND

The "impression-receiving band" on a workman's time recorder is a band moving longitudinally in either direction in proximity to the printing wheels, and having a longitudinal row of consecutive numbers marked upon it. Dey Time Register Co. v. Syracuse Time Recorder Co., 152 Fed. 440, 443.

IMPRISON—IMPRISONMENT

See Duress by Imprisonment; False Imprisonment; Fine and Imprisonment; Period of Imprisonment; Unlawful Imprisonment.

The term "imprisonment" usually imports a restraint contrary to the wishes of the person restrained. Ex parte Davidge, 51 S. E. 269, 271, 72 S. C. 16 (quoting and adopting definition in Hurd, Habeas Corpus, p. 453).

"Imprisonment," in its general sense, is the restraint of one's liberty. As a punishment it is a restraint by judgment of a court or lawful tribunal, and is personal to the accused. United States v. Mitchell, 163 Fed. 1014, 1016.

Any physical detention is "imprisonment," within the meaning of the law imposing liability for false imprisonment. Egleston v. Scheibel, 99 N. Y. Supp. 969, 970, 113 App. Div. 798.

The essential thing to constitute an "imprisonment" is constraint of the person, which may be by threats as well as by actual force; and if the words or conduct are such as to induce a reasonable apprehension of force, and the means of coercion are at hand, a person may be as effectually restrained and deprived of liberty as by prison bars. Hebrew v. Pullis, 64 Atl. 121, 122, 73 N. J. Law, 621, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 590, 118 Am. St. Rep. 716.

Imprisonment is not confined to the act of putting a man in prison; nor is it necessary to constitute imprisonment that the confinement should be in a place usually appropriated to that purpose. It may be in a locality used only for the specific occasion; or it may take place without actual application of any physical agencies of restraint, such as locks or bars, as by verbal compulsion and the display of available force. Any restraint of a man's personal liberty constitutes "imprisonment." Savannah Guano Co. v. Stubbs, 75 S. E. 433, 434, 138 Ga. 409.

Any detention of a person by another, with force, or against the will of the one detained, is "imprisonment" in law, and, where it is without right, it is unlawful. Temporarily restraining a person creating a disturbance at a religious meeting or doing an act tending to lead to a disturbance on the grounds where it is held would not be unlawful "imprisonment," if done in good faith without using unnecessary force. Rich v. Bailey, 97 S. W. 747, 123 Ky. 827.

"Custody" in criminal law is the same thing as 'detention' in civil law, and is synonymous with 'imprisonment.' " 'Imprisonment' is the detention of a person contrary to his will." "While the provisions of the Code in bail trover proceedings contemplate imprisonment in jail, the defendant may petition for release from any detention against his will by a sheriff or his deputy by virtue of proper bail process." Everett, Ridley & Co. v. Holcomb, 58 S. E. 287, 289, 1 Ga. App. 794 (citing Rapalje & Lawrence, Law Dict.).

Arrest

Mere words are sufficient to constitute "imprisonment" if they impose a restraint and deprivation of liberty, though there was no touching of the person of the party arrested. Martin v. Houck, 54 S. E. 291, 293, 141 N. C. 817, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 576.

Where an officer, in the discharge of his duty, in good faith invites one to the police station for the purpose of interrogating him and investigating a charge against him with a view of deciding on future action, and without any then intention of putting him under arrest or restraint, and the circumstances do not warrant a reasonable apprehension that force will be used in the absence of submission, and the person voluntarily accompanies the officer and consents to be searched, there is no arrest or false "imprisonment." Gunderson v. Struebing, 104 N. W. 149, 151, 125 Wis. 173.

As imprisonment in the county jail

The word "imprisonment," in its ordinary sense, contemplates and means within the county jail rather than in the penitentiary. Ex parte Cain, 93 Pac. 974, 976, 20 Okl. 125 (citing Cheaney v. State, 36 Ark. 75; State v. McNeill, 75 N. C. 15; Hockheimer, Crimes & Cr. Proc. §§ 112, 345).

As imprisonment at hard labor

A sentence in a criminal case at imprisonment in the penitentiary is in fact, though not in the precise words, "an 'imprisonment' at hard labor." State v. Davis, 46 South. 673, 121 La. 623.

As within jail limits

A person in custody under an execution against the person is "imprisoned," though he may have been admitted to jail liberties. People v. Monaco, 105 N. Y. Supp. 401, 402, 54 Misc. Rep. 25.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT

The word "debt," in Gen. Laws 1896, c. 260, § 1, allowing a citation to any person imprisoned for debt, is limited in its scope by section 10, which provides that no person who shall be committed on execution in any action of trover or detinue, or for any malicious injury to the person, health, or reputation of the plaintiff in such suit, shall be deemed to be within section 1. Taylor v. Bliss, 57 Atl. 939, 940, 26 R. I. 16.

The act of Congress relating to the administration of civil government in the Philippine Islands, which provides that no person shall be "imprisoned for debt," was not intended to take away the right to enforce criminal statutes and punish wrongful embezzlements of money, but was rather intended to prevent the commitment of debtors to prison for liabilities arising under their contracts. Freeman v. United States, 30 Sup. Ct. 592, 593, 217 U. S. 539, 54 L. Ed. 874, 19 Ann. Cas. 755.

"Imprisonment for debt," being abhorrent to the spirit of free government, will not be tolerated under the form of penal statutes. The word "debt," as used in Const. art. 1, § 17, inhibiting imprisonment for debt, is confined to obligations arising from contract, expressed or implied, and does not include torts. Hence Sess. Laws 1903, p. 244, c. 131, making it an offense to obtain accommodation at a hotel, etc., without paying therefor, with intent to defraud, etc., is not violative of said section. Ex parte Millecke, 100 Pac. 743, 744, 52 Wash. 312, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 259, 132 Am. St. Rep. 968.

Breach of contract

"Debt" is that which is due from one person to another, whether money, goods, or services, and whether payable at present or at a future time." Cr. Code 1902, § 357, declaring a laborer under contract to labor on farm lands, who shall receive advances, and thereafter willfully and without just cause fail to perform the reasonable service required by the contract, guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable by imprisonment, is in violation of Const. art. 1, § 24, prohibiting "imprisonment for debt," except in cases of fraud, since the conduct so made criminal is failure to pay a debt, and a willful and unjust failure to carry out the contract, without bad faith, does not constitute fraud. Ex parte Hollman, 60 S. E. 19, 21, 79 S. C. 9, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242, 14 Ann. Cas. 1105 (citing Cent. Dict.; 13 Cyc. p. 399).

Failure to pay over money

Imprisonment for contempt in refusing to obey a judgment or decree for payment of alimony and maintenance is "imprisonment for debt," contrary to the Constitution. Ex parte Kinsolving, 116 S. W. 1068, 1071, 135 Mo. App. 631.

A commitment for contempt for failing to comply with an order requiring the payment of money is not "imprisonment for debt" within the meaning of the Constitution. Perry v. Pernet, 74 N. E. 609, 610, 165 Ind. 97, 6 Ann. Cas. 533.

An order requiring a bankrupt to pay over money or surrender property forming part of his estate is not one for the payment of a debt, and his commitment for refusing to obey such an order is not an "imprisonment for debt." Samel v. Dodd, 142 Fed. 68, 70, 73 C. C. A. 254.

Nonpayment of fine or penalty

A sentence that defendant be confined until the fine assessed was paid is not unconstitutional as an "imprisonment for debt." People v. Zito, 86 N. E. 1041, 1044, 237 Ill. 434.

To be a "debt," within the meaning of the constitutional provision against "imprisonment for debt," the obligation existing between the parties must be either purely contractual or arising from some legal liability growing out of the debtor's dealings with another. The term "debt," as so employed, does not extend to or embrace any pecuniary obligation imposed by the state as a punishment for crime, whether the money, the payment of which is demanded, be for fines or costs or, even in certain quasi criminal proceedings, other penalties of a moneyed nature which may be lawfully inflicted by a court. Ex parte Dig, 38 South. 730, 86 Miss. 597 (citing Ex parte Meyer, 57 Miss. 85; Ex parte Bridgeforth, 27 South. 622, 77 Miss. 418, 78 Am. St. Rep. 532).

IMPRISONMENT FOR LIFE OR LESS THAN NATURAL LIFE

One convicted of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to death at a time to be appointed by the Governor after one year from time of his conviction, is not during his detention in the penitentiary incapable of managing his own estate, within Code Cr. Proc. §§ 337, 338, providing that when any person shall be imprisoned for life his estate shall be administered as if he were dead, and when he is imprisoned for less than his natural life a trustee shall be appointed, as such a sentence is not one of "imprisonment for life," nor for a term less than his natural life. Gray v. Stewart, 78 Pac. 852, 853, 70 Kan. 429, 109 Am. St. Rep. 461.

IMPROBABLE STATEMENT

See Grossly Improbable Statements.

IMPROPER—IMPROPERLY

"If the jury believe from the evidence that a flagman of the defendant improperly and inopportunistically signaled the plaintiff's team," etc., was not rendered misleading by omission of the words "carelessly" and "negligently." Pennsylvania Co. v. Sloan, 17 N. E. 37, 39, 41, 125 Ill. 72, 8 Am. St. Rep. 337.

IMPROPER ACT

Defendant company wrongfully procured possession of a note to plaintiff, and refused to permit plaintiff to see it. Plaintiff had forgotten who executed the note, and thought it was executed by defendant's president, and sued him within the statutory period, which defendant knew for several years, during which time it refused to let her see the note, and did everything possible to prevent her from learning the real maker. Rev. St. 1909, § 1905, provides that if any person, by any improper act, prevents the commencement of an action, such action may be commenced "within the time herein limited, after the commencement of such action shall have ceased to be so prevented." Held that, when sued on the notes, defendant was estopped from pleading limitations by reason of its "improper act" in refusing to surrender the note to plaintiff. Sonnenfeld v. Rosenthal-Sloan Millinery Co., 145 S. W. 430, 432, 241 Mo. 309.

IMPROPER CONDUCT

In a prosecution for homicide, an instruction defining "provocation" as any such provocation by "improper conduct" of deceased toward defendant as to cause defendant to be so far under the dominion of sudden passion in consequence thereof as to be unable to judge rightly as to the nature and quality and consequence of his acts, or to materially impede or interfere with such judgment, and take away deliberation and prevent a cool state of the blood, was a sufficient definition of such term. "Improper conduct" has no technical meaning, and if there is any criticism of this instruction it is because it is too favorable to the defendant by using such a broad expression. State v. Barrington, 95 S. W. 235, 251, 198 Mo. 23.

IMPROPER MOTIVE

The terms "malice" and "improper motives," when used in reference to alienation of a wife's affections, mean the same thing. "Malice" does not necessarily mean that which must proceed from a spiteful, malignant, or revengeful disposition; but, if the conduct was unjustifiable and actually caused the injury, malice in law will be implied. Boland v. Stanley, 115 S. W. 163, 166, 88 Ark. 562, 129 Am. St. Rep. 114.

IMPROVE

See Discharged as Improved; Usually Cultivated and Improved.
Otherwise Improve, see Otherwise.

The body of an ordinance entitled one "to improve a portion of the sidewalk on both sides of B. street," between designated points, provided that the "sidewalk on both sides of B. street between, etc., shall be regraded, recurbed and repaved with brick pavement." Held that, regrading, recurbing, and repaving being necessary to properly improve the sidewalk, the title of the ordinance embraced but one subject; the word "improve" meaning "to make better," "to increase the value or good qualities of." Gocke v. Staebler & McFarland, 132 S. W. 167, 168, 141 Ky. 66.

The word "improving," within the meaning of a statute authorizing the freeholders to contract for the supplying and furnishing of materials necessary in constructing, "improving," and maintaining roads, held to refer to work upon roads already constructed which might be called repairs, or improvements, or maintenance. Middle Valley Trap Rock Mining Co. v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Morris County, 60 Atl. 358, 359, 71 N. J. Law, 333.

IMPROVE IN GOOD FAITH

Rev. St. 1895, art. 4218½, provides that, if the purchaser of school land shall fail to reside upon and improve in good faith the land purchased, he shall forfeit the land, etc. Held, that in view of provisions in the preceding article, declaring that purchasers shall have the option of paying for their lands in full at any time "after they have occupied the same for three consecutive years," and that, when they have made such payment "together with the proof that they have occupied the land for three consecutive years," they shall receive patents, etc., the phrase "and improve in good faith" adds nothing to the requirement that the purchaser shall reside upon the land, and his failure to make improvements to an extent beyond that incident to the required settlement and occupancy is no ground for forfeiture of the sale. McLendon v. Bumpass, 114 S. W. 462, 464, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 586.

IMPROVED

The designation of a city lot as "improved" was not a sufficient designation of its condition in a petition of sale of testator's real estate. In re Levy's Estate, 75 Pac. 317, 319, 141 Cal. 639.

In relation to sickness or disease

The ordinary meaning of the word "improved," when reference is made to one afflicted with mental or physical disease or sickness, that his condition has been ameliorated; that he has grown better; that he is making progress towards a recovery. It does not convey the idea that there has been a complete recovery, nor that the patient is well. The term "discharged as improved" is not the equivalent of "discharged as cured," within the meaning of the latter term as used in Gen. St. 1909, § 8484, providing for restoring the rights of persons discharged as cured of insanity. Johnson v. Schoch, 118 Pac. 696, 697, 85 Kan. 837.

IMPROVED AND UNDER DEVELOPMENT

Where a tract of coal land consisting of 1,264.75 acres was leased for 100 years, which period would be required under present conditions to mine and market the coal, it appearing that it was not practicable under existing circumstances to mine a larger area than 85 acres annually or 170 acres during an assessment period of two years, and that only 250 acres of the boundary had been opened up by mine entries, only that amount should have been assessed as "improved and under development." Commonwealth v. Pocahontas Coal & Coke Co., 60 S. E. 84, 85, 107 Va. 666.

IMPROVED LAND

"Improved lands," in the sense in which the phrase is used in Civ. Code 1895, § 3065, which provides that "the right of private way over another's land may arise * * * from prescription by seven years' uninterrupted use through improved lands, or twenty years' use over 'wild lands,'" comprehends the entire tract, though only part thereof be in actual cultivation. The woodland on such a tract is not wild land, but, in connection with the portion which is cultivated, constitutes a single tract of "improved land." If a tract of land is cultivated in part and a road through the entire tract traverses both field and woodland, the woodland adjacent to the field is not to be treated as wild land. The land which the statute designates as wild is that which is located separate and apart from lands which are partly in cultivation. It is a segregated tract of land, remaining in a state of nature, uninclosed, and with no indications of use by the owner. The woodland of a plantation is not wild land simply because it is uninclosed, where it adjoins lands which are in cultivation and the woodland in its natural state is retained by the owner, either for plantation uses, or because he prefers to defer the time for bringing it into cultivation. Hopkins v. Roach, 56 S. E. 303, 304, 127 Ga. 153 (citing Watkins v. Country Club, 47 S. E. 538, 120 Ga. 45; Kirkland v. Pitman, 50 S. E. 117, 122 Ga. 256).

When an adjoining landowner had inclosed her lands with a wire fence, consisting of posts with four strands of wire attached thereto, and was using the land for a pasture for cattle, it was "improved land," within Code 1907, § 4247, providing that partition fences between improved lands shall be erected at the joint expense of the occupants. Johnson v. Frederick, 50 South. 910, 163 Ala. 455.

Code Civ. Proc. § 370, provides that for the purpose of constituting adverse possession by one claiming title founded upon a written instrument, etc., land is deemed to have been possessed, where it has been usually cultivated or improved. Defendants and their predecessors had openly and notoriously for a sufficient length of time to create the presumption of a grant, cut and removed for purposes of husbandry the hay which grew on salt meadow land; that being the only purpose for which the land could be used. Held, that as to "cultivate" meant to improve the product of the earth by manual industry, and "improved" land generally meant such as had been reclaimed and was used for husbandry, whether for tillage, meadow, or pasture, the yearly cutting and removal of the grass was such an act of ownership as to constitute a technical adverse possession within the statute. Shinnecock Hills & Peconic Bay Realty Co. v. Aldrich, 116 N. Y. Supp. 532, 537, 132 App. Div. 118.

"Improvement" is defined by lexicographers as "that by which the value of anything is increased, its excellence enhanced, or the like," or "an amelioration of the condition of property affected by the expenditure of labor or money, for the purpose of rendering it useful for other purposes than those for which it was originally used, or more useful for the same purposes." Stevens v. City of Port Huron, 113 N. W. 291, 297, 149 Mich. 536, 12 Ann. Cas. 603.

"Improvements," within the meaning of the law, are technically and commonly denominated "betterments," and the definition of the term "betterments" to be found in the books is "improvements made to an estate." Greer v. Fontaine, 77 S. W. 56, 57, 71 Ark. 605, 609.

The word "improvement" is a relative term, and its meaning must be ascertained from the context and the subject-matter of the instrument or writing in which it is used. Wolff Chemical Co. v. City of Philadelphia, 66 Atl. 344, 347, 217 Pa. 215.

IMPROVEMENT (In Patent Law)

Robinson on Patents, § 210, defines an "improvement" to be an addition to or alteration in some existing means which increases its efficiency without destroying its identity. And in section 218: "But inasmuch as no improvement can subsist without an original on which to rest, this development must always leave the essence of the original invention unimpaired. Whenever, in extending the efficiency of an idea of means, the line which separates that means from every other is crossed through any change in its essential characteristics, identity is lost, the idea of the original invention is excluded, and the result of the inventive act becomes a new substantive invention." And again in section 215: "If the changes indicate the introduction in the idea of means of a different force and different object or of a different mode of application, it is more than a change of form, more than even an improvement. It is a separate invention." McAuley v. Chaplin-Fulton Mfg. Co., 66 Atl. 750, 753, 217 Pa. 477.

An "improvement," as understood in the patent law, embraces the original and adds thereto or alters it. Stitzer v. Withers, 91 S. W. 277, 280, 122 Ky. 181 (quoting and adopting definition in opinion of Hobson, C. J., on a former appeal).

IMPROVEMENT (Of Building)

Where a lessor and a lessee agreed that all "improvements" made by the lessee or "embellishments and reconstructions" were to remain in the building, articles which did not enter into and form a part of the property, leased separate therefrom and not attached to the lessee's property, belonged to the lessor. Morris v. Pratt, 38 South. 70, 71, 114 La. 98. In order to include property within these terms in a lease as property to be left to the lessor, it would have to clearly appear that it was the lessor's intention, as expressed in the contract, to make needful repairs on the building to put the fixtures and appurtenances in order and to give up without consideration all the other articles not attached to or forming part of his building or of the appurtenances therein. Morris v. Pratt, 38 South. 72, 114 La. 103.

A lease provided that a tenant should, on receiving six months' notice that a bona fide sale of the property had been made, and on payment of pro rata amount of expenditures in repairs and improvements on the property, to be paid by the landlord as specified, surrender possession at the end of the six months' notice, and that the landlord should, on the termination of the lease by reason of sale prior to the termination of the term named, reimburse the tenant for outlays for all repairs, etc. Held, that the word "improvements" meant changes or betterments in the existing building or structure demised. Douglaston Realty Co. v. Hess, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1036, 1037, 124 App. Div. 508 (citing Ames v. Trenton Brewing Co., 38 Atl. 858, 861, 56 N. J. Eq. 809, 317; Wimberly v. Mayberry, 10 South. 157, 94 Ala. 240, 14 L. R. A. 308).

The lease required the lessee of rooms in an office building to surrender the premises in as good condition as reasonable use permitted, and provided that all alterations, additions, or improvements made by either party, except movable office furniture put in by the lessee, should be surrendered to the lessor as a part of the premises. The lessee removed some of the permanent partitions with the lessor's consent, agreeing to restore them at the termination of the lease, and constructed temporary partitions, which did not extend to the ceiling, and were lightly nailed to the floor and walls, and at the termination of the lease the permanent partitions were restored. Held, that the reasonable intention of the parties was the test of whether fixtures were annexed to the realty, and the word "improvements" alone, though of wider meaning than "fixtures," did not include the temporary partitions; and, construing the word in connection with the exceptions in the lease, and in view of the intention shown thereby that such partitions should not be permanently annexed, they were not "improvements," but were "movable office furniture," within the meaning of the lease, and removable by the lessee. United Booking Offices v. Pittsburgh Life & Trust Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 216, 217, 65 Misc. Rep. 81.

Where the lease of a building for a saloon and hotel authorized the lessee to make alterations, and declared that "all improvements, betterments, and changes or alterations," at the expiration of the lease, should be and remain on the premises and belong to the lessor, the words quoted were limited to the alterations made in remodeling the building, and did not include saloon fixtures and appliances put in by a brewery company under a contract with the lessee that he should have the use of the same while he sold the company's beer. Wright v. La May, 118 N. W. 964, 966, 155 Mich. 119.

IMPROVEMENT (Of Canal)

Any alteration of existing canals which still preserves them as commercial highways connecting the lakes with the ocean in substantially the same location, affording facilities for increased usefulness, must be held to be an improvement, if so declared by the Legislature pursuant to Const. art. 7, § 10, authorizing the improvement of canals in such manner as the Legislature may provide by law, and the nature and extent of the improvement is clearly a question for it alone, under such circumstances, and canal lands rendered no longer useful for canal purposes, may, after the improvement, be disposed of by the state under existing laws, without infringing the prohibition of section 8 against the sale of the Erie and other canals, and hence the Barge Canal as outlined in Laws 1903, p. 332, c. 147, providing for the improvement of the Erie and other canals by canalizing certain rivers, but leaving the canals substantially as they were before as to their general location and navigation between the same termini, except that steam or other power will necessarily be substituted for the present use, must be regarded as an improvement of existing canals within the Constitution, and not to infringe the same, though contemplating the probable sale of several hundred miles of the present canals when rendered no longer necessary or useful. Pelo v. Stevens, 120 N. Y. Supp. 227, 230, 66 Misc. Rep. 35.

IMPROVEMENT (Of Homestead)

Where a building association, in loaning money to an individual, advanced part of the loan for a purpose other than for the improvement of the debtor's homestead, and held the balance until a building erected by the debtor was practically completed, when for its own protection it required releases of mechanics' liens and distributed the money to the contractor and subcontractor, the debt so created was not one incurred for an improvement of the homestead, within the meaning of the law making such debts first liens on property. Steger v. Traveling Men's Building & Loan Ass'n, 70 N. E. 236, 240, 208 Ill. 236, 100 Am. St. Rep. 225.

IMPROVEMENT (Of Land)

"Nothing can be deemed an 'improvement' for which compensation may be allowed which does not benefit the land and increase its value to the true owner." Proctor v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 64 Atl. 839, 841, 101 Me. 459.

The term "improvements," in the provision of the Constitution of The Five Nations that the improvements on their land are the exclusive and inalienable property of the citizens respectively who made, or may rightfully be in possession of them, meant not only "betterments," but occupancy. Shulthis v. McDougal, 170 Fed. 529, 534, 95 C. C. A. 615 (citing Cherokee Nation v. Journeycake, 15 Sup. Ct. 55, 155 U. S. 196, 210, 39 L. Ed. 120).

Where a deed to land reserved the timber to be removed one half in 5 years and the other half in 10 years, and also contained a covenant that the grantor would cut the timber off of such part of the lands as was required by the grantee for improvements, the word "improvements," was ambiguous and justified parol evidence which showed that it was used with reference to such portions of the land as were necessary for a residence and the incidents thereto, for a person engaged in stock raising, and did not refer to any greater portion of the land which the grantee might arbitrarily designate as being required for improvements. Jacobs v. Parodi, 39 South. 833, 838, 50 Fla. 541.

The "settlement" or "improvement" upon land with a view to receiving water for agricultural purposes, as provided for in section 5, art. 15, of the Constitution, means an actual settlement or an actual improvement thereon, and a constructive settlement will not meet the purpose or requirements of the Constitution. Mellen v. Great Western Beet Sugar Co., 122 Pac. 30, 31, 21 Idaho, 353, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 621.

In the statute giving a mechanic's lien for improvements on a homestead, and giving such lien for work and material used in constructing improvements thereon, and then only when contracted for in writing with the consent of the wife; the lien to secure such debt being declared to be for "improvements thereon as hereinbefore provided." The clause quoted means improvements actually made by the use of the work and material; both the contract and the employment of the work and material on the homestead in compliance therewith being essential to the lien. Murphy v. Williams, 124 S. W. 900, 902, 103 Tex. 155.

Under Lien Law § 2, defining a contractor as one entering into a contract with the owner of real property for the improvement thereof, and defining a materialman as any person other than the contractor furnishing materials for such improvement, and defining the term "improvement" as including the erection, alteration, or repair of any structure on real estate, and any work done on the property or materials furnished for its improvement, a contract requiring one to furnish all the window frames, sash, glass, and trim in and to buildings in course of construction for a lump sum, payable in installments as the work progressed, and requiring him to make a large part of the materials according to plans, is a contract for the permanent improvement of real estate within the lien law, and he is entitled to a lien for the materials furnished and work done. Western Sash, Door & Lumber Co. v. Gaul Const. Co., 126 N. Y. Supp. 1110, 1111.

Code Civ. Proc. § 3414, makes a laborer's or materialman's lien prior to a contractor's. Lien Law (Consol. Laws, c. 33) § 2, defines a "contractor" as one who contracts with an owner of land to improve it, a "materialman" as one, other than a contractor, who furnishes material for such improvement, and an "improvement" as including work done on property or "materials furnished for its permanent improvement." Held, that the lien of one who installed plumbing, of one who furnished trim for the building under contract with the owner, and of one who sold brick and mason's building materials to the owner for use in the building, are all on equality, being entitled to preference in the order of time. Jackson v. Egan, 94 N. E. 211, 212, 200 N. Y. 496.

Building

The term "improvements," as used in a clause in a lease binding the tenant to make "improvements" to a certain amount, covers not only repairs and additions, but also new buildings. Peters v. Stone, 79 N. E. 336, 337, 193 Mass. 179.

A "water right" is the legal right to the use of any unappropriated water of any natural stream, water course, or source of supply, and exists only in contemplation of law, and is for purposes of taxation "personal property," within Const. art. 12, § 17, and Pol. Code, 1895, §§ 16, 3680, defining "property" as including money, franchises, and other things capable of private ownership, and defining "real estate" as including the possession or ownership of land, mines, minerals, and quarries, and "Improvements" as including all buildings, structures, etc., and "personal property" as including everything which is the subject of ownership, not included within real estate or improvements, so that under section 3716, providing that the personal property and franchises of water companies must be assessed in the district where the principal works are located, a water company owning a water right without the limits of a school district and conveying water by pipe lines into the district, where it is distributed to the inhabitants thereof, is properly assessed in the district; that being the place of business and principal works of the company. Helena Water-works Co. v. Settles, 95 Pac. 838, 839, 37 Mont. 237.

Drainage

Const. art. 11, § 11, provides that the homestead exemption shall not operate against public taxes, nor debts contracted for the purchase money of the homestead, or improvement thereon. Held, that the drainage of homestead swamp lands, authorized by the drainage law (Acts 1909, c. 185), was an "improvement" thereon, and that the land was subject to assessment therefor. State ex rel. Bigham v. Powers, 137 S. W. 1110, 1116, 124 Tenn. 553.

The character of a culvert or bridge that a railroad company shall erect, being no part of the plat or profile or of the plans of the drainage engineer, formed no part of the "improvement" contemplated by Acts 30th Gen. Assem. p. 66, c. 68, §§ 18, 19, providing for the establishment of drainage ditches across the right of ways of railroad companies and providing for an agreement as to the place and manner and method in which the improvement shall cross the right of way, etc. Mason City & Ft. Dodge R. Co. v. Board of Sup'rs, 121 N. W. 39, 41, 144 Iowa, 10.

The term "improvement," as used in section 19, c. 68, p. 66, 30th Gen. Assem. provides that where the supervisors establish any drainage district, and the drain crosses a railroad right of way, it shall, after notice, construct the same in accordance with the plans and specifications of the engineer, and that if it fails to do so, the auditor shall cause the work to be done, and charge the cost to the railroad, and that the cost of constructing the "improvement" shall be considered as an element of the railroad company's damages, to be assessed by the appraisers, refers to the proposed "ditch, drain, or change of natural water course," and the statute did not provide that the cost of constructing a new bridge by the railroad necessitated by the making of the improvement, should be an element of the railroad company's damages. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Drainage Dist. No. 5 Sac County, 121 N. W. 193, 195, 142 Iowa, 607.

Engine and machinery

Mechanic's Lien Law, Laws 1897, p. 516, c. 418, § 3, gives a contractor performing labor or furnishing materials for the improvement of real property a lien therefor. Section 2 (page 515) provides that the term "improvement" includes the erection, alteration, or repair of any structure connected with real property, and any work done on such property or materials furnished for its permanent improvement. Section 22 (page 525) requires a liberal construction. Held, that machinery purchased for the purpose of fitting up an empty building as a manufacturing establishment, and by the installation of which it was so altered, was an improvement entitling the contractor furnishing the same to a lien. Griffin v. Ernst, 108 N. Y. Supp. 816, 818, 124 App. Div. 289.

As fixtures

Under the lien law (Laws 1897, c. 418), giving a lien for labor or materials for the improvement of real property, and defining the word "improvement" as including the erection, alteration, or repair of any structure on, connected with, or beneath the surface of, any real property, and any work done on such property, or materials furnished for its permanent improvement, and specifically repealing Laws 1895, c. 673, giving a lien for materials used in improving or equipping any house with any fixtures for supplying gas or electric light, gas and electric fixtures furnished to a house do not constitute an improvement of real property, because such fixtures are not permanently annexed to the building, but are merely for the temporary use of the occupant, subject to be removed by him. Caldwell v. Glazier, 123 N. Y. Supp. 622, 626, 138 App. Div. 826.

Double cases with shelves, exhibition cases, partition base, cupboards, a platform, lockers, dressers, bulletin boards, and supply cases, in a building designed for a public library, made of the same wood as the finish of the rooms, and fitted to them, and fastened by holdfasts, nails, screws, angle irons, etc., and without which equipment the building could not be used for library purposes, were an improvement of the realty protected by a mechanic's lien. Rieser v. Commeau, 114 N. Y. Supp. 154, 157, 129 App. Div. 490.

Ky. St. § 2463, provides that a person who furnishes materials in the erection or repairing of a house, or for any fixture or machinery therein, or for the improvement of real estate by contract with, or by the written consent of, the owner, contractor, subcontractor, or authorized agent, shall have a lien thereon, etc. Held, that a heating boiler purchased by a contractor and installed in defendant's residence constituted a "fixture" and "machinery," within the statute, and also an improvement of the property, within the section, so as to entitle the seller to a materialman's lien therefor. Menne v. American Radiator Co., 150 S. W. 24, 25, 150 Ky. 151.

Gas and electric light fixtures, consisting of electric light ceiling lamps or chandeliers, electric light reflectors, pendants, brackets, and lanterns, and gas and electric light brackets, specially designed and manufactured with reference to the general decorative scheme and architecture of the building in which they are installed, and to harmonize with one another, constitute an "improvement of real property," and the designing, manufacturing, installing, and furnishing thereof constitutes the performance of labor and furnishing of materials for the improvement of real property, within Lien Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 33) § 3, giving a lien to any person performing labor or furnishing materials for the improvement of real property, where they are intended to be permanently attached to, and form a part of, the realty, as evidenced by a provision in the lease, authorizing their installation by the lessee, that the lessee shall deliver up the premises, together with the fixtures and appurtenances. Wahle-Phillips Co. v. Fifty-Ninth St.-Madison Ave. Co., 188 N. Y. Supp. 13, 16, 153 App. Div. 17.

Lot as including .

See Lot .

Mausoleum

The construction of a mausoleum is not "an improvement of real property" within the Lien Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 33) §§ 3-25, giving a lien on such structure. Brown v. City Nat. Bank of Plattsburgh, 131 N. Y. Supp. 92, 97, 72 Misc. Rep. 201.

Mining

A coal mine is an improvement within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4817, authorizing liens for labor and material for improvements. Peaceable Creek Coal Co. v. Jackson, 108 Pac. 409, 410, 26 Okl. 1, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, giving a lien for "every building or other improvement mentioned in section 1183 of this Code, constructed upon any lands," does not include or apply to "mining" work, which consists in removing ore, solely by the subtractive process, and which does not constitute for any purpose an improvement to the mine or the land. Higgins v. Carlotta Gold Min. Co., 84 Pac. 758, 760, 148 Cal. 700, 113 Am. St. Rep. 344.

As real estate

See Real Property.

Repairs

As repair, see Repair.

To "repair" is to mend, to restore to a sound state whatever has been partially destroyed, to make good an existing thing, restoration after decay, injury, or partial destruction. An "improvement" is a valuable and useful addition, something more than a mere repair or restoration to the original condition. Dougherty v. Taylor & Norton Co., 63 S. E. 928, 930, 5 Ga. App. 773 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6096).

Under Mechanic's Lien Law (Laws 1897, p. 515, c. 418, § 2), providing that the term "improvement," when used in the law, includes the erection, alteration, or repair of any structure on or connected with real property, etc., a person performing labor or furnishing material for repairs upon such a structure may have a lien upon the property. Ætna Elevator Co. v. Deeves, 108 N. Y. Supp. 718, 719, 57 Misc. Rep. 632.

The word "improvements" in Gen. St. 1894, § 5853, declaring that the word "improvements," as used in the act relating to actions concerning improvements on realty, shall be construed to include all kinds of buildings, fences, ditching, drains, grubbing, clearing, breaking, and all other necessary or useful labor or permanent value to the land, does not include ordinary repairs, but all improvements which are of permanent value to the land are within its scope. The test is whether the alleged improvements are of permanent value to the land. Northern Inv. Co. v. Bargquist, 100 N. W. 636, 638, 93 Minn. 106.

A covenant in a lease obligating lessee to keep the premises in good order and repair during the term does not imply a consent by lessor, within Mechanic's Lien Law, Laws 1897, p. 516, c. 418, § 3, providing that a contractor or materialman who performs labor or furnishes material for the improvement of real property with the owner's consent shall have a lien; there being a distinction between "improvements" and "repairs," within the contemplation of that section. Ætna Elevator Co. v. Deeves, 107 N. Y. Supp. 63-66, 56 Misc. Rep. 565, 110 N. Y. Supp. 124, 125 App. Div. 842.

Sewers

A system of sewers is an "improvement" of lots within the sewer district, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1191, providing that a person who, at the request of the reputed owner of any lot, grades, fills in, or otherwise "improves" the same, has a lien on the lot for his work. Williams, Belser & Co. v. Rowell, 78 Pac. 725, 726, 145 Cal. 259.

Sidewalk

Kirby's Dig. § 4970, provides that every mechanic or materialman shall be entitled to a lien on the building or "improvement," and on the land belonging to the owner, etc. Section 4971 declares that the entire land, to the extent aforesaid, on which any building or other improvement is situated, etc., shall be subject to all liens created by the act; and section 4972 provides that the lien shall attach to the buildings or other improvements in preference to any prior lien, etc. Held, that the word "improvement," as used in section 4970, was not used to mean something similar to a building or erection, but included a sidewalk constructed in the street in front of premises, which were therefore subject to a lien for materials used in constructing the same. Leiper & Mills v. Mining, 86 S. W. 407, 408, 74 Ark. 510, 4 Ann. Cas. 1012.

IMPROVEMENT (Of Municipality)

The phrase "improvement or improvements" in San Francisco Charter, art. 16, § 29, requiring that when the supervisors shall determine that the public interest requires the construction of any permanent improvement or improvements, etc., includes the construction of sewers. Law v. City and County of San Francisco, 77 Pac. 1014, 1017, 144 Cal. 384.

IMPROVEMENT (Of Navigable Water)

As public work, see Public Work.

Permanent piers resting on piles and extending beyond high-water mark and attached to land in the city of Baltimore, by a railroad owning land bordering on a navigable river, were "improvements" within Code Pub. Gen. Laws Md. art. 54, §§ 47-49, giving to proprietors of land bordering on navigable waters the exclusive right to make improvements into the waters in front of their respective land, etc. Western Maryland T. R. Co. v. City of Baltimore, 68 Atl. 6, 10, 106 Md. 561.

The word "improvements," as used in Greater New York Charter, § 822, relating to the acquisition by the city of land under water, and providing that if the property of the riparian owner has been built on or improved, and if such building or improvements are upon single tracts contiguous to or adjoining lands under water, his compensation shall be measured in a certain way, is not limited to buildings; but, if the lands originally under water have been brought to grade upon an established street, they have been improved within the meaning of the statute. In re City of New York, 105 N. Y. Supp. 750, 759, 120 App. Div. 849.

The construction by the state of a barge canal which follows the general line of a stream constituting a public highway is an improvement of the stream, within the rule that a riparian proprietor cannot recover damages resulting from the improvement of a public stream, though the canal deviates from the stream so far as is necessary to straighten it. The construction of a barge canal which follows the general line of a stream constituting a public highway is an improvement of a navigable stream as against the objection that the canal is an artificial waterway under control of the state, in which adjoining landowners have not the rights they possess in a navigable stream, where no damages are claimed for the deprivation of rights to navigation, for the canal is a public waterway, and the fact that the use thereof is under special regulation does not make it any the less such a public improvement as is within the authority of the state to make. Champlain Stone & Sand Co. v. State, 127 N. Y. Supp. 181, 184, 142 App. Div. 94.

IMPROVEMENT (Of Railroad)

Under Act March 17, 1869, § 1 (P. L. 12), authorizing railroad companies to condemn other lands than those originally taken, for the purpose of "improving their lines," a railroad may take land for the purpose of erecting tanks to supply water to its locomotives. Wilson v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co., 72 Atl. 235, 236, 222 Pa. 541.

IMPROVEMENT (Of School Property)

Under Pol. Code, § 1943, authorizing an expenditure by the district of part of the school fund received by it for purposes of building an improvement, such "improvement" must be of such a character as to enhance materially the value and effectiveness of the school property for the purposes for which it is held. That which partakes of the nature of a luxury which lasts but a single day, and then disappears and leaves the property in the same condition in which it was before, is not such an "improvement" as justifies the expenditure of the school fund. City of Butte v. School Dist. No. 1, 74 Pac. 869, 871, 29 Mont. 336.

IMPROVEMENT (On Mining Claim)

The word "improvements," in an agreement for the sale of mining claims which stipulated that if the purchaser failed to perform his agreement the improvements should become the property of the seller as rent for the occupation of the premises by the purchaser and as damages sustained by reason of a breach of the contract, includes removable betterments placed on the land by the purchaser, and which he might, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, take away. Smith v. Detroit & D. Gold Min. Co., 97 N. W. 17, 19, 17 S. D. 413.

The word "improvement," in Rev. St. U. S. § 2324, requiring the making of annual improvements on mining claims, means such an artificial change of the physical conditions of the earth in, on, or so reasonably near a mining claim as to evidence a design to discover mineral therein, or to facilitate its extraction, and in all cases the alteration must be reasonably permanent in character. Fredricks v. Klauser, 96 Pac. 679, 682, 52 Or. 110.

In the development of a mining claim, the maxim that equity regards as done what was intended has no application, and material taken to a mining claim and not used cannot be reckoned as an improvement of the claim. Fredricks v. Klauser, 96 Pac. 679, 682, 52 Or. 110.

Under Comp. Laws, § 4019, which divides property for the purpose of taxation into two classes, real estate and personal property, and declares the former to include "improvements," which are defined to include all buildings, structures, fixtures, and fences erected upon or affixed to the land whether title has been acquired to the land or not, improvements upon an unpatented mining claim become, upon their sale for taxes, so associated with the realty as to constitute an incumbrance thereon within the meaning of Comp. Laws, § 2304, allowing the holder of an incumbrance to perform the annual labor so as to prevent relocation. McVeigh v. Veig, 117 Pac. 857, 859, 16 N. M. 453.

IMPROVEMENT (On Public Land)

Allotments of lands of citizens of the Cherokee Nation were made under Act of Congress, July 1, 1902, c. 1375, 32 Stat. 716, and thereunder citizens of the Cherokee Tribe were entitled to select as their allotments lands on which were located their improvements, and the setting of posts merely for the purpose of marking a prospective allotment did not constitute a lawful improvement. Ross v. Wright, 116 Pac. 949, 952, 29 Okl. 186.

Rev. St. 1901, para. 4035-4037, providing that actual or bona fide settlers who have placed improvements on school lands shall have the preferred right to lease the same, and defining "improvements" as anything permanent in character, the result of labor or capital, enhancing the value of the land, etc., require, to acquire a preferred right to lease school land, that a person be an actual and bona fide settler and that he place on the land improvements permanent in character, the result of labor or capital, which enhance the value of the land. Schley v. Vail, 95 Pac. 113, 114, 11 Ariz. 226.

IMPROVEMENT CERTIFICATE

An instrument providing that the city should make and collect an assessment for an improvement with due diligence, and that in case the assessment should not be collected to meet the certificate within two years from the date of confirmation the city would pay the amount of the certificate upon 30 days' notice of default in the collection of the assessment, is called an "improvement certificate." Dime Sav. Inst. v. Mayor, etc., of City of Hoboken, 42 N. J. Law, 283, 285.

Where sealed instruments certify and covenant that there is a certain sum of money due the holders for improvements in certain streets, who are entitled to receive the same from the treasurer of the town, with interest, in amounts not less than $50 at any time, as the money on said assessment should come to the hands of said treasurer, that the town binds itself to use due diligence in making and collecting the said assessment, but, in case said assessment shall not be collected within a specified time, that it will pay said principal sum, with interest, to the holder, "upon thirty days' notice of default in the collection of the assessment," such instrument is called an "improvement certificate." Morgan v. Town of Guttenburg in Hudson County, 40 N. J. Law, 394, 395.

IMPROVEMENT FUND TAX

Code, § 894, authorizes any city to levy an "improvement fund tax" to pay for street improvements. Section 830 provides for payment of street improvements out of the "city improvement fund." Held, that both statutes refer to the same fund, and contracts for paving which provide for payment of difference between amount due for paving and amount raised by special assessments out of the "paving fund" and "general paving fund" refer to the fund specified in the statutes. Corey v. City of Ft. Dodge, 111 N. W. 6, 8, 133 Iowa, 666.

IMPROVIDENCE

Where a son failed in business conducted in his own name and involved his father to a certain extent, and thereafter the father paid the obligations of the son and took the business and permitted the son to use his name, and other losses occurred, but the father allowed the business to be conducted in this way until death, no such case of "improvidence" is shown as excludes the son from the right to administer on his father's estate under Code Civ. Proc. § 2661. "In order to disqualify a person under the statute, the 'improvidence' or want of understanding must amount to a lack of intelligence." In re Greene's Estate, 98 N. Y. Supp. 98, 102, 48 Misc. Rep. 31 (citing Emerson v. Bowers, 14 N. Y. 456; Coggs v. Green [N. Y.] 9 Hun, 471; Coope v. Lowerre [N. Y.] 1 Barb. Ch. 45).

Where the statute provided that no person should serve as administrator who is adjudged to be incompetent by reason of "improvidence" or want of understanding, the court properly removed an executor who was palpably deficient in the understanding necessary to enable one to transact business, who made no sufficient effort to collect the debts due the estate and who never read and did not know the contents of affidavits attached to his report and was ignorant of his personal business relations with the decedent whose estate he was administering. In re Courtney's Estate, 79 Pac. 317, 318, 31 Mont. 625.

IMPROVIDENTLY EXERCISED

The phrase "improvidently exercised," as used in stating the rule that an appellate court will not interfere with the discretion of the trial court in granting a new trial, unless improvidently exercised, means thoughtlessly exercised, or without due consideration. Blackwood v. Eads, 135 S. W. 922, 924, 98 Ark. 304 (citing Webst. Int. Dict.).

IMPULSE

See Irresistible Impulse.

IMPURE

The term "impure" is a common word which may be assumed to be understood in the common meaning by an ordinary jury without definition. Commonwealth v. Buckley, 86 N. E. 910, 911, 200 Mass. 346, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 225, 128 Am. St. Rep. 425.

IMPURE MILK

Act June 13, 1906, § 3, defines the term "impure milk" to be such milk as contains more than 88 per centum of watery fluids or less than 12 per centum of solids. Board of Health of State of New Jersey v. Vandruens, 72 Atl. 125, 126, 77 N. J. Law, 443.

IMPUTATION

In an instruction that defendant is "liable for the slightest negligence, and compels them to repel by satisfactory proof every imputation of such negligence," the word "imputation" means charge. If it can be said that a jury should find that the defendant is guilty of negligence because negligence is imputed to it, then the consequential result of that would be that the burden would be shifted upon the defendant to show that it was not guilty of negligence. That is plainly the effect of this instruction. By saying that the defendant must repel by satisfactory proof every "imputation" of negligence, it could mean nothing else than to tell the jury that the burden is upon the defendant to prove that the injury was not the result of its negligent act. Blake v. Camden Interstate Ry. Co., 50 S. E. 408, 409, 57 W. Va. 300.

IMPUTED APPRECIATION OF RISK

The test of "imputed appreciation of risk" is whether the servant understood the risk, or by the exercise of ordinary observation ought to have understood it. Rase v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 120 N. W. 360, 366, 107 Minn. 260, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138.

IMPUTED KNOWLEDGE

The doctrine of "imputed knowledge" as to actual existing conditions necessarily rests upon the duty of the master to furnish his employé with a safe place in which to work, and is inapplicable where there is no such duty. It is ordinarily the duty of the master, as the court instructed the jury, to furnish his employés a suitable and safe place in which to work, and suitable appliances wherewith to perform the work; and, where such duty exists, the master is held to the exercise of care in making the place and appliances safe, and cannot be heard to say that he did not know of defects and dangers that he might have ascertained by the exercise of reasonable care. Roche v. Llewellyn Ironworks Co., 74 Pac. 147, 149, 150, 140 Cal. 563.

The words "imputed knowledge," as applied in actions by a servant against his employer for injuries, mean that the servant injured is, or is not, chargeable with a comprehension of the conditions which caused his injury and of the risks created by those conditions, according as it may reasonably be inferred that those conditions or those risks would or would not have been comprehended by a person of ordinary prudence, whose mental and physical capacities, both natural and acquired, and opportunities for observing the facts indicative of danger, were the same as those of the servant himself. Sullivan v. R. D. Wood & Co., 86 Pac. 629, 631, 43 Wash. 259, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1047 (adopting definition in 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 391).

The test of "imputed knowledge" of danger is not the exercise of ordinary care to discover danger, but whether it is known to or plainly observable by the employé. Rase v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 120 N. W. 360, 366, 107 Minn. 260, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138.

IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE.

See Repel Imputation of Negligence.

As Identification, see Identification.

After an exhaustive review of the judicial decisions in the various states on the question of "imputed negligence," the court says: "The rule fairly deducible from our own cases, and supported by the great weight of authority by courts of other jurisdictions, is that where an adult person, possessed of all his faculties and personally in the exercise of that degree of care, which common prudence requires under all the surrounding circumstances, is injured through the negligence of some third person and the concurring negligence of one with whom the plaintiff is riding as guest or companion, between whom and the plaintiff the relation of master and servant or principal and agent, or mutual responsibility in a common enterprise, does not in fact exist, the plaintiff being at the time in no position to exercise authority or control over the driver, then the negligence of the driver is not imputable to the injured person, but the latter is entitled to recover against the one but for whose wrong his injuries would not have been sustained. Disregarding the passenger's own due care, the test whether the negligence of the driver is to be imputed to the one riding depends upon the latter's control or right of control of the actions of the driver, so as to constitute in fact the relation of principal and agent, or master and servant, or his voluntary, unconstrained, noncontractual surrender of all care for himself to the caution of the driver. Thus where a person was injured through the negligence of a third person and the concurring negligence of one with whom she was riding as guest, the driver's negligence would not be imputed to her, where in entering and continuing in a conveyance she acted with reasonable caution, and had no ground to suspect incompetency and no cause to anticipate negligence on the part of the driver, and if the impending danger, although in part produced by the driver was so sudden or of such a character as not to permit or require her to act for her own protection." Shultz v. Old Colony St. Ry., 79 N. E. 873, 877, 878, 193 Mass. 309, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 597, 118 Am. St. Rep. 502, 9 Ann. Cas. 402.

Where two fellow servants having duties to perform, the one wholly distinct from the other, are severally engaged in the performance of such duties, the negligence of one should not be "imputed" to the other. The negligence of a driver of a fire engine is not imputable to the engineer who in the performance of his duty is riding on the rear end of the engine at the time of a collision with a street car. McKernan v. Detroit Citizens' St. Ry. Co., 101 N. W. 812, 814, 138 Mich. 519, 68 L. R. A. 347.

Where a railroad station is not wholly "in" a village, but is half in it and half in another village, the railroad cannot be compelled by Railroad Law (Laws 1892, p. 1392, c. 676) § 34, requiring a railroad station in a village to have the same name as the village, to change the name of the station to that of the village. People ex rel. Village of North Pelham v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 110 N. Y. Supp. 2, 125 App. Div. 641.

A fire policy, with a rider attached permitting a removal of the property to another location and providing that it should cover the property "in both locations during the removal," does not cover the property temporary stored in a building other than the building in which it was insured, with a view to the subsequent removal to the new location. Palatine Ins. Co. of London v. Kehoe, 83 N. E. 866, 867, 197 Mass. 354, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1007, 125 Am. St. Rep. 376, 14 Ann. Cas. 690.

An elevator was standing at the first floor of a building, with the door, which extended to the roof of the elevator, wide open; the attendant being elsewhere. The car was operated by a lever on the side wall to the right of one entering the door, and, while the elevator was stationary, this lever was in the center of its arc of operation. In order to start the elevator it was necessary to push down a button at the center of the arc, which permitted the movement of the lever to the right or left. The elevator was in perfect condition, both before and after the accident, which no one saw. The building superintendent found insured hanging head downward into the elevator, her body caught between the roof of the elevator and the floor of the building. One limb which had been caught at the thigh was projecting over the floor. When the elevator was released, insured fell into it on its floor. Held, that insured was "in" the elevator when the injuries were inflicted, within a policy insuring against accidental injury while "in" a passenger elevator. Depue v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 166 Fed. 183, 184.

The lessor of a suite of rooms in an apartment house covenanted that he would "at his own expense" light and keep neat and clean the common stairs "in" said building. Even if the covenant does not necessarily cover back stairs outside the house but in a platform connected with it, there is at least room for doubt that it is not limited to the front stairs; so that evidence of the practical construction put on it by the landlord, by taking care of the outside stairs as well as the front stairs, and cleaning ice and snow therefrom as a part of the duty, is admissible in a suit involving the landlord's duty and liability. Nash v. Webber, 90 N. E. 872, 874, 204 Mass. 419.

As for

The words "in her natural life," as used in a will in which testator gave and bequeathed to his wife all his estate, real and personal, to have and to hold in her natural life, were probably intended to be used for the phrase "for her natural life." If they were taken to mean the same as that phrase, the property was given to the wife for life with power of disposition. In re Pierson, 110 N. Y. Supp. 476, 479, 58 Misc. Rep. 94 (quoting Rood v. Watson, 7 N. Y. Supp. 212, 54 Hun, 85).

As from

The word "from" is often used interchangeably with "in." An indictment charging larceny "from" a residence on fire charges an offense under Comp. Laws, § 11,551, prohibiting larceny by stealing "in" any building on fire. People v. Klammer, 100 N. W. 600, 187 Mich. 399.

As in and about

Under a statute giving a lien to the class of persons named therein who may labor or perform services in any office, etc., manufactory, or mill of any character, etc., the term "in any manufactory or mill of any character" refers to labor performed in or about such place, and no lien exists where the services are wholly performed at a place miles distant from the mill and have no immediate connection with the operation thereof, and hence one engaged at a distant place in cutting and hauling logs to be sawed at the mill was not entitled to a lien. Bush Bros. Lumber & Milling Co. v. Eastwood (Tex.) 132 S. W. 889, 892.

As on

On construed as in, see On—Upon.

Where the indictment charged that accused unlawfully shot a pistol "while in a passenger car," and the evidence showed that he discharged the pistol while on the steps of the car, the variance was not material, the words "in the car," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 511, as amended by Acts 1905, p. 86, being equivalent to "on the car." Andrews v. State, 70 S. E. 111, 112, 8 Ga. App. 700.

Of

Of construed as in, see Of.

As within, inside of, within the bounds or limits of

The words "in one year," in a will directing that, on the death of one of the beneficiaries, the executors in one year therefrom shall divide the portion of the principal held in trust for him among his heirs equally, means within one year, and thereby the testator desired to express his intention that the time when the different remaindermen would come into actual possession and use of their estates should not be postponed beyond one year from the date of the death of a life tenant, and in no sense can they be taken to work any enlargement of the time of payment. Nichols v. Nichols, 86 N. Y. Supp. 719, 722, 42 Misc. Rep. 381.

The word "in" means "inside of" "within the bounds or limits of," and under Railroad Law, § 26, allowing a railroad to cross any street or highway "in" any city at grade, with the consent of the municipal authorities, a boulevard may be so crossed at grade with such consent at a point within a city, though the boulevard was built by the county authorities and extended far beyond the city limits. Board of Chosen Freeholders of County of Hudson v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 59 Atl. 308, 307, 68 N. J. Eq. 500.

IN ACT OF

In a prosecution for homicide, the court charged that if defendant honestly believed, without fault or carelessness on his part, that when he killed deceased the latter was in the act of killing defendant's father, or of inflicting on him great bodily injury, and that the danger appeared to defendant to be urgent, defendant was justified in striking deceased to prevent his father from being killed or from receiving great bodily injury. Held, that the words "in the act of" should be construed to mean "about to," and that the instruction was therefore not objectionable as requiring that it must appear to the jury that deceased was about to kill defendant's father, or inflict on him great bodily injury, before they could find defendant not guilty. Mabry v. State, 97 S. W. 285, 287, 80 Ark. 345.

IN ADDITION TO

Rev. St. 1898, § 4490, provides that on escape from prison the guilty person shall be punished by imprisonment, not to exceed 10 years, in addition to his former sentence; and section 4494 declares that, in case of a prisoner breaking jail, he shall be punished by imprisonment for one year in addition to the unexpired term of the former sentence. The words in section 4490, "in addition to his former sentence," and in section 4494, "in addition to the unexpired term," were used to indicate that the punishment for the second offense is not deemed to abridge the execution of the judgment theretofore pronounced. The theory of the law is that where a judgment has once been rendered bearing solely on the person, as in the case of a sentence to confinement at hard labor for punishment of crime, it can only be satisfied by death of the party, his confinement at hard labor for the length of time mentioned in the sentence, less any good time earned according to law, by a reversal of the judgment, or by pardon. The sections do not preclude the recapture and confinement of a person escaping from custody to serve the unexpired term of his original sentence without judicial proceedings, the time of his voluntary absence not being counted in his favor. In re McCauley, 100 N. W. 1031, 1032, 123 Wis. 31, 3 Ann. Cas. 414.

Under Laws 1897, c. 414, § 130, providing that a "village shall not incur indebtedness if thereby its total contract indebtedness, exclusive of liabilities for which taxes have already been levied, shall, in addition to obligations issued to provide for the supply of water, exceed ten per centum of the assessed valuation of the real property, subject to taxation, as it appeared on the last preceding village assessment roll," the indebtedness incurred for water supply must be excluded from the entire indebtedness of the village in determining whether it has reached the 10 per cent. limitation; the phrase "in addition to obligations issued to provide for the supply of water" not limiting the first word "indebtedness." Lines v. Village of Otego, 91 N. Y. Supp. 785, 787.

The phrase "in addition to curtesy," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 111 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 375), providing that if a wife die intestate, owning personal property, her widower shall be allowed to keep as his absolute property "in addition to curtesy" all the articles and property and be entitled to all the remedies as relates to his deceased wife's property, as is provided for the widow in the deceased husband's property, did not mean that the provision therein made for the surviving husband was conditioned on his having curtesy, but that he was entitled to the same, whether he had any estate of curtesy or not. Ferguson's Estate v. Gentry, 104 S. W. 108, 109, 206 Mo. 203.

IN ALL LIKELIHOOD

Where a physician testified that the results of plaintiff's injury "in all likelihood" were permanent, the term quoted should be treated as equivalent to "reasonable certainty." Ballard v. Kansas City, 86 S. W. 479, 480, 110 Mo. App. 391.

IN AND ABOUT

A servant injured while engaged in removing, by means of a cable and a locomotive on a railway, large chunks of iron, the result of a "boil" at a furnace, was engaged "in and about the operation of a railway" within the Employers' Liability Act. Woodward Iron Co. v. Sheehan, 52 South. 24, 25, 26, 186 Ala. 429 (Code Ala. 1907, § 3910).

it, defense, vindication. Meyers v. State, 105 S. W. 48, 49, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 336.

The word "behalf" means in the name of, on account of, benefit, advantage, interest; and in any of these senses a suit in the name of the state, for the use of the county, to recover a penalty on a liquor dealer's bond, is a suit in behalf of the state, within the meaning of the Constitution of Texas, although the recovery inures to the benefit of the county. *State v. IN BULK

See Stored in Bulk.

The term "in bulk" has long been understood in commercial circles as contradistinguished from "package" or "parcel," as where wheat, lard, and the like are sold in bulk. The common and approved usage of language, the technical meaning given by the business world, and the legal definition of the expression "in bulk" are opposed to the idea of a number of packages, parcels, or barrels containing merchandise being regarded as being in bulk. Standard Oil Co. v. Commonwealth, 82 S. W. 1020, 1022, 119 Ky. 75.

Where a storekeeper, after selling at auction part of his stock of goods, sold at a private sale all but a few dollars worth of the balance, such sale was a "sale in bulk," defined by Laws 1901, p. 224, c. 109, § 4, to be a sale of a stock of goods out of the usual course of business. Fitz-Henry v. Munter, 74 Pac. 1008, 1004, 33 Wash. 629.

Where personal property, part of a bankrupt's stock, was sold to defendant at three different times shortly before bankruptcy, the goods being less than the bankrupt's entire stock in trade, the sale was not a "sale in bulk" within Laws Mass. 1903, c. 415, regulating sales in bulk. Carpenter v. Karnow, 193 Fed. 762, 765.

The words "in bulk" in a tax deed simply mean that the tracts for which the deed was made were sold in bulk, and such recital neither denies nor alleges that the sale included other tracts, or that such sale included all the lands outside of town lots upon which taxes were delinquent, and the presumption, in the absence of anything to the contrary, would be that the county treasurer complied with the statute, and there is nothing in such deed in any manner implying the contrary. Gibson v. Smith, 124 N. W. 733, 738, 24 S. D. 514; Same v. Kitterman, 124 N. W. 740, 24 S. D. 530.

A sale by one partner of his interests in a mercantile business to his associates is not a "sale of goods in bulk," within Act Aug. 17, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 92), regulating sales of stock of goods in bulk. Taylor v. Folds, 58 S. E. 683, 684, 2 Ga. App. 453.

IN THE CAR OF ANY ELEVATOR

A policy to indemnify insured against loss for injuries to persons "while in the car of any elevator" in a building of insured covers a loss occasioned by an injury to a boy who inserted his head into the elevator shaft far enough to have it struck by a car. Scarritt Estate Co. v. Casualty Co. of America, 149 S. W. 1049, 1051, 166 Mo. App. 567.

IN CASE OF DEATH

An absolute bequest to a person, followed by the expression "in case of his death," cannot be construed to mean "at his death" or "from his death"; the element of contingency being absent in that case, as no proper force could then be given to the expression, "in case of." Fischer v. Fischer, 71 Atl. 488, 489, 75 N. J. Eq. 74.

Under a will devising an estate in remainder to testator's children, and providing "in case of the death of one or more of said children," issue of said wife, such shares to be equally divided between all my living children or their issue, the phrase quoted referred to their dying before the mother and before the estate came into possession. Clements v. Reese (Ky.) 74 S. W. 1047 (citing Pruitt v. Holland, 92 Ky. 641, 18 S. W. 852; Thackston v. Watson, 84 Ky. 206, 1 S. W. 398; Ferguson v. Thomason, 9 S. W. 714, 87 Ky. 519; Lee v. Mumford [Ky.] 44 S. W. 91; Baxter v. Isaacs [Ky.] 71 S. W. 907).

As death within testator's lifetime

Where there is a bequest to one and "in case of his death" to another, the expression "in case of his death" unexplained by the context refers to the event of death happening before the death of the testator. Fischer v. Fischer, 71 Atl. 488, 489, 75 N. J. Eq. 74.

The general rule is that, where the context is silent, the words "in case of," and similar expressions referring to the death of the prior legatee in connection with some collateral event, apply to the contingency happening as well after as before the death of testator. Fischer v. Fischer, 71 Atl. 488, 490, 75 N. J. Eq. 74.

Where testator devised his residuary estate to his son for life, and, "in case of his death" without issue and leaving a widow him surviving, then the estate to go as therein provided, but, if his son should die leaving issue, then the estate to go to them, the words "in case of his death" mean the son's death subsequent to testator's and not prior thereto. Chesterfield v. Hoskin, 113 N. W. 647, 649, 133 Wis. 368.

When a devise is made to one person in fee, and "in case of his death" to another in fee, the devise over is construed in general to refer only to a death occurring in the testator's lifetime; but, when the death of the first taker is coupled with other circumstances which may or may not take place, the devise over, unless controlled by other provisions of the will, takes effect on the death of the first taker, whether before or after the death of the testator. Carpenter v. Sangamon Loan & Trust Co., 82 N. E. 418, 419, 229 Ill. 486.

After the death of his wife, the life tenant, testator devised to his two sons, James and John, his farm to be equally divided between them; but in a subsequent paragraph provided that, "in case of the death of either of my sons above named I will and bequeath that the remaining son living shall have and hold in his own right the whole of the above named bounded two tracts of land." According to the plain intent, the words "in case of" should be construed to mean "at" or "upon"; and the whole phrase "in case of the death of" as referring to an event to occur subsequently to the death of the testator. Neal v. Hamilton Co., 78 S. E. 971, 975, 70 W. Va. 250.

IN CASE RETURN CANNOT BE HAD

In Comp. Laws, § 5099, the words "in case return cannot be had," authorizing money judgment for plaintiff in replevin "in case return cannot be had," are equivalent to the words "in default thereof," and when therefore plaintiff is already in possession, if he succeeds in the suit he merely takes a judgment to confirm his possession and for damages. Longley v. Daly, 46 N. W. 247, 250, 1 S. D. 267.

IN CONSIDERATION

A legacy reciting that it is "in consideration of her care for my invalid mother many years preceding her death, and also her care of my infant son," does not imply a debt, but a bounty. It is not an acknowledgment of a legal obligation, and, when pleaded in an action barred by the statute of limitations to recover for such services, does not remove the bar of the statute. McNeal v. Pierce, 75 N. E. 938, 939, 73 Ohio St. 7, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1117, 112 Am. St. Rep. 695, 4 Ann. Cas. 71.

IN DEFAULT OF ISSUE

A father, by a will made in 1901, gave all his residuary estate to his daughter for her separate use, free from any control of the husband she may now have or may hereafter have, with power to appoint among her children or their issue, and in default of issue to named collaterals. At the date of the will, and at the death of the testator, plaintiff was not married, nor did she contemplate marriage. Held, that under Act July 9, 1897 (P. L. 213), the words "in default of issue" imply a definite failure of issue, and the daughter took a life estate only. Dilworth v. Schuylkill Imp. Land Co., 69 Atl. 47, 49, 219 Pa. 527.

IN THE DIRECTION OF THEIR LINES CONTINUED TO THE CHANNEL

As the rights granted by the riparian act of 1856 extend to "all lands covered by water lying in front of any tract of land * * * lying upon any navigable stream or bay of the sea or harbor, as far as the edge of the channel," and the right of action given the grantees to prevent encroachments extends to "all such submerged lands in the direction of their lines continued to the channel," this right of action extends to the space between lines drawn at right angles from the shore line "to the edge of the channel," where the channel runs parallel or practically so with the shore line. Merrill-Stevens Co. v. Durkee, 57 South. 428, 432, 62 Fla. 549.

IN DISGUISE

IN THE EVENT

Under a will providing that "in the event of" the death of both of testatrix's children the residue of the estate was to go to her brother, where one of the children died before the mother and the other shortly after, the unexpended portion of the estate goes to the brother and not to the heirs of the son dying after the mother. Woolverton v. Johnson, 77 Pac. 559-561, 69 Kan. 708.

Where the words "in the event of the decease of a devisee" are used in a will, they ordinarily speak as of a death within the lifetime of the testator. Testator devised real estate to his wife for life and directed that his property previously mentioned at his wife's decease should be equally divided between his two daughters, and then directed that, on the decease of either of his daughters, the portion of testator's property held by either of them should descend to their issue and be placed in the hands of a trustee, and, if there was no surviving issue, the property should then pass to the deceased's sister and issue. The daughters acquired an absolute estate in the property on the death of the wife; the limitation being applicable only in case of the daughter's death before the death of the wife. Ketchum v. Ketchum, 91 N. Y. Supp. 801, 802, 100 App. Div. 423.

Where testator devised lands to his daughter with the provision that, "in the event she should marry" and die without issue and leave a husband surviving her, the husband should have the lands for life and at his death they should go to the testator's son if living, the words "in the event she should marry" refer to the happening of that event at any time and not merely within the testator's lifetime. Cooksey v. Hill, 50 S. W. 235, 236, 106 Ky. 297.

IN EVERY SUCH CASE

Civ. Code 1910, § 3863, declares: "If a will be lost or destroyed subsequently to the death or without the consent of the testator, a copy of the same, clearly proved to be such by the subscribing witnesses, and other evidence, may be admitted to probate and record in lieu of the original; but 'in every such case' the presumption is of revocation by the testator, and that presumption must be rebutted by proof." This Code section is awkwardly expressed, but, properly construed, the words "in every such case" refer to every case wherein it is sought to have admitted to probate and record a copy of a lost or destroyed will in lieu of an original; and therefore, when it is sought to prove and establish a will not to be found at the death of the testator, the propounder is confronted with the presumption that the will was revoked by the testator, and that presumption must be rebutted by proof. Harris v. Camp, 76 S. E. 40, 41, 138 Ga. 752.

IN EXECUTION

The term "in execution," in Const. art. 2, § 33, providing that all prisoners, unless "in execution," or committed for capital offenses, when the proof is evident or the presumption great, shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, includes a defendant who has been convicted of a misdemeanor and sentenced to the house of correction for a term and is in the custody of the sheriff on the mittimus, and he is not entitled as of right to bail pending appeal, though final commitment has not been made. In re Comolli, 63 Atl. 184, 186, 78 Vt. 337.

IN THE EXERCISE OF DUE CARE

The phrase "in the exercise of due care," in Acts 1907, p. 162, providing that an injured servant in the exercise of due care may recover for injuries caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, is intended to preserve to the employer the defense of contributory negligence, and does not change the rule as to the burden of proof, which is still on the employer. Soard v. Western Anthracite Coal, etc., Co., 128 S. W. 759, 760, 92 Ark. 502.

cating that the proceeding must have been instituted in the Special Sessions before an indictment can be presented by a grand jury. People ex rel. Moore v. Warden of City Prison, 185 N. Y. Supp. 883, 887, 150 App. Div. 644.

IN FORCE

See Be in Force.

An indictment, alleging that the local option law was "in force" at the time of the alleged offense, was equivalent to an allegation that the law had been duly adopted. State v. Campbell, 119 S. W. 494, 495, 137 Mo. App. 105.

The term "in force" in a life policy on the 15-year distribution plan, which provides for the payment of quarterly premiums in advance, and which stipulates that the policy shall be credited with its distributive share of the surplus apportioned at the expiration of the 15 years, and that only 15-year distribution policies "in force" at the end of such term shall share in such distribution, requires that premiums shall have been fully paid and that insured shall be alive, and a policy is not entitled to any distributive share of the surplus where insured paid all premiums during the 15-year period and died 11 days before the expiration of the period. McDonnell v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 116 N. Y. Supp. 35, 38, 131 App. Div. 643.

"Rates in force," to which Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 1, 24 Stat. 379, applies, are not limited to rates under which transportation has actually taken place, but are those which the carrier has established as its present charges, as distinguished from those which are obsolete, tentative, or perhaps only to take effect in the future. They are rates open to public inspection and on which shipments may be made, if offered. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. v. United States, 168 Fed. 267, 269, 92 C. C. A. 331.

IN FRAUD OF

The phrase "in fraud of the provisions of this act," in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67c (3), 30 Stat. 564, does not necessarily mean actual fraud or illegality, but intent to prevent equitable distribution of the debtor's property. A lien obtained by a foreign creditor of a bankrupt within four months prior to the bankruptcy, and while the bankrupt was solvent, on property of the debtor in a foreign country through judicial proceedings in the nature of an attachment, which were not opposed, is one sought and permitted "in fraud of the provisions of the act," and, when the creditor realized that he was not entitled to prove the remainder of the debt against the estate, he is not entitled to prove the remainder of the debt against the estate.

a claim against the estate in bankruptcy in this country without surrendering the amount so received so as to place him on equitable equality with other creditors. In re Pollmann, 156 Fed. 221, 222.

IN FRONT OF

The intersection of streets is not "in front of" a corner lot thereon, within the village law, providing that in case of paving of a village street no landowner shall be liable for the expense of paving any portion of the street not in front of such land. O'Leary v. City of Glens Falls, 93 N. E. 518, 514, 200 N. Y. 218, 21 Ann. Cas. 633; Id., 112 N. Y. Supp. 932, 128 App. Div. 683.

IN FULL

Where plaintiff accepted a check, inclosed in a letter which declared that it was paid "in full for services rendered," he could not retain the check, and at the same time repudiate the condition, which acceptance constituted an accord and satisfaction. Legge v. Foster, 131 N. Y. Supp. 582.

Where a marine carrier insured the cargo covered by bills of lading, and against the risks so assumed took out a marine policy which contained the provision that "this insurance is hereby understood and agreed to be in effect a re-insurance of the risks which are, or may at any time be, assumed by the assured, and the assurers agree to pay the insured, 'in full, all claims for such losses arising from perils enumerated in the policy as the assured may, in their judgment, settle for with the owners or other parties interested in the merchandise,'" the insurer was liable for the full amount so paid by the carrier to the extent of the amount named in the policy, which was one of re-insurance and not of co-insurance, such as would entitle the insurer to prorate the loss with the carrier. Ocean S. S. Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co., 121 Fed. 882, 886.

The acceptance and deposit of a check, on which is written the words "in full to date," or an equivalent phrase, does not constitute an accord and satisfaction of a controverted claim as a matter of law. Whether a buyer, at the time of sending a check on which was written "in full to date," and whether the seller, on receiving and depositing the check, understood, or ought to have understood, as reasonable men, that the check was in accord and satisfaction of all outstanding claims between them, or whether the seller, on receiving the check had a right to believe that it was sent in payment of a reduced bill for specified goods amounting to the exact amount of the check, held for the jury. Worcester Color Co. v. Henry Wood's Sons Co., 95 N. E. 392, 394, 209 Mass. 105.

Where vendors retain and use checks accompanying an account giving the amount of goods delivered and the price therefor, at the foot of which was written the words, "To check in full," it does not constitute an accord and satisfaction where, under the contract, the vendee was to accept the goods at a specified price, and he continued to receive goods, though he had repudiated the contract after notification that they were delivered under the contract, and that any check sent would be simply credited on account. Laroe v. Sugar Loaf Dairy Co., 73 N. E. 61, 62, 180 N. Y. 367.

While Const. art. 3, § 15, requires that a bill on its final passage shall be "read at length, section by section," yet if the record shows that the bill was read "in full" it shows a substantial compliance with the Constitution as "read in full" means to "read from beginning to end without omission," and, if so, the bill is read at length, section by section. Tarr v. Western Loan & Savings Co., 99 Pac. 1049, 1053, 15 Idaho, 751.

IN FURTHERANCE OF

The phrase "in furtherance of," when applied to a party entering into a contract in furtherance of a prior contract, means in accordance with the prior contract. Thompson v. Erie R. Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 92, 96, 96 App. Div. 539.

Where defendant was sued as a corporation, and a plea in abatement denied the incorporation and alleged that defendant company was a partnership composed of certain persons, an amended petition making the proper parties defendants was an amendment in "furtherance of justice," within Civ. Code Prac. § 134, providing that the court may at any time, "in furtherance of justice," permit a pleading to be amended by adding or striking out the name of a party, or by correcting a mistake in any other respect. Teets v. Mendelson & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 33, 34, 83 C. C. A. 145.

IN HAND

Where the judge, in answer to a question by the foreman of a jury as to what constituted a demand, replied "that the officer must have the execution and the receipt in hand, in order, that, if the property be surrendered on demand, he may surrender the receipt," the words "in hand," to one conversant with legal terms and phrases might import in his possession, or on hand; but, to the common and ordinary mind untrammelled by the nice distinctions and technicalities of the law, the word undoubtedly imported the meaning that they were exposed to view, and hence would be misleading to the jury. Gilmore v. McNeill, 45 Me. 599, 601.

IN THE HANDS OF

See Money in the Hands or Possession of Bank.

The term "in the hands of," as used in an order of court authorizing a sale of all accounts, choses in action, claims, etc., in the hands of the administrator, means in actual possession in such condition that actual control is legally with the person described as holding it. Property is not "in the hands of" a person when it is doubtful that he could obtain possession even by invoking the coercive powers of a court. Mere knowledge of the existence of some sort of claim upon the part of an administrator would not place it in his hands. Routledge v. Elmendorf, 116 S. W. 156, 159, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 174 (citing Price v. Society for Savings, 30 Atl. 139, 64 Conn. 362, 42 Am. St. Rep. 198; Swan v. Warren, 138 Mass. 11; Pruitt v. Armstrong, 56 Ala. 306).

Property delivered to a carrier and in transit when garnishment summons is served is not "in the hands of the consignee," within St. 1898, § 3719, making a garnishee liable for property in his hands belonging to defendant. Kuehn v. Nero, 130 N. W. 56, 57, 145 Wis. 256.

IN LIEU OF

The expressions "in lieu of dower" and "as dower" are often used interchangeably, and the former expression is not sufficient to indicate a purpose to convey a fee-simple title, and where a widow instituted actions to recover dower, and thereafter stipulated that she waived all claim to dower in specified lands and received "in lieu of dower" the homestead allotted to her husband, she did not acquire a fee-simple title to the land awarded to her, but acquired only a life estate. Perry v. Dance (Ky.) 112 S. W. 911, 913.

St. 1898, § 1222k, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 766, c. 442, provides that trust corporations existing under chapter 86 shall pay the State Treasurer $500 as an annual license fee for transacting business, and, in addition, 3 per cent. of their net income during the preceding year, the payment of such license and percentage to be in lieu of all taxes for any purpose authorized by law, except taxes on the corporations' real estate. Held, that the provision that the license fee and percentage shall be in lieu of all taxes on the property of the corporations, except their real estate, merely means that their general property shall be exempt from ordinary taxation. *State ex rel. IN PARI DELICTO

The maxim does not apply where the rights of a third person have intervened. Doyle v. Burns, 99 N. W. 195, 204, 123 Iowa, 488.

One who pays a bribe cannot cover it because the parties are equally criminal. But where contracts or transactions are prohibited by positive statute for the sake of protecting one set of men from another—the one from their situation and condition being liable to be oppressed or imposed upon by the other—then the parties are not "in pari delicto"; and, in furtherance of these statutes, the person injured, after the transaction is finished and completed, may bring his action and defeat the contract. American Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bertram, 70 N. E. 258, 262, 163 Ind. 51, 64 L. R. A. 935.

Where a fund realized as the result of an illegal transaction was paid over to a third person for one of the participants in the transaction, the third person could not retain the fund on the ground of the illegality of the transaction, and the law raises an assumpsit against him in favor of the party for whose benefit the fund was placed in his hands. Bendet v. Ellis, 111 S. W. 795, 801, 120 Tenn. 277 (quoting and adopting Tate v. Commercial Bldg. Ass'n, 83 S. E. 382, 97 Va. 74, 45 L. R. A. 243, 75 Am. St. Rep. 770).

In an action to recover money from defendants, obtained from the plaintiff by means of inducing him to believe that a foot race was "fixed" so that one party was sure to win, and persuading the plaintiff to participate to the extent of betting the money of one side to the simulated race as if it were his own, on the assurance that he should receive 20 per cent. of the sum won, he being ignorant at the time that the money all belonged to the parties on both sides of the pretended wager, held that, although he was in delicto, by consenting to act in such deceitful attitude, he was not in "pari delicto" with the conspirators, and is therefore entitled to recover back the sum of $5,000 which the conspirators persuaded him to intrust to the possession of one of them as a stakeholder, not to be bet on the race, but to be used to make a showing by the stakeholder in the event of a count of the stake money being called for by one of the feigned bettors. Wright v. Stewart, 130 Fed. 905, 921.

The rule that relief will not be granted where the parties are "in pari delicto" is not applicable where one of the parties occupies a confidential relation to the other, and, where it is sought to set aside a conveyance, the fact that the conveyance made by the weaker party is illegal does not necessarily place him in pari delicto with the stronger party who dominated the weaker party for his own profit. A bill sought the cancellation of a note and mortgage on the ground that, while complainant was being pressed by creditors, defendant, her brother, in whom she reposed confidence and who managed her business, advised her to execute a bogus mortgage to him. By subsequent amendments such allegations were stricken from the bill and superseded by sections which omitted all statements as to complainant being pressed with claims, etc., but alleged that defendant advised her that, in order to protect her rights in the land and to preserve the same as a homestead for herself and her minor children, it would be necessary for her to give him a mortgage. By another amendment it was alleged that defendant unduly influenced complainant, and that it was not necessary for complainant to have given the mortgage in order to protect her rights in the land and to preserve the same as a homestead. The bill was not demurrable under the principles of equity applicable to parties in "pari delicto." Phillips v. Bradford, 41 South. 657, 658, 147 Ala. 346 (citing Glover v. Walker, 18 South. 251, 107 Ala. 540; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. [3d Ed.] pp. 1714, 1717, 1718, 1748, 1749, §§ 940, 942, 956; Clemmens v. Clemmens, 28 Wis. 637, 9 Am. Rep. 520; *Boyd v. IN PARI MATERIA

The rule "in pari materia" is that the similar terms of statutes enacted for like purposes shall receive like interpretations. United States v. Colorado & N. W. R. Co., 157 Fed. 321, 330, 85 C. C. A. 27, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 167, 13 Ann. Cas. 898.

Statutes are in pari materia which relate to the same person or thing or same class of persons or things. De Graffenreid v. Iowa Land & Trust Co., 95 Pac. 624, 639, 20 Okl. 687.

It is a rule of interpretation that if divers statutes relate to the same thing, they ought all to be taken into consideration in construing any one of them. If, the thing contained in the subsequent statute be within the reason of the former, it should be taken to be within the meaning thereof, and, if it can be gathered from the subsequent statute "in pari materia" what meaning the Legislature intended to give the words of the former statute, it will amount to a legislative declaration of its meaning, and will govern the construction of the first statute. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Davidson (Tex.) 93 S. W. 436, 448.

The doctrine "in pari materia" cannot be invoked to establish a preconceived design by Congress, in the several enactments providing for the admission, respectively, to the Union, of the states of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama, to equalize the water frontage of those states on the Gulf of Mexico; especially in view of the fact that, when Louisiana was admitted into the Union, the territory now composing the coast counties of Mississippi was not actually a part of the Mississippi territory, but was in dispute between the United States and Spain. They provided for the admission of three separate states, and the subject of each was not only not identical with, but not even similar to, that of the others. They did not form part of a homogeneous whole, a common system, so as to allow a claimant under the later act to successfully contend that it changed the earlier act by construction or effected such change because declaratory of the meaning of the prior act. State of Louisiana v. State of Mississippi, 26 Sup. Ct. 408, 418, 202 U. S. 1, 50 L. Ed. 913.

The words "in person," used in the constitution of a mutual benefit society directing that there shall be no liability until the insured shall have had delivered to him "in person" his beneficiary certificate while in good health, was not synonymous with "manual possession," so as to require that the certificate be actually placed in insured's hands to constitute a legal delivery, but was merely intended to require a delivery to insured himself, and not to another for him. *O'Neal v. See Judgment in Personam.

Action in rem distinguished, see In Rem.

A proceeding in personam is one, in form as well as in substance, between the parties claiming a right, and the judgment binds the defeated party to some sort of personal liability. Gassert v. Strong, 98 Pac. 497, 500, 38 Mont. 18.

IN THE PIECE

The definition of cotton cloth in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 310, 30 Stat. 178, as being "all woven fabrics of cotton 'in the piece or otherwise,'" includes cotton blankets with whipped or hemmed edges and in a finished condition. United States v. Bernhard, 150 Fed. 875, 376.

IN PLACE

"Rock in place" on which quartz mining claims are located means something more permanent than mere shale, slide rock, or débris. Ambergris Mtn. Co. v. Day, 85 Pac. 109, 115, 12 Idaho, 108.

IN PROCESS OF COLLECTION

The rule that municipal revenues in process of collection should be counted against indebtedness in determining whether the constitutional limit in that regard has been exceeded does not authorize offsetting taxes voted or levied till the same shall have been duly spread upon the tax roll and that placed in the hands of the proper municipal officer with authority to collect the tax. Balch v. Beach, 95 N. W. 132, 134, 119 Wis. 77 (citing Rice v. City of Milwaukee, 78 N. W. 341, 100 Wis. 516, 521).

IN PROPRIA PERSONA

As personally, see Personally.

IN PURSUANCE OF

The phrase "in pursuance of," according to Webster, means "in accordance with; in prosecution or fulfillment of"; and an indictment alleging that defendant assaulted prosecutor with a deadly weapon, and "in pursuance of said assault" attempted to rob him, etc., means "in fulfillment of," rendering the indictment sufficient to charge an assault with intent to rob. State v. Hughes, 102 Pac. 562, 563, 31 Nev. 270.

A charge that a party to a contract may recover where he has performed his service "in pursuance of" such contract is equivalent to instructing that the services must have been such as were called for by the contract, and must have been performed according to the terms of the contract; the words "in pursuance of" including both ideas. Schofield v. Little, 58 S. E. 666, 2 Ga. App. 286.

IN QUESTION

See Drawn in Question.

IN REGARD TO

An elevator liability insurance policy, which stipulated that, on the occurrence of an accident in regard to which a claim may arise, notice in writing should be immediately given by insured to insurer, that insurer, on receiving notice of any "accident or claim," might settle the same, and that, on any legal proceedings being taken against insured, insurer should be notified, and should have absolute control of the defense, held to require insured, on the occurring of an accident, to immediately notify insurer in writing, and, unless legal proceedings are immediately commenced, he must also give notice to insurer of the action when brought; the word "immediately" referring to the occurrence of the accident, and the words "in regard to which a claim may arise" meaning any accident which may be the foundation of a claim against the insurer. Aronson v. Frankfurt Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co., 99 Pac. 537, 539, 9 Cal. App. 473.

IN REM

See Judgment in Rem; Quasi in Rem.

Proceeding as suit, see Suit.

A "proceeding in rem" is a proceeding against tangible property, and actual notice is dispensed with, on the theory that the owner is bound to know where his property is. In such proceedings, if the res is within the jurisdiction, the constitutional requirement of "due process" is satisfied by constructive notice. Joyner v. Joyner, 62 S. E. 182, 184, 131 Ga. 217, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 647, 127 Am. St. Rep. 220 (citing Minor, Conflict of Laws, 191).

A proceeding "in rem" is prosecuted against a "thing," instead of a person. The court acquires jurisdiction by possession of the subject-matter, rather than by service of process on some person. Gorham Co. v. Unit- ed Engineering & Contracting Co., 95 N. E. 805, 807, 202 N. Y. 842.

An "action in rem" is one directly against property, in which the residence of the opposing claimant is immaterial. Kean v. Rogers (Iowa) 118 N. W. 515, 517.

An "action in rem" is a proceeding to determine the state or condition of the thing itself, and a judgment in rem is but an adjudication pronounced on the status of some particular subject-matter. Gassert v. Strong, 98 Pac. 497, 500, 38 Mont. 18.

A suit strictly in rem is where the property itself, conceived of as having done the wrong or as having been the instrument of its commission, is being proceeded against. In such a suit personal service within the jurisdiction, or appearance, is not necessary. The decree can, however, extend only to the property in controversy. Public citation to the world is all that is necessary, and the decree binds everybody. Hill v. Henry, 57 Atl. 554, 555, 66 N. J. Eq. 150.

Though a proceeding is not strictly "in rem," still where the purpose of the proceeding is not to establish an infinite personal liability against any defendant, but is merely to affect the interest of the defendant in specific real property within the state, which has at the outset of the proceeding been brought within the control of the court, it is a proceeding "quasi in rem" within the contemplation of the act of June, 1906, relating to the establishment and quieting of title to real estate in case of the loss or destruction of public records by fire, flood, or earthquake, and providing that one claiming an estate in real estate may bring an action "in rem" against all the world. Title & Document Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 88 Pac. 356, 359, 150 Cal. 289, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199.

Action in personam distinguished

An action in personam is distinguished from an action in rem in that, in the latter, a valid judgment may be obtained, which will bind the res, without personal service of process; while, in an action to procure a judgment in personam, process must be personally served or there must be a personal or authorized appearance. White v. Glover, 123 N. Y. Supp. 482, 484, 138 App. Div. 797.

"It was early sought to classify all judicial proceedings and all judgments as 'in personam' or 'in rem'; but the courts and text-writers have encountered extreme difficulty in attempting to formulate satisfactory definitions of these terms. A proceeding in personam is one, in form as well as in substance, between the parties claiming the right, and that it is so inter partes appears from the record itself. * * * The judgment in such a proceeding binds the judgment debtor to some sort of personal liability. Such a judgment debtor is not a passive party, but must be eminently active in the performance of any decree which may be made against him.' * * * 'A judgment in rem I understand to be an adjudication pronounced upon the status of some particular subject-matter by a tribunal having competent authority for that purpose. 'A judgment in rem is founded on a proceeding instituted, not against the person, as such, but against or upon the thing or subject-matter itself, whose state or condition is to be determined. It is a proceeding to determine the state or condition of the thing itself; and the judgment is a solemn declaration upon the status of the thing, and it ipso facto renders it what it declares it to be.' * * * 'There is, however, a large class of cases which are not strictly actions in rem, but are frequently spoken of as actions quasi in rem, because, though brought against persons, they only seek to subject certain property of those persons to the discharge of the claims asserted. Such are actions in which property of nonresidents is attached and held for the discharge of debts due by them to citizens of the state, and actions for the enforcement of mortgages and other liens. Indeed, all proceedings having for their sole object the sale or other disposition of the property of the defendant to satisfy the demands of the plaintiff are in a general way thus designated. But they differ, among other things, from actions which are strictly in rem, in that the interest of the defendant is alone sought to be affected, that citation to him is required, and that judgment therein is only conclusive between the parties.'" Gassert v. Strong, 98 Pac. 497, 500, 501, 38 Mont. 18.

An "action in personam" is one against a specific person, while an "action in rem" is one against or with reference to a specific thing, and so against whom it may concern, or against the whole world. A proceeding in rem is one to determine the state or condition of the thing itself. In a strict sense, it is a term applied to a proceeding taken directly against the property, having for its object the disposition of property without reference to the title of the individual claimant, but, in a true and more general sense, a term applied to actions between parties where the direct object is to reach and dispose of property owned by them, or of some interest therein. The object and purpose is to ascertain the right of every possible claimant, and it is instituted on an allegation that the title of the former owner, whoever he may be, has become divested, and notice of the proceeding is given to the whole world to appear and make claim for it. Holcomb v. Kelly, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1048, 1051 (citing 22 Cyc. p. 1102, note; Woodruff v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 76).

An admiralty "suit in personam" is a suit within the meaning of an act providing that "all suits" to be brought in the federal courts of Missouri, not of a local nature.

shall be brought in the division having jurisdiction over the county where the defendants reside. When the cause as instituted is one in rem and the process directs the seizure of the res only, the fact that the marshal treats the cause as a personal action and serves the owner with process does not make the suit one in personam. The L. B. X., 88 Fed. 290, 294.

Actions included

"It is true that in a strict sense a proceeding 'in rem' is one taken directly against property, and has for its object the disposition of the property, without reference to the title of individual claimants; but in a larger and more general sense the terms are applied to actions between parties where the direct object is to reach and dispose of property owned by them, or of some interest therein. Such are cases commenced by attachment against the property of debtors, or instituted to partition real estate, foreclose a mortgage, or enforce a lien. So far as they affect property in the state they are substantially proceedings 'in rem' in the broader sense which we have mentioned." Lesieur v. Simon, 108 N. W. 302, 303, 73 Neb. 645.

Admiralty proceedings

A statute providing that a vessel may be sued and made defendant without any proceeding against the owners, or even mentioning their names, partakes of all the essential features of an admiralty proceeding in rem, in which exclusive jurisdiction is given to the District Courts of the United States. The exclusive admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts extends to the enforcement by proceedings in rem of a lien for repairs furnished to a vessel engaged in navigating the Erie Canal, though such vessel was employed wholly in commerce between ports in the same state. The Robert W. Parsons, 24 Sup. Ct. 8, 14, 191 U. S. 17, 48 L. Ed. 73.

Bankruptcy proceedings

Bankruptcy proceeding as proceeding in rem, see Bankruptcy Proceeding.

Divorce suit

A divorce suit is a "proceeding in rem." Stone v. Stone, 113 S. W. 1157, 1158, 134 Mo. App. 242 (citing Ellison v. Martin, 53 Mo. loc. cit. 578).

Foreclosure, partition, and quieting title

A suit in equity for the foreclosure of a mortgage is not a "proceeding in rem" in such sense that the decree and sale therein can cut off rights of third persons, not parties to the suit, in the property acquired from the mortgagor subsequent to the mortgage. Schwab v. Smuggler-Union Mining Co., 174 Fed. 305-311, 98 C. C. A. 160.

A suit to foreclose the lien of a street assessment under a statute authorizing its enforcement by suit against the owner is not a "proceeding in rem" so as to make the judgment therein binding on the owner, though not made a party. Page v. W. W. Chase Co., 79 Pac. 278, 279, 145 Cal. 578.

A suit in partition is a proceeding in rem, and the jurisdiction of the court is confined to the property described in the complaint. Sandiford v. Town of Hempstead, 90 N. Y. Supp. 76, 79, 97 App. Div. 163.

A suit to quiet title is a "suit in rem" or quasi in rem, although the statute permits its institution by one out of possession. Empire Ranch & Cattle Co. v. Herrick, 124 Pac. 748, 749, 22 Colo. App. 394.

Garnishment proceeding

See Garnishment.

Proceeding for administration of estate of decedent

A proceeding in the probate court to administer upon the estate of a deceased person is a "proceeding in rem." Michigan Trust Co. v. Ferry, 175 Fed. 667, 674, 99 C. C. A. 221.

Proceeding for distribution of estate of absentee

A proceeding for the distribution of the estate of an absentee is in its nature "in rem." Nelson v. Blinn, 83 N. E. 889, 890, 197 Mass. 279, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 651, 125 Am. St. Rep. 364, 14 Ann. Cas. 147.

Proceeding for distribution of estate of decedent

A proceeding to secure a decree of distribution of a decedent's estate is essentially one "in rem." Goodrich v. Ferris, 145 Fed. 844, 859 (quoting Mulcahey v. Dow, 63 Pac. 158, 181 Cal. 73, 77).

Proceeding to contest will

A proceeding to contest the validity of a will is a proceeding "in rem." Bradford v. Blossom, 105 S. W. 289, 304, 207 Mo. 177 (citing Harris v. Hays, 53 Mo. 90; State ex rel. Hamilton v. Guinotte, 57 S. W. 281, 156 Mo. 522, 50 L. R. A. 787; Sehr v. Lindemann, 54 S. W. 587, 153 Mo. 288).

Proceeding to vacate street

Proceedings to vacate streets are proceedings "in rem." Detroit Real Estate Inv. Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 100 N. W. 271, 187 Mich. 108.

Suit to enforce lien

Pub. St. 1882, c. 192, §§ 14-17, provide for a materialman's lien on a vessel, and that it may be enforced by a petition entered or filed, or inserted in the writ of summons with an order of attachment served like other civil action; also, that a "process of attachment against such vessel" shall issue, be served, etc. Held, that the suit to enforce the lien is a "proceeding in rem" in which the jurisdiction of the court to enter a judgment depends on jurisdiction of the property, and the only judgment that can be entered is one against the property, to be enforced by an order of sale. Merriman v. Currier, 77 N. E. 706, 709, 191 Mass. 183.

IN RESERVE

See Held in Reserve.

IN RESPECT TO

An action in a state court against a receiver appointed by a federal court, the purpose of which is to recover land in the possession of such receiver in a suit to foreclose liens thereon, and damages for its detention, is not one "in respect to any act or transaction" of the receiver in carrying on the business in connection with such property within the meaning of Act March 3, 1887, c. 873, § 3, 24 Stat. 554, as amended by 25 Stat. 436, and cannot be maintained under such act without leave of the federal court, but may be enjoined by such court as an unwarranted interference with its possession of the property. Love v. Louisville & E. R. Co., 178 Fed. 507, 508.

IN THE ROUGH

Rattan reeds, from which the outside has been removed, are not "in the rough," within the meaning of Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 756, 26 Stat. 611, but are "reeds wrought or manufactured from rattans," within the meaning of section 1, Schedule D, par. 229, 26 Stat. 583. Foppes & Partisch v. United States, 154 Fed. 866.

IN SESSION

Courts

An alternative writ of prohibition was issued March 29, 1912, by the Appellate Division for the First Department on application to enjoin a special proceeding pending in the Second Department, on which day the Appellate Division for that department, before adjournment of the March term, but in recess, handed down decisions, and on which day its judges were in attendance at the courthouse and ready to assemble as a court to attend to any business presented. Code Civ. Proc. § 2093, provides that a writ of prohibition issued by an Appellate Division can be granted only at a "term of the Appellate Division" of the judicial department embracing the county wherein the special proceeding is brought, in which the matter to be prohibited originated, unless a term of the Appellate Division of said department is not "in session," when it may be granted by the Appellate Division in an adjoining judicial department. Held, that the Appellate Division for the Second Department was "in session" when the alternative writ was issued, and that the Appellate Division of the First Department was without jurisdiction. People ex rel. Whitman v. Woodward, 134 N. Y. Supp. 910, 912, 150 App. Div. 180.

Grand jury

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 6802, authorizing the prosecuting attorney to file an information when any person is in custody or on bail on charge of felony or misdemeanor, and the court is in session, "and the grand jury is not in session or has been discharged," empowers the prosecuting attorney to file an information during the adjournment of the grand jury; the phrase "in session" meaning in actual session. State v. Strange, 97 Pac. 233, 50 Wash. 321.

IN STATU QUO

The "status quo," as used in an information referring to the case in hand, meant the conditions existing at the time of the commencement of that action, modified or altered only by adjudications or proceedings therein. Eastern Wisconsin R. & Light Co. v. Hackett, 115 N. W. 1139, 1140, 135 Wis. 464.

The rule that, on the rescission of the contract, the person rescinding must place the other "in statu quo" does not necessarily mean that the other party shall be replaced in every sense—does not mean that the other party shall be restored to the exact position as he was before, as this is impossible, but that the party shall restore whatever he can restore and surrender any advantage he has received. Whiting v. Derr, 105 N. Y. Supp. 854, 855, 121 App. Div. 239.

IN STORE

See Goods in Store.

Personal property received by a corporation for its use in business is not received "in store," within the meaning of Ky. St. § 4768, so as to authorize it to issue warehouse receipts therefor. Bell & Coggeshall Co. v. Kentucky Glass Works, 50 S. W. 2, 3, 106 Ky. 7.

IN THIS STATE

The words "in this state," as used in Cobbe's Ann. St. 1903, § 1531, providing that it shall be unlawful for any creditor of "any laborer, servant, clerk, or other employé, of any corporation, firm, or individual, in this state," to assign the debt for the purpose of attaching or garnishing the wages of such servant or laborer, was intended to define and locate the residence of the parties and has reference to the employé and not the employer. McCormack v. Tincher, 110 N. W. 547, 77 Neb. 857.

IN TIME

The words "in time," as used in an instruction, in an action against a city for personal injuries caused by plaintiff falling over a coal hole projecting above the sidewalk, that if the city knew of the defect, or by exercising ordinary care could have known thereof in time to have had reasonable opportunity to have repaired it, or to have caused it to have been repaired in time to have prevented the accident, but neglected to do so, plaintiff could recover, were for the purpose of fixing the time when it became the duty of the city to make the repairs, and were but another way of telling the jury that it was the duty of the city to have made the repairs prior to the date of the accident, provided it had knowledge of the defect in time to have done so. Smart v. Kansas City, 105 S. W. 709, 721, 208 Mo. 162, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 565, 123 Am. St. Rep. 415, 13 Ann. Cas. 932.

IN TIME OF WAR

At the time and after the battle of Manila between the United States and the insurgents in the Philippine Islands war existed, and a naval officer's services in the waters of the Philippines were rendered "in time of war" within Act April 26, 1899 (30 Stat. 365) § 7, providing that in time of war every officer serving with troops operating against an enemy, who shall exercise under assignment any orders issued by competent authority and command above that pertaining to his grade, shall be entitled to receive the pay and allowances of the grade appropriate to the command so exercised. Thomas v. United States, 39 Ct. Cl. 1, 9.

IN TRANSIT

See Milling in Transit.

Cattle transported by rail were "in transit," within the terms of a policy designating insured's occupation as a "stock dealer, not working nor tending in transit," until they were unloaded from the cars of the company and placed in pens. Loesch v. Union Casualty & Surety Co., 75 S. W. 621, 625, 176 Mo. 654.

A policy, issued to a railroad company, which covered in general terms all cotton on or in depots, platforms, or grounds adjacent thereto, and in transit, but which provided that cotton in open cars was not covered, insured cotton on a stationary flat car placed on a spur track adjacent to a depot to remain there about 12 hours, though the cotton was subsequently to be transported on the car, since the "open cars" referred to meant cars of that description commonly used for transportation, as the company sought to relieve itself from the increased hazard incident to the transportation of cotton on open cars due to sparks from locomotives in actual transportation, and since the words "in transit" meant in course of passing from point to point. Royal Ins. Co. v. Texas & G. Ry. Co., 115 S. W. 117, 119, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 154.

Where a telegraph company fails to transmit a telegram with reasonable promptness, the company's failure to convey the information, and not the wrongful act of an agent at any particular point prior to the delivery of the telegram to the addressee, constitutes the delict; a message being "in transit," not only while being sent over the wires, but while in the hands of the messenger for delivery after it reaches the place where the addressee resides. Brown v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 67 S. E. 146, 148, 85 S. C. 495, 137 Am. St. Rep. 914.

IN TRANSITU

See Stoppage in Transitu.

IN TRUST

See Held in Trust.

In a testamentary provision "in trust" for all my children who shall attain the age of 25 years or marry under that age in equal shares," the words "in trust" refer to a continuance of the trust to pay income which is created by a preceding section for the benefit of testatrix's husband "and from and after his decease or second marriage" continued "in trust for all my children." Each child is given an equal share in the income and principal. Hayden v. Sugden, 96 N. Y. Supp. 681, 689, 48 Misc. Rep. 108.

Where testatrix's will devised lands to trustees "in trust for my grandchild, D.," such provision was not equivalent to vesting the title in the grandchild. In re Dixon's Estate, 77 Pac. 412, 413, 143 Cal. 511.

Testator, after bequeathing to a trustee $20,000, with directions to pay the income thereof to testator's son during his life, made a codicil in which he directed that, after the death of the son, "the said $20,000 in trust" should go in equal shares to seven named nephews and nieces, "to them and their heirs and assigns forever." Held, that no trust was created for the nephews and nieces, as the words "in trust" in the bequest to them were merely descriptive of the fund bequeathed. McAllister v. Hayes, 79 Atl. 726, 728, 76 N. H. 108.

A deed granting to a committee of, and in behalf of, a village cemetery certain land, to be held "in behalf of the said corporation, to their use and behoof forever," is a deed in trust for such corporation, though the words "in trust" or "trustees" are not contained in the deed. Packard v. Old Colony R. Co., 46 N. E. 433, 434, 168 Mass. 92.

The words "in trust for a judgment debtor," in Code Civ. Proc. § 1879, prohibiting the maintenance of a judgment creditor's action to reach any property held "in trust for a judgment debtor" where the trust has been created by a person other than the debtor, have reference to trusts in which the debtor's interest is that of a beneficiary, as distinguished from an interest in remainder. Bergmann v. Leavitt, 99 N. Y. Supp. 748, 752, 113 App. Div. 899.

The expression "in trust," in a policy of fire insurance covering the product of a glass manufacturer's plant, "his own or held by him in trust" or on commission "or sold but not delivered, for which he may be held liable," is not susceptible of the same construction as when applied to the relations of a guardian and ward or to a testamentary trustee, but signifies property which insured holds as custodian or bailee, and under the policy a contract of insured, whereby he sold to one corporation his total product, is not a transfer or change of title, within an inhibition of the policy to that effect, especially where the contract of sale was conditional only; the seller remaining liable for all losses except by fire and agreeing to pay the premiums for insurance on the product. Burke v. Continental Ins. Co. of City of New York, 91 N. Y. Supp. 402, 403, 100 App. Div. 108.

IN, UPON, OR ABOUT

Where a conveyance grants all of a party's interest in portions of land "in, upon, or about" that portion of the city of Seattle laid out and known as David S. Maynard's town of Seattle and naming certain described lots and blocks, it was the intention to convey all lands of the grantors in, upon, or about that portion of Seattle covered by such plat, and such description is broad enough to include a strip of land lying immediately adjoining the west line of the Maynard plat and within the patent lines of the Maynard donation claim. Columbia & P. S. R. Co. v. Seattle, 74 Pac. 670, 673, 33 Wash. 513.

IN USE

Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 24, art. 5, § 1, cl. 96, authorized the passage of an ordinance imposing a license tax on wagons and other vehicles conveying loads on public streets and alleys in cities and villages, and an ordinance passed pursuant thereto made it unlawful to use any wagon or other vehicle in the transportation of persons and property on the streets of Chicago unless the wagon or vehicle was licensed. Held, that a buggy, carriage, or automobile, when in use on the public streets, whether for pleasure or hire, if persons are carried therein, within the meaning of the statute and ordinance, is in use for carrying a load, and cannot be so used unless licensed. Harder v. City of Chicago, 85 N. E. 255, 256, 235 Ill. 294.

IN VIRTUE OF HIS OFFICE

Where defendant, as warden of the state penitentiary, wrongfully ordered plaintiff, while a convict, to be manacled, assaulted, and confined in solitary confinement, and unlawfully retained him in custody for a period after his sentence had expired, such unlawful acts were done "in virtue of his office," within Rev. Codes, § 6502, providing that an action against a public officer, for an act done by him in virtue of his office, shall be tried in the county where the cause of action arose, so that an action against defendant therefor should be tried in the county where the unlawful acts were committed. *State ex rel. IN VOLUNTARY PROCEEDINGS

Under Act Cong. Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 4, 32 Stat. 797, amending section 14, subsec. "b," cl. 5, Bankr. Law July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 550, so as to authorize the discharge of a bankrupt "unless he has * * * in voluntary proceedings been granted a discharge in bankruptcy within six years," a bankrupt cannot procure a discharge on his own application, either in voluntary or in involuntary proceedings, where within six years he has been granted a discharge in voluntary proceedings. The words "in voluntary proceedings" refer to the proceedings in which the prior discharge was granted, and not to the proceedings in which the second discharge is sought. In re Seaholm, 136 Fed. 144, 145, 69 C. IN WHICH SUCH ACTION OR PROCEEDING IS AT THE TIME PENDING

Rev. Codes 1905, § 6765, subd. 1, provides that no judge of the district court shall hear or determine any action, special proceeding, motion, or application or make any order or give any judgment in any action or proceeding not pending in the judicial district for which he is elected, except upon the written request of the judge of the district in which such action or proceeding is at the time pending. Held, that it was not the legislative intent to restrict the jurisdiction of the judge so requested to act in the district other than his own to causes which were then pending; the words, "in which such action or proceeding is at the time pending," merely designating the judge who could legally make the request, and not referring to any particular subject-matter over which the requested judge might assume jurisdiction. State v. Helser, 127 N. W. 72, 75, 20 N. D. 357.

IN YARD

Parol evidence is admissible to show that a fire policy, which, besides insuring the property in a building, also insured the property in yard, included by the term "in yard" property located in a vacant lot across the street from the building, where it was manifest that property outside the building was intended to be insured, and there was no yard adjoining the building. Messenger v. German-American Ins. Co., 107 Pac. 643, 646, 47 Colo. 448.

INABILITY

See Continuous Total Inability; Physical Inability.

The term "permanent inability to labor," in an instruction as to measure of damages for personal injury, is not the precise equivalent of "permanent reduction in his power to earn money"; and allowing remuneration for "inconvenience" suffered is too latitudinous. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sights, 89 S. W. 132, 133, 121 Ky. 203.

Within Comp. Laws 1909, § 6075, as amended by Laws 1910, c. 39, § 1, providing that, in case of death or other "inability" of the judge, his successor may settle and sign a case-made, the word "inability" means the quality or state of being unable. Richardson

v. Beidleman, 126 Pac. 816, 817; Id., 126 Pac. 818, 820, 33 Okl. 463.

The term "inability," as used in a statute that, in case of the failure, inability, or refusal of the mayor to act, the president pro tem. shall perform the duties and receive the compensation of the mayor, embraces disqualification or disability on account of interest in the subject-matter of the action. Riggins v. Richards, 77 S. W. 946, 948, 97 Tex. 229.

In a personal injury action, an instruction that the jury, in assessing damages, might consider the bodily and mental pain endured by the injured party, loss of time, and inability to work and earn money, and her diminished capacity for labor, etc., was not erroneous as permitting double damages for the same cause; "inability to work" meaning the total suspension of the power to work, and "diminished capacity to labor" meaning lessening, without totally destroying, the power to labor, and "inability" meaning without ability, and "lessened capacity" meaning that partial ability remains. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Maxwell (Tex.) 128 S. W. 160, 165.

Under a trust deed, providing that, in case of the trustee's death, inability, or refusal to act when action under the trust might be required, the legal holder of the note might substitute a trustee by writing duly acknowledged, and that the acts of such substituted trustee, including his power to sell, should be as effectual as if done by the first trustee, the written appointment of a substituted trustee need not state any reason for his substitution; and the "inability" of the original trustee did not refer only to his physical or mental capacity, but also to his inability to act, in a practical sense, resulting from his permanent nonresidence. Webster v. Kautz, 123 Pac. 139, 142, 22 Colo. App. 111.

INACCESSIBLE

A party to a pending case is not, though beyond the jurisdiction of the court when the case is tried, "inaccessible," within the meaning of section 5773 of the Civil Code of 1910, so as to authorize the introduction of his testimony delivered on a former trial of the case. Crumm v. J. P. Allen & Co., 75 S. E. 108, 109, 11 Ga. App. 203.

A witness is not shown to be "inaccessible," within the meaning of Pen. Code 1895, § 1001, so as to authorize evidence as to what was the testimony of such witness on a former trial, when it merely appears that the witness is absent from the county and when last heard from was within the limits of the state. Taylor v. State, 55 S. E. 474, 126 Ga. 557 (citing Pittman v. State, 17 S. E. 856, 92 Ga. 280 [2]).

There was no error in the refusal to admit in evidence testimony of a witness for the defendant, who had testified under oath, given at a former trial of the cause, which was offered on the ground that the witness was "inaccessible," for the reason that he was a nonresident of the county where the trial was had, being a resident of an adjoining county. The word "inaccessible," in section 5773 of the Civil Code of 1910, means that the witness whose testimony was desired as evidence at the time of the second trial is a nonresident of the state, and therefore beyond the jurisdiction of the court and not subject to its processes. It does not apply to a witness who, though absent from the county of the trial, is nevertheless, at the time of the trial, a resident of a different county in the same state; for, wherever he may be in the same state, the process of the court can reach him and compel him to testify by interrogatories or depositions. Brinson Ry. Co. v. Beard, 76 S. E. 76, 77, 11 Ga. App. 737.

INADEQUACY

INADEQUACY OF REMEDY AT LAW

See Adequate Remedy.

By "inadequacy of remedy at law" is meant, "not that it fails to produce the money (that is a very usual result in the use of all remedies), but that its nature or character is not fitted or adopted to the end in view." Preston v. Sturgis Milling Co., 183 Fed. 1, 10, 105 C. C. A. 293, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1020 (quoting and adopting the definition in Thompson v. Allen Co., 6 Sup. Ct. 140, 115 U. S. 550, 29 L. Ed. 472).

INADEQUATE APPLIANCES

The word "inadequate," as applied to appliances, may signify insufficiency or lack of "appliances." Bryson v. Gallo, 180 F. 70, 74, 103 C. C. A. 424.

INADEQUATE PRICE

By the term "mere inadequacy of price," in the rule that mere inadequacy of price is not a sufficient ground for refusing to confirm or vacating an execution sale, is meant simply an inequality in value between the subject-matter and the price. O'Dell v. Cox, 90 Pac. 194, 196, 151 Cal. 70.

A mortgagor's surviving husband, to protect his interest and that of his children, employed F. to bid for the property on foreclosure. One of the tracts was worth $1,600, and was struck down to B. for $610. F. immediately claimed the bid was his, but the officer making the sale declined to recognize it, and returned B. as the purchaser. The husband thereupon applied to set the sale aside as to such tract, agreeing on a resale to bid $1,600. Held, to justify vacation of the sale for mistake and "inadequacy of price," on condition that the husband give bond to bid $1,600, pay the costs of the first sale and interest on the purchaser's deposit. Mont- clair Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Farmer (N. J.) 67 Atl. 852, 853 (citing Porch v. Agnew Co., 57 Atl. 726, 66 N. J. Eq. 232).

INADEQUATE SERVICE

Laws 1907, p. 71, § 12, requires every railroad to furnish reasonably adequate service, equipment, and facilities; and Laws 1907, p. 86, § 30, provides that the Railroad Commission is authorized, if it finds any service inadequate, to direct one that is adequate. Held, that the word "adequate" in such section did not presuppose that some service had existed, but was applicable to a case where the service was insufficient, because never established; and hence such sections conferred on the Railroad Commission power to compel a railroad corporation to install new facilities. Southern Pac. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Oregon, 119 Pac. 727, 729, 60 Or. 400.

INADVERTENCE

"Inadvertence" is defined as the quality of being inadvertent, lack of heedfulness or attentiveness; inattention; negligence; an effect of inattention; a result of carelessness; an oversight, mistake or fault from negligence. Where one of defendant's attorneys had requested the clerk of the district court to inform him of the filing of the remittitur from the Supreme Court, but the clerk had failed to do so, and, though such attorney met plaintiff's attorney nearly every day, he had never referred to the filing of an amended complaint which had been filed after reception of the remittitur, as the result of which judgment was rendered by default against defendant, he was entitled to relief under a Code provision authorizing such relief from a judgment taken against defendant through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. Greene v. Montana Brewing Co., 79 Pac. 693, 694, 32 Mont. 102.

That defendant would have lost his position as an employé of a corporation had he attended the trial of an action against him, which he knew was pending for trial, and which he took no steps to prevent being tried in his absence, was not ground for vacating a judgment entered against him by default on the ground of "inadvertence" and "excusable neglect." Peterson v. Orosier, 81 Pac. 860, 862, 29 Utah, 285.

Where, after receiving a fare from a passenger, a street car conductor again demanded his fare, denied that the passenger had paid, and obtained a second fare on threatening to eject him unless he paid his "fare," the second fare was received through "inadvertence or mistake not amounting to gross negligence," and hence the passenger could not recover penalty under Railroad Law, § 39 (Laws 1890, p. 1096, c. 565), penalizing a railroad corporation asking or receiving more than the lawful rate of fare.

unless the overcharge is made through "inadvertence or mistake not amounting to gross negligence." Robinson v. International Ry. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 588, 589, 54 Misc. Rep. 163.

Willfulness distinguished

An instruction that willful is what the word implies means an act proceeding from a will, done of a purpose, an intention to do it; that the difference between "inadvertence" and "willfulness" is this: If you send your little boy on an errand for you and tell him to feed your horse, and he returns to you, and you say to him, "Did you feed my horse?" and he says, "No," and you say, "Why?" and he says, "I forgot it," this is an "inadvertence"; but suppose he said to you, "No, I did not feed your horse; I recalled the fact you told me to feed your horse, but I did not want to feed him," this is willfulness—is not erroneous. Talbert v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co., 55 S. E. 138, 139, 75 S. C. 136.

INADVERTENCE, SURPRISE, AND EXCUSABLE NEGLIGENCE

Where it appears that, before a judgment for sale of land for delinquent taxes, defendant made inquiry as to the amount of assessments against the land, and, having then paid the amount she was informed was delinquent, she gave the action no more attention, but that judgment was afterward taken, without further notice to her, for an amount which plaintiff had failed to include in the statement given her, there was such "inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect" as, under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 399, entitled defendant to relief against the judgment. Richcreek v. Russell, 72 N. E. 617, 618, 34 Ind. App. 217.

INADVERTENTLY

The word "inadvertently" is a derivative term, derived from the word "inadvertence" or "inadvertency," and means lack of heedfulness or inattentiveness; negligence; want of care or circumspection. Pein v. Miznerr, 84 N. E. 981, 983, 170 Ind. 659.

INALIENABLE

The words "alienable" and "inalienable," used to restrict the disposition of lands in the Supplemental Agreement with the Chickasaws and the Choctaws, by Act July 1, 1902, c. 1362, §§ 12, 15, 16, include disposition by will. Hayes v. Barringer, 168 Fed. 221, 223, 93 C. C. A. 507.

INC.

A corporation painting on its place of business its corporate name, followed by the letters "Inc.," does not comply with Ky. St. 1903, § 576, providing that every corporation doing business in the state shall paint on its place of business its corporate name and immediately thereunder the word "Incorporated," for it cannot be inferred that the Legislature intended that an abbreviation would suffice for the word "Incorporated." Commonwealth v. American Snuff Co., 101 S. W. 364, 365, 125 Ky. 350.

The variance between the name of a corporation "L. Rosenberg, Incorporated," and the indorsement of a note, "Louis Rosenberg, Inc.," is harmless, and does not defeat the intention of the officer of the corporation, indorsing the note on its behalf, to bind it; the abbreviation "Inc." being used instead of the complete word "Incorporated." Van Norden Trust Co. v. Rosenberg, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1025, 1028, 62 Misc. Rep. 285.

INCAPABLE

See Physically Incapable.

The phrases "incompetent," "mentally incompetent," and "incapable," as used in article 15, c. 86, §§ 5485, 5486, Comp. Laws 1909, mean any person who, though not insane, is, by reason of old age, disease, weakness of mind, or from any other cause, unable, unassisted, to properly manage and take care of himself or his property, and by reason thereof would be likely to be deceived or imposed upon by artful or designing persons. Shelby v. Farve, 126 Pac. 764, 765, 33 Okl. 651.

Gen. St. § 549, providing that the probate court shall appoint an administrator c. t. a. in the place of an executor who is "incapable" to accept the trust, does not empower the court to reject an executor named in the will on the ground that he is lacking in honesty, integrity, and business experience, the purpose of the section being only to authorize the appointment of an administrator when the person named as executor is disqualified by law. Appeal of Smith, 24 Atl. 273, 274, 61 Conn. 420, 16 L. R. A. 538.

A finding of the probate court of another state, authorized to declare incompetency and appoint conservators, that a person has become "incapable of managing her affairs by reason of intemperance and mental derangement" is equivalent to a finding that such person "is incompetent to manage herself or her affairs" in consequence of lunacy, idiocy, habitual drunkenness, or imbecility from old age, or loss of memory or understanding, or other causes, within Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 2326, authorizing the appointment of a foreign committee. In re Curtiss, 119 N. Y. Supp. 556, 560, 134 App. Div. 547 (citing In re Clark, 175 N. Y. 139, 67 N. E. 212).

INCAPACITY

See Emotional Incapacity; Mental Incapacity; Permanent Incapacity; Total Incapacity.

"Incapacity to sue" exists where there is some legal disability, such as infancy or lunacy, or a want of title in the plaintiff to the character in which he sues. That he may not be the real party in interest, or that the admitted facts may not authorize a recovery, does not detract from his capacity to sue. Homans v. New York Life Ins. Co., 106 N. Y. Supp. 929, 930, 55 Misc. Rep. 574 (citing Pom. Code Rem. [3d Ed.] § 711; Ward v. Petrie, 51 N. E. 1002, 157 N. Y. 301, 68 Am. St. Rep. 790).

A policy for the payment of sick benefits provided that a total disability to constitute a claim for indemnity for sickness should be continuous, complete, and total, requiring absolute necessary confinement to the house for not less than 14 consecutive days. During a portion of the period for which insured claimed benefits, he was out nearly every day by advice of his physician when the weather was favorable, and he was not actually confined to his bed on account of sickness during that time, but during the period he was not able to perform any labor or pursue his usual calling. Held, that insured was incapacitated within the meaning of the policy which provided for the payment of benefits to insured while incapacitated for performing labor. Jennings v. Brotherhood Acc. Co., 96 Pac. 982, 984, 44 Colo. 68, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 109, 130 Am. St. Rep. 109.

INCENDIARISM

In Walker v. London & Provincial Fire Ins. Co., 22 Irish Law Times, 84, it was held that the word "incendiarism," as used in a policy, included any act of incendiarism, wherever committed, which directly caused the loss or damage sued for. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Willard, 164 Fed. 404, 407, 90 C. C. A. 392, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103.

INCEPTION

The "inception of a cause" in a court, in a constitutional sense and in every other sense, is the first step or proceeding necessary to be taken in order that the subsequent proceedings may follow. The lodging of the papers in the criminal district court, no matter in what shape those papers may be, provided they are sufficient to seize the court of the subject-matter, is the inception of the case. State v. Bollero, 36 South. 754, 755, 112 La. 850.

A note made payable to the maker's order, and successively indorsed by him and by a firm for whose accommodation it was made, and by defendant, and after a few days was discounted for the firm by plaintiff, had no "inception" until it was discounted, because suit could not have been maintained on it prior to that time. Simpson v. Hefter, 87 N. Y. Supp. 243, 244, 42 Misc. Rep. 482.

INCESSANTLY

Continuously synonymous, see Continuously.

INCEST

"Incest" is intercourse between people related within the degrees prohibited. Fearnow v. Jones, 126 Pac. 1015, 1017, 34 Okl. 694.

"Incest" is sexual intercourse between persons so nearly related that marriage between them would be unlawful. McCaskill v. State, 45 South. 843, 844, 55 Fla. 117; State v. Tucker, 93 N. E. 3, 174 Ind. 715, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 100.

An information that one had sexual intercourse with his daughter sufficiently states the crime of "incest," defined in Pen. Code, § 285, as the commission of fornication or adultery by persons within the degrees of consanguinity within which marriages are prohibited. People v. Stratton, 75 Pac. 166, 167, 141 Cal. 604.

The statutory definition of "incest" (Balinger's Ann. Codes & St. §§ 7228, 7229) is the sexual commerce of persons related within the degrees wherein marriage is prohibited. "Persons being within the degrees of consanguinity or affinity, within which marriages are prohibited by law, who intermarry with each other, or who commit fornication or adultery with each other, or who carnally know each other, shall be deemed guilty of the crime of incest, is sufficient and does not contravene the constitutional provision concerning due process of law, because not using the word 'knowingly,' and the word, not being used in the definition, is not necessary to an indictment thereunder." State v. Glindemann, 75 Pac. 800, 801, 34 Wash. 221, 101 Am. St. Rep. 1001.

Cr. Code, § 204, which declares that a father who shall rudely and licentiously cohabit with his own daughter shall be guilty of "incest," and provides a punishment therefor, is valid and sufficient in form and substance to create the offense therein described. Cordson v. State, 109 N. W. 764, 765, 77 Neb. 416.

The crime of "incest" may be committed with a female who has not arrived at puberty. Dixon v. State, 41 South. 734, 147 Ala. 91, 119 Am. St. Rep. 57, 10 Ann. Cas. 957 (citing Butler v. State, 25 South. 1024, 120 Ala. 668; King v. State, 25 South. 178, 120 Ala. 332).

Under Code, § 4936, declaring intercourse with a daughter "incest," it is enough to show that defendant is the father of the female; it not being necessary that she be legitimate. State v. Goodsell, 116 N. W. 605, 606, 138 Iowa, 504.

"Incest," where the statutes have not modified its meaning, is sexual commerce, either habitual or in a single instance, and either under a form of marriage or without it, between two persons too nearly related in consanguinity or affinity to be entitled to intermarry." Under Cr. Code 1896, § 4889, which defines "incest" as the intermarriage of or the sexual intercourse between persons within the degrees of consanguinity or relationship within which marriages are declared by law to be incestuous and void, with knowledge of such consanguinity or relationship, and Civ. Code 1896, § 2837, which provides that "no man shall marry the daughter of his wife," marriage or sexual intercourse between a man and the daughter of his deceased wife is incestuous, where there is living issue of the marriage, which continues the affinity between the husband and the wife's blood relations. Tagert v. State, 39 South. 293, 294, 143 Ala. 88, 111 Am. St. Rep. 17.

The word "cohabit," as used in the statute defining the crime of "incest," means any sexual intercourse, whether within a common dwelling or elsewhere, between persons not married. State v. Spurling, 40 South. 167, 115 La. 789.

The marriage or cohabitation of first cousins does not constitute the crime of "incest," as defined and denounced by Act 78, p. 101, of 1884. State v. Couvillion, 42 South. 431, 117 La. 935.

A man having carnal intercourse with a daughter of his half-sister commits "incest" in violation of Revisal 1905, § 3352, defining the crime to be such intercourse between "uncle and niece." State v. Harris, 62 S. E. 1090, 149 N. C. 513, 128 Am. St. Rep. 669.

Rape distinguished

The destructive ingredient of the crime of "incest" is the relationship of the parties, while in statutory rape the youthfulness of the female is the important element, and the evidence necessary to convict of incest would not be sufficient to convict of statutory rape; and hence the crimes, though committed by the same act, are different crimes. State v. Learned, 85 Pac. 293, 294, 13 Kan. 328.

Under Rev. St. § 7019, declaring it to be incest where persons nearer of kin by consanguinity or affinity than cousins having knowledge of their relationship commit adultery or fornication together, a father may be convicted of incest with his daughter under 14 years of age, though his offense may have been rape under Rev. St. 6816. Straub v. State, 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 50, 51.

Consent or use of force

Under Rev. St. § 7019, making it incest for persons nearer of kin by consanguinity or affinity than cousins having knowledge of their relationship to commit adultery or fornication together, the crime may be committed with or without the consent of the woman. State v. Robinson, 93 N. E. 623, 624, 83 Ohio St. 136, 21 Ann. Cas. 1255.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 1811, providing that persons marrying who are within the degree of consanguinity within which marriages are declared by law incestuous, or who shall commit adultery or fornication with each other, shall be guilty of incest, the gravamen of the crime of "incest" is unlawful carnal knowledge because of consanguinity, and where the parties are within the prohibited degrees, the male may be convicted, though he accomplished the act without the consent of the female and against her will. Gaston v. State, 128 S. W. 1033, 95 Ark. 233.

Under Rev. St. 1898, § 4211, declaring that if any person related to another person within the fourth degree of consanguinity shall have sexual intercourse with such other related person with knowledge of the relationship the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of incest, a father having intercourse with his daughter may be convicted of incest, though the daughter did not consent, and the intercourse was had by force. State v. Winslow, 85 Pac. 433, 435, 30 Utah, 403, 8 Ann. Cas. 906.

The crime of "incest" was not cognizable at common law in 1805, the date of the passage of the act adopting the common law of England as to the definition of crimes, and hence, to determine the elements of incest, we must look to the statutes of this state alone. Act 78 of 1884, p. 101, provides: "Whoever shall hereafter knowingly intermarry, or cohabit without marriage, being within the degrees of consanguinity within which marriage is prohibited by articles 94 and 95 of the Civil Code of the state of Louisiana, shall be deemed guilty of the crime of incest." It cannot be said that the word "cohabit," as used in the statutes, is to be understood as requiring the consent of both parties. According to the dictionaries and the decisions of the courts, the word "cohabit" means "to dwell together as husband and wife," thus implying a relation based on the consent of both parties. But in the construction of the statute above referred to, the word "cohabit" must be taken as meaning sexual intercourse, and to constitute the crime of incest the concurrence of both parties is not essential. State v. Freddy, 41 South. 436, 437, 117 La. 121, 116 Am. St. Rep. 195 (citing People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305, 321; De Groat v. People, 39 Mich. 124; People v. Burwell, 63 N. W. 986, 106 Mich. 27; People v. Skutt, 56 N. W. 11, 96 Mich. 449; State v. Ellis, 74 Mo. 385, 41 Am. Rep. 321; State v. Eding, 141 Mo. 283, 42 S. W. 935; State v. Jarvis, 26 Pac. 302, 20 Or. 437, 23 Am. St. Rep. 141; Noble v.

State, 22 Ohio St. 545; State v. Thomas, 4 N. W. 908, 53 Iowa, 214; Baumer v. State, 49 Ind. 544, 19 Am. Rep. 691; State v. Markins, 95 Ind. 464, 48 Am. Rep. 733; State v. Fritts, 2 S. W. 256, 48 Ark. 66; distinguishing Cannon v. United States, 6 Sup. Ct. 278, 116 U. S. 55, 29 L. Ed. 561).

Under the statute prohibiting persons within certain degrees of consanguinity from intermarrying or committing adultery or fornication with each other, consent of the female is not an essential to the crime of "incest." David v. People, 68 N. E. 540, 541, 204 Ill. 479.

INCESTUOUS

"Adultery or fornication, committed by persons who are prohibited by law from marrying on account of being related within certain degrees of consanguinity or affinity, is incestuous." Civ. Code 1895, § 2413, prohibits the marriage of a man with his stepdaughter and declares such a marriage to be incestuous. Lipham v. State, 53 S. E. 817, 125 Ga. 52, 114 Am. St. Rep. 181, 5 Ann. Cas. 66.

INCESTUOUS ADULTERY

Penal Code, § 380, follows the Levitical rule (Leviticus xviii, 17), and carnal intercourse between father and stepdaughter is not only prohibited, but those engaged in such commerce are guilty of "incestuous adultery" and fornication, or incestuous adultery or incestuous fornication, as the parties may happen to be married or single. A conviction of adultery and fornication cannot be sustained where it appears that the female, with whom the alleged unlawful sexual intercourse is charged, did not consent thereto, and where the act appears to have been against her will. The crime of adultery and "fornication necessarily" involves the idea of consent; and while consent in some instances may be procured by force to a certain degree, where force was used in the inception of the offense, it must at least be shown that consent was finally induced thereby. Nephew v. State, 63 S. E. 930, 931, 932, 5 Ga. App. 841.

INCH

See Miner's Inch; Square Inch of Water.

An "inch" as relating to water measure is estimated on the basis of 40 inches to one "second foot." Hough v. Porter, 98 Pac. 1083, 1101, 51 Or. 818.

In a suit to restrain interference with a pipe line used to carry water for irrigation purposes, a finding that the customary flow through such pipe was "40 inches of water" was not fatally defective for failure to specify the particular standard of measurement, since the finding would be construed according to the customary water measurement of the locality. Collins v. Gray, 86 Pac. 983, 984, 3 Cal. App. 723.

INCHMAREE CLAUSE

A time policy of marine insurance on a new lake steamboat contained the "Inchmaree clause," providing inter alia: "This insurance also specially to cover loss of, or damage to, the hull or machinery, * * * through any latent defect in the machinery or hull, provided such loss or damage has not resulted from want of due diligence by the owners." This clause was unknown in marine insurance policies prior to the decision of the House of Lords in 1887, in Insurance Co. v. Hamilton, 12 App. Cas. 484. The immediate practical consequence of this decision in England was the invention of this special clause, subsequently called the Inchmaree clause, the use of which has become universal there in policies on steamers, particularly in time policies. The clause was evidently designed to cover at least the kind of a risk which was regarded by the House of Lords as not included in the policy in the Inchmaree Case. Cleveland & B. Transit Co. v. Ins. Co. of North America, 115 Fed. 431, 434, 435, 436.

INCHOATE

INCHOATE EQUITY

A pre-emption right is sometimes called an "inchoate equity" or right to call for a grant in compliance with the statute. N. Carolina Min. Co. v. Westfeldt, 151 Fed. 290, 303 (citing Janney v. Blackwell, 50 S. E. 857, 138 N. C. 439).

INCHOATE INSTRUMENT

Instruments that the law requires to be registered are said to be "inchoate" prior to registration, in that they are then good only between the parties and their privies and persons having notice of them. Wilkins v. McCorkle, 80 S. W. 834, 837, 112 Tenn. 688.

INCHOATE LAND TITLE

As property, see Property.

INCHOATE LEGAL TITLE

Where a purchaser complies with the provisions of the law for the disposition of public land, pays the purchase price, and receives a final receipt or certificate therefor, he has done all that is required to vest the complete title in him, and he thereby acquires a title of which he cannot be deprived by the government except for fraud or mistake. He may sell or devise the same at pleasure, and may maintain an action of ejectment to recover its possession. In short, he has the substantial and beneficial title, or, as some of the books say, "the inchoate legal title." Budd v. Gallier, 89 Pac. 638, 639, 50 Or. 42.

INCHOATE RIGHT OF DOWER

At common law the "inchoate right of dower" is a contingent right, the value of which depends wholly upon the death of the husband. Teckenbrock v. McLaughlin, 152 S. W. 38, 39, 246 Mo. 711.

The "inchoate right of dower" is not a personal claim against the husband, but is a right that may ripen into an estate in case he dies first, and hence a release by a common-law wife of all demands she may have against her husband by reason of past relations or for any cause whatever does not release her dower rights. Lavery v. Hutchinson, 94 N. E. 6, 9, 249 Ill. 86, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 74.

As interest in property

See Interest (In Property).

INCIDENT—INCIDENTAL

The word "incident" is used both substantively and adjectively of a thing which, either usually or naturally and inseparably, depends on, appertains to, or follows another that is more worthy. For example, rent is usually incident to a reversion (1 Hill, R. P. 243), while the right of alienation is necessarily incident to a fee simple at common law, and cannot be separated by a grant (1 Washb. R. P. 54). So a court baron is inseparably incident to a manor, in England (Kitch. 36; Co. Litt. 151). "All nominate contracts and all estates known to common law have certain incidents which they draw with them and which it is not necessary to reserve in words. So the costs incurred in a legal proceeding are said to be incidental thereto." Commonwealth v. Wampler, 51 S. E. 737, 738, 104 Va. 337, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 149, 113 Am. St. Rep. 1039, 7 Ann. Cas. 422 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Rev.] 1006).

The word "incidents," in an instruction that the jury may take into consideration any testimony tending to show defendant's flight or concealment and other incidents, means circumstances. State v. Paisley, 92 Pac. 566, 571, 38 Mont. 237.

Under Pol. Code, § 2631, providing that by taking and accepting land for a highway the public acquire only the right of way and "the incidents necessary to enjoying and maintaining it," the county has no right to bore wells in the highway and use the subterranean water for sprinkling it. Wright v. Austin, 76 Pac. 1023, 1024, 143 Cal. 236, 65 L. R. A. 949, 101 Am. St. Rep. 97.

Civ. Code, § 1504, providing that "an offer of payment * * * stops the running of interest on the obligation, and has the same effect upon all its incidents as a performance thereof," has no application to a tender under a decree allowing judgment debtors to redeem their property within a specified time upon specified conditions, since the decree, being a mere option to redeem, imposed no "obligation" upon them, and neither the title to the land nor its possession was an "incident" to any obligation within the meaning of the section. Bunting v. Haskell, 93 Pac. 110, 112, 152 Cal. 428.

"An 'incident' to one subject cannot be presumed, by the very name of such an incident, to be intended to apply to a subject totally different." Penhallow v. Doane, 3 Dall. 54, 107, 1 L. Ed. 507.

The right given by Laws 1897, p. 313, c. 384, § 30, to sue the directors personally for the debts of the corporation, where the annual report required by such section is not filed, passes as an "incident to the debt" to an assignee thereof during the lifetime of the creditor, or to a receiver appointed for the creditor in supplementary proceedings against him. Boynton v. Sprague, 91 N. Y. Supp. 839, 840, 100 App. Div. 443.

A right of way for an irrigation ditch, and the right to receive water from or discharge the same on land, constitute easements which may attach to other lands as "incidents" or appurtenances. Jones v. Deardorff, 87 Pac. 213, 215, 4 Cal. App. 18.

INCIDENTAL DAMAGES

"Incidental damages" awarded in proceedings to condemn land for a railroad right of way are those which result to the owner of the land from such inconvenience as results to him from the taking of his land and its use by the railroad company. A charge that the owner should be allowed as direct damages the fair value of the land taken, considering it in relation to the entire tract and such other damages as directly result to the remainder of the tract and improvements, if any, not exceeding in all the difference between the actual value of the land immediately before and its actual value immediately after the taking, and authorizing the jury to find for the owner such "incidental damages" as result to the remainder of the land by the building and operating of the railroad in a prudent manner, less whatever sum is the value of the advantage accruing from the building of the road, is proper. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Rottgering (Ky.) 83 S. W. 584, 587.

INCIDENTAL POWER

An "incidental power" of a corporation "is one that is directly and immediately appropriate to the execution of the specific power granted, and not one that has only a slight or remote relation to it." Western Maryland R. Co. v. Blue Ridge Hotel Co., 62 Atl. 351, 353, 102 Md. 307, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 887, 111 Am. St. Rep. 362.

An "incidental power" of a corporation is one that is directly and immediately appropriate to the execution of the specific power.

er granted, though not necessarily indispensable to it, and not one that has a slight or remote relation to it. Alton Mfg. Co. v. Garrett Biblical Institute, 90 N. E. 704, 705, 243 Ill. 298.

An "incidental power" exists only for the purpose of enabling a corporation to carry out the powers expressly granted to it (that is to say, the powers necessary to accomplish the purposes of its existence), and can in no case avail to enlarge the express powers, and thereby warrant it to devote its efforts or capital to other purposes than such as its charter expressly authorizes or to engage in collateral enterprises not directly but only remotely connected with its specific corporate purposes. Victor v. Louise Cotton Mills, 61 S. E. 648, 650, 148 N. C. 107, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1020, 16 Ann. Cas. 291 (quoting 10 Cyc. p. 1096).

Implied powers of corporations presumptively exist only to the extent that may be necessary to enable them to carry out the express powers granted and to accomplish the purpose of their creation, and an "incidental power" may be defined to be one that may be immediately appropriate to the execution of the specific power granted, and not one that has some slight or remote relation to it. Robert Gair Co. v. Columbia Rice Packing Co., 50 South. 8, 9, 11, 124 La. 193 (quoting and adopting definition in State ex rel. Jackson v. Newman, 25 South. 410, 51 La. Ann. 837, 72 Am. St. Rep. 476).

INCLOSE

While it seems that, where a factory act requires that elevators should be "inclosed or secured," force may be given to both words, as to inclose it might not always make it secure and other precautions might be necessary; yet, the legislative intent being to protect the lives of employes, an "inclosure" will not be considered as complying with the statute unless it makes the elevator "secure" from danger; and an instruction using the term "inclosed and secure," instead of "inclosed or secure," will not be held erroneous. Fowler Packing Co. v. Enzenperger, 94 Pac. 995, 998, 77 Kan. 406, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 784.

The terms "inclosed or cultivated fields or uninclosed lands," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, requiring railroads to maintain fences at such places, "have by construction attained the settled meaning of having application only to such territory as is outside of the towns, or, in other words, rural districts. * * * It is well settled that railroads are not required, because the statute by its phraseology excludes, and they are not permitted, to fence inside incorporated towns, where streets and alleys cross the road, or inside of towns not incorporated, which are platted, and streets dedicated to public use cross the road, because to fence at such places would obstruct public streets and work a nuisance. This exemption from fencing is in favor of the public which use and occupy the streets. It is also well settled that the roads are not required to fence at their depots or stations such portion of the road as is necessary to remain open for the transaction of business with the public and the reception and discharge of freight and passengers." Acord v. St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co., 87 S. W. 537, 540, 113 Mo. App. 84.

In enacting Rev. Codes, § 2815, providing that "every railroad company operating any steam or electric railroad in this state shall maintain lawful fences not less than four feet high on each side of its road where the same passes through, along, or adjoining 'inclosed or cultivated fields or inclosed lands,'" "the Legislature clearly had in mind rural or country districts where the railroad runs through, along, or adjoining inclosed or cultivated fields or inclosed lands, and did not intend to make such section apply to municipalities or towns, whether incorporated or not, unless such town was so extended as to include fields or inclosed lands other than town lots, or to a railroad passing along or in front of town lots or inclosed lots used for residence purposes only." That section did not require a railroad company to fence its road where the same runs through a narrow canyon with a public traveled road occupying almost the entire space between the ends of the ties and the foot of a precipitous mountain on one side of the track and residences and stores occupying almost the entire space between the ends of the ties and the foot of a precipitous mountain on the other side, and there are no cultivated fields or inclosed lands through, along, or adjoining which such road runs. Bernardi v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 108 Pac. 542, 543, 18 Idaho, 76, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 796.

INCLOSED LAND

The term "owner of inclosed lands" is satisfied only where land is surrounded by a substantial fence or its equivalent, separating the premises from outside territory. St. 1898, §§ 1810, 1813, requiring a railroad operating over inclosed lands to construct farm crossings, and providing that on its failure to do so the owner or occupant may recover a penalty therefor, applies only to land owned by the person or occupant entitled to the farm crossing, shut in on all sides from all other land by a fence or barrier for the protection of the premises against encroachment from without and restraint from within. Miller v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 113 N. W. 384, 387, 133 Wis. 183.

Every man's land is, in the eye of the law, "inclosed" by a visible and material fence, or by an ideal, invisible boundary, and in either case every entry or breach constitutes a trespass carrying with it some damages for which compensation may be obtained by action. Wood v. Snider, 79 N. E. 858, 859, 187 N. Y. 28, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 912 (citing 2 Waterman, Trespass, § 873).

In order that land shall be "inclosed," within the meaning of V. S. 4626, it must be surrounded by visible objects, natural or artificial, and an imaginary boundary is not enough. It is not sufficient that the locus in quo and an adjoining parcel of land, taken together as one tract, are inclosed. Payne v. Gould, 52 Atl. 421, 74 Vt. 208.

A tract of tideland, bounded on one side by the shore, along which run railroad tracks owned by the owner of the tract, and lying between a training wall built by the United States for the improvement of navigation, and a mole built out to deep water in a bay for the passage of railroad trains, with the fourth side open to the bay, is not "inclosed," within Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 323, so as to be deemed in the actual possession and occupancy of the owner under said section. Western Pac. Ry. Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., 151 Fed. 376, 395, 80 C. C. A. 606.

A charge in trespass to try title, that on defendant's plea of a five-year limitation he could not recover the land, unless it had been "inclosed" within the lines prescribed by his deed, that the mere fencing and taking possession of the land, without a deed which included it, was insufficient, was not erroneous, since by the term "inclosed" the court meant that the land must be included within the lines of his deed. Dean v. Furrh (Tex.) 143 S. W. 843, 845.

INCLOSED PREMISES

Where chickens were taken from a coop in a wagon standing within an inclosed barnyard, they were taken from "inclosed premises," within Acts 30th Gen. Assem. p. 122, c. 183, providing punishment for larceny from inclosed premises. State v. Norman, 113 N. W. 340, 342, 135 Iowa, 483.

INCLOSURE

See Cultivated Inclosure; Substantial Inclosure; Unlawful Inclosure.

Such inclosure, see Such.

In an action under Code 1907, § 6087, for statutory penalty for destruction of fruit trees inclosed on premises, a general charge for defendant because there was no proof that the trees were removed from an inclosure was properly refused; it appearing that the trees were taken from a yard and orchard, which showed prima facie an inclosure; "orchard" being defined by Webster as meaning, among other things, "an inclosure containing fruit trees," etc., and the word "yard" meaning by common acceptance an "inclosure." Wright v. Sample, 50 South. 263, 162 Ala. 222.

The word "inclosure," as used in the act of 1797 (Slade's St. 1824, p. 450, § 3; R. S. 1839, p. 412, § 4), relating to impounding, imports land inclosed by something more than the imaginary boundary line, that there should be some visible, tangible obstruction, such as a fence, hedge, ditch, or something equivalent, for the protection of the premises against encroachment by cattle. Porter v. Aldrich, 39 Vt. 326, 332.

Where defendant and plaintiff disagreed as to the division line between their adjoining lands, and defendant built a fence on his own land, extending it outward at each end so as to join plaintiff's fence at the sides, and plaintiff had a fence for a part of the distance only on or near the division line, plaintiff did not have an inclosure, and was not entitled to recover under Rev. St. 1899, § 4373, providing a penalty for voluntarily throwing down any fences and leaving the same down, other than leading into one's own inclosure. Sperry v. Hurd, 109 S. W. 76, 130 Mo. App. 495.

Fence required

"The term 'inclosure,' as regards land, means a tract of land surrounded by an actual fence. That, of course, does not mean necessarily a lawful fence, within the meaning of the statute, nor as to all situations a fence strictly so called, but, as said in many cases, a fence or something equivalent for protection of the premises from without and restraint from within." Miller v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 113 N. W. 384, 388, 133 Wis. 183.

In prosecution for cutting shrubs within the inclosure of a place of burial, where it appears that one string was gone from the graveyard fence, and that it was broken down in other places, it is error to refuse to instruct that the word "inclosure" means the act of inclosing, the separating of land from common ground into distinct possession by a fence; and if the jury have a reasonable doubt as to whether the graveyard was an inclosure, as thus defined, they should acquit. Such instruction embodies a correct and pertinent definition of "inclosure." Bird v. State, 79 S. W. 25, 26, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 135.

The word "inclosure," as used in Pub. St. 1906, § 5564, providing that a person may impound a beast found in his inclosure doing damage, means not that the land is fenced but only that it is occupied. Davis v. Mudgett, 69 Atl. 762, 763, 81 Vt. 252 (citing Porter v. Aldrich, 39 Vt. 326; Keith v. Bradford, 39 Vt. 34).

INCLUDE

See Between and Including; Necessarily Included; Up to and Including.

The word "including," according to common usage, is susceptible of different shades of meaning. It may be used in the sense to comprise or embrace; to confine or to contain; to express the idea that a thing in question constitutes a part only of the contents of some other thing; as a word of enlargement, and ordinarily implying that something else has been given beyond the general language which precedes it; to add to the general clause a species which does not naturally belong to it. It is frequently used as the equivalent of "also." State v. Montello Salt Co., 98 Pac. 549, 551, 34 Utah, 458.

The word "including" is the participial form of the verb "include," which by Webster's Dictionary is defined in its primary sense to mean to confine within, to hold, to contain, to shut up, to inclose; by the Century Dictionary, to comprise as a part. The word has also been defined as having an accumulative sense and as classing that which follows with that which has gone before. Maben v. Rosser, 108 Pac. 674, 676, 24 Okl. 588.

"Include" is defined by the Century Dictionary as (1) "to confine within something; hold as in an inclosure; inclose; contain." (2) "To comprise as a part, or as something incident or pertinent; comprehend; take in; as the greater includes the less. Montello Salt Co. v. Utah, 31 Sup. Ct. 706, 708, 221 U. S. 452, 55 L. Ed. 810, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 633.

"It has been said that the word 'including' means moreover, or as well as; but if this was the meaning of the Legislature it was a very embarrassing mode of expressing the idea." United States v. Betsy, 4 Cranch, 443, 452, 2 L. Ed. 673.

The name "Independent Democratic Party" includes that of "Democratic Party," within Election Law (Laws 1896, p. 925, c. 909, § 57), providing that the name which shall be designated as the political name in a certificate of independent nomination shall not "include" the name of any organized political party. In re Carr, 88 N. Y. Supp. 107, 94 App. Div. 498.

In the definition of words and terms in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1a, a provision that a word shall "include" a certain thing does not exclude other meanings. In re Harper, 175 Fed. 412, 423.

Under a devise by which testator gave to his wife "a lifetime interest in the house and land where we now live, including the furniture therein," the word "including" does not mean that the gift of the furniture is "included" in the terms of the life estate but merely that it was included in the property that testator designed that his wife should have. Wallace v. Phipps, 1 Tenn. Ch. App. 326, 332.

Pub. Acts 1895, No. 95, provided for the compulsory education of children between the ages of 8 and 14 years, and in cities between the ages of 7 and 16 years. Pub. Acts 1901, No. 83, provided for such education between the ages of 8 and 15, and in cities between 7 and 15. Acts 1905, No. 200, provided for such education of children between and including the ages of 7 and 15 years. Held, that the latter statute does not apply to children during the fifteenth year and until they become 16, as the word "including" has no force to extend that limit beyond the time specifically designated. Jackson v. Mason, 108 N. W. 697, 698, 145 Mich. 338.

A live stock shipping contract contained a stipulation that, as a condition precedent to his right to recover for any loss or injury to the cattle, resulting from the carrier's negligence, including delays, the shipper should give notice in writing before the cattle were removed from pens at destination. Held, that the words "including delays" cannot be regarded as having reference to a loss resulting from a decline in the market occasioned by the carrier's negligent delay in transportation. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Fry, 87 Pac. 754, 755, 74 Kan. 546.

As in addition to and also

The words "including costs" in a verdict, where the jury find for plaintiffs $15, "including costs," may either be treated as a surplusage, or the word "including" may be interpreted as meaning "and," which is more probably the intent of the jury, and the verdict is not void for uncertainty, as the portion of the verdict which attempts to award costs will be rejected as surplusage and will not affect the residue. Southern R. Co. v. Oliver & Morrow, 58 S. E. 244, 245, 1 Ga. App. 734.

Enabling Act Utah (Act Cong. July 16, 1894, c. 138, 28 Stat. 109) § 8, granted to the state public lands to the extent of two townships to be reserved for the state university, and in addition 110,000 acres to be selected and located as provided, and "including" all the saline lands in said state, for the use of the university. Held, the word "and" before "including" was used to express the relation of addition, and the word "including" was used in the sense of "also," so that the state was entitled to all the saline land, without selection, in addition to the 110,000 acres to be selected and located. State v. Montello Salt Co., 98 Pac. 549, 551, 34 Utah, 458.

The word "including" may have the sense of addition, and of the word "also," or may merely specify particularly that which belongs to the genus. It is the participle of the word "include" which the Century Dictionary defines as "to confine within something; hold as in an inclosure; inclose; contain;" "to comprise as a part, or as something incident or pertinent; comprehend; take in; as, the greater includes the less; * * * the Roman Empire included many nations." Act Cong. June 16, 1894, § 8, granting to the state of Utah certain lands to the extent of two townships in quantity, and in addition 110,000 acres, to be selected, "and 'including' all the saline lands in said state," grants only such saline lands as should be selected as a part of the other lands granted and not specifically located. Montello Salt Co. v. State of Utah, 31 Sup. Ct. 706, 708, 221 U. S. 452; 55 L. Ed. 810, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 633 (citing Hiller v. United States, 45 C. C. A. 229, 106 Fed. 73, 74).

In "diamonds * * * not advanced, * * * including miners' diamonds," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 545, "including" is used as a word of addition, rather than of specification. Sullivan Machinery Co. v. United States, 168 Fed. 561, 562.

In construing the provision in paragraph 699, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, 30 Stat. 202, for "round unmanufactured timber including pulp woods," held, that the pulp wood subjected to the rossing process, whereby the bark, skin, and rough places are removed, is not manufactured in any true sense; also that it is not necessary that the "pulp woods" should be "round unmanufactured timber," "including" being used as equivalent to "also." United States v. Pierce, 147 Fed. 199, 77 C. C. A. 425 (citing Hiller v. United States, 106 Fed. 73, 74, 45 C. C. A. 229).

Embrace synonymous

Under 3 Mills' Ann. St. Rev. Supp. § 4389a, authorizing the city council to annex by ordinance any tract adjoining any first-class city, but not within its limits, if it has been platted, or whenever any tract is included or embraced within corporate limits, but has not been made a part of the city, the boundary line must be unbroken and separate property within from that without at every point, and, when property is excluded from its limits by its boundary line, it is not "included" or "embraced" within the city within the statute, so as to authorize annexation; those words being synonymous. City of Pueblo v. Stanton, 102 Pac. 512, 514, 45 Colo. 523.

Civ. Code, § 1113, provides that the use of the word "grant" in a conveyance shall imply a covenant that the estate is free from incumbrances, at the time of the execution of the conveyance. Section 1114 provides that the term "incumbrances" includes taxes, assessments, and all liens upon realty. Held that, aside from the statutory definition, an "incumbrance," as used in the phrase "covenant against incumbrances," is any right or interest in land which may subsist in third persons to the diminution of the value of the estate to the grantee, but consistently with the passing of the fee, and both within such definition and under the statute a restrictive covenant against the use of firearms on the premises was an "incumbrance"; the word "includes" being ordinarily a word of enlargement and not of restriction. Fraser v. Bentel, 119 Pac. 509, 511, 161 Cal. 390, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1062.

Where a railroad company demised property of every description, "including" its railroad and all real estate, rights, and appurtenances connected therewith, also all buildings, etc., and equipment "and all personal property and estate owned by said lessor," also all franchises, etc., the word "including" did not restrict the subclauses to distinctively railroad property, but each subclause covered all property of the lessor fairly included by its terms and not excluded by other terms of the lease. Gray v. Massachusetts Cent. R. Co., 50 N. E. 549, 554, 171 Mass. 116, 124, 125.

Under Comp. Laws, § 345, authorizing a townsite trustee before issuing a deed of lots to receive for counsel fees, and for moneys expended in the acquisition of the title and for the administration of the trust, including reasonable charges for time and services while employed in such trust, not exceeding the sum of $1 for each lot, the word "including," shows that the charges for time and services of the trustee were to be embraced within the maximum charge, which was also to be inclusive of counsel fees and for moneys expended in the acquisition of the title and the administration of the trust. State ex rel. Jennett v. Stevens, 116 Pac. 601, 34 Nev. 128.

INCLUSIVE DEED

An "inclusive deed" is one which contains within the designated boundaries lands which are excepted from the operation of the deed. Logan v. Ward, 52 S. E. 398, 58 W. Va. 366, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 156.

INCLUSIVE GRANT

An "inclusive grant" from the state is one which includes, within the boundaries designated in the patent, lands which are excepted from its operation. Logan v. Ward, 52 S. E. 398, 58 W. Va. 366, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 156.

INCOMBUSTIBLE

A building constructed by erecting a wooden frame, and covering it on the outside with sheets of corrugated iron, the interior, including the flooring, ceiling, etc., being entirely of wood, does not meet the requirements of a municipal ordinance which declares that within certain fire limits all buildings shall be constructed of brick, stone, or other "incombustible" material, and covered with tin or metallic or fireproof roofing. Century Dictionary defines the word "incombustible" to mean "not combustible; incapable of being burned or consumed by fire." In Payne v. Wright (1892) L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 104, the meaning of the word was under consideration. The metropolitan building act provided that the roof of every building should be covered externally with "slates, tiles, metal, or other incombustible materials." The roof of a building was covered externally with materials consisting of woven iron wire coated with an oleaginous compound. The coating would ignite and burn away, leaving the wirework uninjured. It was held that the roof was not covered with "incombustible materials," within the meaning of the act. City of Sylvania v. Hilton, 51 S. E. 744, 746, 123 Ga. 754, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 488, 107 Am. St. Rep. 162.

INCOME

See Gross Income; Net Income.

A salary paid to a judgment debtor for his personal services is "income" out of which he may be required, under Act March 22, 1901, P. L. 1901, p. 373, § 3, to make payments on account of an unsatisfied judgment. White v. Koehler, 57 Atl. 124, 70 N. J. Law, 526.

Alimony can be allowed to the wife after she obtains a divorce under Civ. Code, art. 160, only from the property and not in excess of one-third of the income of the husband, and the word "property" does not mean earning capacity, nor does "income" mean current earnings, resulting from labor. Jackson v. Burns, 41 South. 40, 41, 116 La. 695.

The words "rents, issues, and profits" are commonly connected together with reference to the income of real estate. What are called "rents, issues, and profits" in real estate are the same as what are naturally called "Interest and Income" when referring to personal property. A testator's use of the word "income" in addition to the word "interest" indicates that he was thinking of productive personal property other than the ordinary interest producing investments. Oram v. Peirce, 67 Atl. 1053, 1056, 73 N. J. Eq. 391.

Corporation Tax Act (Act Cong. Aug. 5, 1909, c. 6, § 38), imposes an excise tax on the net income received during the year by insurance companies, to be ascertained by deducting from the gross income all ordinary and necessary expenses actually paid within the year in the maintenance and operation of the business, all losses actually sustained within the year and also all sums other than dividends paid within the year on policy and annuity contracts, interest actually paid within the year on bonded indebtedness, all sums paid by it within the year for taxes, and all sums received by it within the year as dividends on stock of other corporations, etc. Held, that the word "income," as used in such act, meant that which had "come in" or had been already received, and that the net income so taxable should be determined on a cash, as distinguished from a revenue, basis, and did not include uncollected and deferred premiums and interests, accrued and due, but not actually received. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Herold, 198 Fed. 199, 215.

Accumulated surplus or increase of corporate stock

A dividend in stocks of a corporation declared by its directors out of its surplus net earnings is income, and not principal, within a deed conveying property, including the stocks on which the dividend is declared, to trustees to pay the income to certain persons for life, the principal on their death to become the property of others. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore v. White, 61 Atl. 295, 296, 102 Md. 73.

Defendants, as administrators with the will annexed, came into possession of a fund of which one of them was a beneficiary. A new trustee was appointed on the application of the remaindermen, and the administrators ordered to account for such fund and "all accretions thereto." Held, that subscription rights in additional stock issued by the corporation represented principal, and not "income." Jewett v. Schmidt, 92 N. Y. Supp. 737, 739, 45 Misc. Rep. 471.

The word "income," as used in determining whether a dividend of a corporation was declared out of the accumulated income, means all accumulations, whether in money or property, and regardless of the form when first obtained, or how converted and reconverted, before declaration of the dividend. Soehnlein v. Soehnlein, 181 N. W. 739, 746, 146 Wis. 830.

Surplus and undivided profits of a bank apportionable to the shares of stock therein are not "income," so as to go to a widow entitled under her husband's will to the income of bank stock. Tubb v. Fowler, 99 S. W. 988, 990, 118 Tenn. 325.

Where a person creates a trust in corporate stock for the benefit of another, providing that such other shall have the income for a stated period, the term "income" covers all distributions made by capitalizing surplus created by income and distributing stock, evidence of liabilities, or otherwise. Soehnlein v. Soehnlein, 181 N. W. 739, 746, 146 Wis. 830.

As between the life tenant, entitled to the net income, and the remainderman, entitled to the principal, of a trust estate invested in corporate stock, a stock dividend is a part of the principal of the trust estate, and goes to the remainderman. Billings v. Warren, 74 N. E. 1050, 1054, 216 Ill. 281.

A will provided that certain shares of bank stock should be held in trust, and that the "income" should be paid to testatrix's nephew during life. Upon the termination of the life estate, the property was to pass to remaindermen. Five years after testatrix's death, the directors of the bank declared a special dividend of 100 per cent., and the stockholders voted to double its capital stock, giving the stockholders the privilege of subscribing for the new stock at par and of paying for the same with the special dividend. The transaction constituted a distribution of surplus earnings, a part of which accumulated after the trust was created. Held, that the trustee should make such a division of the stocks or their proceeds as would give the life tenant such part as was equivalent to his interest in the surplus earnings that accrued subsequent to the creation of the trust. Holbrook v. Holbrook, 66 Atl. 124, 125, 74 N. H. 201, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 768.

Where property in trust to pay the income to certain persons for life, and on the death of the last survivor to pay the principal to certain persons absolutely, consisted of shares in a joint-stock company having a fund used for the payment of losses and the protection of stockholders from personal liability for debts, bonds issued to stockholders on such accumulated fund, with interest payable only from such proceeds of the reserve as should be applicable after making provision for the payment of all debts of the company, were capital and not "income," going to the remaindermen rather than to a life tenant. D'Ooge v. Leeds, 57 N. E. 1025, 176 Mass. 558, 560 (quoting and adopting Minot v. Paine, 99 Mass. 101, 96 Am. Dec. 705).

Twenty shares of bank stock, of the par value of $100, had been inventoried by an executor as trustee as of uncertain value. The executor was also a life tenant in part of the estate, and disposed of the entire interest in such stock for $3,500; 20 shares at $100 and $1,500 "surplus and undivided profits." On an intermediate accounting it appeared that no part of the $1,500 represented a premium on the bank stock, nor any increase in its market value, and was not a part of its working capital. Held, that it belonged to the life tenants, and not to the remaindermen, and was properly credited to "income" and not "corpus." In re Stevens, 95 N. Y. Supp. 1084, 1086, 47 Misc. Rep. 560.

Advance in value

The increase in the value of a fund held in trust to pay the income to one for life, and on his death to transfer the same to others, is a part of the capital, and is not income, and the remaindermen are entitled thereto. Carpenter v. Perkins, 74 Atl. 1062, 1065, 83 Conn. 11.

Annuity

"An 'annuity' is a stated sum per annum, payable annually, unless otherwise directed. It is not 'income' or profits, nor indeterminate in amount, varying according to the income or profits." A bequest to an executor of a sum sufficient to produce $1,200 annually, to be paid to the annuitant "in payments quarterly of $300 each," is an annuity. Steelman v. Wheaton, 66 Atl. 195, 196, 72 N. J. Eq. 626 (quoting and adopting definition in Booth v. Ammerman [N. Y.] 4 Bradf. Sur. 129).

"An 'annuity' is a stated sum payable annually unless otherwise directed. It is not 'income' or 'profits' or indeterminate in amount, varying according to the income or profits, though a certain sum may be provided out of which it is to be payable; and hence, when a testator gave a beneficiary the interest upon a certain sum payable annually, it is not an annuity but merely an ordinary legacy, for it is not a stated sum but may be more or less according to the earnings of the capital and is merely interest or income. There is a distinction between income and annuity. The former embraces only the net profits after deducting all necessary expenses and charges. The latter is a fixed amount directed to be paid above and without contingency. The income or interest of a certain fund (bequest) is not an annuity but simply profits to be earned, and, although directed to be paid annually, that relates only to the mode of payment and does not change the character of the bequest." Pope v. Raleigh & A. Air Line Co., 54 S. E. 406, 407, 141 N. C. 646 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, p. 405, and citing Bartlett v. Slater, 22 Atl. 678, 53 Conn. 105, 55 Am. St. Rep. 73; Booth v. Ammerman [N. Y.] 4 Bradf. Sur. 129).

A gift of an "income" from a certain fund is not an "annuity," and interest does not begin until one year from the death of the deceased. In re Brown's Estate, 77 Pac. 160, 162, 143 Cal. 450.

Capital distinguished

See Capital.

Dividend

Where a corporation declared a cash dividend from earnings, and voted an increase of the capital stock to a like amount on the same day, giving every stockholder the right to subscribe to the new stock, the cash dividend constituted "income," and such dividends on stock held in trust subject to life estates belong to the life tenants, and not the remaindermen. Hyde v. Holmes, 84 N. E. 318, 319, 198 Mass. 287.

Cash dividends on stock should be regarded as "income" and stock dividends as capital. Smith v. Dana, 60 Atl. 117, 119, 77 Conn. 543, 69 L. R. A. 76, 107 Am. St. Rep. 51.

"Income," as used in a will bequeathing stock, means "dividends." Lauman v. Foster (Iowa) 135 N. W. 14, 16.

Under a testamentary gift of the residuary estate, consisting of corporate stock, of testator in trust, to pay the income to a beneficiary for life, with gift over of the estate on her death, a stock dividend, representing accumulated profits, earned in part during testator's lifetime and in part after his death, goes to the life tenant as "income," which is gain or profit, and which proceeds from labor, business, property, or capital. In re Osborne, 138 N. Y. Supp. 18, 20, 153 App. Div. 312.

A dividend on corporate stock forming part of a trust estate paid in bonds and scrip from the accumulated earnings of the corporation is "income," and should be distributed to the life tenants, and does not belong to the remaindermen. In re Baldwin, 133 N. Y. Supp. 1109, 1110, 74 Misc. Rep. 341.

As between a life tenant, who is entitled to the income from certain stock in a corporation, and a remainderman, who will receive the corpus of the estate after the death of the life tenant, stock dividends declared out of surplus earnings, after the death of the testator, are "income," and belong to the life tenant as a part of the earnings of the original stock, and, if the funds out of which the dividends are declared have accrued or been earned before the life estate arose, the dividends will be held to be the principal and belong to the remainderman. Goodwin v. McGaughy, 122 N. W. 6, 9, 108 Minn. 243.

Dividends on stocks and bonds pledged as collateral security to creditor of testator in his lifetime applied on the obligations given to secure such indebtedness, could not be regarded as income of his estate, from which annuities could be paid by his testamentary trustees. Skinner v. Taft, 103 N. W. 702, 704, 140 Mich. 282.

Where, under a will, the stock of a certain corporation was placed in trust, "the dividends, issues, and profits thereof" to be paid to the beneficiaries, the words "dividends, issues, and profits" were interchangeable with "income," and referred to the earnings paid over by the officers of the corporation in the form of dividends, to the trustees. In re Stevens, 95 N. Y. Supp. 297, 305, 46 Misc. Rep. 623.

A railroad corporation chartered to take over the properties of another corporation and to provide for its liabilities issued bonds providing that the interest thereon should be payable out of the net earnings and income of the railroad company applicable to such purpose, when ascertained and fixed as provided in the mortgage securing the bonds. The mortgage provided that the fund available for interest was to be ascertained by deducting from the gross earnings and income of the railroad company all costs of repairs, renewals, etc., and reasonable betterments to the railroad equipment and property, and certain other items of expense and charges. Held, that dividends derivable from the railroad's ownership of stock in another corporation are part of its income and enter into the computation of the fund applicable to interest on the bonds. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Central Trust Co. of New York, 69 S. E. 708, 712, 135 Ga. 472.

Gift of as conveying title

While a gift of the "income" of property is usually construed to be a gift of the property itself, it does not have that effect as a matter of law, but merely raises a presumption that such a gift was intended. Walker v. Hill, 60 Atl. 1017, 1019, 73 N. H. 254 (citing McClure v. Melendy, 44 N. H. 469, 471; Wood v. Griffin, 46 N. H. 230, 234; Perkins v. Mathes, 49 N. H. 107, 111; Hopkins v. Keazer, 36 Atl. 615, 89 Me. 347; Bowen v. Payton, 14 R. I. 257).

A will giving to testatrix's daughters during life the "income" from property created a life tenancy in the property itself and not a trust, where no trustee was named and there were no circumstances tending to show why testatrix should prefer a trust to a life tenancy. Little v. Colman, 66 Atl. 483, 484, 74 N. H. 215.

Interest

A bequest of the "interest" on $2,000 to be paid to testatrix's son semiannually during his life, was a bequest of the "income" of the fund for life. In re Dull's Estate, 66 Atl. 567, 217 Pa. 358.

The word "interest," as used in an antenuptial contract providing that a wife should receive in lieu of dower, for each year she might survive her husband, the interest on a certain sum, is synonymous with "income." Dulaney's Adm'r v. Dulaney, 54 S. E. 40, 42, 105 Va. 429.

"The word 'income' means the gain which proceeds from property, labor, or business. When applied to a sum of money or money in public debt, it is equivalent to 'interest.'" Dulaney's Adm'r v. Dulaney, 54 S. E. 40, 41, 42, 105 Va. 429.

The words "interest or earnings" in a will whereby testator gave property to trustees to control and pay the interest or earnings to his children for life, with gift over to their heirs, and whereby he provided that on the death of a child leaving no living heirs the spouse of the child might, if living, receive annually a specified sum of the interest money due the deceased, and in case of the death of a child leaving no living heirs his estate, principal and interest, should be divided equally with the grandchildren, are synonymous with each other, and with the word "income" in its ordinary sense. Ex parte Humbird, 80 Atl. 209, 211, 114 Md. 627.

Money from sales of property

Where corporate stock was held in trust, the "income" to be paid to the beneficiaries, and the corporation went out of business and its assets were sold, that proportionate part of the price received on such sale represented by the shares of stock and items of increased amount of material, betterments, and good will of the company constituted a part of the "capital" of the trust estate, and not "income." In re Stevens, 95 N. Y. Supp. 297, 312, 46 Misc. Rep. 623.

In an item of a will providing that all incomes and profits growing out of testator's real estate, no matter where situated, should be used to pay the several bequests, the words "incomes" and "profits," coupled with directions to rent and sell, clearly included proceeds of sales as well as rents in the meantime, especially in view of the testator's use in another item of the word "income," meaning proceeds. In re Handley's Estate, 61 Atl. 350, 352, 212 Pa. 11.

As net earnings or profits

"Profits" and "income" are sometimes used as synonymous terms, but, strictly speaking, "income" means that which comes in or is received from any business or investment of capital, without reference to the outgoing expenditures, while "profits" generally mean the gain which is made upon any business or investment when both receipts and payment are taken into account." In re Murphy, 80 N. Y. Supp. 530, 533, 80 App. Div. 238 (quoting and adopting definition in People v. Sup'rs of Niagara, 4 Hill [N. Y.] 20).

"Income" embraces only the net profits after deducting all necessary expenses and charges and is distinguished from annuity in that the latter is a fixed amount directed to be paid absolutely and without contingency. Peck v. Kinney, 143 Fed. 76, 80, 74 C. C. A. 270.

Rents

Since the term "income" may be properly defined as that which comes in to a person as payment for labor, or services rendered in some office, or as gain from lands, business, the investment of capital, etc., so much of Laws 1911, c. 658, imposing a tax on incomes, as provided that the estimated rental of residence property occupied by the owner should be considered as income, was not invalid on the theory that, as it was not income in the strict sense of the term, it could not be made such by a legislative fiat. State ex rel. Bolens v. Frear, 134 N. W. 673, 691, 148 Wis. 456, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1147.

INCOMPETENT—INCOMPETENCY

See Irrelevant, Immaterial, and Incompetent; Mentally Incompetent; Venous Incompetent.

Determination of, see Determination.

A negligent person at a position requiring care and caution is incompetent. "Incompetency" includes want of qualification generally. The Elton, 131 Fed. 562, 564.

"Incompetency" of a servant for whose negligence the master may be liable is a state or condition the existence of which must be shown by other facts and circumstances, and a servant may be regarded as incompetent when he is incapacitated either by physical or intellectual deficiencies from properly performing the duties of his position. Tucker v. Missouri & K. Telephone Co., 112 S. W. 6, 8, 132 Mo. App. 418.

In an action against a master for injury to a servant from the negligent employment of an incompetent foreman, an instruction that a competent man is a reliable man; that "incompetency" means want of ability suitable to the task, or want of disposition to use one's experience and abilities properly; that incompetency may exist not alone in physical or mental attributes, but in the disposition to perform duties; and that, though a foreman may be physically and mentally able to do all that is required of him, his disposition may make him an incompetent man—is not misleading and is a correct statement of the law. Young v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co., 113 N. W. 59, 61, 133 Wis. 9.

Under a contract providing that, if a teacher was discharged by the school board for incompetency, he should not be entitled to compensation, "incompetency" is a relative term, denoting a want of the requisite qualifications for performing a given act or service. Biggs v. School City of Mt. Vernon, 90 N. E. 105, 106, 45 Ind. App. 572.

In an action for wrongful discharge from employment as a teacher in a business school, claims of the defendant that plaintiff had no knowledge or skill in teaching, had no enthusiasm or energy, took no interest in his work, and was slow and lazy, and did not solicit students for the school, and that the school ran down greatly when he was in charge of it, are all sufficiently described in the instructions by the general word "incompetent," in the absence of a request for more specific instructions. Bagwell v. Millam, 71 S. E. 684, 686, 9 Ga. App. 315.

The expression "incompetency," in a city charter, as a ground for removal of a city officer, is not used in the sense that the officer be ignorant of the duties of his office, and does not have ability and intelligence sufficient to perform those duties, but the word is used to convey the idea that, in the exercise of the supposed functions of his office, he assumes the authority to defy the council and to overrule and nullify its deliberate decrees rendered when exercising its lawful authority concerning matters that were confided solely to its adjudication, and, when a mayor admits in effect that he did not feel that he was bound by the action of the common council of the city when exercised in opposition to his views, he is incompetent. Riggins v. City of Waco, 90 S. W. 657, 663, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 569.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2685, subd. 1, authorizing revocation of letters of administration of a person "incompetent or disqualified by law," refers to section 2661, forbidding the issuance of letters of administration to certain persons, and not to the effect of a subsequent application for letters by one having a prior right. In re Campbell's Estate, 107 N. Y. Supp. 591, 592, 56 Misc. Rep. 229.

The phrases "incompetent," "mentally incompetent," and "incapable," as used in article 15, c. 86, §§ 5485, 5486, Comp. Laws 1909, mean any person who, though not insane, is, by reason of old age, disease, weakness of mind, or from any other cause, unable, unassisted, to properly manage and take care of himself or his property and by reason thereof would be likely to be deceived or imposed upon by artful or designing persons. Shelby v. Farve, 126 Pac. 764, 765, 33 Okl. 651.

Ignorance and inexperience

Under a statute providing that no person is entitled to serve as administrator who is adjudged to be "incompetent" by reason of improvidence or want of understanding, the court properly removed an executor who was palpably deficient in the understanding necessary to enable him to transact business, who made no sufficient effort to collect the debts due the estate, and who never read or knew the contents of affidavits attached to his report, and who was ignorant of his personal business relations with the decedent, whose estate he was administering. In re Courtney's Estate, 79 Pac. 317, 318, 31 Mont. 625.

As unreliable

"Incompetency" of a servant connotes the converse of reliability in all that is essential to make up a reasonably safe person, considering the nature of the work and the general safety of those required to associate with him in the general employment, and one who does not know the meaning of orders used on a railroad as to the movement of trains is incompetent to act as a conductor of a train, where he will be called on to act on such orders in moving his train. Still v. San Francisco & N. W. Ry. Co., 98 Pac. 672, 674, 154 Cal. 559, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 322, 129 Am. St. Rep. 177.

As unsuitable

"Incompetency" in a servant may exist in the disposition with which he performs his duties, although he is physically and mentally able to do all work required of him. Warren v. Harlan & Hollingsworth Corporation (Del.) 84 Atl. 215, 220.

"Incompetency" of a servant, for which the master is responsible in case a fellow servant is injured in consequence thereof, is want of ability suitable to the work, either as regards natural qualities or experience or deficiency of disposition to use one's ability and experience properly. Hamann v. Milwaukee Bridge Co., 106 N. W. 1081, 1084, 127 Wis. 550, 7 Ann. Cas. 458.

INCOMPETENT EVIDENCE

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, prohibiting the examination of a husband or wife without the consent of the other as to any communication made by one to the other during marriage, all communications so made during marriage are, unless consent is shown, absolutely "incompetent" when offered to be shown by testimony of one of the spouses. Humphrey v. Pope, 82 Pac. 223, 225, 1 Cal. App. 374.

INCOMPLETE

In a statute making a place where articles in a raw, unfinished, or incomplete state are converted into a new, improved, or different form a manufacturing establishment, the word "incomplete" refers to a state or condition not yet attained and means not fully fashioned to meet some design. Factory Act (Laws 1903, c. 356) § 7, provides that an establishment wherein any natural products or other articles, in a raw, incomplete, or unfinished condition, are converted into a new improved or different form, is a manufacturing establishment, within the act. Held, that an establishment wherein railroad iron, old stoves, waste and scrap iron of every description, is cut into lengths, known as grade No. 1, grade No. 2 and busheling scrap, by machines known as alligator shears, operated by power, to meet standing specifications of mills which purchase the product, is a manufacturing establishment within the act. Caspar v. Lewin, 109 Pac. 657, 658, 82 Kan. 604.

INCONGRUOUS

"Incongruous" denotes that kind of absence of harmony or suitableness of which the taste and experience of men take cognizance." State v. Great Western Coffee & Tea Co., 71 S. W. 1011, 1013, 171 Mo. 634, 94 Am. St. Rep. 802.

INCONSISTENT—INCONSISTENCY

INCONSISTENT CAUSES OF ACTION

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 593, providing that a plaintiff may unite in the same petition several causes of action arising out of injuries to the person, in an action sounding in damages for an injury caused by the negligence of defendant's servants, the plaintiff may state in one count, as constituting his one cause of action, as many acts of negligence not inconsistent with each other as he deems proper, provided either one makes out his case or all together do so, and in such case, if there is evidence to sustain each and every charge of negligence, the plaintiff has a right to go to the country on each, but, where in such case the acts of negligence charged are inconsistent with each other (that is, if both cannot be true, if the proof of one disproves the other), the plaintiff may be required by motion, even on the eve of trial, to elect on which he will stand. A petition in an action for the death of plaintiff's husband, which states in one count, a cause of action under section 2864 for the negligence of defendant's servant in running a car over decedent, and a cause of action under section 2865 for negligence of defendant's foreman under whom decedent was working, in failing to give warning of the approach of the car, does not state "inconsistent causes of action." Jordan v. St. Louis Transit Co., 101 S. W. 11, 12, 202 Mo. 418.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 484, permitting certain causes of action to be joined in the same complaint, but providing that they must be consistent with each other, a cause of action on the breach of a contract is not properly united with a cause of action for rescission on the ground of fraud, for plaintiff reaffirms the contract and sues for its breach and disaffirms the contract, and sues for its rescission on the ground of fraud, the two causes of action are not "consistent" with each other. Lomb v. Richard, 91 N. Y. Supp. 881, 882, 45 Misc. Rep. 129.

INCONSISTENT DEFENSES

"Defenses are not 'inconsistent' unless one of them is necessarily false." In an action to recover commissions under a contract which provided that, in case of delinquency and difficulty in the collection of any purchaser's note, 10 per cent. of the note should be charged against the commissions, a defense on the ground of nonpayment of a note and the incurrance of extra expense in its collection is not inconsistent with a defense of limitations, nor with the defense of settlement, nor with the defense that the sale in question was made under a different contract. Irwin v. Buffalo Pitts Co., 81 Pac. 849, 851, 39 Wash. 346.

Where, in an action by an administrator on a note, defendant pleaded that decedent agreed to give him the note if he would pay interest on $2,000 as long as decedent lived, and furnish him such care as he needed for life, which defendant did, and also that the services, board, and entertainment furnished were reasonably worth $1,500, which sum defendant pleaded as a counterclaim against the note, were not objectionable as "inconsistent defenses" under Civ. Code. Prac. § 113, authorizing a defendant to set up as many defenses legal and equitable as he may have. Tapp's Adm'r v. Polindexter (Ky.) 128 S. W. 594, 595.

INCONSISTENT WITH

The words "inconsistent with," as used in an instruction that, if a witness had been shown to have made before the grand jury statements which were inconsistent with and contradictory to the statements made on the trial, it would be for the jury to say whether or not his credibility had been destroyed, being used in connection with the words "contradictory to" by the conjunction "and," are evidently used in the sense of opposed to or "contradictory with," and were not intended to convey the idea that mere inconsistency would be a sufficient reason for rejecting the testimony. O'Dell v. State, 47 S. E. 577, 578, 120 Ga. 152.

INCONTESTABLE

See Continuous Force.

"Incontestable" means not contestable, not to be disputed, that which cannot be called in question or controverted, incontrovertible, indisputable (Webst. Dict.). As used in a life insurance policy which provides that after two years from its date it shall be incontestable, the word must of necessity include every defense which could otherwise be made to the policy, except those specifically excluded by the subsequent language, and will preclude the insurer from forfeiting the policy on the ground that insured had made fraudulent representations as to the state of his health. Kansas Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Whitehead, 93 S. W. 609, 610, 123 Ky. 21, 18 Ann. Cas. 301.

The term "inconsistent," as used in a provision making a policy incontestable after three years, is of great breadth, and covers all grounds for contest not specially excepted. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n v. Austin, 142 Fed. 398, 401, 78 C. C. A. 498, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1064.

INCONVENIENCE

See Great Inconvenience; Personal Inconvenience; Physical Inconvenience.

An inconvenience which controls the construction of a statute must be an inconvenience of such a kind as to force the right to find a reasonable interpretation in lieu of one which is unreasonable. That a number of indictments against the same defendant, charging him with using the mails to defraud, are by order of the court tried together by the same jury, does not affect the right under Rev. St. U. S. § 819, to three peremptory challenges for each indictment, for such an inconvenience as will arise from such a construction of the statute is of such an inferior class that to attempt to determine whether Congress had it in mind is necessarily a matter of pure speculation. Betts v. United States, 132 Fed. 228, 237, 65 C. C. A. 452.

The word "inconvenience," as applied to the measure of damages for personal injuries, implies what is incident to physical discomfort. It is something that results naturally from physical pain, and doubtless also from mental suffering, and the terms "mental and physical suffering" comprehend "inconvenience." Texas Traction Co. v. Hanson (Tex.) 124 S. W. 494, 496.

The word "inconvenience," as used in an instruction that the jury "may consider whether or not such injury will result in inconvenience or risk to plaintiff's general health or life," implies what is incidental to physical discomfort and something that results naturally from physical pain and mental suffering. Texas & N. O. Ry. Co. v. McGraw, 95 S. W. 82, 86, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 247.

The word "annoyances," though used in a kindred sense with the word "inconveniences," in an instruction in condemnation proceedings, authorizing the jury in determining the amount of damages to consider the annoyances and inconveniences resulting from the appropriation, was an injudicious expression, as it ordinarily relates to injuries for which no damages can be recovered, because the amount is so uncertain, speculative, and indefinite. Where, in condemnation proceedings, the jury might naturally have been misled by an instruction to consider "inconveniences and annoyances," in determining the amount of damages, in addition to the reduction in value of the land not taken, and the appraisers appointed by the court assessed the damages at $150, and the jury awarded $800, there should be a retrial, as it cannot be said that the error in the instruction did not contribute to the result. Toledo & C. I. Ry. Co. v. Wagner, 85 N. E. 1025, 1026, 171 Ind. 185.

INCORPORATE

INCORPORATED CHURCH

The term "incorporated church" is defined by chapter 723, Laws N. Y. 1895, § 2, as "a religious corporation created to enable its members to meet for divine worship, or other religious observances," and the Protestant Episcopal Church Missionary Society for Seamen in the City and Port of New York, a corporation for the maintenance of churches for seamen, is a "religious corporation," within the exemption of legacies to such corporations from any transfer tax. In re Prall's Estate, 79 N. Y. Supp. 971, 973, 78 App. Div. 301.

INCORPORATED CITY OR TOWN

Const. art. 7, § 3, provides for an annual state tax of such an amount, not to exceed 20 cents on the $100 valuation, as, with other available school funds, will be sufficient to support the public free schools for not less than six months in each year, and that the Legislature may provide for the formation of school districts in counties and may authorize an additional annual ad valorem tax within such districts for school purposes upon vote of the taxpayers, not to exceed in any one year 20 cents on the $100 valuation, but that the limitation upon the amount of district tax shall not apply to incorporated cities or towns constituting separate and independent school districts. Held, that an independent school district, incorporated for school purposes only, and embracing an incorporated town and rural territory, is not an "incorporated city or town" within the Constitution, and hence not exempted from the restriction as to taxation therein, and, where it had previously voted a tax to the full amount permitted by the Constitution, it had exhausted its power to tax for school purposes, and an election held to determine whether an additional school tax should be levied was void. Jenkins v. De Witt (Tex.) 115 S. W. 610, 612.

INCORPORATED COMPANY

Any incorporated company, see Any.

INCORPORATED SOCIETY

As religious society, see Religious Society.

INCORPORATED TOWN

As town, see Town.

"Incorporated towns," within the meaning of the dispensary act for Lee county (Acts 1902, p. 222), providing for the establishment of dispensaries in towns and county, includes a city located in the county and embraces every incorporated town or city within the county. City of Smithville v. Dispensary Com'rs of Lee County, 54 S. E. 539, 125 Ga. 559.

INCORPORATED VILLAGE

Laws 1901, p. 272, § 2, as amended by Laws 1909, p. 323, requiring the county clerk to ascertain the rates per cent. required as to the property in the respective "towns, townships, districts, incorporated cities, and villages" in his county, and providing that where the aggregate of all the taxes, exclusive of state, village, and levee taxes, certified to be extended against any property in any part of any taxing district or municipality, shall exceed 3 per cent. of the assessed valuation, the rate of tax levy shall be reduced in a specified way, requires the clerk to exclude town taxes of an incorporated town before figuring the reduction of the rate referred to, and he cannot reduce such town taxes, for the words "incorporated villages," as used in the act, include incorporated towns, and the words "town" and "township" as used in the act are synonymous. Town of Cicero v. Haas, 91 N. E. 574, 576, 244 Ill. 551 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7028).

INCORPORATED WITHIN THE COMMONWEALTH

The case of a bill by executors for instructions, alleging that Bowdoin College was a corporation created by the commonwealth of Massachusetts by act of 1794, and that it was an educational and charitable institution, which should be exempt from taxation under St. 1801, c. 425, having involved the question whether a legacy given by a resident of such commonwealth to such college in Maine was exempt from taxation under such statute, the decision therein, holding a tax was due, necessarily decided that the college was not an institution "incorporated within this commonwealth," within the meaning of the statute, and so is decisive of the question in a subsequent case, to which the college is a party, as it was not in the first case. Batt v. Treasurer and Receiver General, 95 N. E. 784, 785, 209 Mass. 319.

INCORPORATION

The title of Pub. Acts 1909, No. 279, entitled "An act to provide for the incorporation of cities," etc., is broad enough to include provisions authorizing the revision of existing charters of cities, since the framing and adoption of a charter of a city in toto is within the meaning of the word "incorporation," and since a revision of a charter already adopted is likewise within that meaning, on the principle that the greater includes the less. Common Council of City of Jackson v. Harrington, 125 N. W. 383, 384, 160 Mich. 550.

INCORPOREALINCORPOREAL HEREDITAMENT

A "water course" consists of bed, banks, and water. The right of an appropriator of the water of a stream, for the purpose of irrigation, to have the water flow in the river to the head of its ditch is an "incorporeal hereditament" appurtenant to the ditch and coextensive with the owner's right to the ditch itself. Rickey Land & Cattle Co. v. Miller & Lux, 152 Fed. 11, 13, 14, 81 C. C. A. 207 (citing Lower Kings River Water Ditch Co. v. Kings River & Fresno Canal Co., 60 Cal. 408; Ang. Water Courses, § 4; Oregon Const. Co. v. Allen Ditch Co., 69 Pac. 455, 458, 41 Or. 209, 215, 93 Am. St. Rep. 701; Wyatt v. Larimer & Weld Irr. Co., 33 Pac. 144, 18 Colo. 298, 36 Am. St. Rep. 280; *Wiley v. INCORPOREAL RIGHT

Office as, see Office.

INCORPOREAL THING

"Incorporeal things" are such as are not manifest to the senses, and which are conceived only by the understanding, such as the rights of inheritance, servitudes, and obligations. State ex rel. Louisiana Imp. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 36 South. 91, 97, 111 La. 982.

INCORRIGIBLE

The words "incorrigible children," as used in Act No. 82, p. 134, 1906, defining the power of the district courts, the criminal district courts, and city courts, with reference to the care, treatment, and control of dependent, neglected, "incorrigible," and delinquent children, under the age of 16 years, mean children who are charged by their parents or guardians as being unmanageable. In re Parker, 43 South. 54, 55, 118 La. 471.

INCREASE

See Natural Increase.

Any increase, see Any.

The words "increase of all property," as used in an inheritance tax law, providing "that said tax shall be levied and collected upon the 'increase of all property' arising between the date of death and the date of the decree of distribution," include as well augmentation in value as multiplication in kind. In re Touhy's Estate, 90 Pac. 170, 173, 35 Mont. 431.

Const. art. 12, § 11, prohibiting an increase of corporate stock and bonded indebtedness except at a meeting called upon 60 days' notice, being a restriction on the inherent right to freely contract, its meaning will not be unnecessarily extended. McKee v. Title Insurance & Trust Co., 113 Pac. 140, 146, 159 Cal. 206.

A mere classification of the capital stock of a corporation into preferred and common shares, without an increase or decrease in the number, is not an increasing or diminishing of its capital stock, within Civ. Code, § 362, which provides that a corporation may not increase or diminish such stock without complying with the special provisions of the Code applicable thereto, and Civ. Code, § 359, which provides the manner in which the capital stock of a corporation may be increased or diminished. California Telephone & Light Co. v. Jordan, 126 Pac. 598, 601, 19 Cal. App. 536.

Augment or aggravate synonymous

The term "increase" is the synonym of "augment" or "aggravate." Mathew v. Wabash R. Co., 78 S. W. 271, 272, 115 Mo. App. 468.

Of animals

The words "increase thereof," in a chattel mortgage of "ewe sheep and their increase," and "two year old wether sheep," do not include the yearly clip of wool, but the offspring only. Libert v. Unfried, 91 Pac. 776-778, 47 Wash. 186.

Of hazard or risk

The mere fact of the commencement of proceedings by a mortgagee to foreclose a mortgage on property covered by a fire policy does not, as a matter of law, substantially "increase the risk" within a stipulation in the policy that it shall be void if the risk be increased by any means within the knowledge of insured. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Lavine, 59 South. 336, 338, 5 Ala. App. 392.

"Increased hazard" provided against in fire policies refers to changes in conditions in or upon the insured premises, and does not include dangerous conditions on adjacent premises. Whether there has been an increase in the hazard with reference to insured premises must be determined by a comparison with the conditions existing at the time the policy was written. Where a fire policy provided that it should be void if the hazard was increased by any act within the control or knowledge of the insured, such clause did not include insured's failure to communicate information relating to an increase of hazard, through means of which he had knowledge, though not within his control, consisting of an attempt on the part of others to burn an adjoining building. Where a fire policy provided for forfeiture if the hazard was increased by any means within the control or knowledge of the insured, the increased hazard referred to included only such as resulted from physical changes in the insured property. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Dorroh (Tex.) 133 S. W. 465, 468.

Of rate of fare

The erroneous treating by a street railroad of its system of three-cent fares for school children as abrogated by Public Utility Law (P. L. 1911, c. 195) § 18, amounts to an "increase of rate of fare" in existence when the statute became effective, within section 17h, conferring on the Board of Public Utility Commissioners power "to hear and determine whether the said increase charge or alteration is just and reasonable," with which determination the court cannot interfere, except, as provided by section 38, where it clearly appears that there was no evidence before the board to support reasonably its order, or that it was without the jurisdiction of the board. Public Service R. Co. v. Board of Public Utility Com'rs, 80 Atl. 27, 28, 81 N. J. Law, 363.

Of salary or compensation

When a county clerk of Imperial county was elected, that was a county of the thirty-sixth class, and his salary was fixed at $2,200 a year, which under the express provisions of Pol. Code, § 4290, was in full compensation for all services rendered by him, his deputies and assistants. In 1909 that county was transferred to class 36½, and by Pol. Code, § 4265a, the salary of the county clerk was fixed at $2,400 a year, with provision for one deputy at $900 a year. Held, that the provision for the appointment of a deputy constituted an increase of salary within Const. art. 11, § 9, providing that the compensation of county officers shall not be increased during their term of office, and hence a deputy appointed by such county clerk had no claim against the county for her salary. Elder v. Garey, 127 Pac. 826, 827, 19 Cal. App. 775.

County Government Act, § 215, provided that the salary paid to a county recorder should be in full compensation for all services, and that all deputies should be paid by him out of his salary; and Pol. Code, § 4261, as amended by St. 1909, c. 422, provided that in certain counties the recorder should receive a fixed salary and be allowed two deputies at a salary to be paid from a fund. Held, that where a recorder's term of office began January 1, 1907, the amendment allowing two deputies to be paid by the county was an "increase in compensation," within the constitution that the compensation of county officers shall not be increased during their term of office. Where the statute provides a fixed salary for the officer and for a certain number of deputies, all payable out of the county treasury, an increase in the salary of such deputies, or a provision for extra deputies, is not within the constitutional prohibition against increasing the salary of county officers after their election, since the state has undertaken to pay the officer and the expenses of running the office. Under the constitutional prohibition against increasing the salary of county officers, where the statute allows a lump sum to cover their compensation and expenses, such sum cannot be increased during their term. Hanson v. Underhill, 107 Pac. 1016, 1017, 12 Cal. App. 545.

INCREASE IN VALUE

As profit, see Profit.

INCREDIBLE

To declare testimony of a fact "incredible," it must be so in conflict with the uniform course of nature or with fully established physical facts that no reasonably intelligent man could give it credence. Salchert v. Reinig, 115 N. W. 132, 134, 185 Wis. 194 (citing Beyer v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 88 N. W. 57, 112 Wis. 138; Hirte v. Eastern Wisconsin R. & Light Co., 106 N. W. 1068, 127 Wis. 230; Peat v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 107 N. W. 355, 128 Wis. 86).

INCRIMINATION

Exemption from self-incrimination as privilege, see Privileges and Immunities.

INCUMBENT

The word "incumbent" is defined by section 164, p. 312, P. L. 1898, referring to persons against whom proceedings may be taken to contest an election, as the person whom the canvassers declare elected, and the court is without jurisdiction of a contest where the proceedings are initiated by the person originally declared elected, although his certificate of election has been subsequently revoked. Darling v. Murphy, 57 Atl. 263, 264, 70 N. J. Law, 435.

"There is a difference between the 'right of incumbency' and the 'term of office.' If one who is in office becomes ineligible to hold it longer, as that he moves out of the district, his term of office does not thereby expire, although his right of incumbency ceases. His successor is elected or appointed to fill out his unexpired term." Palmer v. Commonwealth, 92 S. W. 588, 589, 122 Ky. 693.

The "incumbent" within Rev. St. 1899, § 381, subd. 7, providing that an elective office shall become vacant upon the refusal or neglect of the incumbent to take his oath or to give or renew his official bond or deposit his oath, is the person last elected to the office, and must, before entering upon its duties, take the oath and give a bond, and the section does not refer to a refusal or neglect caused by death. Rev. St. 1899, § 381, subd. 1, provides that an elective office shall become vacant upon the death of the incumbent. After a person had been elected a justice of the peace and had filed his oath and bond, but before the commencement of the term for which he was elected, and before his bond was approved, he died. Held, that the person already holding the office was the "incumbent" within the meaning of the section, and the death of the other did not create a vacancy. Ballantyne v. Bower, 99 Pac. 869, 872, 17 Wyo. 356, 17 Ann. Cas. 82.

A statute providing that "every office shall become vacant on the happening of either of the following events before the expiration of the term of such office: First, the death of the incumbent. * * * Sixth, his refusal or neglect to take his oath of office or to give or renew his official bond"— the word "incumbent" means the person in possession of the office performing its functions, and not the person who has been elected to the office, but not yet qualified. State ex rel. Vanderveer v. Gormley, 102 Pac. 435, 436, 53 Wash. 543.

One performing the duties of clerk of the district court under an appointment by the court on the death of the incumbent is not an "incumbent" of the office within the rule permitting an incumbent to hold over on failure of his successor to qualify, and the appointee of the board of supervisors is entitled to the office without reference to the time he qualifies. State v. Brown, 123 N. W. 779, 781, 144 Iowa, 739.

Under Pol. Code, § 996, providing that "an office becomes vacant on the happening of either of the following events before the expiration of the term: (1) The death of the incumbent * * *"—one who has been elected to an office, but who fails to qualify by filing the bond, is in the sense of the statute the "incumbent," though he never was in possession of nor performed any duty in connection with the office. Campbell v. Board of Sup'rs of Santa Clara County, 93 Pac. 1061, 1063, 7 Cal. App. 155.

INCUMBER—INCUMBRANCE

A "street" is a public way, from side to side and end to end, so that any private use which in any degree hinders or prevents its free use as a public way to its full extent is an "obstruction" or "incumbrance" within the meaning of the law. Lacey v. City of Oskaloosa, 121 N. W. 542, 544, 143 Iowa, 704, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 853.

INCUMBRANCE (On Title)

See Covenant against Incumbrances;
Free from Incumbrance; Present Incumbrance.

All incumbrances of record, see All.

"Incumbrances" are of two kinds, those that affect the title, and those which affect only the physical condition of the property; a mortgage or other lien affecting the title, while a right of way affects the physical condition of the property. Van Ness v. Royal Phosphate Co., 53 South. 381, 383, 60 Fla. 284, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 833, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 647.

A paramount outstanding title is an "incumbrance" within the meaning of a covenant against incumbrances. Morris v. Short (Tex.) 151 S. W. 633, 638.

An "incumbrance" is a burden on land which depreciates its value, as a lien, easement, or servitude, and includes "any right to or interest in the land which may subsist in third persons, to the diminution of the value of the land, but consistent with the conveyance of the title." Howell v. Northampton R. Co., 60 Atl. 793, 211 Pa. 284 (quoting and adopting definition in Batley v. Foerderer, 29 Atl. 868, 162 Pa. 460).

An "incumbrance," within the meaning of a covenant against incumbrances, includes every right to or interest in the land, consistent with the passing of a fee, which diminishes the value of the land. Simons v. Diamond Match Co., 128 N. W. 1182, 1183, 159 Mich. 241.

An "incumbrance," within the terms of a contract for the sale of land free from all incumbrances, includes any right to or interest in the land to the diminution of its value, though consistent with the passage of the fee, or any adverse right or privilege which curtails the full and exclusive enjoyment of the land. Friendly v. Ruff, 120 Pac. 745, 746, 81 Or. 42.

A mere "incumbrance" on real estate, which may readily be removed and discharged out of the purchase money, is not a bar to specific execution of a contract for the sale and conveyance thereof. Armstrong v. Maryland Coal Co., 69 S. E. 195, 204, 87 W. Va. 589.

Civ. Code, § 1114, provides that the term "incumbrance" includes taxes, assessments, and all liens upon real property. Hollywood Lumber Co. v. Love, 100 Pac. 698, 699, 155 Cal. 270.

A contract for the sale of real estate, free from all incumbrances, ordinarily refers to incumbrances defined by Civ. Code, § 1114, declaring that the term "incumbrances," includes taxes, assessments, and liens, and a purchaser intending to make the term include an incumbrance affecting only the physical condition of the property, must have the agreement so declare. Sisk v. Caswell, 112 Pac. 185, 190, 14 Cal. App. 377.

A contract for the sale of real estate "clear of all 'incumbrances,'" is breached when at the time of the execution of the contract there is an ordinance providing for the widening of a street on which the real estate abutted, though such ordinance may have been invalid, and was subsequently set aside. Graybill v. Ruhl, 74 Atl. 289, 240, 225 Pa. 417.

An agreement by an owner of lots abutting on a street to give the city five feet for widening the street, on condition that the work should be done during that year, does not constitute an "incumbrance" within a covenant against incumbrances in a deed executed two years thereafter. Fleet v. Wait, 68 Atl. 1081, 1032, 80 Vt. 177.

Plaintiff contracted to convey to defendant certain real estate, with full covenants of warranty, conveying the absolute fee, free from all incumbrances, except as previously stated. It subsequently appeared that the supports and foundation of the supports of the roof of a shed on the premises rested on a 7-inch space of adjoining land; but plaintiff tendered, in addition to the deed, a release by the owner of such adjoining property so long as plaintiff's building stood. Held, that such release complied with plaintiff's agreement to convey a title free from all incumbrances; the overlap being a mere encroachment on adjoining premises, and not an "incumbrance" on the property conveyed. Eastman v. Horne, 125 N. Y. Supp. 553, 554, 141 App. Div. 12.

Covenants against incumbrances in a deed conveying no part of the adjacent streets are breached by a release, previously executed by the grantor, releasing a railway from liability for damages resulting to the land from its operation on an adjacent street; the release constituting an "incumbrance," defined as any right to or interest in land which may subsist in third persons to the diminution of the value of the estate of the tenant, but consistently with the passing of the fee. Tuskegee Land & Security Co. v. Birmingham Realty Co., 49 South. 378, 382, 161 Ala. 542, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 992 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3519, 3520).

Where there is a physical burden on real estate which is visible, the presumption, in the absence of an express agreement, is that the burden is not an "incumbrance," within a covenant against incumbrances. Where, at the time of the execution of a contract for the sale and purchase of real estate and the payment of a part of the price, a drainage ditch existed on the land, sufficient to run water through it, and it appeared that the value of the land retained by the vendor and his grantees rested largely on the fact that they could be given the benefit of the irrigation by an extension of the ditch on the land, the law would presume, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, that the ditch was not an incumbrance, within the contract against incumbrances, and a deed reserving irrigation rights in the ditch merely complied with the contract. Sisk v. Caswell, 112 Pac. 185, 190, 14 Cal. App. 377.

In the original Seminole Agreement of December 16, 1897 (Act July 1, 1898, c. 542, 30 Stat. 567), providing that all contracts for incumbrance of any part of any allotment prior to patent shall be void, an "incumbrance" is a right or interest in land which may subsist in third persons to the diminution of the value of the land, but consistent with the passing of the fee by conveyance. Stout v. Simpson, 124 Pac. 754, 756, 84 Okl. 129.

Section 15 of the act of July 1, 1902, providing that lands allotted to members and freedmen of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations shall not be "affected" or "incumbered" by any deed, debt, or obligation, of any character, contracted prior to the time at which said land may be alienated, means that there shall be no burden on the title or charge against such allotment, and that the same shall in no event become liable for any debt or obligation contracted prior to the removal of restrictions. In re Davis' Estate, 122 Pac. 547, 551, 32 Okl. 209.

Building and other restrictions

Where there were building restrictions on land which was subject to the reserved right of way for and the right to construct and maintain pipes and ditches for irrigation purposes, the land was not "free and clear of all 'incumbrances'" within a contract to sell the land. Tandy v. Waesch, 97 Pac. 69, 70, 154 Cal. 108.

Building restrictions in grants of real estate are "incumbrances" on the title. Whelan v. Rossiter, 82 Pac. 1082, 1083, 1 Cal. App. 701 (citing Reynolds v. Cleary, 16 N. Y. Supp. 421, 61 Hun, 592; Wetmore v. Bruce, 23 N. E. 303, 118 N. Y. 319; Kramer v. Carter, 186 Mass. 504; Jeffries v. Jeffries, 117 Mass. 184; Van Schaick v. Lese, 66 N. Y. Supp. 64, 31 Misc. Rep. 610).

Any right existing in another to use the land, or whereby the use of the owner is restricted, is an "incumbrance." A provision in a deed forming part of the grantor's chain of title, prohibiting the erection of certain kinds of buildings on the lot after ten years, and requiring any building erected thereon not to be nearer the street than adjoining buildings, is an "incumbrance." Williams v. Hewitt, 106 Pac. 496, 497, 57 Wash. 62, 135 Am. St. Rep. 971 (quoting and adopting definition in Wetmore v. Bruce, 23 N. E. 303, 118 N. Y. 319).

An "incumbrance" is a right to or interest in land which may subsist in another to the diminution of the value of the land or consistent with the power to pass the fee by conveyance. It may consist of a right in another to use the land, or anything which restricts the use of the land by the owner. A covenant in a deed that the grantee will not carry on or permit to be carried on, on the premises conveyed, any noxious, offensive, or dangerous trade or business, runs with the land and is restrictive, and constitutes an "incumbrance" thereon. A restrictive covenant in a deed, preventing the use of the land conveyed for any lawful purpose, is an "incumbrance." Dieterlen v. Miller, 99 N. Y. Supp. 699, 701, 114 App. Div. 40 (citing Campbell v. Seaman, 63 N. Y. 577, 20 Am. Rep. 567; Clement v. Burtis, 24 N. E. 1013, 121 N. Y. 708; Ray v. Adams, 60 N. Y. Supp. 663, 44 App. Div. 173; Wetmore v. Bruce, 23 N. E. 303, 118 N. Y. 319; Forster v. Scott, 32 N. E. 976, 136 N. Y. 582, 18 L. R. A. 543; Kountze v. Helmuth, 22 N. Y. Supp. 204, 67 Hun, 348; Id., 35 N. E. 656, 140 N. Y. 432; Rowland v. Miller, 34 N. E. 765, 139 N. Y. 93, 22 L. R. A. 182).

Civ. Code, § 1113, provides that the use of the word "grant" in a conveyance shall imply a covenant that the estate is free from incumbrances, at the time of the execution of the conveyance. Section 1114 provides that the term "incumbrances" includes taxes, assessments, and all liens upon realty. Held that, aside from the statutory definition, an "incumbrance," as used in the phrase "covenant against incumbrances," is any right or interest in land which may subsist in third persons to the diminution of the value of the estate to the grantee, but consistently with the passing of the fee, and both within such definition and under the statute a restrictive covenant against the use of firearms on the premises was an "incumbrance"; the word "includes" being ordinarily a word of enlargement and not of restriction. Fraser v. Bentel, 119 Pac. 509, 511, 161 Cal. 390, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1062.

Contract to sell and convey

Revision 1874, p. 637, § 5, authorized a married woman to bind herself by contract in the same manner and to the same extent as though she were unmarried, with certain exceptions; but section 14 provided that nothing contained in the act should enable any married woman to execute any conveyance of her land, or any instrument "incumbering" the same, without her husband joining. P. L. 1898, p. 670, § 39, provides that no estate or interest of a feme covert in any lands shall pass by her deed or conveyance without a previous acknowledgment in a prescribed form, and that every deed or instrument of the nature or description set forth in section 21, which includes agreements for sale, executed and acknowledged as theretofore, should be effectual to convey or affect the property thereby intended to be conveyed or affected. Held, that a married woman's agreement to convey, not acknowledged, does not "incumber" the lands within section 14. Wolff v. Meyer, 66 Atl. 959, 960, 75 N. J. Law, 181.

Dower

An "incumbrance" is not always a lien, although a lien is always an incumbrance. Thus dower, though not a lien, but an estate, is an incumbrance, in that it incumbers the title. Wilson v. Wilson, 105 N. Y. Supp. 151, 153, 120 App. Div. 581.

An outstanding dower interest is an "incumbrance" within a deed containing a special warranty against all claims, and a warranty in the terms "grant, bargain, and sell," which, under the direct provisions of Kirby's Dig. § 731, import that the grantor is seized of an indefeasible estate in fee simple free from incumbrances. Seldon v. Dudley & Jones Co., 85 S. W. 773, 779, 74 Ark. 348.

An inchoate right of dower is an "incumbrance" on land within St. 1898, § 3186, authorizing the holder of an incumbrance to bring an action to test the validity of the claim of another to the land. Huntzicker v. Crocker, 115 N. W. 840, 841, 135 Wis. 38, 15 Ann. Cas. 444 (citing Wright v. Young, 6 Wis. 127, 70 Am. Dec. 453).

Easement

An easement acquired by the city for a street over a city lot, in condemnation proceedings, the street not having been opened, is an "incumbrance" upon the land, within the terms of a representation by the owner to his real estate broker that he is possessed of a good marketable title free from all incumbrances and adverse liens and interests. Smith v. Mellen, 133 N. W. 566, 568, 116 Minn. 198.

Where an easement and right of way have been granted by Congress, or are provided for by the state Legislature, over public lands belonging to the government or the state, as the case may be, the existence of such easements does not constitute a breach of covenant against "incumbrances" in subsequent conveyances of said land. Newmyer v. Roush, 120 Pac. 464, 466, 21 Idaho, 106, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 433.

Eminent domain

Defendant agreed to convey to plaintiff certain described real estate, free and clear of all incumbrances, and that if the title was not good, and could not be made good within 30 days of the date of the delivery of the abstract, it should be optional with the purchaser whether the title should pass subject to any defect that might be found, or that the earnest money should be refunded. After the abstract was furnished, plaintiff discovered that a railway corporation had begun proceedings to condemn a right of way through the property and had filed a lis pendens. Held, that such proceedings constituted a defect in the title, warranting plaintiff in refusing the same and in recovering the earnest money. Irrespective of the technical definition of the word "incumbrance," the language of the contract is plain and specific, and the condemnation proceedings came within the scope of the term. Miller v. Calvin Phillips & Co., 87 Pac. 264, 265, 44 Wash. 226.

Highway

A public highway is not an "incumbrance," within the meaning of that term as used in covenants against incumbrances. Kidder v. Childs, 114 N. Y. Supp. 561, 563, 130 App. Div. 259 (dissenting opinion, citing Whitbeck v. Cook [N. Y.] 15 Johns. 483, 8 Am. Dec. 272; Huyck v. Andrews, 20 N. E. 581, 113 N. Y. 81, 3 L. R. A. 789, 10 Am. St. Rep. 432).

Where a public highway has been constructed and opened and used by the public, and is of such general character as to give notice of its use, across a tract of land, it is not such an "incumbrance" as will constitute a breach of a covenant of warranty, and the purchaser of such land is presumed to have had in mind the existence of such easement.

and that the parties in making such contract did not intend to include the same in the contract or conveyance. Newmyer v. Roush, 120 Pac. 464, 466, 21 Idaho, 106, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 433.

Improvement work

Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 4019, which divides property for the purpose of taxation into two classes, real estate and personal property, and declares the former to include "improvements," which are defined to include all buildings, structures, fixtures, and fences erected upon or affixed to the land, whether title has been acquired to the land or not, improvements upon an unpatented mining claim become, upon their sale for taxes, so associated with the realty as to constitute an "incumbrance" thereon, within the meaning of C. L. 2304, allowing the holder of an incumbrance to perform the annual labor, so as to prevent relocation. McVeigh v. Vieg, 117 Pac. 857, 859, 16 N. M. 453.

Lease

A lease is an "incumbrance," within the meaning of that term as used in a covenant against incumbrances. Crawford v. McDonald, 106 S. W. 206, 208, 84 Ark. 415.

"An 'incumbrance,' within the meaning of a covenant against incumbrances, includes any right or interest in the land which may subsist in the third person to the diminution of the value of the land, but consistent with the passing of the fee by the conveyance. Hence an outstanding lease is an incumbrance." Brass v. Vandecar, 96 N. W. 1035, 1036, 70 Neb. 35 (quoting and adopting definition in Fritz v. Pusey, 18 N. W. 94, 31 Minn. 368).

An outstanding lease for a period of years is an "incumbrance," within the meaning of a deed warranting against incumbrances. La Rue v. Parmele, 103 N. W. 304, 305, 73 Neb. 663.

A lease for five years of premises contracted to be sold is such an "incumbrance" as justifies vendee in refusing to perform. Foland v. Italian Savings Bank of City of New York, 108 N. Y. Supp. 57, 58, 123 App. Div. 598.

Where a grantee in a grant, bargain, and sale deed had, at the time of the grant, knowledge of a lease on the property, and that rent was receipted for the term on the margin of the lease, and requested and obtained an assignment of the lease to himself, such lease was not a breach of the implied covenant against incumbrances, though under the direct provisions of the Code a lease is an "incumbrance," and is within the covenants implied from the word "grant" in a conveyance of an estate in fee simple. Mann v. Montgomery, 92 Pac. 875, 876, 6 Cal. App. 646.

A promise to pay rent for demised premises is not an "incumbrance" of community real property within a statute providing that the husband shall not sell, convey, or encumber the community real property unless the wife joins in the deed or instrument evidencing the conveyance or incumbrance. Monroe v. Stayt, 107 Pac. 517, 518, 57 Wash. 592, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1102.

License

An instrument giving a person the right to construct a drainage ditch through the land of the person executing the instrument, being without consideration and not acknowledged and recorded, was a mere license, revocable at the will of the licensor and his grantee, and not a covenant running with the land, and did not constitute an "incumbrance" thereon, which would prevent the conveyance of a fee-simple title by the grantor. Williams v. Beatty, 122 S. W. 823, 326, 189 Mo. App. 167.

Idem distinguished

The term "incumbrance," as used in a covenant for title, is more comprehensive than "lien," including liens and any other burden resting either on the real estate itself, or on its title, which tends to lessen its value, or interfere with its free enjoyment. First Church of Christ Scientists of New Albany v. Cox, 94 N. E. 1048, 1049, 47 Ind. App. 536.

Mechanic's Lien

A claim of a lumber company for lumber used in constructing a house on mortgaged premises cannot be deemed an "incumbrance," within a clause of the mortgage authorizing the mortgagee to pay incumbrances, in the absence of anything to show when the lumber was purchased, or by whom, or when the house was completed, or that any steps were taken or contemplated by the lumber company to assert a lien. Provident Mut. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Shaffer, 83 Pac. 274, 275, 2 Cal. App. 216.

Mineral or timber privilege

A covenant in a deed that the premises are free from all taxes, tax titles, or certificates, judgments, mechanics' liens, and incumbrances of any kind whatsoever, is sufficiently broad to warrant an action at law, wherein the declaration alleges that the lands conveyed were not free and discharged from all liens and incumbrances, but were subject to a right in a certain named company to enjoy the benefit of the oil and asphalt rights for a period of 10 years from a certain date. Flood v. Graham, 54 South. 456, 457, 61 Fla. 207, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1137.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7852, provides that no lands of any married woman shall be liable for the debts of her husband, but, with the profits therefrom, shall be her separate property as fully as if she were unmarried, provided that she shall have no power to incumber or convey the lands except by deed in which her husband shall join. Section 7853 provides that a married woman may take and hold property by conveyance, gift, devise, or descent, and it shall be her separate property, together with all the rents, issues, income, and profits thereof, and under her control the same as if unmarried. Held, that a written contract whereby a married woman granted the exclusive right to explore land for gas and oil for five years, with the privilege of renewal for five years, and as much longer as gas and oil might be found in paying quantities, was not an "incumbrance" or conveyance within section 7852, and was valid, though her husband did not join therein. Kokomo Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. Matlock, 97 N. E. 787, 788, 177 Ind. 225, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 675.

An "incumbrance" is every right to or interest in land granted, to the diminution of the value, but consistent with the passing of the fee by the conveyance, and it is only necessary that it confer upon its owner some interest in or right to some profit or lawful use of the land, and any burden which diminishes the full measure of enjoyment of the land, or renders it less useful or less salable, is an incumbrance, though the entire fee passed by the conveyance, and an outstanding right in a third party to extract rosin from pine timber conveyed is an incumbrance, and, if not excepted from a deed with full covenants and warranties, covering the timber or lands upon which it grows, will constitute an actionable breach. Brodie v. New England Mortg. Sec. Co., 51 South. 861, 862, 166 Ala. 170.

A deed conveyed land and covenanted that it was free from all incumbrances. There was at the time a written contract conveying the principal part of the timber on the land and allowing the grantee until a future date to remove it. It was agreed that the timber cut and banked off part of the land, under the contract, should go to the vendors, and that all other timber and the remaining notes for the purchase price thereof should go to the purchaser of the land. The notes for the purchase price of the lumber were afterwards transferred to the purchaser without further consideration than those mentioned in the deed, were accepted by it, and afterwards collected as they became due. The vendors also agreed to have the timber contract reformed to embrace an omitted clause. Held, that the timber notes were assigned to the purchaser, and the agreement to reform the contract was made and accepted as an entire satisfaction of the deed so far as it was affected by the timber contract, so that such contract was not an "incumbrance" within the meaning of the covenants in the deed. Soudan Planting Co. v. Stevenson, 128 S. W. 574, 579, 94 Ark. 599.

Mortgage or deed of trust

"Incumbrance by mortgage" means that there must be some valid existing obligation to support the mortgage, which may be contingent until default in the payment of the debt secured. A mortgage on a vessel to secure a debt of the mortgagor is a present "incumbrance" by a chattel mortgage, within the meaning of a provision of a policy of insurance on such vessel making it void, in case of such incumbrance, so long as the debt secured is outstanding, although it is not in default. Gilchrist Transp. Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 170 Fed. 279, 282, 283, 95 C. C. A. 475.

"Incumbrances" are of two kinds, viz.: (1) such as affect the title; and (2) those which affect only the physical condition of the property. A mortgage or other lien is a fair illustration of the former; a public road, or a right of way, of the latter. Where incumbrances of the former class exist, the covenant against incumbrances under all the authorities is broken the instant it is made, and it is of no importance that the grantee had notice of them when he took the title. Van Ness v. Royal Phosphate Co., 53 South. 381, 883, 60 Fla. 284, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 833, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 647 (quoting Memmert v. McKeen, 4 Atl. 542, 112 Pa. 815).

An insurance policy, providing that if the property should become incumbered the policy would be void, will not be rendered invalid by mortgage not a valid lien on the property. Where insured executed a mortgage to secure a note payable more than a year after date for rent to become due under a lease, to begin five years in the future, and the insured's property is destroyed by fire before the commencement of the term, the mortgage is not an "incumbrance" within the policy. Rowland v. Home Ins. Co. of New York, 108 Pac. 118, 82 Kan. 220, 186 Am. St. Rep. 104.

An unrecorded mortgage is an "incumbrance" within the provisions of a fire policy making it void in case of an incumbrance by mortgage. Rhea v. Planters' Mut. Ins. Co., 90 S. W. 850, 77 Ark. 57.

A purchaser in a contract for the sale of land subject to a mortgage securing a debt past due need not accept a deed subject to such mortgage on which foreclosure has been begun and may recover a partial payment and the expense of examining the title. Wacht v. Hart, 105 N. Y. Supp. 78, 80, 120 App. Div. 189.

Under Civ. Code § 1114, defining an "incumbrance" as including taxes, assessments, and all liens upon real property, a deed of trust is not an incumbrance, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1475, declaring that, in the case of subsisting incumbrances on the homestead of a decedent, the claim secured thereby must be presented and allowed as other claims. Weber v. McCleverty, 86 Pac. 706, 708, 149 Cal. 316.

Mortgage paid, but not discharged

An apparent mortgage, although extinguished by payment, is an "incumbrance," sufficient as a defense in a suit on a note which contains a condition that the same will not be paid until the "incumbrance is removed" from the land; but it is not an incumbrance within a warranty deed. Hoyt v. Swift, 13 Vt. 129, 131, 37 Am. Dec. 586; Judevine v. Pennock, 15 Vt. 683, 685.

Party wall

Under Code, §§ 2994-3003, giving an adjoining owner the right, without the consent of the other, to erect a party wall, one-half on the premises of such other, a party wall does not constitute an "incumbrance" for which a lessee making use of the wall, and thereby obligating himself to the adjoining owner to make compensation for a share of the expense thereof, may recover of lessor. Percival v. Colonial Inv. Co., 115 N. W. 941, 942, 140 Iowa, 275, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 293.

Special assessments

An incumbrance is any right to or interest in land which may subsist in third person to the diminution in value of the land, though consistent with the passing of the fee by deed or conveyance. But a mere possibility of establishing a right to or interest in land is not within the definition. A covenant in a deed against incumbrances does not include a charge for street improvement, which has been made, though the lien thereof has not attached. Cemansky v. Fitch, 96 N. W. 754, 756, 121 Iowa, 186.

Where, by virtue of a statute regulating drainage assessments, a ditch assessment was a lien on land conveyed at the time of the execution of the contract of sale and deed, such assessment constituted a breach of warranty against "incumbrance." Pierse v. Bronnenberg, 81 N. E. 739, 82 N. E. 126, 127, 40 Ind. App. 662.

Where the owners of a tenement house on November 1, 1906, contracted to convey the same free from all incumbrances and violations of the tenement house act (Laws 1901, p. 889, c. 334), and on May 25th had been served with notice to install a water meter, which was installed by the water department on October 8th, but the cost was not certified until November 1st, nor the bill certified to the comptroller until December 13, 1906, the assessment therefor was not a lien on the premises, when conveyed on December 11th, the words "lien or incumbrance" being used to cover only a charge against the property after it has been ascertained or determined. Feder v. Rosenthal, 116 N. Y. Supp. 2, 4, 62 Misc. Rep. 610.

A lot which would ultimately be liable for the cost of improvements already made upon the street on which it abutted was sold with covenants of warranty against liens and incumbrances. At that time no assessment for this improvement had been made, but a year later it was made under Acts 1901, c. 231, § 4, which provides that the assessment for benefits shall not become a lien on the property until its adoption by the common council. Held, that the vendor was not liable under his warranty for the cost of these improvements, as there was no lien at the time of the sale, and there was no "incumbrance" within the meaning of the covenant against incumbrances, as the land was not then burdened and the Legislature by fixing the time when the lien attached must have intended that the purchaser where conveyances were made prior to that date should bear the cost of the improvement. First Church of Christ Scientists of New Albany v. Cox, 94 N. E. 1048, 1049, 47 Ind. App. 536.

Taxes

Taxes on real estate for 1893, which had been assessed, levied, and warranted to the collector of taxes, became a lien on the land prior to February 14, 1894, within a deed executed on that date containing a warranty against "incumbrances." Patterson v. Cappon, 102 N. W. 1083, 1084, 125 Wis. 198.

From the use of the words "grant" and "convey" in a deed the law implies a covenant that at the time of such conveyance the land is free from incumbrances, and taxes are included in the term "incumbrances" as here used. Bullitt v. Coryell, 85 S. W. 482, 483, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 42.

Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 4019, providing that the term "real estate" shall include mines and minerals and also improvements, and defining the others to be all structures and fixtures erected on land, whether title has been acquired to said land or not, Laws 1899, c. 60, providing that a tax on mining claims shall be a tax on the net product and the surface improvements only, improvements upon a mining claim become upon a sale therefor for taxes so associated with the realty as to constitute an "incumbrance" thereon within Comp. Laws 1897, § 2304, allowing the holder of an incumbrance to perform the annual labor so as to prevent relocation. McVeigh v. Veig, 117 Pac. 857, 859, 16 N. M. 453.

As valid incumbrance

The recital in a deed that it is subject to all "incumbrances," without more, does not estop the grantee from pleading the invalidity of any such "incumbrance"; it means no more than subject to all "valid incumbrances." Carter v. Cemansky, 102 N. W. 438, 439, 126 Iowa, 506.

Vendor's lien

Where a fire policy stipulating that it should be void on the interest of insured becoming other than unincumbered was with consent of the insurer, subject to its conditions, assigned to a purchaser whose deed of the property retained a vendor's lien, of which lien the insurer had no notice, such lien constituted an "incumbrance," and avoided the policy. Wright v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 118 S. W. 191, 192, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 6.

A contract for the sale of land stipulating for a good and sufficient warranty deed cannot be specifically enforced at the suit of the vendor where, at the time he offered to convey, the land was subject to vendor's lien notes in a large amount, such lien being an "incumbrance" under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 633, 634, providing that the word "grant" in a conveyance imports a warranty against incumbrances. Roos v. Thigpen (Tex.) 140 S. W. 1180, 1183.

As voluntary incumbrance

The word "incumbrances," within Comp. Laws 1897, § 2304, allowing the holder of an incumbrance on a mining claim to perform annual labor to prevent relocation, is not confined to voluntary liens, nor liens at all, but includes any burden or land deprecatative of its value, such as affect the title, and such, also, as affect the property's physical condition. McVeigh v. Veig, 117 Pac. 857, 860, 16 N. M. 453.

Widows' statutory interest

The widow's statutory interest is not an "incumbrance" or lien within a devise of real estate free from any lien or incumbrance. Rice v. Rice (Iowa) 119 N. W. 714, 716.

INCUMBRANCE IN GOOD FAITH

See Good Faith.

INCUMBRANCER

As owner, see Owner.

An "incumbrancer" is one who has a legal claim against an estate. A judgment is an incumbrance, and the holder thereof is an incumbrancer. De Voe v. Rundle, 74 Pac. 836, 837, 33 Wash. 604.

A transferee of a negotiable promissory note, payment of which is secured by a deed of trust, whereby the title to the property and power of sale in case of default is vested in a third party as trustee, is not an "incumbrancer" to whom power of sale is given within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 858, providing that "where a power to sell real property is given to a mortgagee or other incumbrancer, in an instrument intended to secure the payment of money, the power is to be deemed a part of the security, and vests in any person who, by assignment, becomes entitled to the money so secured to be paid, and may be executed by him whenever the assignment is duly acknowledged and recorded," and so such transferee, though the assignment of the note to him has not been recorded, may upon the maker's default demand a sale of the trust property to satisfy the indebtedness. Stockwell v. Barnum, 94 Pac. 400, 401, 7 Cal. App. 413.

INCUR

See Contracted or Incurred.

The inhibition in Act Cong. March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1098, c. 846), providing that no indebtedness shall be "contracted or incurred" by counties prior to the time of collecting county taxes in the calendar year next succeeding the opening of the territory of Oklahoma, excepting where authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, does not relate only to contractual obligations. The word "contracted" includes all of one class, and the word "incurred" includes another class. The word "incurred" is defined as to become liable or subject to; to render liable or subject to. Men contract debts; they incur liabilities. In the one case, they act affirmatively; in the other, the liability is incurred or cast upon them by operation of law. "Incur" means something beyond contracts, something not embraced in the word "debt." It has been held to mean "to become liable for," "brought on himself," "brought on, occasioned, or caused." Hence the word "incurred" means more, and embraces a different class of liabilities or obligations from those "contracted." It means the indebtedness imposed by salaries of county officers and other required and necessary expenses. Bank of Indian Territory v. Eckles, 91 Pac. 695, 697, 79 Okl. 159 (citing Webster's Dict.; Black's Law Dict.; Scott v. Tyler [N. Y.] 14 Barb. 202; Flanagan v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 50 N. W. 60, 83 Iowa, 639; Beekman v. Van Dolsen, 24 N. Y. Supp. 414, 70 Hun, 288; Deyo v. Stewart [N. Y.] 4 Denio, 101; Ashe v. Young, 3 S. W. 454, 68 Tex. 123).

In a memorandum that a note is left as collateral security for all liabilities incurred by a certain person, while in strict grammatical construction the word "incurred" is used in the past tense, and strictly speaking was limited to such indebtedness as existed at the time of the delivery of the contract, yet such limited significance will not be placed on the language, but construing it according to its evident intention, it is held to constitute the security a continuing obligation for debts created after its delivery. In re McElheny, 86 N. Y. Supp. 328, 330, 91 App. Div. 131.

As used in Const. art. 1, § 12, as amended November 6, 1888, providing that property otherwise exempt shall be liable for any debt incurred to any laborer or servant for labor or service rendered, the word "incurred" means the same as though it read "subsequently incurred." Brown v. Hughes, 94 N. W. 438, 439, 89 Minn. 150.

Under Const. art. 11, § 18, providing that no school district shall incur any debt for any purpose exceeding in any year the income provided for such year, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof voting at an election to be held for that purpose, any assumption by a school district, not included in a high school district, of a pro rata of bonded indebtedness originally created by such high school districts, as a condition of annexation thereto, is, as to such school district, the "incurring" of such an indebtedness or liability. People ex rel. Taxpayers of Excelsior School Dist. v. Hanford Union High School Dist., 84 Pac. 193-195, 148 Cal. 705.

Gen. Laws 1909, c. 135, § 12, requires the town sergeant of each town annually in April to make a list of the keepers of dogs in the town, and return such list to the town clerk on or before May 1st, for which service he shall receive from the town treasury 20 cents for each dog listed, and section 13 provides for the killing of nonlicensed dogs and for the payment of a fee of $2 out of the town treasury for each dog killed and buried. Held, that a city's liability for the salary of chief of police and town sergeant, and for the fees of the sergeant as dog lister, under such provision, constituted an "ordinary current expense" of the town, which, if, with other like expenses, it was within the town's limit of current revenues and such special taxes as it might legally and in good faith levy therefor, was not the "incurring of indebtedness" in excess of the limit fixed by Acts 1895, c. 1428; and hence the fact that the town's debt limit was exceeded was no defense to an action to enforce liability for such services. Trainor v. Lee, 83 Atl. 847, 850, 34 R. I. 345.

INCURRING RISK

In actions arising out of noncontractual relations, the term "incurring risk" is synonymous with "contributory negligence." Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Lynn, 95 N. E. 577, 582, 177 Ind. 311.

See, also, Debt.

"Indebtedness" means the state of being indebted; a sum due; debts collectively. Commonwealth v. Morton, 140 S. W. 685, 686, 145 Ky. 521.

The word "indebted" means "being in debt"; "having incurred a debt"; "owing; with 'to' before the person to whom the debt is due." Miller v. George, 9 S. E. 659, 660, 80 S. C. 528 (quoting and adopting the definition in Worcester Dict.).

"Indebtedness," or debt, is whatever one owes, or in a purely technical sense is that for which an action of debt will lie; a sum of money due by certain and express agreement. It is not a contract, though it may be the result of a contract. Hornbeck v. State ex rel. Davidson, 71 N. E. 916, 917, 33 Ind. App. 609.

The word "indebted," in the statute providing that the lessor's right of pledge includes, not only the effects of the principal lessee or tenant, but those of the undertenants, so far as the latter are indebted to the principal lessee at the time when the proprietor chooses to exercise his right means "owing" at the time of the lessor's provisional seizure of the effects of the subtenant. Such right of pledge cannot be extended by implication to future rents. The measure of the lessor's pledge is the sum of rents that have accrued to date of seizure, although the same may not then be exigible under the terms of the sublease. The statutory right of pledge of the lessor on the effects of the sublessee cannot be affected by the circumstance that the sublessee has given to the principal lessee negotiable notes for the rents accruing from month to month, and that said notes are outstanding in third hands. Tulane Improvement Co. v. W. B. Green Photo Supply Co., 50 South. 601, 602, 124 La. 619.

A person who has stolen money from another, is "indebted" to him within Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 9, § 36, providing that it is necessary to the claim of an attachment that the defendant is bona fide indebted to plaintiff in the sum stated in the affidavit over and above all discounts, etc.; defendant under such circumstances being under a quasi contractual obligation to return the funds so wrongfully taken. Downs v. City of Baltimore, 76 Atl. 861, 865, 111 Md. 674, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 255, 19 Ann. Cas. 644.

A complaint to recover money loaned, alleging the facts as to how the indebtedness arose and specifying the amount thereof, and that no part of the indebtedness has been paid, and that there is now due, owing, and payable by defendant on account of such indebtedness a specified sum, with interest, sufficiently alleges nonpayment. The word "indebtedness" is not here used as it has sometimes been in the body of a pleading, in which the courts have said that it was a conclusion of law. As it is here used, it refers to the sum which it is alleged had been loaned. Samuels v. Larrimore, 104 Pac. 1001, 1002, 11 Cal. App. 337.

A contract of guaranty in one paragraph provided that the "indebtedness" guaranteed was not to exceed $7,000, and in another paragraph the guarantors agreed to pay interest and attorney's fees if the debt was sued on or placed in attorney's hands for collection, but it was not stated that the agreement for interest and attorney's fees was intended to create liability in addition to the $7,000. Held, that the contract, being ambiguous, would be construed in favor of the guarantors, and the word "indebtedness" would be held to include such interest and fees, the entire amount not to exceed $7,000. Hill Mercantile Co. v. Rotan Grocery Co. (Tex.) 127 S. W. 1080, 1082.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2803, providing that one seeking a lien must file a statement within 90 days after the indebtedness shall have accrued, the "indebtedness" is to be deemed as having accrued at the date of the furnishing of the last item originally included in the account and not at the date of the last item which remains unpaid. "A man is in debt when the labor he hires is performed or completed or when the material he purchases is fully furnished and is unpaid for, and his indebtedness accrues at such period." Big Horn Lumber Co. v. Davis, 84 Pac. 900, 904, 14 Wyo. 455, 7 Ann. Cas. 940 (quoting and adopting definition in Bolen Coal Co. v. Ryan, 48 Mo. App. 512).

The term "indebtedness" is a wide one, and must be construed in every case in accordance with its context. Const. art. 10, § 12, providing that no county shall be allowed to become indebted to an amount exceeding, in any year, the income and revenue provided for such year, permits the anticipation of the current revenues to the extent of the year's income in which the debt is contracted or created, but prohibits the anticipation of the revenues of any future years. Where one, without any public letting, written contract, or appropriation, as required by Rev. St. 1899, c. 84, builds a bridge for the county, and the county court issues a warrant for what it conceived to be the reasonable value thereof, the warrant does not constitute a valid indebtedness. Trask v. Livingston County, 109 S. W. 656, 659, 210 Mo. 582, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045.

A policy provided that if any subsequent premium was not paid, and the policy was not surrendered, the insurance, after repayment of any "indebtedness," would be extended without request or demand for a term specified in an accompanying table. A premium note provided that in settlement of any claim or benefit under the policy before the note should become fully paid the amount thereof should be deducted from the amount otherwise payable by the company. Held, that the term "indebtedness," as used in such nonforfeiture provision, did not include premium notes. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Van Meter's Adm'r, 121 S. W. 438, 440, 137 Ky. 4, 136 Am. St. Rep. 282.

Where a policy of insurance provides for the payment of a certain sum upon the death of the insured, less any indebtedness due the company, the "indebtedness" is obviously any actual or real indebtedness that the insured or beneficiary may be liable to the company for when the policy matures, and hence no deduction can be made for deferred premiums, which are neither due nor earned at the time of death. National Life Ass'n of Hartford v. Berkeley, 34 S. E. 469, 97 Va. 571.

Laws 1892, c. 690, § 88, provide that when a life insurance policy which has been in force for three years lapses for nonpayment of premium, the reserve on the policy after deducting any indebtedness of the insured on account of any premium due, etc., shall be applied, either to continue the policy in force at its full amount so long as it will do so, or to purchase whatever amount of paid-up insurance it will. Defendant issued a policy for $5,000 to plaintiff's testator, which provided, in accordance with the statute, that the policy could not be forfeited after it had continued in force for three years, but if premiums subsequently due were not paid, the policy would continue for the full amount for the time stated in the table of the policy, "provided there was no indebtedness against the policy," or the insured, on demand and surrender of policy, would be entitled to paid-up insurance to the amount the premiums paid would purchase. The testator paid the premiums in cash for three years, and gave his note for the fourth premium. The note provided that, unless the interest and premiums were paid, the policy would become forfeited, except as to surrender value, and that in settlement of any claim or benefit under the policy before it was paid, the amount thereof should be deducted. The insured died about eight years after the giving of the note, having paid no part of it except the interest for the first year, nor any further premiums on the policy. Held, that the word "indebtedness," used in the phrase "provided there is no indebtedness against the policy" appearing in the table guaranteeing the continuance of the policy, included any indebtedness against the insured in favor of the insurer, the same as when used in the statute, and that the time the plaintiff's testator was entitled to have the policy continued was to be determined by the amount of premiums he had paid, less the amount of the premium note; and, since the time for which this sum would continue the policy had expired before his death, plaintiff was not entitled to the full amount of the policy, but only the amount of paid-up insurance to which he was entitled under the terms of the policy. Taylor v. New York Life Ins. Co., 90 N. E. 964, 966, 197 N. Y. 324.

Where the by-laws of a beneficial association defined a member in good financial standing, entitled to share in death benefits, as one who was not "indebted" to a subordinate court for fines or assessments or anything else that may be charged against him as dues to an amount equal to six months' dues, the beneficiary of a member was not entitled to recover benefits where he was indebted to an amount exceeding six months' dues, though, in order to make such indebtedness, he was charged with a dollar for lottery tickets issued by the society in connection with a fair, for which he had failed to account. Kelly v. Court R. F. Phelan, No. 122, Foresters of America, 60 Atl. 1022, 1023, 78 Conn. 40.

Of county

A claim for commissions under a contract by which a county listed its school land with a broker for sale for a commission made payable out of the county funds is not a "debt" within Const. art. 11, § 7, forbidding the creation of a debt unless provision is made at the time for its payment, where the claim becomes due in the current year, and the county has ability by taxation to raise the fund for its payment. Foard County v. Sandifer, 151 S. W. 523, 524, 105 Tex. 420; Sandifer v. Foard County (Tex.) 134 S. W. 823, 824.

Under L. O. L. § 6320, authorizing the county court to levy a special tax which shall be set apart as a road fund to be used in the building and improving of public roads and bridges, 50 per cent. to be apportioned to several road districts and the remaining 50 per cent. to be applied to roads as the county court may direct, and in view of section 6366, providing that the county courts of several counties may, in their discretion, apply any moneys in the county treasury toward the expenses of bridges of a county road—a contract for the erection of a bridge, where the necessary funds have been raised by special tax and appropriated therefor, does not create an "indebtedness" within Const. art. 11, § 10, providing that no county shall incur any debts or liabilities which shall singly or in the aggregate exceed the sum of $5,000. Bowers v. Neil, 123 Pac. 433, 436, 64 Or. 104.

Debt due or to become due

An assignment of an insurance policy as collateral security for "indebtedness" covers only a present indebtedness at the time of the assignment, and not indebtedness to be thereafter created. In re De Haven's Estate, 84 Atl. 676, 677, 236 Pa. 146.

"The term 'indebted' means that a complete and absolute liability exists—complete and absolute to the extent that ultimate payment must be made—but it does not necessarily mean that such liability has matured, or that an indebtedness is immediately payable. 'Indebtedness' includes as well obligations which are yet to become due as those which are already matured. So to allege merely that one is indebted, without any statement of facts showing a present right to enforce payment, does not disclose any legal liability, because there may be an existing indebtedness without any liability for present payment." Provident Mut. Building-Loan Ass'n v. Davis, 76 Pac. 1034, 1035, 143 Cal. 253.

Loans to insured

A life policy provided that, if there should be any indebtedness on account of the policy at the time of default in the payment of any premium, the value of the several options of settlement stated in the policy would be correspondingly reduced, and also that the insurer would upon insured's application loan, on the sole security of the policy, 25 per cent. of any or all of the premiums thereunder as they became due, such loans to bear simple interest, but that, in event of insured's death before the expiration of the cumulation period and while the policy was in force, the loan should be void and that the policy should, upon default of payment of premium, be no longer in force unless continued. Insured borrowed on the policy 25 per cent. of the premiums as they became due. Held, that such loans were "indebtedness" on account of the policy within the meaning of the policy, and if it subsequently lapsed for default of payment of a premium, the value of the option of continued insurance would be reduced by the amount of the loans, with interest. Black v. Franklin Life Ins. Co., 67 S. E. 79, 81, 133 Ga. 859.

Of municipalities

"Indebtedness" is a state of being in debt, and a "debt" is defined to be that which one person is bound to pay to another, or an obligation. It is that which is due by express agreement and its definition is not affected by the manner or condition upon which it is to be paid. The purpose of Const. N. Y. art. 8, § 10, limiting the indebtedness of municipalities to a specified per cent. of the assessed valuation of the real estate is to prevent municipalities from improvidently contracting debts for other than ordinary current expenses of administration and to restrict their borrowing capacity, and the provision must be read in its broadest sense, which will give effect to it. Levy v. McClellan, 89 N. E. 569, 574, 196 N. Y. 178.

Const. § 157, provides that no county, city, town, taxing district, or other municipality may become "indebted," to an amount exceeding in any year the income provided for that year, without the assent of the voters at an election. "An obligation payable in future is no less a debt within the meaning of this provision than if payable at once." Ramsey v. City of Shelbyville, 83 S. W. 116, 117, 119 Ky. 180, 68 L. R. A. 300.

Under Const. § 157, prohibiting cities from incurring indebtedness, without the voters' assent, in any one year exceeding the amount of income and revenue provided for that year, "indebtedness" means a liability voluntarily incurred by the city by express contract, which it is bound to pay in money, including known and fixed liabilities, such as official salaries, etc. Overall v. City of Madisonville, 102 S. W. 278-282, 125 Ky. 684, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483.

Where a city, having reached its full debt limit, passed an ordinance for the levy of a 1 per cent. tax for 15 years, for the payment of water bonds to be issued, and provided for the issuance of such bonds, for the payment of which the tax so levied and the income from the waterworks was pledged, the ordinance constituted an increase of the city's debt limit, in violation of Const. art. 9, § 12, providing that no municipal corporation shall become indebted in the aggregate exceeding 5 per cent. of the value of its taxable property, etc., and was therefore void. Village of East Moline v. Pope, 79 N. E. 587, 588, 224 Ill. 386 (citing City of Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626; Law v. People ex rel. Huck, 87 Ill. 385; Howell v. City of Peoria, 90 Ill. 104; Culbertson v. City of Fulton, 18 N. E. 781, 127 Ill. 30; Prince v. City of Quincy, 21 N. E. 768, 128 Ill. 443; City of Chicago v. McDonald, 52 N. E. 982, 176 Ill. 404).

The word "debt" has a well-recognized meaning in law, distinguished from liability for damages. Liability of a city for injury due to failure to keep its streets in repair is not a "debt," within Const. art. 10, §§ 11, 12, limiting the rate of taxes in cities of the third class and prohibiting them to incur in one year an indebtedness in excess of the revenue to be derived from the taxes for that year. Those sections apply only to indebtedness arising ex contractu. Conner v. City of Nevada, 86 S. W. 256, 257, 188 Mo. 148, 107 Am. St. Rep. 314 (citing 13 Cyc. p. 393 et seq.; Smith, Mun. Corp. §§ 4-6; City of Galveston v. Posnainsky, 62 Tex. 118, 50 Am. Rep. 517; Dill. Mun. Corp. [4th Ed.] § 996 et seq.).

A contract providing for the construction of a courthouse and jail, and the payment of an annual rental, pursuant to Laws 1897, p. 256, c. 32, art. 8, § 2, providing for the construction of courthouses and jails on the annual rental plan, etc., does not create an "indebtedness," within Act Cong. July 30, 1886, c. 818, § 4 (24 Stat. 171), providing that no political or municipal corporation in any of the territories of the United States shall become indebted for any purpose including existing indebtedness exceeding a specified sum. Giles v. Dennison, 78 Pac. 174, 178, 15 Okl. 55.

Act Aug. 14, 1909 (Laws 1909, p. 534), providing for annexation to Atlanta of the town of Oakland City, and that Atlanta shall assume the indebtedness of such town and all its property, does not cause the incurring of a new debt in violation of Civ. Code 1895, § 5897, providing that municipal corporations shall not "incur any debt" until provision therefor shall have been made by the municipal government. White v. City of Atlanta, 68 S. E. 103, 104, 134 Ga. 532.

The issuance of obligations by a municipality payable out of particular fund creates an indebtedness in the constitutional sense, if the fund is an existing, established income belonging to the municipality. An obligation to pay with an income of property already owned by a city is not different from an obligation to pay with any other funds, so far as the question whether the transaction amounts to a debt is concerned. Schnell v. City of Rock Island, 83 N. E. 462, 464, 232 Ill. 89, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 874.

A note given by a city, payable within the year of its execution, is not a "debt," within a constitutional provision that no debt shall be created by a city, unless provision be made for a sinking fund therefor. City of Cleburne v. Gutta Percha & Rubber Mfg. Co. (Tex.) 127 S. W. 1072, 1073.

Where a city took proceedings to improve a street, the cost to be paid, two-thirds from assessments on abutting property and one-third by city bonds, that a part of the assessments levied were uncollectible did not require that the city foresee such event, and treat the uncollectible portion as a "debt," within Const. art. 11, § 5, providing that no debt shall ever be created by any city, unless at the same time provision is made to assess and annually collect a sufficient sum to pay the interest thereon and create a sinking fund of at least 2 per cent. City of Beaumont v. Masterson (Tex.) 142 S. W. 984, 987.

The purpose of Const. art. 8, § 10, limiting the indebtedness of municipalities to a specified per cent. of the assessed valuation of the real estate, is to prevent municipalities from improvidently contracting debts for other than ordinary current expenses of administration, and to restrict their borrowing capacity, and the provision must be read in its broadest sense which will give effect to it, and the word "indebtedness" in the Constitution must be defined as a state of being in debt, and a "debt" as that which is due by express agreement, unaffected by the manner or condition on which it is to be paid. Levy v. McClellan, 89 N. E. 569, 574, 196 N. Y. 178.

* Same—Contracts for future service

A contract between a city and a water company, obligating the city to pay a yearly amount for water service for a period of 20 years, did not create a "debt" as to undue installments, within the constitutional provision prohibiting the incurring of debts beyond a certain limit. Columbia Ave. Sav- ings Fund, Safe Deposit, Title & Trust Co. v. Dawson, 130 Fed. 152, 172.

A municipality may legally contract for the future supply of water at an annual rental, though the aggregate of the rentals will exceed the statutory limitation of indebtedness, being a contract for future indebtedness to be incurred, provided the contracting party perform the agreement out of which the debt may arise, not being a "debt" within the meaning of the limitation. City of Joseph v. Joseph Waterworks Co., 111 Pac. 864, 865, 57 Or. 586.

The word "debt," when used in a popular sense, means that which is due from one person to another, whether money, goods, or service; but the word "debt," within Const. art. 10, § 12, providing that no county, city, town, etc., shall be allowed to become indebted in any manner or for any purpose to an amount including existing indebtedness in the aggregate exceeding 5 per cent. of the value of the taxable property therein, etc., must be restricted to mean a promise by the municipality, grounded in a valid consideration to pay to some person a sum of money now due and payable, or to become due and payable at a future day. A city, purchasing the waterworks of a company supplying it and its inhabitants with water, and paying therefor a specified sum in cash, and agreeing to pay an additional sum in equal semiannual installments, secured by revenues arising from water service to private consumers, does not become indebted to the company within the Constitution. State ex rel. Smith v. City of Neosho, 101 S. W. 99, 107, 208 Mo. 40.

A contract by which a city agrees to pay a company for furnishing light at a certain amount monthly, in valid warrants, creates an "indebtedness," within a charter provision limiting its indebtedness to a certain amount. Brockway v. City of Roseburg, 79 Pac. 335, 336, 46 Or. 77.

The relation between a city and the owner of an existing telephone franchise being quasi contractual for the performance of a service, an ordinance modifying the terms of the franchise for the purpose of securing more effective service in competition with the owner of another franchise is not invalid, as releasing an "indebtedness" or "liability" to the municipality, in violation of Const. § 52. Louisville Home Tel. Co. v. City of Louisville, 113 S. W. 855, 856, 860, 130 Ky. 611.

A contract obligating a town to pay annual hydrant rentals to fall due in subsequent years does not constitute an "indebtedness then legally incurred," within Rev. St. 1898, § 672, providing that, whenever the county board shall form a new town from parts of a town already organized, it shall determine what portion of the indebtedness then legally incurred by the old town shall be chargeable to the portions detached to form the new town, which shall pay the proportion so declared chargeable. Town of Vaughn v. Town of Montreal, 102 N. W. 561, 124 Wis. 302.

Same—Bonded indebtedness

A "bond" is not an "indebtedness," but is only the evidence or representation of an indebtedness. City of Los Angeles v. Teed, 44 Pac. 580, 582, 112 Cal. 319.

City bonds issued for the purchase of waterworks, and payable out of the general fund, are not part of the "indebtedness" for general and municipal purposes, but constitute a portion of the 5 per cent. additional "indebtedness" allowed by the Constitution for water, light, and sewer purposes, although the city at the time of their issue had not reached the 5 per cent. limit of general indebtedness. Dean v. City of Walla Walla, 92 Pac. 895, 48 Wash. 75, 150.

"Debt" is that which is due from one person to another; that which one person is bound to pay or perform to another. It is a specified sum of money which is due from one person to another, and denotes, not only the obligation of the debtor to pay, but also the right of the creditor to receive and enforce payment. The issue of bonds under Priv. Laws 1906, p. 440, c. 196, providing that they should be paid from the income of city waterworks, and that none of the city's funds raised by taxation should be applied to their payment, was not the contracting of a "debt" by the city, within the meaning of Const. N. C. art. 7, § 7, which declares that no city shall contract any "debt," etc., except on vote of its citizens. Brockenbrough v. Board of Waters Com'rs of City of Charlotte, 46 S. E. 28, 31, 134 N. C. 1 (quoting and adopting Black, Law Dict. 337; State v. Hawes, 112 Ind. 323, 14 N. E. 87).

Under Const. § 158, which prohibits cities of the fourth class from incurring any debt in excess of 5 per cent. of the assessed value of the property therein, estimated by the last assessment, an indebtedness of the school board for its graded school districts is not a part of the "indebtedness" of a city of the fourth class, so as to preclude the issue of bonds voted at an election to an amount within the constitutional limitation of debt. Rash v. City of Madisonville, 146 S. W. 386, 388, 148 Ky. 154.

Const. Iowa, art. 11, § 3, provides that no municipal corporation shall become indebted in any manner or for any purpose to an amount in the aggregate exceeding 5 per cent. of the value of the taxable property within such corporation, to be ascertained by the last state and county tax lists previous to the incurring of such "indebtedness." A city, indebted beyond such limit, passed an ordinance authorizing the issue of negotiable bonds to be sold by the city, and the proceeds used in the construction of a waterworks plant to be owned by the city. The bonds were to be payable at recited times, and to bear interest payable semiannually, and were secured by a mortgage on the water plant. The ordinance levied a sinking fund tax of two mills yearly, until the cost of the plant should be paid, and subjected the proceeds of such tax to the payment of principal and interest, and further provides that there should be levied every year after the construction of the works a water tax of five mills, or so much thereof as might be necessary, together with the net proceeds of the water rents, to pay the cost of maintenance, etc., and to pay any of the purchase price or cost of constructing said works, or bonds or mortgages issued therefor, or interest thereon, which should not be paid from the proceeds of the two mill tax. Any surplus arising from such water tax or water rentals was pledged to the payment of the bonds, and it was provided that no part of the sum, principal or interest, should be paid out of any fund levied or tax other than so provided. Held, that such bonds would create an indebtedness of the city within the meaning of the constitutional provision, and that the city was without power to issue the same. City of Ottumwa v. City Water Supply Co., 119 Fed. 815, 824, 56 C. C. A. 219, 59 L. R. A. 604.

An ordinance provided that a certain firm should construct waterworks, to be completed within six months, issue bonds therefor to the amount of $100,000, mortgage the plant to secure $80,000 of such bonds, and, when completed, lease the works to the city for 20 years, and assign the lease to the mortgagee or a trustee for the benefit of the bondholders; that the city should take possession of the plant, and pay as rental thereon, annually, $7,000 during each of the first four years, $9,000 during each of the next six years, and $10,000 during each of the last ten years; that all sums so paid in excess of the interest on the original cost might, at time of payment, be at once applied on the bonds, all surplus on the sale of bonds, after paying the $80,000 and interest, to apply on payment of the principal sums named in said bonds, to the end that the city should only pay, as rentals, the original cost of the plant, $80,000, and interest; and that, on payment of said sums in the manner provided, the plant should become the property of the city. Held, that such ordinance created an "indebtedness," within Const. art. 11, § 3, as amended in 1874, forbidding municipalities from becoming "indebted in any manner or for any purpose" to any amount, including existing indebtedness, in the aggregate exceeding 5 per cent. on the value of the taxable property therein, etc. Earles v. Wells, 68 N. W. 964, 967, 94 Wis. 285, 59 Am. St. Rep. 886.

Of state

Indebtedness of the state, evidenced by funded debt bonds issued as authorized by St. 1869-70, p. 646, c. 444, under authority of a vote of the people of the state at a general election, is not an "indebtedness of the state," within Const. art. 16, § 1, prohibiting the Legislature from creating debts which shall singly or in the aggregate, with any previous debts or liabilities, exceed the sum of $300,000, etc. Blickerdike v. State, 78 Pac. 270, 276, 144 Cal. 681.

The issuance of a state warrant, where the money is already in the treasury or the tax levy has already been made, with provision for its collection, does not create an "indebtedness" within Const. art. 10, § 29, providing that no bond or evidence of indebtedness of the state shall be valid unless the same shall have indorsed thereon a certificate signed by the Auditor and Attorney General, showing that the bond or evidence of indebtedness is issued pursuant to law, and is within the debt limit. Bryan v. Meneff, 95 Pac. 471, 473, 21 Okl. 1.

The words "debt" and "liability," as used in Const. art. 8, § 1, forbidding the Legislature to create any debt or liability, singly or in the aggregate, exceeding 1½ per cent. of the assessed value of taxable property in the state, are not employed in a technical sense, but have special reference to the basic legislative authority on which a state contract must rest, and in which alone a state debt must find its sanction. Lewis v. Brady, 104 Pac. 900, 901, 17 Idaho, 251, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 149.

Of town

A contract obligating a town to pay annual hydrant rentals to fall due in subsequent years does not constitute an "indebtedness then legally incurred," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1898, § 672, providing that, whenever the county board shall form a new town from parts of a town already organized, it shall determine what portion of the indebtedness then legally incurred by the old town shall be chargeable to the portions detached to form the new town, which shall pay the proportion so declared chargeable. Town of Vaughn v. Town of Montreal, 102 N. W. 561, 124 Wis. 302.

INDEBTEDNESS INCURRED

As damage, see Damage—Damages.

INDECENCY

"Indecency," within Pen. Code 1895, § 390, making it a misdemeanor for any person to practice open lewdness or any notorious act of public indecency tending to debauch the morals, has a somewhat narrower meaning than it has in ordinary popular speech, but is broader in meaning than the phrase "exposure of the person," and a public indecency may be committed without any improper exposure of the human body. Redd v. State, 67 S. E. 709, 7 Ga. App. 575.

INDECENT

The term "indecent" is a common word, which may be assumed to be understood in the common meaning by an ordinary jury without definition. Commonwealth v. Buckley, 86 N. E. 910, 911, 200 Mass. 346, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 225, 128 Am. St. Rep. 425.

Worcester defines "indecent" as something unbecoming; unfit for the eyes or ears. The Century Dictionary defines it as that which is obscene or grossly vulgar; unbecoming; unseemly; violating propriety of language, behavior, etc. The Imperial Dictionary defines it as that which is unbecoming in language, actions, or manners. In the federal court it has been said that the term signifies "more than indelicate and less than immodest"—that it means something unfit for the eye or ear. The word "indecent," as used in Pen. Code, § 317, directed at any one who should give or have in his possession any obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy, "indecent," or disgusting book, pamphlet, newspaper, etc., was used in a limited sense, and falls within the maxim of "noscitur a sociis." In this sense it is directed at things that are lewd, lascivious, and salacious or obscene, and an attack on the confessional, saying: "The open door to hell is the confessional box. It is hell's gate; the mainspring of lust. It is the cesspool, the recipient, the reservoir of lust, of vile thought and communication, adultery, the birthplace of sexual criminality, with men's wives and young girls, and the convent is earth's terminus and hell. The lake of fire is the dumping ground. It is the criminal college; the mother of prostitution; the author of pauperism. From it emanates poison to society, homes, our schools and government"—and more language to the same effect, while unjustifiable, and reprehensible, and libelous, was not "indecent," within the meaning of this statute; the remedy being by proceedings under the statute for libel. People v. Eastman, 81 N. E. 459, 460, 188 N. Y. 478, 11 Ann. Cas. 302.

INDECENT ASSAULT

The acts constituting "indecent assault," under Laws 1905, p. 181, c. 94, § 1 (Rev. St. § 1656), are such as the common sense of society would regard as immodest, immoral, and indecent, and the statute is not void for not defining the acts constituting the offense. Dekelt v. People, 99 Pac. 330, 44 Colo. 525.

INDECENT EXPOSURE

"The words 'indecent exposure' clearly imply that the act is either in the actual presence and sight of others, or is in such a place or under such circumstances that the exhibition is liable to be seen by others, and is presumably made for that purpose, or with reckless and criminal disregard of the decencies of life." State v. Martin, 101 N. W. 637, 638, 125 Iowa, 715.

INDECENT LIBERTIES

An indictment for the crime of taking indecent liberties with or on the person of a female child under the age of consent is not defective because it does not state the particular acts which constitute the alleged indecent liberties. The term "indecent liberties," when used with reference to a woman, old or young, is self-defining; and it would be as unnecessary and as indecent to allege the defendant's particular acts as it would be, if he were charged with rape, or carnally knowing or abusing a female child under the age of consent, to set forth the evidence in the indictment. The term, when used with reference to a female child under the age of consent, is the legal equivalent of an assault or attempt on her person. State v. Kunz, 97 N. W. 131, 132, 90 Minn. 526 (citing State v. West, 40 N. W. 249, 39 Minn. 821).

INDECENT PUBLICATIONS

In Rev. St. § 3893, as amended which declares unmailable "every obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet . . . or other publication of an indecent character," the words "indecent character" qualify only the words "other publication," and taken with them include any publication that is obscene, lewd, or lascivious, and, in an indictment for its violation by mailing of a letter, it is not essential that the letter be described as of an indecent character, in addition to describing it as obscene, lewd, and lascivious. Rinker v. United States, 151 Fed. 755, 758, 81 C. C. A. 379.

Under Pen. Code, § 317, providing that a person who sells, gives away, or shows, etc., any obscene, etc., indecent, or disgusting book, magazine, etc., or any written or printed matter of an indecent character, etc., is guilty of a misdemeanor, a publication in a newspaper attacking the confession of the Roman Catholic church in an unjustifiable and reprehensible manner is not an "indecent" publication. People v. Eastman, 81 N. E. 459, 460, 188 N. Y. 478, 11 Ann. Cas. 302.

INDECENTLY ACTING

"Indecently acting," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 418, relating to the disturbance of public worship, embraces all improper conduct which disturbs a congregation lawfully assembled for divine worship. If a person were to use an oath in church during the progress of the service, so as to distract the attention of any member of the congregation, his conduct would be "indecent" within the statute. Folds v. State, 51 S. E. 305, 307, 123 Ga. 167.

Talking outside of a church where a congregation was lawfully assembled for divine services, which the evidence failed to show was sufficiently loud to disturb such congregation or any member thereof, was not "indecently acting," within Pen. Code, § 418, providing that any person who shall by cursing or using profane or obscene language, or by being intoxicated or otherwise "indecently acting," interrupt or in any manner disturb a religious congregation, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Taylor v. State, 57 S. E. 1049, 1 Ga. App. 539.

INDEFINITE POSTPONEMENT

An "indefinite postponement" of the question before a deliberative body means the suppression of the question, and is equivalent to a negative vote. Wood v. Inhabitants of Milton, 84 N. E. 332, 333, 197 Mass. 531.

INDEMNIFY

To "indemnify" means, according to Cent. Dict., to "secure against loss, to save harmless, to make good, to reimburse." A sheriff accepted a bond to indemnify him against liability for damages sustained by a levy on personal property. The sheriff could not recover on a bond for attorney's fees, incurred in defending an action for conversion of the property levied on, until such fee had been actually paid by him. Cousins v. Paxton & Gallagher Co., 98 N. W. 277, 278, 122 Iowa, 465.

"The use of the word 'indemnify' shows the object and nature of the contract. It was to reimburse or make whole the assured against loss on account of such liability. There can be no reimbursement where there has been no loss." Finley v. United States Casualty Co., 83 S. W. 2, 4, 113 Tenn. 592, 3 Ann. Cas. 962 (quoting Frye v. Bath Gas & Electric Co., 54 Atl. 395, 97 Me. 241, 59 L. R. A. 444, 94 Am. St. Rep. 500).

Where defendant accident insurance company agreed to "indemnify" the insured against loss from common-law or statutory liability for damages on account of bodily injuries caused by the negligence of the insured, it only agreed to reimburse insured for such losses as it was compelled to pay, so that, insured never having been compelled to pay a judgment against it because of insolvency, there was no liability on the part of the insurer to pay the same. Burke v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 652, 653, 47 Misc. Rep. 171.

INDEMNITY

"Indemnity" consists in the obligation or duty resting on one person to make good any loss or damage another has incurred while acting at his request or for his benefit. R. P. Williams & Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 75 S. E. 1067, 1071, 11 Ga. App. 635.

"Indemnity" is defined as an engagement to make good loss that may be sustained." Shaw v. Equitable Mt. Acc. Ass'n, 99 N. W. 672, 673, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 584 (quoting and adopting definition in Weller v. Eames, 15 Minn. 467 [Gil. 383], 2 Am. Rep. 150).

"Indemnity" is that which is given to a person to prevent his suffering damage. Ordinary of State v. Connolly, 72 Atl. 363, 864, 75 N. J. Eq. 521, 138 Am. St. Rep. 577.

"Indemnity" means reimbursement, making good, recompense for loss or injury. Rogers v. Shawnee Fire Ins. Co. of Topeka, Kan., 111 S. W. 592, 593, 182 Mo. App. 275.

A stipulation in a note to pay ten per cent. for attorney's fees, is a contract of "indemnity," and not a penalty. Brown v. Gatewood (Tex.) 150 S. W. 950, 954.

The difference between a contract of "indemnity" and a contract to pay a legal liability of another is that on the contract of indemnity an action cannot be brought and a recovery had until the liability is discharged, while upon the other the cause of action is complete when the liability attaches. Poe v. Philadelphia Casualty Co., 84 Atl. 476, 479, 118 Md. 347.

Civ. Code, § 1959, defines "indemnity" as a contract by which one agrees to save another from a legal consequence of the conduct of one of the parties or of some other person. Section 1965, subd. 4, provides that the person indemnifying is bound on request of the person indemnified to defend actions brought against the person indemnified, and subdivision 5 provides that, if after request the person indemnifying neglects to defend the person indemnified, a recovery against the person indemnifying suffered by him in good faith is conclusive in his favor against the person indemnifying. Held, that the statute applies to one indemnifying against liability of bail in a criminal action, and where persons indemnifying the surety on a bail bond, after notice to them and demand that they appear and defend an action on the bond brought against the surety failed to do so, such indemnifiers in an action on their indemnity bond by the surety on the bail bond could not set up the defense that the surety on the bail bond was released from liability because the person for whom the bail bond was given had been released from the immediate custody of the officer. Western Surety Co. v. Kelley, 131 N. W. 808, 810, 27 S. D. 465.

A contract of "indemnity" executed by a contractor for the erection of a public schoolhouse with his surety is an original undertaking to make good a future loss or damage, and no action lies on such a contract until after a loss or damage had been sustained, and there is no obligation to pay any part of a debt due to a third person, and therefore no personal warranty within Code Proc. art. 379. Bain v. Arthur, 55 South. 743, 129 La. 143.

Certificates of deposit, delivered in execution of a provision in a charter party for a deposit in guaranty of insurance, which declare the object of the deposit to be "to indemnify you in case of loss of the cargo," etc., constitute an agreement to indemnify against the loss of the cargo, and not an agreement of insurance, and such loss would be the value of the cargo at its destination less the cost of delivery there, and, where this amount is greater than the fund on deposit the entire fund is applicable to the "indemnity." Leonard v. Bosch, 68 Atl. 56, 73 N. J. Eq. 438.

A provision, in a note sued on, for payment of 10 per cent. attorney's fees in case of collection by attorney, is a contract of "indemnity," so that, where the holder had not agreed with his attorneys on the amount to be paid for their services in collecting the note, he was limited to a recovery under such provision of the reasonable value of their services. Texas Land & Loan Co. v. Robertson, 85 S. W. 1020, 1021, 88 Tex. Civ. App. 521.

The "fine" contemplated in Rev. St. 1898, §§ 3495, 3496, providing that, if one is guilty of civil contempt, the court shall impose a fine, or imprisonment, or both, and that if an actual loss or injury has been produced the court shall order a sufficient sum to be paid by the defendant to such party to indemnify him and to satisfy his costs and expenses, instead of imposing a fine, was not intended to cover only the "indemnity" to the injured party, but the provisions "clearly warrant the imposition of a fine or imprisonment, or both, in cases where no actual loss or injury is shown; that in case of actual loss or injury resulting from the alleged misconduct, instead of imposing a fine, a sum is to be ordered paid to him to indemnify for such loss or injury; and when a fine is imposed it is in the nature of a penalty." Emerson v. Huss, 106 N. W. 518, 522, 127 Wis. 215.

An undertaking given by defendant on conviction for failure to support his wife and children, pursuant to Greater New York Charter (Laws 1897, p. 239, c. 378) § 685 et seq., which calls for the payment of a weekly sum for one year thereafter for the support of defendant's wife and children, is intended to provide for "indemnity" only; and, where no public money has been disbursed on their behalf, no recovery can be had under it as a penalty to punish wrongdoing. Goetting v. Normoyle, 103 N. Y. Supp. 881, 882, 119 App. Div. 143.

A life insurance policy is not a contract of "indemnity," but is a contract to pay money upon the death of the assured, in consideration of certain payments made during life. Wayland v. Western Life In- demnity Co., 148 S. W. 626, 630, 166 Mo. App. 221; Reed v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc., 82 N. E. 734, 736, 190 N. Y. 111.

A life insurance policy is not merely a contract of "indemnity." It is a contract to pay to the beneficiary a sum certain in the event of death. Keckley v. Oshocton Glass Co., 99 N. E. 299, 300, 86 Ohio St. 213, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 607.

"Insurance" is a contract by which one party, in consideration of a price paid adequate to the risk, becomes security to the other that he may not suffer loss, prejudice, or damage by the happening of the perils specified to certain things which may be exposed to them. The ingredients of the contract are the consideration, the risk, and the indemnity. The "consideration" is the premium for the insurer's undertaking; the "risk," the perils or contingencies against which the assured is protected; and the "indemnity," the stipulated desideratum to be paid to the assured in case he has suffered loss or damage through the perils or contingencies specified. Physicians' Defense Co. v. Cooper, 199 Fed. 576, 578, 118 O. C. A. 50.

INDENTURE

An allegation that a demise was by "indenture" implies a seal. Morrill v. Baggott, 57 Ill. App. 530, 532.

INDEPENDENCE

INDEPENDENT ADVICE

By force of the rule of independent advice, if a person upon whom another has in fact come to be dependent accepts a gift from such dependent person of all of her or his estate, a court of equity, moved by the apparent improvidence of such gift, casts upon the donee the burden of showing that the donor had the benefit of proper independent advice. Proper "independent advice" in this connection means showing that the donor had the benefit of conferring fully and privately upon the subject of his intended gift with a person who was not only competent to inform correctly as to its legal effect, but who was furthermore so disassociated from the interests of the donee as to be in a position to advise with the donor impartially and confidently as to the consequences to himself of his proposed benefaction. Post v. Hagan, 65 Atl. 1026, 1027, 71 N. J. Eq. 234, 124 Am. St. Rep. 997.

INDEPENDENT AGREEMENT

"Whether a given stipulation is to be deemed a 'condition precedent,' a 'condition subsequent,' or an 'independent agreement' is purely a question of intent; and the intention must be determined by considering, not only the words of the particular clause, but also the language of the whole contract, as well as the nature of the act required and the subject-matter to which it relates." Skowhegan Water Co. v. Skowhegan Village Corp., 66 Atl. 714, 716, 102 Me. 323.

INDEPENDENT BODY

Where a body of independent voters entertain the same political views, and desire to nominate a complete ticket of candidates favorable to those views, the persons executing the certificates are to be regarded as one and the same "independent body," and are entitled to have their candidates for various offices under one title and emblem on the official ballot. In re Wise, 95 N. Y. Supp. 843, 108 App. Div. 52.

INDEPENDENT CONTEMPT

A proceeding in a divorce suit to compel defendant husband to pay delinquent alimony is not a proceeding for an "independent contempt," within Rem. & Bal. Code, § 1054, and hence need not be prosecuted in the name of the state. McGill v. McGill, 121 Pac. 469, 67 Wash. 303.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACT

Contract distinguished from separate contracts, see Contract.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR

An "independent contractor" is one who, exercising an independent employment, contracts to do a piece of work according to his own methods, and without being subject to the control of his employer except as to the result of the work. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Bennett, 128 Pac. 705, 706, 36 Okl. 358 (quoting 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3542); Pottorff v. Fidelity Coal Mining Co., 122 Pac. 120, 122, 86 Kan. 774; Harmon v. Ferguson Contracting Co., 74 S. E. 632, 634, 159 N. C. 22; Johnson v. Carolina, C. & O. R. Co., 72 S. E. 1057, 1058, 157 N. C. 382; Francis v. Johnson, 101 N. W. 878, 879, 127 Iowa, 391 (citing Humpton v. Unterkircher, 68 N. W. 776, 97 Iowa, 509; Hughbanks v. Boston Inv. Co., 60 N. W. 640, 92 Iowa, 267; Overhouser v. American Cereal Co., 92 N. W. 74, 118 Iowa, 417); Alabama Western R. Co. v. Talley-Bates Const. Co., 50 South. 341, 344, 162 Ala. 396; Pearson v. M. M. Potter Co., 101 Pac. 681, 682, 10 Cal. App. 245; Alexander v. R. A. Sherman's Sons Co., 85 Atl. 514, 515, 86 Conn. 292.

An "independent contractor" is one who renders services in the course of his occupation, representing the will of his employer only as to the result of his work, and not as to the means by which it is accomplished. McGrath v. City of St. Louis, 114 S. W. 611, 617, 215 Mo. 191; O'Hara v. Laclede Gas-light Co., 110 S. W. 642, 643, 131 Mo. App. 428 (quoting and adopting definition in Crenshaw v. Ullman, 20 S. W. 1078, 113 Mo. 639); Stephenville, N. & S. T. Ry. Co. v. Couch, 121 S. W. 189, 190, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 336.

An "independent contractor" is one who is independent of his employer in the doing of his work, and may work when and how he prefers. Messmer v. Bell & Coggeshall Co., 117 S. W. 846, 848, 183 Ky. 19, 19 Ann. Cas. 1.

An "independent contractor" is one who carries on an independent business, and in the line of his business is employed to do a job of work, and in doing it does not act under the directions and control of his employer, but determines for himself in what manner the work shall be done. Keys v. Second Baptist Church, 59 Atl. 446, 447, 99 Me. 308.

An "independent contractor" is one who in rendering service represents the will of his employer only as to results, and not as to the means of doing the work; the test being whether the employer reserved control over him as to the manner of doing the work. Kipp v. Oyster, 114 S. W. 538, 540, 133 Mo. App. 711.

"An 'independent contractor' is one who, in rendering services, exercises an independent employment or occupation, and represents his employer only as to the results of his work, and not as to the means whereby it is to be accomplished." Green v. Soule, 78 Pac. 337, 339, 145 Cal. 96.

For one to be an "independent contractor" he must be free from the control of his employer, and free to do the work he is employed to do in his own way without directions, orders, let, or hindrance from his employer, being responsible to him only for the result. Moore & Savage v. Kopplin (Tex.) 185 S. W. 1083, 1089.

An "independent contractor" is one who contracts to perform services for another independent of the employer in all that pertains to the execution of the work, and who is subordinate to the employer only in effecting a result in accordance with the employer's designs. Patton-Worsham Drug Co. v. Drennon (Tex.) 123 S. W. 705, 708 (citing definition in Cooley, Torts [3d Ed.] 1098).

"One who, as an independent business, undertakes to do specific jobs of work, without submitting himself to control as to the petty details, is an 'independent contractor.'" Carlson v. Stocking, 65 N. W. 58, 59, 91 Wis. 482.

"An 'independent contractor' may be defined as one who, in the course of an independent occupation, prosecutes and directs the work himself, using his own method to accomplish it, and representing the will of the company only as to the result of his work." St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Gillihan, 92 S. W. 793, 77 Ark. 551.

The test oftenest resorted to as to whether one is an employé or an "independent contractor" is the ascertainment of whether the employé represents the master as to the result of the work or only as to the means. If only as to the result, and in the employment of the means he acts entirely independent of the master, he must be regarded as an "independent contractor." Overhouser v. American Cereal Co., 92 N. W. 74, 75, 118 Iowa, 417.

An "independent contractor" is one who, carrying on an independent business, contracts to do a piece of work according to his own methods, and without being subject to the control of his employer as to the means by which the result shall be accomplished, but only as to the result, and the test of the relationship is the right of control by the employer. Glover v. Richardson & Elmer Co., 116 Pac. 861, 863, 64 Wash. 403.

One who contracts to do a specific piece of work, furnishing his own assistants and executing the work either entirely in accordance with his own ideas or in accordance with a plan previously given to him, without being subject to the order of the employer in respect to the details of the work, is an "independent contractor," and not a servant. Lingquist v. Hodges, 94 N. E. 94, 99, 248 Ill. 491; Id., 152 Ill. App. 491.

One contracting to do certain work according to plans and specifications prepared by the contractee, but who exercises full control as to the method of doing the work, save that it must be up to a certain standard, is an "independent contractor," for whose actions the contractee is not liable, though he exercises some supervision over the work, to see that it is done according to contract. Denny v. City of Burlington, 70 S. E. 1085, 1086, 155 N. C. 83.

One employed under an entire contract for a gross sum to do a specified thing, and who is not subject to the direction of his employer, is an "independent contractor." Where the person employed by defendant to plow a field was not hired to plow any specific number of acres at the rate per acre fixed upon, but could quit when he chose, and defendant could terminate the employment at any time, the plower was not an independent contractor. Cockran v. Rice, 128 N. W. 583, 585, 26 S. D. 393, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 570.

An "independent contractor" is one who contracts to do a specific piece of work, furnishing his own assistants and executing the work either entirely in accordance with his own ideas or with a plan previously given him by the person for whom the work is done, without being subject to the latter's orders in regard to the details, and where a contract for the erection of a building provided that the contractor should deliver a completed work, was to furnish and did furnish his own assistants, was not subject to the direction of the company for whom it was built as to the details, and the company never in fact sought to direct the work or control or select his assistants, he was an "independent contractor" rather than an agent; other facts in regard to the contract being consistent with either relation. Edmundson v. Coca-Cola Co. (Tex.) 150 S. W. 273, 274.

Taking the expression "an independent contractor," within the popular understanding which the words import, it is wholly descriptive. The expression serves merely to point out one of a class, and, when so used, it may be conceded that no words of definition are needed. But in the law of negligence the expression is used, not merely in a descriptive sense, but as well to designate a relationship, in the presence of which, when established, the law undertakes to prescribe distinctive rights and liabilities. It is for the court, then, as a matter of law, to define the relationship, and for the jury to make finding of the fact as to its existence. Overhouser v. American Cereal Co., 105 N. W. 113-115, 128 Iowa, 580.

The relation of master and servant does not exist between an employer and the servants of an "independent contractor," who is defined to be one who contracts to do a specific piece of work, furnishing his own assistants and executing the work either entirely in accordance with his own ideas or in accordance with a plan previously given to him by the person for whom the work is done, without being subject to the orders of the latter in respect to the details of the work. Mason & Hoge Co. v. Highland (Ky.) 116 S. W. 320, 322.

Instructions were held to have properly defined an "independent contractor" as follows: "Where one employs a mechanic or other person to perform a piece of work, and does not undertake to direct how or in what manner it is to be done, but vests in the mechanic power to perform the work as he pleases and in his own way, without direction, restraint, or control of the superior or master, the employer is not responsible for the employe's negligence, if he be negligent." "If one renders service in the course of an occupation, representing the will of his employer only as to the results of his work, and not as to the means by which it is accomplished, it is an independent employment." Karl v. Juniata County, 56 Atl. 78, 80, 206 Pa. 633.

"Generally speaking an 'independent contractor' is one who, in rendering services, exercises an independent employment or occupation, and represents his employer only as to the 'results' of his work, and not as to the means whereby it is to be accomplished. The word 'results,' however, is used in this connection in the sense of a production or product of some sort, and not of a service. * * * A reservation by the employer of the right by himself or his agent to supervise the work for the purpose merely of determining whether it is being done in conformity to the contract does not affect the independence of the relation." A contractor with a city for the construction of a street improvement is an independent contractor, though the city engineer has the right to superintend the work, and discharge incompetent employes of the contractor; and an employe of the contractor is not a servant of the city, so as to render it liable for an injury received by him while at work in a dangerous place. Engler v. City of Seattle, 82 Pac. 136, 138, 40 Wash. 72 (citing Casement v. Brown, 13 Sup. Ct. 672, 148 U. S. 622, 37 L. Ed. 582; Rogers v. Florence R. Co., 9 S. E. 1059, 31 S. C. 378; City of Erie v. Caulkins, 85 Pa. 247, 27 Am. Rep. 644; Kelly v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 11 N. Y. 432).

Generally speaking, an "independent contractor" is one who, in rendering service, exercises an independent employment or occupation, and represents his employer only as to the results of the work, and not as to the means by which it is to be accomplished. The word "results," however, is used in this connection in the sense of a production or product of some sort, and not of a service. Where a contract for work on a building reserves to the owner no more right of supervision and control, through its architect of the work, than to see that it is done in accordance with the requirements of the contract, it involves no control over the method of doing the work, so that the contractor is an independent contractor. Smith v. Humphreysville, 104 S. W. 495, 496, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 140.

An "independent contractor," within the rule as to liability for torts committed by such contractor, is one who renders service in the course of an occupation, representing the will of his employer only as to the result of his work, and not as to the means by which it is accomplished. In every case the question is: Had the defendant the right to control in the given particular the conduct of the person doing the wrong? Does he reserve to himself the essential powers of a master? The true test to determine whether one who renders service to another does so as a contractor is to ascertain whether he renders the service in the course of an independent occupation, representing the will of his employer only as to the result of his work, and not as to the means by which it is accomplished. On this question the contract under which the work has been done is conclusive in every case, reference being had, of course, to surrounding circumstances. A reservation by the employer of the right to supervise the work for the purpose merely of determining whether it is being done in conformity to the contract does not affect the independence of the relation. Anderson v.

Tug River Coal & Coke Co., 53 S. E. 713, 715, 59 W. Va. 301.

An "independent contractor" is one who undertakes to produce a given result, but so that in the actual execution of the work he is not under the order or control of the person for whom he does it, and may use his own discretion in things not specified. Defendant made a contract with F. by which he was to cut and remove certain trees, and agreed to furnish him a locomotive, logging cars, horses, etc., and pay him a certain price per 1,000 for all timber logged. F. was to have full and complete control over the cutting, getting out, and shipping of the lumber, and the contract expressly provided that he was to do the work as an independent contractor. Held, that the contract, if made in good faith, and not for the mere purpose of avoiding responsibility, constituted F. an "independent contractor." Young v. Fossburg Lumber Co., 60 S. E. 654, 656, 147 N. C. 26 (quoting and adopting the definition in Pollock, Torts, 78; Barrows, Neg. 160).

An "independent contractor" is one who, exercising an independent employment, contracts to do a piece of work according to his own methods and without being subject to control of his employer, except as to the result of his work. A construction company, under contract to construct a railroad bed, let a contract for grading a part of the road to a contractor, who sublet a part of it to a third person under a contract requiring the work to be performed under the supervision of the engineer of the construction company, who was empowered to discharge employees of the third person, and to notify him to increase the force of men, if necessary, and authorizing the contractor to cancel the contract, and requiring the third person to save the contractor harmless from all damages that might be caused to the third person during the prosecution of the work, and giving the option to the contractor to pay directly to the laborers employed by the third person the wages due them. Held, that the contract between the contractor and the third person did not create the relation of master and servant, but the third person was an independent contractor, and his employees could not, on receiving injuries, sue the contractor therefor. Good v. Johnson, 88 Pac. 439, 440, 38 Colo. 440, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896 (quoting and adopting definition in Powell v. Virginia Const. Co., 13 S. W. 691, 88 Tenn. 692, 17 Am. St. Rep. 925, and citing Humpton v. Unterkircher, 66 N. W. 776, 97 Iowa, 509; 1 Thompson, Comm. Neg. § 622; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. (5th Ed.) § 164 et seq.).

An "independent contractor" is one who renders service in the course of an occupation, representing the will of his employer only as to the result of his work, and not as to the means by which it is accomplished. One who had some little experience, but no regular vocation, in breaking horses, and who agreed, as the result of a casual solicitation of employment, to break a horse, he taking the horse and driving the same during the daytime, but returning it to the owner's stable at night, was not, as a matter of law, an independent contractor. Mullich v. Brocker, 97 S. W. 549, 551, 119 Mo. App. 332 (citing Gayle v. Missouri Car & Foundry Co., 76 S. W. 992, 177 Mo. loc. cit. 446).

"An 'independent contractor' is one who, in rendering services, exercises an independent employment or occupation, and represents his employer only as to the results of his work, and not as to the means by which it is accomplished." Where a railroad company induced the sheriff of a county to appoint a deputy to be stationed at a railroad yard, and the company paid the deputy by monthly checks to the sheriff, who assigned them to the deputy, and the services actually performed by the deputy were for the private benefit of the company, and the deputy, while ejecting trespassers from the company's land, shot one of them, the liability of the company for the act of the deputy was for the jury. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Parsons (Tex.) 109 S. W. 240, 246 (citing in support of definition Jensen v. Barbour, 89 Pac. 906, 15 Mont. 582).

"An 'independent contractor' is one who renders a service in the course of an occupation, representing the will of his employer only as to the result of his work, and not as to the means by which it is accomplished." A corporation, which constructed a hotel, hired and discharged its employees at will, pursued its own methods, and was not subject to the control of the employers, except as to the results of the work, was clearly an independent contractor. Scharff v. Southern Illinois Const. Co., 92 S. W. 126, 129, 115 Mo. App. 157.

A man who owned a team, wagons, and a plow, with which he worked by the day for different employers as he could obtain work, earning usually from $9 to $15 per week, and working alone when he could not find work for his team, was not an "independent contractor," but a "wage-earner," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4, cl. "b," and was not subject to be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. In re Yoder, 127 Fed. 894, 895.

One who contracts to sink a well at an agreed price per foot if he procures a supply of water and not to be paid if he fails to do so, using his own materials and machinery, and furnishing his own labor, is an "independent contractor." Westover v. Hoover, 129 N. W. 285, 286, 88 Neb. 201.

As affecting liability for injury to a hod carrier, one employed by the owner to construct the brickwork in a building according to an architect's plans and specifications was an "independent contractor," where he employed the labor and his compensation was based on the number of brick laid, though the owner paid the workmen direct, and representatives of the owner frequently inspected the building in controlling the carpenters who were employed by the owner by the day. Bellamy v. F. A. Ames Co., 180 S. W. 980, 982, 140 Ky. 98.

While the grantee of a license in a public street ordinarily is not protected by the doctrine of "independent contractor," yet, if the injury is one which bears no causal connection with the license, the defense of independent contractor may be successfully interposed. Peoria, B. & C. Traction Co. v. O'Connor, 149 Ill. App. 598, 602.

Defendant, the lessee of a building, desiring alterations, procured plans which were approved by the city building bureau, and a permit was granted thereon to the contractor. The contract stipulated that the contractor should provide all materials and perform all work required by the drawings and specifications prepared by the architects. The contract provided that the work should be done under the direction of the architects acting as counsel for the lessees, etc.; that the decision of the architects as to the true intent of the drawings and specifications should be final; and that the contractor should bear all loss or damage from accidents which might occur to neighboring property or persons during the progress of the work, whether from accidents or carelessness on his part or on the part of his representatives, until possession was taken by the owner. Held, that the contractor was an "independent contractor," and that the lessee not having interfered with the work either by itself or its architect, was not liable for the death of a servant of a subcontractor caused by the collapse of a building due to the negligent manner in which the work was performed. United Gas Improvement Co. v. Larsen, 182 Fed. 620, 621, 105 C. C. A. 486.

Where charterers of a steamship regularly employed stevedores for unloading cargoes and paid them a regular contract price by the ton, with extra charge for tiering above the ordinary height, and the work was done by the men of the stevedores under the supervision of a foreman employed by them, the stevedores were "independent contractors," though the charterers' clerk was present to keep track of the work and give directions where to put the cargo. Vogemann v. American Dock & Trust Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 741, 743, 131 App. Div. 216.

One contracting with a competent person exercising an independent employment to do a piece of work not in itself unlawful, or of such a nature that it is likely to become a nuisance, or to subject third persons to danger, according to the contractor's own methods, and without being subject to control, except as to the result of the work, is not answerable for the wrong of the contractor or his servants in the prosecution of the work. One who contracts to do a specific piece of work, furnish his own assistants in executing the work, either entirely in accordance with his own ideas or in accordance with the plan previously given him, and without being subject to the orders of the one for whom the work is done as to the details of the work, is an "independent contractor" and not a servant. Peters v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 131 S. W. 917, 921, 150 Mo. App. 721.

Contractors employed to construct a railway bridge, furnishing the necessary labor and materials, and receiving a fixed percentage of the actual costs as their compensation, are "independent contractors," for whose negligence, and for whose foreman's negligence, whereby one of their employes was injured, the railway company was not liable. Campbell v. Jones, 110 Pac. 1083, 1084, 60 Wash. 265.

Defendant was in plaintiff's employ under a contract by which he agreed to do such editorial work for plaintiff as it might request of him, and to devote his whole time during plaintiff's regular office hours to the work. Plaintiff was to be the sole owner of the copyrights on all articles prepared by defendant under the contract, and he prepared manuscript for two legal treatises, taking the matter from plaintiff's publications and preparing it with the aid of plaintiff's library, stenographers, typewriters, and using plaintiff's supplies, fixtures, and appliances in his work. Under the contract, his compensation was based upon the number of pages of his contributions accepted by plaintiff. Plaintiff refused to accept and pay for the two treatises. Held, that defendant was not an "independent contractor," even if not in the ordinary sense a servant. Edward Thompson Co. v. Clark, 109 N. Y. Supp. 700, 702.

An employment will be considered independent when the contractor renders service in the course of his occupation representing the will of his employer only as to the result of the work, and not as to the means by which it is accomplished, but when the work is done by the means contemplated by the contract of employment, and the contractor performs the same strictly as directed by the employer, the latter cannot escape liability for the employee's negligence by a plea that the employee was an "independent contractor." Drennon v. Patton-Worsham Drug Co. (Tex.) 109 S. W. 218, 219.

Where defendant operated a lath mill through a contract with T., by which T. was to receive 75 cents per 1,000 lath produced, and was to employ other men, whom defendant was to pay out of the 75 cents per 1,000, T. to receive the balance, if any, and plaintiff was employed by T. to work in the mill, T. was not an "independent contractor," but an agent of defendant, acting in its behalf, and the relation of master and servant existed between plaintiff and defendant. Barclay v. Puget Sound Lumber Co., 93 Pac. 430, 431, 48 Wash. 241, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140.

If contractors acted under defendant's direction in repairing her sidewalk, they were not independent contractors, so as to relieve her from liability for their negligence; an "independent contractor" being one employed to perform work, the details of which are completely within his control. Kampmann v. Rothwell, 107 S. W. 120, 122.

A contract between a railroad company and railroad contractors for the reduction of grades and taking out of curves on a section of the road provided that the contractors were to furnish the requisite laborers, tools, engines, and machinery, which labor, tools etc., were to be furnished and the work to be done to the satisfaction of the railroad company's engineer; that the engineer could make any alteration deemed necessary in the plan of the work, and should decide on the quality and quantity of the work done; that no part of the contract should be transferred without his consent, and that the contractors should discharge any person at his direction; that if it appeared to the engineer that the work would not be completed within the specified time, he could employ additional laborers and charge the amount paid them to the contractors; and that the railroad company should furnish necessary rails, switches, etc., for temporary track, without charge. Held, that under the contract the relation of the railroad contractors to the railroad company was that of "independent contractors." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cheatham, 100 S. W. 902, 905, 118 Tenn. 160 (citing Rogers v. Florence R. Co., 9 S. E. 1059, 31 S. C. 378; Elliot v. R. R. § 1063; Powell v. Virginia Const. Co., 18 S. W. 692, 88 Tenn. 695, 17 Am. St. Rep. 925; Thomp. Neg. 909).

One contracting to cut for another his timber into saw logs, and deliver the logs over tram roads built at his own expense, to load a specified number of feet per day for each working day, to cut the timber in workmanlike manner, to pay for any delays, resulting from a failure to securely load the logs, etc., for a specified sum per M. feet, for merchantable logs, cut, hauled, and delivered, is an "independent contractor," within the definition that an independent contractor is one who undertakes to produce a given result, but so that, in the actual execution of the work, he is not under the order or control of persons for whom he does it, and he uses his own discretion in things not specified. Gay v. Roanoke R. & Lumber Co., 62 S. E. 436, 438, 148 N. C. 386.

Defendant is not liable for the negligence of the driver of a truck of a firm of contractors engaged exclusively in the trucking business for defendant—the firm being paid by the month, according to the number of trucks employed, a certain amount for each kind of truck, extra trucks needed being furnished at a certain amount per day, all the equipment for the business being owned by the contractors, all workmen engaged in hauling being paid by the contractors, and they and their foreman being the only persons exercising the power to employ or discharge such workmen; and this, though defendant's shipping clerk gave directions as to where goods should be taken, and skids on the side of the truck bore defendant's name. Cohen v. Western Electric Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 525, 526, 50 Misc. Rep. 660.

A cotton compress company was an "independent contractor," where it provided its own platform, its own machinery, its own employes, and determined for itself the manner and time of preparing the cotton it was pressing for shipment. Arthur v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 139 Fed. 127, 132, 71 C. C. A. 391.

Property owners working on a city street in front of their properties under an ordinance are not "independent contractors," over whom the municipal authorities have no control. Meyers v. City of Philadelphia, 66 Atl. 251, 252, 217 Pa. 159, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 678.

A company having a contract to erect and remove signs on defendant's building, selecting its own time, tools, and employes to remove a sign without consulting defendant, was an "independent contractor"; and hence defendant is not liable for injury to a pedestrian caused by any negligence of the company's employe, who, while removing a sign, fell from a ladder upon a pedestrian on the sidewalk below. Press v. Penny, 114 S. W. 74, 76, 134 Mo. App. 121.

INDEPENDENT COVENANT

See Dependent Covenant.

Whether a covenant is "dependent" or "independent" depends on the intention of the parties. Where a covenant goes only to a part of the consideration on both sides, and a breach may be compensated for any damages, it is generally considered independent. Lincoln Trust Co. v. Nathan, 74 S. W. 1007, 1010, 175 Mo. 32.

In determining whether covenants in a contract are dependent or independent, the intention of the parties must govern, to be determined according to the ordinary rules of construction. Where a breach of a covenant in a contract may be fully compensated by payment of damages, it will be held an "independent covenant," but, if it cannot be so compensated, it is dependent, and performance is a condition precedent which must be shown before recovery can be had upon the contract. Daly v. City of Carthage, 128 S. W. 265, 267, 143 Mo. App. 564.

INDEPENDENT EXECUTOR

"An 'independent executor' is something unique in his character. While he takes charge of and administers the estate of his administrator without action of the county court in relation to the settlement of his estate, and may do every act which an executor administering an estate under the control of the court may do, with such order, he is uncontrolled, uninformed, unchecked, and untrammelled by orders of the court directing, informing, or commanding what he shall do in the management and administration of the estate. He is an executor at large, exercising his own judgment and discretion, acting and doing what he pleases, unless brought to account for his actions by some one interested in the estate or affected by the way it is being administered." Altgelt v. Merntz, 88 S. W. 891, 894, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 397.

INDEPENDENT INTERVENING CAUSE

"The 'independent intervening cause' that will prevent a recovery on account of the act or omission of a wrongdoer must be a cause which interrupts the natural sequence of events, turns aside their course, prevents the natural and probate result of the original act or omission, and produces a different result that could not have been reasonably anticipated." Brubaker v. Kansas City Electric Light Co., 110 S. W. 12, 15, 130 Mo. App. 439 (quoting and adopting definition in Union Pac. R. Co. v. Callaghan, 56 Fed. 993, 6 C. C. A. 210).

INDEPENDENT OF A HUSBAND

The words "independent of a husband," whether express or implied, in the terms of a gift, mean no more than that the court will not permit the marital power of the husband to be used to prevent the enjoyment of property given to the wife according to the terms of the gift. Castree v. Shotwell, 68 Atl. 774, 775, 73 N. J. Eq. 590.

INDEPENDENTLY OF ALL OTHER CAUSES

Where death results from disease which follows as a natural, though not as a necessary, consequence of an accidental physical injury, the death is within the terms of an accident policy insuring one against bodily injuries sustained through external means, "independently of all other causes"; the death being the proximate result of the injury, and not of the disease as an independent cause. French v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 115 N. W. 869, 874, 135 Wis. 259, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1011.

INDETERMINATEINDETERMINATE INTENTION

"An indeterminate or floating intention" to return to a residence from which one moves does not include a case of intention to return upon the occurrence of some event which may be reasonably anticipated, as when the health of a relative has been restored. McDowell v. Friedman Bros. Shoe Co., 115 S. W. 1028, 1033, 135 Mo. App. 276.

INDETERMINATE PERMIT

An "indeterminate permit" is a perpetual exclusive privilege within the scope of the grant, subject to the code of conditions and limitations. Calumet Service Co. v. City of Chilton, 135 N. W. 131, 140, 148 Wis. 334.

Public utility law (Laws 1907, § 1797m77) provides that any public utility organized as a corporation under the laws of the state operating under an existing license or franchise shall, on taking certain steps and surrendering such license or franchise, receive by operation of law in lieu thereof an "indeterminate permit" as provided in the act, and that the filing by such company of its declaration surrendering the previous license or franchise shall be deemed a waiver of the right to insist upon the fulfillment of any contract theretofore entered into relating to rates, charges, or service regulated by the public utility act. Held, that the scope of the privilege springing into existence by operation of law by surrender of a franchise under the act is the same as that of the one surrendered, divorced, however, from all the old conditions, and conditioned only upon the provisions of the public utility act. City of La Crosse v. La Crosse Gas & Electric Co., 130 N. W. 530, 538, 145 Wis. 408.

INDIAINDIA RUBBER

Manufactures of, see Manufactures—Manufactured Articles.

The term "india rubber," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 579, has a commercial meaning that includes nearly a hundred varieties of inspissated vegetable gums, among them balata, which are used in the manufacture of what are commonly known as "rubber goods." Earle Bros. v. United States, 153 Fed. 773.

INDIAN

See Pueblo Indians.

As citizen, see Citizen.

Indians receiving rations and annuities, see Receive.

The word "Indian" describes a person of Indian blood, while the word "citizen" describes a political status. Consequently the fact that an Indian is a citizen will not remove him from the purview of Act of June 28, 1906, relating to Osage Indians and prohibiting the giving of liquor to them. Mosier v. United States, 198 Fed. 54, 57, 117 C. C. A. 162.

The term "Indians," within Act Cong. March 3, 1883, c. 341, § 2, 23 Stat. 385, providing that Indians committing certain crimes within the limits of an Indian reservation shall be subject to the same laws and be tried in the same courts and be subject to the same penalties as all other persons committing such crimes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, refers only to Indians sustaining tribal relations and does not deprive the state courts of jurisdiction over crimes committed by Indians who either have never sustained or have severed all tribal relations. State v. Howard, 74 Pac. 382, 384, 33 Wash. 250.

Act 1899, p. 194, c. 117, § 1, provided that nothing in this, or any other, act shall prevent any Indian residing in this state from taking fish at any time, for the use of himself and family. Sess. Laws 1905, p. 343, c. 170, § 4, provides it shall be unlawful to take or fish for salmon except with hook and line between the hours of 6 o'clock p. m. Saturday and 6 o'clock a. m. Monday of each week. Held, that the term "Indian" included only Indians not citizens; and hence the statute of 1899 does not exempt any citizen from the operation of the statute of 1905, and the two taken together are not in violation of section 12, art. 1, of the state Constitution, guarantying equal privileges to all citizens. State v. Lewis, 88 Pac. 940, 941, 45 Wash. 475, 122 Am. St. Rep. 934.

The test of the right of persons of Indian blood to be enrolled and share in land is fixed by Indian Treaty April 29, 1868, 15 Stat. 635, setting apart territory to Indians of the Sioux Nation and such other friendly tribes or individual Indians as the Nation may be willing to admit, and depends on the existence of membership in the Nation, in the absence of any statute intrusting to any governmental official the power to enter names on the rolls of the Nation or to strike names from the rolls. Sully v. United States, 195 Fed. 113, 124.

The Puyallup Indian reservation having been abandoned, the lands allotted to the Indians in severalty, and the tribe having abandoned its tribal organization, laws, habits, and customs, and the only parcel of reservation land retained by the government being such as was used for school purposes, a homicide committed by one of such Indians on another within the territory previously embraced in the reservation was not within the act of Congress providing that the state court shall have no jurisdiction of the person of the accused or of the offense committed by one "Indian" against another on an Indian reservation. An Indian without tribal relations within a reservation can have no greater rights than an Indian with the same status residing without the reservation. State v. Smokalem, 79 Pac. 603, 604, 37 Wash. 91.

Mixed blood

A white man without any Indian blood, who marries a full-blooded Indian woman

according to Indian custom, and who resides with his wife on reservations, is not entitled to the benefit of Act March 2, 1889, c. 405, 25 Stat. 888, authorizing persons "in whole or in part of Indian blood," who are entitled to the allotment of land under any law of Congress, to prosecute any suit in relation to their rights thereto. Drapeau v. United States, 195 Fed. 130, 131.

A person born of an Indian mother and a white father who is a citizen of the United States, taking his civil status from his father, is nevertheless an "Indian of mixed blood," within the statute prohibiting the sale of liquor to any Indian whatsoever, or to a mixed blood Indian, being more than a one-eighth Indian. State v. Nicolls, 112 Pac. 269, 270, 61 Wash. 142, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1088.

Where defendant was a mixed blood Indian, who for many years had been enrolled as a member of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe in Wisconsin, had been recognized as such by the tribe and by the government, and as such was enrolled and became an allottee of land, and for many years lived within the limits of the reservation under the care of an Indian agent and policed by Indian police, he was an "Indian" within Penal Code (Act March 4, 1909, c. 321) § 328, conferring jurisdiction on the federal courts of certain crimes committed by one Indian against another within the limits of an Indian reservation, though his father was a white man and his mother a part-blood Indian who had never been enrolled. United States v. Gardner, 189 Fed. 690, 692.

An Indian woman of the half-blood was born on the Sioux reservation and exercised what she believed to be her right to go on the reservation because of her Indian Yankton Al blood, and she constantly associated and affiliated with the Sioux tribes. She married a white man; but, according to the custom of the tribes of the Sioux Nation, she remained the head of the family, and the right to tribal property was determined by her nationality. Her children were born into such Indian tribes, and she and her descendants were actual residents on the reservation and associated and affiliated with the tribes of the Nation prior to Act March 2, 1889, c. 405, 25 Stat. 888, setting apart a permanent reservation for the Indians "receiving rations and annuities." Held, that she and her descendants were within the Treaty of April 29, 1868, 15 Stat. 635, setting apart land for Indians of the several tribes of the Sioux Nation and such other friendly tribes or individual Indians as from time to time they adopted with the consent of the United States, the words "receiving rations and annuities" in the act of 1889 not being intended to be interpreted in the light of future regulations requiring rolls to be made up and approved by an officer of the United States in the Indian Department, and she and her descendants were entitled to be considered "Indians" of the Rosebud reservation, within Act March 3, 1889, c. 450, 30 Stat. 1362. Sully v. United States, 195 Fed. 113, 125.

Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 5391, making it an offense to sell liquor to any "Indian" or "person of Indian descent," it is an offense to sell liquor to one whose mother was an Indian, though his father was a white man. People v. Gebhard, 115 N. W. 54, 55, 151 Mich. 192 (citing Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381).

"By the agreement confirmed in this act, the Sioux Nation gave up a large amount of territory, and the rights conferred on the nation or on individuals were in consideration thereof. The persons entitled to such rights are the persons who, at the time of the agreement, constituted the Sioux Nation and were lawful members thereof. The question, therefore, whether any particular person is or is not an 'Indian,' within the meaning of this agreement, is to be determined, in my opinion, not by the common law, but by the laws or usages of the tribe." Complainant was a woman of five-sixteenths Sioux Indian blood on her mother's side, recognized as a member of a Sioux Tribe since her birth. On February 10, 1890, at the time of the taking effect of Act March 2, 1889, c. 405, 25 Stat. 892, by which a portion of the Great Sioux reservation was ceded to the government, she was residing with her husband and children on lands on the ceded part of such reservation. Within a year thereafter she filed her election to take an allotment of such lands, as permitted by section 13 of the act, but her claim was rejected by the Land Department, on the ground that she was not an Indian, within the meaning of the act, and a trust patent to the land was issued to another member of the tribe, who had later settled thereon. Complainant and her children were enrolled on the census, annuity, per capita, and issue rolls of her tribe, and had received rations, annuities, and per capita payments, the same as all other Indians thereof, and two of her brothers signed the acceptance of the act as members of such tribe. Held, that she was an "Indian," within the meaning of the act, and the head of a family, according to laws and usages of her tribe, her husband being a white man, and as such was entitled to the allotment and to a cancellation of the patent therefor issued to defendant. Waldron v. United States, 143 Fed. 413, 418, 419, (quoting and adopting Senate Ex. Doc. No. 59, p. 109, 53d Cong.).

Mongolian

The word "Indian," as used in Civ. Code, § 328, providing that all persons of sufficient capacity to understand the obligations of an oath are competent witnesses, with the exception of Indians and negroes, who appear incapable of receiving just impressions, etc., does not include the Japanese. Pumphrey v. State, 122 N. W. 19, 20, 84 Neb. 686, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1023, 18 Ann. Cas. 979.

INDIAN COUNTRY

The words, "Indian country," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 2139, as amended and reenacted by Act July 23, 1892, c. 234, 27 Stat. 280, forbidding the introduction of intoxicating liquors into such country, do not, standing alone, embrace territory in which, at the time, the Indian title had been extinguished, and over which, with its inhabitants, the jurisdiction of the state, for all purposes of government, was full and complete. Dick v. United States, 28 Sup. Ct. 399, 400, 208 U. S. 340, 52 L. Ed. 520.

The term "Indian country," as used in Act Cong. June 30, 1834, providing that all that part of the United States west of the Mississippi and not within the states of Missouri and Louisiana or the territory of Arkansas, and that part of the United States east of the Mississippi river and within any state to which the Indian title had not been extinguished, should be deemed to be "Indian country," includes all the land so described so long as the Indians retain their original title to the soil, and ceases only when the Indians lose that title, in the absence of any different provision by treaty or act of Congress. United States v. Celestine, 30 Sup. Ct. 93, 94, 215 U. S. 278, 54 L. Ed. 195 (quoting Bates v. Clark, 95 U. S. 204, 209, 24 L. Ed. 471, 473).

The definition of "Indian country" in Act Jan. 30, 1897, c. 109, forbidding the sale of liquor to Indians or its introduction into the Indian country, as including "any Indian allotment while the title to the same shall be held in trust by the government, or while the same shall remain inalienable by the allottee without the consent of the United States," would seem to justify the construction that Congress was of the opinion that, had it been omitted, Indians residing upon allotted lands would not have been within the provisions of the act. United States v. Kiya, 126 Fed. 879, 882.

The provision of Rev. St. § 2139, as amended by Act Jan. 30, 1897, c. 109, which makes it a criminal offense to introduce liquor into the Indian country, is a police regulation, and can be enforced only as to land within the exclusive territorial jurisdiction of the United States; and an indictment thereunder will not lie for taking liquor upon land within a state which was allotted in severalty to an Indian under Act Feb. 8, 1887, c. 119, prior to Act May 8, 1906, c. 2348, and which is held in trust by the United States, such land being no longer "Indian country," the effect of the allotment having been to make it, as well as the allottee, subject to the jurisdiction and laws of the state, and to exclude therefrom the police powers of the United States, which have no relation to the protection of its title to, or rights in, the land as trustee. United States v. Sutton, 165 Fed. 253, 255.

As to Pueblo Indians holding their lands under unconditional patents, it was not within the power of Congress, in admitting New Mexico as a state, to declare such lands "Indian country," or to reserve to the federal government the power to regulate the liquor traffic with such Indians; the latter being a part of the police power, which necessarily went to the state upon its admission. United States v. Sandoval, 198 Fed. 539, 549.

The right of way through the Flathead Indian reservation granted to the Northern Pacific Railway Company by Act July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 365, 367, c. 217) § 2, the Indian title to which was extinguished without reservation by the agreement of September 2, 1882, is not "Indian country" within the meaning of Act Jan. 30, 1897 (29 Stat. 506, c. 109), making it an offense for any person to introduce intoxicating liquors into the Indian country, "which term shall include any Indian allotment while the title to the same shall be held in trust by the government, or while the same shall remain inalienable by the allottee without the consent of the United States." Clairmont v. United States, 32 Sup. Ct. 787, 788, 225 U. S. 551, 56 L. Ed. 1201.

Since the allotment of lands in severalty to all of the Indians on the Uintah Indian reservation in Utah, subject to the provisions of Act Feb. 8, 1887, c. 119, and the restoration of the remainder of the lands of the reservation to the public domain, no part of such lands is "Indian country," within the meaning of Act Jan. 30, 1897, c. 109; and a prosecution cannot be maintained thereunder for introducing liquor thereon, even on a portion which was subsequently reserved by executive order for agency and school purposes. U. S. v. Boss, 160 Fed. 132, 134.

INDIAN RESERVATION

As public land, see Public Land.

Cr. Code U. S. § 328 (Act March 4, 1909, c. 321), provides that all Indians committing assaults or other crimes against other Indians within the boundary of any state and within the limits of any Indian reservation, shall be subject to the same laws and penalties as persons committing any of such crimes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. The Tuscarora Indians, on the Tuscarora reservation, in Niagara county, were never settled thereon by the United States government, but acquired it by purchase. Relator, a Tuscarora Indian, after conviction and imprisonment for assault in the first degree on another Indian of the same tribe on such reservation, brought habeas corpus on the ground that his offense was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States courts. Held, that the Tuscarora reservation was not an "Indian reservation," which within the meaning of the statute is a part of the public domain set apart either by act of Congress, by treaty, or by executive order for the use and occupation of Indians, and hence the Tuscarora reservation was within the sovereignty and jurisdiction of the state of New York. People ex rel. Cusick v. Daly, 188 N. Y. Supp. 817, 818, 78 Misc. Rep. 657.

INDIAN TRIBE

Member of Indian tribe, see Member.

A settlement of Pueblo Indians do not constitute an "Indian tribe," within the purview of the federal statutes against selling liquors to Indians. United States v. Sandoval, 198 Fed. 539, 548.

An "Indian tribe" within the state, recognized as such by the United States government, is to be considered as a separate community of people, capable of managing its own affairs, including the domestic relations. Ortley v. Ross, 110 N. W. 982, 983, 78 Neb. 339 (citing and adopting definition in Earl v. Godley, 44 N. W. 254, 42 Minn. 361, 7 L. R. A. 125, 18 Am. St. Rep. 517).

INDIANS BY DESCENT

Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 5891, making it an offense to sell liquor to any "Indian" or "person of Indian descent," it is an offense to sell liquor to one whose mother was an Indian, though his father was a white man. People v. Gebhard, 115 N. W. 54, 55, 151 Mich. 192 (citing Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381).

The term "Indians by descent," as used in Indian treaties, includes full-blooded Indians as well as those of mixed blood. Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381, 435.

INDICATE

INDICATION

Mere indications, however strong, are not sufficient to answer the requirements of the statute, which requires as one of the essential conditions of the making of a valid mining location a discovery of mineral within the limits of the claim. An "indication," in this sense means that which merely points to or tends to prove. Charlton v. Kelly, 2 Alaska, 532, 544.

INDICATIVE

"Indicative" means giving a suggestion of something, and prima facie means at first view, so that the expression means nothing more than that, at first view, flight suggests guilt. State v. Richards, 102 N. W. 439, 441, 126 Iowa, 497.

INDICIA OF A MORTGAGE

The "indicia of a mortgage" are the admissions of the parties that the grantor, after the execution of the deed, absolute in form, owes the consideration thereof to the grantee as a debt, the gross inadequacy of the consideration, the retention of the possession by the grantor without payment of rent, and negotiations between the parties for a loan, and the parties not considering the quality or value of the land at the making of the deed; but such "indicia of a mortgage" do not prevent the consideration of other evidence bearing on the question of the intent of the parties at the time of the making of the deed, and such other evidence may overcome the weight to be given to such indicia. Fridley v. Somerville, 54 S. E. 502, 504, 60 W. Va. 272.

INDICT

INDICTABLE NUISANCE

B. & C. Comp. § 1930, punishing any person committing any act which grossly injures the person of another, or which grossly disturbs the public peace or health, or openly outrages the public decency and is injurious to public morals, not otherwise made punishable, covers offenses against the public peace, health, and morals not otherwise made punishable, known at common law as "indictable nuisance"; and at common law whatever tends to corrupt society is an offense against good morals, and is punishable as a nuisance, and such offense need not be a continuous one, but may consist of a single act, and it may not affect the public at large, but only such as come in contact with it. State v. Waymire, 97 Pac. 46, 47, 52 Or. 281, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 56, 132 Am. St. Rep. 699.

INDICTMENT

See, also, Present—Presented—Presentation.

The object of an "indictment" is to inform the accused of the offense with which he stands charged, in order that he may intelligently prepare such defense as he has to meet the accusation of the commonwealth. Stout v. Commonwealth, 94 S. W. 15, 16, 123 Ky. 184, 13 Ann. Cas. 547.

An "indictment" is a basis of a prosecution, and its office, among other things, is to inform accused of the charge against him. Essary v. State, 111 S. W. 927, 930, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 596.

The word "indictment," in Rev. St. 1890, §§ 2708, 2709, authorizing the state to appeal only where an indictment is quashed or is adjudged insufficient, or where judgment thereon is arrested, is used in its common-law meaning; and hence the state cannot appeal from a judgment sustaining a demurrer to counts in an information charging a misdemeanor. State v. Ross, 94 S. W. 842, 848, 119 Mo. App. 401.

Accusation by grand jury

An "indictment" is a presentation to the proper court, under oath, by a grand jury, duly impaneled, of a charge describing an offense against the law for which the party charged may be punished. United States v. London, 176 Fed. 976, 979.

At common law an "indictment" was an accusation at the suit of the sovereign, based on the oath of 12 men of the county where the offense was committed. In re McNaught, 99 Pac. 241, 243, 1 Okl. Cr. 528.

The word "indictment," as used in the Constitution, providing that no person shall be prosecuted for felony or misdemeanor otherwise than by indictment or information, which shall be concurrent remedies, has a well-defined meaning, and must be accepted with the meaning attached to it at common law, where it is defined as an accusation at the suit of the king (or state) by the oaths of 12 men (at least not more than 23) of the same county wherein the offense was committed, returned to inquire of all offenses in general in the county, determinable by the court in which they are returned, and finding a bill brought before them to be true. The common-law definition has been modified in this state by section 28, art. 2, of the Constitution, which declares that hereafter a grand jury shall consist of 12 men, any 9 of whom concurring may find an indictment. State v. Anderson, 90 S. W. 95, 98, 191 Mo. 134 (quoting Ex parte Slater, 72 Mo. 102; 5 Bac. Abr. pp. 48, 52).

An "indictment" at common law was an accusation at the suit of the sovereign, based on the oath of 12 men of the county wherein the offense was committed. The form usually prescribed for the commencement of an indictment was, after stating the venue, as follows: "The jurors for our lady the queen upon their oath present," etc. The form of indictment prescribed by the legislative assembly of Oregon omits a recital of the oath of the grand jurors, but before the grand jury can enter upon the discharge of its duties an oath is required to be administered to the jurors, the form of which is also ordained in the statute. It would seem that an indictment complying with the form recommended by the legislative assembly, though omitting a recital therein of the oath of the grand jurors, would be sufficient. State v. Guglielmo, 79 Pac. 577, 578, 46 Or. 250, 69 L. R. A. 466, 7 Ann. Cas. 976.

Under Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, § 6674, an "indictment" is defined as "an accusation in writing, presented by a grand jury to a competent court, charging a person with a public offense." Ex parte Show, 113 Pac. 1062, 1066, 4 Okl. Cr. 416.

Pen. Code, § 917, defines "indictment" as an accusation in writing, presented by the grand jury to a competent court, charging a person with a public offense. Section 758 declares that an accusation must be delivered by the foreman of the grand jury to the district attorney. An accusation of a public officer for offenses in office, brought merely for the purpose of removing him from office, was not an "indictment," and therefore not objectionable because it contained more than one offense. In re Burleigh, 78 Pac. 242, 243, 145 Cal. 35.

Accusation

Accusation distinguished, see Accuse—Accused—Accusation.

An "indictment" is but an accusatory paper, and on motion to dismiss, irregularities in the proceedings before the grand jury cannot be reviewed, except as expressly provided by statute. People v. Hatch, 109 Pac. 1097, 1100, 13 Cal. App. 521.

Affidavit

Rev. Laws 1905, § 5409, providing for the certification of important and doubtful questions arising upon demurrer to an indictment, or during the trial thereon, to the Supreme Court for its opinion, does not apply to questions raised by objections to the sufficiency of an affidavit in contempt proceedings. An affidavit which is made the basis of contempt proceedings in the district court is not an "indictment," within Rev. Laws 1905, § 5409, providing for the certification of important and doubtful questions arising on demurrer to an indictment, or during the trial thereon, to the Supreme Court, and the court is without authority to include it therein by construction. State v. Smith, 133 N. W. 614, 615, 116 Minn. 223.

Essentials

To constitute a valid "indictment" for an infamous crime in a federal court, it must have been publicly presented in open court, all the grand jurors being present and answering to their names, the indictment then being delivered by the foreman to the clerk of the court, and the fact entered of record. Renigar v. United States, 172 Fed. 646, 97 C. C. A. 172, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 633, 19 Ann. Cas. 1117.

Same—Conclusion

"The conclusion of an 'indictment' was an essential part of the indictment at common law, and such has been the uniform rule in this state." State v. Gleason, 72 S. W. 676, 677, 172 Mo. 259 (citing State v. Pemberton, 30 Mo. 376; Ex parte Slater, 72 Mo. 102; State v. Meyers, 12 S. W. 516, 99 Mo. 107; State v. Rector, 28 S. W. 1078, 126 Mo. loc. cit. 341).

Charge or presentment

"The term 'presentment' in its stricter meaning is an accusation of the grand jury sua sponte, or, as Judge Story puts it, 'an accusation made ex mero motu,' as distinguished from an 'indictment,' which was a written accusation preferred to the grand jury and presented upon oath at the instance of the government." A "presentment" was regarded as the basis of an "indictment." The distinction does not now often practically appear, inasmuch as the grand jury is rarely the origin of accusation, as was its prototype. A "presentment" is a report made by a grand jury of their own motion, either on their own knowledge or on evidence before them, concerning some wrongdoing, and presented to the court, usually as a basis for an "indictment," or the finding and setting forth of charges in an "indictment." "Presentment," in a larger sense of the term, includes every proceeding of a grand jury. Code Cr. Proc. § 260, provides that the grand jury must inquire into the case of every person imprisoned in the jail on a criminal charge, and not indicted; (2) into the condition and management of the public prisons in the county; and (3) into the willful and corrupt misconduct in office of public officers. Section 261 gives them free access to public prisons and the examination of public records. While there is no specific provision for a report as the result of an inquiry, section 250, in referring to the preservation of the minutes of the proceedings of the grand jury, uses the term "presentment" in contradistinction to "indictment." Held, that the grand jury may, in the exercise of its inquisitorial powers, make a presentment in the nature of a report, although an indictment cannot or does not follow it, and such report need not be stricken out because it incidentally designates some public official as responsible for omissions or commissions. Jones v. People, 92 N. Y. Supp. 275, 276, 101 App. Div. 55 (quoting and adopting definitions in Stand. Dict., Bish. Cr. Proc. § 137, and Hockheimer on the Law of Crime and Criminal Proceedings; citing Thayer's Preliminary Treatise on Evidence in Common Law, Green's Short History of the English People, 111, and Ency. Brit. "Jury"; quoting Stubbs: Bl. Comm. c. 21).

The provision of the Bill of Rights that prosecutions shall be by indictment or information was intended to secure the citizen against prosecution by private citizen, or by any authority, other than a grand jury or a district attorney; "indictment" as used meaning a presentment by a grand jury, and "information" meaning a presentment by a district attorney or other officer constituted by law to exercise the functions which at common law in 1805 were exercised by the law officer of the crown. State v. Boasberg, 50 South. 162, 165, 124 La. 289.

Complaint

"The terms 'information' and 'indictment,' as used in the Constitution, are to be understood in their common-law sense; that is, a criminal charge which at common law is presented by the Attorney General, or, if that office is vacant, then by the Solicitor General of England, and in Missouri by the prosecuting attorneys of the respective counties, who exercise the same powers as are exercised by the Attorney General or Solicitor General of England—that is, the power to present informations under their official oaths." A complaint informing the court of the violation of the injunction is not an information or indictment, and a judgment rendered thereon is not appealable, under Rev. St. 1890, § 2696. State ex rel. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Bland, 88 S. W. 28, 31, 189 Mo. 197, 3 Ann. Cas. 1044 (quoting State v. Kyle, 65 S. W. 763, 166 Mo. 287, 56 L. R. A. 115; Ex parte Slater, 72 Mo. 102; State v. Kelm, 79 Mo. 515).

A complaint, duly verified, charging a person with an offense, being regarded in Texas as equivalent to an affidavit, a Governor's warrant in extradition proceedings, reciting that the accused stands charged by "complaint and information" with the crime of embezzlement, constitutes a sufficient compliance with Rev. St. U. S. § 5278, requiring that warrants recite that "accused 'stands charged by indictment or affidavit.'" Ex parte Cheatham, 95 S. W. 1077, 1078, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 51 (citing Ex parte White, 46 S. W. 639, 39 Tex. Cr. R. 497; Ex parte Morgan, 20 Fed. 306).

Information

The word "indictment," as used in Rev. St. 1890, §§ 2708, 2709, authorizing the state to appeal only where an indictment is quashed, or is adjudged insufficient, or where judgment thereon is arrested, is used in its common-law meaning, and the sections do not authorize the state to appeal from a judgment sustaining a demurrer to counts in an information charging a misdemeanor. State v. Ross, 94 S. W. 842, 843, 119 Mo. App. 401.

Under Rev. St. 1890, § 2709, authorizing an appeal by the state when an "indictment" is quashed or adjudged insufficient upon demurrer, no appeal lies from a judgment discharging defendant upon demurrer to an information, although sections 2476, 2482, as amended, authorize the prosecution of both felonies and misdemeanors by indictment and information, and provide that proceedings upon an information shall be governed by the law and practice applicable to trials upon indictment. State v. Adams, 91 S. W. 946, 947, 193 Mo. 196.

An "indictment" is distinguished from an "information" in the source from which it emanates; an indictment coming from a grand jury, while an information proceeds from the Attorney General or prosecuting attorney of the county in which the crime was committed. State v. Minor, 92 S. W. 466, 467, 193 Mo. 597.

At common law an "information" is defined to be a complaint or accusation exhibited against a person for some criminal offense, committed immediately against the king or against a private person; an "indictment" being an accusation preferred by the oath of 12 men, while an information is only the allegation of the officer who exhibits it. An information would lie at common law for all misdemeanors, but not for a felony; it having been the policy under such law that no person shall be put on trial for a capital offense or any other crime known or understood as an offense under said law, occasioning a total forfeiture of the offender's lands or goods, or both, except by indictment. Evans v. Willis, 97 Pac. 1047, 1048, 22 Okl. 810, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1050, 18 Ann. Cas. 258.

An "indictment" means a presentment by the grand jury, while an "information" is a presentment by a district attorney or other officer constituted by law to exercise the functions which at common law in 1805 were exercised by the law officers of the crown. State v. Boasberg, 50 South. 162, 165, 124 La. 289.

INDIGENT

The term "indigent" is commonly used to refer to one's financial ability, and ordinarily indicates one who is destitute of means of comfortable subsistence so as to be in want. Weeks v. Mansfield, 80 Atl. 784, 786, 84 Conn. 544.

INDIGNITY

See Gross Indignity; Personal Indignity.

For the wife, during almost all the time she lived with her husband, to be in the habit of quarreling with him and abusing him in the presence of others, and accusing him in the presence of others of brutal conduct towards herself, and repeating such charges to persons in the neighborhood, amounts to "indignities" authorizing divorce. Clark v. Clark, 128 S. W. 218, 220, 143 Mo. App. 350.

INDIRECT—INDIRECTLY

St. 1906, p. 527, c. 463, part 2, § 57, providing that a railroad corporation, except as authorized by the general court or the act, shall not "directly or indirectly subscribe for, take, or hold the stock or bonds of or guarantee the bonds or dividends of any other corporation," prevents a railroad corporation from obtaining without legislative permission any kind of proprietary interest in the stock or bonds of other corporations; the words "subscribe for, take, or hold" intending to include legal ownership of every kind, and the word "indirectly" covering other modes of holding than by taking or holding the legal title, and the words together covering every kind of proprietary interest in the stock or bonds referred to. Attorney General v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 84 N. E. 737, 742, 198 Mass. 413.

INDIRECT CONTEMPT

See, also, Constructive Contempt.

An "indirect contempt" is one offered elsewhere than in the presence of the court, and which tends to degrade or weaken its authority, or in some manner to impede the due administration of justice. Ex parte Clark, 106 S. W. 990, 997, 208 Mo. 121, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389.

An "indirect contempt" is one committed not in the presence of the court. To constitute an indirect contempt, the authority of the court must have been assailed in some way tending to its prejudice, or to a harmful interference with the administration of justice. Rucker v. State, 85 N. E. 356, 358, 170 Ind. 635 (citing McConnell v. State, 46 Ind. 298; Worland v. State, 82 Ind. 49, 57; Cheadle v. State, 11 N. E. 426, 110 Ind. 801, 313, 59 Am. Rep. 199; State v. Rockwood, 159 Ind. 94, 64 N. E. 592).

If the contempt is "indirect," that is, not in the immediate view or presence of the court or judge at chambers, before the court can acquire jurisdiction to punish it, an affidavit must be presented setting forth the facts constituting the contempt, and thereupon the court must hear proof. State ex rel. Breen v. District Court of Silver Bow County, 85 Pac. 870, 871, 34 Mont. 107.

An attempt by a party to a suit to improperly influence jurors then in attendance on the court, during the recess and away from the courthouse, constitutes an "indirect contempt" within Code Civ. Proc. § 2170, subd. 9, providing that any other unlawful interference with the process or proceedings of a court than the acts previously specified will constitute a contempt. State ex rel. Webb v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist., 95 Pac. 593, 37 Mont. 191, 15 Ann. Cas. 743.

INDIRECT EVIDENCE

"Indirect evidence" consists of inferences and presumptions. An inference is a deduction which the reason of the jury makes from the facts proved, without an express direction of the law to that effect, and a presumption is a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts. Lake County v. Neillon, 74 Pac. 212, 214, 44 Or. 14.

Evidence is "indirect," as well as direct, consisting of inferences and presumptions, and it is code law that upon the trial of the case evidence may be given of any facts from which the facts in issue are presumed or are logically inferable; and the jury, by the exercise of their judgment or reason, warranted by the consideration of the usual propensities or passions of men, may make such deductions or draw such inferences from the facts proven as will establish the ultimate fact or facts in issue. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1826, 1831, 1832, 1870, subdiv. 15, and sections 1957-1960. Evidence of acts of parties to an alleged conspiracy on the part of defendant and other parties named to undertake a criminal action may be established, without proof that the parties made and actually agreed to undertake such action. People v. Donnelly, 77 Pac. 177, 179, 143 Cal. 394.

"The term 'evidence' includes, not only that offered on the part of the government, but that also offered for the defense. * * * 'Direct evidence' is that which immediately points to the question at issue. It is positive in its character. It often depends upon the credibility and intelligence of the witnesses who testify to a knowledge of the facts. It may also be documentary in character. 'Indirect' or 'circumstantial' evidence is that which tends to establish the issue only by proof of facts sustaining by their consistency the hypothesis claimed, and from which the jury may infer the fact. 'Direct' and 'circumstantial' evidence differ merely in their logical relations to the fact in issue. Evidence as to the existence of the fact is 'direct.' 'Circumstantial evidence' is composed of facts which raise a logical inference as to the existence of the fact in issue." United States v. Greene, 146 Fed. 803, 824.

INDIRECT PURCHASE

Under the statute prohibiting an administrator from purchasing, directly or indirectly, the property of the estate, procuring another to purchase for him is an "indirect purchase," and is precisely what the statute prohibits. Hoffman v. Harrington, 28 Mich. 90, 95.

INDISPENSABLE

See Shall be Indispensable.

INDISPENSABLE PARTY

An "indispensable party" is one who has such an interest in the subject-matter of the controversy that a final decree cannot be made without affecting his interests or leaving the controversy in such a situation that its final determination may be inconsistent with equity and good conscience. Rogers v. Penobscot Mining Co., 154 Fed. 606, 610, 616, 83 C. C. A. 380 (citing Rev. St. §§ 737, 738; Equity Rule 47; Chadbourne v. Coe, 51 Fed. 479, 480, 481, 2 C. C. A. 327; Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. [58 U. S.] 130, 139, 15 L. Ed. 158; Ribon v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 16 Wall. [83 U. S.] 446, 450, 21 L. Ed. 367; Colron v. Millaudon, 19 How. [60 U. S.] 113, 15 L. Ed. 575; Williams v. Bankhead, 19 Wall.

36 U. S.] 563, 22 L. Ed. 184; Kendig v. Dean, 97 U. S. 423, 24 L. Ed. 1061; Alexander v. Horner, 1 McCrary, 634, 1 Fed. Cas. 366; Cole Silver Min. Co. v. Virginia & Gold Hill Water Co., 1 Sawy. 685, 6 Fed. Cas. 72; Sioux City Terminal R. & W. Co. v. Trust Co. of North America, 82 Fed. 124, 126, 27 C. C. A. 73, 75; Wood v. Dummer, 3 Mason, 308, 30 Fed. Cas. 435; O'Neill v. Wolcott Mining Co., 174 Fed. 527, 98 C. C. A. 309, 27 L. R. A. [N. S.] 200).

"Indispensable parties" to proceedings in equity are persons who not only have an interest in the controversy, but an interest of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without either affecting that interest, or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final determination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience. Landran v. Jordan, 25 App. D. C. 291, 300.

There is a class of persons who are not only termed necessary parties, but who are "indispensable" parties, to wit, persons who not only have an interest in the controversy, but an interest of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without either affecting that interest or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final termination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience. A suit in equity against a corporation organized to build and operate a logging road for the sole purpose of carrying logs to the mill of a lumber company, and without which it could not operate its mill, to enjoin the construction of such road, the right to relief being based largely upon contracts between complainant and the lumber company and complainant and defendant, which were parts of the same transaction, is one in which the lumber company is directly and vitally interested and to which it is an indispensable party. Arkansas South-eastern R. Co. v. Union Sawmill Co., 154 Fed. 304, 311, 83 C. C. A. 224.

"Indispensable parties" are those having an interest in the controversy of such a nature that final decree cannot be made without either affecting that interest or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final determination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience. A joint trustee is an "indispensable party." Caylor v. Cooper, 165 Fed. 757, 764 (citing 1 Rose's Code Fed. Proc. § 817b, p. 744; Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. [58 U. S.] 130, 15 L. Ed. 160; Donovan v. Campion, 85 Fed. 71, 29 C. C. A. 30).

The right of a claimant to use the waters of a natural stream for beneficial purposes, where the same has been acquired by compliance with the law governing the appropriation of water in the arid region, is several, and it may be protected from interference by any one or all of the other several claimants of similar rights, and all of such several claimants are not "indispensable parties," in the sense that without their presence the court may not grant any relief. Washington State Sugar Co. v. Sheppard, 186 Fed. 233, 235.

Under Rev. Laws Mass. c. 111, §§ 112, 113, which provide that, when proceedings are commenced by a landowner for the assessment of damages where land is taken for public use, a mortgagee may join as a petitioner, and if he does not he must be served with notice and permitted to join, and that the interest of the mortgagee shall be first satisfied before any part of the damages is paid to the mortgagor, a mortgagee is an "indispensable party" petitioner in such a proceeding in a federal court, and where he is a citizen of the same state as defendant the court is without jurisdiction. Adams v. Woburn, 174 Fed. 192, 194.

Necessary and proper party distinguished

See Necessary Parties.

INDIVIDUAL

Gifts for charitable purposes, though gifts for the benefit of individuals, are not "gifts to individuals," within an instruction in a will directing payment of inheritance taxes on legacies to individuals. Such gifts are not gifts to the individuals, but to the class. Kingsbury v. Bazeley, 70 Atl. 916, 917, 75 N. H. 13, 139 Am. St. Rep. 664, 20 Ann. Cas. 1355.

Corporation

Though Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 18, defines the term "officer" as used in the act as including trustees, a trustee in bankruptcy does not occupy an "office" in the sense in which that term is used in the law, which prohibits an alien from being a public officer, since his duties are not general or permanent, and therefore an alien is not disqualified from acting as a trustee in bankruptcy. Section 45 of this act provides that individuals who are competent to perform the duties of a trustee and who reside or have an "office" in the judicial district within which they are appointed may act as trustees. "Individual" is a very broad term, and is sufficient to include an alien. In re Ooe, 154 Fed. 162, 163 (citing Matter of Hathaway, 71 N. Y. 238; U. S. v. Germaine, 99 U. S. 508, 25 L. Ed. 482; Auffmordt v. Hedden, 11 Sup. Ct. 103, 137 U. S. 310, 34 L. Ed. 674).

The word "individual," as used in General Order in Bankruptcy No. 6 (89 Fed. v., 32 C. C. A. ix), prescribing the procedure in case two or more petitions shall be filed against the same individual in different districts, and in case of two or more cases against a partnership in different districts, is used in the sense and is descriptive of a single person incapable of division, and includes a corporation. In re United Button Co., 132 Fed. 373, 381.

General Bankruptcy Order 6 provides that, in case two or more petitions shall be filed against the same "individual" in different districts, the first hearing shall be had in the district in which the debtor has his domicile, etc. Held, that the word "individual," as so used, was equivalent to "person," and as such included a corporation. In re United Button Co., 137 Fed. 668, 672.

State board of health

Medical Practice Act, §§ 9, 10, providing for the recovery of a penalty for the use of the state board of health against persons practicing medicine without a license, are not in violation of Const. art. 4, § 22, prohibiting the General Assembly by local or special law from granting to any "corporation," "association," or "individual" any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise, for, as the state board of health is a branch of the state executive department and its members officers of the state, the board is neither a corporation, association, nor individual within such constitutional provision. People v. Dunn, 99 N. E. 577, 578, 255 Ill. 289.

INDIVIDUAL AND CORPORATE CAPACITY

Where, in a proceeding for the sale of a corporation's property, the judgment of sale recited that it was made by agreement of all the stockholders "both in their 'individual and corporate capacity,'" it should be construed to mean that the corporation entered its appearance and was bound by the order of sale. McNeill v. Thompson (Ky.) 84 S. W. 1145, 1146.

INDIVIDUAL BANKER

See, also, Private Banker.

Persons doing a banking business under the authority of the superintendent of banking are sometimes termed "individual bankers." In re Samuel Wilde's Sons, 133 Fed. 562, 567.

The term "individual banker" has been construed to mean a person who, having complied with the statutory requirements, has received authority from the banking department to engage in the business of banking, subject to its inspection, supervision, and to the burdens imposed, and the term "private bankers" has been construed to mean persons or firms engaged in banking without having any special privileges or authority from the state. The term "individual banker," as used in the statutes of Montana, declaring guilty of a felony every officer or agent of a bank and every "individual banker," teller, or clerk of an individual banker, who receives deposits, knowing that such bank or association or banker is insolvent, means one other than a private banker, and the statute does not authorize the conviction of a private banker. Ex parte Wisner, 92 Pac. 958, 959, 36 Mont. 298.

INDIVIDUAL DAMAGE

In an action against a township for injury to and killing of sheep by dogs, evidence that all the ewes and lambs in the flock, were damaged generally by being maimed, chased, and overheated by the dogs, and that each individual lamb was damaged in one of the ways mentioned, was sufficient to show "individual damage" required by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 3268, in the absence of any testimony that the flock as such was damaged. Wea Tp., Tippecanoe County, v. Cloyd, 91 N. E. 959, 961, 46 Ind. App. 49.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERTY

However comprehensive the term "individual liberty" is, and however broad the claim that every one may employ his time in a lawful undertaking as may best serve his own interests, still the liberty referred to is a relative term, and at most means liberty regulated by just and impartial laws, while all sorts of reasonable restrictions are imposed on the actions of men for the common welfare and good of society. City of Butte v. Paltrovich, 75 Pac. 521, 522, 30 Mont. 18, 104 Am. St. Rep. 698.

INDIVIDUALLY RESPONSIBLE

As used in the constitutional provision that the officer of an insolvent bank receiving deposits shall be "individually responsible" for such deposits, the words "individually responsible" do not raise the implication that such officers shall not be made criminally liable; therefore the Legislature may make him liable both civilly and criminally. State v. Oleson, 76 Pac. 686, 35 Wash. 149.

INDIVISIBLE CONTRACT

An "indivisible contract" of sale is one in which, by its terms, the price for a portion of the goods is not fixed or cannot be ascertained, and is the opposite of a "divisible contract" of sale, defined in Laws 1907, c. 99, § 76, as a contract of sale in which, by its terms, the price for portions of the goods is fixed or ascertainable by computation, though, as provided by section 9, the contract price may be fixed by the course of dealing between the parties. Boyd v. Second Hand Supply Co. (Ariz.) 123 Pac. 619, 620.

INDORSE—INDORSEMENT

See Previous Indorsements Guaranteed.
See, also, Assignment.

The word "indorsement" applies to such written entries as may be made on the back of notes, checks, etc., and may transfer title to the paper on which it is made. Hendrick v. Daniel, 46 S. E. 438, 439, 119 Ga. 358.

The word "indorsement" has a known legal signification, and implies a transfer by a writing upon the instrument. The word "assign" has no such signification, but implies that the assignment was made upon a separate instrument. A finding that, prior to the maturity of certain notes, said notes were "assigned in writing" to defendant, was not a finding that the holder "indorsed" the notes. It was held in another case than an averment in a complaint that a note was "assigned in writing" was not equivalent to an averment that it was indorsed. Williams v. Osbon, 75 Ind. 280, 283 (citing Cooper v. Drouillard [Ind.] 5 Blackf. 152; Kern v. Hazlerigg, 11 Ind. 443, 71 Am. Dec. 360; Keller v. Williams, 49 Ind. 504).

Where a payee of a negotiable note writes his name on the back, such writing constitutes an "indorsement." Hendrix v. Bauhard Bros., 75 S. E. 588, 592, 138 Ga. 473, 75 S. E. 588, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1028, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 688.

"The ordinary meaning of the term 'indorsement' is something written on the back of an instrument, like a deed or note;" but a memorandum written on the back of a promissory note at the time of the execution, which limits its consideration, affects its operation, and was intended to be a part of the contract, must be regarded as a substantive part of the note at its execution, and is put in issue by verified denial of the execution of the note. Kurth v. Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank, 94 Pac. 798, 800, 77 Kan. 475, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 612, 127 Am. St. Rep. 428.

Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 120, § 207, authorizing assignment of tax certificates by indorsement, the word "indorsement" means the writing of the name of the holder on the back of the certificate. Larson v. Glos, 85 N. E. 926, 928, 235 Ill. 584; Jones v. Same, 86 N. E. 282, 236 Ill. 178.

An indictment is "indorsed" when the words "A true bill" are written on the indictment and signed by the foreman, and the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury are written thereon. Shivers v. Territory, 74 Pac. 899, 901, 13 Okl. 466.

The word "indorse," in telegrams authorizing one to "indorse" a second note, is not used in its strictly technical sense, but authorizes the placing of the names on the back of the note, before it is delivered, in the same way in which they stood on the note which was to be renewed, where it appeared that the senders indorsed a note, and, on the note becoming due, telegraphed authority to indorse a second note. State Bank & Trust Co. of Los Angeles v. Evans, 84 N. E. 329, 331, 198 Mass. 11.

The use of the word "indorse" or "indorsement" in negotiations leading up to the signing of a note will not always suffice to prove that a person who was neither payee nor indorsee, but whose signature appears on the back of the note, was an indorser. Such words are often used in a nontechnical sense, merely to designate a person who writes his name on the back of an instrument, or the act of signing an instrument in that way. Such an indorsement the law regards as creating the liability of maker, if the person indorsing was neither a payee nor an indorsee of the note, and it was signed by him before delivery to the payee. Instances might, however, occur wherein the circumstances surrounding the transaction would tend to show that the words were used in their strict legal sense. Oexner v. Loehr, 93 S. W. 333, 334, 117 Mo. App. 698.

The holder of a negotiable note is presumed to be such bona fide and for value, under the express provisions of Civ. Code 1910, § 4288, and under the express provisions of section 4279 an ordinary "indorsement" constitutes a contract of the indorser to pay the money, if the parties primarily liable fail to pay it according to the terms of the instrument; and a plea to a suit by an indorsee against the maker of a note, alleging that such indorsee took the note with the express understanding with the payee, who indorsed it in blank, that if the maker failed to pay it at maturity the indorser would pay it, and alleging that the maker had paid out a certain sum on a garnishment judgment based on a judgment against the payee as indorser, stated no defense. First Nat. Bank of Etowah v. Messer, 71 S. E. 148, 149, 136 Ga. 226.

An instrument acknowledging receipt of an automobile chassis to be delivered only on return of the receipt properly indorsed was not negotiable, a "negotiable instrument" being a written promise or request for the payment of money to order or to bearer, the word "indorsed" as there used not being as if used with reference to commercial paper. Manny v. Wilson, 122 N. Y. Supp. 16, 18, 137 App. Div. 140.

An "indorsed note" implies an agreement between the payee or owner and the indorser that the holder will present the note to the maker for payment at its maturity and notify the indorser if it is dishonored, and the indorser agrees to pay it if this is done and not otherwise. Brittain v. Murphy, 94 S. W. 303, 304, 118 Mo. App. 235.

As guaranty

The material difference between "guaranty" and "indorsement" of a note as referable to the original payee is as to the extent of liability when measured by the diligence due from the creditor, in order to charge the guarantor or indorser; both being agreements to pay the note. Walcott v. Carpenter (Tex.) 132 S. W. 981, 982.

Where the president of a bank declined to discount certain corporate notes unless their payment was guaranteed by the personal indorsement of two of the officers of the corporation, the word "indorsement" was not used in a technical sense, but only to mean that the bank demanded the security or guaranty of such officers. Keyser v. Warfield, 63 Atl. 217, 218, 103 Md. 161.

A writing on the back of a note by its payee, guaranteeing its payment at maturity, and waiving a notice of nonpayment and demand, is an "indorsement," making the person to whom it was transferred an indorsee under the law merchant. Mullen v. Jones, 112 N. W. 1048, 102 Minn. 72.

Where in an action on a note and on a written guaranty executed by defendant, the note and a guaranty thereof by N. to plaintiff were filed with the declaration, defendant was thereby advised as to the cause of action; and hence the fact that the declaration alleged that N. "indorsed" the note and that the proof showed that he "guaranteed" payment of the note was not a material variance. Booth v. Irving Nat. Exch. Bank, 82 Atl. 652, 655, 116 Md. 668.

As an independent contract

"The 'indorsement' of a note is a new contract. The indorser engages that the note shall be paid according to its tenor; that is, upon proper presentment, demand, and notice. He engages that it is genuine, and the legal obligation that it purports to be, and that he has title to it, and a right to indorse it." Furgerson v. Staples, 19 Atl. 158, 159, 82 Me. 159, 17 Am. St. Rep. 470 (citing Story, Prom. Notes, § 135; Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 669; State Bank v. Fearing, 16 Pick. [33 Mass.] 533, 28 Am. Dec. 265; Prescott Bank v. Caverly, 7 Gray [73 Mass.] 217, 66 Am. Dec. 473).

The "indorsement" of a bill or note is not merely a transfer, but it is a new contract, by which the indorser engages that the bill or note is a genuine and valid instrument, and will be accepted or paid as the case may be; this engagement being conditioned upon presentment of demand and notice. Hawkins v. Shields, 57 South. 4, 5, 100 Miss. 739.

Indorsement on face of instrument

The ordinary mode of "indorsing" a negotiable instrument is to write the name of the indorser upon the back of the paper; but, where the payee writes his name on the face of the note under the maker's signature, the effect is a transfer of title of the note to the transferee, and the payee becomes liable as an indorser. First Nat. Bank of Etowah v. Messer, 71 S. E. 148, 149, 136 Ga. 226.

INDORSEE

See Joint Indorsees.

As purchaser for value, see Purchaser for Value.

The meaning of the word "indorsee" in Act Dec. 9, 1893, amending the act of 1889, by providing that it shall extend to cases where any suit is instituted or defended by indorsee, assignee, transferee, or by personal representative of a deceased person, is ascertainable by reference to its etymology and applies to holders of notes, checks, etc., transferred by indorsement. Hendrick v. Daniel, 46 S. E. 438, 439, 119 Ga. 358.

INDORSEE IN DUE COURSE

Under Civ. Code, § 2199, which declares that an "indorsee in due course" is one who, in good faith, in the ordinary course of business and for value, before its apparent maturity, and without knowledge of dishonor, acquires a negotiable instrument duly indorsed to him, or indorsed generally, or payable to the bearer, a purchaser of two overdue notes containing a clause showing that they were secured by a chattel mortgage to the payee, of even date, who, at the same time, takes an assignment of such mortgage, showing that seven other notes were given as a part of the same transaction, and which provides that if default should be made in payment of the notes, or any part thereof, when due, the whole amount secured by the mortgage should become due and payable, acquires none of them before maturity, but is affected with notice as to defenses against all the notes, though on their face some of them are not then due. Rowe v. Scott, 182 N. W. 695, 696, 28 S. D. 145.

As expressly defined by Civ. Code, § 4034, "an 'indorsee in due course' is one who, in good faith, in the ordinary course of business, and for value, before its apparent maturity or presumptive dishonor, and without knowledge of its actual dishonor, acquires a negotiable instrument duly indorsed to him, or indorsed generally, or payable to the bearer." Under section 4035, providing that no defense can be maintained against the holder of a negotiable instrument in due course, except that of payment, and under section 4034, the fact that a purchaser of a check takes it under circumstances which would put a reasonably prudent man upon inquiry, does not prevent him from being a holder in due course, unless the circumstances are such as to show bad faith. Harrington v. Butte & Boston Min. Co., 83 Pac. 467, 469, 83 Mont. 330, 114 Am. St. Rep. 821.

INDORSEMENT FOR COLLECTION

An indorsement on a draft by a bank to whom it is made payable, as follows: "Pay to any bank or banker or order"—is an "indorsement for collection," and not a transfer of the title of the draft. Bank of In- dian Territory v. First Nat. Bank, 83 S. W. 537, 538, 109 Mo. App. 665.

INDORSEMENT IN BLANK

The term "indorsement" in Revisal 1905, § 2151, providing that an instrument is payable to bearer when the only or last indorsement is an "indorsement in blank," applies only to negotiable instruments, and a blank indorsement on a nonnegotiable note does not thereby make the instrument negotiable. Johnson v. Lassiter, 71 S. E. 23, 24, 155 N. C. 47.

A written assignment on the back of a promissory note payable to the order of the payee, signed by such payee, is the equivalent of a "blank indorsement" to transfer title to the note free from equities, either under the law merchant or Comp. St. Neb. 1901, § 3380, which makes a note negotiable by indorsement where payable "to any person or order or to any person or assigns." Leahy v. Haworth, 141 Fed. 850, 861, 73 C. C. A. 84, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 657.

INDORSER

See Accommodation Indorser; Subsequent Indorser.

While the word "indorser" has an ordinary, legal, and technical meaning, its use in designating a person who signs a negotiable paper will not conclude the parties, and that the person is bound by a different obligation may be shown. Peters v. Nolan Coal Co., 56 S. E. 735, 736, 61 W. Va. 392, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 989 (quoting and adopting definitions in Miller v. Clendenin, 26 S. E. 512, 42 W. Va. 416).

The term "indorser," as used in the provision of the Constitution relating to promissory notes, means a person who has entered into a contract of indorsement, as distinguished from contracts of a different class, as a contract of guaranty. An entry on a conditional contract of sale in these words, "For value received," we hereby guarantee the payment of the within conditional purchase contract and waive presentation, demand, protest, notice, and nonpayment, and notice of protest," is not a transfer of the contract, nor an indorsement. Andrews v. John Church Co., 58 S. E. 130, 133, 1 Ga. App. 560.

While the word "indorser" is frequently used in a popular way to designate a maker who subscribes his name on the back of a note, as well as an indorser in the technical sense of the term, yet when the parties to the contract testifying that the indorsement was an accommodation one only, appear to be intelligent business men knowing the technical import of the term, the trial court may infer that the term was understandingly used. Heaton v. Dickson, 133 S. W. 159, 161, 153 Mo. App. 312.

The use of the word "indorser" or "indorsement," in a conversation between the parties anterior to the signing of the instrument, is not decisive of the obligation of the party who signed across the back, for both words are used popularly to designate a maker who subscribes his name on the back of a note, as well as an indorser in the technical sense of the term. Oexner v. Loehr, 80 S. W. 690, 691, 106 Mo. App. 412.

The words "indorse" and "indorser" have a popular as well as a technical meaning; hence from the circumstance that they, and they alone, were used in a conversation in which a person was asked and consented to put his name on the back of a note for the purpose of increasing its commercial value, it does not necessarily follow that the person signed as indorser merely, and not as surety. Redden v. Lambert, 36 South. 668, 669, 112 La. 740.

The transferrer of a nonnegotiable written contract does not, by signing his name on the back of it, make himself liable as "maker," "guarantor," or "indorser," within Rem. & Bal. Code § 6250, providing that the discounting of commercial paper, where the borrower makes himself liable as maker, guarantor, or indorser, shall be considered as a loan for the purpose of the chapter relating to usury. Thomson v. Koch, 113 Pac. 1110, 1111, 1112, 62 Wash. 438.

A third person, signing a note on the face thereof, and placing the word "indorser" after his name, is not an "indorser" known to the law merchant, and is therefore not entitled to demand or protest or notice of nonpayment. His liability is either that of a maker or guarantor. Herrick v. Edwards, 81 S. W. 466, 467, 106 Mo. App. 633.

The negotiable instruments law provides that a person placing his signature upon an instrument, otherwise than as maker, drawer, or acceptor, is deemed to be an "indorser," unless he clearly indicated by appropriate words his intention to be bound in some other capacity. Wolstenholme v. Smith, 97 Pac. 329, 330, 84 Utah, 300; National Exch. Bank v. Lubrano, 68 Atl. 944, 945, 29 R. I. 64 (citing McLean v. Bryer, 54 Atl. 373, 24 R. I. 599; Downey v. O'Keefe, 50 Atl. 929, 26 R. I. 571; Deahy v. Choquet, 67 Atl. 421, 28 R. I. 338, 14 L. R. A. [N. S.] 847).

Negotiable Instruments Law, art. 1, § 3, provides that the person primarily liable on an instrument is the person who, by the terms thereof, is absolutely required to pay the same, and that all other parties are secondarily liable. Article 6, § 71, provides that a person placing his signature on an instrument otherwise than as maker, drawer, or acceptor is deemed to be an indorser, unless he clearly indicates his intention to be bound in some other capacity. Article 8, § 97, provides that, where a negotiable in-instrument has been dishonored, if notice of dishonor is not given to an indorser, he shall be discharged. Held, that persons who placed their signatures on the back of a note before delivery for the accommodation of the maker were "indorsers," and were discharged by failure to give notice of dishonor unless waived. Deahy v. Choquet, 67 Atl. 421, 422, 28 R. I. 338.

Negotiable Instruments Law, § 114, providing that a person not otherwise a party to an instrument, who places thereon his signature in blank before delivery, is liable as an indorser in accordance with prescribed rules, changes the rule that a person who puts his name on the back of bills or notes before delivery is presumably a second indorser and not liable to the payee, and such an indorser is presumed to be liable in accordance with the express language of the statute. Haddock, Blanchard & Co. v. Haddock, 85 N. E. 682, 685, 192 N. Y. 499, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 136.

Under the Negotiable Instruments Law, § 63, providing that one placing his signature on an instrument otherwise than as maker, drawer, or acceptor is deemed an indorser unless he indicates his intention to be bound in some other capacity, one placing his name on the back of a note before it is delivered to the payee, without indicating any intention to be bound in any other capacity than as indorser, is an "indorser." First Nat. Bank v. Bickel, 187 S. W. 790, 791, 143 Ky. 754.

Defendant deposited with complainant bank notes indorsed by defendant to secure indebtedness to the bank. On maturity of the notes the bank urged defendant for payment, and defendant urged the maker. To secure an extension of time, the maker deposited collateral with defendant, who in turn procured an extension. Later the maker gave defendant a check on another bank, which defendant indorsed and sent to complainant for application of the proceeds to the notes. The check was returned to complainant for want of funds. Held, that defendant was an "indorser" of the check, within Negotiable Instruments Law, § 63, and as such entitled to discharge, in default of notice of dishonor, within sections 71, 83, 84, 89, 102. American Nat. Bank v. National Fertilizer Co., 143 S. W. 597, 600, 125 Tenn. 328.

Negotiable Instruments Law, §§ 63, 64, abrogates the rule laid down in Chaddock v. Vanness, 35 N. J. Law, 517, 10 Am. Rep. 256, and subjects a person not otherwise a party to a promissory note who places his signature thereon in blank before delivery, to the liability of "indorser" in favor of the payee and subsequent parties. Gibbs v. Guaraglia, 67 Atl. 81, 82, 75 N. J. Law, 168 (citing Wilson v. Hendee, 66 Atl. 413, 415, 74 N. J. Law, 640).

"An 'indorser' of a negotiable instrument is one who undertakes to be responsible to the holder of the paper for the amount thereof, if the latter shall, at maturity, make legal demand of the payer; and, in default of payment, give proper notice thereof to the indorser." By force of the Ohio statute establishing a law uniform with the laws of other states on negotiable instruments, a person placing his name in blank on the back of a promissory note, before or at the time of delivery, is an "indorser," and cannot be held in any other capacity. As such he is entitled, in order to render him liable, to notice of demand upon those who are primarily liable, and, failing such demand and due notice to him, he is discharged. Rockfield v. First Nat. Bank of Springfield, 83 N. E. 392, 394, 77 Ohio St. 311, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 842.

By the express provisions of Revisal 1905, §§ 2212, 2213, 2219, 2239, one indorsing a note in blank before delivery, without indicating his intention to be bound otherwise, is an "indorser," who, not being given notice of nonpayment and dishonor, is discharged. J. W. Perry Co. v. Taylor Bros., 62 S. E. 423, 148 N. C. 362.

As creditor

See Creditor.

Maker distinguished

The testimony of a witness who signed his name on the back of a note executed by another that the payee told the maker that he could obtain the loan if he could get two indorsers, and that the witness should be one of the indorsers, and that witness signed with another as indorser, was admissible to show that the witness assumed the liability of indorser only; the word "indorser," when used alone, having a technical meaning, and is distinguished from the word "maker." Woodsville Guaranty Sav. Bank v. Rogers, 83 Atl. 537, 538, 86 Vt. 121.

INDUBITABLE

In the case of Cullmans v. Lindsay, 6 Atl. 332, 114 Pa. 166, Mr. Justice Clark said: "The parol evidence, however, which will be effective to reform a written instrument in such a case, must, it is said, be clear, precise and 'indubitable'; that is to say, it must carry clear conviction to the minds of the jurors that the witnesses are credible, that the facts are distinctly remembered and are truly and accurately stated—and to the mind of the court that, if the facts alleged are true, the matters in issue are definitely and distinctly established." Spencer v. Colt, 89 Pa. 314; Honesdale Glass Co. v. Storms, 17 Atl. 347, 125 Pa. 268; Tritt v. Crotzer, 13 Pa. 451. The lower court in the instant case charged that: "The evidence must be indubitable. 'Indubitable' means without doubt. That does not mean without any doubt. It means a doubt which rises from the evidence, which is reasonable, and would cause an honest mind to hesitate before arriving at a conclusion." Held not error. Robinson v. Powell, 59 Atl. 1078, 1082, 210 Pa. 232.

"Indubitable proof," in a rule that the standard of proof in suits to reform written instruments is clear, precise, and indubitable, is evidence that is not only found to be credible, but of such weight and directness as to make out the facts alleged beyond a reasonable doubt. Highlands v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 58 Atl. 560, 562, 209 Pa. 236.

An "indubitable title" is one open to no possible objection, however trivial. Jackson v. Creek, 94 N. E. 416, 421, 47 Ind. App. 541.

INDUCE

To "induce" means to persuade, to coax, to prevail on, to move by persuasion or influence. In a prosecution for assault to rape, instructions requiring the state to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant did lay or put his hands on prosecutrix's person, with the intent to "induce" her thereby to submit against her will to sexual intercourse with him, and that he intended to have sexual intercourse with her at the time he laid or put his hands on her person, etc., were fatally defective; the acts hypothesized being consistent with an intent on the defendant's part merely to coax prosecutrix to submit to sexual intercourse. "To 'induce' her to submit to sexual intercourse with him means only to persuade, coax her, to submit to sexual intercourse with him, and this falls far short of an intention to have carnal knowledge of her person 'forcibly against her will.'" Rahke v. State, 81 N. E. 584, 596, 168 Ind. 615.

Under St. 1898, § 4423, providing that any one who shall "obtain" money under false pretenses shall be punished, an indictment alleging that defendant by false pretenses "induced" the county to pay him a certain sum, is sufficient, since the word "induced," in its ordinary acceptance means the same as the word "obtained." State v. Brown, 127 N. W. 956, 957, 143 Wis. 405.

Where defendant was present, encouraging, assisting, and advising another in killing decedent, the law presumes that defendant's presence, etc., "induced" the commission of the act. Bast v. Commonwealth, 99 S. W. 978, 980, 124 Ky. 747.

The information for obtaining money by false pretenses, alleging merely that the prosecuting witness "was induced" to pay defendant a certain sum, and not that defendant was actually paid said sum, is insufficient. State v. Johnston, 134 S. W. 38, 39, 154 Mo. App. 265.

INDUCE TO SUPPOSE

The word "convince," as used in an instruction as to the necessity of sufficient evidence to convince accused of apparent danger to excuse a homicide, was too strong a word; the phrase "induce to suppose" expressing the right meaning. People v. Williams, 88 N. E. 1053, 1056, 240 Ill. 633.

INDUCEMENT

Matter of inducement in pleading is the statement of matter which is introductory to the principal subject of the declaration or plea, and which is necessary to explain or elucidate it. Armello v. Whitman, 106 S. W. 1113, 1114, 127 Mo. App. 698 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.; citing 22 Cyc. p. 498).

In libel and slander

An "inducement" is a statement of facts out of which the charge arises, or which is necessary or useful to make the charge intelligible, or, in other words, it is intended to state facts whereby the libel or slander is rendered intelligible, and is shown to contain an injurious imputation. Penry v. Dosier, 49 South. 909, 913, 161 Ala. 292.

INDUCTION

Self-induction and resistance distinguished, see Self-Induction and Resistance.

INDUSTRIAL

INDUSTRIAL INSURANCE

"Industrial insurance" means small policies issued in consideration of weekly payments in contradistinction to the ordinary insurance, where premiums are payable annually, semiannually, or quarterly. Russell v. Prudential Ins. Co., 68 N. E. 252, 253, 176 N. Y. 178, 98 Am. St. Rep. 656.

An insurance policy which, by its terms, expired one year after issuance, unless renewed, and provided for the payment of weekly indemnity in cases of accident or injury arising from violent or external means, and a stipulated payment in case of death from those causes, is an industrial or accident policy, instead of a life policy; and so, in an action on such policy, the inhibitions of Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 6155, 6159, respectively, providing that no policy of life or endowment insurance, except policies of "industrial insurance," shall be issued, unless it provides that the policy and application shall constitute the entire contract, and that every policy, except industrial or those calling for premiums monthly or oftener, shall have attached thereto a correct copy of the application, and, unless so attached, it shall not be considered a part of the policy or be received in evidence, do not apply so as to exclude evidence of insured's assignment of his wages for the payment of monthly premiums, though such assignment was not made part of the application. Pride v. Continental Casualty Co., 125 Pac. 787, 788, 69 Wash. 423.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL

"Our 'industrial school' is not a place of punishment, nor is it in any sense a pri-on, no more so than our public schools, upon which the law requires and enforces an attendance. It is a place of education, reformation, refinement, and culture. It is a beneficent provision for the uplift of boys, who by reason of their surroundings and conditions, are deprived of an education and moral training, which are so essential to their well-being and good citizenship," and a commitment to the industrial school is not a severer punishment than a fine, so as to require the infliction of the fine as the lesser penalty. Roberts v. State, 118 N. W. 574, 576, 82 Neb. 651 (quoting and adopting definition in Leiby v. State, 113 N. W. 125, 79 Neb. 485).

INDUSTRY

Other industry, see Other.

INEBRIATE

The term "inebriates," as used in Laws 1907, p. 387, c. 288, creating a hospital for inebriates, includes every species of chronic inebriety that is habitual drunkenness; hence an inebriate, as defined by the act, is an habitual drunkard. Leavitt v. City of Morris, 117 N. W. 393, 396, 105 Minn. 170, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 984, 15 Ann. Cas. 961.

INEBRIETY

See, also, Intoxicated—Intoxication.

Though one may be said to be under the influence of liquor, he is not necessarily intoxicated, this being far short of "intoxication" which is the synonym of "inebriety" and "drunkenness"; the word "intoxicated" being synonymous with "drunk," and "drunk" being defined in the Standard Dictionary as to have lost the normal control of one's bodily and mental faculties. Freeburg v. State, 138 N. W. 143, 144, 92 Neb. 346, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1101 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3734, 3735).

INELIGIBLE

The term "ineligible," in respect to elections to office, as used in the Constitution and Code 1907, § 1467, declaring persons who are ineligible to hold office, refers to the time of election, and not to the time fixed for entering upon the office. Finklea v. Farish, 49 South. 366, 368, 160 Ala. 230.

Under Laws 1879, p. 243, § 10, declaring a county treasurer "ineligible" to office for more than two consecutive terms, an appointment to complete the term of another is not an election to office for a term, and such appointment and holding for ten months thereunder does not make one "ineligible" to be elected for the office for the two consecutive terms immediately following the term during which he was so appointed. Dodson v. Bowlby, 110 N. W. 698, 700, 78 Neb. 190.

INEQUITABLE

INEQUITABLE CONDUCT

"Inequitable conduct," as applied to cases on contract calling for reformation, consists in doing acts, or omitting things, or the making of representations, tending naturally to deceive as to the true interpretation of the contract, which the court finds to be unconscionable. American Fruit Product Co. v. Barrett & Barrett, 128 N. W. 1009, 1011, 113 Minn. 22.

INEVITABLE

Dangerous conditions of the work or business which can be obviated by the use of practical devices, well known and in general use, are not "inevitable." Barney v. Quaker Oats Co., 82 Atl. 113, 126, 85 Vt. 372.

INEVITABLE ACCIDENT

See, also, Vis Major.

An accident is inevitable if the person in connection with whom it occurs neither has, nor is legally bound to have, sufficient power to avoid it or prevent its injuring another; and in such a case, the essential element of legal duty being wanting, the person cannot be held negligent. Roanoke Ry. & Electric Co. v. Sterrett, 62 S. E. 385, 387, 108 Va. 533, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 816, 128 Am. St. Rep. 971.

An accident is "inevitable" if the person by whom it occurs neither has nor is legally bound to have sufficient power to avoid it or prevent its injuring another. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Snell, 106 S. W. 170, 174, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 413 (quoting Shear & R. Neg. 6).

Under the employers' liability act, where the jury would have been justified from plaintiff's testimony in referring plaintiff's injury to inevitable accident (that is, accident which prudence on the part of defendant, or those employees standing in places of responsibility in respect to plaintiff, could not have anticipated), or they might have referred it to the negligence of plaintiff's coemployee, who was a fellow servant, there was nothing to take the case to the jury, and a general charge for defendant was proper. Walton v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co., 52 South. 328, 166 Ala. 538.

To sustain the defense of "inevitable accident" in a suit for collision, the defendant has the burden of proof, and must show either what was the cause of the accident, and that the result of that cause was inevitable, or he must show all the possible causes and with regard to every one of such possible causes that the result could not have been avoided. The Edmund Moran, 180 Fed. 700, 701, 104 C. C. A. 552.

The breaking of mooring posts on a pier during a strong wind and while the pier was being used by an unusually large steamer cannot be deemed an "inevitable accident," where inadequate provisions to avoid the accident were taken. Coxe Bros. & Co. v. Cunard S. S. Co., Limited, 174 Fed. 166, 173 (citing The Louisiana, 3 Wall. [70 U. S.] 164, 173, 174, 18 L. Ed. 85; The Mabey, 14 Wall. [81 U. S.] 204, 215, 20 L. Ed. 881).

Rev. Civ. Code 1870, art. 2754, makes carriers liable for loss of goods carried unless they can prove that such loss was occasioned by "accidental and uncontrollable events." The court says that it seems these words were used in the same sense as "cas fortuit," "force majeure," or "fortuitous event," as defined in Code of 1825, which was that which happens by a cause or force which we cannot resist and the force majeure or "superior force" is an accident which human prudence can neither foresee nor prevent. These various phrases are held to be the equivalent of the common-law phrase "the act of God," and the holding is that a carrier is liable unless he can show that the loss was occasioned by an "act of God," as used in that sense. The words are also the equivalent of "inevitable accident," by which, according to Story on Bailments, "is meant any accident produced by any physical cause which is irresistible, such as loss by lightning or storms, by perils of the seas, by an inundation or earthquake, or by sudden death or illness. By 'irresistible force' is meant such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable." The words "accident per se" mean an unforeseen and unexpected event, and the word "uncontrollable" further qualifies the event as one which cannot be restrained or prevented. Lehman, Stern & Co. v. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. S. Co., 38 South. 873, 874, 115 La. 1, 70 L. R. A. 562, 112 Am. St. Rep. 259, 5 Ann. Cas. 818.

Degree of care required

An "inevitable accident" is something that human skill and foresight could not, in the exercise of ordinary prudence, have provided against. The Drumcraig, 133 Fed. 804 (citing The Pennsylvania, 24 How. [85 U. S.] 307, 16 L. Ed. 699).

An accident which could not be prevented by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence is an "inevitable accident," for which no recovery of damages can be had. Gismondi v. People's Ry. Co. (Del.) 83 Atl. 136, 138, 2 Boyce, 577.

An accident, which with the exercise of proper care could have been anticipated and provided against, is not "inevitable." Bleakley v. City of New York, 139 Fed. 807, 808.

In the admiralty law the phrase "inevitable accident" has a comprehensive meaning, and it is not necessary that the accident should be the result of a vis major.

If no negligence can be imputed to either vessel in a collision, there is a presumption that they were navigating in a lawful manner and the accident may be said to be inevitable; the test being whether the collision could have been prevented by the exercise of ordinary care, caution, and maritime skill. The Jumna, 149 Fed. 171, 172, 79 C. C. A. 119.

"Inevitable accident," as applied to navigation, means that the parties charged with fault have endeavored by every means in their power, with due care and caution and a proper display of nautical skill, to prevent the occurrence of the accident. "Inevitable accident," which will exonerate a vessel from liability for a collision, or for a destruction of property, does not mean an accident which was unavoidable under any circumstances, but one which could not be prevented by the exercise of ordinary care, caution, and maritime skill. The Blackheath, 154 Fed. 758, 759 (citing The Mabey, 14 Wall. [81 U. S.] 204, 20 L. Ed. 881).

The term "inevitable accident," as applied to a collision, means "a collision which occurs when both parties have endeavored by every means in their power with due care and caution and a proper display of nautical skill to prevent the occurrence of the accident, and where the proofs show that it occurred in spite of everything that nautical skill, care, and precaution could do to keep the vessels from coming together." New York & Oriental S. S. Co. v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 143 Fed. 991, 993 (quoting The Mabey & Cooper, 14 Wall. [81 U. S.] 204, 215, 20 L. Ed. 881).

Unavoidable accident synonymous

See Unavoidable Accident.

INEVITABLE NECESSITY

The "inevitable necessity" which authorizes a departure from a rule adopted to determine the line of a boundary of land means an impossibility of locating the lines in accordance with the rule. "Inevitable necessity" is therefore not an exception to the rule, but a limitation upon it. Davis v. Commonwealth Land & Lumber Co., 141 Fed. 740, 755.

INFAMOUS

INFAMOUS CRIME

Const. U. S. Amend. 5, provides that for an infamous offense one shall not be required to answer unless on the presentment or indictment of a grand jury. Held, that an offense is "infamous" if it involves imprisonment for more than one year with or without hard labor, and that a "crime" within such provisions is not necessarily an infamous offense, but includes every offense of a serious or atrocious character, involving the possible infliction of long terms of imprisonment.

which offenses must be tried by a jury. Low v. United States, 169 Fed. 86, 89, 94 C. C. A. 1.

Determined by kind of punishment—
Death or imprisonment in penitentiary

"A crime which might have been punished by imprisonment in a penitentiary is an 'infamous crime,' even if the sentence actually pronounced is of a small fine only." The Paquette Habana, 20 Sup. Ct. 290, 175 U. S. 677, 682, 44 L. Ed. 320.

An "infamous crime" is one the punishment for which may be confinement in the penitentiary, with or without hard labor. United States v. J. Lindsay Wells Co., 186 Fed. 248, 249.

The significance of the term "infamous crime" was for many years defined by statute (Rev. St. N. Y. [1st Ed.] pt. 4, c. 1, tit. 7, § 31), which declared that wherever the term "infamous crime" should be used in any statute it shall be construed as including every offense punishable with death or by imprisonment in a state prison, and no other. That a husband was convicted of a misdemeanor and fined $50 did not make him incompetent to administer on the estate of his deceased wife under Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 2661, providing that letters of administration shall not be granted a person convicted of an infamous crime. In re O'Hara, 113 N. Y. Supp. 281, 282, 60 Misc. Rep. 269.

Same—Imprisonment for term of years

Under Acts 1838, p. 981, c. 8, § 8, providing that every person who shall be sentenced under any provision of the act to imprisonment for life, or for a term of one year or more, for any offense, shall forever thereafter be incapable of being elected to any office of honor, trust, or profit in the state, and of acting as a freeman therein, and of giving testimony as a witness before any tribunal in the state, unless such conviction be reversed, an offense punishable by imprisonment for one year or more, only, is an "infamous crime," within Const. art. 1, § 7, providing that no person shall be held to answer for a capital or other infamous crime, unless on presentment or indictment by a grand jury, etc. State v. Nichols, 60 Atl. 763, 768, 27 R. I. 69.

Determined by nature of crime

An "infamous crime" at common law was regarded as comprehending treason, felony, and the crimes falsi. United States v. Sims, 161 Fed. 1008, 1012 (citing Sylvester v. State, 71 Ala. 25).

A crime may be "infamous" within Const. U. S. Amend. 5, providing that no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury, without being a felony, and there is no general definition in the federal statutes separating and defining felonies and misdemeanors. When a statute therefore creates an offense and does not define it to be either a felony or a misdemeanor, recourse must be had to the common law to determine what it is, and, though the word tests are obsolete, an offense is held to be a felony which was such when those tests were operative. Hume v. United States, 118 Fed. 689, 698, 55 C. C. A. 407.

Assault and battery

Assault and battery is not an "infamous crime," where the punishment may be no more than a nominal fine as well as imprisonment for a term of years. The grade of the offense must be determined by the evidence adduced rather than by the fact alleged. State v. Cram, 24 Atl. 853, 854, 84 Me. 271.

Conspiracy

Conspiracy to defraud the United States being punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary is an infamous crime within Const. U. S. Amend. 5, providing that no person shall be held for infamous crime except on a presentment or indictment by a grand jury. United States v. London, 176 Fed. 976, 977.

Larceny

Petit larceny, though a misdemeanor as provided by Rev. St. 1909, § 4925, belongs to the class of crimes known as crimes falsi; and, since the person convicted is disqualified to serve as a juror or from voting at any election or holding any office of trust, honor, or profit as provided by section 4631, it is an "infamous crime" within section 2370, providing for a divorce on the ground that the defendant has been convicted of an infamous crime without the knowledge of the plaintiff at the time of the marriage. Hartwig v. Hartwig, 142 S. W. 797, 799, 160 Mo. App. 284.

Const. art. 2, § 8, provides that no person shall be held to answer for a criminal offense unless on indictment, except in cases in which the punishment is by fine, or imprisonment otherwise than in the penitentiary. Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 38, div. 2, § 7, provides that every person convicted of the crime of larceny, etc., shall be deemed infamous and shall forever thereafter be rendered incapable of holding office, voting, serving as juror, etc. Held, in view of the course of legislation concerning larceny, which at all times has recognized larceny as infamous, though the punishment was changed and a distinction made between petit and grand larceny, that petit larceny was an "infamous" crime under section 7, for which additional punishment was provided, and must be prosecuted by indictment, and not by information. The fact that courts have assumed jurisdiction for many years without question of prosecutions for petit larceny on information will not make a prosecution so brought lawful, where by the plain terms of Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 38, div. 2, § 7, petit larceny is an infamous crime, which must be prosecuted by indictment. People v. Russell, 91 N. E. 1075, 245 Ill. 268.

Overcharge for prosecuting pension claim

One convicted of making an overcharge for prosecuting a pension claim, in violation of Act Cong. June 27, 1890, c. 634, § 4, 26 Stat. 183, and subject to imprisonment in the discretion of the court, has not been convicted of a "crime rendering him infamous according to law," within Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 98, § 51, making one convicted of a "crime rendering him infamous according to law" disqualified from acting as executor, though it be assumed that in the contemplation of the federal jurisdiction the offense be deemed an infamous one. Garitee v. Bond, 62 Atl. 631, 633, 102 Md. 379, 111 Am. St. Rep. 385, 5 Ann. Cas. 915.

Rape

Rape being a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term of years at hard labor is an "infamous crime," within U. S. Const. Amend. 5, requiring one charged with an infamous crime to be tried on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury. Garnsey v. State, 112 Pac. 24, 30, 4 Okl. Cr. 547, 88 L. R. A. (N. S.) 600.

Violation of excise laws

It could hardly be said that a person who had been convicted, upon indictment, of a violation of the excise law, that being a misdemeanor, was convicted of an "infamous crime." The statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 2861) declaring that letters of administration shall not be granted to a person convicted of an "infamous crime" contemplates the conviction of some crime of a serious nature. Were that not so it would have left out the word "infamous" and would have provided that a person who had been convicted of "crime" would be disqualified from being appointed administrator. "The signification of the term 'infamous crime,' wherever that expression occurs in our statutes, is absolutely fixed. * * * It is there declared that 'whenever the term "infamous crime" is used in any statute it shall be construed as including every offense punishable with death, or by imprisonment in a state prison, and no other.'" In re Greene's Estate, 96 N. Y. Supp. 98, 101, 48 Misc. Rep. 31 (citing O'Brien v. Neubert [N. Y.] 3 Dem. Sur. 156).

Violation of liquor laws

"An 'infamous crime' is that which works infamy in the person who has committed it." The illegal transportation of intoxicating liquors in violation of Rev. St. c. 27, § 31, as amended by Acts 1891, c. 132, § 2, authorizing a punishment for a term of not less than one year, is an "infamous crime." Butler v. Wentworth, 24 Atl. 456, 457, 84 Me. 25, 17 L. R. A. 764.

INFAMOUS PUNISHMENT

Fine or imprisonment in the county jail constitutes "infamous punishment." Earley v. Winn, 109 N. W. 633, 640, 129 Wis. 291.

"For more than a century imprisonment at hard labor in the state prison or penitentiary or other similar institution has been considered an infamous punishment in England and America." An order of a police magistrate directing that a person shall serve a term in the chain gang was a sentence to infamous punishment, where the members of the chain gang wore the typical striped clothing of the penitentiary convict, with iron manacles riveted on their legs which could only be removed by the use of the cold chisel, the irons on each leg connected by chains, and their progress to and from work was public, and from dawn to dark, with brief intermissions, they toiled on the public roads and before the public eye. Jamison v. Wimbish, 130 Fed. 351, 355 (quoting Ex parte Wilson, 5 Sup. Ct. 935, 114 U. S. 417, 29 L. Ed. 89).

INFANT

As person, see Natural Person; Person.

INFANTICIDE

To constitute "infanticide" the child must have been totally expelled alive from its mother's body, must have lived in an independent existence after such expulsion, and its death must have been caused by violence, inflicted upon it by some other person after the commencement of its independent existence. Cordes v. State, 112 S. W. 943, 945, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 204.

INFECTION

"Infection," as used in an accident policy, providing that, where loss is occasioned or contributed to in any way by erysipelas, blood poisoning, or infection, then in cases designated the amount payable shall be one-fourth of the amount which otherwise would be payable, relates to external injuries, and does not include internal inflammations, where pus is formed by the presence of pus germs. Continental Casualty Co. v. Colvin, 95 Pac. 565, 570, 77 Kan. 561.

INFECTIOUS DISEASE

In an action against a railroad for damages to a shipment of hogs through wrongful exposure by defendant to cholera or other disease during transportation, an instruction was not objectionable as assuming as a matter of law that cholera is an "infectious disease." The admitted fact that the disease readily transmits itself excuses the use of the word "infectious" in describing that characteristic. It is true lexicographers and scientific persons observed a well-defined difference in the meanings of the words "contagious" and "infectious"; but courts should be slow to predicate error on such technical distinction. Evidently the word "infectious" was employed in the petition and instructions to express the property of transmissibility in the disease or diseases to which the hogs were wrongfully exposed and of which they died, and in this general sense its use was proper. Council v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 100 S. W. 57, 61, 123 Mo. App. 432.

INFECTIOUS SUBSTANCE

"Infectious substances" ordinarily mean substances that are in their nature infectious and that are generally recognized as such. Death caused by a poisonous germ received into the body through the bite of a dog is not a case of contact with poisonous or "infectious substances" without the accident benefits of an insurance policy. Such bite is an accident and should be classed under the "accident provisions" of the policy. Farner v. Massachusetts Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 87 Atl. 927, 928, 219 Pa. 71, 123 Am. St. Rep. 621.

INFER

See Contract Inferred from Facts.

INFERENCE

An "inference" can only be drawn from facts. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Vallejo, 118 S. W. 4, 6, 102 Tex. 70.

An "inference," as applied to the submission of questions of fact to the jury, must be based upon proven facts and cannot be based upon other inferences or presumptions. Miller v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 118 N. W. 344, 346, 18 N. D. 19, 19 Ann. Cas. 1215.

An "inference" is a deduction which the reason of the jury makes from the facts proved without an express direction of law to that effect. Keen v. Keen, 90 Pac. 147, 149, 49 Or. 362, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 504, 14 Ann. Cas. 45 (citing B. & C. Comp. § 783); Lake County v. Neilon, 74 Pac. 212, 214, 44 Or. 14.

"Inference" is a deduction or conclusion from facts or propositions known to be true. When the facts themselves are directly attested, the jury may deduce or infer or presume from them the truth or falsity of the main proposition. An inference of fact can be found by a jury only from other facts proven. A jury, instead of basing their verdict upon a fact proved, based it upon a probability. A probability is not a proven fact, and hence the inference drawn from it cannot be properly based upon it. Seavey v. Laughlin, 57 Atl. 796, 797, 98 Me. 517 (quoting Gates v. Hughes, 44 Wis. 336).

An "inference," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 40, which provides a presumption of survivorship of persons perishing in the same calamity, unless particular circumstances are shown from which it can be inferred which of the persons survived, is not limited to the definition prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1958, as a deduction which the reason of the jury makes from the facts found without an express direction of law to that effect, but should be construed to mean a conclusion drawn by reason from premises established by proof, a deduction or conclusion from facts or propositions known to be true, under section 1960, declaring that an inference must be founded on a fact legally proved, or on such a deduction from that fact as is warranted by a consideration of the usual propensities or passions of men, the particular propensities or passions of the person whose act is in question, the course of business, or the course of nature. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. of Washington v. Miller, 96 Pac. 22, 23, 8 Cal. App. 25.

A passenger of another railroad company required to pass over the depot platform of defendant railroad company was injured by stepping into an uncovered water hole in the platform. The defendant was in the exclusive control of the platform and water holes used for watering its trains, an extra number of which had been watered during the day before the accident. The weather was cold, and the employes were busy and had frequent occasion to uncover the holes and no other person had any authority to open them. The employes opening the holes were instructed not to leave them uncovered. Held that, though negligence will not be presumed, an inference within Rev. Codes, §§ 7956, 7957, 7959, declaring that an "inference" is one kind of indirect evidence, and a deduction, which the jury makes from the facts proved and must be founded on a fact legally proved, and on such a deduction from that fact as is warranted by a consideration of the usual propensities, that the employes omitted to re-cover the hole was justified, authorizing a recovery against the latter company. Jenkins v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 119 Pac. 794, 795, 44 Mont. 295.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1868, 1870 (15), 1958, 1960, declaring that evidence must be relevant to the question in dispute, and authorizing the giving of evidence on the trial of any of the facts from which the fact in issue is logically inferable, and defining "inference" as a deduction which the reason of the jury makes from the facts proved, it is within the discretion of the court to permit inquiry into collateral facts directly connected with the fact in dispute, and, unless the evidence admitted is without any weight in determining the issue, the ruling of the court in receiving it will not be reversed. Moody v. Peirano, 88 Pac. 380, 382, 4 Cal. App. 411.

Presumption distinguished

The fundamental characteristic of a "presumption," as distinguished from an "inference," is that the former affects the duty of producing further testimony, not merely the weight of that already produced. Bower v. Bower, 74 Atl. 522, 525, 78 N. J. Law, 387.

An "inference" is nothing more than a permissible deduction from the evidence, while a "presumption" is compulsory, and cannot be disregarded by the jury. Territory v. Lucero, 120 Pac. 804, 805, 16 N. M. 652, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 58.

Supposition distinguished

"Inference," in legal parlance, as respects evidence, is a very different thing from "supposition." The former is a deduction from proven facts, while the latter requires no such premise for its justification. Courts and juries, in dealing with the inquiry whether a party has discharged his burden of proof, cannot pronounce on mere supposition that the burden has been met, but can only establish the ultimate fact from others justifying such inference. Miller-Brent Lumber Co. v. Douglas, 52 South. 414, 415, 167 Ala. 286 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 8579; 8 Words and Phrases, p. 6807).

INFERIOR

The word "inferior" is defined by Webster as meaning less important or less valuable. In an action for breach of warranty of seed wheat, plaintiff alleged that defendant warranted the wheat to be "White Australian," but that it was actually wheat of an inferior variety and produced a crop of hay "inferior" to that which would have been grown had the wheat been of the variety warranted, whereby plaintiff was damaged. Held, that the complaint sufficiently alleged that the crop produced was of less value than the crop that would have been produced if the wheat had been as warranted. Moody v. Peirano (Cal.) 84 Pac. 788.

Const. art. 7, § 51, provides that in all cases of contest of election for any county, township, or municipal office, an appeal shall lie at the instance of the party aggrieved from any "inferior" board, council, or tribunal to the circuit court. Held, that the use of the word "inferior" indicated that a right of appeal to the circuit court was guaranteed only from "any inferior board, council, or tribunal" which the Legislature might create or empower to determine such contests. Sumpter v. Duffie, 97 S. W. 435, 80 Ark. 369.

INFERIOR COURT OF RECORD

As Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, c. 37, § 240, limits the jurisdiction of city courts to the cities in which the courts are established, such courts are "inferior courts of record" within chapter 53, § 5, providing that judges of inferior courts of record in towns and cities shall receive, in lieu of all other fees, perquisites, and benefits, in cities and towns having a population of more than 5,000 inhabitants, $1,500, to be paid out of the city treasury. Wolf v. Hope, 70 N. E. 1062, 1067, 210 Ill. 50.

INFERIOR COURTS

Board of supervisors

The board of supervisors of a county, though exercising judicial functions, is not an inferior court within Const. art. 6, § 5, providing that the superior court shall have appellate jurisdiction in cases arising in justices' and other inferior courts, as the term "inferior courts" are courts established for the administration of justice, charged with the exercise of judicial power as a substantive duty, but with limited jurisdiction usually confined to the limits of the city or town for which they are mainly created, and police, municipal, and recorders' courts are examples of inferior courts within the Constitution. Chinn v. Superior Court of San Joaquin County, 105 Pac. 580, 581, 156 Cal. 478.

St. 1893, p. 174, c. 147, providing for an appeal to the superior court from the decision of the board of supervisors in proceedings for establishment of reclamation districts is in conflict with Const. art. 6, § 5, limiting the appellate jurisdiction of the superior court to cases arising in justices and other inferior courts, for the board of supervisors, though exercising quasi judicial functions, is not an inferior court. Inglis v. Hoppin, 105 Pac. 582, 585, 156 Cal. 483.

Court-martial

A court-martial is not an inferior court within Const. § 89, giving the Supreme Court general superintending control over all inferior courts, it belonging to the executive department of the government, the inferior courts referred to being the courts enumerated in section 85 which belong to the judicial department. State v. Nuchols, 119 N. W. 632, 634, 18 N. D. 233, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 413.

Justice of the peace

A "city justice of the peace" provided for by Code Civ. Proc. § 103, does not come within the category of "inferior courts" specified in the Constitution, which the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town or city and county. Graham v. City of Fresno, 91 Pac. 147, 149, 151 Cal. 465.

Probate court

The probate court is an "inferior court" within Const. art. 6, § 8, giving the circuit courts power to issue writ of mandamus to control "inferior courts," as well as within article 6, § 3, giving the Supreme Court a general superintending control over "inferior courts"; the term meaning lower courts, and the circuit court has jurisdiction to issue mandamus to the probate court. Mitchell v. Bay Probate Judge, 119 N. W. 916, 917, 155 Mich. 550.

The probate court is an "inferior court" within Const. art. 6, § 8, giving the circuit courts power to issue the writ of certiorari necessary to give them general control over "inferior courts," as much as within article 6, § 8, giving the Supreme Court a general superintending control over "inferior courts." Mitchell v. Bay Probate Judge, 119 N. W. 916, 917, 155 Mich. 550.

A "city recorder's court" comes within the "inferior courts" specified in the Constitution which the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town or city and county. Graham v. City of Fresno, 91 Pac. 147, 149, 151 Cal. 465.

INFERIOR LOCAL COURTS

Laws 1897, c. 38, provided that the board of claims was thereby continued to be known as the Court of Claims, and that the commissioners should be known as judges of the Court of Claims, defined its jurisdiction, and authorized it to establish rules of practice, vacate and modify judgments, and grant new trials as well as to appoint court officers and adopt an official seal, and provided that its determination should be a judgment to be entered of record, and authorized appeals therefrom to the Appellate Division, and another provision (Code Civ. Proc. § 264) gave it jurisdiction to hear all private claims against the state, the purpose of the statute as shown by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 263-281, and Judiciary Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 30) § 2, being to have the proceedings and practice therein conform as nearly as possible to the highest courts of record. Const. art. 6, § 18, prohibits an inferior local court from being created as a court of record. Held, that the Legislature acted within its constitutional powers in creating the Court of Claims as a court of record; it not being an inferior local court within Const. art. 6, § 18. People ex rel. Swift v. Luce, 133 N. Y. Supp. 9, 12, 74 Misc. Rep. 551.

INFIDELITY

Accusation of, as cruelty, see Cruelty.

INFIRM

The statute which provides that depositions of witnesses may at the request of defendant be taken when the witness is aged or infirm has no reference to a woman who has been confined in childbirth, and such fact would not render her "infirm." Davis v. State, 141 S. W. 264, 267, 64 Tex. Cr. R. 8.

INFIRMITY

See Bodily Infirmary; Notice of Infirmary.

INFLAMMABLE

A fluid is "inflammable," within the meaning of Gen. St. 1902, § 4579, making it an offense to keep for sale any fluid for illuminating purposes inflammable at a less temperature than that fixed by the statute, where, upon ignition of the liquid or its vapor by the application of fire, the process of burning or combustion, if not checked or interrupted by some outside influence, continues until the fluid is consumed. State v. Boylan, 65 Atl. 595-597, 79 Conn. 463.

INFLAMMABLE LIQUID

Kerosene is not an "inflammable liquid" within the meaning of a policy of insurance. Buchanan v. Exchange Fire Ins. Co., 61 N. Y. 26, 29.

INFLECT—INFLECTION

An instruction that "by the term 'accident' is meant the infliction of the alleged injury to plaintiff's horse at the time and place in question" is not objectionable as implying an actual wrong from the use of the word "inflection." Kortendick v. Town of Watford, 125 N. W. 945, 947, 142 Wis. 413.

INFORMALITY

Entering judgment against garnishee without a prior order to him to make payment, in contravention of Ann. St. 1906, §§ 8439, 8440, 8452, is not a mere "informality" in entering judgment, for which section 672 provides judgments shall not be reversed. Walkeen Lewis Millinery Co. v. Johnson, 109 S. W. 847, 849, 130 Mo. App. 325.

INFORMATION

See Current Information; Denial of Knowledge or Information.

"Information" is defined as knowledge acquired, derived, or inculcated, as by observation, or by reading or study, or in conversation. Metcalf v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 112 N. W. 22, 24, 132 Wis. 67 (quoting and adopting definition in Stand. Dict. p. 924).

"Information" implies lack of knowledge. As, for instance, where one says he is informed of a thing, he knows he is informed of it, but he does not know it exists—he does not know his information is true, but he impliedly affirms that he does not know.

State v. Simpson, 118 S. W. 1187, 1188, 136 Mo. App. 664.

Under the Code authorizing a denial on information and belief by an allegation that the pleader has not the knowledge or information on which to base a belief, an allegation that as to plaintiff's corporate existence, the indorsement of the note sued on to it, and as to its being the owner and holder thereof, defendant cannot obtain sufficient information on which to base a belief, and hence denies such allegation, was insufficient; the words "knowledge" and "information" not being synonymous. Welles v. Colorado Nat. Life Assur. Co., 113 Pac. 524, 525, 49 Colo. 508.

Kirby's Dig. § 6200, provides that after the jury has retired for deliberation, if there is a disagreement as to any part of the testimony, or if they desire to be informed as to any point of law arising in the case, they may request the officer to conduct them into the court where the "information required" shall be given, in the presence of or after notice to the parties or their counsel, does not authorize the jury to reopen the case and interrogate witnesses on new matter, but merely to gain information as to what the testimony previously given really was, so as to settle disagreements among themselves as to what the witnesses had said; hence it is error for the court to permit the introduction of new matter by means of an examination of a witness by members of the jury. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Bennett (Ark.) 87 S. W. 1197 (concurring opinion of Hill, C. J.).

A complaint preferred on behalf of the state in a civil action is usually termed an "information." People v. McClellan, 105 N. Y. Supp. 844, 54 Misc. Rep. 130.

Where the Attorney General appeared in chancery as an officer of the crown to call the court's attention to a matter relating to a charity, where the trustees had improperly sold or leased the property or misapplied the property, the pleading was called an "information." MacKenzie v. Trustees of Presbytery of Jersey City, 61 Atl. 1027, 1040, 67 N. J. Eq. 652, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227.

Where a suit is brought by the Attorney General to enforce a public trust, the primary pleading is not a complaint, but an "information," and the officer bringing it is an informant. If he sues at the relation of others, they are relators, and the proceeding is called an "information ex relatione." MacKenzie v. Trustees of Presbytery of Jersey City, 61 Atl. 1027, 1040, 67 N. J. Eq. 652, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227.

Where a suit in the Court of Chancery is brought by the Attorney General by petition, the petition is called an "information." Fraser v. Fraser, 75 Atl. 979, 980, 77 N. J. Eq.

205 (citing Daniell, Ch. Pl. & Prac. p. 1 et seq.).

INFORMATION (In Criminal Law)

At common law an "information" was a surmise or suggestion upon record, made on behalf of the sovereign to a court of criminal jurisdiction, charging a person with the commission of a misdemeanor. They were of two kinds: First, such as were merely at the suit of the king; second, such as were partly at the suit of the king and partly at the suit of the party. In distinguishing the two kinds of informations exhibited in the name of the king, Blackstone describes them as those which are truly and properly his own suits, and filed ex officio by his own immediate officer, the Attorney General, and those in which, though the king is the nominal prosecutor, yet it is at the relation of some private person or common informer, and these are filed by the king's coroner and attorney in the Court of King's Bench. The objects of the king's own prosecutions, filed ex officio by his own Attorney General, were properly such enormous misdemeanors as peculiarly tended to disturb or endanger his government, or to molest or affront him in the discharge of his royal functions. The objects of the other species of informations filed by the master of the crown office upon the complaint or relation of a private subject are any gross and notorious misdemeanors, riots, batteries, libels, and other immoralities of any atrocious kind, not peculiarly tending to disturb the government, but which, on account of their magnitude or pernicious example, deserve the most public animadversion. State v. Guglielmo, 79 Pac. 577, 579, 46 Or. 260, 69 L. R. A. 466, 7 Ann. Cas. 976 (quoting and adopting the definition in 4 Black. Comm. 308).

The office of an "information" is not only to give the court jurisdiction to issue the warrant, but is the pleading by the state, informing defendant of what offense he is charged. Snapp v. State, 103 Pac. 553, 2 Okl. Cr. 515.

An "information" is not a "writ" or "process." It is an accusation upon which writs and processes issue. The clause of the Constitution providing that the style of all writs and processes shall be "the state of Oklahoma" does not require an information to begin with these words. It is sufficient if it appears from the record of a case that the prosecution was carried on in the name and by the authority of the state. But as a matter of good pleading it is well for indictments and informations to begin with these words. Caples v. State, 104 Pac. 493, 494, 497, 3 Okl. Cr. 72, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1033 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7531).

An "information," defined by Code Cr. Proc. § 145, as an allegation made to a magistrate that a person has been guilty of some designated crime, performs the same function as an indictment in a court of record, and must set forth facts to establish the crime, not with the exactness of an indictment, but with sufficient preciseness to inform the magistrate that a designated crime has been committed, and it should allege the time, place, person, and other circumstances that constitute the crime. People v. Wacke, 137 N. Y. Supp. 652, 653, 77 Misc. Rep. 196.

Affidavit, signature, and verification

An "information," as defined in the Oregon statute modifying the grand jury system, is the complaint made by the district attorney, and, as the district attorney in Oregon is not required to secure leave of court before he can file an information, it need not be specially verified by his oath. State v. Guglielmo, 80 Pac. 103, 104, 46 Or. 250, 69 L. R. A. 466, 7 Ann. Cas. 976.

"Originally an 'information' was a criminal proceeding at the suit of the king without a previous indictment or presentment by a grand jury. It could be preferred only by a responsible public officer when duly supported by affidavit, was limited to misdemeanors, and was a substitute for an indictment. In this sense it is unknown to the law of this state. By the Revised Statutes it was called a complaint relating to a criminal offense. 3 R. S. 706, marg. p. By the Code of Criminal Procedure it is defined as 'the allegation made to a magistrate that a person has been guilty of some designated crime.' Code Cr. Proc. § 145. The statute does not expressly provide that it is to be sworn to, nor even that it must be in writing, although the word 'allegation' from the analogy of other judicial proceedings points to that formality. There is some confusion in the authorities as to what an 'information' really is, for the term is frequently used to designate the deposition or affidavit upon which a criminal warrant is issued. The statute itself is not free from doubt upon the subject. An affidavit taken before a magistrate may be full enough to perform the function both of an information and a deposition. This is true when it sets forth facts sufficient to authorize a warrant without further evidence; but, when more proof is required and it is necessary to subpoena witnesses and take their depositions, an information is essential. Its office is that of a complaint, as the Revised Statutes called it. Depositions are the authority for the warrant, as the magistrate must be satisfied 'therefrom,' which refers to the depositions only." From all the analogies of the law, both civil and criminal, the information is intended to be made upon oath, though it is not specifically required. People ex rel. Livingston v. Wyatt, 79 N. E. 330, 332, 333, 186 N. Y. 383, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 159, 9 Ann. Cas. 972.

By whom filed

In England, at common law, an information was an accusation of a criminal character exhibited against a person by the Attorney General or the Solicitor General, and under his oath of office. In the United States, in the absence of statutes changing its character, it is filed by the officer whatever his title, who exercises the function of prosecuting attorney for the county. In re McNaught, 99 Pac. 241, 253, 1 Okl. Cr. 528.

Bishop says, in section 144: "In our states the criminal information should be deemed to be such, and such only, as in England is presented by the attorney or solicitor general. This part of the English common law has plainly become the common law with us. And as with us the powers which in England are exercised by the attorney general and solicitor general are largely distributed among our district attorneys, the latter officers would seem to be entitled under our common law to prosecute by information as a right adhering to their office and without leave of court." Ex parte McNaught, 100 Pac. 27, 30, 1 Okl. Cr. 260 (citing State v. Kelm, 79 Mo. 515; Wharton's Crim. Pl. & Prac. [8th Ed.] § 87).

An "information" is defined to be a written accusation of crime preferred by the district attorney or other public prosecuting officer without the intervention of a grand jury. Ex parte Shaw, 118 Pac. 1062, 1066, 4 Okl. Cr. 416.

As complaint

At common law, an "information" is defined to be a complaint or accusation exhibited against a person for some criminal offense committed immediately against the king or against a private person, being merely an allegation of the officer who exhibits it. Evans v. Willis, 97 Pac. 1047, 1048, 22 Okl. 310, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1050, 18 Ann. Cas. 258.

Complaint in inferior courts

Code Cr. Proc. § 148, provides that an information is the foundation of the jurisdiction of a magistrate in preliminary proceedings, and an "information" is defined by section 145 as being "the allegation made to a magistrate that a person has been guilty of some designated crime." Section 148 declares that, when an information is laid before a magistrate of the commission of a crime, he must examine the informant or prosecutor, and any witnesses he may produce, on oath, and take their depositions. Held, that an information charging that John Doe and Richard Roe willfully, etc., conspiring to interfere with and injure the property and business of a certain railroad company and construction company, did solicit and urge deponent not to work for D. or for the contracting company or the railroad company, stating that they would injure deponent's credit as a contractor if he proceeded with such work, and that they would pay dependent to quit said work, was fatally defective for failure to designate the commission of any crime, and was therefore insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the magistrate. People ex rel. Sampson v. Dunning, 98 N. Y. Supp. 1067, 1069, 113 App. Div. 35.

An "information" is the allegation made to a magistrate that a person has been guilty of some designated crime, under the express provisions of Code Cr. Proc. § 145, and is the foundation for the jurisdiction of the magistrate, the office of a "warrant" being merely to bring the person charged before the magistrate; and where an information before a police justice alleged that plaintiff had for nine days without legal excuse not caused her child to attend upon instruction as required by law, and that she had not presented to the school authorities proof by affidavit that she was unable to compel the child to so attend, as required by Compulsory Education Law (Laws 1909, c. 409) § 537, subsec. 4 (Consol. Laws, 1910, c. 18, § 635, subsec. 4), the offense so stated was the only one the justice had power to try under the information, and the fact that the warrant stated that plaintiff had failed for nine days "to send the said child to school as provided in the compulsory educational law" would not render the officer laying the information and procuring the warrant liable for malicious prosecution for having the arrest made for failure to send the child to school without probable cause, on the theory that he knew that the mother had sent the child to school each day, but that it had been excluded because of the mother's refusal to permit its vaccination, the uncontroverted testimony clearly establishing a violation of section 537, subsec. 4, of the compulsory education law, the offense charged in the information. Shappee v. Curtis, 127 N. Y. Supp. 33, 35, 142 App. Div. 155.

Indictment distinguished

Indictment, as including, see Indictment.

An "information" is distinguished from an "indictment" and the source from which they emanate; an indictment coming from a grand jury, while an information proceeds from the Attorney General or prosecuting attorney of the county in which the crime was committed. State v. Minor, 92 S. W. 466, 467, 193 Mo. 597.

At common law an "information" is defined to be a complaint or accusation exhibited against a person for some criminal offense, committed immediately against the king or against a private person; an "indictment" being an accusation preferred by the oath of 12 men, and an information is only the allegation of the officer who exhibits it. An information would lie at common law for all misdemeanors, but not for a felony; it having been the policy under such law that no person shall be put on trial for a capital offense or any other crime known or understood as an offense under said law occasioning a total forfeiture of the offender's lands or goods or both, except by indictment. Evans v. Willis, 97 Pac. 1047, 1048, 22 Okl. 310, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1050, 18 Ann. Cas. 258.

Bill of Rights providing that prosecutions shall be by indictment or information, was intended to secure the citizen against prosecution by a private citizen or by any authority other than a grand jury or a district attorney; "indictment" meaning a presentment by a grand jury, and "information" a presentment by a district attorney or other officer constituted by law to exercise the functions which at common law in 1805 were exercised by the law officer of the crown. State v. Boasberg, 50 South. 162, 165, 124 La. 289.

INFORMATION IN THE NATURE OF QUO WARRANTO

Quo warranto as including, see Quo Warranto.

An "information in the nature of quo warranto" was originally criminal in form and purpose; the object of the proceeding being not merely to oust but to fine the usurper. In the process of time the fine fell to a nominal amount, and its imposition was finally discontinued in England, though the practice still prevails in some of the American states. Therefore through a gradual process of evolution the procedure by information became essentially civil in character. State ex rel. Jackson v. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Ass'n, 90 Pac. 777, 778, 76 Kan. 184.

Proceeding by "information in the nature of quo warranto" was never more than incidentally criminal; its main purpose in its early history having been, and its only one in recent times being, to try title to office. Territory ex rel. Hubbell v. Armijo, 89 Pac. 267, 268, 14 N. M. 205.

The "information" was a criminal proceeding in which, if the issue was found against the defendant, in addition to a judgment of ouster, a fine could be imposed. Meehan v. Bachelder, 59 Atl. 620, 621, 73 N. H. 113, 6 Ann. Cas. 462.

"Information in the nature of quo warranto" is the remedy or proceeding where the state inquires into the legality of the claim which a party asserts to an office or franchise, and to oust him from its enjoyment if the claim be not well founded, or to have the same declared forfeited and recover it, if, having once been rightfully possessed and enjoyed, it has become forfeited for misuser or nonuser. Moody v. Lowrimore, 86 S. W. 400, 402, 74 Ark. 421 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Spell. Extr. Rem. § 1765).

An "information in the nature of a quo warranto" is a civil remedy when used for the protection of private rights. People v. Healy, 82 N. E. 599, 602, 230 Ill. 280, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 603.

An "information" at the instance of the Attorney General in the "nature of quo warranto" to forfeit the license of a foreign corporation and the charter of domestic corporations for misuser is a civil proceeding. State ex inf. Hadley v. Standard Oil Co., 118 S. W. 902, 1007, 218 Mo. 1.

Originally proceedings in the "nature of quo warranto" partook of the character of criminal proceedings. State v. Des Moines City Ry. Co., 109 N. W. 867, 870, 135 Iowa, 694.

The ancient writ of "quo warranto" was in the nature of a writ of right, invocable by the king against persons claiming or usurping an office or liberty, to inquire by what authority they asserted right thereto, and the judgment was conclusive even as against the crown, while a proceeding by "information in the nature of quo warranto" is properly a criminal prosecution instituted not only to fine the usurper, but to oust him from the office, franchise, or liberty. State v. Sengstacken, 122 Pac. 292, 295, 61 Or. 455.

An information in the nature of quo warranto is the substitute for the ancient writ of quo warranto, and in its origin was essentially a criminal prosecution to punish encroachments upon the royal prerogative, and it still retains that character to the extent that the proceedings are criminal in form for the purpose of punishing the usurper and ousting him from enjoying the franchise. People v. Gartenstein, 94 N. E. 128, 129, 248 Ill. 546.

"Mandamus" cannot be rightfully invoked to settle a doubtful claim to an office, or to have the title to an office adjudicated upon as between adverse claimants, but "information in the nature of a quo warranto" affords the proper remedy. Where the relator holds a prima facie and uncontested title to the office or his title has been adjudicated upon and finally established by a competent tribunal, a writ of "mandamus" may be issued to put him in possession of the office as well as of the books, papers, and other property pertaining to it. Hoy v. State, 81 N. E. 509, 512, 168 Ind. 506, 11 Ann. Cas. 944 (citing Mannix v. State ex rel. Mitchell, 17 N. E. 565, 115 Ind. 245).

A petition to determine the legality of the organization of a school district, filed by the prosecuting attorney of a county at the instance of a resident taxpayer of the district to be formed, is a proceeding "in the nature of a quo warranto, or statutory quo warranto," authorized by Rev. St. 1890, § 4457, and not a quo warranto ex officio. State ex inf. Berkley ex rel. McCormack v. McClain, 86 S. W. 135, 136, 187 Mo. 409.

INFORMER

See Common Informers.

An action brought by a state official by virtue of his office for the penalty provided by the Child Labor Law is not within Practice Act, § 219, relating to suits instituted by "informers," and requiring the time of the institution of the action to be noted on the information; since the word "informer," construed with reference to the act as originally passed, means common informer, viz., one who, without being specially required by law or by virtue of his office, gives information of crimes, offenses, or misdemeanors which have been committed, in order to prosecute the offender. Bryant v. Skillman Hardware Co., 60 Atl. 23, 24, 76 N. J. Law, 45 (quoting and adopting Bouv. Law Dict.).

INFRINGEMENT

See Contributory Infringement.

All or equivalent elements

The performance by a device of the same function as the device of a patent does not alone constitute "infringement," but it must also be the mechanical equivalent, performing the function in substantially the same way. Johnson Furnace & Engineering Co. v. Western Furnace Co., 178 Fed. 819, 825, 102 C. C. A. 267.

Change of form

"Infringement" is not avoided by a mere change of form or location of parts, if the same principle is used through the same mode of operation, to accomplish the same result, even though an additional beneficial result is attained through the change. Pettibone, Mulliken & Co. v. Pennsylvania Steel Co., 133 Fed. 730, 734.

The splitting up or duplication of parts or additions does not avoid "infringement" when the patented device is used. If the improver uses the specific device of the prior patent, he is an infringer. Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Typewriter Inspection Co., 177 Fed. 230, 238 (citing Thomson-Houston El. Co. v. Ohio Brass Co., 130 Fed. 549; Perkins Elec. Switch Co. v. Buchanan, 129 Fed. 185).

Degree of utility

A device securing the same result, but operating on a different principle, is not an "infringement" of a former patent. Stitzer v. Withers, 91 S. W. 277, 280, 122 Ky. 181 (quoting and adopting definition in opinion of Hobson, C. J., on a former appeal; citing Bridge v. Excelsior Mfg. Co., 105 U. S. 618, 26 L. Ed. 1190).

Identity

To constitute an "infringement" of a patented machine, three things must be found: First, identity of result; second, identity of means; and, third, identity of operation. American Can Co. v. Hickmott Asparagus Canning Co., 137 Fed. 86, 90.

Of copyright

The singing of a single verse and chorus of a copyrighted song, without musical accompaniment, in imitation of the voice, postures, and mannerisms of another, is not an "infringement," against which a temporary injunction will issue. Green v. Minzensheimer, 177 Fed. 286, 288.

Of patent for design

In patent law, close imitation is essential to make out "infringement of a design." There may be some range of equivalency, but it is necessarily small. Similarity to the eye of the ordinary man is the test. Williams Calk Co. v. Neverslip Mfg. Co., 136 Fed. 210, 217 (citing Gorham Co. v. White, 14 Wall. [81 U. S.] 511, 20 L. Ed. 731).

The object in a design patent is, not to identify the article as an article of trade, but to ornament it, so as to make it pleasing to the eye; and while "sameness of appearance" is identity of design, the test of infringement is not whether an ordinary purchaser might be deceived into buying one article for the other, but the sameness of appearance which constitutes "infringement" is the sameness of aesthetic effect on the eye of an ordinary observer. Bolte & Weyer Co. v. Knight Light Co., 180 Fed. 412, 416, 103 C. C. A. 558.

Of patent for process

When an entirely new process is invented and patented revolutionizing the art, the claims will be given a broad construction, and a different apparatus and a variant use of elements may amount to infringement; but a patent for an improved process stands on different grounds, and in order to constitute infringement it must appear that all the steps of the process are substantially used. Schmertz Wire Glass Co. v. Western Glass Co., 178 Fed. 973, 976.

Of trade mark or name

An "infringement of a trade-mark" consists in the use of the genuine upon substituted goods, or of an exact copy or reproduction of the genuine, or in the use of an imitation in which the difference is colorable only, and the resemblance avails to mislead so that the goods to which the spurious trade-mark is affixed are likely to be mistaken for the genuine product; and this upon the ground that the trade-mark adopted by one is the exclusive property of its proprietor, and such use of the genuine or of such imitation of it is an invasion of his right or property. G. W. Cole Co. v. American Cement & Oil Co., 130 Fed. 703, 705, 65 C. C. A. 105.

An "infringement" of a trade-mark consists in the use of the genuine upon substituted goods or an exact copy or reproduction of the genuine, or in the use of an imitation in which the difference is colorable only, and the resemblance avails to mislead, so that the goods to which the spurious trade-mark is affixed are likely to be mistaken for the genuine product. Sartor v. Schaden, 101 N. W. 511, 513, 125 Iowa, 696.

"A 'trade-mark' is an arbitrary, distinctive name, symbol, or device to indicate or authenticate the origin of the product to which it is attached. An 'infringement' of such trade-mark consists in the use of the genuine upon substituted goods, or of an exact copy and reproduction of the genuine, or in the use of an imitation in which the difference is colorable only, and the resemblance avails to mislead, so that the goods to which the spurious trade-mark is affixed are likely to be mistaken for the genuine product. Unfair competition is distinguishable from the infringement of a trade-mark, in this, that it does not involve the exclusive right of another to the use of the name, symbol, or device." American Brewing Co. v. Blenville Brewery, 153 Fed. 615, 616.

Duplicity or exact imitation is not necessary to the infringement of a trade-mark, nor is dissimilarity in size, form, and color of the label and place where it is applied conclusive, it being sufficient that the competing label contains the trade-mark of another, and that confusion or deception is likely to result, independent of the fact that the accessories are dissimilar. Infringement of a trade-mark may exist, though the method and accompaniments of its use negative the idea of imitation. Eagle White Lead Co. v. Pfingh, 180 Fed. 579, 583.

What is an "infringement" has thus been defined in an English text-book (Kerly, Trade-Marks, p. 306), which definition is copied in section 71, Hopkins, Unfair Trade: "'Infringement' is the use by the defendant for trading purposes in connection with goods of the kind for which plaintiff's right to exclusive use exists, not being the goods of the plaintiff of a mark identical with the plaintiff's mark, or either comprising some of its essential features or colorably resembling it so as to be calculated to cause the goods to be taken by ordinary purchasers in any market where the marks circulate for the goods of the plaintiff." The imitation of any part of a trade-mark would be technical infringement, and the imitation need not be exact or perfect. The infringement may be as to color, size, and form of the objects or packages, the color and appearance of the labels, or the words or part of the words designating the article to be sold. Any use of a key or catch word in a trade-mark in a way calculated to deceive is an "infringement." Western Grocer Co. v. Caffarelli Bros. (Tex.) 108 S. W. 413, 414 (citing Filley v. Fassett, 44 Mo. 173, 100 Am. Dec. 275; George v. Smith, 52 Fed. 830; Air-Brush Mfg. Co. v. Thayer, 84 Fed. 640; Colman v. Crump, 70 N. Y. 573).

INFRINGER

An improver on a patented device, although his improvement may be patentable of itself, is an "infringer," if he uses the specific device of the prior patent. Underwood Type-writer Co. v. Typewriter Inspection Co., 177 Fed. 230, 238.

INHABITANCY—INHABITANT

See Permanent Inhabitant.

All inhabitants, see Inhabitant.

An "inhabitant" is a dweller in a place; a resident; one who dwells or resides permanently in a place; one who has a fixed and permanent abode in a place. "Residence" means a place of abode, and, within the meaning of the Alaska divorce law, it is the place where one resides—his home. Terrill v. Terrill, 2 Alaska, 475, 477.

In general terms one may be designated as an "inhabitant" of that place which constitutes the principal seat of his residence, of his business, pursuits, connections, attachments, and of his political and municipal relations. Phillips v. City of Boston, 67 N. E. 250, 251, 183 Mass. 314 (quoting and adopting definition in Lyman v. Fiske, 17 Pick. [84 Mass.] 231, 234, 28 Am. Dec. 293).

A teamster permanently employed in the quartermaster's department of the army, coming to the state, and stationed at a military post in Georgia where he was subject to the orders of the department, is not an "inhabitant" of the state in the sense in which that term is used in the statutes of Georgia in reference to road duty. Pundt v. Pindleton, 167 Fed. 997, 1003.

The word "inhabitants," as used in Code 1906, § 2305, authorizing the supervisors of any county to protect the game and fish in their respective counties for the use and consumption of the inhabitants, means the inhabitants of the particular county, as distinguished from the other inhabitants of the state, so as to authorize such boards to prohibit nonresidents of a county from fishing and hunting therein. State v. Hill, 53 South. 411, 412, 98 Miss. 142, 81 L. R. A. (N. S.) 490.

As citizen

The word "inhabitants" in its political sense means "citizens." In re Silkman, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1025, 1034, 1038, 88 App. Div. 102.

The words "inhabitant," "citizen," and "resident" mean substantially the same thing, and one is an "inhabitant," "resident," or "citizen" of the place where he has his domicile or home. A man's residence is his home or habitation; where that residence is fixed, and at a particular place, and he does not entertain a present intention of removing therefrom. To constitute a domicile but two elements are necessary—the act and the intention. Stevens v. Larwill, 84 S.

W. 113, 118, 110 Mo. App. 140 (citing State ex rel. Lowe v. Banta, 71 Mo. App. 32; Greene v. Beckwith, 38 Mo. 384; Johnson v. Smith, 43 Mo. 499; Tiller v. Abernathy, 37 Mo. 196).

The word "inhabitant" is equivalent to the word "citizen," as used in U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 587, § 740, providing that when a state contains more than one district every suit not of a local nature in the circuit or district courts thereof against a single defendant, inhabitant of such state, must be brought in the district where he resides, and is used to avoid the incongruity of speaking of citizens of anything less than a state, when the word inhabitant applies to a citizen of any district in a state which was divided into more than one district. Firestone Tire & R. Co. v. Vehicle Equipment Co., 155 Fed. 676, 678 (citing Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Gonzales, 14 Sup. Ct. 401, 151 U. S. 496, 38 L. Ed. 248).

Corporation

A corporation may be an "inhabitant," a "resident," or a "person," according to the sense in which the particular term is used in a statute. People ex rel. Fleischmann Mfg. Co. v. Marenus, 118 N. Y. Supp. 838, 839, 134 App. Div. 170.

A corporation is regarded for the purposes of taxation as an "inhabitant" of the district where its principal office is situated. People ex rel. Fleischmann Mfg. Co. v. Marenus, 116 N. Y. Supp. 189, 192, 62 Misc. Rep. 317.

A railroad company having large property interests in a city subject to taxation therein is an "inhabitant" within Laws 1870, p. 1161, c. 519, empowering the city of Buffalo to construct and maintain waterworks to supply the city and its inhabitants with water. Delaware L. & W. R. Co. v. City of Buffalo, 115 N. Y. Supp. 657, 659.

Domicile or legal residence

The word "inhabitant" is ordinarily used to indicate a person with a fixed domicile or legal residence, and an "inhabitant" therefore is one who has an established residence at a given place. Bechtel v. Bechtel, 112 N. W. 883, 884, 101 Minn. 511, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1100.

Though the word "inhabitant" in its general acceptance is synonymous with "domicile" or "legal residence" and in the construction of statutes words are to be given their ordinary meaning, jurisdiction in guardianship cases cannot be made to depend on a strict construction of the word in Code 1897, § 3219, providing that, on proper petition to the court, a guardian may be appointed for "any inhabitant" of the county who may be found insane. It was meant thereby to provide a means whereby the property of persons of unsound mind, living or being at the time within this state, might be preserved and cared for. Brown v. Lambe, 93 N. W. 486, 488, 119 Iowa, 404.

As elector or voter

As used in Rev. St. 1899, § 8027, providing that on application by petition signed by one-tenth of the qualified voters of any county who shall reside outside the corporate limits of any city or town, having at the time a population of 2,500 inhabitants or more, who are qualified to vote for members of the Legislature in any county in the state, the county court shall order an election to determine whether intoxicating liquors shall be sold within the county outside the corporate limits of such city or town, the word "inhabitants" is not synonymous with "voters," and hence it does not require that cities in order to be excluded shall have 2,500 qualified voters within its limits, but 2,500 general residents are sufficient. State ex rel. Holladay v. Rinke, 121 S. W. 159, 163, 140 Mo. App. 645.

As residence or resident

An "inhabitant" and "resident" mean the same thing. Pearson v. West, 77 S. W. 944, 945, 97 Tex. 238.

"Inhabitancy" and "residence" are synonymous terms; an "inhabitant" of a place being one who ordinarily is personally present there, not merely in itinere, but as a resident and dweller therein. Harding v. Standard Oil Co., 182 Fed. 421, 425.

An "inhabitant" of a place is one who ordinarily is personally present there; not merely in itinere, but as a resident and dweller therein. Willingham v. Swift & Co., 165 Fed. 223, 224 (citing Bicycle Stepladder Co. v. Gordon, 57 Fed. 529).

The word "resident," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2476, relating to the jurisdiction of the surrogate courts, is construed as equivalent to "inhabitant." It is co-ordinate with and intended to have the same meaning that ordinarily attached to the word "inhabitant." In re Walker's Will, 105 N. Y. Supp. 890, 892, 54 Misc. Rep. 177.

The word "resident," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1763, relating to the jurisdiction of divorce suits, is synonymous with "inhabitant"; residence being synonymous with inhabitancy or domicile. Ensign v. Ensign, 105 N. Y. Supp. 917, 921, 54 Misc. Rep. 289.

The words "inhabitant" and "resident" mean substantially the same thing, and one is an inhabitant or resident of the place where he has his domicile or home. Stevens v. Larwill, 84 S. W. 113, 118, 110 Mo. App. 140.

In the law of process and attachment, "residence" and "habitation" are generally regarded as synonymous. A "resident" and an "inhabitant" mean the same thing. A person resident is defined to be "one dwelling or having his abode in any place"; an inhabitant, "one that resides in a place." Atkinson v. Washington & Jefferson College, 46 S. E. 253, 259, 54 W. Va. 32 (citing Drake, Attachm.).

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 240, providing that the word "inhabitant" may be construed to mean a resident in any place, an "inhabitant" of a township, town, or city within section 8421, providing that personal property shall be assessed to the owner in the township, town, or city of which he is an inhabitant, is one whose place of abode is there, and who has no present intention of moving therefrom. Schmoll v. Schenck, 82 N. E. 805, 807, 40 Ind. App. 581.

As used in a statute providing that the time during which a defendant in a criminal case is "not an inhabitant of or usually resident within" the state is not to be counted in his favor, the words "inhabitant of" and "usually resident within" are synonymous. In determining the construction of these words, the court said: "We are cited to various decisions upon statutes affecting taxation and the administration of estates, in which the words 'inhabitants' and 'residents' are differentiated from 'domicile' and from each other, but none of these cases present the two words in such context as they appear in the section under construction. It may be that 'inhabitant' is often a more comprehensive term than 'resident,' but, taken together as they appear in the clause under consideration, with the modifier 'usually' before the word 'resident,' it seems to us that the term 'usually resident,' following the word 'inhabitant' in such close, immediate connection, was intended to illustrate the meaning of 'inhabitant,' and that, whatever different shades of distinction may be drawn when the words are used independently of each other in other statutes here they are synonymous. When to the noun 'resident' the adjective 'usual' is prefixed, in the sense of 'customary' or 'common,' the term becomes more clearly the synonym of 'inhabitant' as that word is defined by the courts." State v. Snyder, 82 S. W. 12, 22-24, 182 Mo. 462.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 3136, which provides that wills may be proven in any county where the testator was an inhabitant, and section 240, which provides that the word "inhabitant" may be construed to mean a resident in any place, a complaint upon objection to the probate of a will alleging that decedent was a "resident" of the county is good against demurrer. Ahearn v. Burk (Ind.) 99 N. E. 1004, 1005.

In the Judiciary Act as amended and corrected, providing that the Circuit Courts of the United States shall have original cognizance of suits in which there shall be a controversy between citizens of different states, but, where jurisdiction is founded only on diversity of citizenship, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either plaintiff or defendant, and declaring (section 2) that any other suit of which the Circuit Courts of the United States are given jurisdiction by the preceding section may be removed to the Circuit Court for the proper district by the defendant or defendants therein, being nonresidents of that state, the words "residence" and "inhabitant" are used synonymously, and hence, where railroads incorporated in other states operated a part of their line in Iowa and were served there, they had a "residence" in Iowa, so that, other jurisdictional requisites being present, nonresidents having been injured in Iowa on such railroads could have sued originally in the federal courts sitting in that state, and therefore suits brought by them in the state courts were subject to removal. Bogue v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 193 Fed. 728, 733.

INHABITANTS OF DISTRICT

A deed recited a consideration paid by the treasurer of school district No. 2, pursuant to which the grantor had granted, etc., unto the "inhabitants of said district No. 2," their heirs, successors, and assigns, forever, habendum to the inhabitants of such school district for school purposes so long as it should be used as such and no longer, to them, their heirs and assigns, etc. Held, that the word "inhabitants" meant the school district in its corporate capacity, and hence, on the district being abolished and the property vesting in the town by Pub. Laws 1903, c. 1101, the property passed to the town, and did not revert to the grantor's heirs. Town of East Greenwich v. Gimmons, 84 Atl. 1008, 1009, 34 R. I. 526.

INHABITED DWELLING HOUSE

Under Rev. St. § 6835, declaring it burglary for any person to forcibly break and enter any inhabited dwelling house at night with intent to commit a felony, a dwelling house which is not actually occupied by any human being is not an inhabited dwelling. Mason v. State, 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 526, 527.

A dwelling house is inhabited, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1906, § 6835, prescribing imprisonment for life for burglariously entering an inhabited dwelling, where the family had gone for a vacation, leaving servants in charge, though when it was entered the servants may have been temporarily absent. State v. Mason, 77 N. E. 283, 285, 74 Ohio St 65.

A jail is an "inhabited dwelling house" within the statute of New York. Commonwealth v. Posey, 4 Call (8 Va.) 109, 110, 2 Am. Dec. 590.

INHABITED TERRITORY

"Uninhabited territory is to be found in probably every settled community in the state, and, we cannot conceive of any case of original incorporation or annexation to an existing municipality of inhabited territory that would not almost necessarily include some parcels of land not actually inhabited." The act of 1899 (St. 1899, p. 37, c. 41), providing for the annexation of uninhabited territory, and expressly stating that it shall not be construed to repeal any part of any act relating to the annexation of inhabited territory, was never designed to in any way affect any of the provisions of Act 1889 (St. 1889, p. 358, c. 247), providing that territory may be annexed to any incorporated town by the filing of a petition describing the territory desired to be annexed and a favorable vote by the inhabitants of the town and the territory to be annexed, so far as territory taken as a whole may fairly be said to be "inhabited territory." If the territory proposed to be annexed, regarded as a whole, may fairly be said to be inhabited, the proceedings must be had under the act of 1889, regardless of the number of parcels of land included therein that are uninhabited. People v. Town of Ontario, 84 Pac. 205-211, 148 Cal. 625.

INHALE—INHALATION

Under an accident policy relieving insurer from liability for injury caused by "voluntary or involuntary inhalation of gas," there can be no recovery where insured died from the effects of gas inhaled by him while in a hotel, whether the accident occurred because of his mistake or the neglect of some other person. Porter v. Preferred Accident Ins. Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 682, 683, 109 App. Div. 103.

A provision in an accident policy that the insurer should not be liable for death resulting from "inhaling of gas" refers to the intentional inhaling of gas and not to accidental asphyxiation. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Ayers, 75 N. E. 508, 507, 217 Ill. 390, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 168.

INHERE

Where the question is whether an error inheres in the verdict, "inheres" means "lost in," or "covered by," the verdict. State v. Lorenzy, 109 Pac. 1064, 1066, 59 Wash. 308, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 153.

INHERENT

The word "inherent" may mean permanently or inseparably existing in a subject but not pertaining to a subject. Stand. Dict.; Worcester Dict. In the former sense we use the word in speaking of the inherent powers of courts—powers which the Legislature did not give and cannot take away at least without destroying the very existence of the court affected. The word "inherent," as used in the sentence, "There is no inherent right in a citizen to sell intoxicating liquors by retail," as used by the court in the case of Meehan v. Board of Excise Com'rs of Jersey City, 64 Atl. 689, 73 N. J. Law, 382, is ambiguous. In the opinion of Green, J., writing or concurring opinion, the court should have used the word "restrainable" rather than "inherent." Meehan v. Board of Excise Com'rs of Jersey City, 70 Atl. 363, 365, 75 N. J. Law, 557.

The word "inherent," as applied to the inherent right of the court to direct and control the conduct of attorneys or its officers, does not mean a power essential to the existence of the court and the proper exercise of those functions, but is limited to the power of the court to regulate and deal with such matters in the absence of legislation on the subject, and the right to establish the qualifications of the office of attorney rests in the police power by force of which a state is authorized to enact laws to preserve the public safety, maintain the public peace, and promote and preserve the public health and morals. In re Applicants for License, 55 S. E. 635, 637, 143 N. C. 1, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288, 10 Ann. Cas. 187.

INHERENT JURISDICTION

By the term "inherent jurisdiction" of the chancery court is meant that jurisdiction and procedure of the High Court of Chancery of England which was adopted in this state as the jurisdiction of the chancery court before the cession act. J. W. Kelly & Co. v. Conner, 123 S. W. 622, 627, 122 Tenn. 839, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 201.

INHERENT POWER

The "inherent powers" of a court are such as result from the very nature of its organization, and are essential to its existence and protection, and to the due administration of justice. Fuller v. State, 57 South. 806, 807, 100 Miss. 811, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3605).

INHERENT RIGHT

See, also, Natural Right.

Inherent rights are those privileges enjoyed by the people before the adoption of the Constitution, only surrenderable by the people, or subject to limitation by fundamental law. The right in the beginning here to participate in governmental affairs by reasonable exercise of the elective franchise was "inherent" within the meaning of the fundamental declaration in the Bill of Rights. State ex rel. McGrael v. Phelps, 128 N. W. 1041, 1045, 144 Wis. 1, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 353.

INHERENT VIC.

In an action against a carrier for injury to animals shipped, the court's definition of "inherent vice" as meaning a fault was not possessed by the ordinary of its kind was too restrictive. The carrier, in the absence of negligence, is not liable for injuries arising from or attributable to the inherent natural propensities and habits of the animals themselves, notwithstanding the fact that the ordinary of its kind may have the same inherent natural propensity or habit. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. G. W. Hunter & Co., 104 S. W. 1075, 1076, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 190.

INHERIT

See Person Who Would Inherit as Heir.

The word "inherit" is used in law "in contradistinction to acquiring by will, but, in popular use, this distinction is often disregarded; * * * to receive by transmission in any way; have imparted to or conferred upon; acquire from any source." In re Whites Estate, 84 Pac. 831, 832, 42 Wash. 360 (quoting Cent. Dict.).

The word "inherit," as used in article 5 of the treaty between the United States and the Swiss Confederation of November 8, 1855, providing that citizens of each and their heirs having personal property in the jurisdiction of the other shall have absolute power of disposition, and that such provision shall be applicable to the states or cantons of the other which permit foreigners to hold or inherit real estate, but in case any state or canton does not permit foreigners to hold there shall be accorded such terms as the state or canton permitted to sell such property with power to withdraw the proceeds, is not the same as the word "hold" as used in such treaty, and within the meaning of the last provision of the treaty. Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 3941, providing that aliens may "take and hold" land by devise and descent only and may convey the same at any time within five years, did not permit aliens to hold real property, but merely recognized its terms by giving five years in which to dispose of it. Lehman v. State, 88 N. E. 365, 367, 45 Ind. App. 830.

The term "inherited," as used in Act Cong. April 26, 1906, c. 1876, § 22, providing that the adult heirs of any deceased Indian of either of the Five Civilized Tribes whose selection has been made or to whom a deed or patent has been issued for his share of the lands of the tribe to which he belongs or belonged may sell the lands inherited from such deceased Indian, is synonymous with the word "descend" as used in the Original Agreement with the Creek Nation, approved by Act Cong. March 1, 1901, c. 676, and the Supplemental Agreement approved by Act Cong. June 30, 1902, c. 1323, and covers those cases where heirs take by purchase, as well as by inheritance strictly speaking. Shulthis v. MacDougal, 162 Fed. 331, 344.

"Inherited lands," as applied to the Creek Nation, within Act Cong. April 26, 1906, c. 1876, § 22, 34 Stat. 145, providing that the adult heirs of a deceased Indian of either of the Five Civilized Tribes whose selection has been made or to whom a deed or patent has been issued for his share of the lands of the tribe to which he belongs or belonged may sell the lands inherited from such deceased Indian, applies to all allotments selected by or for deceased members of the tribe in the hands of their heirs, whether such deceased members died before or after such allotments were made. Shulthis v. MacDougal, 162 Fed. 331, 344.

INHERIT AS HEIRS

Testator devised certain property to defendant for life, and, on his death, to his child or children and their heirs, and, in case of defendant's death without leaving a child or children or descendants, to such person or persons as would under the laws of the state of Maryland inherit the same as the heirs of defendant had he died intestate seised of the fee. Held, that the phrase "such persons as would inherit as heirs" had the same effect as if the limitation over had been to defendant's heirs, and hence defendant acquired the fee under the rule in Shelley's Case. Cook v. Councilman, 72 Atl. 404-406, 109 Md. 622.

INHERITANCE

See Estate of Inheritance.

"Inheritance" is defined to be a perpetuity in lands to a man and his heirs, and the property which is inherited is called the "inheritance"; but an estate for life created by deed is not an estate of inheritance. Cummings v. Cummings, 75 Atl. 210, 211, 76 N. J. Eq. 568.

"The word 'inheritance' is generally used to denote an estate which may descend to a man and his heirs, and includes all freehold estates, but not estates for life. It also includes the right to succeed to the estate of a person dying intestate." Farney v. Weirich, 108 N. Y. Supp. 38, 44, 52 Misc. Rep. 245.

As applicable to personalty

At common law, when one spoke of "inheritance" or inheriting, he referred to real property, title to which on the death of the ancestor vested in the heirs, and it means real property now exclusively when it is used in its legal technical meaning. Title to personal property of the ancestor did not vest in the heirs, but went to the personal representative of the decedent, viz., his administrator, and was by him administered, and distributive shares were by him apportioned among the heirs of the decedent. Berry v. Powell, 105 S. W. 345, 347, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 599.

A complaint in an action to foreclose a mortgage securing a bond which alleged the execution of the bond and mortgage; that the mortgagee died leaving a third person his only heir at law and next of kin, who became the owner of the mortgage by "inheritance"; that the third person died leaving a will by which he bequeathed the mortgage to his executrix, who assigned the same to plaintiff—sufficiently alleged that the third person acquired title to the bond and mortgage, and that plaintiff was the owner of the same, though the word "inheritance" more properly applies to a succession to the title to real estate by the death of the former owner. Ward v. Branson, 110 N. Y. Supp. 335, 336, 126 App. Div. 503.

INHERITANCE TAX

See Collateral Inheritance Tax; Lineal Inheritance Tax.

See, also, Succession Tax; Transfer.

While an "inheritance tax," or death duty has been recognized as a method of governmental support from very early times, it was practically unknown in England at the time of the Revolution, but has since that time been in use there, and more recently has been adopted in many of the states. Curry v. Spencer, 61 N. H. 624, 632, 60 Am. Rep. 337; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Savings Bank, 18 Sup. Ct. 594, 170 U. S. 283, 287, 288, 42 L. Ed. 1037. The number of these statutes and the judicial ingenuity that has been displayed in supporting them attest the favorable opinion with which the political wisdom of this method of distributing the governmental burden is now regarded; but the decisions themselves, involving, as they do, consideration of the provisions of particular constitutions, are not of value in the present discussion, except as they may throw light upon the nature of the tax sought to be imposed, and the situation in view of which the convention and the people acted in 1903. All the decisions agree, as was held in effect in Curry v. Spencer, that an inheritance tax is not a proportional distribution of public expense upon the property of the taxing district. "Taxes of this general character are universally deemed to relate, not to property eo nomine, but to its passage by will or by descent in cases of intestacy, as distinguished from taxes imposed on property real or personal, as such because of its ownership and possession. In other words, the public contribution which death duties exact is predicated on the passing of property real or personal, as such, because of its ownership and possession. In other words, the public contribution which death duties exact is predicated on passing of property disassociated from its transmission or receipt by will, or as the result of intestacy. * * * Tax laws of this nature in all countries rest in their essence upon the principle that death is the generating source from which the particular taxing power takes its being, and that it is the power to transmit, or the transmission from the dead to the living, on which such taxes are more immediately rested." Knowlton v. Moore, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 178 U. S. 41, 47, 56, 44 L. Ed. 969. Whether governmental taking of the property of the individual in this way is properly described as an excise, commodity, succession, or privilege tax is not material. No language of the Constitution authorizes taxation by such terms, and it would avail nothing to establish the definitive accuracy of either. The Constitution in terms authorizes what the statute attempts to effect. Under such circumstances, the discussion of questions of terminology is unnecessary and may be misleading. Knowlton v. Moore, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 178 U. S. 41, 57, 44 L. Ed. 969. Such a proceeding is merely a taking for governmental purposes of a portion of the estate at the death of the owner. If the right of property previously enjoyed embraced the right to dispose of it after, or in view of, death, the authorization of such taking is a limitation upon that right. Crocker v. Shaw, 54 N. E. 549, 174 Mass. 266, 267; Emmons v. Shaw, 50 N. E. 1033, 171 Mass. 410, 413; Minot v. Winthrop, 38 N. E. 512, 162 Mass. 113, 124, 26 L. R. A. 259; United States v. Perkins, 16 Sup. Ct. 1073, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. Ed. 287; Thompson v. Kidder, 65 Atl. 392, 394, 74 N. H. 89, 12 Ann. Cas. 948.

The "inheritance tax" is variously termed "succession tax," "legacy tax," and "probate duties"; but, whatever it may be termed, it is not a tax upon property but upon the right of succession thereto. State ex rel. Foot v. Bazille, 106 N. W. 93, 96, 97 Minn. 11, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 732, 7 Ann. Cas. 1056.

The tax variously called an "inheritance tax," a "legacy tax," a "transfer tax," and a "succession tax," is a "burden imposed by government on all gifts, legacies, and successions whether of real or personal property or both or any interest therein, passing to certain persons (other than those specially excepted) by will, by intestate law, or by deed or assignment made inter vivos, intended to take effect at or after the death of the grantor." In re Morris' Estate, 50 S. E. 682, 138 N. C. 259 (quoting and adopting definition in Dos Passos [2d Ed.] § 2).

An "inheritance tax" is an impost or excise on the right to pass the estate and the privilege of the devisee to take. In re Stixrud's Estate, 109 Pac. 343, 347, 58 Wash. 339, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 632, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 850.

An inheritance tax is not on the property itself but on the right to succeed to the property. People v. Griffith, 92 N. E. 313, 315, 245 Ill. 532.

An "inheritance tax" is not a tax upon property, but a "special or excise tax," within Const. § 181, authorizing a special or excise tax. Booth's Ex'r v. Commonwealth ex rel. Jefferson County Attorney, 113 S. W. 61, 63, 65, 130 Ky. 88, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 592; Allen's Ex'rs v. McElroy, 113 S. W. 66, 130 Ky. 111.

An "inheritance tax" is not a tax on property as such, but one on the right of succession, a tax on one for the privilege of succeeding to property. In re Kennedy's Estate, 108 Pac. 280, 283, 157 Cal. 517, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 423.

An "inheritance tax" is a tax on the right of succession, and not a tax on the property itself; the right thereto vesting in the state on the death of the prior owner. National Safe Deposit Co. v. Stead, 95 N. E. 973, 978, 250 Ill. 584, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 430.

"An 'inheritance tax' is not a tax upon property itself, but upon its transmission by will or descent." An "inheritance tax" is not one on property, but one on the succession. Cahen v. Brewster, 27 Sup. Ct. 174, 176, 203 U. S. 543-550, 51 L. Ed. 310, 8 Ann. Cas. 215 (quoting Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 18 Sup. Ct. 594, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. Ed. 1037; United States v. Perkins, 16 Sup. Ct. 1073, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. Ed. 287).

The "inheritance tax" levied by Laws 1903, p. 65, c. 44, is not a tax on property or property rights in any sense, but is purely an excise tax levied upon the transfer or transaction, and merely measured in amount by the amount of the property transferred. Beals v. State, 121 N. W. 347, 349, 139 Wis. 544.

An "inheritance tax" is an "impost, duty, or excise tax upon the privilege secured by law to devisees, legatees, grantees, heirs, and personal representatives of taking, holding, and enjoying all property, real and personal, or any interest therein, passing by will, by intestate law, or by any grant or gift made inter vivos and intended to take effect at or after the death of the grantor." It is not a tax upon property itself, but is a duty imposed upon the privilege of acquiring property by inheritance. In re Touhy's Estate, 90 Pac. 170, 171, 35 Mont. 431.

An "inheritance tax" is a charge on succession by inheritance or transfer by will. McDougald v. Low, 127 Pac. 1027, 1028, 164 Cal. 107.

The "inheritance tax" provided for by Sanborn's St. Supp. 1906, § 1067-1, is a tax on the right of succession, and not on property. In re Bullen's Estate, 123 N. W. 109, 111, 143 Wis. 512, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1114.

An "inheritance tax law" is a statute "imposing a tax on those acquiring property by inheritance or will, sometimes only taking collateral relations and strangers, in such case commonly called collateral inheritance tax law." In re White's Estate, 84 Pac. 831, 832, 42 Wash. 860 (quoting Cent. Dict.)

An "inheritance tax" is a special, not a general, tax. People v. Koenig, 85 Pac. 1129, 1130, 37 Colo. 283, 11 Ann. Cas. 140.

Acts 1909, c. 479, § 20, imposing a tax on inheritances not taxed under Acts 1893, c. 174, imposing inheritance taxes, but excluding from the operation of the act property passing to father, mother, husband, wife, children and lineal descendants, imposes a tax on the passing of property to a child under the will of a parent, and is not limited to a tax on property passing by operation of law; the word "inheritance" meaning the succession to all the rights of a decedent, whether by will or by operation of law. Knox v. Emerson, 131 S. W. 972, 973, 123 Tenn. 409.

The word "inheritance," as used in Acts 1906, p. 173, § 1, Act No. 109, relating to inheritance taxes, should be given the same meaning and scope as its use in section 2. Succession of Westfeldt, 48 South. 281, 285, 122 La. 836.

INHUMAN TREATMENT

See, also, Cruelty.

Conduct and acts by a husband toward his wife which produce reasonable apprehension of personal violence, cause mental distress and sorrow, and make cohabitation miserable, impairing, or likely to impair, the wife's health, coupled with a declaration to give away his property to a third person and leave the wife without support, is "inhuman treatment" under a statute authorizing a divorce on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment. Goff v. Goff, 53 S. E. 769, 772, 60 W. Va. 9, 9 Ann. Cas. 1083.

INIMICAL TO THE PUBLIC WELFARE

By the express declaration of Laws 1900, p. 128, c. 88, § 3, all the contracts condemned by the statute are rendered "inimical to the public welfare," and no discretion is left to the courts to determine the nature and effect of the contracts so denounced. Kosciusko Oil Mill & Fertilizer Co. v. Wilson Cotton Oil Co., 43 South. 435, 437, 90 Miss. 551 (citing Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Searles, 37 South. 942, 85 Miss. 528, 68 L. R. A. 715).

INITIAL

As signature, see Sign—Signature.

"Initials" are no legal part of a name." Monroe Cattle Co. v. Becker, 13 Sup. Ct. 217, 221, 147 U. S. 47, 37 L. Ed. 72.

INITIAL AND MOVING CAUSE

The "initial and moving cause" is to be understood as meaning the surrounding conditions in which the negligence of defendant operated as the efficient cause of the injurious consequences. Winchel v. Goodyear, 105 N. W. 824, 827, 126 Wis. 271.

INITIAL CAUSE

"First cause," "initial cause," "efficient cause," and "proximate cause" all mean the same thing in the law of negligence. They mean the cause acting first and immediately producing the injury, or setting other causes in motion, all constituting a natural and continuous chain of events each having a close causal connection with its immediate predecessor; the final event in the chain immediately effecting the injury as a natural and probable result of the cause which first acted, and the person responsible for the first event having reasonable ground to expect at the moment of his act or default that a personal injury to some person might probably result therefrom. There may be pre-existing conditions or events without which the final injury could not have happened, such as the momentary shying of a horse on a defective highway, the inadvertent and non-negligent misstep of a traveler into a dangerous excavation close to the sidewalk, or the nonnegligent misstep or slip upon the floor or passage; but none of these is to be deemed a cause of the final injury any more than the mere presence of the injured person on the scene of the accident. They are not links, either initial or otherwise, in the legal chain of responsible causation, and should not be referred to as such, even though in ordinary nonlegal parlance they might broadly be termed causes. They are mere circumstances or conditions either existing, or to be expected in the natural order of things to occur at any time; and they do not enter into the chain of responsible causation. Winchel v. Goodyear, 105 N. W. 824, 827, 126 Wis. 271.

INITIATE

See Courtesy Initiate.

To "initiate" means to commence. Kelly Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 47 South. 742, 750, 56 Fla. 456, 18 Ann. Cas. 654 (quoting and adopting Schroeder v. Imperial Ins. Co., 63 Pac. 1074, 132 Cal. 18; 84 Am. St. Rep. 17).

INITIATION

A master, though a corporation, authorizes an assault on a new employé by old employes, and so is liable for the injury, where it is in the course of an "initiation" of the new employé against his resistance by the old employes, by laying him across a barrel and applying a paddle, in accordance with a custom which had long existed in the establishment with the knowledge and acquiescence of the master. Medlin Milling Co. v. Boutwell (Tex.) 122 S. W. 442, 443.

INJUNCTION

See Continuing Injunction; Interlocutory Injunction; Mandatory Injunction; Order Granting or Continuing Injunction; Preliminary Injunction; Preventive Injunction; Special Injunction; Temporary Injunction.

Granting the injunction, see Grant.

Violation of, as civil contempt, see Civil Contempt.

Under Rev. Codes, § 4287, an injunction is a writ or order requiring a person to refrain from doing a particular act. Roberts v. Kartzke, 111 Pac. 1, 2, 18 Idaho, 552.

Under Rev. Codes, § 4287, an injunction is a writ requiring a person to refrain from a particular act, and is a writ to restrain such an act, and not a writ commanding a person to do a certain act. Brinton v. Steele, 112 Pac. 319, 320, 19 Idaho, 71.

The equitable remedy of "injunction" by judgment, as distinguished from an "injunction" by order pendente lite, depends upon the incompleteness and inadequacy of the legal remedy. If issued to restrain the breach of a contract, it is a "negative specific enforcement of that contract," and jurisdiction does not attach "unless the contract is one of a class which will be affirmatively, specifically enforced." An injunction will not lie to prevent the formation of a corporation except under the terms of a written agreement, where there are no negative covenants in the agreement to enforce; and where an "injunction" is prayed in aid of a specific performance of a contract to form a corporation which may not be had, there are no grounds for an "injunction." Perrin v. Smith, 119 N. Y. Supp. 990, 993, 135 App. Div. 127 (quoting and adopting definition in Fox v. Fitzpatrick, 82 N. E. 1103, 190 N. Y. 259).

A writ of "injunction" may be described to be a judicial process whereby a party is required to do a particular thing, or to refrain from doing a particular thing, according to the exigency of the writ. The most common form of injunction is that which operates as a restraint upon the party in the exercise of the real or supposed rights, and is sometimes called the remedial writ of injunction. The other form, commanding an act to be done, is sometimes called the judicial writ, because it issues after a decree, and is in the nature of an execution to enforce the same. It is also said that an "injunction" is a writ issuing by the order and under the seal of a court of equity, and is of two kinds. The one is the writ remedial; for, in the endless variety of cases in which a plaintiff is entitled to equitable relief, if that relief consists in restraining the commission or continuance of some act of the defendant, a court of equity administers it by means of the writ of injunction. The other species of injunction is called the judicial writ, and issues subsequent to a decree, and is properly described as being in the nature of an execution. Tebo v. Hazel (Del.) 74 Atl. 841, 846 (citing 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 861; Eden, Inj.).

Under B. & C. Comp. § 417, defining an injunction as an order requiring a defendant to refrain from a particular act, an interlocutory injunction operates in personam, and does not determine the merits of the case or the rights of the parties, and does not change the possession of real or personal property, the title to which is in dispute, but it merely seeks to preserve the status quo pending the trial. Gobbi v. Dileo, 111 Pac. 49, 51, 58 Or. 14, 84 L. R. A. (N. S.) 951.

In an order to show cause why relator, a third director of a corporation, should not be permitted to examine the corporate books, a clause staying the defendants, the other directors, from removing relator from his position as director pending the proceeding, is not an injunction within General Corporation Law (Consol. Laws, c. 23) § 305, refusing an order to show cause without notice granted, nor does it suspend the ordinary business of the corporation, but such clause not being necessary for relator's protection it is stricken from the order. People ex rel. Stauffer v. Bonwit Bros., 125 N. Y. Supp. 958, 959, 69 Misc. Rep. 70.

Mandamus distinguished

"An 'injunction' is essentially a preventive remedy; 'mandamus' a remedial one. The former is usually employed to prevent future injury; the latter to redress past grievances. The functions of an injunction are to restrain motion and to enforce inaction; those of a mandamus to set in motion and to compel action. In this sense an injunction may be regarded as a conservative remedy; mandamus as an active one. The former preserves matters in statu quo, while the very object of the latter is to change the status of affairs and to substitute action for inactivity. The one is therefore a positive or remedial process; the other a negative or preventive one. And since mandamus is in no sense a preventive remedy, it cannot take the place of an injunction, and will not be employed to restrain or prevent an improper interference with the rights of relators. * * * 'Mandamus' and 'injunction' should not be confounded. The latter is used to prevent action, to maintain affairs in statu quo. The former is compulsory, commanding something to be done. An injunction is preventive and protective merely, and not restorative. It interposes between the complainant and the injury he fears or seeks to avoid. If the injury be already done, the writ can have no operation, for it cannot be corrective so as to remove it. It is not used for the purpose of punishment, or to compel persons to do right, but simply to prevent them from doing wrong.

* * * Mandamus is, however, compulsory, and requires doing the act." Callaghan v. McGown (Tex.) 90 S. W. 319, 324 (quoting and adopting definition in High, Extr. Leg. Rem. [3d Ed.] § 6).

As preventive remedy

The appropriate function of a writ of "injunction" is to afford preventive relief only, and it is only to be used for the prevention of future injury actually threatened. Atterbury v. West, 122 S. W. 1106, 1107, 139 Mo. App. 180 (citing Verdin v. City of St. Louis, 33 S. W. 502, 131 Mo. loc. cit. 117).

Rev. St. § 4287, defines an "injunction" as being a writ or order requiring a person to refrain from a particular act. The writ of injunction has not the power to restrain an act already done. Wilson v. Boise City, 60 Pac. 84, 85, 7 Idaho, 69.

An injunction is a preventive writ which restrains motion and enforces inaction, while mandamus is a remedial writ which compels action and coerces the performance of a proper existing duty, and hence a writ whereby persons were restrained from intruding themselves on the county committee of the Democratic party, and members of the committee were restrained from attempting to include the intruders as members, is an injunction. Ware v. Welch (Tex.) 149 S. W. 263, 264.

"Originally injunctions were preventive only, and it is only within recent years that a mandatory injunction has sprung into existence. Preventive injunctions necessarily operate upon an unperformed and unexecuted act, and prevent a threatened, but nonexistent, injury. A concrete case is presented whenever a right of the plaintiff is threatened by the defendant and the damage would be irreparable, and where protection of that right belongs to the class of cases that are cognizable in equity." Schubach v. McDonald, 78 S. W. 1020, 1024, 1027, 179 Mo. 163, 65 L. R. A. 136, 101 Am. St. Rep. 452.

Prohibition distinguished

While prohibition is similar to the remedy by injunction against proceedings at law, the object in each case being restraint of legal proceedings, an "injunction" is directed only to the parties litigant, and prohibition is directed to the court itself, commanding cessation of exercise of jurisdiction to which it has no legal claim. The right to prohibition implies that a wrong is about to be committed, not by the parties litigant, but by the person or court assuming to exercise judicial power, and against whom the writ is asked. State ex rel. Terminal R. Ass'n of St. Louis v. Tracy, 140 S. W. 888, 890, 237 Mo. 109, 87 L. R. A. (N. S.) 448.

Restraining order distinguished

An "injunction" may be distinguished from a restraining order. The term "injunction" embodies a restraint which continues, unless modified by the court, until the hearing of the cause, and then it is made either permanent or discharged; while a restraining order is but a writ to compel the parties to maintain the matter in controversy in statu quo until the question of whether or not a temporary injunction ought to issue may be determined. Ex parte Grimes, 94 Pac. 668, 670, 20 Okl. 448.

An ex parte order, before answer restraining defendant from doing a particular act, was an "injunction," as defined by Code Civ. Proc. § 525, and not a temporary restraining order, and was therefore subject to dissolution for plaintiff's failure to give the undertaking required by Code Civ. Proc. § 529. Neumann v. Moretti, 79 Pac. 512, 518, 146 Cal. 31.

Restraining order synonymous

An "injunction" is a mere restraining order, and it will be presumed that the party against whom it is granted will obey it as long as it continues in force; otherwise, if he does not regard it, as the issuance of the writ is a proper exercise of equity, he will move to dissolve it. Ex parte Allison, 90 S. W. 492, 494, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 634, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 622, 13 Ann. Cas. 684 (quoting and adopting definition in Ex parte Warfield, 50 S. W. 934, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 420, 76 Am. St. Rep. 724).

As suit

See Suit.

As special proceeding

See Special Proceeding.

Temporary restraining order distinguished

A temporary restraining order is not "an injunction to stay proceedings upon a judgment or final order" of the county court, within Kirby's Dig. § 8998, providing that upon the dissolution of a judgment to stay proceedings upon a judgment or final order damages shall be assessed by the court. Adcock v. Coker (Ark.) 151 S. W. 253.

As a writ of right

Injunction is a conservatory writ, which it is within the sound legal discretion of the judge before whom a cause is pending to issue whenever it is necessary to prevent one of the parties, during the continuance of the suit, from doing some act injurious to the other party. State ex rel. Pelletier v. Somerville, 36 South. 864, 866, 112 La. 1091.

INJUNCTION PENDENTE LITE

An "injunction pendente lite" is a provisional remedy, granted before the hearing upon the merits, for the purpose of preventing the doing of any act whereby the rights in controversy may be materially damaged, injured, or endangered before the final decree, and its purpose is to preserve the subject in controversy until an opportunity is accorded for a full and deliberate investigation. Ford v. Taylor, 140 Fed. 356, 358.

INJURE

Otherwise injured, see Otherwise.

By the use of the word "injure" in a statute providing that, if any person unlawfully but not feloniously take and carry away or destroy "injure," or deface any property, real or personal, not his own, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined, etc., it would seem reasonable to suppose that the Legislature intended the extent of the injury to be the same as required at common law, and did not intend to provide a criminal offense for every act which would constitute a trespass in a civil action for damages. Davis v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 56 S. E. 400, 402, 61 W. Va. 246, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 993.

If land has been overflowed or injured as the direct result of the building of a levee, that amounts to a "taking" or "injuring" within the meaning of a constitutional provision which protects private property from public use without compensation. Meriwether v. Board of Directors of St. Francis Levee Dist., 165 Fed. 317, 320, 91 C. C. A. 285.

Pen. Code, § 19 (Act March 4, 1909, c. 321, 35 Stat. 1092), punishing persons conspiring to injure any citizen in the free exercise of any right or privilege secured to him by the federal Constitution and laws, covers a conspiracy to deprive a citizen of his right to vote at a congressional election and thereby injure him, within the ordinary meaning of the word "injure," and a conspiracy to deprive illiterate negro voters of their right to vote by preparing the ballots in such a way as to make it difficult to vote for their candidate for Congress is punishable. United States v. Stone, 188 Fed. 836, 840.

As used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5209, providing that any officer, clerk, or agent of a national bank who embezzles or misapplies any of its moneys, funds, or credits, etc., with intent to "injure or defraud" the bank, shall be guilty, etc., does not mean malice or ill will toward the association, but the terms are satisfied by proof of a general intent to injure or defraud the bank arising in contemplation of law by the willful or intentional doing of the illegal or fraudulent act. Flickinger v. United States, 150 Fed. 1, 11, 79 C. C. A. 515.

To "injure" may be defined "to impair, to violate, or to injure rights." The word "injure," as used in Rev. St. 1890, § 2009, providing that every person who, with intent to injure or defraud, shall falsely forge, relates to injury to property or property rights, as distinguished from injury to the person or personal rights; otherwise it is meaningless in the connection in which it is used. An indictment, alleging that defendant with "intent to cheat and defraud" forged an instrument was good; the word "cheat" being of similar import to "injure." State v. Haroun, 98 S. W. 467, 470, 199 Mo. 519.

Under Const. § 242, which provides that municipal corporations, invested with the power of taking private property for public use, shall make compensation for property taken or injured before the taking or injury, a party, to whose property a reasonably apparent injury has resulted from the ditching of a county road in such a way as to discharge accumulated water upon his property in a greater quantity than the natural flow, is "injured," within the meaning of section 242, and the county is liable for the injury from the increase of burden. Moore v. Lawrence County, 136 S. W. 1031, 1032, 143 Ky. 448.

As damage

While the verbs "to injure" and "to damage" are nearly synonymous, "injure" and "damage" are not always legally synonymous, as there may be damnum absque injuria. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Smith, 60 S. E. 353, 354, 3 Ga. App. 644.

As applied to taking or injuring property for public use, "text-writers and adjudicated cases use the words 'damaged,' 'injured,' and 'injuriously affected' as equivalents and meaning in substance the same thing." Tide-water Ry. Co. v. Shartzer, 59 S. E. 407, 409, 107 Va. 562, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053.

As defraud

In a trial for false pretenses, it was error to refuse instructions, because they involved the proposition that the defendant could not be convicted in the absence of an intent to defraud; the word "injure," as used in Code 1907, § 6920, defining false pretenses, and requiring as an element of the offense an intent "to injure or defraud," meaning the same as the word "defraud." Hope v. State, 59 South. 326, 327, 5 Ala. App. 123.

INJURED IN PROPERTY

A person whose property is diminished by payment of money wrongfully induced is "injured in his property." Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. City of Atlanta, 27 Sup. Ct. 65, 66, 203 U. S. 390, 51 L. Ed. 241.

A person whose property is diminished by a payment of money wrongfully induced is "injured in his property." Wheeler-Stenzel Co. v. National Window Glass J. Ass'n., 152 Fed. 864, 874, 81 C. C. A. 658, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 972 (quoting and adopting statement in Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. City of Atlanta, 27 Sup. Ct. 65, 203 U. S. 390, 51 L. Ed. 241).

INJURED PARTY

See Injured Person.

INJURED PERSON

Rev. St. 1909, §§ 2370, 2372, allowing a divorce to the "injured party," are given the same construction as Rev. St. 1845, c. 53, allowing the "innocent and injured party" a divorce; and where both parties are in fault the court will not attempt to find which is the most in fault, but will award neither the relief sought. Barth v. Barth, 151 S. W. 769, 771, 168 Mo. App. 423.

A shipper, who is charged by a railroad company on an interstate shipment a rate in excess of that established by the company and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, is injured by such unlawful rate within the meaning of the Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 13, without regard to the question of its reasonableness, and under section 16 the Interstate Commerce Commission has power to make an award of damages therefor which may be enforced by action in a Circuit Court. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Feintuch, 191 Fed. 482, 484, 112 C. C. A. 126.

Where an information for disturbing a minor's peace is filed before a justice of the peace upon the affidavit of his father, the father is the injured party, within Rev. St. 1889, § 4358, providing that in certain prosecutions before justices of the peace at the injured party's instance the costs shall be adjudged against him on defendant's acquittal. State v. Wood, 107 S. W. 431, 432, 128 Mo. App. 642.

Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4270, where the clerk of a corporation, or any other officer having charge of the book containing a record of the stockholders, refuses to allow a stockholder an opportunity to inspect the book, or refuses to exhibit any papers of the company on file, shall forfeit to the "injured party" a specified penalty. "The variety and magnitude of the corporate business of the state forbids a construction which would impose a penalty upon an officer who refused an inspection where the demand was prompted by curiosity or a desire to vex or harass the management. It would hardly be contended that every stockholder in a banking corporation has the right to inspect all the checks of its patrons, or that he may demand as of right to inspect escrow contracts or other papers kept for the accommodation of other parties. To subject the offending officer to the payment of the statutory penalty there must be a demand for an inspection of the book named in the statute, or a designated paper or papers lodged with and kept by the corporation and pertaining to its corporate business, and the party making the demand must have an interest in inspecting the paper, and there must be a refusal to comply with the demand." Brown v. Kildea, 106 Pac. 452, 453, 58 Wash. 184.

The terms "person injured" or "aggrieved," in statutes giving rights of action or penalties to such persons, must be regarded as extending only to such persons as are immediately injured by the very act prohibited or by some direct and immediate or necessary and natural consequences of such act. Flour inspectors are not "persons injured," within the act of 1850, by the sale of flour required to be inspected without inspection. Hatch v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 737, 739.

Under V. S. 2260, the "person injured" by the sale of personal property covered by a mortgage, without the consent of the mortgagee indorsed on the mortgage may be the mortgagee or his assigns, or the vendee of the mortgagor. Colston v. Bean, 58 Atl. 795, 796, 77 Vt. 40.

The words "person injured," used in the proviso to the statute (Acts 1874, No. 51) requiring notice to be given to the selectmen in case of injury on the highway, refer to the person injured in the accident, and not to the person injured pecuniarily. Eames v. Town of Brattleboro, 54 Vt. 471, 475.

St. 1898, § 4255, gives to the administrator for the benefit of certain relatives of a deceased person a right of action whenever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, such as would, if death had not ensued, have entitled the party injured to maintain an action and recover damages in respect thereof. Held, that the words "party injured" mean the party whose death is caused, and not the relatives of the deceased. Johnson v. City of Eau Claire, 135 N. W. 481, 483, 149 Wis. 194.

P. S. 5842, giving to "the party injured" by the cutting of trees on the land of another without leave of the owner the right to sue for treble damages, gives it to the owner in the large and liberal sense, and a tenant for years is entitled to sue thereunder. Guild v. Prentiss, 74 Atl. 1115, 1117, 88 Vt. 212, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 318.

Revisal 1905, § 1562, requiring the application for divorce to be made "by the party injured," means that neither spouse is entitled to a divorce where his or her marital default provoked the alleged misconduct of the other. Page v. Page, 76 S. E. 619, 621, 161 N. C. 170.

INJURIA

See Damnum Absque Injuria.

Damnum distinguished, see Damage—Damages.

Wrong synonymous, see Wrong.

"The 'injuria' of the Roman law, sometimes translated 'injury' and at other times 'outrage,' and which is generally understood at this time to convey the idea of legal wrong, was held to embrace many acts resulting in damage for which the law would give redress. It embraced all of those wrongs which were the result of a direct invasion of the rights of the person and the rights of property which are enumerated in all of the commentaries on the common law, and which are so familiar to every one at this time. But it included more. An outrage was committed not only by striking with the fists or with the club or lash, but also by shouting until a crowd gathered around one, and it was an outrage or legal wrong to merely follow an honest woman or young boy or young girl; and it was declared in unequivocal terms that these illustrations were not exhaustive, but that an injury or legal wrong was committed 'by numberless other acts.' Pavesich v. New England Life Ins. Co., 50 S. E. 68, 71, 122 Ga. 190, 69 L. R. A. 101, 106 Am. St. Rep. 104, 2 Ann. Cas. 561 (citing Sanders' Just. [Hammond's Ed.] 499, and Poste's Inst. of Gains [3d Ed.] 449).

INJURIOUSLY AFFECTED

Otherwise injuriously affected, see Otherwise.

As applied to taking or injuring property for public use, "text-writers and adjudicated cases use the words 'damaged,' 'injured,' and 'injuriously affected' as being equivalents and meaning in substance the same thing." Tidewater Ry. Co. v. Shartzer, 59 S. E. 407, 409, 107 Va. 562, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053.

Under Rev. Codes, § 9271, requiring parties to specify the particular grounds on which instructions are objected to, etc., accused, who did not object to any of the instructions submitting murder in the first and second degrees and manslaughter, but who acquiesced in the theory that there was evidence on which a verdict of manslaughter might be predicated, may not, on appeal, complain of the conviction of manslaughter because the state's witnesses proved facts showing a willful and deliberate murder, as the substantial rights of accused were not "injuriously affected" thereby within sections 9415 and 9548, requiring the court on appeal to disregard technical errors, etc. State v. Crean, 114 Pac. 603, 604, 605, 608, 43 Mont. 47, Ann. Cas. 1912C. 424.

Such injury, see Such.

Willful injury, see Willful—Willfully.

The word "injury," as generally used, includes any act or omission which harms or damages another, whether it is justified or not. Barry v. McCollom, 70 Atl. 1035, 1036, 81 Conn. 293, 129 Am. St. Rep. 215.

"An 'injury,' is a wrong or tort." Woodruff v. North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co., 18 Fed. 753, 781 (quoting Bouv. Dict.).

The word "injury" means a wrong or tort. It may arise by nonfeasance or failure to perform a legal obligation or duty. Randolph's Adm'r v. Snyder, 129 S. W. 562, 564, 139 Ky. 159.

It is extremely difficult to lay down any actual definition of an "injury," because it is always a question of compound facts, which must be looked to, to see whether or not the mode of carrying on a business did or did not occasion so serious an injury as to interfere with the comforts of life and enjoyment of property. "Everything must be looked at from a reasonable point of view. Therefore the law does not regard trifling and small inconveniences, but only regards sensible inconveniences and injuries which sensibly diminish the comfort, enjoyment, or value of the property which is affected." A nuisance which annoys the occupants of a dwelling and so renders it less valuable as a habitation is an injury to property. Roesler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. v. Doyle, 64 Atl. 156, 157, 159, 73 N. J. Law, 521.

Though an "injury," legally and technically speaking, signifies a wrong done to a person, or, in other words, a violation of his right, the word is not used in such technical sense in a statute providing that no action to recover damages for injury to the person, or for an injury to personal property caused by negligence, shall be brought but within one year from the date of the injury or neglect complained of, but in its more ordinary sense of the immediate hurt; its qualification by the words "to the person" and "to personal property" being made to indicate the object of the hurt rather than the subject of the legal injury. Sharkey v. Skilton, 77 Atl. 950, 952, 83 Conn. 503.

The word "injury," as used in Pub. St. 1901, c. 191, § 12, relative to an action for death, such section being a redraft of the provision as to damages found in Laws 1887, p. 454, c. 71, § 1, where the phrase was "wrongful act or neglect" instead of "injury," means the same as "wrongful act or neglect." Yeaton v. Boston & M. R. R., 61 Atl. 522, 524, 73 N. H. 285.

The word "injury," in an instruction, in an action for damages sustained by reason of defendant's alleged wrongful act in prematurely discharging plaintiff from a hospital where it had contracted to treat him for his injuries, that the jury should compensate him for loss of time caused by such "injury" and allow such amount as would be a reasonable sum for medical attention and treatment, and also such an amount as would compensate him for his mental and physical suffering caused by want of proper care and medical attention, is ambiguous and may refer to the wrong done plaintiff by the failure of defendant to furnish him with medical care and treatment, or refer to the physical hurt or damage, and the charge is objectionable as allowing recovery for all the time lost on account of the injury, while the suit is not for the original injury but only for damages directly caused by the wrongful discharge from the hospital. International & R. Co. v. Logan, 81 S. W. 812, 813, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 279.

The word "injury," as used in Civ. Code, § 134, defining extreme cruelty as the infliction or threats of bodily "injury," means a hurt. Ryan v. Ryan, 84 Pac. 494, 33 Mont. 406.

St. 1898, § 4971, subd. 1, provides that all words in statutes shall be construed according to common usage. Laws 1903, p. 640, c. 397, creating a pension fund for the police department, provides, in section 8, that if any member, while performing his duty, be injured, and be found permanently disabled thereby, etc., he shall be retired, provided no such retirement shall occur unless he contracted disability while on active duty, etc. Section 9 provides that if any member shall die from an injury received in line of duty, as described in the preceding section, his widow and minor children shall receive a pension. Laws 1899, p. 640, c. 265, of which the law of 1903 was, in effect, an amendment, contained, in section 9, both the expressions, "an injury received in the line of his duty," and "or any disease contracted by reason of his occupation"; but the latter words were eliminated in the law of 1903, which substituted the words "as described in the preceding section." Held that, since common and approved usage of the word "injury" includes any hurtful effect which may be suffered by any one, the word as used in section 8 was intended to include contraction of disease, notwithstanding the change in the law, and hence the widow and minor children of a policeman dying of pneumonia contracted in performing his duties were entitled to pensions. State ex rel. McManus v. Board of Trustees of Policemen's Pension Fund, 119 N. W. 806, 807, 138 Wis. 133, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1175.

A conviction by a jury selected from a special venire drawn under the unconstitutional act of February 26, 1907, is illegal, and the judgment must be reversed, as it cannot be said that such trial is without "injury," within Code 1907, § 6264. Walker v. State, 54 South. 624, 171 Ala. 1.

Damage distinguished

There is a wide distinction between "damage" and "injury." They bear the same relation to each other as cause and effect. An injury, in its legal sense, is misconduct, and damage is the legal term applied to the loss resulting from misconduct. Carroll v. Rye Tp., 101 N. W. 894, 897, 13 N. D. 458.

Damages synonymous

The word "damaged," in section 23 of the Customs Administrative Act of June 10, 1890, forbidding allowance of damages to imported goods in the estimation and liquidation of duties thereon, is used in the sense of impairment or "injury." Lawder v. Stone, 23 Sup. Ct. 79, 83, 187 U. S. 281, 47 L. Ed. 178.

In discussions of the character of damages for which a party guilty of negligence resulting in an injury is liable, the term "injury" must be understood as synonymous with damages. Johnson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 53 S. E. 362, 365, 140 N. C. 574.

Loss distinguished

See Loss.

As result from unlawful act

"Injury," in its legal sense, means damage resulting from an unlawful act." State v. Van Pelt, 49 S. E. 177, 185, 136 N. C. 633, 68 L. R. A. 760, 1 Ann. Cas. 495 (quoting and adopting definition in Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis, 55 N. W. 1119, 54 Minn. 223, 21 L. R. A. 337, 40 Am. St. Rep. 319).

Waste synonymous

Greater New York Charter, § 59, provides that the board of aldermen and the officers and employes of the city are trustees of its property, funds, and effects, every taxpayer is a cestui que trust in respect to such property, and that any cotrustee or cestui que trust may prosecute any action to prevent "waste" or "injury" to any property or funds held in trust, and that all the duties imposed by law on such trustees may be enforced by the city or by any cotrustee or cestui que trust aforesaid. Held, that a taxpayer's action under such section to restrain the alleged improvident expenditure of municipal funds was similar to that prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1925, and was not maintainable without proof of fraud, collusion, corruption, bad faith, or illegality, since the terms "waste" and "injury," as used in the two statutes, are identical in meaning and include only illegal, wrongful, or dishonest acts. Hearst v. McClellan, 92 N. Y. Supp. 484, 486, 102 App. Div. 336.

INJURY AND MALICIOUS TRESPASS TO PROPERTY

"Injury or malicious trespass to property" is defined by Rev. St. 1899, § 1989, to mean a wrongful, intentional, and a willful injury and is not confined to cases where the offender is actuated by an evil animus against the owner of the property or the property itself. Section 1261 making the unlawful interference with telephone lines a misdemeanor, is repealed by Laws 1901, p. 129, including telephone companies in the provisions of Rev. St. 1899, § 1957, under which the malicious injury of lines of telegraph companies is a felony. State v. McKee, 104 S. W. 486, 487, 128 Mo. App. 524.

INJURY BY THE ELEMENTS

See Elements.

INJURY RECEIVED

An instruction that the jury in ascertaining the damages should give plaintiff such amount as would compensate him for "the injury received," and could consider the personal injury suffered, the pain suffered, or which he might suffer in the future, the expenses for medical attendance, and that if prior to the injury he earned his living in part by manual labor and the injury, in whole or in part, incapacitated him from performing manual labor and earning his living such fact should be considered, was not objectionable as failing to allow compensation for loss of time and for the impairment of capacity to earn money in his business, and as permitting the jury to assess compensation for permanent injury only, and not for temporary injury, for the expression "Injury received" fairly comprehended all injuries sustained. Hall v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 122 N. W. 894, 896, 145 Iowa, 291.

INJURY TO THE PERSON

See Personal Injury.

INJURY TO PERSON AND PROPERTY

"Injury to person and property" means causing damage to the subject-matter of the rights, not depriving the owner of them. A conversion of property is not a "willful and malicious injury to person or property," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17a2, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 5, 32 Stat. 798, which excepts liabilities for such injuries from debts from which a bankrupt is released by a discharge. In re Ennis & Stoppani, 171 Fed. 755, 756, 757.

INJURY TO PROPERTY

"Injury to property" is defined as "an actionable act whereby the estate of another is lessened, other than a personal injury or the breach of a contract." Fullerton v. Young, 94 N. Y. Supp. 511, 512, 46 Misc. Rep.

292 (quoting Code Civ. Proc. § 8343, subd. 10).

"Injury," as used in the Flowage Act, authorizing condemnation in certain cases, was such as resulted from depriving the landowner of the ability to use his land to the best advantage in view of its location and natural adaptability, and that a limitation of the use of undeveloped water power was an injury to land, for which compensation must be made. Swain v. Pemigewasset Power Co., 85 Atl. 288, 289, 76 N. H. 498.

The word "injury," in the statute relating to condemnation proceedings and providing that the commissioners appointed shall inspect the real property and consider the "injury" which the owner may sustain, etc., includes all the actual damages, capable of exact or approximate measurement, which the owner may sustain by reason of the taking of his land, and includes the expense of moving a stock of lumber at the time of the condemnation and appropriation. Blincoe v. Choctaw, O. & W. R. Co., 83 Pac. 903, 907, 16 Okl. 286, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 890, 8 Ann. Cas. 689.

The word "injury," in the statute directing commissioners, appointed in proceedings by a railroad to condemn land, to inspect the real estate and consider the "injury" which the owner may sustain by reason of the railroad, and to assess the damages which the owner will sustain by the appropriation of his land, includes not only compensation for the land actually taken, but also includes damage to the remaining land, the real measure of damages being the difference in the value of the land as a whole without the railroad over it, and the value of that remaining untaken, burdened with the dangers and inconveniences incident to the operating of the railroad; and where the running of trains over the road increases the dangers of fire to grass, grain, etc., on the adjoining lands, which formed a part of the original tract from which the right of way was taken, and adds to the inconvenience of farming the remaining land, such matters must be considered as bearing on the amount of damages sustained, as affecting the market value of the land untaken. St. Louis, E. R. & W. R. Co. v. Oliver, 87 Pac. 423, 424, 17 Okl. 589, 10 Ann. Cas. 748.

Kirby's Dig. § 6288, entitles the husband to an action for damages for the services and companionship of his wife when she is killed by the wrongful act of another. Section 6285 permits an action by the person "injured" for wrongs done to his person or property, or after his death, by his executor. Held, in a suit by an executor, to revive an action begun by his testator, under section 6288, for the killing of the latter's wife by defendant, that there was neither an injury to his "person" nor his "property," within section, 6285. Billingsly v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 107 S. W. 173, 174, 84 Ark. 617, 120 Am. St. Rep. 95.

Burning timber

The negligent burning of timber on land is an injury to real property within the meaning of Revisal 1905, § 419, providing that actions for injuries to real property must be tried in the county in which the subject of the action or some part thereof is situated, notwithstanding Act 1905, c. 367, amending such section (Code, § 192), and providing that actions against railroads may be tried in the county where plaintiff resided at the time the cause of action arose. Perry v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 68 S. E. 1060, 1061, 153 N. C. 117.

Conversion

Federal Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 9, 30 Stat. 549, provides that a bankrupt shall not be exempt from arrest upon civil process upon a claim from which his discharge would not be a release, and section 17, subd. 2, provides that a discharge in bankruptcy shall not release him from liability for "willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another." Held, that the intentional conversion and sale of a client's corporate stock by a broker constituted an "injury to property" within section 17, so that the broker's discharge in bankruptcy would not release him from liability for such conversion, and hence he was not exempted from arrest; the term "injury to property" including any legal taking and detention thereof from the owner. Kavanaugh v. McIntyre, 133 N. Y. Supp. 679, 680, 74 Misc. Rep. 222.

False return of service of summons

The Municipal Court of the City of New York has jurisdiction of an action for damages against an attorney for having falsely returned service of summons to plaintiff, upon which there was judgment and execution against the plaintiff, as for an "injury to property," which, as to the jurisdiction of the court has been held to mean every invasion of one's property rights by actionable wrong. Main Electric Co. v. Cohen, 129 N. Y. Supp. 66, 67, 72 Misc. Rep. 30.

Fraud

Fraud belongs to the class of injuries denominated "injuries to property." Damages claimed for waste of land, and for deceit also in the sale of personalty, must in each instance be held to arise out of an injury to property with or without force, and can be united therefore in the same complaint, under Rev. St. § 2647, enumerating several classes of actions, one of which comprises causes arising out of injuries to property, and declaring that causes belonging to the same class may be united. Gilbert v. Loberg, 53 N. W. 500, 501, 83 Wis. 189.

"Materially false and fraudulent representations which induce another to part with his property constitute an act causing 'injury to property.'" In re Harper, 175 Fed. 412, 420.

"Injury to property" is not limited to a direct corporeal damage or wrong done to specific property, as distinguished from an infringement of the rights of property, but includes a case where one person obtains property of another by means of fraud. Where one practices fraud and deceit whereby another is induced to accept property in settlement of a debt much greater in amount than the value of the property, and injury to property is committed and not an injury to the person, and the statute of limitations with reference to actions for injury to property applies. Crawford v. Crawford, 67 S. E. 673, 676, 184 Ga. 114, 19 Ann. Cas. 932 (quoting Cleveland v. Barrows [N. Y.] 59 Barb. 364).

Malicious attachment

Malicious attachment is an "injury to property," not to the person, so as to pass to a trustee in bankruptcy, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70a, subds. 5, 6, 30 Stat. 565, vesting in a trustee in bankruptcy all the property which, prior to the filing of the petition, the bankrupt could by any means have transferred, and all rights of action arising upon contracts, or for the unlawful taking or detention of, or injury to, his property, and Rev. Laws 1905, § 4502, providing that all causes of action other than those out of injuries to the person, whether arising on contract or not, survive to the personal representatives. Hansen Mercantile Co. v. Wyman, Partridge & Co., 117 N. W. 926, 928, 105 Minn. 491, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 727.

Obstruction of highway

The obstruction of a highway is not an "injury to property" of a town, within Rev. St. § 819, authorizing the supervisors of each town to see that all injuries to property of the town are prosecuted for. Town of Woodman v. Bohan, 64 N. W. 323, 91 Wis. 36.

Wrongful filing of notice of mechanic's lien

An action to recover for delay of work on a building, and consequent loss of rent, by reason of the wrongful causing of a notice of mechanic's lien to be filed against the property, is one for "an injury to property," jurisdiction of which is conferred on the Municipal Court by Municipal Court Act; "injury to property" being defined by Code Civ. Proc. § 3343 (10), to be "an actionable act, whereby the estate of another is lessened, other than a personal injury or the breach of a contract." Ghiglione v. Friedman, 190 N. Y. Supp. 1024, 115 App. Div. 606.

INJUSTICE

Under Const. 1890, § 178, authorizing the Legislature to alter, amend, or appeal any charter of incorporation, whenever, in its opinion, it is for the public interest to do so, provided that no injustice be done to the stockholders, the right of a building and loan association to charge usurious interest, even if expressly given by its charter, taken when the Constitution was in force, could be taken away; every usury law being of public interest, and such a change not being an "injustice" to the stockholders, within the meaning of the Constitution. Mississippi Building & Loan Ass'n v. McElveen, 56 South. 187, 189, 100 Miss. 16.

INLAID LINOLEUM

Plank linoleum, made by running upon the burlap foundation paste of two colors in stripes of equal width, a process differing from that employed in making inlaid linoleum, is, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule J, par. 337, dutiable as "linoleum * * * figured or plain," rather than as "inlaid linoleum." United States v. Scott & West, 164 Fed. 285, 286, 287.

INLAND

INLAND BILL OF EXCHANGE

Under Rev. Laws 1902, c. 73, § 143, defining a "bill of exchange" as an unconditional order requiring drawee to pay a certain sum in money, and section 143, making an inland bill of exchange one which is drawn and payable within the state, and permitting holder to treat a bill as an "inland bill" unless the contrary appears on its face, a writing, signed by a contractor, directing the owner to pay to another a certain sum and deduct it from any amount due him on final payment, was improperly treated as an inland bill. Buttrick Lumber Co. v. Collins, 89 N. E. 138, 139, 202 Mass. 413.

INLAND NAVIGATION

"What the expression 'inland navigation' means must be ascertained from the geography of our own country, and the commerce carried on by vessels on its waters. Lake Erie is inland, and a voyage from Buffalo to Detroit is, in my judgment, 'inland navigation.'" Moore v. American Transp. Co., 24 How. 41, 16 L. Ed. 674.

Navigation of Long Island Sound is not "inland navigation," within the meaning of Acts Cong. March 3, 1851, providing that the provisions of the act relating to the limitation of liability of owners of vessels shall not apply to owners of vessels used in inland navigation. Wallace v. Providence & S. S. S. Co., 14 Fed. 56, 58.

INLAND TRANSPORTATION

Cost of inland transportation, see Cost.

INLAND WATERS

The phrase "inland waters," as used in a policy of marine insurance on a houseboat, expressly limiting the risk to loss or disaster occurring while the boat is within inland waters, does not include the waters of the Atlantic Ocean off Coney Island. Fulton v. President, etc., of Insurance Co. of North America, 127 Fed. 413, 414.

INMATE

Act Feb. 8, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 9) § 1, provides that any person who shall procure a female inmate of a house of prostitution, or shall procure for a female person a place in such house or as an inmate therein, shall be guilty of pandering. Held, that the word "inmate" means one who occupies or lodges in a place with others, or any occupant, even if alone, so that the act must be construed as requiring the procuring of a place in a house of prostitution for one who actually becomes an inmate thereof, and where defendant had agreed to let one of a number of designated rooms in such a house to a prostitute when it was ready for occupancy, but the room was never put in condition, and was never occupied by her, the offense was not complete. People v. Matsicura, 124 Pac. 882, 883, 19 Cal. App. 75.

INN

See New Inn.

See, also, Hotel.

An "inn" is a house of entertainment for travelers. Hill v. Memphis Hotel Co., 136 S. W. 997, 998, 124 Tenn. 376.

An "inn" is a house for the entertainment of travelers and passengers in which lodging and necessities are provided for them and for their horses and attendants. The guest must be a traveler. Crapo v. Rockwell, 94 N. Y. Supp. 1122, 1124, 48 Misc. Rep. 1 (citing Bacon's Abr. "Inns," B).

An "inn" is a place for the lodging and entertainment of travelers and passengers, their horses and attendants, for a reasonable compensation. Johnson v. Chadbourn Finance Co., 94 N. W. 874, 875, 89 Minn. 310, 99 Am. St. Rep. 571.

The legal definition of an "inn" is "a house where all who conduct themselves properly, and who are able and ready to pay for their entertainment, are received, if there is accommodation for them, and who, without any stipulated engagement as to the duration of their stay or as to the rate of compensation, are, while there, supplied, at a reasonable charge, with meals, their lodgings, and such service and attention as are necessarily incident to the use of the house as a temporary home." Alsberg v. Lucerne Hotel Co., 92 N. Y. Supp. 851, 852, 46 Misc. Rep. 617 (quoting and adopting definition in Cromwell

v. Stephens [N. Y.] 3 Abb. Prac. [N. S.] 26; Matter of Brewster, 80 N. Y. Supp. 666, 39 Misc. Rep. 689).

While an "inn" or tavern is something more than a place where liquor is sold, it cannot be questioned that the most striking feature of the license to keep an inn or tavern under the "Inns and Tavern Act" is the right it gives to sell spirituous liquors. Conover v. Gregson, 60 Atl. 31, 32, 72 N. J. Law, 108.

An "inn" has been properly defined as a public house of entertainment for all those who choose to visit it. It is this publicly holding a place out as one where all transient persons who may choose to come will be received as guests for compensation that is made the principal distinction between a hotel and a boarding house in many well-considered decisions. Where a person entered into a contract with the "proprietors of the Imperial Hotel," who were doing a general hotel business during the summer at a summer resort, by which such person was to stop there at a reduced rate, no definite time being fixed, the relation of innkeeper and guest was created, so as to render the hotel liable as insurer for the loss of money and jewelry stolen from a trunk in such person's room during her temporary absence. Holstein v. Phillips & Sims, 59 S. E. 1087, 1089, 146 N. C. 366, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 475, 14 Ann. Cas. 323.

The supplying of guests with meals is not one of the essential requisites of an "inn," in order to charge the proprietor thereof with the liability of a keeper of a common inn. Where defendant held out his house as a hotel in which furnished rooms were rented for a single night or longer time and in the regular course of business rented his rooms without special contract to all applicants in fit condition to be received, and kept an office and a register, the house was an "inn or public hotel," though no meals were served. Nelson v. Johnson, 116 N. W. 828, 829, 104 Minn. 440, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1259.

Boarding house distinguished

The term "inn" was formerly defined to mean a house where a traveler is furnished with everything he has occasion for while on his way, and, though such definition has been somewhat modified by the progress of time, an inn, when unlicensed, is distinguished from a "boarding house," in that the guest of the latter is under an express contract, at a certain rate and for a specified time, and the keeper of the boarding house may select his guests and fix full terms; while the inn is for the entertainment of all who come lawfully and pay regularly. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Drennen, 57 South. 876, 882, 175 Ala. 338.

"An 'inn' is a house where a keeper holds himself out as ready to receive all who may choose to resort thither and pay an adequate price for the entertainment, while the keeper of a boarding house reserves the choice of comers and the terms of accommodation, contracting specially with each customer, and most commonly arranging for long periods and a definite abode." Humbird v. Crawford, 105 N. W. 330, 331, 128 Iowa, 743 (quoting and adopting Schouler, Bailm. p. 253).

A "boarding house" is not, in common parlance or legal meaning, every private house where one or more boarders are kept occasionally only and on special consideration, but it is a quasi public house where boarders are generally and habitually kept and which is held out and known as a place of entertainment of that kind. A boarding house is not an "inn," the distinction being that a boarder is received into the house by voluntary contract, whereas an innkeeper, in the absence of any reasonable or lawful excuse, is bound to receive a guest when he presents himself. The distinction between a boarding house and an inn is that in a boarding house the boarder is under an express contract at a certain rate for a certain period of time, while in an inn there is no express agreement; the guest, being on his way, is entertained from day to day according to his business, upon an implied contract. Horace Waters & Co. v. Gerard, 94 N. Y. Supp. 702, 705, 106 App. Div. 431, (dissenting opinion of O'Brien, P. J., citing Cady v. McDowell [N. Y.] 1 Lans. 486).

The fact that a house is open for the public, that those who patronize it come to it on the invitation which is extended to the general public, and without previous agreement for accommodation, and without any previous agreement as to the duration of their stay, marks the important distinction between a hotel or an "inn" and a "boarding house." If meals are served to whoever comes at a uniform price, such fact is sufficient to show that the proprietor is keeping a public eating house. Humbird v. Crawford, 105 N. W. 330, 331, 128 Iowa, 743.

Hotel and tavern synonymous

There is no legal distinction between an "inn" or "tavern" and a "hotel," but, if there be such, there is no practical difference between them, such as would render regulations imposed by Act April 13, 1906, § 4, commonly known as the "Bishops' Law" (P. L. 1906, p. 203), subjecting inns and taverns and hotels to the restrictions mentioned in the section, unless such inns and taverns have at least ten spare rooms and beds for the accommodation of boarders, transients, and travelers, necessary and appropriate in the case of small hotels and not in the case of such inns and taverns. The section, therefore, means that all inns, taverns, and hotels, unless they have at least ten spare rooms and beds for the accommodation of boarders, transients, and travelers, are subject to the restrictions. Meehan v. Board of Excise Com'rs of Jersey City, 70 Atl. 363, 365, 75 N. J. Law, 557.

The difference between "inn" and "hotel" is not very great. The terms have come to be regarded as synonymous, as said by Wandell in Law of Inns and Hotels, p. 15. "The inn is a house in which a traveler is furnished with everything for which he has occasion while on the way. A traveler may remain as long as he pleases in the inn, or he may leave it in a short time. It is an inn as long as he remains in the inn and makes no contract for any length of time. A hotel, as generally understood, looks to more permanent guests." The text-writer above cited says that hotel, strictly speaking, means a house in which travelers and other casual guests are provided with lodging but not with food. This is not the general understanding in this country. Seward v. Denechud, 45 South. 561, 564, 120 La. 720.

The word "hotel" is synonymous with the word "inn" as a place for the accommodation of travelers with food and lodging. Juddell Co. v. Goldfield Realty Co., 108 Pac. 455, 457, 32 Nev. 851.

The charge of a complaint that accused "did keep and manage the Big Meadow Hotel, a house of public resort, in a disorderly manner," is a sufficient charge, at least against collateral attack of the judgment by habeas corpus, of the offense denounced by Comp. Laws, § 4920, of keeping an "inn" in a disorderly manner, as it must be assumed that a "hotel" is an "inn." Ex parte Breckenridge, 118 Pac. 687, 84 Nev. 275.

INNKEEPER

Anciently it was the law that an "innkeeper" was one who held himself out as ready to receive all travelers and entertain them with both lodging and food, and perhaps feed and stable their horses, or, as the old expression ran, provide entertainment "for man and beast." Changes in the modes of travel, and the custom of furnishing food and lodging separately, have relaxed the definition of an innkeeper, and it may be held that a hotel where any traveler is given lodging is an inn nowadays, even though the guests take their meals elsewhere. Horton v. Terminal Hotel & Arcade Co., 89 S. W. 363, 364, 114 Mo. App. 357 (citing Commonwealth v. Wetherbee, 101 Mass. 214).

An "innkeeper" is one who publicly professes that he keeps an inn, and that he will receive therein all travelers promising to pay an adequate price and coming in a condition fit to be received. Hill v. Memphis Hotel Co., 136 S. W. 997, 998, 124 Tenn. 376.

An "innkeeper" is one who maintains a house for the entertainment of strangers for reasonable compensation, and to secure this compensation he is given a lien on the property of his guests within the inn, and for such property he is liable under a liability much like that of a common carrier. So long as he has room, he must receive all who may apply and are fit persons, without discrimination. To say that he buys and sells articles of food and drink is only true in a limited sense, as such articles are not bought to be sold, nor are they sold again, as in ordinary commerce, but are bought to be served as food and drink, and the price includes rent, service, heat, light, etc., and hence an innkeeper is not a trader or a person engaged in commercial pursuits. Toxaway Hotel Co. v. J. L. Smathers & Co., 30 Sup. Ct. 263, 264, 216 U. S. 439, 54 L. Ed. 558.

An "innkeeper," is one who regularly keeps open a public house for lodging and entertaining transient comers, on the general expectation of his suitable recompense. If one keeps an inn and also, separate from the inn, keeps a bathhouse where persons bathing in the sea change their garments and leave their clothes, he is not chargeable as an "innkeeper" for property stolen from the bathhouse. Walpert v. Bohan, 55 S. E. 181, 182, 126 Ga. 531, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 823, 115 Am. St. Rep. 114, 8 Ann. Cas. 89 (quoting and adopting definition in Schouler, Bailments, §§ 279, 303, and citing Minor v. Staples, 71 Me. 316, 36 Am. Rep. 318).

Where a dining room in a hotel building to all appearances is maintained in connection with the furnishing of lodging and by the same proprietor, and such proprietor does not advise guests to the contrary, and derives patronage from the fact that the dining room is seemingly appurtenant, a guest has the right to assume that such proprietor is an innkeeper. Defendant furnishing lodging to transient guests, though not meals, will be held to be under the full common-law responsibility of an innkeeper. Metzler v. Terminal Hotel Co., 115 S. W. 1037, 1038, 125 Mo. App. 410.

INNER COURT

Under Tenement House Act (Laws 1901, p. 889, c. 334, § 2, subd. 3), defining an "inner court" to be one not extending to the street or yard, courts sunken 7½ feet below the surface of the street and yard, and inclosed on all sides to the yard and street level, must be treated as "inner courts." People ex rel. Cohen v. Butler, 109 N. Y. Supp. 900, 905, 125 App. Div. 384.

INNOCENCE

See Presumption of Innocence.

"Innocence" cannot be asserted of an action which violated existing law, as ignorance of the law will not excuse, though a law which attempts to punish a citizen for an action, to wit, an act which when done was in violation of no existing law, will not be a proper exercise of legislative power.

Shevlin-Carpenter Co. v. Minnesota, 30 Sup. Ct. 663, 666, 218 U. S. 57, 54 L. Ed. 930 (quoting Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. Ed. 648).

INNOCENT AGENT

A person is an "innocent agent" in the commission of a crime when he commits it, moved by another person, yet incurs no legal guilt because either not endowed with mental capacity or not knowing the inculpat- ing facts. State v. Bailey, 60 S. E. 785, 787, 63 W. Va. 668 (quoting and adopting the defini- tion in Bish. New Cr. Law, § 310).

INNOCENT FIRE

Where a fire insurance policy contained an exception that the company would not be liable for loss caused by explosion of any kind unless fire ensued, and in that event for the damages by fire only, a loss occurring solely from an explosion, not by a preceding fire, or an explosion which occurred from the contact of escaping natural gas with a lighted match, are within the exceptions of the policy: the rule being that the ignition of the explosive substance must be caused by an actual combustion involuntarily or illegally started, which is called a negligent or unlaw- ful fire, and not a harmless combustion such as a lighted match, burning gas jets, or a lighted cigar, which are called "innocent fires." Stephens v. Fire Ass'n of Philadel- phia, 123 S. W. 63, 66, 139 Mo. App. 369.

INNOCENT HOLDER FOR VALUE

See, also, Holder For Value; Holder in Due Course.

The indorsee before maturity of a note as security to a debt created concurrently with the indorsement and delivery of the note, and consideration thereof in good faith, without notice of infirmities, is an "innocent holder for value." Second Nat. Bank of Bucyrus, Ohio, v. Werner, 126 N. W. 100, 102, 19 N. D. 485.

INNOCENT PURCHASER

To constitute one an "innocent purchas- er" of land, there must be a valuable consid- eration, absence of notice of adverse claims, and good faith. Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Hayden, 135 S. W. 1149, 1152, 104 Tex. 175.

To constitute an innocent purchaser, there must be a purchase without notice, actual or constructive, of an outstanding claim, and there must have been payment of a valuable consideration, though it need not be full and adequate. Downs v. Stevenson, 119 S. W. 315, 317, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 211.

A purchaser at an execution sale is not an "innocent purchaser," as against one who holds a senior recorded title, even though the conveyance was made by the grantor to defraud creditors, where the grantee was not shown to have been involved in the fraud. Matador Land & Cattle Co. v. Cooper, 87 S. W. 235, 236, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 99.

Where, at the time of a conveyance to plaintiff, the deed was of record under which his vendor claimed title, embodying a con- tract obligating the vendor to convey the land to defendant's vendor, plaintiff was not entitled to protection as an "innocent pur- chaser" against defendant, whose deed was older, though unrecorded until after plaintiff acquired its title. Houston Ice & Brewing Co. v. Henson (Tex.) 93 S. W. 713, 714.

Where plaintiff's husband purchased real estate in trust for her, and in violation of the trust sold it to S., in consideration of a pre- existing debt which had been discharged in bankruptcy, and, prior to the sale to S., an agent of plaintiff's husband contracted to sell the land to M. Bros., in pursuance of which a draft for the purchase money had been given to the agent, and was sent by him, with a deed to be signed by the husband, to a certain bank, the draft to be delivered when the deed was signed, and S. executed a deed to M. Bros., but before the draft had been paid they had notice, in time to have stopped pay- ment, of a suit brought by the wife to recover the land as her own, but they made no effort to do so, M. Bros. were not "innocent pur- chasers." Sparks v. Taylor (Tex.) 87 S. W. 740, 741.

Where testator, a nonresident, died, leav- ing land in Texas, and, after his will had been probated in the state of his residence, administration was taken out on his estate in Texas, and, after proof of a copy of his will, the land in controversy, of which he had the apparent legal title when he died, was ap- praised in its entirety and ordered sold, with- out recognition or mention of any outstanding interest, for the payment of debts, the ad- ministrator's deed to the purchaser, though a quitclaim, was sufficient to sustain a plea that the purchaser was an "innocent purchas- er without notice," that the land was com- munity property, and that a portion thereof belonged to the distributees of testator's de- ceased wife. Nelson v. Bridge, 87 S. W. 885, 887, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 283.

INNOCENT WOMAN

An "innocent woman," within the mean- ing of Revisal 1905, § 3354, punishing the se- duction under promise of marriage of any "innocent and virtuous woman," means "that, although there may have been a marriage contract, yet if the prosecutrix yielded on ac- count of lust, or from any other motive than of the promise of marriage, she would not be innocent." State v. Whitley, 53 S. E. 820, 821, 141 N. C. 823.

INNOVATE—INNOVATION

"Innovate" means to change or alter by introducing something new, to remodel, to revolutionize. "Innovation" means a change in customs, something new; contrary to es-established customs, manners, or rights. Kemper v. State, 138 S. W. 1025, 1041, 63 Tex. Cr. R. 1.

INNUENDO

"Innuendo" means nothing more than the words "id est," "scilicet," "meaning," or "aforesaid," as explanatory of a matter sufficiently expressed before. It is in the nature of a prædict. Atchley v. State, 120 S. W. 1010, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 569.

The office of an "innuendo" is to explain the words of a libel and to give them their true meaning, but it may not be used to introduce new matter or enlarge or add to the sense declared on, or impute to them a meaning not justified by the publication, either when taken alone or in connection with the inducement and colloquium. Weeks v. News Pub. Co., 83 Atl. 162, 164, 117 Md. 126.

"The office of an 'innuendo' is to define the defamatory meaning which the plaintiff seeks to put upon the words complained of, to show how they come to have the defamatory meaning claimed for them, and also to show how they relate to plaintiff whenever that is not clear from the face of them. But an innuendo must not introduce new matter or enlarge the natural meaning of words. It must not put upon them a construction which they will not bear. It cannot alter or extend the sense of defamatory words or make that certain which is in fact uncertain." Moss v. Harwood, 46 S. E. 385, 386, 102 Va. 386 (quoting and adopting the definition in Newell, Sland. & L. [2d Ed.] p. 619).

When words of an alleged defamatory publication are capable of more than one meaning, it is the office of the "innuendo" to explain or point out the sense in which it is claimed they were used. If they are capable of being used in the sense charged in the innuendo, the question whether or not they were so used is for the jury, for, notwithstanding whether they are capable of that construction is a question of law, whether that was the sense in which they were used is a question of fact. Richardson v. Thorpe, 63 Atl. 580, 73 N. H. 532.

An "innuendo" is only explanatory of the subject-matter sufficiently expressed before, and it can be only explanatory thereof, and cannot extend the sense of the words beyond their own meaning unless something is put on the record for it to explain, nor can it make a thing certain which is in fact uncertain, nor enlarge or restrict the meaning of words, nor introduce new matter. Penry v. Dozier, 49 South. 909, 913, 161 Ala. 292.

A cause of action for libel is shown when the circumstances alleged point to plaintiff as the person concerning whom the libelous statements are made, though his name is not mentioned, and the petition must allege facts from which it can be reasonably inferred that plaintiff was the person intended to be libeled, and the averment or innuendo that plaintiff was the one referred to will not make the petition sufficient, unless the facts alleged are such that the truth of the innuendo can be reasonably inferred therefrom. Defamatory words must refer to some ascertained and ascertainable person, and, where the words used contain no reflection upon any particular individual, no averment or innuendo, which is but an inference or reasoning, can make them defamatory. Harris v. Santa Fé Townsite Co. (Tex.) 125 S. W. 77, 78.

Averring facts

An "innuendo" is not the statement of a fact, but an inference. Krone v. Block, 129 S. W. 43, 44, 144 Mo. App. 575.

An "innuendo" is to explain the meaning of the alleged libelous matters, and it cannot be looked to, to supply extrinsic facts necessary, in connection with the alleged libelous publication, to constitute a cause of action. McNamara v. Goldan, 87 N. E. 440, 442, 194 N. Y. 315.

Connecting colloquia and particular words laid

In actions for defamation, the office of an "innuendo" is to connect words not in themselves actionable with some precedent facts formally averred which explain their meaning and render them actionable. Hamilton v. Lowery, 71 N. E. 54, 55, 33 Ind. App. 184.

Enlarging or extending meaning of words

In an action for slander, an "innuendo" can be used to explain the sense in which the words were used and to apply them, but not to enlarge the charge. Maerlender v. Porter, 99 N. Y. Supp. 533, 535, 114 App. Div. 180 (citing Fleischmann v. Bennett, 87 N. Y. 231; Gibson v. Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n, 76 N. Y. Supp. 197, 71 App. Div. 566).

An "innuendo" averment is one which explains the meaning of another averment, and, since it changes no fact alleged, it does not admit of being sustained by evidence. An "innuendo" is an interpretative parenthesis thrown into quoted matter to explain an obscure term. It cannot add to an averment or enlarge the sense of expressions in the pleading beyond their usual acceptation and meaning. Rubio v. State, 95 S. W. 120, 121, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 177 (citing 2 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 793; 2 Whart. Crimes, § 660).

An "innuendo" in a declaration in a libel suit is only a word of explanation, the office of which is to interpret the meaning of alleged libelous language used in the light of the circumstances alleged to explain it; and it cannot enlarge the meaning of words nor attribute to them a meaning which they will not bear. Gordon v. Journal Pub. Co., 69 Atl. 742, 744, 81 Vt. 237.

Introducing new matter

The purpose of an "innuendo" is to define the defamatory meaning which plaintiff attaches to the defamatory words complained of, and to show how they come to have that meaning and how they relate to plaintiff; but it cannot be used to introduce new matter or to enlarge the actual meaning of the words, and thereby give to the language a construction which it will not bear. It is not the office of an innuendo to make averments but to apply the words or explain their meaning. A publication stating that "Mr. Crooked R. gets it in the neck" is a libel of R. individually and cannot be enlarged by innuendo so as to constitute a libel of a corporation of which R. is manager, in the absence of an allegation that R. and the corporation are one and the same person, or that people generally understood the corporation to be meant when R. is referred to, in the connection in which the libel is published. Midland Pub. Co. v. Implement Trade Journal Co., 83 S. W. 298, 301, 108 Mo. App. 223 (citing Naulty v. Bulletin Co., 55 Atl. 862, 206 Pa. 128; Bundy v. Hart, 46 Mo. 460, 2 Am. St. Rep. 525).

It is an elementary rule of pleading that whatever is alleged must be alleged with certainty, and one of the means of insuring certainty in a complaint or indictment for slander or libel is "innuendo." An innuendo may serve as an explanation to point a meaning where there is precedent matter expressed or necessarily understood or known, but never to establish a new charge. Where a published article is libelous, the innuendo may be regarded as surplusage. State v. Clifford, 52 S. E. 864, 865, 58 W. Va. 681 (quoting and adopting State v. Aler, 20 S. E. 585, 39 W. Va. 549 [syl. para. 2, 3]).

INOPPORTUNE

"Inopportune" means unseasonable in time or at the wrong time." In an action for injuries sustained through the negligence of defendant's employes, an instruction, "If the jury believe, from the evidence, that a flagman of the defendant improperly and inopportune signaled the plaintiff's team," etc., was not misleading because of omission of the words "carelessly" and "negligently." Pennsylvania Co. v. Sloan, 17 N. E. 37, 39, 41, 125 Ill. 72, 8 Am. St. Rep. 337.

INQUEST

See Coroner's Inquest; Grand Inquest. As criminal proceeding, see Criminal Proceeding.

INQUIRE AND REPORT

The words "inquire and report" have long been used in England and in this country as a formula for a reference to a master in chancery to obtain and report information to the court. Austin v. Ahearne, 61 N. Y. 6, 12.

A corporation whose business is to guarantee, indorse, secure payment of debts and obligations, insure fidelity of persons and concerns holding positions of trust, and through guaranteed attorneys furnish direct to subscribers of a quarterly publication, and not through the company, the commercial standing of merchants and other persons is engaged in the business of inquiring into and reporting on the credit and standing of persons engaged in business within Ky. St. 1909, § 4224 (Russell's St. § 6157), requiring persons or concerns so engaged to secure a license. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Commonwealth, 118 S. W. 1000, 1001, 183 Ky. 740.

INQUIRE INTO THE CIRCUMSTANCES

The phrase "inquire into the circumstances," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2471a, providing that, if the demand of any public officer for the books and papers pertaining to the office is refused, he may make complaint to any justice of the Supreme Court of the district, or to the county judge, and declaring that at the time of the return of the order to show cause, or at any time to which the matter may be adjourned, on proof of the due service of the order, a justice or judge to whom the application is made shall proceed to inquire into the circumstances, means that when an issue of fact is raised by the affidavit interposed in objection to the application it is the duty of the court to take evidence relative to that issue, and to decide it in one way or the other; for to "inquire into the circumstances" imports a judicial investigation of the question of fact. In re Gill, 88 N. Y. Supp. 466, 467, 95 App. Div. 174.

INQUIRY

See Judicial Inquiry; Reasonable Inquiry; Writ of Inquiry.

INQUISITION

The word "inquisition" is defined by Webster to be "the act of inquiring; inquiry; examination; investigation." Carver v. Louthain, 38 Ind. 530, 547.

"Inquisition" or "office found," as relating to a trial for or declaration of forfeiture, etc., have no relation to the ordinary common-law trial by jury, and the jury there summoned was not the common-law jury before whom a citizen has a right to demand a trial where his peace or his rights were in question. Blackstone defines "inquisition" or "office found" to be "an inquiry made by the King's officer, his sheriff, coroner, or escheator, virtute officii, or by writ to them sent for that purpose, or by commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitled the King to the possession of lands or tenements, goods, or chattels. This is done by a jury of no determinate number, being either 12, or less, or more. * * * These inquests of office were devised by law, as an authentic means to give the King his right by solemn matter of record, without which he, in general, can neither take nor part from anything. For it is a part of the liberties of England, and greatly for the safety of the subject, that the King may not enter upon or seize any man's possessions upon bare surmises without the intervention of a jury." It was a procedure peculiarly adapted for the King's use, and the important thing about it was that a record might be made and entered whereon the King could base his right to possess himself of the lands, goods, and chattels of his subject; and, as it respects lands, the office found put him into immediate possession, without the necessity of a formal re-entry. Although its frequent use was for the determination of attainder, escheats, and breaches of conditions annexed to grants, and the like, the record was not conclusive, and the subject was yet entitled to a trial suitable at common law for the final determination of his rights. A good illustration is found in escheats. "The usual form of proceeding for this purpose was by an inquisition or inquest of office before a jury, which was had upon a commission out of the Court of Chancery, but was really a proceeding at common law; and, if it resulted in favor of the King, then, by virtue of ancient statutes, any one claiming title in the lands might, by leave of that court, file a traverse, in the nature of a plea or defense to the King's claim, and not in the nature of an original suit. * * * The inquest of office was a proceeding in rem; when there was a proper office found for the King, that was notice to all persons who had claims to come in and assert them; and, until so traversed, it was conclusive in the King's favor." United States v. Oregon & C. R. Co., 186 Fed. 861, 928 (quoting 3 Blackstone, 258, 259; Hamilton v. Brown, 16 Sup. Ct. 585, 587, 161 U. S. 256, 263, 40 L. Ed. 691).

INSANE—INSANITY

See General Insanity; Legal Insanity; Medical Insanity; Moral Insanity; Partial Insanity; Suicide, Sane or Insane; Temporary Insanity.

Commitment of insane as special proceeding, see Special Proceeding.

See, also, Delusion; Dementia; Irresistible Impulse; Lucid Interval; Lunacy; Monomania; Paranoia; Simple Melancholia.

"Insanity" is a diseased or abnormal condition which manifests itself in eccentricities of conduct, speech, or appearance; that is to say, in the doing or saying of things which attract attention, because, judged by the common standard, they are deviations from that which is regular and usual. State v. Lyons, 37 South. 890, 898, 113 La. 959.

A person is insane when he or she is not possessed of mind and reason equal to a full and clear understanding of his or her act in making a contract. Barlow v. Strange, 48 S. E. 844, 845, 120 Ga. 1015 (citing Frizzell v. Reed, 77 Ga. 724).

In many statutes, of which that of Michigan and Wisconsin are instances, the term "insanity," considered in its technical sense, is separated from its equivalent as regards the ability of the sufferer to care for himself or his property, leaving no ground to claim that mental unsoundness—meaning insanity, strictly so called—is essential to the appointment of a guardian. In re Streiff, 97 N. W. 189, 191, 119 Wis. 586, 100 Am. St. Rep. 908.

"No perversion of the moral affections and propensities, unless accompanied by such delusion as indicates the subversion of the will and reason, is to be regarded as constituting 'insanity' in law. Thus moral insanity, or the perversity of the moral feelings, is in itself insufficient to invalidate the civil act, or excuse the criminal act, of its subject." Where defendant charged with bigamy testified that he knew it was legally wrong to marry a second time without divorce, but that he had been told by God that it was not wrong, and a physician testified that defendant was religiously or emotionally insane, and did not believe he was able to distinguish right and wrong with regard to the crime charged, and defendant's jailer did not think him crazy, but thought him "nutty" on the subject of religion, the evidence all dealt with moral insanity and did not affect the defendant's legal liability, and the jury were justified in finding him guilty. Harrison v. State, 69 S. W. 500, 501, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 164.

Mere frenzy, or ungovernable passion, however furious, is not "insanity," within the meaning of the criminal law. State v. Cook, 72 S. E. 1025, 1027, 69 W. Va. 717.

"Etymologically 'insanity' signifies unsoundness. Lexically it signifies unsoundness of mind, or derangement of the intellect." In re American Board of Com'rs for Foreign Missions, 66 Atl. 215, 221, 102 Me. 72 (quoting and adopting definition in Johnson v. Maine & N. B. Ins. Co., 22 Atl. 108, 83 Me. 186).

"'Insanity' is indicated by proof of acts, declarations, and conduct inconsistent with the character and previous habits of the person." A marked change in a person's habits and thoughts is evidence of mental unsoundness, and proof that a woman had changed from a generous, dainty, refined, and intelligent woman of good business capacity into one of untidy habits and penurious with loss of memory and business capacity was proof indicating insanity. Knapp v. St. Louis Trust Co., 98 S. W. 70, 78, 199 Mo. 640.

The term "insane persons," as used in the statutes making the state liable for the support of such persons, and providing that the words "insane person" shall include every idiot, non compos, lunatic, and insane and distracted person, does not embrace persons committed to the School for Feeble-Minded, and the state is not liable for their support. Chapin v. City of Lowell, 80 N. E. 618, 619, 194 Mass. 486.

One mentally incapable of understanding and acting rationally in the affairs of life and in the management of his property is an "insane person" within Kirby's Dig. § 7095, providing that lands of insane persons may be redeemed from tax sales within two years after the expiration of the disability. Pulaski County v. Hill, 184 S. W. 973, 976, 97 Ark. 450.

The term "insane person," in Rev. St. 1899, § 3702, providing that, for the purpose of the chapter relating to insane persons, the words "insane persons" or the words "persons of insane mind" shall be construed to mean either an idiot or lunatic or a person of unsound mind, and incapable of managing his own affairs, does not make any distinction between irresponsible persons, persons of unsound mind, or idiots and raving maniacs. In re Crouse, 120 S. W. 666, 670, 140 Mo. App. 545.

Under Rev. St. § 4971, subd. 7, declaring that the words "insane persons" shall be construed to include every idiot, non compos, lunatic, and distracted person, and section 4069 providing that no person shall be examined as a witness in respect to any transaction or communication by him personally with a person then insane, in any civil action in which the opposite party claims under such insane person, where, in foreclosure proceedings by an assignee of a mortgage, it appeared that the assignor, for some months before the trial, was afflicted with softening of the brain, and constantly grew worse, that his disease was incurable, that within two weeks before the trial he fell into a comatose state, and remained unconscious for 16 hours, and that he was clearly incapable of testifying on the trial, or giving a coherent statement of past events, he was insane, within the meaning of the statute, and testimony by the mortgagor, as to transactions with him which were adverse to the assignees, was inadmissible. Whitney v. Traynor, 42 N. W. 267, 269, 74 Wis. 269.

All degrees and kinds of insanity

Where a life policy contains a condition that if the insured dies by his own hand or commits suicide, whether sane or insane, the word "insane" implies every degree of unsoundness of mind, and the liability of the insurer is not affected by the degree of the insanity. Seltzinger v. Modern Woodmen of America, 68 N. E. 478, 480, 204 Ill. 58.

The word "insane," as used in Gen. St. 1901, c. 99, providing a procedure for a judicial determination as to the sanity of a person and as to whether he should be confined in the state hospital for the "insane," applies to any degree of mental derangement from temporary nervous excitement to acute insanity. Ex parte Wright, 89 Pac. 678, 679, 74 Kan. 406.

P. L. 1847, p. 29, Nixon's Dig. 1868, p. 522, and Revision 1877, p. 607, § 40, contain the following definition of "insanity": "The terms 'lunatic, insane,' as used in this act include every species of insanity and extend to all deranged persons and to all of unsound minds other than idiots." In re Lang, 71 Atl. 47, 48, 77 N. J. Law, 207.

As disease of brain or mind

A disease as including, see Disease.

An instruction, in an action on behalf of an insane person, that one is deemed to be insane when unable to transact the ordinary affairs of life, understand their nature and effect, and exercise his will respecting them, is not objectionable, on the theory that one might not be able to transact ordinary affairs of life, and yet be sane, and that the charge did not show that mental ability was meant. Kaack v. Stanton, 112 S. W. 702, 706, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 496.

On a trial for a homicide, in which insanity was relied on as a defense, it was proper to charge that "insanity" was a mental disease, that it did not mean eccentricity or peculiar action of the brain, but meant a departure caused by a disease of the brain, and that mere temporary mania did not constitute insanity. Braham v. State, 38 South. 919, 922, 143 Ala. 28.

"Insanity," to relieve from criminal responsibility, must be caused by or result from disease or lesion of the brain. Porter v. State, 37 South. 81, 83, 140 Ala. 87 (citing Gunter v. State, 3 South. 600, 83 Ala. 109).

Insanity in the question in an examination for life insurance as to whether insured's father had "insanity or other hereditary disease" refers to a disordered mind from a diseased or defective brain, and not necessarily to a mere temporary mental disturbance during a weakened condition from typhoid fever. Iowa Life Ins. Co. v. Haughton, 87 N. E. 702, 704, 46 Ind. App. 467.

Where instructions when taken together made the test of insanity as to whether or not accused did or did not know the nature or result of the act he was doing, or, if he did know, that he did not know that he was doing wrong, a charge that insanity is produced by a diseased condition of the mind was not misleading, though insanity is itself a diseased condition of the mind. Smith v. State, 117 S. W. 968, 968, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 563.

Epilepsy

Under Code, § 1434, providing that the term "insanity" includes every species of insanity or mental derangement, and that the term "idiot" is restricted to persons foolish from birth, supposed to be naturally without mind, a person who at nine years of age became affected with epilepsy, and gradually lost her mind, was insane. Speedling v. Worth County, 26 N. W. 50, 51, 68 Iowa, 152.

Proof of epilepsy does not necessarily directly establish insanity, as epilepsy is not as a matter of fact or law insanity, though evidence thereof may bear on the mental condition of the afflicted person to the extent of establishing insanity. Oborn v. State, 126 N. W. 737, 747, 143 Wis. 249, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966.

Incapacity to distinguish between right and wrong

The term "insanity" means such an abnormal condition of mind as renders the afflicted one incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong in a given instance, and rendering him unconscious of the punishable character of his act. A person is not immune from punishment for a wrongful act, if, at the time of perpetrating it, he has capacity to distinguish between right and wrong and is conscious of the wrongfulness of his conduct. Oborn v. State, 126 N. W. 737, 745, 143 Wis. 249, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966.

"Insanity" may be either total or partial in its character. It may be either permanent or temporary in duration. Where insanity of a permanent character is once established by the evidence, it is presumed to continue until the contrary is proven satisfactorily; but if the insanity be of a temporary character no such presumption arises. To exempt a person from responsibility for crime the insanity must be of such a character as either to deprive him of the capacity to distinguish between right and wrong in respect to the particular act committed, or to deprive him of sufficient will power to choose whether he would do the act or refrain from it. So long as a person has capacity to distinguish between right and wrong in the particular act, and has will power to do it or not to do it, he will be held criminally responsible, even though the mind is subject to hallucinations, melancholy, exhalation, or is otherwise affected from the use of cocaine, intoxicants, or any other cause. State v. Jack (Del.) 58 Atl. 833, 834, 4 Pennewill, 470.

"Insanity," as recognized in our criminal law, is declared to be such disease and deranged condition of the mental faculty as to render the person incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong, in relation to the particular act with which he is charged. Marceau v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 85 Pac. 856, 857, 101 Cal. 838 (adopting definitions in Hoin's Case, 62 Cal. 120, 45 Am. Rep. 651).

"Insane," as used in P. L. 1906, p. 722, § 18, providing for the commitment to an asylum of insane criminals until restored to reason, as applied to one convicted of murder and sentenced to death, does not include all persons mentally deranged but is limited to the common-law test of capacity to distinguish right from wrong, so that if a person sentenced for a crime is capable of understanding the nature and object of proceedings against him, and rightfully comprehends his own condition in reference to such proceedings, and may conduct his defense in a rational manner, he is sane for the purpose of undergoing punishment, though on some other subjects his mind may be deranged and unsound. In re Lang, 71 Atl. 47, 48, 77 N. J. Law, 207.

"'Insanity' is a physical disease, located in the brain, which disease so perverts and deranges one of the mental or moral faculties as to render the person suffering therefrom incapable of distinguishing right from wrong in reference to the particular act charged against him, and incapable of understanding that the particular act in question was a violation of the laws of God and society." State v. Porter, 111 S. W. 529, 531, 213 Mo. 43, 127 Am. St. Rep. 589.

A person may be to some degree of unsound mind, or laboring under some delusion or be a monomaniac, and still be fully capable of appreciating the wrongfulness of taking human life; but insanity as a defense must be such that defendant at the time he committed the act did not and could not know the nature and wrongfulness of his act. People v. Ashland, 128 Pac. 798, 804, 20 Cal. App. 168.

The ability to distinguish between right and wrong in relation to a particular act about to be committed is the general test of criminal responsibility. The only exception so far recognized, as to one who has reason sufficient to distinguish between right and wrong as to the act about to be committed, is where such act is connected with a peculiar delusion under which the prisoner is laboring, and where, in consequence of such delusion and without criminal intent, the will is overmastered. Intermittent "insanity," caused by physical weakness or nervous disorders, is no excuse or justification for crime, unless it appears that at the time of the act committed the defendant was incapable of adjudging the quality of the act and of knowing whether it was right or wrong. Carter v. State, 58 S. E. 582-585, 2 Ga. App. 254.

If one has an irresistible impulse to commit crime, and does not know the nature and quality of the act, he is "insane." If he does know the nature and quality of the act and does know right from wrong, he is not insane. Thomas v. State, 116 S. W. 600, 603, 55 Tex. Cr. App. 293.

Insanity, whatever its form, to be an excuse for crime, must be the result of mental unsoundness, leaving one without sufficient reason to know what he is doing or to know right from wrong, or without sufficient will power to govern his actions by reason of an insane impulse which he cannot control or resist. Banks v. Commonwealth, 141 S. W. 880, 885, 145 Ky. 800.

In order for defendant in a murder case to establish the defense of insanity, he must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that at the time the act was done he did not realize either that it was morally or criminally wrong. State v. Hyde, 73 S. E. 180, 181, 90 S. C. 296.

"Insanity" is a physical disease, located in the brain, which disease so perverts and deranges one or more of the mental and moral faculties as to render the person suffering from this affliction incapable of distinguishing right from wrong, in reference to the particular act charged against him, and incapable of understanding that the particular act in question was a violation of the laws of God and society. Insanity is either partial or general. Total insanity always excuses. Partial insanity does not always excuse. One may be partially insane, and yet be responsible for his criminal acts. The law does not excuse unless the derangement is so great that it actually renders the person incapable at the time of its commission of distinguishing between right and wrong, in reference to the particular act charged and proven against him." State v. Paulsgrove, 101 S. W. 27, 29, 203 Mo. 193.

"Insanity," in a legal sense, so as to be available as a defense to crime, must be such that defendant, when the act was committed, was not conscious of its wrongful nature. People v. Willard, 89 Pac. 124, 129, 150 Cal. 543.

Incapacity to have criminal intent

Mr. Bishop defines "insanity" as follows: "Insanity in the criminal law is any defect, weakness, or disease of the mind rendering it incapable of entertaining, or preventing its entertaining, in the particular instance, the criminal intent which constitutes one of the elements of every crime." Where the question was whether defendant at the time he committed an act was sane, the instructions should give the appropriate sections of the statute, at the same time defining insanity in accordance with Bishop's definition as supplemented by this court's comment in the Peel Case, or in equivalent language. In the Peel Case it is said: "Criminal responsibility is to be determined solely by the capacity of the defendant to conceive and entertain the intent to commit the particular crime. If there is no intent, there is no crime." State v. Keerl, 75 Pac. 362, 366, 29 Mont. 508, 101 Am. St. Rep. 579 (quoting 1 Bishop, Cr. Law, § 381, subd. 2; State v. Peel, 59 Pac. 169, 23 Mont. 358, 75 Am. St. Rep. 529).

"Insanity" is a disease of the mind rendering it incapable of entertaining or preventing its entertaining in a particular instance, the criminal intent constituting an element of the crime charged, and where accused had not sufficient reason to be able to judge the consequences of his act or where he was so far deprived of volition or self-control by the overwhelming violence of mental disease that he was not capable of voluntary action, and was not able to judge right from wrong, he was not responsible for the act committed. State v. Leakey, 120 Pac. 234, 239, 44 Mont. 354.

INSANE DELUSION

See, also, Delusion.

A belief which a rational person may hold, however erroneous, is not an "insane delusion." Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 95 N. E. 143, 146, 250 Ill. 170.

There is no such thing as an "insane delusion" founded on facts; if the idea entertained has for a basis anything substantial, it is not a delusion. Fulton v. Freeland, 118 S. W. 12, 19, 219 Mo. 494, 131 Am. St. Rep. 576.

An "insane delusion" exists when a person conceives the existence of something fanciful and extravagant, something having no foundation in reason or fact, and is dominated and controlled by such imagination, and therefore acts as he would not otherwise have acted. Riddle v. Gibson, 29 App. D. C. 237, 249.

A belief grounded on evidence, however slight, necessarily involves the exercise of the mental faculties of perception and reason; and in such cases, no matter how imperfect the reasoning process may be, or however erroneous the conclusion reached, it is not an "insane delusion." Taylor v. McClintock, 112 S. W. 405, 414, 87 Ark. 243 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3644).

"An 'insane delusion' does not mean a mistaken conclusion from a given state of facts, nor a mistaken belief as to the existence of facts. An erroneous conclusion of a sane person may arise from incorrect reasoning, or from a deduction from information which he supposed to be correct." A misconception as to a particular matter is not an insane delusion when it does not spring up spontaneously from a disordered intellect. Bohler v. Hicks, 48 S. E. 806, 808, 120 Ga. 800.

An instruction that the true test of the absence or presence of insanity is the absence or presence of delusions, and that an "insane delusion" is insanity whether it is partial or general, and an insane delusion, which may be partial insanity, must be mental and not moral (that is, it must not arise from degradation or passion, for that is moral insanity), and that it is necessary that there be actual delusion, and that the acts should be immediately connected with the delusion, is not erroneous, where the court otherwise instructed that the term "insanity," as used in the special plea and issue of insanity made by the defendant, means such perverted condition of the mental and moral faculties as to render the person incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong, or unconscious at the time of the nature of the act he is committing, and that the term "insanity" is broad enough to include every species of mental aberration or disease of the mind. Schissler v. State, 99 N. W. 593, 599, 122 Wis. 365.

An "insane delusion" is an unreasoning and incorrigible belief in the existence of facts which are either impossible absolutely, or at least impossible under the circumstances of the individual. It is never the result of reasoning and reflection; it is not generated by them and cannot be dispelled by them; and hence it is not to be confounded with an opinion, however fantastic the latter may be. Conner v. Skaggs, 111 S. W. 1182, 1185, 218 Mo. 384.

There may be an "insane delusion," although the belief entertained is not, in the nature of things, a physical impossibility; but if such belief is entertained against all evidence and probability, and after argument to the contrary, it affords grounds for inferring that the person entertaining it labors under an "insane delusion." Medill v. Snyder, 58 Pac. 962, 964, 61 Kan. 15, 78 Am. St. Rep. 307.

An "insane delusion," which will render the sufferer incapable of making a will, is difficult to define with exact precision. It has been said that a delusion is a belief in a state or condition of things, the existence of which no rational person would believe, and again it has been defined as a spontaneous conception and acceptance as a fact of that which has no real existence except in imagination, and persistent adherence to it against all evidence. Another court defines it as a conception that originated spontaneously in the mind, without evidence of any kind to support it, which can be accounted for on no reasonable hypothesis, having no foundation in reality, and springing from a diseased or morbid condition of the mind. Another court says that if, without evidence of any kind, a testator imagines or conceives something to exist which does not exist in fact, and which no rational person would, in the absence of evidence, believe to exist, he is afflicted with an "insane delusion." Another definition is to the effect that a person conceiving something extravagant to exist which has no existence whatever except in his heated imagination, and who is incapable of being permanently reasoned out of that conception, is under an "insane delusion." It has also been defined as a belief in supposed facts which have no existence except in the person's perverted imagination, and which are against all evidence and probability, accompanied by conduct based on the assumption of the existence of those facts. Whatever form of words is chosen to express the meaning of insane delusion, it is clear, under all of the authorities, that it must be such an aberration as indicates an unsound or deranged condition of the mental faculties, as distinguished from a mere belief in the existence or non-existence of certain supposed facts or phenomena based upon some sort of evidence. A belief which results from a process of reasoning from evidence, however imperfect the process may be, or illogical the conclusion, is not an insane delusion. If the court is able to understand how a person, situated as the testator was, might have believed all that the evidence shows that he did believe, and still have been in the full possession of his senses, then an insane delusion is not established. Owen v. Crumbaugh, 81 N. E. 1044, 1051, 228 Ill. 380, 119 Am. St. Rep. 442, 10 Ann. Cas. 606 (citing In re Forman's Will [N. Y.] 54 Barb. 274; Prather v. McClelland, 13 S. W. 548, 76 Tex. 574; Schneider v. Manning, 12 N. E. 267, 121 Ill. 876; Smith v. Smith, 25 Atl. 11, 48 N. J. Eq. 566; Rush v. Megee, 36 Ind. 69; Philadelphia Trust, etc., Co. v. Drinkhouse, 17 Phila. 23; Potter v. Jones, 25 Pac. 769, 20 Or. 239, 12 L. R. A. 161; Middleditch v. Williams, 17 Atl. 826, 45 N. J. Eq. 726, 4 L. R. A. 738; Mullins v. Cottrell, 41 Miss. 291; Benoist v. Murrin, 58 Mo. 307; Stanton v. Wetherwax [N. Y.] 16 Barb. 259; In re Shaw's Will [N. Y.] 2 Redf. Sur. 107; In re White, 24 N. E. 935, 121 N. Y. 406; Stackhouse v. Horton, 15 N. J. Eq. 202; Martin v. Thayer, 16 S. E. 489, 37 W. Va. 38; Walt v. Westfall, 68 N. E. 271, 161 Ind. 648).

A "delusion" indicative of an unsoundness of mind is a belief in something impossible in the nature of things, or in the circumstances surrounding the person under investigation, and which refuses to yield to evidence or to reason; or, if not a belief in something impossible in the circumstances of the case, if it is entertained against all evidence, probability, and argument to the contrary, it affords ground for inferring that the person labors under an "insane delusion." Lang v. Lang (Iowa) 185 N. W. 604, 606.

Belief in spiritualism

Mere belief in spiritualism does not ipso facto constitute an "insane delusion," rendering the believer wanting in testamentary capacity. Steinkuehler v. Wempner, 81 N. E. 482, 486, 169 Ind. 154, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 678.

Testator's belief in spiritualism, using the term "belief" to mean a conviction founded upon evidence, however unsatisfactory, is not an "insane delusion," although the mind might become insane with spiritualism as its monomania. Raison v. Raison, 146 S. W. 400, 401, 148 Ky. 116.

An "insane delusion" consists in the belief of facts which no rational person would have believed. A mere belief in spiritualism is no evidence of monomania or "insane delusion." An insane delusion which will render the sufferer incapable of making a will is difficult to define with exact precision. A delusion is said to be a belief in a state or condition of things, the existence of which no rational person would believe. A delusion has also been defined as a "spontaneous conception and acceptance as a fact of that which has no real existence except in imagination, and persistent adherence to it against all evidence." Again, the same definition, in substance, is given as follows: "A conception that originated spontaneously in the mind, without evidence of any kind to support it, which can be accounted for on no reasonable hypothesis, having no foundation in reality, and springing from a diseased or morbid condition of the mind." Another form of definition, conveying substantially the same meaning, is: "If, without evidence of any kind, a testator imagines or conceives something to exist which does not exist in fact, and which no rational person would, in the absence of evidence, believe to exist, he is afflicted with an insane delusion." "Whenever a person conceives something extravagant to exist, which has no existence whatever but in his heated imagination, and is incapable of being permanently reasoned out of that conception, he is under an insane delusion in a peculiar, half-technical sense of the term." A person who believes supposed facts, which have no existence except in his perverted imagination, and which are against all evidence and probability, and conducts himself, however logically, upon the assumption of their existence, is, so far as they are concerned, under an insane delusion. In setting out these various definitions, we do not do so with the purpose of giving our approval to each of them, but merely to show the different forms of expression that courts have used to express the legal conception of an insane delusion. Whatever form of words are chosen to express the legal meaning of an insane delusion, it is clear, under all of the authorities, that it must be such an aberration as indicates an unsound or deranged condition of the mental faculties, as distinguished from a mere belief in the existence or nonexistence of certain supposed facts or phenomena based upon some sort of evidence. A belief which results from a process of reasoning from evidence, however imperfect the process may be or illogical the conclusion, is not an insane delusion. Owen v. Crumbaugh, 81 N. E. 1044, 1045, 1051, 1052, 228 Ill. 380, 119 Am. St. Rep. 442, 10 Ann. Cas. 606 (citing In re Forman's Will [N. Y.] 54 Barb. 274; Prather v. McClelland, 13 S. W. 543, 76 Tex. 574; Schneider v. Manning, 12 N. E. 267, 121 Ill. 376; Smith v. Smith, 25 Atl. 11, 48 N. J. Eq. 566; Rush v. Megee, 36 Ind. 69; Philadelphia Trust, etc., Co. v. Drinkhouse, 17 Phila. 23; Potter v. Jones, 25 Pac. 769, 20 Or. 239, 12 L. R. A. 161; Middleditch v. Williams, 17 Atl. 826, 45 N. J. Eq. 726, 4 L. R. A. 738; Mullins v. Cottrell, 41 Miss. 291; Benolist v. Murrin, 58 Mo. 307; Stanton v. Wetherwax [N. Y.] 16 Barb. 259; In re Shaw's Will [N. Y.] 2 Redf. Sur. 107; In re White, 24 N. E. 935, 121 N. Y. 406).

As affecting testamentary capacity

On the probate of a will, the court defined "insane delusion" as a belief in a state of facts that did not exist, and which no rational person would believe, and refused to charge that an "insane delusion" is a false belief, arising spontaneously in the mind of a person, and founded on no evidence or reason, and persistently adhered to against all evidence, reason, or argument. Held, that the definition given substantially agrees with definitions previously approved by the Supreme Court, and that the refusal of the requested instruction was not error. Lanham v. Lanham (Tex.) 146 S. W. 635, 640.

"'Insane delusion' consists in the belief of facts which no rational person would have believed. Unreasonable prejudice against relatives is not ordinarily a ground for invalidating a will, but a will may be set aside where the testator's aversion is the result of an insane delusion and his conduct cannot be explained on any other ground." Hence a testator's prejudice against a son who had become alienated from the rest of the family did not amount to an insane delusion, where the testator's will as first made devised one-fourth of the remainder of his property to his son. Schmidt v. Schmidt, 66 N. E. 371, 374, 201 Ill. 191 (quoting and adopting definition in Nicewander v. Nicewander, 37 N. E. 698, 151 Ill. 156).

The meaning of "insane delusions," in its legal sense, is a belief in things impossible or a belief in things possible, but so improbable under the surrounding circumstances that no man of sound mind could give them credence. To avoid a will on the ground of delusion of the testator, the delusion must be an insane delusion, and the will must be a product of it. Johnson v. Johnson, 65 Atl. 918, 919, 105 Md. 81, 121 Am. St. Rep. 570.

A belief does not amount to an insane delusion unless it appears that the belief is wholly without any basis whatever, and the testator has obstinately persisted in it against all arguments which may have been employed to dissuade him. If there are any facts, however little evidential force they may possess, upon which the testator in reason may have based his belief, it will not be an "insane delusion." Stull v. Stull, 96 N. W. 196, 202, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 389 (quoting and adopting definition in Underhill, Law of Wills, p. 126).

According to V. S. 7, the term "insane persons" includes every idiot, non compos, lunatic, and distracted person. A person who is adjudged a non compos and placed under guardianship as such is thereby rendered prima facie incapable of making a will while the adjudication remains in force. In re Cowdry's Will, 60 Atl. 141, 77 Vt. 359, 3 Ann. Cas. 70.

"An 'insane delusion' is a belief in something impossible in the nature of things, or impossible under the circumstances surrounding the afflicted individual, and which refuses to yield either to evidence or reason." The fact that testator's regard for his children was lessened by the fact that one of them had sympathized with and aided testator's wife in certain family difficulties, and that his son had refused to repay a sum of money which testator had loaned him, constituted no indication that testator entertained an insane delusion against his children. Bauchens v. Davis, 82 N. E. 365, 368, 229 Ill. 557 (quoting and adopting definition in Scott v. Scott, 72 N. E. 708, 212 Ill. 597).

Where a person imagines something extravagant to exist which really has no existence, and he is incapable of being reasoned out of his false belief, he is in that respect insane, and if his "delusion" relates to his child, and he imagines that the child is not his, when there is no foundation for such conception, and is incapable of being reasoned out of the same, he is possessed of an "insane delusion" as to his child, and, if his will is found to be the fruit of such false conception and disinherits the child, the jury may find against the paper writing purporting to be the will, though it may develop that he was rational on other subjects and capable of transacting ordinary business. Buford v. Gruber, 122 S. W. 717, 721, 223 Mo. 231 (quoting 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1971 et seq.).

In determining the question of testamentary capacity, the law takes cognizance only of such delusions as are insane delusions, such a delusion being a spontaneous conception and acceptance of that as a fact which has no existence except in the imagination, and which is persistently believed in against all evidence and all probability, and an apprehension by testatrix that food brought to her by her daughters was poisoned did not amount to an insane delusion where the testatrix ate such food in company with other persons upon requiring them first to eat. Friedersdorf v. Lacy, 90 N. E. 766, 768, 173 Ind. 429.

An "insane delusion" which will render one incapable of making a will consists in a belief in a state or condition of things in the existence of which no rational person would believe, so that a person who believes supposed facts which have no existence except in his perverted imagination, and which are against all evidence and probability, and conducts himself, however logically, on the assumption of their existence, is under an "insane delusion." It does not, however, include a belief which results from a process of reasoning from evidence, however imperfect the process or illogical the conclusion. An insane delusion must involve proof that testator believed certain things concerning a person having a reasonable claim on his bounty, that he had no evidence on which to base such belief, that it was false and was adhered to after the falsity had been shown by reasonable evidence, and that the things testator believed were such that no person of sound mind would believe, that testator refused to yield such irrational belief in the face of such reasonable evidence as would convince an ordinarily sound and healthy mind, and that the existence of the delusion was present in testator's mind and exercised a controlling influence over him when he made his will. Where testator has some actual grounds for the belief which he has concerning one having a reasonable claim on his bounty, though regarded by others as wholly insufficient, the mere misapprehension of the facts or unreasonable or extravagant conclusions drawn therefrom are insufficient to establish the existence of the delusion sufficient to invalidate his will. Snell v. Weldon, 90 N. E. 1061, 1070, 243 Ill. 496.

An undue prejudice by testator based on some reason is not an "insane delusion." In re Clapham's Estate, 103 N. W. 61, 62, 73 Neb. 492.

An "insane delusion" is a belief in something which no sane person would or could believe, something in the nature of things impossible, or which has no foundation in fact. An insane delusion is a belief induced by insanity. To invalidate a will on the ground that testator labored under an insane delusion, it must appear that he was subject to a delusion as to the facts within his own observation, in the existence of which he actually believed, which a rational man, from the use of his senses, would have known not to exist. To invalidate a will, a delusion on the part of the testator must have been, not only the inducing cause of it, but also an existing one at the time the will was made. Knapp v. St. Louis Trust Co., 98 S. W. 70, 78, 199 Mo. 640 (citing Rood, Wills, § 132; Wharton v. Stille, 1 Med. Jur. p. 85).

In the absence of a showing of a continued affection on the part of a father for his son, suddenly interrupted without known cause, the father's opinion that the son had no regard for him, and was waiting for him to die in order to obtain a share of his property, could not be said to be the result of an "insane delusion." Bean v. Bean, 108 N. W. 369, 371, 144 Mich. 599.

INSANITY SO ADJUDGED BY THE COURTS

The words "insanity so adjudged by the courts," as used in the by-laws of a fraternal benefit society, providing that, whenever any member shall become permanently and totally disabled from pursuing the ordinary vocations of life, he shall be entitled to receive a part of his certificate, and declaring that the term "total disability" means "insanity so adjudged by the courts," mean that degree of insanity which would authorize an adjudication of the insured's mental status by the courts, sufficiently authorized to inquire into such matters, and, to recover on a certificate on the ground of insanity, it must be such degree of insanity as would authorize an adjudication of insured's mental status by the proper courts. Knipp v. United Ben. Ass'n (Tex. Civ. App.) 101 S. W. 273, 274, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 357.

INSECURE

The word "insecure," as used in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1908, c. 56, § 1, providing that a nuisance consists in unlawfully doing an act or omitting to perform a duty, which act or omission in any way renders other persons insecure in life or in the use of property, means not secure, not confident of safety or permanence, distrustful, suspicious, apprehensive of danger or loss. Territory v. Long Bell Lumber Co., 99 Pac. 911, 920, 22 Okl. 890.

INSIDIOUS MACHINATIONS

A purchase of stock by a director and owner of three-fourths of the entire capital stock, who was also administrator general of the company, and engaged in the negotiations which finally led to the sale of the company's lands to the Philippine Islands government at a price which greatly enhanced the value of the stock, was fraudulent as procured by "insidious machinations" inducing the execution of the contract of sale, within the meaning of Code P. I. art. 1269, defining deceit, where he employed an agent to make the purchase, concealing both his own identity as the purchaser, and his knowledge of the state of the negotiations and their probable successful result. Strong v. Repide, 29 Sup. Ct. 521, 524, 213 U. S. 419, 53 L. Ed. 853.

INSIMUL COMPUTASSENT

"Insimul computassent," which means "they accounted together," was the name of the action upon an account stated, and it was averred that the parties had settled their accounts together and defendant engaged to pay plaintiff the balance. Jasper Trust Co. v. Lampkin, 50 South. 337, 339, 162 Ala. 388, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1237, 136 Am. St. Rep. 33 (citing Black, Law Dict.).

INSOLVENCY—INSOLVENT

See Being Insolvent; Claim Provable in Insolvency; Contemplation of Insolvency; Due to Insolvency.

See, also, Solvency—Solvent.

The general understanding is that an insolvent debtor is one whose property is insufficient to pay all his debts, or out of which his debts may be collected. Kingsley v. City of Merrill, 99 N. W. 1044, 1047, 122 Wis. 185, 67 L. R. A. 200, 2 Ann. Cas. 748.

"Insolvency," as the term is ordinarily used, is not the same thing as a mere failure to pay debts, but, in the case of an individual or corporation, it means an insufficiency of property and assets to pay debts. San Antonio Hardware Co. v. Sanger (Tex.) 151 S. W. 1104, 1107.

"Insolvency" means that condition in which a person has not sufficient assets to pay his debts. If the property of a person, whether real or personal, tangible or intangible, leviable or nonleviable, is in value more than sufficient to discharge all of his debts, he is not an "insolvent." Cohen v. Parish, 28 S. E. 122, 123, 100 Ga. 335 (citing Brown v. Spivey, 53 Ga. 158; Powell v. Westmoreland, 60 Ga. 572; Burrill, Assignm. § 43; Herrick v. Borst [N. Y.] 4 Hill, 650; Toof v. Martin, 13 Wall. [80 U. S.] 40, 20 L. Ed. 481; Bouv. Law Dict.; And. Law Dict.).

"Insolvency" denotes the insufficiency of the entire property and assets of an individual to pay his debts, and is to be determined from a comparison of all assets and resources with his liabilities, and not alone from the amount of money on hand or coming in, or from the absence of money on hand. Rogers v. Ogden Bldg. & Sav. Ass'n, 83 Pac. 754, 759, 30 Utah, 188.

It is not necessary to be a merchant to be insolvent; "insolvency" not being confined to merchants. Rex Buggy Co. v. Ross, 97 S. W. 291, 292, 80 Ark. 388.

"Insolvency" of the maker of a note, so as to excuse the holder from suing thereon at the request of the indorser, is an absence of property of the debtor out of which the debt can be made by execution. First Nat. Bank v. Robinson (Tex.) 124 S. W. 177, 178.

A person is deemed to be "insolvent," within the meaning of the bankruptcy act, when the aggregate of his present property "shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts." John S. Brittain Dry Goods Co. v. Bertenshaw, 75 Pac. 1027, 68 Kan. 734; Cullinane v. State Bank of Waverly, 98 N. W. 887, 888, 123 Iowa, 340; Paper v. Stern, 198 Fed. 642, 644, 117 C. C. A. 346.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, defines "insolvency" as follows: "A person shall be deemed insolvent within the provisions of the act, whenever the aggregate of his property, exclusive of any property which he may have conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, with intent to defraud, hinder or delay his creditors, shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts." Blyth Fargo & Co. v. Kastor, 97 Pac. 921, 925, 17 Wyo. 180; John S. Brittain Dry Goods Co. v. Bertenshaw, 75 Pac. 1027, 1028, 68 Kan. 734; In re Pfaffinger, 154 Fed. 523, 525; Hastings v. Fithian, 60 Atl. 350, 352, 71 N. J. Law, 311; In re McMurtrey & Smith, 142 Fed. 853, 854; In re First Nat. Bank of Louisville, 155 Fed. 100, 103, 84 C. C. A. 16; Hardy v. Gray, 144 Fed. 922, 924, 75 C. C. A. 562; Plymouth Cordage Co. v. Smith, 90 Pac. 418, 419, 18 Okl. 249, 11 Ann. Cas. 445.

The definition of what constitutes "insolvency," contained in section 1, subd. 15, of the bankruptcy act of July 1, 1898, 30 Stat. 544, c. 541, does not control in determining whether a debtor was insolvent, so as to make a voluntary conveyance fraudulent under the laws of this state. Hence the exempt property of the debtor is not to be considered in determining the value of the assets retained. Nor is a debt that is amply secured by mortgage on the property conveyed to be included in determining whether the debtor has retained assets amply sufficient to satisfy existing claims. Underleak v. Scott, 134 N. W. 731, 734, 117 Minn. 136.

Under Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 15, 30 Stat. 544, providing that a person shall be deemed "insolvent" when the aggregate of his property, exclusive of property conveyed with intent to defraud his creditors, shall not at a fair valuation be sufficient to pay his debts, the question whether a mortgage and assignment of book accounts by one to his wife were invalid on account of insolvency must be determined by a valuation of his property at its fair market value, rather than by any personal value to the bankrupt which he might place on it. Ziegler v. Thayer, 83 Atl. 266, 267, 34 R. I. 288.

"In view of the authority of the Congress of the United States to enact bankruptcy laws, and such laws having been enacted and being in operation, we are of opinion that, when the question of insolvency is in issue in a state court, it would be proper for such court to follow the definition of 'insolvency,' as embraced in the Bankrupt Law, as enacted by Congress, (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 15), declaring that 'a person shall be deemed insolvent within the provisions of this act, whenever the aggregate of his property exclusive of any property which he may have conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed or permitted to be sold or removed, with intent to defraud, hinder or delay his creditors, shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts.'" Owen v. American Nat. Bank, 81 S. W. 988, 989, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 490.

A person is "insolvent," within the Bankruptcy Act, "whenever the aggregate of his property * * * shall not at a fair valuation be sufficient in amount to pay his debts." Hence notice that a debtor has not paid a claim at maturity is not necessarily and conclusively notice of insolvency. Hackney v. Raymond Bros. Clarke Co., 94 N. W. 822, 823, 68 Neb. 624 (citing Act July 1, 1898, 30 Stat. 544, c. 541; In re Eggert, 43 C. C. A. 1, 102 Fed. 735).

Since Bankr. Act, § 60a, providing that a person shall be deemed to have given a preference if, being insolvent, he has procured or suffered a judgment to be entered against himself in favor of any person, or made a transfer of any of his property, the effect of the enforcement of such judgment or transfer will be to enable any one of his creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other of such creditors of the same class. The term "insolvency" has been defined in chapter 1, § 1, cl. 15, as a person shall be deemed insolvent whenever the aggregate of his property, exclusive of any property which he may have conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, with intent to defraud, hinder, or delay his creditors, shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts. The act is largely different from Bankr. Act, 1867, where the term "insolvency" was construed to mean an inability to meet one's obligations as they matured in the ordinary course of business, and the term "insolvency" in the present act is equivalent to the term "bankruptcy" in the former. While, therefore, rulings under the former act are inapplicable in a certain sense, because of this difference in the meaning of the term "insolvency," they do apply so far as they determine the principles of law by which it is to be ascertained whether a creditor receiving a preference had reasonable cause to believe that the debtor had not at the time property sufficient, at a fair valuation, to pay all of his debts. In re Eggert, 102 Fed. 735, 738, 43 C. C. A. 1.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, cl. 15, declares that a person shall be deemed insolvent whenever the aggregate of his property shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts. The fact alone that the indebtedness of a retail merchant to a wholesale house is past due when a payment is made thereon does not give the creditor reasonable cause to believe the debtor to be insolvent. In re Goodhile, 130 Fed. 471, 473.

The term "insolvency," as defined in Bankr. Act § 1, cl. 15, is the condition of a person whenever the aggregate of his property, exclusive of any which he may have conveyed, consolidated, or removed, with intent to delay his creditors, shall not, at a fair valuation be sufficient in amount to pay his debts. Where, as in Michigan, a mortgage, whether of real or personal property, does not convey the title, but imposes a lien only for the amount secured, a corporation mortgaged its entire property, and the mortgagor's remaining estate was greater in value than its unsecured debts, the execution of the mortgage did not constitute an act of bankruptcy, as it was not in fact insolvent. It seems an absurdity to say that a man is insolvent because he has transferred some of his estate with intent to defraud his creditors when he has an estate remaining which is abundantly sufficient to pay all his debts and open to seizure for the satisfaction thereof, or which he has an absolute right to dispose of and liquidate in cash. Lansing Boiler & Engine Works v. Joseph T. Ryerson & Son, 128 Fed. 701, 704, 63 C. C. A. 253.

In determining the "solvency" or "insolvency" of a person who by Bankr. Act, § 1, is to be deemed insolvent within the provisions of the act, whenever the aggregate of his property, exclusive of any property which he may have transferred or concealed, with intent to defraud, hinder, or delay his creditors, shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient to pay his debts, all the property which he owns is to be reckoned in computing the amount of his assets, except such as he may have transferred or concealed in fraud of creditors, but not excluding property which is exempt from execution by the laws of the state. In re Crenshaw, 156 Fed. 638, 639.

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, exempt property must be included in determining "insolvency." Plymouth Cordage Co. v. Smith, 90 P. 418, 419, 18 Okl. 249, 11 Ann. Cas. 445.

"Insolvency," as defined in the Bankruptcy Act, exists whenever the aggregate of his property, exclusive of any property which he may have conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, with intent to defraud, hinder, or delay his creditors, shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts. Where conveyances of property by an alleged bankrupt are charged as acts of bankruptcy, under both subdivisions 1 and 2 of section 3, Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 546, as made with intent to defraud and also as preferences, the value of the property thus conveyed is not to be computed in determining the question of solvency at the time of the filing of the petition as a defense under the first subdivision, but, if the conveyances are found not to have been fraudulent, the value of such property is to be considered in determining the question of solvency or insolvency when the conveyances were made under subdivision 2. Acme Food Co. v. Meier, 153 Fed. 74, 77, 82 C. C. A. 208.

That a debtor is insolvent does not mean inability to pay any portion of a debt, but simply that his assets at a fair market value are not sufficient to pay his liabilities. Avery v. Moore, 124 Pac. 173, 175, 87 Kan. 337.

Under Bankr. Act 1898, § 1, cl. 15, providing that a person shall be deemed "insolvent," within the provisions of the act, whenever the aggregate of his property shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts, one is not required to be able to realize from his property, at the time of an alleged preference, a sufficient amount to pay his debts; but, if a fair valuation of his property at that time is sufficient to pay such debts, he is solvent. J. W. Crancer & Co. v. Wade, 110 Pac. 778, 779, 28 Okl. 757.

The word "insolvent," as used by the courts in dealing with the legal proposition that if there is a negligent delay in presenting a bill of exchange for acceptance, whereby the antecedent parties, though not discharged from legal liability, became insolvent, the amount of the bill is prima facie the loss, is used in its ordinary sense to show that nothing can be collected from the parties remaining on the bill. Hendricks v. Jefferson County Savings Bank, 45 South. 136, 137, 153 Ala. 636, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 696.

Under paragraph 15 of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544, providing that a person shall be deemed "insolvent," within the provisions of this act, whenever the aggregate of his property, exclusive of any property which he may have conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, with intent to defraud, hinder, or delay his creditors, shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts, the property or assets of the debtor must be valued as of a going concern, if that is the actual condition, and subsequent insolvency is not the only test. Empire State Trust Co. v. William F. Fisher Co., 57 Atl. 502, 505, 87 N. J. Eq. 88.

In determining whether or not a debtor was "insolvent" within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 15, 30 Stat. 544, at the time of the commission of an alleged act of bankruptcy by suffering a creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings, the test of a "fair valuation" of his property is its market value at the time the legal proceedings were taken, where that can be fairly established, and not its value as it may have been affected by such proceedings; and the property to be taken into consideration includes all of his property, whether legally exempt from execution or not, except such as may have been conveyed, concealed, or removed with intent to defraud, hinder, or delay his creditors. In re Hines, 144 Fed. 142, 144.

Pub. St. 1901, c. 189, § 13, authorizing the probate court to determine the net income received by the administrator from the rents and profits of real estate, "in case the estate is insolvent," does not mean actual "insolvency," but merely the method adopted when the estate is being settled in the insolvency courts. Mansfield v. Holton, 68 Atl. 541, 542, 74 N. H. 417.

Bankruptcy synonymous

"Insolvency laws" have been frequent in colonial and state legislation, and no distinction was practically or theoretically attempted between such laws and bankrupt laws. A bankrupt law may contain those regulations which are generally found in insolvent laws, and an insolvent law may contain those common to bankrupt laws. Hanover Nat. Bank v. Moyses, 22 Sup. Ct. 857, 859, 186 U. S. 181, 46 L. Ed. 1113.

Under the Bankrupt Act of 1867, the term "insolvency" was construed to mean an inability to meet one's obligations in the ordinary course of business, while in the present act it is equivalent to the word "bankruptcy," in the former statute; but the principles of construction laid down by the courts in determining the force and effect to be given to the phrase "reasonable cause to believe," found in the former act relating to preferences, are equally applicable in considering the meaning of this phrase in the act of 1898. Stevenson v. Milliken-Tomlinson Co., 59 Atl. 472, 475, 99 Me. 320.

"In a general sense, and to all practical ends in business transactions, there is no sound distinction between bankruptcy and 'insolvency.' It is believed that the terms are used convertibly in ordinary parlance; they are so historically. * * * The difference lies essentially in the scheme of remedies adopted in reference to bankruptcy or insolvency, to effectuate which the law arbitrarily pronounces a man bankrupt upon the commission of particular acts, though he be indisputably solvent." The word "insolvency," in the fourteenth section of the act [of 1841 (5 Stat. 448)], as applied to voluntary applications for a decree, means inability to meet engagements; but, in relation to compulsory proceedings by creditors, it means the bankruptcy of the debtor as known to the court as a ground for proceedings, and must be proved in the manner indicated by the first section of the statute. Ex parte Hull, 12 Fed. Cas. 853, 856 (citing and distinguishing Ex parte Galbraith, 9 Fed. Cas. 1077).

The term "insolvency," under the bankrupt act of 1867, was construed to mean inability to meet one's obligations in the ordinary course of business, and in Act 1898, § 1, cl. 15, and section 60, cl. "a," "b," it is equivalent to the word "bankruptcy" in the former statute, and the effect to be given to the phrase "reasonable cause to believe," found in the former act relating to preferences, is applicable to this phrase in the act of 1898, and it is not enough that a creditor has some cause to suspect the insolvency of his debtor, but he must have such a knowledge of facts as to induce a reasonable belief in his debtor's insolvency. Stevenson v. Milliken-Tomlinson Co., 59 Atl. 472, 475, 99 Me. 320.

Inability to pay debts

"Insolvency" carries with it inability to presently pay indebtedness. Reinhardt v. Interstate Tel. Co., 63 Atl. 1097, 1101, 71 N. J. Eq. 70 (quoting Ft. Wayne Electric Corp. v. Franklin Electric Light Co., 41 Atl. 219, 57 N. J. Eq. 7, 13).

"Insolvency" is merely the opposite of solvency. A man who is unable to pay his debts out of his own means, or whose debts cannot be collected out of such means by legal process, is insolvent; and this although it may be morally certain that with indulgence from his creditors in point of time he may be ultimately able to satisfy his engagements in full. The term "insolvency" imports a present inability to pay. The probable or improbable future condition of the party in this respect does not affect the question. If a man's debts cannot be made in full out of his property by levy and sale on execution, he is "insolvent," within the primary and ordinary meaning of the word, and particularly in the sense in which the word is used in the bankrupt act. In re Wells, 29 Fed. Cas. 637, 638 (citing Burrill, Assignm. 38, 41; Herrick v. Borst & Warnick, 4 Hill [N. Y.] 652; Bradford v. Union Bank of Tennessee, 13 How. [54 U. S.] 57, 14 L. Ed. 49; In re Lewis, 15 Fed. Cas. 452; Foster v. Hackley, 9 Fed. Cas. 545).

"When a person is unable to pay his debts, he is 'insolvent.' As said in Brouwer v. Harbeck, 9 N. Y. 594: 'A corporation, like an individual, is said to be insolvent when it is not able to pay its debts. Insolvency means a general inability to answer, in the course of business, the debts existing and capable of being enforced.' In all the cases which we have had occasion to examine, a finding of 'insolvency' on inability to meet obligations has been upheld, but in none has it been declared that a mere failure to meet them has justified the finding, where the present ability to do so was shown." Hence, where it appears that a company desired to hold its property for a raise in value, and refused to sell in order to pay its debts, where there was no showing that the property was insufficient to pay the debts in case of a sale, the granting of a receiver on the ground of "insolvency" alone is not warranted. Brenton & McKay v. Peck, 87 S. W. 898, 901, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 224.

Strict proof of insolvency is not essential to exercise the right of stoppage in transitu; "insolvency" in that sense meaning general inability to pay debts. Selgfried v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 128 S. W. 798, 800, 147 Mo. App. 548.

Inability to pay debts in usual course of business

The term "insolvency" as used in bankruptcy and insolvency laws, means the inability of a person to pay his debts as they mature in the ordinary course of business; but as used in a general sense, it means a substantial excess of a person's liabilities over the fair cash value of his property. Grunsfeld Bros. v. Brownell, 76 Pac. 310, 311, 12 N. M. 192.

A debtor who is unable to meet his engagements and pay his debts in the ordinary course of business, as persons in trade usually do, is "insolvent," within the meaning of the bankruptcy act. Graham v. Stark, 10 Fed. Cas. 939, 941 (citing and adopting 2 Kent, Comm. 389; Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Cush. [58 Mass.] 127; Lee v. Kilburn, 3 Gray [69 Mass.] 594; Buckingham v. McLean, 13 How. [54 U. S.] 150, 14 L. Ed. 90; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Truax, 17 Fed. Cas. 58; In re Black, 3 Fed. Cas. 495; In re Gay, 10 Fed. Cas. 105; In re Louis, 15 Fed. Cas. 940; Morgan v. Mastick, 17 Fed. Cas. 752).

It is difficult for a court to lay down a definition of "insolvency" that is applicable to every case. Whenever a business concern is unable to meet its commercial paper as it matures in the ordinary course of business, it is insolvent. The term must necessarily be construed to the particular facts of the case. But it is undoubtedly the great rule that where a business concern is unable to meet its paper as it matures, and its assets are in such a condition that they are not available either as security or collateral, for the purpose of borrowing or for the purpose of conversion, and in addition to that it is apparent that there would not be sufficient money realized by sale under execution to meet these liabilities, it is practically insolvent. Cronan v. District Court, First Judicial District in and for Kootenai County, 96 Pac. 768, 775, 15 Idaho, 184.

Statutory "insolvency" is generally determined as an inability to pay debts when due or demandable. James Clark Co. v. Colton, 46 Atl. 386, 401, 91 Md. 195, 49 L. R. A. 698.

The words "insolvent" and "insolvency," as used in Rev. St. c. 70, § 29, as applied to persons engaged in mercantile or commercial business, are defined as an inability to meet maturing demands in the ordinary course of business, although the insolvent may in fact have sufficient property or assets to pay his debts. Morey v. Milliken, 30 Atl. 102, 105, 86 Me. 464.

Inability to meet engagements in the usual course of business constitutes "insolvency," within the meaning of the bankrupt law. When, therefore, a merchant fails to pay his notes or other mercantile obligations as they become payable, an immediate presumption of inability to pay arises. When a merchant does not so pay, he is at once and everywhere assumed, in the common language applied to the subject, to have failed. A man may be fully able to pay his debts, if he will, and yet in the eye of the law he is insolvent, if his property is so situated that it cannot be reached by process of law, and subjected, without his consent, to the payment of his debts. To say that a debtor is solvent, when his entire estate is exempt to him from the payment of his debts and cannot be subjected by his creditors against his will, would be a solecism. "Solvency" involves not only the ability of the debtor to pay, but the ability of the creditor to enforce payment by legal process. "Solvency" implies as well the present ability of the debtor to pay out of his estate, as also such attitude of his property as that it may be reached and subjected to process of law without his consent to the payment of such debts. Pelham v. Chattahoochee Grocery Co., 47 South. 172, 174, 158 Ala. 500 (citing Mayer v. Hermann, 10 Blatchf. 260, 16 Fed. Cas. 1240; Mitchell v. Bradstreet Co., 22 S. W. 858, 724, 116 Mo. 226, 20 L. R. A. 142, 38 Am. St. Rep. 592; 22 Cyc. p. 1260).

"Insolvency," as the term is used in equity, is clearly differentiated from the meaning which is given by the bankruptcy act. Allegations in a bill that defendant could not pay its current obligations as they matured, and that it was unable in the ordinary course of its business to pay its existing and enforceable liabilities, was a proper and sufficient allegation of insolvency. American Can Co. v. Erie Preserving Co., 171 Fed. 540, 542.

Under the bankruptcy act of 1867, the term "insolvency" was construed to mean an inability to meet one's obligations in the ordinary course of business, while in the act of 1898 it is equivalent to the word "bankruptcy" in the former statute. Stevenson v. Milliken-Tomlinson Co., 59 Atl. 472, 475, 99 Me. 320.

The federal Supreme Court, when considering the term "insolvency" under the bankruptcy act of 1867, says: "Insolvency, in the sense of the bankruptcy act, means that the party whose business affairs are in question is unable to pay his debts as they become due in the ordinary course of his daily transactions." It is again said that: "In the mercantile sense it means a person unable to pay his debts according to the usages of trade, but in the broad sense used by the statute it means a person whose affairs have become so deranged that he is unable to pay his debts as they fall due, and if from such deranged state of his affairs, and the sense of inability to meet his moneyed engagements, he should transfer his property to a person to pay his debts, we should regard such assignment as made in contemplation of insolvency and within the meaning of the statute." Cincinnati Equipment Co. v. Degnan, 184 Fed. 834, 840, 107 C. C. A. 158 (quoting Dutcher v. Wright, 94 U. S. 553, 557, 24 L. Ed. 130; Mitchell v. Gazzam, 12 Ohio, 315, 336).

The words "insolvent" and "insolvency," contained in Bankr. Act March 2, 1867, c. 176, 14 Stat. 517, §§ 35, 39, had a very different meaning than they have under the present Bankrupt Act. Under the former act, it was held that "by insolvency as used * * * when applied to traders and merchants is meant inability of the party to pay his debts as they become due in the ordinary course of business." The present act declares that "a person shall be deemed insolvent * * * whenever the aggregate of his property, exclusive of any property which he may have conveyed, * * * shall not at a fair valuation be deemed sufficient in amount to pay his debts." To have reasonable cause to believe that a trader or merchant is unable to pay his debts as they become due in the ordinary course of business is a very different thing than to have cause to believe that the aggregate amount of the debtor's available property and assets are insufficient in amount, at a fair valuation, to pay his debts. Suffel v. McCartney Nat. Bank, 106 N. W. 837, 839, 127 Wis. 208, 115 Am. St. Rep. 1004.

That a company's estate and effects through attachments and litigation and other proceedings are in danger of being wasted or lost shows its "insolvency." "Insolvency" exists in its application to persons engaged in commercial pursuits "when they can no longer continue in the ordinary course, securing to the existing creditors an equal division of the assets before they shall be wasted and frittered away in a hopeless struggle under conditions which compel disaster in the end," or when one is unable "to pay his debts as they become due in the ordinary course of business." Moody v. Port Clyde Development Co., 66 Atl. 967, 971, 102 Me. 365 (quoting and adopting definition in Morey v. Milliken, 30 Atl. 102, 86 Me. 464).

"Insolvency" has been defined as a general inability to answer in the course of business liabilities existing and capable of being enforced, as applied to a person, firm, or corporation engaged in trade. "Insolvency" is an inability to pay debts as they fall due in the course of the business. The purchase of goods on time, expecting to meet the obligations thereby incurred, as they mature, out of the sale of the goods purchased, does not render the purchaser of the goods insolvent, merely because a forced sale of the goods at any particular time might not produce a sufficient sum to equal the aggregate of present and future liabilities. The "insolvency" of a firm may depend upon many facts, such as the amount of liabilities, the time of their maturity, and the amount and value of the assets. Martin v. Hertz, 79 N. E. 558, 559, 224 Ill. 84 (citing Best v. Fuller & Fuller Co., 56 N. E. 1077, 185 Ill. 43; Atwater v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 38 N. E. 1017, 152 Ill. 605).

The word "insolvent," as used in Sanborn & B. Ann. St. § 1693a, declaring a conveyance by an insolvent debtor within 60 days prior to a voluntary assignment and in contemplation of such assignment or of insolvency, etc., to be invalid, is used in its ordinary sense of inability to meet obligations as they fall due. Barnes v. National Bank of Oshkosh, 71 N. W. 602, 604, 97 Wis. 16.

An "insolvent debtor" will not be permitted to alienate his property and place it in a position where it is not subject to process in behalf of its creditors, unless there has been received a full and fair consideration for the property transferred, and the transfer has been made in good faith, and in this connection an "insolvent debtor" is one who is unable to pay his debts from his own means as they become due. Hall v. Feeney, 118 N. W. 1038, 1041, 22 S. D. 541, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 513.

Of bank

"Insolvency," in its legal sense, as applied to banks and trust companies, exists whenever such an institution, from any cause, is unable to pay its debts in the ordinary course of business. Commonwealth v. Tradesmen's Trust Co. of Philadelphia, 85 Atl. 363, 364, 287 Pa. 316.

To say that a bank is "insolvent" is simply to say that all of its assets are insufficient to meet its liabilities. Youmans v. State, 66 S. E. 383, 389, 7 Ga. App. 101.

"Insolvency," in its true meaning, is the failure and consequent suspension of business, and, where a bank has not closed its doors and has not failed in business, a bona fide sale made in the exercise of the power given to stockholders by Rev. St. § 5139, to transfer their stock like other personal property, was not void as a fraud on the bank's creditors, because the bank was insolvent at the time of the transfer, in the sense that its assets were then unequal to the discharge of its liabilities. Earle v. Carson, 23 Sup. Ct. 254, 259, 188 U. S. 42, 47 L. Ed. 373.

Under Pen. Code 1895, § 206, providing that every "insolvency" of a chartered bank, or refusal or failure to redeem its bills on demand, shall be deemed fraudulent, etc., it was not the intention of the Legislature to treat the failure to redeem bills on the part of the bank as synonymous in a criminal sense with "insolvency," although, so far as civil liability was concerned, a failure to redeem its bills might be a badge of insolvency. Youmans v. State, 66 S. E. 383-385, 7 Ga. App. 101.

The term "insolvency" as used in Ky. St. § 597, providing that, if any president of a bank shall receive or assent to the receiving of deposits with knowledge that the bank is insolvent, he shall be guilty of a felony, means that all of the bank's property and assets are not sufficient to satisfy its debts, and not that it may not have sufficient funds in its vaults to satisfy all its depositors, or any considerable number of them, on the same day, or in case of a run. Parrish v. Commonwealth, 123 S. W. 339, 345, 136 Ky. 77.

In Rev. Codes, § 2985, relating to receiving deposits in a bank while it is insolvent, the word "insolvent" means that a bank is insolvent when its assets and property are of such a character and value or in such a condition that it is unable to meet the demands made upon it in the usual and ordinary course of banking business. State v. Cramer, 119 Pac. 30, 35, 20 Idaho, 639.

It is true that the phrase "unsafe to continue to transact business," as used in Act March 26, 1895 (St. 1895, p. 172, c. 147), providing that upon the failure of a bank to conform to the bank commissioners' order requiring the discontinuance of unsafe practices, or if the commissioners decide it to be unsafe for the bank to continue to transact business, they shall take control of the bank, etc., is broader than the term "insolvent"; and a finding that it is unsafe for a banking corporation to continue business does not necessarily mean that it is insolvent. But the converse of this is not true. The act clearly contemplates that it is unsafe for an insolvent banking corporation to continue business, and that a determination by the commissioners that such corporation is insolvent is equivalent to a finding that it is unsafe for it to continue business. People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 97 Pac. 306, 309, 154 Cal. 194.

A bank is insolvent when, from the uncertainty of being able to realize on its assets, in a reasonable time, a sufficient amount to meet its liabilities, it becomes necessary for the control of its affairs to pass out of its hands. Livingstain v. Columbia Banking & Trust Co., 62 S. E. 249, 252, 81 S. C. 244, 22 L. R. A. 445.

The words "unsafe or insolvent" in St. 1898, § 4541, making a bank officer criminally responsible who shall receive a deposit, knowing the bank to be unsafe or insolvent, are used as legal equivalents. Ellis v. State, 119 N. W. 1110, 1118, 138 Wis. 513, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 444, 131 Am. St. Rep. 1022.

A bank is insolvent or in failing circumstances, within Acts 25th Leg. c. 100, punishing any officer of any bank who receives any deposit with knowledge that the bank is insolvent or in failing circumstances, when the bank does not have sufficient "assets," consisting of real or personal property, bills receivable, notes, obligations to the bank of every character, considering the solvency of the makers, indorsers, guarantors thereof, and the value of the securities thereon, if any, and stocks and bonds held by the bank as its property, to pay its debts. Fleming v. State, 139 S. W. 598, 606, 62 Tex. Cr. App. 653.

Of building and loan association

The "insolvency" of a public building and loan association consists of its inability to perform the purposes for which it was created. Lewis v. Clark, 129 Fed. 570, 574, 64 C. C. A. 138.

"The 'insolvency' of a building association, which is that condition of its affairs in which it is unable to pay back to its members the amounts paid in by them, respectively, dollar for dollar, puts an end at once to its operations, and as it thus prevents the stock from maturing and extinguishing the loans, according to the contracts between the association and its borrowing members, constitutes a breach of those contracts, and, on the one hand, excuses the borrowers from all further liability for the payment of dues and fines, and, on the other hand, renders the mortgages given to secure the loans due and enforceable at once, without regard to their terms, even though payable in installments, and the receiver can proceed to collect them." Graves v. Selfried, 87 Pac. 674, 677, 31 Utah, 203 (quoting and adopting definition in 5 Am. & Eng. Decisions in Equity, p. 278, note 20).

Where a building association had no outside creditors, the use of the word "insolvency" in the report of a commissioner, in an action between members of the association, had reference to the inability of the company to satisfy the demands of its own members. Colin v. Wellford, 48 S. E. 780, 782, 102 Va. 581, 102 Am. St. Rep. 859.

"Insolvency," as applied to a building and loan association, does not mean inability to pay its outside debts; but it is insolvent, in such sense as to warrant a suit by a stockholder for the appointment of a receiver and to wind up its affairs, when its financial condition is such that it is unable to carry to completion the purpose of its creation. Gunby v. Armstrong, 133 Fed. 417, 426, 66 C. C. A. 627.

Where the record shows that a building and loan association was insolvent and in the hands of a receiver, a debt due to it must be treated as that due an "insolvent concern," on a question as to whether the debt of the corporation should be treated as that of a going concern or of an insolvent one. Carman v. Carrico (Ky.) 80 S. W. 216, 218.

Of corporation

A corporation is insolvent when its assets are insufficient to pay its debts and it has ceased to do business, or has taken, or is in the act of taking, a step which will practically incapacitate it for conducting the corporate enterprise with reasonable prospect of success, or when its embarrassments are such that early suspension and failure must ensue. Mere excess of liabilities over assets does not necessarily constitute insolvency. State v. Trinity Life & Annuity Society, (Tex.) 127 S. W. 1174, 1178.

That the assets of a corporation are less than its liabilities does not necessarily constitute insolvency if the corporation is able to pay its obligations as they become due in the regular course of business, but, if the corporation transfers all its property and abandons business when its assets are known to be less than its liabilities, it is insolvent to the knowledge of its officers and of a bank which had control of the business of the corporation. Abrams v. Manhattan Consumers' Brewing Co., 126 N. Y. Supp. 844, 846, 142 App. Div. 392.

As popularly and generally understood, "insolvency" denotes the insufficiency of the assets of a debtor to pay his debts in full, and such is the meaning of the term as relating to the condition of a corporation when executing mortgages to secure debts owing by it. Harle-Haas Drug Co. v. Rogers Drug Co., 113 Pac. 791, 798, 19 Wyo. 85, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 181.

Under P. L. 1896, p. 298, § 64, "insolvency" as applied to a corporation denotes a general inability to meet pecuniary liabilities as they mature, by means of either available assets or an honest use of credit. Empire State Trust Co. v. Trustees of Wm. F. Fisher & Co., 60 Atl. 940, 87 N. J. Eq. 602, 3 Ann. Cas. 398.

The insolvency which will authorize the dissolution of a corporation under the statute means inability of the debtor to pay its debts as they become due in the ordinary course of business. Howeth v. Coulbourne Bros. Co., 80 Atl. 916, 919, 115 Md. 107.

The word "insolvency," as used throughout Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, means insolvency as defined in such act; and an order of a state court appointing a receiver for a corporation on a petition charging insolvency does not constitute an act of bankruptcy, under section 3a (4), as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 2, where the term is there used to define a different state of facts, and by an amendment of the order of the state court made after the filing of the petition in bankruptcy it appears that it was not made on a finding of insolvency within the meaning of the bankruptcy act. In re Golden Malt Cream Co., 164 Fed. 326, 328, 90 C. C. A. 258.

The appointment of receivers to take charge of the property of a corporation at suit of a stockholder, who alleged fraud and mismanagement by the officers and that the corporation was in danger of insolvency, but not that it was insolvent, cannot be said to have been "because of insolvency," so as to constitute an act of bankruptcy. In re Perry Aldrich Co., 165 Fed. 249, 252.

A corporation may be in a condition of "insolvency" sufficient to authorize the appointment of a receiver when it cannot continue in business, although it is not absolutely insolvent. Wood & Nathan Co. v. American Mach. & Mfg. Co. (N. J.) 62 Atl. 768, 771.

A corporation is not "insolvent," so as to invalidate a preferential transfer to creditors, who are also directors, merely because it has not enough assets which can be used within a reasonable time to pay its creditors and stockholders in full, provided it has sufficient property to pay the creditors alone; the capital stock not being considered a liability in determining the question of "insolvency." Hamilton v. Menominee Falls Quarry Co., 81 N. W. 876, 878, 106 Wis. 352.

"Insolvency," essential to justify receivership proceedings against a corporation in equity, is the inability of the corporation to pay its debts according to mercantile usage as they mature in the ordinary course of its business, and not the statutory definition contained in Bankr. Act 1898, cl. 15, § 1, providing that a person should be deemed insolvent within such act whenever the aggregate of his personal property should not at a fair valuation be sufficient in amount to pay his debts." Cincinnati Equipment Co. v. Degan, 184 Fed. 834, 840, 107 C. C. A. 158 (quoting and following Mitchell v. Gazzam, 12 Ohio 315, 336; American Hosiery Co. v. Baker, 18 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 604, 605; Perkins v. Scott, 9 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 207, 215; Remington & Son v. Central Press Ass'n Co., 3 Ohio N. P. 258, 263; Baker v. Fraternal Mystic Circle, 32 Wkly. Law Bul. 84, 85).

Though the property of a corporation may be sufficient to pay all its debts, it may be "insolvent," where it is unable to pay and discharge its obligations as they accrue in the ordinary course of its business. Denike v. New York & R. Lime & Cement Co., 80 N. Y. 599, 608 (citing Hazelton v. Allen, 3 Allen [85 Mass.] 114; Brouwer v. Harbeck, 9 N. Y. 589; Ferry v. Bank of Central New York [N. Y.] 15 How. Prac. 445).

Where a corporation owed, apart from a mortgage, over $32,000, having assets amounting to $26,000, and was unable to pay its obligations as they matured, and had not sufficient credit to borrow money, it was "insolvent." Mowen v. Nitsch, 62 Atl. 582-584, 103 Md. 685.

A corporation is "insolvent," within the national bankruptcy law, where its assets, though of great value, could not be sold at a forced sale for enough cash to meet all of the liabilities assumed and incurred by the corporation, and where it is unable to go on with the means at its disposal and operate its property and meet its liabilities. Barrie v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 119 S. W. 1020, 1057, 188 Mo. App. 557.

If a corporation has assets substantially in excess of its liabilities, is not embarrassed by the demands of creditors, and is a going concern apparently able to continue business indefinitely, it is not "insolvent" with reference to its creditors though its capital stock be impaired; it being "insolvent" only when its assets are insufficient to pay its debts, and it is about to or has practically incapacitated itself for carrying on the business with reasonable prospects of success. Banta v. Hubbell, 150 S. W. 1069, 1092, 167 Mo. App. 38.

Acts 1903, p. 338, § 50, authorizing a creditor or stockholder to apply for an injunction and appointment of a receiver, and the dissolution of a corporation, where it shall become insolvent or suspend its ordinary business for lack of funds, by an "insolvent" corporation has reference to a corporation whose liabilities exceed its assets, and not to a corporation which is merely unable to pay its debts as they become due in the ordinary course of business, but which has assets in excess of its liabilities. Alabama Cent. Ry. v. Stokes, 47 South. 836, 157 Ala. 202.

Since the assets of a corporation which is "insolvent" in the sense of being unable to pay its debts as they mature, are trust funds belonging primarily to its creditors, the administration and distribution of such funds is a matter of general equitable cognizance. Burton v. R. G. Peters Salt & Lumber Co., 190 Fed. 262, 264.

"Insolvency," under the Corporation Acts, is general inability to meet pecuniary liabilities as they mature, by means of either available assets or any honest use of credit. Where, at the time a corporation suspended business its entire tangible property, including its leasehold and most of its accounts, were assigned as collateral security for debts aggregating $10,000, and where its unsecured debts amounted to $15,000 more, which were far in excess of the equity in the property mortgaged, and where suits had been brought against the company and a judgment entered in one of them, and its credit had been exhausted, and it had little or no cash on hand or in bank, the corporation was insolvent, although the book valuation of its stock and property exceeded its entire liability by about $4,000, and its officers believed such valuation was honest and correct. Russell & Erwin Mfg. Co. v. E. O. Faltoute Hardware Co. (N. J.) 62 Atl. 421, 423 (citing Empire State Trust Co. v. Trustees of Wm. F. Fisher & Co., 60 Atl. 940, 67 N. J. Eq. 602, 3 Ann. Cas. 393).

Where a corporation is losing money in the carrying on of its business, and is seriously embarrassed for want of funds to carry out the project for which it was organized, and is without available assets to pay its present indebtedness, notwithstanding there may not have been a complete suspension of its business, it is insolvent within the meaning of Corporation Act 1896, p. 298, c. 185, § 65, providing that, when any corporation shall become insolvent, or suspend its ordinary business for want of funds to carry on the same, any creditor may apply to the court for an injunction and the appointment of a receiver, and that, if upon the hearing it shall appear that the corporation has become insolvent and is not about to resume its business, the injunction may issue and the receiver be appointed, and hence is subject to the issuance of an injunction and the appointment of a receiver. A corporation may be "insolvent," though it has not suspended its business for want of funds, and it may suspend its business for want of funds and still be able to pay its debts if properly administered. Insolvency is a general inability to meet pecuniary liabilities as they mature by means of available assets or an honest use of credit. The court said: "I agree that the word 'resumption,' as used in the statute, predicates some interruption of the insolvent's business, but I do not understand that it contemplates the entire suspension of its workings. Such has been the practical interpretation the bar and the courts have given, for manufacturing and other corporations with plants in operation have constantly been adjudged to be insolvent and put in the hands of receivers, and in so doing large values have been saved to creditors and stockholders because of the salable condition of a live plant as compared with one that is dead. An insolvency carries with it inability to presently pay indebtedness and suspension of that function, and the word 'resumption,' used in the statute, is, I think, to be taken in the sense of taking up again that suspended function, so that payment of indebtedness, as well as the operation of the work of the corporation, after temporary, partial, or complete paralysis, may be resumed with safety to the public and advantage to its stockholders." Catlin v. Vichachi Min. Co., 67 Atl. 194, 196, 73 N. J. Eq. 286 (citing Reinhardt v. Interstate Telephone Co., 63 Atl. 1097, 71 N. J. Eq. 70; Empire State Trust Co. v. Trustees of Wm. F. Fisher & Co., 60 Atl. 940, 67 N. J. Eq. 602, 3 Ann. Cas. 393).

Of partnership

Under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, a partnership is "insolvent" if the partnership property is insufficient to pay the partnership debts, because it is a person (section 1 [19], c. 541), because any person is insolvent under that act whose property is insufficient to pay his debts (section 1 [15]), and the only property a partnership has or can convey or apply to the payment of its debts is partnership property, and the only debts it owes are the partnership debts. In re Bertenshaw, 157 Fed. 363, 364, 371, 85 C. C. A. 61, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 886, 18 Ann. Cas. 986.

A partnership is not "insolvent," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, when the property of the partnership, together with that of the individual members, exceeds in value the indebtedness of the firm and members. In re Perley & Hays, 138 Fed. 927, 928 (citing Vaccaro et al. v. Security Bank, 103 Fed. 436, 43 C. C. A. 279; Davis v. Stevens et al., 104 Fed. 235, 242).

The term "insolvent," as used in Bankr. Act 1898, cl. 15, § 1, is defined to mean that the aggregate of the debtor's property, at a fair valuation, is insufficient in amount to pay his debts, and hence, in a suit by a trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of a bankrupt partnership to recover a payment made by the firm to a creditor as a preference, plaintiff is bound to show not only that the property of the firm, but also of the partners, was insufficient, at a fair valuation, to pay their debts. J. W. Crancer & Co. v. Wade, 110 Pac. 778, 779, 26 Okl. 757.

One is solvent if he has sufficient assets to pay his debts; thus a man cannot be said to be "insolvent" because he has transferred some of his estate with intent to defraud his creditors, when he has an estate remaining which is abundant to pay all his debts and open to seizure for the satisfaction thereof, or which he has an absolute right to dispose of and liquidate in cash. A partnership is not "insolvent" so long as any of its members have sufficient property after his private debts are paid to pay the creditors of the firm. Lansing Boiler & Engine Works v. Joseph T. Ryerson & Son, 128 Fed. 701, 705, 63 C. C. A. 253 (quoting Vaccaro v. Security Bank, 103 Fed. 436, 43 C. C. A. 279).

INSOLVENT CRIMINAL COSTS

"Insolvent criminal costs" are costs in criminal cases which the statute provides shall be due sheriffs as fees for services rendered in criminal cases, and which are expressly and specifically provided for as to the services rendered, and the amount to be paid therefor, and which are insolvent for the reason that they cannot be collected either on account of the insolvency of the party liable therefor or otherwise. Clark v. Clark, 73 S. E. 15, 137 Ga. 189; Id., 73 S. E. 16, 18, 137 Ga. 185.

INSPECT—INSPECTION

See Under the Inspection of Proper officers.

"To 'inspect,' as defined by Webster, is to examine, to view closely and critically, especially in order to ascertain quality and condition, to detect errors, etc.," and an inspection law for malt liquors, which is satisfied by a single inspection of the mash in fermentation as to manufactures within the state, and as to manufactures outside the state, by an affidavit by the manufacturer, or other reputable person who knows the facts, of compliance with the law, cannot be sustained as an inspection measure. Pabst Brewing Co. v. Crenshaw, 25 Sup. Ct. 552, 557, 198 U. S. 17, 49 L. Ed. 925.

The "inspection" required of an employé's place to work by his employer is not necessarily limited to visual examination, but is ordinarily understood to embrace such tests, and examinations as are proper to determine fitness, and to include an inquiry into safety, efficiency, and quality not resting on visual inspection alone. Pettersen v. Rahtjen's American Composition Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 329, 127 App. Div. 82 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3657, and quoting and adopting the definition in People v. Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 2 Sup. Ct. 87, 107 U. S. 59, 27 L. Ed. 383).

The word "inspection," "properly defined, means careful or critical investigation." Horton v. Ft. Worth Packing & Provision Co., 76 S. W. 211, 212, 83 Tex. Civ. App. 150.

"Inspection" is something which can be accomplished by weighing or measuring the thing to be inspected or applying to it at once some crucial test. Kucker v. Sunlight Oil & Gasoline Co., 79 Atl. 747, 749, 230 Pa. 528, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 503.

Whether one seizing a pick, a hammer, or an ax, and striking a blow with it without even glancing at the condition of the implement, is in the exercise of ordinary care, is a question of fact for the jury; the rule that the servant is not bound to inspect machinery and appliances furnished by the master, but may rely upon the master to furnish safe tools and appliances, not applying; the word "inspection" meaning a somewhat careful or critical examination. Lehman v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 122 N. W. 1059, 1061, 140 Wis. 497.

The portion of the charge, "Plaintiff was not bound to inspect the track at the place in question to ascertain if it was reasonably safe to be used by him in the performance of his duties as brakeman," given after a portion, that "though the track at the place was not reasonably safe, plaintiff assumed the risk from such unsafe condition, if any, of which he had actual knowledge, or would have learned by the exercise of that ordinary circumspection which a prudent and competent man would have used in the particular employment; and in an action for injury to a brakeman by being struck by an engine, while his foot was caught in an unfilled space between ties in the track, on evidence that the unfilled spaces directly causing the injury were covered and obscured by tall, thickly-growing grass, making it appear on casual inspection that the spaces were filled, and that plaintiff had never had an opportunity to be on the track before, and did not know that there were unfilled spaces there"—was not calculated to confuse and mislead the jury; there being a difference between making a previous critical examination which the word "inspection" means, of the track to ascertain if it was reasonably safe, and using reasonable care and caution, which is the meaning of "ordinary circumspection," to observe what was open and obvious, to discern whether it was unsafe. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Ford, 121 S. W. 709, 713, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 521.

The right of "inspection" is a common-law right, and, unless restricted by statute or the corporation's charter, will not be denied when sought by a stockholder for a proper purpose. The provision that all books of a corporation shall at reasonable hours be subject to the inspection of a stockholder in Rev. St. 1898, § 329, does not restrict the common-law right, but is in harmony therewith. Visitorial powers and the stockholders' right of inspection are not one and the same thing. Visitation of corporations is correctly defined and its purposes aptly stated as follows: "By 'visitation of corporations' is meant the act of examining into its affairs. The person authorized to make such examinations is called the visitor. The purpose of visitation is to supervise, direct, and control the management of the corporation." In the United States, visitorial power over all except private eleemosynary corporations, existing under and by virtue of the laws of a state, vests in the state, and, as to those formed under an act of Congress, it vests in the general government, and is exercised through the medium of the courts, or by visitors appointed for that purpose by or in pursuance of statutes. It is correctly stated that "visitors of corporations have power to keep them within the legitimate sphere of their operations, and to correct all abuses of authority, and to nullify all irregular proceedings. In America there are very few corporations which have private visitors, and, in the absence of such, the state is the visitor of all corporations." The common-law right of inspection by the stockholder is a personal privilege arising from his ownership of stock of the corporation, and can be exercised for any legitimate purpose beneficial to him, without any special appointment for that purpose; but he cannot, in its exercise, as the state, through the medium of the courts, or a visitor, may do, interfere with or direct the general operations of the corporation. The difference between the visitorial powers over corporations and the stockholder's right of inspection is obvious. Harkness v. Guthrie, 75 Pac. 624, 625, 27 Utah, 248, 107 Am. St. Rep. 664, 1 Ann. Cas. 129 (quoting Merrill, Mandamus, § 175).

As determination of fitness for commerce

Laws 1901, c. 79, providing for the inspection of horses driven or transported from the state, and for a record and publication of inspections made, was passed for the protection of the public against fraud or crime in relation to a class of property that may easily be wrongfully appropriated and removed beyond the state without detection, and tends to render such fraudulent or criminal practices more difficult, and to assist in identifying the owner and discovering any unlawful act committed and is an inspection law; "inspection" being defined as the examination of certain articles made by law subject to taining to his occupation," the word "immediately" is not synonymous with "instantly," "at once," and "without delay." A disability is immediate, within the meaning of such contracts, when it follows directly from an accidental hurt, within such time as the processes of nature consume in bringing the person affected into a state of total incapacity to prosecute every kind of business pertaining to his occupation. Order of United Commercial Travelers of America v. Barnes, 80 Pac. 1020, 1023, 1024, 72 Kan. 293, 7 Ann. Cas. 809.

INSTITUTE

The word "institute," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 26, authorizing a proceeding to be continued by a judge of the same court with like effect as if it had been "instituted" before the judge who last hears the same, means to originate, to establish, to set on foot. Bridges v. Koppelman, 117 N. Y. Supp. 306, 312, 63 Misc. Rep. 27.

A proceeding by certiorari to review the dismissal of a patrolman is instituted when the petition is presented to the court, and not when the writ is served, under Greater New York Charter Laws 1901, p. 129, c. 466, § 302, providing that such proceedings shall be instituted within four months after the decision sought to be reviewed. People ex rel. Syperrek v. McAdoo, 110 N. Y. Supp. 140, 141, 125 App. Div. 673.

Maintain distinguished

While it would be possible, under certain circumstances, to construe the phrase "maintenance of an action" as including all steps from the making of the writ to the recovery of final judgment, in its ordinary significance "maintain" carries a different meaning from "institute" or "begin"; and under St. 1903, p. 444, c. 437, § 60, providing that "no action shall be 'maintained'" by a foreign corporation so long as it fails to comply with the law, when considered in connection with other provisions of the act imposing penalties on officers and corporations for failing to comply with the law, and providing that a failure to comply shall not affect the validity of contracts made by such corporations, an action by a foreign corporation must be stayed during the period of its noncompliance with the law, on noncompliance being properly pleaded in abatement, the word "maintain" carrying a different meaning from "institute" or "begin," and implying that an action has been begun before it can be maintained. National Fertilizer Co. v. Fall River Five Cents Sav. Bank, 82 N. E. 671, 672, 196 Mass. 458, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 561, 13 Ann. Cas. 510.

To "commence" is to "institute," and, where a statute authorized the householder to "institute" an action for breach of any condition of the bond of a school district treasurer, he was also authorized to maintain it to adjudication. School Dist. No. 9, Kingman County v. Brand, 81 Pac. 473, 474, 71 Kan. 728.

"The word 'educational' does not necessarily describe a public or charitable institution. * * * An 'institution' is an established or organized society or corporation. It may be private in its character, designed for profit to those composing the organization, or public and charitable in its purposes. An institution is a mere organism for the accomplishment of an object, and the existence of such organism cannot, in the nature of things make such object definite. The use of the word 'institution' does not point to a public, as distinguished from a private, organization. * * *" In re Sutro's Estate, 102 Pac. 920, 922, 155 Cal. 727 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Shuttuck's Will, 86 N. In a will giving property to the trustees of a university for the purpose of female education of high grade under the management of such trustees, the said institution to be made a part of the university or kept independent, the use of the word "institution" did not require the creation of a separate corporation, and the gift was absolutely to the university and not to the trustees in trust. Morgan v. Durand, 101 N. Y. Supp. 1002, 1003, 51 Misc. Rep. 523.

Gen. St. 1902, § 1368, provides that every person, who being a trustee or officer of an institution receiving state aid, shall furnish supplies or be interested in any contract for furnishing supplies to such institution, unless he be the lowest bidder for such supplies or contract after open competition, shall be fined $50. Held, that the term "institution," as so used, did not embrace such municipal districts or corporations composed of the inhabitants of certain territory as a school district; and hence a member of a school district committee did not violate such act by selling coal to the district without submitting to competition. Hassett v. Carroll, 81 Atl. 1013, 1018, 85 Conn. 23, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 333.

Laws 1903, p. 81, c. 79, § 2, relating to bank inspection, provides that where reference is made to banks, bankers or banking in the act, the same shall be construed as applying to any corporation, association, firm, or individual engaged in such business; and section 26 (page 88) declares that every officer, agent, or clerk of any banking institution within the title, who subscribes or makes any false statement, or enters or subscribes or exhibits any false paper, etc., shall be subject to imprisonment, etc. Held, that the term "institution" as so used, included a private banker, and hence the section was not unconstitutional, as conferring a special privilege on private bankers. State v. Stuble, 104 N. W. 465, 486, 19 S. D. 646.

In Const. art. 7, § 1, which provides that institutions for the benefit of the insane, blind, and deaf and dumb will always be fostered and supported by the state, the word "institution" had a popular, if not a legal, signification, and did not authorize an act providing that all male blind persons over the age of 21 years and all female blind persons over the age of 18 years, who have been residents of the state for five years and of the county for one year, and have no property, shall be entitled to a certain sum per capita quarterly from the county treasury. Auditor of Lucas County v. State ex rel. Boyles, 78 N. E. 955, 956, 75 Ohio St. 114, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1196.

Testator gave his residuary estate, on the death of his wife and son without descendants, to the trustees of a certain university; the "institution" to be made a part of the university, or kept independent, subject to the control of the trustees, and provided that on the trustees' acceptance the executors should pay over the same to the trustees, to be held as a perpetual fund, the income to be devoted to the objects named. He also gave his son certain personalty for life, and after his death "to the institution named herein should the trustees of the university accept the trust hereby created." The charter of the university, adopted before the execution of the will, provided that the trustees and their successors should be a body corporate and politic, by the name of, etc. Held, an absolute gift to the university, taking effect in possession on the death of the wife and son without descendants; the word "institution" meaning not more than a department or college; and the direction that the income of the fund should be applied to the purposes named not creating a trust. In re Durand, 87 N. E. 677, 678, 194 N. Y. 477.

Laws 1893, p. 1748, c. 701, § 1, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 751, c. 291, provides that no gift for religious, educational, charitable, or benevolent uses, which shall in other respects be valid under the laws of this state, shall be deemed invalid on account of indefiniteness or uncertainty of the beneficiaries; but the title to the subject-matter of the gift shall vest in the trustee named in the instrument, and, if no trustee is named, the same shall vest in the Supreme Court. Section 2 provides that the Supreme Court shall have control over the gifts provided for by section 1, and that the Attorney General shall represent the beneficiaries and enforce the trust by proper proceedings. A will devised the residue of testator's estate to his executor in trust to collect the rents and profits thereof and to pay the same annually to "religious, educational or eleemosynary institutions" as in his judgment shall seem advisable, not more than $500 to any one institution in any one year. Held: That the statute applies to public and not private charitable gifts, and has reference to indefiniteness of beneficiaries, but not of the purposes for which the gift is made; that while the words, "religious" and "eleemosynary," when used to designate institutions, may necessarily imply that the institutions are engaged in public and not private charitable work, the words "educational" and "institutions" have a broad significance, and may refer as well to private as to public organizations or charities; and that, since the terms used are in the disjunctive, the invalidity of the provision as to educational institutions renders the entire gift invalid. In re Shattuck's Will, 86 N. E. 455, 456, 193 N. Y. 446.

As the buildings or property

The word "institution," as used in Const. art. 9, § 3, exempting from taxation "institutions of purely public charity," comprehends not only a building and the ground covered by it, but adjacent ground which is reasonably necessary or proper for the purposes and object in view, and which is used directly for the promotion and accomplishment of the same. State v. St. Barnabas Hospital, 104 N. W. 551, 552, 95 Minn. 489.

Corporation or person

A Catholic bishop is not an "institution," within Code 1873, § 1101, which provides that no person leaving a wife, child, or parent shall devise or bequeath to such institution or corporation more than one-fourth of his estate after payment of his debts. The word "institution" manifestly has reference to an association similar to a corporation and not to an individual in trust for charitable uses. While a bishop is for some purposes designated a corporation, he is none the less an individual, and as such may act as a trustee for any legal purpose. Rine v. Wagner, 113 N. W. 471, 473, 135 Iowa, 626.

Property owned by a private individual and used by him directly and exclusively for educational purposes is exempt from taxation, under Code 1906, § 4251, par. "d," as property belonging to a college or "institution for the education of youth"; the statute making no distinction between natural and artificial persons. City of Jackson v. Preston, 47 South. 547, 549, 93 Miss. 366, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 164.

INSTITUTION IN THE STATE

The words "institutions in this state," as used in Rev. St. § 2731—1, imposing a collateral inheritance tax, but declaring that the provisions of the act shall not apply to property transmitted to "institutions in this state for purposes of purely public charity or other exclusively public purposes," do not include boards and societies, and auxiliaries thereto, which are incorporated and organized under the laws of other states for purposes of purely public charity or other exclusively public purposes. Humphreys v. State, 70 N. E. 957, 959, 70 Ohio St. 67, 65 L. R. A. 776, 101 Am. St. Rep. 888, 1 Ann. Cas. 233.

INSTITUTION OF EDUCATION

See Educational Institution.

INSTITUTION OF LEARNING

Where a private school, not conducted for profit, affords a course of study and opportunity for a higher education than that provided by the public schools, and classes in fact pursue the studies provided by the higher course, the fact that the majority of the pupils do not avail themselves of the opportunity for studying the higher branches does not deprive the school of its right to exemption from taxation as an "institution of learning." People ex rel. Thompson v. St. Francis Xavier Female Academy, 84 N. E. 55, 56, 233 Ill. 26.

INSTITUTION OF PUBLIC CHARITY

See Public Charity; Purely Public Charity.

INSTRUCT

See Misinstruct.

Where a town voted not to "instruct" its board of county commissioners to buy certain land, the word did not preclude the commissioners from buying the land under St. 1886, c. 240, § 10, giving commissioners power to buy lands subject to such instructions as the town might impose by its vote. Inhabitants of Stoughton v. Paul, 53 N. E. 272, 273, 173 Mass. 148.

INSTRUCTION

See Private Instruction; Sectarian Instruction.

The giving of a signal, though by the mechanical act of pressing a button, is an "instruction," within employer's liability act (Code 1907, § 8910 [4]), declaring the master liable for injury to an employé, caused by the act of another person in the service of the master, done in obedience to particular instructions given by a person delegated with the authority of the master in that respect. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Cottrell, 55 South. 791, 792, 172 Ala. 538.

In practice

See General Instruction; Sufficient Instruction; Written Charge or Instruction.

See, also, Charge.

"Instructions" are directions in reference to the law of the case, enabling the jury to better understand their duty, and to prevent them from arriving at erroneous and wrong conclusions. Butler v. Gill, 127 Pac. 439, 440, 84 Okl. 814.

"An 'instruction' is an exposition of the principles of law applicable to a case, or to some branch or phase of a case, which the jury are bound to apply in order to render the verdict establishing the rights of the parties in accordance with the facts proved." Wickham v. People, 93 Pac. 473, 479, 41 Colo. 345.

"Instructions" are directions in reference to the law of the case, enabling the jury to better understand their duty, and prevent them from arriving at erroneous and wrong conclusions. Leavitt v. Deichmann, 120 Pac. 983, 985, 30 Okl. 423.

The object of "instructions" is to enlighten the minds of the jury with reference to the evidence which has just been detailed to them so that they may intelligently arrive at a verdict in accordance with the proof. Stout v. Commonwealth, 94 S. W. 15, 16, 123 Ky. 184, 18 Ann. Cas. 547.

An oral statement to the jury relative to the district attorney electing to stand on the first of two acts as to which testimony has been given, and cautioning the jury that the evidence as to the other act may not be considered as establishing an offense but only to corroborate or explain other evidence made at the request of the district attorney, is not an instruction, within section 1468a, 3 Mills' Ann. Statutes of Colorado, requiring that "instructions" shall be reduced to writing. Irving v. People, 95 Pac. 940, 941, 43 Colo. 260.

A colloquy occurring between counsel and the judge in the presence of the jury, after the close of the evidence, with respect to allowing writings to go to the jury, during which defendant stated that he wished the jury instructed that the writings did not constitute all the contract, to which the court replied, "Certainly, this writing is not the complete contract; the jury will so understand it," followed by the statement of defendant that he would ask the court to charge as to the implied provision that work done under the contract "must be done in good workmanlike manner," to which the court replied, "The jury will so understand it," are not "instructions" to the jury as to the law which must govern them in passing on the facts. Simons v. Haberkorn, 102 N. W. 659, 660, 139 Mich. 180.

Statements by the court to the jury with reference to the form or character of their verdict, which do not contain instructions or directions upon some question of law involved, do not come within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 5484, subsec. 6, requiring instructions to be reduced to writing, unless waived by both parties. Sturgis v. State, 102 Pac. 57, 78, 2 Okl. Cr. 362.

Admonitions made by the court during the progress of the trial are not instructions within Cr. Code Prac. § 225, requiring instructions to be in writing; the instructions referring to those given at the close of the evidence and before the submission of the case to the jury. Wendling v. Commonwealth, 137 S. W. 205, 210, 143 Ky. 587.

Remarks made by a judge to counsel during the progress of the trial are not "instructions" to the jury; and, where the remarks by the judge during the progress of the trial are not calculated to mislead the jury or prejudice the party complaining, they are not ground for reversal. City of Guthrie v. Carey, 81 Pac. 431, 432, 15 Okl. 276.

Oral statements by the court to the jury as to the form of their verdict, which do not contain directions or instructions on questions of law, or comment on the evidence, are not within the statute requiring instructions to be reduced to writing unless waived by the defendant. Douglas v. Territory, 98 Pac. 1023, 1024, 1 Okl. Cr. 583.

Authority synonymous

The word "authority," as used in the rule that a master is only responsible for the acts of a servant within the scope of his authority, is not synonymous with "instructions," but often has a broader meaning. Weatherford, M. W. & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Crutcher (Tex.) 141 S. W. 137, 142.

INSTRUMENT

See Blunt Instrument; Musical Instrument; Perfect Instrument; Professional Instrument.

The word "instrument" in the statute punishing the disfiguring of the person of another "by means of a knife or other instrument" includes any means by which one may disfigure, and carbolic acid maliciously thrown into the face of another is an instrument within the statute; the word "instrument" being defined as that which is made a means or cause to serve a purpose. Lee v. State (Tex.) 148 S. W. 567, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1132.

A rock is an instrument, within an indictment charging a murder by striking with an instrument to the grand jury unknown. Williams v. State, 40 South. 405, 407, 144 Ala. 14.

The words "instruments" and "implements," in the exemption law, were meant to describe the same species of property and should be regarded as of identical import. A bowling alley is not exempt from seizure and sale on execution as the tools or "implements" of the keeper's trade or business. Williams v. Vincent, 79 Pac. 121, 122, 70 Kan. 595, 68 L. R. A. 634, 109 Am. St. Rep. 469.

INSTRUMENT (A Writing)

See Executory Instrument; Inchoate Instrument; Negotiable Instrument; Original Instrument; Sealed Instrument; Written Instrument.

Whether instrument is subject to forgery, see Forgery.

A copy of a water appropriation notice required to be recorded by Civ. Code, § 1415, was not an "instrument," within section 1161, providing that before an "instrument" can be recorded, unless it belongs to certain excepted classes not including such notice, it must be acknowledged. De Wolfskill v. Smith, 89 Pac. 1001, 1004, 5 Cal. App. 175.

An attachment is not an "instrument," within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 1107, making a grant conclusive against the grantor and all subsequently claiming under him except a purchaser or incumbrancer, who in good faith and for value acquired a title or lien by an instrument that is first duly recorded, so that one taking under an unrecorded deed held by a title superior to the right of one claiming under a subsequent attachment and judgment against the grantor. Wolfe v. Langford, 112 Pac. 203, 204, 14 Cal. App. 359.

A judgment is not an "instrument" within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 1107, making a grant conclusive against the grantor and all subsequently claiming under him except a purchaser or incumbrancer who in good faith and for value acquired a title or lien by an instrument that is duly recorded so that one taking under an unrecorded deed held by a title superior to the right of one claiming under a subsequent judgment against the grantor. Wolfe v. Langford, 112 Pac. 203, 204, 14 Cal. App. 359.

Where a contract of insurance demanded proof by affidavit with proper seal of death of insured, an indictment for passing a forged proof of death, which set out an affidavit without a seal, did not allege an instrument which was the subject of forgery within Pen. Code 1895, art. 537, requiring that the alleged forged instrument must be such as would have affected property had it been true. Bagley v. State, 141 S. W. 107, 108, 63 Tex. Cr. App. 606.

An "instrument," in the ordinary accepted sense, is a document or writing. In the law of evidence it has a still wider meaning, and includes, not merely documents, but witnesses and things, animate or inanimate, which may be presented for inspection. Bouv. Law Dict. (16th Ed.) 1064. Laws 1901, p. 751, c. 291, provides that the Supreme Court shall have control over gifts in all cases provided for by section 1 of the act, and when it appears that circumstances shall have so changed, since the execution of an instrument containing a gift or grant to religious, charitable, or benevolent purposes, as to render a literal compliance with the terms of the instrument impracticable, the court may direct that such gift shall be administered in such manner as will most effectively accomplish the general purposes of the instrument, but that no such order shall be made until after 25 years from the execution of the instrument. Held that, where money was contributed to the relief of the sufferers by the General Slocum disaster, the word "instrument" did not render the statute inapplicable to the conditions, though donors had given the funds in almost all instances orally and without any specific instructions, and merely on the understanding that the contribution should be applied to the relief of the sufferers. Loch v. Mayer, 100 N. Y. Supp. 837, 839, 50 Misc. Rep. 442.

"The word 'instrument,' as used in Civ. Code Cal. § 1217, providing that an unrecorded instrument is valid as between the parties thereto and those who have notice thereof, indicates some written paper or instrument signed and delivered by one person to another transferring the title or creating a lien on property or giving a right to a debt or duty." In re McIntosh, 150 Fed. 546, 548, 80 C. C. A. 250 (quoting and adopting definition in Hoag v. Howard, 55 Cal. 564, 565).

The word "instruments," in Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 16, § 221, requiring every trustee to whom any estate shall be conveyed for the benefit of creditors or to be sold for any other purpose, except on a contingency, shall file with the clerk of the court, in which the deed or instrument creating the trust may be recorded, a bond, does not include a will, and a testamentary trustee, to convey, need not execute a bond. Philbin v. Thurn, 63 Atl. 571, 573, 103 Md. 342.

A bill of lading was an "instrument or writing," within Rev. Laws 1905, §§ 5051, 5060, punishing forgery of instruments not negotiable, as well as negotiable instruments. State v. Blerbauer, 126 N. W. 406, 407, 111 Minn. 129.

INSTRUMENT FOR THE PAYMENT OF MONEY

A check for a sum certain, payable to the order of a payee named, with the words: "For Wilkes. This check may not be paid unless object for which drawn is stated"—is an "instrument for the unconditional payment of money," within Comp. St. 1910, § 4406, providing that, in an action on an instrument for the unconditional payment of money only, plaintiff need only set forth a copy of the instrument, and state that there is due to him on account thereof from the adverse party a specified sum which he claims, with interest. Brown v. Cow Creek Sheep Co. (Wyo.) 126 Pac. 886, 888.

An "instrument for the payment of money" is an instrument which acknowledges an absolute obligation to pay, not conditional or contingent; one the execution of which, being admitted, it would be incumbent on the plaintiff, in an action to enforce it, only to offer the instrument in evidence to entitle him to a recovery. In other words, an instrument that admits an existing debt. Ancient Order of Hibernians, Division No. 1, of Anaconda, v. Sparrow, 74 Pac. 197, 199, 29 Mont. 132, 64 L. R. A. 128, 101 Am. St. Rep. 563, 1 Ann. Cas. 144 (quoting and adopting the definition in Trepagnier v. Rose, 46 N. Y. Supp. 897, 18 App. Div. 393).

INSTRUMENT IN NATURE OF WILL

A power of appointment, to be exercised by an instrument in the nature of a last will and testament, meant that it was to be exercised by will, since an "instrument in the nature of a will" means a will. McFall v. Kirkpatrick, 86 N. E. 139, 143, 236 Ill. 281.

INSTRUMENT TRANSFERABLE BY DELIVERY MERELY

An action by the indorsee of a lost note against the payee is within Civ. Code Prac. § 7, providing that in an action on a lost instrument, transferable by delivery only, no judgment shall be given against defendant until an indemnity bond has been given him. Hoyland v. National Bank of Middlesborough, 126 S. W. 356, 357, 137 Ky. 682.

Civ. Code Prac. § 7, provides that no action shall be brought upon an instrument transferable by delivery merely which is alleged to be lost, without a previous tender by plaintiff to defendant if his name and place of residence be known to plaintiff, of an indemnifying bond, etc. Held, that "instruments transferable by delivery merely" means bills of exchange or negotiable paper which the holder takes free of defenses good between the original parties, and does not embrace a note secured by mortgage which under the law was taken by a holder subject to all defenses that the maker had against it before notice of the assignment. Hill's Adm'r v. Grizzard, 119 S. W. 168, 170, 133 Ky. 816.

INSTRUMENTAL

One may be "instrumental" in the sale of property without having anything to do with finding the purchaser so as to be a procuring cause thereof and entitle him to commissions; and hence a finding that an agent was "instrumental" in causing the sale would not of itself entitle him to commissions. Kurtz v. Payne Inv. Co. (Iowa) 135 N. W. 1075, 1077.

INSTRUMENTALITY

See Dangerous Instrumentality.

INSUBORDINATION

"Insubordination" in a civil service employé implies intentional, willful disobedience. Griffin v. Thompson, 95 N. E. 7, 9, 202 N. Y. 104.

Ky. St. 1908, § 4367, requires common school pupils to comply with legal regulations for their government, and makes willful disobedience or defiance of teachers' authority, etc., ground for suspension. Section 4473 authorizes school trustees to adopt such legal regulations as they may deem necessary. The trustees of a common school gave the principal general supervision over the pupils, and provided for annual commencement exercises. Plaintiff, a pupil, was familiar with the rules of the school. He was suspended for the remainder of the term, three weeks, for refusing to take a part in a dialogue in annual commencement exercises, as directed by the principal. Held that, though he could ask to be excused from taking the part assigned and to give his reasons for his request, if the principal regarded his reasons insufficient, it was plaintiff's duty to obey, and his refusal to do so constituted disobedience, and his continued disobedience and refusal of offers permitting his return on taking another part constituted insubordination, and was good cause for the suspension. Cross v. Board of Trustees of Walton Graded Common School, 110 S. W. 346, 347, 129 Ky. 85.

INSUFFICIENCY—INSUFFICIENT

In a statute providing that when sureties are or become insufficient new bond may be required, "insufficient" is a comprehensive term, embracing every cause or ground the court may regard as amounting to that. It includes removal of surety from the state. State, to Use of Baird, v. Hull, 53 Miss. 626, 644.

An objection that the certificate of protest related to matter between other parties than those to the suit on the note, and was therefore incompetent, is not within the contention that the certificate was insufficient; and, where defendant objected to the admission in evidence of the protest of a note on the specific objection that it was not competent, he could not on appeal raise the question that the protest could only be proved by a certified copy of the record kept by notaries. Ewen v. Willbor, 70 N. E. 575, 579, 208 Ill. 492.

Under a statute providing that no appeal shall be dismissed for insufficiency of the undertaking if a good and sufficient undertaking be filed before the hearing on motion to dismiss, the term "insufficient," as applied to an undertaking on appeal, must be construed as meaning such a one as has some efficiency, but "not enough" to meet the necessary requirements, and bears the ordinary meaning of "not enough"; that is, importing degree in quantity or quality, and not total absence. Pirrie v. Moule, 81 Pac. 390, 392, 33 Mont. 1.

"Insufficient security," within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5186, providing that non-residents may be required to give security for costs, and that a new or additional bond may be ordered upon proof that the original bond is "insufficient security," means insufficiency in the amount of the bond as well as insufficiency of the sureties. Morris v. Warwick, 93 Pac. 905, 906, 48 Wash. 426.

Of pleadings

A motion to strike an answer, authorized by rule No. 213, takes the place of exceptions, and may be based on scandal impertinence, or insufficiency; "insufficiency" meaning that a portion of the bill had not been answered, and not that an equitable defense had not been presented. Synnott v. Kobbe (N. J.) 83 Atl. 193, 194.

INSUFFICIENT EVIDENCE

A statute authorizing the trial justice to set aside a verdict and grant a new trial for "insufficient evidence" is not limited to evidence insufficient in point of law. Strictly speaking, evidence is said to be insufficient in law only where there is a total absence of proof, either as to quantity or kind, as in the particular case some rule of law requires as essential to the establishment of the fact. Insufficiency in point of fact may exist where there is no insufficiency in point of law; that is, there may be some evidence to sustain every element of the case competent both in quality and quantity in law, but which may be met by countervailing proof so as to leave no reasonable doubt as to the opposing conclusion. And so upon the whole evidence in the case the testimony in support of the action, or of the defense, may be so slight, though competent in law, or the preponderance against it may be so convincing, that a verdict would be plainly unreasonable or unjust. Gunn v. Union R. Co., 62 Atl. 118, 121, 27 R. I. 320, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 362 (quoting and adopting definition in Metropolitan R. Co. v. Moore, 7 Sup. Ct. 1334, 121 U. S. 558, 30 L. Ed. 1022).

INSUFFICIENTLY VERIFIED

Code Civ. Proc. § 528, permitting a party to treat as a nullity an "insufficiently verified" pleading, applies only where a pleading is defectively verified, and does not permit a plaintiff whose complaint is unverified to treat as a nullity an unverified answer. Beglin v. People's Trust Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 910, 911, 48 Misc. Rep. 494.

INSULT

An "insult" offered to a person does not necessarily consist in the use of language imputing crime to him, and hence it may be an insult to call a white man a negro or to intimate that he is of African descent. Wolfe v. Georgia R. & Electric Co., 58 S. E. 890, 902, 2 Ga. App. 499.

In an instruction defining defendant's liability if plaintiff, a passenger, was set upon by a conductor, and insulted, and violently handled, the words "to set upon," "insult," and "roughly handle" are utterly antagonistic to the idea that the person guilty of such conduct was justifiable or acting in self-defense. "As shown by the collocation of words, 'insult' conveys simply the idea of affront by the use of profane or obscene words towards, or opprobrious epithets applied to, the person insulted. Without regard to its primitive or derivative meaning, certain it is that, used colloquially, as here, it reflects the idea merely of 'scoffs and scorns and contumelious taunts.' 'To insult,' says Webster, means 'to treat with abuse, insolence, indignity, or contempt, by word or action.'" Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Williams, 39 South. 489, 490, 87 Miss. 344.

The words "insulting words or conduct towards a female relative," as used in the statute defining adequate cause, embrace not only such circumstances as really insult the woman, but such conduct as to be an insult to her husband, which, if in fact it does produce such anger or resentment as to render his mind incapable of cool reflection, reduces his homicide to manslaughter. Rogers v. State (Tex.) 149 S. W. 127, 129.

INSUPPORTABLE

Under a statute requiring that cruelties shall be "insupportable" in order to constitute ground for divorce, an allegation that defendant's acts of cruelty were "unendurable" was sufficient; both words being expressive of intolerable conduct and having practically the same meaning. Gamblin v. Gamblin, 114 S. W. 408, 409, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 479.

INSURABLE INTEREST

In fire and marine insurance

An "insurable interest" is that property or right of the assured in respect to which he is liable to loss. The assured has an insurable interest when he has an interest in the subject insured, and the happening of the event insured against might bring upon him pecuniary loss. Cone v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 60 N. Y. 619, 621.

Whether one has an insurable interest in property is tested by the question whether he will be directly and financially affected by loss of the property. Getchell v. Mercantile & Manufacturers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 83 Atl. 801, 802, 109 Me. 274, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 135, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 738.

In general, to give a party an "insurable interest," it is not necessary that he have actual right of property, legal or equitable, in the subject insured; but it is sufficient if he, or those whom he represents, will suffer any sort of loss by its destruction. Real estate acquired for partnership with partnership means, and used in its business, gives the partnership an "insurable interest" to warrant a policy insuring it against loss by fire. Scott v. Dixie Fire Ins. Co., 74 S. E. 659, 660, 70 W. Va. 533, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 152.

Plaintiff's right being something more than a mere vendor's lien, and he being entitled to the very property for which he had bargained in exchange, unless he had lost the right to demand it by his inability to transfer his insurance policy, if the loss of the barn terminated his ability to carry out the contract, the loss was a damage to him, so that he had an "insurable interest"; the policy not requiring that the legal title should be in him, and not containing any conditions of forfeiture. Bartling v. German Mut. Ins. Co. (Iowa) 128 N. W. 63, 65.

A vendee of premises, under a contract of purchase, who has paid part of the price, and gone into possession, has an "insurable interest" therein, and the vendor and holder of the legal title as security for the purchase money also has an "insurable interest" in the premises. Zenor v. Hayes, 81 N. E. 1144, 1145, 228 Ill. 626, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909.

A mortgagee of real property has an "insurable interest," for any title or interest, legal or equitable, will support a contract of insurance against loss by fire, though the term "interest" does not necessarily imply property in the subject of insurance; and hence a declaration alleging a promise by an insurance company to both the mortgagor and mortgagee shows sufficient consideration to entitle both to sue jointly. Williams Mfg. Co. v. Insurance Co. of North America, 81 Atl. 916, 917, 85 Vt. 282.

A bailee, mortgagee, or other lienholder on property has an "insurable interest" therein. American Cereal Co. v. Western Assur. Co., 148 Fed. 77, 78.

Where a purchaser of property on which insured buildings were situated paid the consideration, but took the title in the name of the mortgagee, and received a policy in the mortgagee's name, with the loss, if any, payable to the purchaser as his interest might appear, both the purchaser and the mortgagee had an "insurable interest," as defined by a statute, providing that every interest in property of such a nature that the contemplated peril might directly damnify the insured is an "insurable interest." Loring v. Dutchess Ins. Co. of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., 81 Pac. 1025, 1026, 1 Cal. App. 186.

In life insurance

A person has an insurable interest in the life of another, where there is a reasonable probability that he will gain by the latter's remaining alive or lose by his death. State v. Willett, 86 N. E. 68, 71, 171 Ind. 296, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197 (quoting 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3672).

An "insurable interest" is such an interest in property arising from the relations of the party obtaining the insurance, either as creditor of or surety for the assured, or from the ties of blood or marriage to him, as will justify a reasonable expectation of advantage or benefit from the continuance of his life. It is not necessary that the expectation of advantage or benefit should be always capable of pecuniary estimation, for a parent has an insurable interest in the life of his child, and a child in the life of his parent, a husband in the life of his wife, and a wife in the life of her husband. The natural affection in cases of this kind is considered as more powerful—as operating more efficaciously—to protect the life of the insured than any other consideration. But in all cases there must be a reasonable ground, founded upon the relations of the parties to each other either pecuniary or of blood or affinity, to expect some benefit or advantage from the continuance of the life of the assured, otherwise the contract is a mere wager by which the party taking the policy is directly interested in the early death of the assured. Brett v. Warnick, 75 Pac. 1061, 1064, 44 Or. 511, 102 Am. St. Rep. 639 (citing Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 26 L. Ed. 924).

"As to what relationship must exist between the parties to create in one of them an 'insurable interest' in the life of the other is a question upon which the authorities are not so definite, but it seems to be settled that, when such interest is dependent alone upon consanguinity, the parties must be related as closely as the second degree, and such interest will only be presumed in favor of the husband, wife, father, mother, child, brother, or sister of the insured. Such interest, however, may exist in one not so related by blood or affinity to the insured, when the facts show that he has a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit or advantage from the continued life of the insured." Wilton v. New York Life Ins. Co., 78 S. W. 403, 404, 84 Tex. Civ. App. 156.

It is not easy to define with precision what will in all cases constitute an "insurable interest," so as to take the contract out of the class of wager policies. It may be stated generally, however, to be such an interest, arising from the relations of the parties obtaining the insurance, either as creditor of, or surety for, the insured, or from the ties of blood or marriage to him, as will justify a reasonable expectation of advantage or benefit from the continuance of his life. It is not necessary that the expectation of advantage or benefit should be always capable of pecuniary estimation, for a parent has an insurable interest in the life of his child, and the child in the life of his parent, a husband in the life of his wife, and the wife in the life of her husband. The natural affection in cases of this kind is considered as more powerful, as operating more efficaciously, to protect the life of the insured, than any other consideration. But in all cases there must be a reasonable ground, founded upon the relations of the parties to each other, either pecuniary or of blood or affinity, to expect some benefit or advantage from the continuance of the life of the assured. Otherwise the contract is a mere wager, by which the party taking the policy is directly interested in the early death of the assured. It is well settled that a man has an insurable interest in his own life and that of his wife and children, a woman in the life of her husband, and a creditor in the life of his debtor. Indeed, it may be said generally that any reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit or advantage from the continued life of another creates an insurable interest in such life. Generally the courts have endeavored to make insurable interest depend on the question that pecuniary loss would presumably result to the beneficiary from the death of the insured; but where the relationship, as in the case of husband and wife, parent and child, sister and brother, is so close as to preclude the probability that mercenary motives would induce the sacrifice of life to gain the insurance, the element of pecuniary consideration is not deemed essential to sustain the validity of the policy. Looking at the question from any standpoint, cousins, who are not dependent on or creditors of the insured, cannot fairly be said to have an insurable interest in his life. Hess' Adm'r v. Segenfelder, 105 S. W. 476, 478, 127 Ky. 348, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1172, 128 Am. St. Rep. 843.

"An 'insurable interest' may arise from blood relationship, without regard to whether or not the beneficiary has any pecuniary interest in the life of the insured or is dependent upon the latter." The relationship between brothers is sufficient to give either an insurable interest in the life of the other. Hahn v. Supreme Lodge of the Pathfinder, 125 S. W. 259, 261, 136 Ky. 823 (citing Basye v. Adams, 81 Ky. 368).

While difficult to define, it may be stated generally that an "insurable interest" is "such an interest, arising from the relations of the party obtaining the insurance, either as creditor of or surety for the assured, or from the ties of blood or marriage to him, as will justify a reasonable expectation of advantage or benefit from the continuance of his life." This states a reasonable and now substantially accepted rule. Where a niece lived with her aunt from early childhood at different times, amounting to years, and their relations were as those of mother and daughter, and the aunt supported the niece, the aunt had an "insurable interest" in the life of the niece. Cronin v. Vermont Life Ins. Co., 40 Atl. 497, 20 R. I. 570.

An "insurable interest" of a niece in the life of her uncle does not depend upon the existence of the fact that she has shown him such natural affection as would tend naturally to create a desire to prolong his life, but on the existence of such facts as would create a reasonable expectation on her part of benefit or advantage to her from the continuance of his life and of loss by reason of his death. McFarlane v. Robertson, 73 S. E. 490, 491, 137 Ga. 132.

An uncle of one whose life is insured has no "insurable interest" in the life of the insured through the kinship. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Ellison, 83 Pac. 410, 411, 72 Kan. 199, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 934, 115 Am. St. Rep. 189, 7 Ann. Cas. 909.

INSURABLE VALUE

The "insurable value" of a ship in an open policy is what she is worth to her owner at the port where the voyage commences, including stores. Peninsular & O. S. S. Co. v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 185 Fed. 172, 174.

"Insurance" is a contract by which one of the parties, called the insurer, binds himself to the other, called the insured, to pay to him a sum of money, or otherwise indemnify him. Rogers v. Shawnee Fire Ins. Co. of Topeka, Kan., 111 S. W. 592, 593, 132 Mo. App. 275.

An "insurance contract" is one whereby, for an agreed premium, one party undertakes to compensate the other for loss on a specified subject, by specific perils. State v. Willett, 86 N. E. 63, 70, 171 Ind. 296, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197.

"An 'insurance contract' is a contract whereby one party agrees to wholly or partially indemnify another for loss or damage which he may suffer from a specified peril." A contract whereby one guarantees a merchant against loss from sales on credit resulting from the insolvency of customers, to be determined in a manner specially described, is an insurance contract. Shakman v. United States Credit System Co., 66 N. W. 528, 531, 92 Wis. 366, 32 L. R. A. 383, 53 Am. St. Rep. 920.

A "contract of insurance" (life excepted) is an agreement by which one party for a consideration promises to pay money or its equivalent or do some act of value to the assured upon the destruction or injury of something in which the other party has an interest. Under Rev. St. c. 49, § 1, in order to recover insurance a plaintiff must have both an interest and an existing contract at the time of the destruction or injury of the property. Lyford v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 58 Atl. 916, 917, 99 Me. 273.

A contract by which a corporation, in consideration of stipulated amount, agrees to defend a physician against all suits for damages for malpractice at its own expense, but not to pay any judgment obtained against the physician, is a contract of insurance, and the corporation on making such contract is engaged in the business of insurance. Physicians' Defense Co. v. O'Brien, 111 N. W. 396, 100 Minn. 490.

Under Rev. St. c. 49, § 1, providing that a contract of insurance, life excepted, is an agreement by which one party, for a consideration, promises to pay money or its equivalent or do some act of value to the assured upon the destruction or injury of something in which the other party has an interest, a party cannot recover on a contract of insurance without proving both an insurable interest in the property destroyed and a valid subsisting contract of insurance at the time of its destruction. Buffalo Fertilizer Co. v. Arcostook Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 84 Atl. 1078, 1079, 109 Me. 483.

Code 1906, § 2563, defines an "insurance contract" as "an agreement by which one party for a consideration promises to pay money, or its equivalent, or do some act of value to the assured, upon the destruction, loss or injury of something in which the other party has an interest." Held, that a fire policy in favor of a lumber company for $3,000 on property aggregating in value $8,000, made by a manufacturing lumbermen's underwriters' association, composed of a number of persons, firms, etc., was an insurance contract falling literally within such definition; such organization being a "party" within the meaning of the statute. State v. Alley, 51 South. 467, 476, 96 Miss. 720.

A bond issued by a fidelity company to a bank which guarantees the bank against any loss it may sustain between designated dates in consequence of the infidelity of its employé, and which stipulates that after the expiration of a specified time after proofs of loss it will pay to the bank the amount of any loss to the bank through the dishonesty of the employé, is an "insurance contract," subject to the rules of construction applicable to insurance policies generally. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Dundee, 84 N. E. 670, 672, 233 Ill. 475.

Guaranteeing the fidelity of persons holding places of trust, and the performance of contracts and undertakings, and becoming surety on bonds, constitute a kind of "insurance," and fall within the exception in Laws 1872, of "An act concerning corporations," providing "that corporations may be formed in the manner provided by this act, for any lawful purpose except * * * insurance, * * *" although, at the time when the act was passed, companies doing business of that nature were not organized within the state. People ex rel. Kasson v. Rose, 51 N. E. 246, 247, 174 Ill. 310, 44 L. R. A. 124.

Under Laws 1895, c. 160, § 2, and Laws 1899, c. 31, defining a "contract of insurance" as an agreement by which one party, for a consideration, promises to pay or to do some act of value to insured, on the destruction or injury, loss or damage, of something in which the insured party has an insurable interest, a fidelity corporation is an "insurance company," within Laws 1907, c. 541, § 6, imposing a privilege tax on insurance companies; and the fact that Laws 1875, c. 142, makes provision for fire, life, and marine insurance companies, and that Laws 1895, cc. 113, 175, provide for the organization of surety companies, with power to become surety on specified bonds, do not make surety companies a distinct class, though the insurance act of 1895 was enacted prior to the adoption of chapter 175. American Surety Co. of New York v. Folk, 135 S. W. 778, 779, 124 Tenn. 139, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1024.

Civ. Code, § 1793, defines insurance as a contract whereby one undertakes to indemnify another against loss. Section 1845 provides that a policy is either open or valued. Section 1846 defines an open policy as one in which the value of the thing insured is not agreed upon, but left to be ascertained in case of loss. Section 1847 defines a valued policy as one which provides that the thing insured shall be valued at a specified sum. Section 1877 provides that double insurance exists where the same person is insured by several insurers in respect to the same subject. Section 1878 provides that in case of double insurance each insurer shall contribute ratably toward the loss. Sess. Laws 1905, c. 126, prescribes a standard form of fire policy which provides that the amount of insurance written therein on real property shall be taken conclusively to be the true value. Held that, under the standard policy, the value of real property on total loss is conclusively fixed by the total of all the insurance written therein which is the amount of the policy and concurrent insurance, and the total amount of loss is the sum total of insurance, and, the value of the property being conclusively fixed at a sum equal to the loss, the several policies cannot be prorated. Lawver v. Globe Mut. Ins. Co., 127 N. W. 615, 620, 25 S. D. 549.

In Fairchild v. Liverpool & London F. & L. Ins. Co., 51 N. Y. 65, it was said: "Insurance is a matter of contract, and the parties to it can specify what property, value, or interest it shall in any case cover. It may cover the whole property or any special interest or value in it. It may indemnify against loss generally or loss above a certain sum or percentage." A fire policy provided that the insurer should not be liable for a greater proportion of any loss than the amount insured by the policy bore to the "whole insurance," whether valid or not, "covering such property," etc. Held, that a floating insurance policy covering plaintiff's injured goods, but providing that the policy should not cover in whole or in part any merchandise on which there might be at any time specific insurance, excepting on the excess of value over and above such specific insurance, when such specific insurance was exhausted, did not cover the goods insured by the first policy, and was not to be considered in determining the "whole insurance" on the property at the time of the loss. Klotz Tailoring Co. v. Eastern Fire Ins. Co., 102 N. Y. Supp. 82, 84, 116 App. Div. 723.

Insurance Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 28) § 54, prohibits any person from engaging "in the business of insurance" within the state except on compliance with the requirements of the insurance law. Held, that where defendants employed plaintiff to manufacture trousers out of defendants' material, and, in consideration of a deduction of 1 per cent. from the amount to become due, agreed to pay for plaintiff's services if the goods should be damaged by fire, defendants did not, by such provision, assume a risk, and hence that part of the contract did not constitute doing an insurance business by defendants within such section. Stern v. Rosenthal, 128 N. Y. Supp. 711, 713, 71 Misc. Rep. 422.

"A beneficiary certificate of a fraternal association is a contract of 'insurance,' subject to the same risks of interpretation as are other contracts, and, as in the case of any other contract, can be neither impaired in its obligation or changed in its terms by either party without the assent of the other." Where a mutual benefit association absolutely agreed to pay to a beneficiary, on the death of a member in good standing, $2,000, etc., a by-law subsequently enacted, by which the society attempted, without the member's consent, to scale its obligation on such certificate one-half, was void as impairing the obligation of the member's contract. Bornstein v. District Grand Lodge No. 4, Independent Order B'Nai B'rith, 84 Pac. 271, 272, 2 Cal. App. 624.

As contract of indemnity

A policy of fire insurance is a contract of indemnity. Scheel v. German-American Ins. Co., 78 Atl. 507, 508, 228 Pa. 44.

A policy of "insurance" is a simple contract of indemnity against loss. Harris v. Commonwealth, 78 S. E. 561.

A "life insurance" policy is not a contract of "indemnity" but a contract to pay money upon insured's death in consideration of certain payments being made during his life. Reed v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc., 82 N. E. 734, 736, 190 N. Y. 111.

A "contract of insurance" is one of indemnity, but not purely so, as the insurer, on payment of the loss, has a right to be subrogated to the insured's right to proceed against one who negligently caused the loss. The Livingstone, 130 Fed. 746, 749, 65 C. C. A. 610.

"Contracts of insurance" are contracts of indemnity upon the terms and conditions specified in the policy or policies embodying the agreement of the parties. For a comparatively small consideration the insurer undertakes to guarantee the insured against loss or damage upon the terms and conditions agreed upon and upon no other, and, when called upon to pay in case of loss, the insurer therefore may justly insist upon the fulfillment of these terms." San Francisco Sar. Union v. Western Assur. Co., 157 Fed. 695, 697 (quoting and adopting the definition given in Imperial Fire Insurance Co. v. Coos County, 14 Sup. Ct. 379, 381, 151 U. S. 452, 462, 38 L. Ed. 231).

As a general proposition of law "a contract of insurance" is one of indemnity, requiring insurable interest on the part of the insured, and therefore the extent and nature of such interest are very material to the contract and the risk, since an absolute, unconditional owner has a far stronger motive to care for and protect the property than one who is not the absolute, unconditional owner." Rochester German Ins. Co. of Rochester, N. Y., v. Schmidt, 151 Fed. 681, 683.

Ohio has no statutory definition of "insurance," but it has been repeatedly held that the contract of insurance is a contract of indemnity. It is defined by May as "the contract where one, for a consideration, undertakes to compensate another if he shall suffer loss," and it is said that it is elementary that the contract of insurance, other than that of life and of accident, where the injury results in death, is one of indemnity. By indemnity is meant that the party insured is entitled to be compensated for such loss as is occasioned by the perils insured against, in precise accordance with the principles and terms of the contract of insurance; the right to recover being commensurate with the loss sustained. Where a foreign corporation makes a business of defending physicians and surgeons against civil prosecution for malpractice, and issues and sells to the persons of the medical profession contracts entitling them to defend the holder against such suits during the term specified therein, the agreement is not an insurance contract. State ex rel. Physicians' Defense Co. v. Laylin, 78 N. E. 567, 568, 73 Ohio St. 80 (citing May, Ins. § 1).

Under Civ. Code, §§ 2527, 2551, 2558, defining insurance as a contract whereby one undertakes to indemnify another against loss arising from an unknown event, and providing that the sole object of insurance is the indemnity of insured, and declaring that gaming or wagering policies shall be void, a policy of insurance is a contract of indemnity, and, except in case of a valued policy, insured may only recover such loss as he has actually sustained, not exceeding the sum stipulated. Whitney Estate Co. v. Northern Assur. Co. of London, 101 Pac. 911, 912, 155 Cal. 521, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 123, 18 Ann. Cas. 512.

A contract of "insurance" against fire is a contract of indemnity to reimburse insured for his actual loss not exceeding an agreed sum. Getchell v. Mercantile & Manufacturers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 83 Atl. 801, 802, 109 Me. 274, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 135, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 738.

An insurance policy is a contract of indemnity for loss, and the intent of the parties must be sought for in accordance with the true meaning in which the agreement was made and expressed in the written instrument. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Tye, 58 S. E. 110, 111, 1 Ga. App. 380.

A "contract for insurance against fire" is a contract of indemnity under which assured is only entitled to be put in the same condition peculiarly that he would have been if there had been no fire, and where assured holds property under a conditional sale, the title remaining in the vendor, assured may recover only to the amount of his insurable interest represented by the amount of payment on the purchase price. Tabbut v. American Ins. Co., 70 N. E. 490, 431, 185 Mass. 419, 102 Am. St. Rep. 353.

An agreement between a limited number of individuals, partners, and corporations engaged in a printing business to indemnify each other against loss by fire is not a contract for the creation of the insurance business without complying with Rev. St. 1899, §§ 7945-8062, but merely an interindemnity contract, which was not within the insurance law, either before or after the enactment of Laws 1911, p. 801, which expressly provides that such contracts shall not be subject to the insurance law. Isaac M. Blanchard Co. v. Hamblin, 144 S. W. 830, 881, 162 Mo. App. 242.

An association organized to protect physicians against civil prosecutions for malpractice, which issues contracts to physicians for a specified consideration and agrees to defend at its own cost, not in excess of a specified sum, actions against physicians, for malpractice, without assuming the payment of any judgment in any suit defended, is engaged in the business of insurance within Civ. Code Cal. §§ 2527, 2531, defining "insurance" as a contract whereby one undertakes to indemnify another against loss or liability arising from an unknown or contingent event, and providing that any contingent or unknown event which may damage a person or create a liability against him may be insured against, since the contract is one of indemnity and not one to render personal services for another, and such company is subject to the provisions of the statutes of the state regulating the business of insurance therein. Physicians' Defense Co. v. Cooper, 188 Fed. 832, 833.

As life insurance

The word "insurance," as used in a warranty of accident or health insurance that no application ever made by the insured for insurance had been declined, and no accident or health policy issued to him had been canceled or renewal refused, etc., held to mean life insurance. MacKinnon v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 60 Atl. 180, 181, 72 N. J. Law, 29.

INSURANCE AGENT

As profession, see Profession.

As public officer, see Officer.

As trader, see Trader—Tradesman.

Insurance broker distinguished, see Insurance Broker.

An insurance agent, within Laws 1895, p. 537, c. 175, § 87, rendering an agent procuring insurance in companies not authorized to do business personally liable, is one who assumes to act for such a company; and it is not essential that he be appointed as the representative of such company, or be the authorized agent of a duly licensed company. Webster v. Ferguson, 102 N. W. 213, 214, 94 Minn. 86.

INSURANCE BROKER

An "insurance broker" is ordinarily one who is engaged in the business of procuring insurance for such persons as apply to him for that service, and he is usually the agent of insured. The mere fact that an insurance broker receives a commission from insurer for placing the insurance with him does not change his character as agent of the insured; and one contracting with an agent of an insurance company to turn over surplus business to such agent is a mere broker, and is not an agent of the company. Monast v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 79 Atl. 932, 937, 82 R. I. 557.

Rev. Laws 1905, § 1620, provides that whoever, not being the appointed agent of an insurance company, for compensation acts for or in any manner aids another in effecting insurance or reinsurance, shall be deemed an insurance broker. Section 1716 provides that every insurance agent or broker who acts for another in negotiating a contract of insurance shall be held the insurer's agent to collect or secure the premium therefor, whatever condition may be contained in the contract. Section 1642 provides that every person who solicits insurance and procures an application therefor shall be held to be the agent of the party afterwards issuing insurance thereon or a renewal. An insurance broker solicited a renewal of an existing fire policy on a stock of liquor. Insured declined to have the policy renewed, but it was agreed between them that the broker should procure for insured a policy for the same amount as the existing policy on the furniture in the restaurant of insured. The broker notified the agents of the insurance company that the old policy would be renewed, and a renewal policy was written on the stock of liquor and delivered to the broker for insured. The broker did not inform the agents of the agreement between him and insured. The policy was delivered to insured, who retained it unaware that it did not cover the furniture until after the same had been destroyed by fire. Held, in an action to reform the policy so as to make it cover the furniture and to recover thereon, that the broker was not the agent of the insurance company for the purpose of making a contract of insurance or an agreement to insure, since, under section 1716, a broker is not the agent of the insurance company except for the purpose of collecting or securing premiums, which agency is not enlarged by section 1642, which must be construed in connection with section 1716, and that there was therefore no mutual mistake which would authorize the reformation of the contract of insurance. Fredman v. Consolidated Fire & Marine Ins. Co. of Albert Lea, 116 N. W. 221, 223, 104 Minn. 76, 124 Am. St. Rep. 608.

Insurance agent

There is a well-understood distinction between "insurance agents" and "insurance brokers." "Unless otherwise provided, an 'insurance broker' represents the insured, although he may represent either the insured or the insurer, or both, for certain purposes. It is a question of fact to be determined by the evidence. He may be the agent of the insurer for the purpose of delivering the policy and collecting the premiums, for the collection of the premiums only, or not even for that purpose. An insurance company is bound by the knowledge of its agent; but it is not bound by the knowledge of a broker, unless such knowledge has been actually communicated to it." This distinction is recognized in Rev. Laws 1905, § 1620, providing that "whosoever not being the appointed agent or officer of the insuring company for compensation acts for or in any manner aids another in effecting insurance or reinsurance shall be deemed an insurance broker, but no person shall act as such except as hereinafter provided." Fredman v. Consolidated Fire & Marine Ins. Co. of Albert Lea, 116 N. W. 221, 223, 104 Minn. 76, 124 Am. St. Rep. 608 (citing Seamans v. Knapp-Stout & Co. Company, 61 N. W. 757, 89 Wis. 171, 27 L. R. INSURANCE BUSINESS

See Marine Insurance Business.
See, also, Doing Business.

Complainant, in consideration of a specified yearly consideration, issued a contract to physicians, guaranteeing that, in case they were sued for damages for civil malpractice, complainant agreed to employ a local attorney, in whose selection the contract holder should have a voice, who, with the defendant's attorney, would defend the case without expense to the contract holder to the extent of the exhaustion of the sum named in the policy, which for the defense of one suit was $5,000, or not to exceed $10,000 in any one year in case more than one suit was brought against such holder, relieving the latter from liability for costs and attorney's fees to that extent. Held, that complainant was engaged in the insurance business, within Civ. Code Cal. §§ 2527, 2531, 2532, 2534, regulating insurance, and that complainant was not entitled to do business within the state without complying with the insurance laws. Physicians' Defense Co. v. Cooper, 199 Fed. 578, 580, 118 C. C. A. 50.

INSURANCE COMMISSIONER

The insurance commissioner is a creature of the statute, possessing no authority except that which the statute confers on him; and, where he undertakes to act in a case in which the statute gives him no authority, he may be controlled by injunction. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Prewitt, 105 S. W. 463, 465, 127 Ky. 399.

INSURANCE COMPANY

See Foreign Insurance Company; Life Insurance Company; Live Stock Insurance Company; Mutual Fire Insurance Company; Stock Insurance Company.

Mixed insurance company, see Mixed Company.

There are three kinds of "insurance companies," stock, mutual, and mixed. A "stock company" is one where the stockholders contribute all the capital, pay all the losses, and take all the profits. A "mutual company" is one wherein the members constitute both the insurers and the insured, where the members all contribute, by a system of assessments, to the creation of a fund from which all losses and liabilities are paid, and wherein the profits are divided among themselves in proportion to their interests. "Mixed companies" are such as the term implies. They embody the characteristics of both the others. State v. Willett, 86 N. E. 68, 70, 171 Ind. 296, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197.

The term "insurance company," in its broader meaning, includes fraternal beneficiary societies; in its restricted sense, and confining it to its literal meaning, it does not include such societies. Applying, then, the ordinary rule of construction which obtains in determining the meaning of contracts of insurance, the Modern Woodmen of America is not to be regarded as an insurance company, within the meaning of a question, in an application for life insurance, "Have you ever been declined or postponed by any company?" and a negative answer would not defeat recovery on the policy, although the insured had been rejected by this fraternal order. Peterson v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 91 N. E. 466, 470, 244 Ill. 329, 18 Ann. Cas. 96.

Benefit societies are not always included in the general term "insurance companies." Westerman v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 94 S. W. 470, 488, 484, 196 Mo. 670, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1114.

Though Rev. Laws 1905, § 1594, declares that, unless the context otherwise requires, the words "insurance company" shall include every corporation and association engaged in insurance, such term does not include fraternal beneficiary associations. Louden v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 119 N. W. 425, 426, 107 Minn. 12.

Ky. St. § 641, declaring that the words "insurance company" or "insurance corporations," as used in the article, mean any association, company, corporation, partnership, or joint-stock company carrying on, in any manner the business of insurance, except that the provisions of the chapter shall not apply to fraternal societies, and section 679 requiring that the application or charter and by-laws of an insurance company doing business under the laws of the state, or a copy thereof, shall be attached to the policy before it can be treated as a part of the contract and used in evidence, applies to assessment co-operative companies doing business on the lodge plan. Supreme Commandery of United Order of Golden Cross of the World v. Hughes, 70 S. W. 405, 406, 114 Ky. 175.

Ky. St. 1908, § 679, relating to assessment or co-operative life insurance, providing that the application, or a copy thereof, shall be attached to the policy before it can be treated as a part of the contract, applies to a fraternal insurance order doing business exclusively on the lodge plan, notwithstanding section 641, defining "insurance company" to include any association, company, or corporation engaged in or carrying on in any manner the business of insurance in the state, excepting fraternal orders doing business exclusively on the lodge plan. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., of Ky., v. Edwards (Ky.) 85 S. W. 701, 702.

The word "company," in an application for a mutual benefit certificate containing the question, "Has any * * * application to insure your life ever been made to any company * * * upon which a policy has not been issued?" refers only to regular "insurance companies," and excludes fraternal associations; Civ. Code, § 451, declaring that benefit associations are not "insurance companies" within the insurance laws, recognizing a distinction between regular insurance companies and benefit associations. Lyon v. United Moderns, 83 Pac. 804, 805, 808, 148 Cal. 470, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 247, 113 Am. St. Rep. 291, 7 Ann. Cas. 672.

Under Laws 1895, c. 160, § 2, and Laws 1899, c. 31, defining a "contract of insurance" as an agreement by which one party, for a consideration, promises to pay or to do some act of value to insured, on the destruction or injury, loss or damage, of something in which the insured party has an insurable interest, a fidelity corporation is an "insurance company," within Laws 1907, c. 541, § 6, imposing a privilege tax on insurance companies; and the fact that Laws 1875, c. 142, makes provision for fire, life, and marine insurance companies, and that Laws 1895, cc. 113, 175, provide for the organization of surety companies, with power to become surety on specified bonds, do not make surety companies a distinct class, though the insurance act of 1895 was enacted prior to the adoption of chapter 175. American Surety Co. of New York v. Folk, 135 S. W. 778, 779, 124 Tenn. 139, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1024.

Since an "insurance company" exercises no special or exclusive privilege not allowed by law to natural persons, it is not like a "guaranty or surety company," which may, by statute, be the sole surety in all cases where by law two or more sureties are required. An insurance company is not a guaranty or surety company on which Ky. St. 1899, § 4077, imposes a franchise tax. Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 74 S. W. 1050, 1052, 115 Ky. 787.

Where a foreign insurance society was authorized to issue insurance to the legal representatives of the insured, it was an "insurance company," subject to Rev. St. 1899, § 7890, providing that misrepresentations made by insured in obtaining the policy are no defense unless the matters misrepresented shall have actually contributed to the death, and not a "fraternal beneficiary society," authorized by section 1408 to issue certificates only for the benefit of "families, heirs, blood relatives, affianced husband or affianced wife, or to person dependent upon the member." Herzberg v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 85 S. W. 986, 987, 110 Mo. App. 328.

Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 1978, providing that no corporation shall do an insurance business in this state except according to the conditions and restrictions of the statute, expressly declares that the term "insurance corporation," as used in the chapter, may be taken to embrace every corporation, association, partnership, or individual engaging in any such business. Presbyterian Ministers' Fund v. Thomas, 105 N. W. 801, 802, 128 Wis. 281, 110 Am. St. Rep. 919.

A business conducted by an association organized for the purpose of securing to each of its members a burial worth $100 in consideration of stipulated assessments to be paid by such members during life is an "insurance association," within the provisions of Gen. St. 1901, § 3386. State v. Wichita Mut. Burial Ass'n, 84 Pac. 757, 73 Kan. 179.

A contract by which a corporation, in consideration of stipulated amount, agrees to defend a physician against all suits for damages for malpractice at its own expense, but not to pay any judgment obtained against the physician, is a contract of insurance, and the corporation on making such contract is engaged in the business of insurance. Physicians' Defense Co. v. O'Brien, 111 N. W. 896, 100 Minn. 490.

INSURANCE LAW

Acts 1903, p. 94, c. 69, declares that any provision in an insurance policy contracted for in Texas that the answers or statements in the application, if false, shall render the policy void or voidable, shall not constitute a defense unless shown to have been material to the risk. Such provision was an amendment to Rev. St. 1895, tit. 58, embodying the law of insurance, and was added to chapter 4, which treats of life and accident insurance companies, their contracts, and policies. Held, that such provision was an "insurance law," within Laws 1899, p. 195, c. 115, § 1, relating to fraternal associations, and providing that they shall not be subject to the insurance laws of the state unless expressly designated therein. Modern Order of Praetorians v. Hollmig, 103 S. W. 476-477, 100 Tex. 623.

INSURE SAFETY

As used in a railroad rule providing that transfermen and yard crews working within yard limits must move at a speed to insure safety, and during obscure weather must move under flag protection, the words to "insure safety" meant that the speed should be such that it would not be the approximate cause of a collision. Clary v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 123 N. W. 649, 651, 141 Wis. 411.

INSURED

Assured synonymous, see Assured.

A provision in an insurance policy that, where the expression "insured" is used therein, it shall include the "legal representatives" of the insured does not entitle a receiver to take the place of the insured in answer to a demand by the company that the insured shall appear for examination under oath respecting a loss, as required by the policy, although the receiver was appointed for the express purpose of collecting the insurance; the insured having absconded and having been adjudged a bankrupt. Sims v. Union Assur. Soc., 129 Fed. 804, 805, 808.

Under a fire policy issued to the owner of the property, providing "loss, if any, first payable to M., mortgagee, as his interest may appear," requiring proof of loss by "the insured," such proof by the mortgagee, the owner refusing to make it, and the amount of the mortgage exceeding that of the policy, is sufficient. McDowell v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 130 N. Y. Supp. 294, 296, 145 App. Div. 724.

The "insured," under Insurance Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 28) § 122, which provides that a fire insurance company shall cancel any policy of insurance upon the request of the insured, and shall return the amount of the premium paid, less the short rate premium, includes a mortgagee, for whose benefit a mortgagee clause has been inserted in the policy; and the original assured cannot cancel the policy and recover the unearned premium without the consent of the mortgagee, who holds an independent contract with the insurer. Lewis v. London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co., 137 N. Y. Supp. 887, 888, 78 Misc. Rep. 176.

A fire policy had indorsed thereon, "Loss, if any, payable to C., as his mortgage interest may appear," and such mortgagee was not again mentioned in the policy, save where it was provided in the body of the policy that, if with the consent of the insurer any interest should exist in favor of a mortgagee, the conditions of the policy should apply to such interest. In regard to the settlement of a loss, it was provided that the determination of loss should be made by insured and the company or, in case of a disagreement, by appraisers. Held, that a settlement of the loss, accepted by the insured, was binding on the mortgagee. The word "insured" should be construed to include legal representatives of the insured and nothing more. Collinsville Sav. Soc. v. Boston Ins. Co., 60 Atl. 647, 651, 77 Conn. 676, 69 L. R. A. 924.

Civ. Code, § 2541, provides that, where a mortgagor effects insurance in his own name, the loss to be payable to the mortgagee, or assigns a policy of insurance to the mortgagee, the insurance is deemed to be upon the interest of the mortgagor, and any act of his, which would otherwise avoid the insurance, will have the same effect, although the property is in the hands of the mortgagee. Section 1442 provides that a condition involving a forfeiture must be strictly interpreted. Section 1654 provides that, in cases of uncertainty in the interpretation of contracts, the language of a contract must be interpreted most strongly against the one who caused the uncertainty. A fire policy provided that, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed thereon, it should be void if any change should take place in the title of the property, and provided that, if an interest "shall exist in favor of a mortgagee, the conditions hereinbefore contained shall apply in the manner expressed in such provisions and conditions of insurance relating to such interests as shall be written upon, attached, or suspended hereto." Subsequent provisions declared that the policy was "subject to the foregoing stipulations and conditions," and that no privilege or permission affecting the insurance should ever be claimed by "insured" unless written or attached to the policy. After the issuance of a fire policy the premises were mortgaged, and the insurer indorsed on the policy a statement that the loss should be payable to the mortgagee, and thereafter the mortgagor sold the premises. Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to recover for a loss, since, by virtue of the mortgage clause, the interest of the mortgagee was free from all such conditions, except such as were at the time of the creation of his interest written upon the policy or attached or appended thereto. The word "insured" refers to the original holder of the policy or his successor, and not to the mortgagee. Welch v. British American Assur. Co., 82 Pac. 964, 966, 148 Cal. 223, 118 Am. St. Rep. 223, 7 Ann. Cas. 396.

Plaintiff having procured a policy on a dwelling house, containing a stipulation that, if "the insured" procured other insurance on the property, the policy should be void, sold the property to the wife of H., retaining a lien for the unpaid portion of the price, and, with the insurer's consent, assigned the policy, to which a rider was attached, providing that any loss due the assured under the policy should be payable to plaintiff as her interest might appear. H. without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff or the insurer procured additional insurance on the property payable to plaintiff as her interest might appear. Held, that the conveyance and the assignment of the policy with insurer's consent created a new contract of insurance between defendant and the grantee, who thereupon became the "insured" within the meaning of the provision against additional insurance. Dumphy v. Commercial Union Assur. Co., Limited, of London (Tex.) 142 S. W. 116, 117.

INSURED PROPERTY

A town or county co-operative insurance company may reinsure the risks of another such company, and the subject-matter of the reinsurance thereupon becomes "insured property" of the indemnifying company within Insurance Law (Laws 1898, p. 1506, c. 654) § 278, as amended, allowing a town or county co-operative insurance company doing business in five counties to extend into adjoining counties not exceeding one for each $1,000,000 of its "insured property," and the reinsured company becomes a member of the indemnifying company and subject to pro rata liability for assessments to pay losses during the life of the reinsurance contract (Laws 1897, p. 12, c. 29); section 268 requiring assessments for a loss or a general assessment for the current year to pay estimated losses to be made pro rata "upon all the property at that time insured." Skaneateles Paper Co. v. American Underwriters' Fire Ins. Co. of Monroe County, 114 N. Y. Supp. 200, 204, 61 Misc. Rep. 457.

INT.

A claim presented to an administrator for a specified sum "& int." allowed by the administrator and approved by the court in similar language is a claim for the specified sum and interest; the abbreviation under Code Civ. Proc. § 186, standing for the word "Interest." Raggio v. Palmtag, 103 Pac. 312, 316, 155 Cal. 797 (citing Belford v. Beatty, 84 N. E. 254, 145 Ill. 414).

INTAGLIOS

Semi-spherical rock crystal, polished, and the flat surfaces of which have been engraved in designs of animal heads, and the intaglio cuttings of which are painted in living colors, are "Intaglios." United States v. Benedict & Warner, 145 Fed. 914, 915, 76 C. C. A. 446.

INTANGIBLE PROPERTY

See Tangible or Intangible Property.

Ky. St. 1903, §§ 4077-4081, provide that certain corporations, including telephone companies, shall, in addition to other taxes, annually pay a tax on their franchises to the state and a local tax thereon to the county, incorporated city, town, and taxing district where the franchises may be exercised; and each corporation shall report the amount of tangible property in the state, and where situated and assessed, and the fair cash value thereof; and the board of valuation and assessment is to fix the value of the capital stock of each corporation, and from such amount deduct the assessed value of all tangible property assessed in the state, the remainder to be the value of its corporate franchise, subject to taxation in each county, incorporated city, town, or district through or into which the lines of the company pass. Section 4020 provides that all property of domestic corporations, including intangible property, considered in determining value of franchises, shall be subject to taxation, unless exempt by the Constitution, and shall be assessed at its fair cash value. Held, that the bonds, notes, accounts, cash, stock in other corporations, and other credits of a telephone corporation are "intangible property," and not subject to assessment by the local assessor, but are to be considered by the board of valuation in fixing the franchise tax. Commonwealth v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. (Ky.) 99 S. W. 604, 606.

INTEGRAL

INTEGRAL PART OF JUDGMENT

The part of a judgment of foreclosure, which pursuant to Rev. St. 1898, §§ 3156, 3162, orders judgment for the deficiency and holds that a certain person is liable therefor, is an "integral part of the judgment" and fixes the rights of the parties and is appealable, and such liability cannot be questioned on appeal from the formal judgment for deficiency. Pereles v. Leiser, 101 N. W. 413, 414, 123 Wis. 233 (citing Gaynor v. Blewett, 57 N. W. 44, 86 Wis. 399, 400; Kane v. Williams, 74 N. W. 570, 99 Wis. 65, 72; Richards v. Land & River Imp. Co., 75 N. W. 401, 99 Wis. 625, 629).

INTEGRITY

"Integrity" means, among other significations, "moral soundness," in an action for breach of marriage promise; and the exclusion of testimony as to defendant's reputation for integrity was harmless, where several witnesses had testified that his reputation for chastity and morality was good. Lanigan v. Neely, 89 Pac. 441, 449, 4 Cal. App. 760.

The word "integrity," as used in Code, § 1369, providing that no person shall be entitled to serve as administrator who has been adjudged incompetent to execute the duties of a trust because of want of understanding or integrity, means soundness of moral principle and character, as shown by a person's dealing with others in the making and performance of contracts, in fidelity and honesty in the discharge of trusts. In short, it is used as a synonym for "probity," "honesty," and "uprightness" in business relations with others. In re Gordon's Estate, 75 Pac. 672, 674, 142 Cal. 125.

A finding that a father is a man of intemperate habits and lacking in "integrity" is not sufficient to deprive him of the guardianship of his minor child, under Rev. Codes, § 5774; providing that a surviving parent who is competent to transact his own business, and not otherwise unsuitable, is entitled to the guardianship of the minor, the word "integrity" meaning uprightness of character and soundness of moral principle; honesty; probity; as, his business career showed his integrity. In re Crocheron's Estate, 101 Pac. 741, 746, 16 Idaho, 441, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 868.

INTELLIGENCE

An instruction "that the term 'negligence' means the want of that care and prudence which a man of ordinary 'intelligence' would exercise under all the circumstances of the situation" is erroneous, where the case is bottomed on negligence and defended on the ground of contributory negligence, since it does not correctly define the term. "Intelligence" is not a synonym for either "caution," "prudence," or "care." Van Cleve v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co., 101 S. W. 632, 634, 124 Mo. App. 224.

INTEMPERANCE

See Habitual Intemperance.

INTEMPERATE

A charge that "the best definition I can give you of the word 'intemperate' so far as the intemperate use of intoxicating liquor is concerned is the immoderate use of intoxicating liquor. I don't know whether you know any more about it now than you did before; I don't"—simply indicated that the word "intemperate" did not admit of precise definition, though well understood, and was not erroneous. Schon v. Modern Woodmen of America, 99 Pac. 25, 27, 51 Wash. 482.

Where a mutual benefit certificate provided for forfeiture in case insured should become intemperate in the use of intoxicating liquors, the word "intemperate" should be held to mean, not the excessive or habitual use of intoxicating liquors, but the habitually excessive use thereof. Evans v. Modern Woodmen of America, 129 S. W. 485, 491, 147 Mo. App. 155.

Insured was not "intemperate" within a provision of a benefit certificate that it should become void if insured should become intemperate in the use of alcoholic liquors, even if he drank liquors to excess upon exceptional occasions, unless he was addicted to periodical indulgences, which became habitual. Schon v. Modern Woodmen of America, 99 Pac. 25, 27, 51 Wash. 482.

INTEMPERATE HABITS

A man is not of "intemperate habits" within the meaning of an insurance policy because he occasionally uses intoxicating liquors and sometimes to excess. Fludd v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 55 S. E. 762, 763, 75 S. C. 315.

INTEMPERATE USE

Where a by-law of a mutual benefit society provided that it should be relieved from liability in case the member became intemperate in the use of intoxicating liquors, or his death should result from his intemperate use thereof, the words "intemperate use" should be construed as equivalent to habitual intemperance in such use, but the word "use" employed in the sentence relieving the company from liability in case of death resulting from the intemperate use of such liquors was not employed with reference to a fixed habit, but should be construed to mean the means only by which death was caused, so that where insured died as the result of a fall, which was directly caused by his intoxicated condition, the society was not liable without regard to whether insured had acquired a fixed habit of intoxication. Ury v. Modern Woodmen of America, 127 N. W. 665, 666, 149 Iowa, 706.

The expression "intemperate use of intoxicating liquors," in a contract of insurance, means such indulgence in intoxicants as tends to impair the health of the insured or renders the risk more hazardous. O'Connor v. Modern Woodmen of America, 124 N. W. 454, 456, 110 Minn. 18, 25 L. E. A. (N. S.) 1244.

INTEND

See Manifestly Intend; Shall be Intended to be or Shall be Carried.

Laws 1905, p. 154, c. 71, requires retail liquor dealers to obtain a license from the county treasurer, but provides that he shall not issue a license until directed so to do by the board of county commissioners on a petition signed by a specified number of freeholders residing in the city, etc., in which any person, seeking such a license, "intends to engage in business." Code Civ. Proc. § 3135, provides that, in the construction of a statute, the intention of the Legislature is to be pursued, if possible; that, when general and particular provisions are inconsistent, the latter is paramount; and that a particular intent controls a general one inconsistent therewith. Held, that one engaged in the liquor business, under a license, on the expiration thereof is not entitled to receive another license from the treasurer until there has been a petition to the county commissioners and favorable action thereon by them. As to appellant's contention that the words "intends to engage in business," used in section 1 of chapter 71, cannot refer to one already holding a liquor license, and that therefore the statute does not require the possessor of a liquor license to again apply for a license at the expiration of his old license, the court said: "We think the general intention of the Legislature is manifest, and that the loose use of the word 'intends' in the recital, upon which appellant founds his contention, cannot be held to be an expression of a particular intent which will control and in great measure render the act nugatory. Literally interpreted, the word 'intends' conveys the idea contended for by appellant; but we think it apparent that its use was the result of hasty and careless work on the part of the person who drew the bill, rather than that it is the expression of a well-defined intention on the part of the Legislature to limit its operation." State ex rel. Bray v. Settles, 87 Pac. 445, 446, 34 Mont. 448.

"The words 'intends to appeal,' 'will appeal,' or 'give notice of their application to appeal' are equivalent to and have the same effect as the more direct phraseology of the statute ('appeals from the judgment'); that is, each will effect an appeal. Of course, if the phrases above cited are sufficient to effect the appeal, the words 'has appealed' will likewise perform the same office." James v. James, 77 Pac. 1082, 1083, 35 Wash. 655 (citing Ranahan v. Gibbons, 62 Pac. 773, 23 Wash. 255; In re Murphy's Estate, 66 Pac. 424, 26 Wash. 222; Brown v. Calloway, 75 Pac. 630, 34 Wash. 175).

INTENDED

As applied to the law of homicide, the word "intended" means "designed." Keigans v. State, 41 South. 886, 890, 52 Fla. 57.

The word "intended," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60b, 30 Stat. 562, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 13, 32 Stat. 799, providing that if a bankrupt shall have given a preference, and the person receiving it, or to be benefited thereby, shall have had reasonable cause to believe that it was "intended" thereby to give a preference, it shall be voidable by the trustee, and he may recover the property or its value from such person, is used in its ordinary sense and means an actual intention; and it does not necessarily follow that such person had reasonable cause to believe the bankrupt's insolvency, or that he had reasonable cause to believe that a preference was intended. Lynch v. Bronson, 69 Atl. 538, 541, 80 Conn. 566 (citing In re Andrews, 144 Fed. 922, 75 C. C. A. 562; First Nat. Bank of Louisville, Ky., v. Holt, 155 Fed. 100, 84 C. C. A. 16).

INTENDED REGULATION

The "intended regulation" of a street, for which Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, c. 466) §§ 979, 980, authorize commissioners of estimate in a street opening proceeding to make awards of damages, is one to be made in connection with the opening, and does not apply to a change of grade wholly independent of the street opening proceedings, whether or not the actual grading is completed before commencement of such proceedings. In re Thirteenth Ave. in the Borough of Queens, City of New York, 187 N. Y. Supp. 7, 8, 77 Misc. Rep. 479.

INTENSELY ALKALINE NATURE

An enamel of an "intensely alkaline nature" is any enamel which will give a strongly alkaline reaction. National Enameling & Stamping Co. v. New England Enameling Co., 151 Fed. 19, 28, 80 C. C. A. 485.

INTENT

See Criminal Intent; Felonious Intent; Legal Intent; With Intent of Bringing Action; With Intent to Intimidate; With Like Intent.

As element in preference, see Preference. As element of assault, see Assault and Battery.

As element of robbery, see Robbery.

Signature requiring, see Sign—Signature.

"Intent" is the state of mind which precedes or accompanies an act; volition. Crosby v. Wells, 67 Atl. 295, 302, 73 N. J. Law, 790 (citing Wig. Ev. §§ 242, 300):-

"Intent" is a mental attitude made known by acts. People v. Haxar, 108 N. W. 90, 91, 144 Mich. 575.

"The 'intent' of a person cannot be proven by direct and positive evidence. It is a question of fact to be proven, like any other fact, by acts, conduct, and circumstances." People v. Johnson, 63 Pac. 842, 131 Cal. 511, 514.

In murder "intent" is the purpose to make effective the means adopted for the commission of the crime. State v. Hyde (Mo.) 136 S. W. 316, 322.

The word "intent," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 4068, providing that "in every crime or public offense there must exist a joint operation of act and intent," indicates an intent to commit an act or to do something which the law denounces as a crime, regardless of the motives the accused may have had for doing the wrong. "The intent required is, not to break the law, but to do the wrong." "If a man intends to do what he is conscious the law, which every one is conclusively presumed to know, forbids, there need be no other evil intent." Skeen v. Craig, 86 Pac. 487, 490, 31 Utah, 20 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, 300, 343).

"Intent" imports contemplation and more or less expectation of the intended end as the result of the act alleged." An indictment, in a prosecution for attempt to kill, under Pub. St. c. 202, § 32, which alleges, in substance, "that defendant feloniously, willfully, and maliciously attempted to murder L. by placing a quantity of deadly poison, known as 'Rough on Rats,' known to the defendant to be deadly poison, upon, and causing it to adhere to, the under side of the crossbar of a cup of L.'s, known as a 'moustache cup,' the cup being then empty, with the intent that L. should thereafter use the cup for drinking while the poison was there, and should swallow the poison," sufficiently sets forth a criminal "intent." Commonwealth v. Kennedy, 48 N. E. 770, 771, 170 Mass. 18.

Implied from circumstances

An "intent" to murder, while an essential ingredient of the offense of assault with intent to murder, being entirely a mental operation, may be disclosed by the words of the assailant, or may be inferred from his acts and conduct. State v. De Paolo (Del.) 84 Atl. 213, 214.

On a trial for assault with intent to murder, the murderous "intent" may be proved, either by direct evidence or by acts and conduct from which it may be reasonably inferred, such as the voluntary use of a deadly weapon in an unlawful manner, or under circumstances directly tending to great bodily harm, or to imperil human life. State v. Jackson (Del.) 82 Atl. 824, 825.

The "intent" with which an act is done denotes a state of mind, and can be proved only from expressions or conduct, or both, considered in the light of the given circumstances. State v. Johnson, 65 S. E. 1023, 1024, 84 S. C. 45.

"There can be no dedication unless there is present the intent to appropriate the land to the public use. If the intent to dedicate is absent, then there is no valid dedication. The 'intent' which the law means, however, is not a secret one, but is that which is expressed in the visible conduct and open acts of the owner. The public, as well as individuals, have a right to rely on the conduct of the owner as indicative of his intent. If the acts are such as would fairly and reasonably lead an ordinarily prudent man to infer an intent to dedicate, and they are so received and acted upon by the public, the owner cannot, after acceptance by the public, recall the appropriation. Regard is to be had to the character and effect of the open and known acts, and not to any latent or hidden purpose. If the open and known acts are of such a character as to induce the belief that the owner intended to dedicate the way to public use, and the public and individuals act upon such conduct, proceed as if there had been in fact a dedication, and acquire rights which would be lost if the owner were allowed to reclaim the land, then the law will not permit him to assert that there was no intent to dedicate, no matter what may have been his secret intent." Raymond v. City of Wichita, 79 Pac. 323, 326, 327, 70 Kan. 523 (quoting and adopting definition in Elliott, Roads and Streets, § 124).

The most important element to be established tending to prove that a chattel has been merged into a fixture is the intent with which the party provided its use, and such intent is the intent which the law deduces from all the circumstances of the annexation. Roderick v. Sanborn, 76 Atl. 263, 264, 106 Me. 159, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1189, 20 Ann. Cas. 469.

Attempt distinguished

The word "attempt" is more comprehensive than the word "intent," implying both the purpose and an actual effort to carry that purpose into execution. In crimes which require force as an element in their commission, there is no substantial difference between an assault with intent and an assault with attempt to perpetrate the offense. Taylor v. State, 55 S. E. 474, 475, 128 Ga. 557 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Bishop, New Cr. Proc. [4th Ed.] § 80).

The only distinction between an "intent" and an "attempt" to do a thing is that the former implies the purpose only, while the latter implies both the purpose and an actual effort' to carry that purpose into execution; and since the word "attempt" embraces the full meaning of "intent," with something more, it is not impossible that the courts may hold it to be an admissible substitute in an indictment. Smith v. State, 100 N. W. 806, 807, 72 Neb. 345 (citing 2 Blah. Cr. Proc. § 80; Atkinson v. State, 30 S. W. 1064, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 424; Rummells v. State, 30 S. W. 1065, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 431).

Motive and ultimate object distinguished

"Intent," in its legal sense, is quite distinct from motive. It is defined as the purpose to use a particular means to effect a certain result. Motive is the reason which leads the mind to desire that result. Baker v. State, 97 N. W. 566, 570, 120 Wis. 135.

The "intent" essential to constitute perjury must be distinguished from "motive" and from "ultimate object." In the popular mind, intent and motive are not infrequently regarded as one and the same thing, but in law there is a clear distinction between them. "Motive" is the moving power which impels to action for a definite result. "Intent" is the purpose to use a particular means to effect such result; a good motive does not prevent an act from being a crime. People ex rel. Hegeman v. Corrigan, 87 N. E. 792, 798, 195 N. Y. 1 (citing People v. Molineux, 61 N. E. 286, 168 N. Y. 264, 62 L. R. A. 198; 1 Burrill, Law Dict.; Clark, Cr. Law, § 14).

Premeditation implied

Under Rev. St. 2380, providing that the unlawful killing of a human being, when perpetrated from a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed or any human being, shall be murder in the first degree, the word "design" means "intent," and both words imply premeditation. Olds v. State, 33 South. 296, 299, 44 Fla. 452 (citing Ernest v. State, 20 Fla. 383).

INTENT TO INJURE OR DEFRAUD

In discussing the motive and "intent" for a conspiracy to do an act not unlawful, the court said: "An 'intent to injure' in strictness means more than an intent to harm. It connotes an intent to do wrongful harm. 'Maliciously' in like manner, means and implies an intention to do an act which is wrongful, to the detriment of another. The term 'wrongful' imports in its term the infringement of some right." State v. Van Pelt, 49 S. E. 177, 187, 136 N. C. 633, 68 L. R. A. 760, 1 Ann. Cas. 495.

If a man knows that the act he is about to commit will naturally or necessarily have the effect of injuring or defrauding another, and he voluntarily and intentionally does the act, he is chargeable, in law, with the intent to injure or defraud. It is not necessary that his object or purpose was primarily to injure or defraud. It may have been to benefit himself. United States v. Breeze, 131 Fed. 915, 922.

INTENT TO KILL

See Assault with Intent to Kill; Shooting with Intent to Kill.

"Intent to kill" means just what the ordinary signification of the words suggest, whether it be described by the words "actual intent," "design," or "premeditated design" makes no difference. When we leave entirely out of view those subtleties often indulged in, in discoursing on the meaning of "premeditated design," and giving words the meaning ordinarily attributed to them, the person who effects the death of another by design does so intentionally, and the design or intent is understood to necessarily precede the act by which the purpose is accomplished. In other words, the intent is understood to be premeditated or thought of, because without mental action the purpose could not be formed. So, when it is said that the slayer intentionally caused the death of his victim, it is at the same time said that he caused it by design or premeditated design. That the word "premeditated," as used in the statutes on the subject of felonious homicide, has no other significance than that the design must precede the homicidal act, is indicated from the evident purpose of the statute makers to give the same meaning to the term "premeditated design" where used inclusively in murder in the first degree, as to "design" where that word alone is used exclusively in murder in the third, and manslaughter in the first, second, and third, degrees. Cupps v. State, 98 N. W. 546, 549, 120 Wis. 504, 102 Am. St. Rep. 996.

INTENTION

See Floating Intention; Indeterminate Intention.

As affecting residence, see Residence. Change of intention, see Change.

"Intention" or motive is an operation of the mind, a mental act, which may take place, but remain confined in the mind which conceived it, and never be susceptible of proof unless it is evidenced by some act or declaration of the party which betrays it. We say a man's motives must be judged by his acts; the act therefore becomes the evidence or proof upon which we convict of the intention. In pleading the intention, it may be alleged that a person had a certain intent without pleading a conclusion. Willcox v. Davis, 4 Minn. 197, 200 (Gil. 139, 142).

INTENTIONAL

As willful, see Willful—Willfully.

The word "intentional" is defined in Webster's International Dictionary, as "done by intention or design; intended; designed; as the act was intentional, not accidental." In an action against a carrier for recovery of actual and exemplary damages for the act of one of its conductors in kicking plaintiff, a messenger boy, 13 years old, over the heart, as he was attempting to board the car as a passenger, an instruction that, in assessing plaintiff's damages, the jury were not limited to the physical injury inflicted, but in addition to this, if they found the tort was malicious, they might allow punitive damages, and defining the term "malice" to mean "the intentional doing of a wrongful act without justice, cause, or excuse, though without spite or ill will" sufficiently defined what was necessary to authorize exemplary damages. McNamara v. St. Louis Transit Co., 81 S. W. 880, 882, 182 Mo. 676, 66 L. R. A. 486.

The word "intentional," when used in connection with the doing of a wrongful act, signifies not only that the party intended to do the particular act, but to do it knowing at the time that it was wrongful. Ickenroth v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 162, 167, 102 Mo. App. 597 (citing Trauerman v. Lip-pincott, 39 Mo. App. 478).

"The words 'negligence' and 'intentional' are contradictory," so that an allegation that defendant violently, insolently, and willfully assaulted and beat plaintiff is not supported by proof of a battery resulting from negligence. Gibeline v. Smith, 80 S. W. 961, 963, 106 Mo. App. 545 (citing Raming v. Met. St. Ry. Co., 57 S. W. 268, 157 Mo. 507, 508).

The "intentional" doing of a wrongful act is not necessarily a malicious act. Every voluntary act of a human being is intentional, but, generally speaking, a voluntary act becomes willful in law only when it involves some degree of conscious wrong or evil purpose on the part of the actor, or at least an inexcusable carelessness or recklessness on his part, whether the act be right or wrong. State v. Willing, 105 N. W. 355, 356, 129 Iowa, 72.

A count is demurrable which in its charging part alleges that the act was recklessly "and" wantonly done while the specification shows that it was recklessly "or" wantonly done; "reckless" not being equivalent to "wanton" or "intentional." Merrill v. Sheffield Co., 53 South. 219, 222, 169 Ala. 242.

"Culpable negligence" does not necessarily result from an "intentional" act. If the killing is caused by culpable negligence, then it is not necessarily "intentional." Hence a requested instruction that culpable negligence is not merely an omission to use ordinary caution and care, but must be the result of intentional act, or acts which are done without the exercise of ordinary care or caution, was erroneous, because requiring it to be the result of "intentional" acts. Kent v. State, 43 South. 773, 774, 53 Fla. 51 (citing State v. Lockwood, 24 S. W. 1015, 119 Mo. 463).

"Intentionally" is often used as synonymous with 'knowingly,' and when so used, an act is 'intentional' if the person who does it is conscious of what he is doing and its probable consequences, without regard to the motive which induced him to act. In this sense 'intentional' is an apt word to describe the injury which results when the person whose act causes it is conscious of the injured person's situation and of his duty in the matter in time to prevent an accident, but is not conscious of an intent to injure any one." Brown v. Boston & M. R. R., 64 Atl. 194, 198, 78 N. H. 568.

INTENTIONAL INJURY

As willful injury, see Willful—Willfully.

Loss of an eye from a blow struck by another, with the intent to injure, but not to put out an eye, is within the clause of an accident policy exempting the insurer from liability for "intentional injuries." Travelers' Protective Ass'n of America v. Weil, 91 S. W. 886, 887, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 629.

An injury from being struck by a brick in a difficulty in which the person struck was without fault and the other party the aggressor is within the clause of a policy exempting the insurer from liability for "intentional injuries." Washington v. Union Casualty & Surety Co., 91 S. W. 988, 115 Mo. App. 627.

Where it was alleged that insured had been placed under arrest by officers of the law and disarmed, and while so in custody such officers negligently and without lawful excuse permitted certain parties to assault and shoot deceased, and thereby cause his death, such death was caused by "intentional injuries inflicted by another person," within a provision of an accident policy held by deceased exempting the company from liability for such injuries. Jarnagain v. Travelers' Protective Ass'n of America, 133

Fed. 892, 893, 66 C. C. A. 622, 68 L. R. A. 499.

In an accident policy, a provision that "in case of injuries * * * 'intentionally' inflicted on himself by the insured, or inflicted on himself or received by him while insane," the company shall not be liable exempts the insurer from liability for injuries to insured while insane, whether intentionally inflicted or not. Blunt v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 78 Pac. 729, 730, 145 Cal. 268, 67 L. R. A. 793, 104 Am. St. Rep. 34.

INTENTIONAL NEGLIGENCE

The words "intentional negligence," as used in a count in an action for injuries to a servant, characterizing the conduct of the engineer as wanton or "intentional negligence," is the equivalent of wantonness, willfulness, and sufficiently alleged that the act was done intentionally. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Williams, 37 South. 255, 258, 140 Ala. 230.

INTENTIONAL WRONG

Negligence distinguished, see Negligence.

INTENTIONALLY

"Intentionally" is defined in Webster's International Dictionary to mean "in an intentional manner; with intention; by design or purpose." In an action against a carrier for recovery of actual and exemplary damages for the act of one of its conductors in kicking plaintiff, a messenger boy, 13 years old, over the heart as he was attempting to board the car as a passenger, an instruction that, in assessing plaintiff's damages, the jury were not limited to the physical injury inflicted, but in addition to this, if they found the tort was malicious, they might allow punitive damages, and defining the term "malice" to mean "the intentional doing of a wrongful act without justice, cause, or excuse, though without spite or ill will," sufficiently defined what was necessary to authorize exemplary damages. McNamara v. St. Louis Translt Co., 81 S. W. 880, 882, 182 Mo. 676, 66 L. R. A. 486.

Kirby's Dig. § 1899, makes it a misdemeanor to willfully and intentionally destroy, injure, or obstruct any telegraph or telephone line and imposes a penalty of double damages. Held, that the words, "willfully" and "intentionally," implied an evil intent without justifiable excuse so that the destruction of a portion of a telephone line by a railway company which is mistakenly believed was an unlawful obstruction of its right of way, and was also a hindrance and a menace to the safe operation of the railway, was not an act for which the owners of the telephone line were entitled to recover double damages under such section. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Batesville & W. Telephone Co., 97 S. W. 660, 662, 80 Ark. 499.

Where an officer employed by the commissioner of forestry, under Act March 11, 1903 (P. L. 24), is indicted for willfully and maliciously killing a dog, and the evidence shows that the defendant had heard of the character of the dog as a deer dog, and that the dog was killed three miles from his master's residence, and when not in company with his master, it is error for the trial court to place upon the defendant the burden of disproving malice. The defendant in such a case is entitled to start with the presumption in his favor that his act was legal rather than illegal. Commonwealth v. Frederick, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 228, 230.

Under Laws 1901, p. 550, c. 379, § 5, providing that any member of a board of review of any assessment district, who shall intentionally omit or agree to omit from assessment any property liable to taxation in such assessment district or shall otherwise intentionally violate or fail to perform any duty imposed upon him by law, shall forfeit a certain sum of money, the word "intentionally" will be given its usual meaning when used in penal laws as importing willfulness, evil intent, or unlawful purpose. State v. Zillmann, 98 N. W. 543, 545, 121 Wis. 472.

As knowingly

"Intentionally" is often used as synonymous with 'knowingly,' and when so used an act is 'intentional' if the person who does it is conscious of what he is doing and its probable consequences, without regard to the motive which induced him to act. In this sense 'intentional' is an apt word to describe the injury which results when the person whose act causes it is conscious of the injured person's situation and of his duty in the matter in time to prevent an accident, but is not conscious of an intent to injure any one." Brown v. Boston & M. R. R., 64 Atl. 194, 198, 73 N. H. 568.

The word "intentionally," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 2572, providing that any miner who shall "intentionally" injure any shaft or enter any place of the mine against caution or disobey any order given in carrying out the provisions of the statute shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, only requires that the act constituting the alleged violation of the section shall be knowingly done. Koppala & Lampe v. State, 89 Pac. 576, 577, 15 Wyo. 398.

INTERCOURSE

See Habitual Carnal Intercourse; Sexual Intercourse; Unlawful Intercourse.

"Intercourse" means "a commingling; intimate connections or dealings between persons or nations, as in common affairs and civilities, in correspondence or trade; communication; commerce; especially interchange of thought and feeling; association; communion." Webster's Dict. In a prose tution for rape under Pen. Code, § 261, par. 1, a conviction cannot be had on proof alone that defendant had intercourse with the prosecutrix. People v. Howard, 76 Pac. 1116, 1117, 143 Cal. 316.

"Intercourse," as used to represent commerce between the states, which Congress has constitutional power to regulate, is not limited to trade in commodities but includes as well the transmission of intelligence, which may not therefore be obstructed or unnecessarily incumbered by state legislation. International Text-Book Co. v. Pigg, 30 Sup. Ct. 481, 484, 217 U. S. 91, 54 L. Ed. 678, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 498, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103.

As sexual intercourse

Evidence that defendant solicited prosecutrix to enter a building with him after dusk, told her his desire, said her objection did not make any difference, and had "intercourse" with her, held sufficient to warrant a finding of penetration; the term "intercourse," under such circumstances, meaning sexual intercourse. State v. Bally, 137 N. W. 352, 353, 29 S. D. 588.

The words "rents, issues, and profits" are commonly connected together with reference to the income of real estate. What are called "rents, issues, and profits" in real estate are the same as what are naturally called "interest and income" when referring to personal property. A testator's use of the word "income" in addition to the word "interest" indicates that he was thinking of productive personal property other than the ordinary interest-producing investments. Oram v. Peirce, 67 Atl. 1053, 1056, 73 N. J. Eq. 391.

In a drainage act, a provision that, in fixing the boundaries, the board should determine them with a view to promoting the "interest of said drainage district," the phrase quoted meant the public interest of this district and not the private advantage to be gained by the property owners. State ex rel. Harris v. Hanson, 115 N. W. 294, 297, 80 Neb. 724.

An inquiry by the Post Office Department for the purpose of determining whether a corporation has been guilty of a fraudulent use of the mails, and whether a fraud order shall be issued against it, is a proceeding in which the United States is "interested" within Rev. St. U. S. § 1782, prohibiting a United States senator from receiving compensation for services rendered by him to any person or any bureau of the United States in relation to a matter in which the United States is interested. United States v. Burton, 131 Fed. 552, 553, 557.

Within the meaning of Rev. St. § 1782, making it a misdemeanor for a United States Senator to receive or agree to receive compensation for services rendered before any department in relation to any proceeding in which the United States is so interested, the word "interested" is not restricted to cases in which the United States has a direct moneyed or pecuniary interest, and a fraud order inquiry pending before the Post Office Department is a proceeding in which the United States has an interest. Burton v. United States, 26 Sup. Ct. 688, 695, 202 U. S. 344, 50 L. Ed. 1057, 6 Ann. Cas. 362.

In assignment

The court can remove, under the act in relation to the Supreme Court, a voluntary assignee for the benefit of creditors, upon petition, for cause shown, only in case the application for his removal be made by a majority in interest of the creditors "interested in the assignment." Held that, in ascertaining such majority, lien creditors and mortgagees, who are fully secured outside the assignment, are not to be reckoned as "interested" in the sense of the statute in it. In re Durfee, 4 R. I. 401, 407.

In business

An owner of property who leases it for a saloon for a specified sum per month, and a part of the profits of the business, is not "interested" in the business within Acts 31st Leg. c. 17, § 9, requiring each person desiring a liquor license to state his name in the application, and to swear that no other person is interested in the business; the word "interested" meaning an interest in the business itself. Doyle v. Scott (Tex.) 184 S. W. 829, 830.

In corporation or corporate stock

A contract between an inventor and capitalists, who had each contributed $250 for the perfection of a machine, provided that the capitalists were to contribute a certain amount of money, and that the inventor, in lieu of money, was to give his process and time to the enterprise, and that, when it was under way, a corporation should be formed to manufacture the desired product. It further provided that the "interest" of the inventor in the capital stock of the corporation should be three-fifths, and "the interest" of the capitalists two-fifths, and that the capital stock should be distributed accordingly. The capitalists were entitled to two-fifths of the capital stock of the corporation after it was formed. The privilege of going into the market and buying stock of the concern at market rates would not seem to be an "interest" which satisfies either the meaning of the agreement or the equities of the parties, and such purchase would scarcely be a distribution of stock. Hunter Smokeless Powder Co. v. Hunter, 91 N. Y. Supp. 620, 623, 100 App. Div. 191.

In a corporation which was involved financially, plaintiffs owned four-sevenths of the capital stock, and defendants three-sevenths. To give defendants a controlling interest, the parties contracted that plaintiffs should transfer their interest to defendants, with the exception of a specified number of shares; that defendants were to have two years in which to comply with the contract, and, should they fail to so comply, the "interest" of plaintiff should reinvest in them in the same proportion as they held and were possessed of at the signing of the agreement. Held that, upon default of defendants in view of the fact that the word "reinvest" implies a previous divestiture and the use of the phrase "in the same proportion and ratio as they were held and possessed of," whereas plaintiffs never had possession of the corporate property as such, plaintiffs were entitled to recover their interest conveyed in the "stock" only, and not in the "property" of the corporation. Tevis v. Ryan, 108 Pac. 461, 464, 13 Ariz. 120.

In claim upon United States

An agreement to pay counsel a sum equal to 33½ per cent. of the amount which may be allowed on a claim was not within Rev. St. U. S. § 3477, providing that all transfers and assignments made of any claim upon the United States, or any part or share thereof, or "interest" therein, whether absolute or conditional, shall be absolutely null and void unless made after the claim is allowed. Knut v. Nutt, 35 South. 686, 688, 83 Miss. 365, 102 Am. St. Rep. 452.

Engage distinguished

The term "interested," as used with reference to a person's connection with a business, is not synonymous with "engaged," since a person might have a financial interest in a business in the operation of which he took no part; thus, where insured was financially interested in a saloon business with his son, but took no part in the operation of the business, he was "interested" but not "engaged" therein, within a provision of an insurance company's laws providing that no beneficial member of the order should be engaged as principal, agent, or servant in the manufacture or sale of liquors as a beverage. Graves v. Knights of Maccabees of the World, 112 N. Y. Supp. 948, 949, 128 App. Div. 660.

In estate or fund

Civ. Code Prac. § 439, provides that after an execution and return of nulla bona plaintiff may institute an equitable action for the discovery of any money, etc., to which defendant is entitled, and persons indebted to defendant, or holding money in which he has an interest, may be made parties defendant in such action. H. attached money due from defendant to plaintiff, and the attachment had been sustained, when defendant bank, a creditor of H., attached the money in the hands of defendant which was due H., the former being served with notice of the attachment. Held, that after his attachment thereof H. had an interest in the money in the hands of defendant within the statute, service of the attachment upon defendant being sufficient notice of the attachment of the fund due H. under his attachment, and it was immaterial that plaintiff was not made a party, and hence the purchase thereafter by defendant of the judgment from H. was at his peril, and did not defeat the claim of the bank to the fund which it had attached in his hands. Brackett's Adm'r v. Boreing's Adm'r, 110 S. W. 276, 279, 181 Ky. 751.

In estate of bankrupt

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 39, subd. 3, provides that the referee shall furnish such information concerning estates in process of administration as may be requested by parties in interest. Section 47, subd. 5, provides that the trustee shall furnish such information as may be requested by parties in interest; and section 49 declares that the accounts and papers of the trustee shall be open to inspection of officers and parties in interest. Held, that a creditor of a bankrupt was a "party in interest" within such sections, even though he had not formally proved his claim. In re Samuelsohn, 174 Fed. 911, 912.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 32, provides that in the event petitions are filed against the same person in different courts of bankruptcy, each having jurisdiction, the cases shall be transferred to and be consolidated by the one of such courts which can proceed with the same for the greatest convenience of "parties in interest"; and General Order 6 provides that the court retaining jurisdiction, in case several petitions are filed in different courts, if satisfied that it is for the greatest convenience of "parties in interest" that another of said courts should proceed with the cases, shall order them to be transferred to that court. Held, that the term "parties in interest" was not limited to unsecured creditors of the bankrupt, but included all persons whose pecuniary interests were directly affected by the bankruptcy proceedings. In re United Button Co., 137 Fed. 668, 672.

"An application for a discharge" in bankruptcy "may be opposed by any of the 'parties in interest.'" To entitle a party to oppose a discharge, he must have a pecuniary interest in the matter, and that interest must be satisfactorily shown. A person has been held to have an interest sufficient to entitle him to oppose a discharge, where his claim was contingent and unliquidated so as not to be capable of being proved as a debt, or where he held an equitable claim only against the estate, or where his claim was being contested, although his claim has not been proved, or is no longer provable. But, where a debt is barred by a lapse of time, the creditor has no interest, and therefore cannot oppose the discharge." In re Levey, 133 Fed. 572, 574 (quoting and adopting definition in Loveland, Law & Proceed. Bankr. pp. 738, 739).

The term "party in interest," as used in the rule that objections to discharge in bankruptcy may be made by any "party in interest," includes all creditors who have had their claims allowed and who have participated in the distribution of the insufficient assets. Talcott v. Friend, 179 Fed. 676, 681, 103 C. C. A. 80.

One who has a suit pending against a bankrupt for the recovery of a debt which is contested is a party in interest, and entitled to contest the bankrupt's right to a discharge, although his claim has not been proved in the bankruptcy proceedings. In re Conroy, 134 Fed. 764, 766.

Specifications in opposition to a bankrupt's application for discharge, reciting that E., being interested as a creditor in the estate of the bankrupt, opposed the granting of the bankrupt's discharge, were sufficient, although bankruptcy form 58, promulgated by the Supreme Court, contains a recital that the person opposing such discharge is a "party interested" in the estate of the bankrupt. In re Nathanson, 155 Fed. 645, 649.

The phrase "party in interest," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 14b, providing that objections to an application for a discharge may be filed by a "party in interest," refers not only to creditors but also includes the trustee in bankruptcy, so long as the estate is unsettled, and he is claiming and seeking to recover property from the bankrupt, alleged to belong to the estate. In re Harr, 143 Fed. 421, 423.

An averment in a petition for revocation of the discharge of a bankrupt merely that petitioners are "creditors" of the bankrupt is insufficient to show that they are "parties in interest," entitled to object to the discharge or to file such petition under section 14b, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487. The petition must show that they had provable debts which were affected by the discharge. In re Chandler, 138 Fed. 637, 638.

A trustee in bankruptcy, so long as the estate is unsettled, and so long as he is claiming and seeking to recover property or money from the bankrupt alleged to belong to the estate and to be wrongfully withheld or concealed, is a "party in interest," within the meaning of section 14b, as amended Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, and may file and prosecute specifications of objection to the bankrupt's discharge. In re Levey, 133 Fed. 572, 573.

The term "parties in interest," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57d, which permits parties in interest to object to the allowance of claims against the estate, applies only to those who have an interest in the res which is to be administered and distributed in the proceeding, and does not include those who are merely debtors or alleged debtors of the bankrupt. In re Sully, 152 Fed. 619, 620, 81 C. C. A. 609.

An unsecured creditor of a bankrupt is a "party in interest," within the meaning of section 57d, and may, as well as the trustee, object to the allowance of a claim of another unsecured creditor. In re Hatem, 161 Fed. 895, 896.

A creditor of a bankrupt, who has assigned his claim, receiving a consideration therefor, is no longer a "party in interest" who can maintain a petition to set aside the confirmation of a composition subsequently entered, although the assignment was obtained through the fraud and misrepresentation of the trustee and bankrupt, whatever may be his right to proceed against them. In re Allen B. Wrisley Co., 133 Fed. 388, 389, 66 C. C. A. 450.

In estate of decedent

Testator's only heir when the will was admitted to probate was a "person interested" entitled to file a bill to contest the will under Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 148, § 7, providing that any person interested may within one year after probate file a bill to contest the will. Selden v. Illinois Trust & Savings Bank, 87 N. E. 860, 862, 239 Ill. 67, 130 Am. St. Rep. 180.

Where contestant's husband was the sole heir of testatrix, and contestant was his sole heir, as well as his sole devisee and legatee, she was a "party interested," and entitled to contest the probate of testatrix's will. Rainey v. Ridgway, 41 South. 632, 148 Ala. 524 (citing Lockard v. Stephenson, 24 South. 996, 120 Ala. 641, 74 Am. St. Rep. 63; Donald v. Portis, 42 Ala. 29).

Where a decedent left him surviving a daughter, who died before his will was offered for probate, a son of the daughter was "interested in the estate" so as to entitle him to contest the probate. Henry v. Wert, 42 South. 405, 406, 149 Ala. 874.

Purchasers from an heir of a testator may resist the probating of his will; they being "persons interested," within Ky. St. 1903, §§ 4856-4861, making such persons proper or necessary parties to probate proceedings. Foster v. Jordan, 113 S. W. 490, 491, 130 Ky. 445.

Creditors of an heir of decedent who claim that the probate of a will is barred by the statute of limitations are "persons in terested," within the meaning of Ky. St. 1903, §§ 4856, 4857, 4860, providing that a person offering a will for probate may obtain from the clerk of the court process directed to the proper officer requiring him to summon any person interested in such probate to appear at the next term of the court, that the court itself may cause persons interested in the probate to be summoned, or that it may proceed to probate and admit the will to record or reject the same without summoning any party, and are entitled to contest the probate of the will. Mullins v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. (Ky.) 100 S. W. 256, 258 (citing Brooks v. Paine [Ky.] 90 S. W. 600).

A "person interested in the estate of the decedent," under Code Civ. Proc. § 2647, is a person who may maintain proceedings for the revocation of the probate of a will once duly admitted to probate. Where the half-sister of a decedent would be entitled to a distributive share in his estate in the absence of a will, she is "interested in the estate," within Code Civ. Proc. § 2643, relating to letters of administration with the will annexed, though she takes nothing under the will. In re Brown's Estate, 113 N. Y. Supp. 937, 938, 60 Misc. Rep. 628.

The "interest" referred to in Rev. St. 1909, § 555, providing that a will contest may be instituted by any person interested in the probate of the will, must be a financial interest in the estate, and one which will be benefited by the setting aside of the will, and, where the petition for a contest shows that if the will is set aside contestant will get nothing, he is not a party in interest. State ex rel. Damon v. McQuillin, 152 S. W. 341, 346, 246 Mo. 674.

One entitled to property passing under the residuary clause of a will altered by lines drawn through it, if admitted to probate in its original condition, has such an "interest in the estate" as authorizes him to file a caveat for the revocation of the probate of the will, as altered, and for the granting of a probate of the will in its original condition. Home of the Aged of the Methodist Episcopal Church v. Bantz, 66 Atl. 701, 703, 106 Md. 147.

The public administrator has no "interest in the estate" of a deceased person which entitles him to appear and object to the probate of the will, under a statute providing that any person interested in the estate may contest such proceedings. State ex rel. Eakins v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist., 85 Pac. 1022, 1023, 34 Mont. 226.

The possibility that all of the heirs of a decedent or some one of them may fail to appear and claim the property, so that thereupon the Attorney General may proceed under Code Civ. Proc. § 1269, to declare an escheat, and that no heir may then or within 20 years after judgment appear to claim the property or its proceeds, so that absolute ownership will vest in the state under sections 1271, 1272, does not give the state an "interest in the estate of the decedent," within the meaning of section 1307, authorizing any person interested in an estate to appear in probate proceedings and contest the will. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 82 Pac. 672, 674, 148 Cal. 55, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 643.

A brother of an intestate, who resided in a foreign country and was not cited or made a party to the settlement, can institute proceedings against the administrator for a new accounting, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2727, providing that a judicial settlement of an administrator's accounts may be compelled by the next of kin or any party in interest after the expiration of one year from the issuance of letters of administration, since section 2514, subd. 11, declares that the expression "person interested," where it is used in connection with an estate or a fund, including every person entitled either absolutely or contingently to share in the estate for the proceeds thereof. In re Killan's Estate, 65 N. E. 561, 565, 172 N. Y. 547, 68 L. R. A. 95.

Where the superior court of a county appointing a public administrator, as administrator of the estate of a nonresident, was without power to make such appointment, the administrator so appointed was not a "person interested," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1374, entitled to oppose the appointment of an administrator in the county in which jurisdiction had attached. In re Davis' Estate, 87 Pac. 17, 18, 149 Cal. 485.

An attorney employed by an executor or administrator to assist him in the execution of his trust is not the attorney of the estate, but simply of the executor or administrator who selects and employs him, and allowances for his services must be made to the executor or administrator and not to the attorney, and he has no claim that he can enforce against the estate by action or in any other manner; nor is he a "person interested in the estate," within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1635, permitting such parties to file exceptions to accounts of executors or administrators, though he has agreed with the executor or administrator that he will accept for his services such sum as the probate court may allow. In re Kruger's Estate, 76 Pac. 891, 892, 143 Cal. 141.

Where the superior court appointing a public administrator as administrator of the estate of a nonresident had no power to appoint him because proceedings had been previously instituted for the appointment of another in another county, the administrator so illegally appointed was not a "person interested," within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1374, and as such entitled to oppose the appointment of an administrator in the county in which jurisdiction had attached.

In re Davis' Estate, 87 Pac. 17, 18, 149 Cal. 485.

A public administrator and nonresident heirs are "persons interested," within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1374, providing that any person interested may contest a petition for letters of administrator on the ground of incompetency of the applicant, and they may contest not only in the lower court but on appeal. It is not necessary that the contestant shall be competent to assert the right to administer himself nor be entitled to nominate the appointee in order to contest. If the facts constituting the incompetency of the applicant were not properly or sufficiently stated, this would not be a ground for the dismissal of the appeal. An appeal lies from an order granting or denying letters of administration, and no reason is given why the right of the person interested to contest should cease upon the adverse order being made by the superior court. In re Grave's Estate, 96 Pac. 792, 793, 8 Cal. App. 254.

A legatee is a "person interested," within Orphans' Court Act (P. L. 1898, p. 757) § 116, authorizing any person interested in an estate on failure to make settlement, to cite the executor, or administrator to make such settlement in case of default. In re Hasten-denbeck, 75 Atl. 823, 73 N. J. Eq. 337.

A receiver in supplementary proceedings against one having either a vested or a contingent interest in an estate, his interest being dependent upon the validity of trusts created by the will, is a "person interested" in the estate within Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2514 (11), 2685, so that he may ask for the removal of the executors for wasting the estate, though section 2463 prevents the seizure of the trust estate. In re Kennedy's Estate, 128 N. Y. Supp. 626, 627, 143 App. Div. 839.

Under Code, § 2143, authorizing "any person interested" to appear and contest any item of the account of the personal representative, a creditor may often be a "person interested," within the meaning of the statute. A creditor may maintain a bill in chancery for the settlement of the estate of the deceased debtor, and may as a matter of right remove the administration from the probate court into the chancery court, before jurisdiction has attached in the probate court for a final settlement, and after, on showing special equities. Rensford v. Joseph A. Magnus & Co., 43 South. 853, 854, 150 Ala. 288.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2679, provides that, if a temporary administrator neglects to make a deposit within the time limited, the surrogate must, upon the application of a "person interested" in the estate, make an order, etc. Section 2514 says: "The expression 'person interested,' where it is used in connection with an estate or a fund, includes every person entitled, either absolutely or contingently, to share in the estate or the proceeds thereof, or in the fund, as husband, wife, legatee, next of kin, heir, devisee, assignee, grantee, or otherwise, except as a creditor." In re Hopkins' Will, 96 N. Y. Supp. 941, 943, 110 App. Div. 907.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2481, subd. 11, authorizes the Surrogate's Court to exercise such incidental powers as may be necessary to carry out powers expressly conferred. Section 2808 provides that a testamentary trustee may be called to account by petition in the Surrogate's Court by any person interested in the execution of the trust, and by section 2514, subd. 11, a "person interested" is any one entitled to share in the estate, except a creditor. An executrix sued an executor and trustee for an accounting on the ground that defendant had wrongfully retained income bequeathed to plaintiff's testator, and it appeared that defendant had accounted in the Surrogate's Court, and that his account had been there settled. Held, that the complaint would be dismissed, as the matters were properly recognizable in the Surrogate's Court. Meeks v. Meeks, 100 N. Y. Supp. 667, 669, 51 Misc. Rep. 538.

Under a statute entitling a husband, where there are no children, to one-half of the estate absolute, a husband is a "person interested" in the estate, within the meaning of another statute authorizing a "person interested" to file an affidavit preliminary to proceedings for the discovery of assets. Ex parte Gfeller, 77 S. W. 552, 556, 178 Mo. 248.

The purchaser of the interest of an heir to land owned by decedent is not entitled to apply for a sale thereof for the payment of debts, under Rev. St. 1899, § 150, providing that such application may be made by any "creditor or other person interested in the estate." The term "other person interested in the estate" contemplates persons who have an interest in the distribution of the estate or who have a right to participate in such distribution, such as an heir or one who is made the legatee by will, or the guardian or creditor of one of the heirs of the estate or other persons who may be entitled to a distributive share of the estate. The purchase of the interest of two children of deceased in land which descended to them falls far short of creating any "interest in the estate," as contemplated by the statute. Stark v. Kirchengraber, 85 S. W. 868, 871, 186 Mo. 633, 105 Am. St. Rep. 629.

The phrase "person interested therein," as used in title 1, div. 7, c. 9, Rev. St., authorizing partition by heirs at law, includes a widow or one holding a lien, but does not include an administrator. Stout v. Stout, 92 N. E. 465, 466, 82 Ohio St. 358, 187 Am. St. Rep. 785.

The phrase "persons interested in the estate," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 148, providing that, on filing of a petition for the sale of real estate of a decedent, the court shall order "all persons interested in the estate" to be notified thereof, and that such notice be published, provided that, where the heirs of the devisee are residents of the county, notice shall be served on each one, was purposely left a broad one and will not be held to include only heirs and devisees. Desloge v. Tucker, 94 S. W. 288, 286, 196 Mo. 587.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2617, providing that any person, although not cited, who is named as a devisee or legatee in the will propounded, or as executor, trustee, devisee, or legatee in any other paper purporting to be a will of decedent, or "who is otherwise interested in sustaining or defeating the will," may appear and at his election support or oppose the application, in authorizing a person "who is otherwise interested in sustaining or defeating the will" to appear, means only a person who has a pecuniary interest to protect, either as an individual or in a representative capacity. An interest resting on sentiment or sympathy, or on any basis other than the gain or loss of money or its equivalent, is not sufficient; but any one who would be deprived of property in the broad sense of the word, or who would become entitled to property, by the probate of a will, is authorized to appear and be heard upon the subject. In re Hoyt's Will, 106 N. Y. Supp. 359, 361, 55 Misc. Rep. 159 (citing In re Davis, 75 N. E. 580, 182 N. Y. 468).

In partnership

The interest of a defendant in a partnership, which is held by a temporary injunction in a suit by a creditor, is the balance which would become due him after the payment of all firm debts and the adjustment of the accounts of the partners. Gay v. Ray, 80 N. E. 693, 694, 195 Mass. 8.

The interest of each partner in the partnership property is his share of the surplus after payment of all the partnership debts and settlement of all accounts between himself and his partners. Jones v. Way, 97 Pac. 437, 438, 78 Kan. 535, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180.

"The 'interest' of a partner in the partnership property of his firm is his share of what may be left of such property after the payment of the debts of the firm, and after the deduction therefrom of his indebtedness, if any, to his firm; for his copartners have a specific lien on his share of the assets of the partnership to secure his indebtedness to the firm, and in the ascertainment of his interest in the property of the firm his indebtedness thereto must be taken into the account and settled out of his share. When therefore, as in this case, a partner makes a sale of his 'interest in the concern,' it must be presumed, we think, that he sells only his legal interest in the firm, and nothing more. It cannot be assumed, in such case, in the absence of any stipulation to that effect, that such partner sold, or intended to sell, if he could, his own indebtedness to the firm, or any part thereof." Riddell v. Ramsey, 78 Pac. 597, 602, 31 Mont. 386 (quoting Over v. Hetherington, 66 Ind. 365).

In patent

An article in the contract by which patentees granted an exclusive license to manufacture and sell the invention for a term of years, provided that, if the patentees do not desire to renew the contract they shall deliver such transfers as will vest in the licensee fifteen one-hundredths interest in said patent, and also fifteen one-hundredths interest in all the profits arising from business during the life of the patent, and all the provisions of the article defining profits shall apply to the parties mutatis mutandis, and if the patentees desire to sell said patent, and obtain a bona fide offer, then the licensee may buy and credit his fifteen one-hundredths interest on the price, and if he does not buy then the patentees may sell the same and account to him for his fifteen one-hundredths part of the proceeds of such sale. Held, that the licensee was not entitled to an assignment of the title to any part of the patent on the termination of the contract; the term "interest," as used, meaning a limited property right less than ownership, namely, a right to a fractional part in the proceeds of a sale when one was made, to a preferential option to buy at the same price offered by an outsider, crediting his interest towards such purchase price, and to share in the profits as defined by the contract. Copeland v. Eaton, 95 N. E. 291, 292, 209 Mass. 139, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 521.

In public contract

Where a councilman, who is a co-owner with his brother of a quarry, assists in ratifying a contract with his brother to supply the city with stone from the quarry, he may be convicted of violation of Act March 31, 1860 (P. L. 400) § 66, forbidding any member, officer, or agent of the corporation or a municipality from being "interested" in furnishing supplies to it. Commonwealth ex rel. Kutz v. Witman, 66 Atl. 986, 988, 217 Pa. 411.

Where a contract for the construction of a schoolhouse was properly let to a solvent contractor, and was fully completed, the fact that the contractor purchased the lumber required from a corporation in which one of the trustees of the school district was a stockholder, and thereafter assigned the orders drawn for the amount due under the contract through an attorney to such corporation, was not a violation of Pol. Code, § 1876, declaring that no school trustee shall be "interested" in any contract made by the board of which he is a member, etc. Escondido Lumber, Hay & Grain Co. v. Baldwin, 84 Pac. 284, 285, 2 Cal. App. 606.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2423, provides that any school trustee who shall, while holding office, be interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract for any work for the use of any city shall be fined and imprisoned. When a contract was executed between the trustees of a school city and a heating company for a heating plant for the city schools, the president of the company had a perfect title to the office of trustee, though he had not then qualified. The contract provided that, in case a part should be performed while the president was trustee, the company should employ, at its own expense, an expert, approved by the two other members of the school board, to act with the disinterested members to determine whether there was a compliance with the contract. The president qualified while the contract was being performed. Held, that he was "interested" in the contract within the statute, so that it was void, notwithstanding the provision authorizing the employment of an expert at the heating company's expense. Noble v. Davison, 96 N. E. 325, 329, 177 Ind. 19.

In railroad

One is not "interested," within Pub. St. 1901, c. 155, § 1, providing that no person who owns railroad stock, or who is employed by a railroad company, or who is otherwise interested in one, shall be eligible to office of railroad commissioner, unless his interest prevents him from being "indifferent." In re Opinion of Justices, 72 Atl. 754, 758, 75 N. E. 618.

In sale of liquor

A person not engaged in the liquor traffic whose employé inadvertently, or without authority, makes a sale of intoxicating liquor at his place of business, is not "interested" in the sale within the statute making it unlawful for any person to sell either for himself or another, or to be "interested" in a sale of intoxicating liquor without a license. Partridge v. State, 114 S. W. 215, 216, 88 Ark. 267, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 321, 129 Am. St. Rep. 100.

In will

Illinois Statute of Wills (Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 148) § 7, as amended by Act July 1, 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 355), provides that if any person interested, within one year after the probate of any will, shall appear and by bill in chancery contest the validity of the same, an issue of law shall be made up as to whether the writing produced be the will of testator. Held, that decisions of the Supreme Court of Illinois that the phrase "any person interested" does not include persons having a mere expectancy, but only includes those having an interest already attached in case the ancestor is held to have died intestate, is conclusive on the federal courts. Selden v. Illinois Trust & Savings Bank, 184 Fed. 872, 675, 107 C. C. A. 196.

Section 8 of the Wills Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 148) provides that, "if any beneficial devise, legacy or interest" shall be given to a person subscribing it as a witness, such devise, etc., shall, as to such witness, be void, unless the will be attested by a sufficient number of other witnesses, and he or she shall be compellable to give testimony on the residue of such will in like manner as if no devise or bequest had been made. Held, that the interest which an executor takes under the will that disqualifies him as a witness is such an interest as is mentioned in such section, and an executor as to his competency is placed in the same class with a devisee or legatee. Fearn v. Postlewaite, 88 N. E. 1057, 1058, 240 Ill. 626.

An executor named in a will who has signed as an attesting witness falls within Wills Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 148) § 8, making any beneficial "interest" given in a will to a subscribing witness void, etc., and under that section he may be required to testify in support of the execution of the will, though its establishment by his testimony bars him from participating in the administration of the estate. Jones v. Grieser, 87 N. E. 295, 296, 238 Ill. 183, 15 Ann. Cas. 787.

The "interest" which disqualifies a witness to a will must be a present certain legal interest of a pecuniary nature. The test is whether he will either gain or lose financially as the direct result of the suit, or whether the judgment or decree will be evidence for or against him in another action. O'Brien v. Bonfield, 72 N. E. 1090, 213 Ill. 428.

The "interest" which will disqualify a witness to the execution of a will, within Act April 26, 1855 (P. L. 328), is an interest in the existing charity for which a bequest is made by the will, or in a charity created by the testator. In re Stinson's Estate, 81 Atl. 207, 209, 232 Pa. 218, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 504.

An "interest" sufficient to disqualify a witness to a will containing charitable bequests, under Act April 26, 1855 (P. L. 332) § 11, requiring such wills to be signed by two disinterested witnesses, is such an interest as appears to exist at the time of the execution of the will, either by the terms of the will itself, or by reason of the attesting witness being then interested in a religious or charitable institution, for which provision is made by the testator. In re Kessler's Estate, 70 Atl. 770, 773, 221 Pa. 314, 128 Am. St. Rep. 741, 15 Ann. Cas. 791.

The wife of deceased's beneficiary and proponent of the will was a "person deriving an interest" under decedent, within Code Civ. Proc. § 829, so as to make her testimony as to communications or transactions with decedent incompetent in a will contest, since, if the will be valid, she has an inchoate right of dower in the land devised to her husband.

In re Weed's Will, 127 N. Y. Supp. 966, 967, 143 App. Div. 822.

While the word "interest" in some connections includes title in others, it includes advantages less than title. In re Horn's Estate, 72 Atl. 791, 792, 223 Pa. 415.

St. 1909, c. 490, pt. 2, §§ 59, 61, authorizing the owner or any person having an interest in land sold for taxes to redeem, gives an attaching and judgment creditor of the owner of the legal title, who, prior to the sale, attached the land as security, a right to redeem the land sold for taxes. The word "interest," in common speech, in connection with land, includes all varieties of titles and rights, and comprehends estates in fee, for life, and for years, mortgages, liens, easements, attachments, and every kind of claim of land which can form the basis of a property right. Union Trust Co. v. Reed, 99 N. E. 1093, 1094, 213 Mass. 199.

The word "interest" in its ordinary signification includes any right, title, or estate in, or lien upon, real estate. It has such meaning in Comp. St. 1903, c. 73, § 4814, providing that an action may be maintained by any person claiming title to real estate against another who claims an adverse interest therein, for the purpose of determining such interest. Johnson v. Samuelson, 117 N. W. 470, 471, 82 Neb. 201, 130 Am. St. Rep. 666.

A will, after giving a life estate to persons named, provided that on the decease of such persons all the "interest" of the deceased in the property described should vest in his or her heirs. Held, that the word "interest" denoted the properties or portions thereof given as described in the devises. Pierce v. Pierce, 14 R. I. 514, 516.

The word "interest," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 3090, providing that a tenant for life who commits acts tending to the permanent injury of the remainder or reversion shall forfeit his "interest" to the remainderman, if the latter elects to claim immediate possession, is to be construed as calling for a forfeiture of the entire "interest" of the tenant without reference to the portion of the estate which was the subject of the waste. Roby v. Newton, 49 S. E. 694, 696, 121 Ga. 679, 68 L. R. A. 601.

"Interest," as used in Acts 1899, p. 83, c. 421, § 4, providing that when mineral, mineral water, oil, gas, or coal privileges or interests, are held by a party, exclusive of the surface, the same shall be assessed separately, to such party, necessarily means the minerals, not the estates in them or interests in the titles thereto. The statute does not authorize the assessment of an undivided interest in the minerals, and a tax deed founded upon such an assessment will be set aside. Toothman v. Courtney, 58 S. E. 915-920, 62 W. Va. 167.

The natural and ordinary meaning of the phrase "interest in lands" includes the entire right held in them, and, as used in an instrument conveying the grantor's interest without qualification, it operates to convey all the rights of the grantor. Dickson v. Wildman, 183 Fed. 398, 402, 105 C. C. A. 618.

One having an option in writing from the owner for the sale of land has an "interest in land," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 2302, declaring that no estate or interest in lands shall be surrendered unless by act or operation of law, or by deed or conveyance in writing, etc. Telford v. Frost, 44 N. W. 835, 836, 76 Wis. 172.

The right to construct and maintain for a limited time a railway track on a fixed portion of the street, and the right to operate cars on such track, for the purpose of carrying passengers and freight for hire, does not constitute an "interest in land" as that term is ordinarily understood. City of Seattle v. Seattle Electric Co., 94 Pac. 194, 195, 48 Wash. 599, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 486.

The right to erect and maintain a pier and column for her own benefit upon the property of another, is an "interest in lands" within the statute of frauds. Hartman v. Powell, 59 Atl. 628, 629, 68 N. J. Eq. 298.

A contract, by which one who had laid a cement sidewalk took in part payment the sand excavated in the course of the work, is not a contract in or concerning an interest in land required to be in writing by Statute of Frauds (2 Gen. St. 1895, p. 1603) § 5, subd. 4. Okin v. Selidor, 78 Atl. 770, 78 N. J. Law, 54, 138 Am. St. Rep. 588.

Under Real Property Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 50) § 389, authorizing every person interested in the property "or whose interest may be affected by the judgment in the action" to appear, it was not necessary for an abutting owner to apply to the court for leave to appear, nor was plaintiff authorized to determine whether such abutting owner's interest might be affected by the judgment so as to entitle him to appear. Sundermann v. People, 132 N. Y. S. 68, 70, 148 App. Div. 124.

Plaintiff pending a proceeding against her husband to compel him to account as executor and trustee of an estate in which defendants were interested, and to secure an adjournment of the accounting, conveyed real property to a trustee for the purposes set out in a declaration of trust executed by him to the plaintiff, whereby the trustee was required to pay all sums which upon a proper accounting by plaintiff's husband should be found due to defendants or other persons, and to pay over any balance over such sums, due and payable to defendants to the plaintiff, with power of sale for such purposes. Held, that plaintiff's remaining interest in the property under her deed to the trustee and his declaration of trust was "an interest in real property," within Real Property Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 50) § 242, prohibiting the conveyance of such interests except by writing subscribed by the grantor, or his agent thereto authorized in writing, so that her oral consent to a conveyance of the property by the trustee to the defendants pending the accounting was no bar to her interest. Nestell v. Hart, 95 N. E. 703, 705, 202 N. Y. 280.

Under Pub. Laws 1893, p. 37, c. 6, § 1, as amended by Pub. Laws 1903, p. 1121, c. 763, providing that an action may be brought by any person against another who claims an estate or interest in real estate adverse to him to determine such adverse claims, and that if judgment has been docketed, whether in favor or against the person bringing the action or the person against whom such action was brought, the lien of such judgment shall be such a claim of an estate or interest in real estate as is contemplated by the act, where a creditor had his debt determined by a judgment and by attachment of land brought it within the jurisdiction of the court, and had it condemned as the property of his debtor to the satisfaction of his debt, and a third person claims the entire and absolute estate in the land, under deeds which antedate the action of the creditor and the levy of the attachment, his claim is of an "estate or interest in real estate," within the act, and he may sue to quiet his title thereto. Crockett v. Bray, 66 S. E. 666, 667, 151 N. C. 615.

Where a fire policy stipulating that it should be void on the "interest" of the insured becoming other than unincumbered was, with consent of the insurer, subject to its conditions, assigned to a purchaser whose deed of the property retained a vendor's lien, of which the insurer had no notice, such lien on the property constituted an incumbrance on the "interest" of the insured and avoided the policy. Wright v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 118 S. W. 191, 192, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 6.

Contingent interest or remainder

"An interest in land is the legal concern of a person in the thing or property, or in the right to some of the benefits or uses from which the property is inseparable." A contingent remainderman has such a present and existing interest as is susceptible of release to the life tenant in possession. McDonald v. Bayard Sav. Bank, 98 N. W. 1025, 1026, 123 Iowa, 413.

Where a decree for divorce from bed and board, with perpetual separation, reserves for further order the question "of the interest" of the parties in the property, the word "interest" is sufficient to include curtesy, as curtesy is a contingent interest, which the word is usually construed as embracing. Hartigan v. Hartigan, 64 S. E. 726, 728, 65 W. Va. 471, 131 Am. St. Rep. 973, 17 Ann. Cas. 728.

Easement in general

See, also, Easement.

An easement is an "interest in land," within the statute of frauds, and a contract creating an easement must be in writing. Indianapolis Southern R. Co. v. Wycoff (Ind.) 95 N. E. 442, 443.

The expressions "estate in lands" and "interest in lands" are broad enough to include the right to an easement therein. Oates v. Town of Headland, 45 South. 910, 911, 154 Ala. 503.

Estate synonyms

The word "interest," as applied to property, is broader than the word "title." It is practically synonymous with the word "estate." Widincamp v. Phenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 62 S. E. 478, 4 Ga. App. 759.

Equitable interest

The expression "persons interested" in proceedings to condemn land under the power of eminent domain includes not only the person in whom is vested the legal title, but also others having some right or interest in the land sought to be taken, not amounting to a legal interest. Under Civ. Code 1896, § 1713, as amended by Gen. Acts 1903, p. 374, requiring an application for the condemnation of land to state the names and residence of the owners of each tract, if known, in trust estates, the trustee being the only proper party, it is unnecessary to name the cestui que trust, but the interest of the cestui que trust should be fully protected by the trustee. Birmingham & A. A. R. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 44 South. 679, 681, 152 Ala. 422.

The term "interest," as used in a provision of a fire policy declaring that a change of insured's interest, title, or possession of the subject of the insurance, without the insurer's consent, shall work a forfeiture of the policy, is not limited to a change in the legal title, but extends to both legal and equitable rights. Finkbohner v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. of Glens Falls, N. Y., 92 Pac. 818, 320, 6 Cal. App. 379; Brickell v. Atlas Assur. Co., 101 Pac. 18, 19, 10 Cal. App. 17 (quoting Brighton Beach Racing Ass'n v. Home Ins. Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 219, 113 App. Div. 728; Id., 82 N. E. 1124, 189 N. Y. 526).

As used in a policy providing that it shall be void, if any change, other than by the death of insured, takes place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance, etc., the word "interest" has the same meaning as in the phrase "right, title, and interest." It means a legal interest, a proprietary or insurable interest, not a mere sentimental interest. Stenzel v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co., 35 South. 271, 272, 110 La. 1019, 98 Am. St. Rep. 481.

The terms "owner" and "parties in interest" in redemption laws have a broad and comprehensive meaning. Any right which in law or in equity amounts to an ownership in the land, any right of entry upon it, to its possession, or enjoyment of any part of it, which can be deemed an estate, makes the person an owner so far as it is necessary to give him the right to redeem. In Bouv. Law Dict. it is said: "The word 'owner' has no technical meaning, and, being 'nomen generalissimum,' should, especially when used in a remedial statute, be construed liberally in favor of the parties whom it is the duty and intention of the Legislature to protect." By deed dated and recorded January 30, 1895, M. conveyed to F. lot No. 11, in the town of Union, Monroe county. The lot was not transferred on the assessor's books for the year 1895 to F., but was charged in the name of M., returned delinquent, and sold by the sheriff for the taxes of that year on the 18th day of December, 1897, and was purchased by J. C. M. On the 28th day of July, 1898, F. conveyed the lot to C., trustee, to secure a debt to A. No offer was made to redeem within a year from day of sale, and the purchaser neither took a deed nor order therefor of a court or judge within the second year after the sale. On the 14th day of December, 1899, O., the trustee, offered to redeem the lot as such trustee, and as such agent of F., when J. C. M. refused to permit redemption, and on the 16th of December, 1899, procured a deed from the clerk for said lot. In a suit brought by the trustee to set aside such deed, C. had the right to redeem. Clark v. McClagherty, 44 S. E. 269, 270, 53 W. Va. 376 (quoting and adopting definition in Adams v. Beale, 19 Iowa, 61; Dubois v. Hepburn, 10 Pet. [35 U. S.] 1, 9 L. Ed. 325).

Ground rent

A "ground rent," being an estate of inheritance in the rent of lands, is a right and interest in the lands within the meaning of section 4158, Rev. St. 1892, relating to descent and distribution. McCammon v. Cooper, 69 N. E. 658, 659, 69 Ohio St. 366.

Inchoate right of dower

An inchoate right of dower is not an "interest in real estate," the barring of which by a judgment makes a case involving title to real estate. Brannock v. Magoon, 116 S. W. 500, 502, 216 Mo. 722.

Leasehold

A leasehold for a term of years is an "interest in lands." Moeller v. Gormley, 87 Pac. 507, 508, 44 Wash. 465 (citing Reilley v. Anderson, 73 Pac. 799, 33 Wash. 58; Chicago Attachment Co. v. Davis Sewing Mach. Co., 31 N. E. 438, 142 Ill. 171, 15 L. R. A. 754; Sanford v. Johnson, 24 Minn. 172; McKee v. Howe, 31 Pac. 115, 17 Colo. 538).

The word "interest," as used in Code 1899, c. 75, § 3, providing that every materialman furnishing material for the construction of any house or other structure shall have a lien to secure the payment of the value of such material upon such house or other structure, and upon the "interest" of the owner in the lot of land on which the same may stand, covers a leasehold estate. Sho-walter v. Lowndes, 49 S. E. 448, 56 W. Va. 462, 3 Ann. Cas. 1096.

An executory contract to enter into a lease of land in the future relates to an "interest in land," and, if oral, is unenforceable under Statute of Frauds, § 7, relating to contracts for the sale of land. Donovan v. Maloney (Del.) 84 Atl. 1032, 1033.

Where the owner of a leasehold estate assigned the full term to another, and the lessor accepted rent from the assignee, all privity of estate between the original lessee and the lessor was destroyed, and the interest of the original lessee under the contract could not be sold under execution as real estate; for, while section 3 of the act relating to judgments and decrees (Hurd's Rev. St. 1911, c. 77) declares a "leasehold" estate, the unexpired term of which exceeds five years, to be real estate, and so subject to lien of a judgment, a leasehold estate in legal contemplation is an interest in or concerning lands and not a mere contractual right. Taylor v. Marshall, 99 N. E. 638, 639, 255 Ill. 545.

Lien or mortgage

Tax liens held by the state are not interests in and claims upon the land on which they are a lien, within the meaning of Laws 1903, c. 234, § 6, p. 341, relating to the registration of land titles. National Bond & Security Co. v. Daskam, 97 N. W. 458, 459, 91 Minn. 81.

A mortgage on land does not give the mortgagee an "interest" in land, so as to make it taxable as such. Adams v. Colonial & U. S. Mortg. Co., 34 South. 482, 488, 528, 82 Miss. 263, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138, 100 Am. St. Rep. 683.

An assignment of a mortgage lien is not a "conveyance" or a "transfer" of "any interest" in land covered by the mortgage within the meaning of section 2480, Gen. St. 1906, relating to recording of conveyances and transfers of lands or interests therein. Garrett v. Fernauld, 57 South. 671, 672, 63 Fla. 434.

"However created, a lien (and a mortgage is a lien) is not an 'interest in land,' but merely a security for the payment of a debt." Stearns-Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Aztec Gold Min. & Mill. Co., 93 Pac. 706, 712, 14 N. M. 300 (quoting and adopting the definition of Chief Justice Mills in Alexander v. Cleland, 86 Pac. 425, 13 N. M. 524).

A "mortgage" is a "lien," and since a lien is not an interest in land, but merely a security for the payment of debt, a contract to release a mortgage is not within the statute of frauds. Alexander v. Cleland, 86 Pac. 425, 427, 13 N. M. 524.

A lien upon land is not an estate or "interest" in the land. "A lien is not, strictly speaking, either a jus in re or a jus ad rem; that is, it is not a property in the thing itself, nor does it constitute a right of action for the thing. It more properly constitutes a charge upon the thing." "Lien" is a term of very large and comprehensive signification. In its widest sense it may be defined to be a hold or claim which one person has upon the property of another as a security for some debt or charge. But it never imports more than security. It confers no right of property." Even a mortgagee holding the legal title is said to have, in equity, only a chattel interest. Morrison v. Clarksburg Coal & Coke Co., 43 S. E. 102, 106, 52 W. Va. 331 (citing Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 506, 1215; 4 Kent, Comm. 160; Clark v. Beach, 6 Conn. 142; Wilkins v. French, 20 Me. 111; Kinna v. Smith, 3 N. J. Eq. 14; Clift v. White, 12 N. Y. 519. "A lien upon land is not an estate or interest in it." Brackett v. Gilmore, 15 Minn. 251 [Gil. 191]; Bidwell v. Webb, 10 Minn. 62 [Gil. 44], 88 Am. Dec. 56; Donohue v. Ladd, 17 N. W. 381, 31 Minn. 244; Power v. Bowdle, 54 N. W. 404, 3 N. D. 107, 21 L. R. A. 328, 44 Am. St. Rep. 511; Bouv. Law Dict. tit. "Lien").

An attaching officer is a person "having an interest" in the property within the meaning of St. 1892, c. 428, § 2, requiring a mortgagee whose loan is secured by mortgage to discharge the same and restore the pledge, upon the payment or tender of the sum legally due, by the debtor or by any person having an interest in the property mortgaged or pledged. Hanly v. Davis, 49 N. E. 914, 170 Mass. 517.

Laws 1893, p. 190, c. 84, § 4, governing condemnation suits by cities of the first class, provides that actions thereunder shall proceed in the names of the owners and occupants of the lands and all persons having an interest therein. Held, that the object was to bring before the court the owners, occupants, mortgagees, and such others as the records might show had an interest in the land or the compensation to be paid, and the county, having a lien on the land for unpaid taxes, was not included among "persons having an interest therein," the city in the absence of an express reservation possessing by delegation the state's power to take land without regard to taxes or tax liens, and the county, being merely the state's agent to collect public revenues, lost its right thereto upon its delegation by the state. Id.

The omission of any proper party will not invalidate the proceedings as against such persons as are made parties. Gasaway v. City of Seattle, 100 Pac. 991, 993, 52 Wash. 444, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 68.

The words "those having an interest" and "all persons interested," as used in Civ. Code Prac. § 499, subsec. 1, providing that a person desiring a division of land held jointly with others may file a petition containing a statement of the names of "those having an interest" in the land, and thereon "the persons interested" in the property who have not united in the petition shall be summoned to answer, refer to persons owning an interest in the land under the same title, and do not include the holder of a lien on the undivided interest of one of the owners. Barry v. Baker (Ky.) 93 S. W. 1061, 1062.

Ownership of fixtures and right to remove them

A defense by a tenant whereby he asserted ownership and a right to remove fixtures which had become a part of the real estate was a claim of interest in the real property within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1638, relating to actions to compel the determination of claims to real property. Robinson v. Pratt, 136 N. Y. Supp. 98, 100, 151 App. Div. 738.

Right of appropriator to use public lands

An appropriator's right pending the determination of his application to use public lands was an "interest in real property" which he was entitled to protect by a suit to determine conflicting claims to real property authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 738. Inyo Consol. Water Co. v. Jess, 119 Pac. 934, 936, 161 Cal. 516.

Right of way

An easement of a right of way is an "interest in land." Dahlberg v. Haeberle, 59 Atl. 92, 93, 71 N. J. Law, 514.

An easement of a right of way over land is an "interest in land" within the eminent domain act (P. L. 1900, p. 79), providing for compensation to all persons having any "interest in land" taken. Butterworth-Judson Co. v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 68 Atl. 198, 199, 72 N. J. Eq. 568.

A right of way for an irrigation ditch is an "interest in real property" within Code Civ. Proc. § 1971, providing that no interest in real property can be created, assigned, etc., otherwise than by a conveyance in writing subscribed by the grantor, etc. Bashore v. Mooney, 87 Pac. 553, 558, 4 Cal. App. 278.

Rights as to minerals, etc., reserved by grantor

The right to minerals, marble, and granite beneath the surface of land conveyed, the right to mine the same, and the right of ingress and egress in order to conduct such mining operations, reserved to a grantor, constituted an "interest in real estate," within Rev. St. 1899, § 4262, providing that an action to recover an interest in real estate may be brought at any time within 10 years after the right of action accrues. Hudson v. Cahoon, 91 S. W. 72, 76, 193 Mo. 547.

Sale of buildings

An oral contract, by which plaintiff agreed to pay $500 for certain old buildings and to remove them from the land on which they stood, was a contract for the sale of an "interest in land," within the statute of frauds, and unenforceable. Volk v. Olsen, 104 N. Y. Supp. 415, 54 Misc. Rep. 227.

Sale of crops

A sale of a growing crop of hay with leave to the buyer to enter and remove the crop is not a sale of an "interest in land" within the fourth section of the statute of frauds. Kreisle v. Wilson (Tex.) 148 S. W. 1132, 1133.

Sale of timber

A sale of standing timber is a contract concerning an "interest in land" within the meaning of the statute of frauds. Richbourg v. Rose, 44 South. 69, 71, 53 Fla. 173, 125 Am. St. Rep. 1061, 12 Ann. Cas. 274; High v. Jasper Mfg. Co., 49 South. 156, 157, 57 Fla. 437.

A sale of standing timber is a "contract concerning interest in land" within the meaning of the Florida statute of frauds (Gen. St. 1906, § 2517). Elsbeery v. Sexton, 54 South. 592, 593, 61 Fla. 162.

Independently of statute, a contract for sale of standing trees is prima facie, at least, a sale of an "interest in land," and so within the statute of frauds, unless under the agreement the title is not to pass till they have been severed. Hurley v. Hurley, 65 S. E. 472, 474, 110 Va. 31, 18 Ann. Cas. 968.

Where a purchaser in a written contract for the sale and purchase of standing timber transferred his right to cut and remove the timber to a third person, who, to obtain a release of a lien for the price reserved by the owner, orally agreed to pay the price, the promise was not void as an agreement as to an interest in land within the statute of frauds (Revised 1905, § 976). Rogers v. Gen- nett Lumber Co., 69 S. E. 788, 789, 154 N. C. 108.

A contract for the sale of standing timber, contemplating separation from the soil within a reasonable time, without any stipulation for the beneficial use of the soil, but with a mere license to enter and take them away, is not a sale of an "interest in land" within the fourth section of the statute of frauds, but is a sale of goods only. Good-nough Mercantile & Stock Co. v. Galloway, 171 Fed. 940, 951.

As a share or portion

Where an instrument states that the first party hereby sells to the second party certain real estate, to wit, 32 acres more or less, being my undivided interest in land belonging to a certain estate, the words "being my undivided interest in land belonging to the estate" are descriptive merely of the 32 acres, and serve the further purpose of designating the interest sold as undivided, and the word "interest" is equivalent to "part" or "share" and is not to be construed as designating the extent of the vendor's title. Brooks v. Halane, 116 Ill. App. 383, 386.

Title distinguished

The words "interest" and "title," as used in a policy, which provides that it is to be void if any change other than by death of insured takes place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insured, are not synonymous. The word "interest" is broader and more comprehensive than the word "title"; it embraces both a legal and equitable right. The doctrine contended for that when the condition is against a change in the title there is no breach unless there is a change in the legal title, and that since the insured retains the legal title the policy is not avoided by a transfer of the equitable title, cannot be applied to a condition against a change of interest. The true test is whether the vendor has dominion over the property insured, and, if he has, a change in interest has been effected and the policy is void. Brickell v. Atlas Assur. Co., 101 Pac. 16, 19, 10 Cal. App. 17 (quoting Brighton Beach Racing Ass'n v. Home Ins. Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 219, 113 App. Div. 728; Id., 82 N. E. 1124, 189 N. Y. 526).

The word "interest," as used in a fire insurance policy declaring that the policy shall be void if any change shall take place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance, is not synonymous with "title," but means some right different from title. It cannot mean a greater estate than title, since title as used in the policy is intended to mean estate. The word must therefore be used in contradiction to title as including any right in the property less than title. Therefore if the insured is the owner of the title, the word "interest" has no application. Garner v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co., 84 Pac. 717, 718, 73 Kan. 127, 4 L.

R. A. (N. S.) 654, 117 Am. St. Rep. 460, 9 Ann. Cas. 459.

The word "interest," when applied to property, has a variable meaning. It may be used as synonymous with estate or title, or may denote something less than an estate or title. The word "interest," as used in an insurance policy, is not synonymous with title. It means some right different from title. It cannot mean a greater estate than title since title is used to mean the entire estate in such a policy, and, when used in contradiction of title, means any right in property less than title, and the word "interest" as used in a judgment holding that plaintiff's title to certain real estate is valid, and that defendants had no right or claim thereto and no estate or interest therein, is sufficient to cover a mortgage lien. Hillyard v. Bancher, 118 Pac. 67, 69, 85 Kan. 516.

There is a change of "title" as well as of "interest" and "possession," within a fire policy declaring it void in case of any change in the interest, title, or possession of the insured property, where insured, the owner in fee of the insured property, makes a contract of sale of it, declaring that deed shall pass when final payment is made, and that the purchaser shall pay all taxes and assessments levied against the property subsequent to contract, and shall have the right to occupy the property before passing of title, as tenant of the seller, without pay, and the purchaser goes into possession and is not in default. The word "interest" is broader and more comprehensive than the word "title," since it embraces both legal and equitable rights, and the words are not synonymous. The true test is whether the vendor has parted with the absolute control and dominion over the property insured. In this case, there was a change in possession within the meaning of that word as used in the policy. While the agreement designates the occupancy of the vendee as that of a tenant of the vendor without pay or rent, the contract gives and secures to him more than the rights and interests of a tenant. He is charged with the liabilities, and entitled to enforce the rights of a purchaser in possession, and cannot be ejected as a tenant regardless of such rights. The possession of the vendee is absolute and exclusive of the vendor, as long as he performs the contract. Brighton Beach Racing Ass'n v. Home Ins. Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 219, 221, 113 App. Div. 728 (citing Lett v. Guardian Fire Ins. Co., 25 N. E. 1088, 125 N. Y. 82).

INTEREST (In Suit or Action)

See Disqualifying Interest; Real Party in Interest.

As authorizing appeal

The phrase "person interested," as used in the statute that any person interested in any order, etc., may appeal, means one who has some legal interest which may by the decree of the court be either enlarged or diminished. Hemmenway v. Corey, 16 Vt. 225, 226.

"A person 'interested' in a decree, within the meaning of a statute providing that a person interested in a decree of the probate court who considers himself injured thereby may appeal therefrom, is one who has some legal right or is under some legal liability that may be enlarged or diminished by the decree." An administrator de bonis non, who has been directed by the probate court to pay a sum to a distributee, is a person "interested" in a decree appointing an administrator of the distributee and is entitled to appeal therefrom. In re Clark's Estate, 79 Vt. 62, 64 Atl. 231, 232, 118 Am. St. Rep. 938.

Under Comp. St. 1909, c. 50, § 4, providing that on the hearing of an application for liquor license, upon objections to its issuance, any party interested shall have process to compel the attendance of witnesses, and if any party feels himself aggrieved by the decision, he may appeal to the district court, the right of appeal is accorded to none but a "party interested" and such right does not belong to petitioners who signed the application for license. Weiler v. Fischer, 126 N. W. 296, 298, 86 Neb. 614.

Ky. St. 1903, § 4849, gives the county court of the county of decedent's residence original jurisdiction to probate his will. Section 4852 declares the probate of a will before the county court conclusive, except as to the jurisdiction of the court, until superseded, reversed, or annulled. Section 4857 authorizes the court to permit a document to be proven ex parte or to cause all parties in interest to be brought before the court. Section 4859 authorizes any person "interested in the probate" of a will to prosecute an appeal to the circuit court. Held, that general creditors of an insolvent heir of a decedent, who claim that a purported will disinheriting their debtor is spurious and fraudulent as to them, may appeal from an order probating the will where their debtor himself fails to prosecute such an appeal. Brooks v. Paine's Ex'r, 90 S. W. 600, 601, 123 Ky. 271.

As authorizing bringing of suit

An administrator has an interest in decedent's real estate within Code Civ. Proc. § 675, authorizing an action by any person against another claiming an interest in real estate adverse to him, and, if another is asserting a claim adversely to such interest, he may maintain an action. Berry v. Howard, 127 N. W. 526, 527, 26 S. D. 29, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 994.

One who held a mortgage, but assigned it before proceedings were brought to correct the title to the property, had no "interest" therein that entitles him to appear as plaintiff in the cause. Turpin v. Derickson, 66 Atl. 276, 279, 105 Md. 620.

In order to entitle a creditor to enjoin the sale of personal property secured by a chattel mortgage, and enable him to resist the foreclosure thereof, he should connect himself with some interest in or claim upon the specific property, either by judgment, lien, or attachment, in order to constitute him an "interested party" within the statute authorizing any person interested to contest the foreclosure. Neustadter Bros. v. Doust, 92 Pac. 978, 979, 13 Idaho, 617.

As criterion of proper parties

A charter gave borough control of the construction and widening of sidewalks, the establishing of curb lines, and the extension of highways, but the control of the construction and repair of the remainder of the highway remained in the town. Held that, where suit was brought to restrain the borough from using certain land for the widening of a street, the town was "interested" in the question whether such land was a part of the highway, and was therefore properly summoned as a codefendant. Pinney v. Borough of Winsted, 66 Atl. 337, 340, 79 Conn. 608.

A bill in equity must not include as defendants parties not interested in the whole of the relief sought, since the "parties in interest" whose rights can be completely disposed of in one litigation in equity comprise only those persons who can be united in a single bill of complaint. Gaither v. Bauernschmidt, 69 Atl. 425, 428, 108 Md. 1.

As disqualifying judge, etc.

"Interest," within the rule as to disqualification of a judge by reason of interest, refers to some direct pecuniary interest. State ex rel. Cook v. Houser, 100 N. W. 964, 978, 122 Wis. 534 (citing Hungerford v. Cushing, 2 Wis. 397; Taylor v. Williams, 26 Tex. 583; Foreman v. Hunter, 13 N. W. 659, 59 Iowa, 550).

In a proceeding to condemn land, pursuant to chapter 15, art. 10, and sections 1370 to 1374, inclusive, of chapter 20, art. 9, of Snyder's Stats. of Okl. 1909, the interest of the district judge as a resident taxpayer of the petitioning municipality is not such an "interest" within the contemplation of section 2012 of said statutes as will disqualify him to act upon the petition, and try the cause. Lawton Rapid Transit Ry. Co. v. City of Lawton, 122 Pac. 212, 218, 31 Okl. 458.

As used in Act March 30, 1875 (P. L. 35), providing for the disqualification of a judge in case he is "personally" interested, denotes a direct and immediate private interest, as distinguished from an interest which the judge or other citizens have in public affairs resulting from liability to taxation. The fact that the word "interest" is thus qualified shows that it was not every interest, however trifling or insignificant, which a judge might have that might bring a case within the statute, but only such an interest as was personal to himself and direct and immediate in its effect, thus excluding such interest as a judge might have as a taxpayer in an action brought against the county. Brittain v. Monroe County, 63 Atl. 1076, 1077, 214 Pa. 648, 6 Ann. Cas. 617.

A judge has no "interest" disqualifying to try an action against an irrigating company for not supplying all the water which plaintiff claims he was entitled to, though defendant alleges plaintiff was not entitled to a fixed amount, but only to a proportion of whatever water the company might have for distribution, and that certain other persons, including the judge, have prior water rights; they not being necessary parties, no showing for making them parties being made, and any judgment which might be rendered in the case being incapable of affecting them. Lassen Irr. Co. v. Superior Court of Lassen County, 90 Pac. 709, 710, 151 Cal. 357.

A "party in interest," within the section, is one who has a financial interest, directly or indirectly; and hence an affidavit to disqualify a judge in an insanity inquiry, which merely shows that affiants are brothers of the person claimed to be insane, is insufficient to show that they are "parties in interest." State ex rel. Morris v. Montgomery, 142 S. W. 474, 476, 160 Mo. App. 724.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 39b, providing that referees shall not act in cases in which they are directly or indirectly "interested," does not apply to the interest of a referee by way of commissions on sums paid to creditors as dividends. In re Abbey Press, 184 Fed. 51, 53, 67 C. C. A. 161.

As disqualifying juror

By the term "interest in the cause," rendering a person incompetent to serve as a juror, is meant an interest either direct or indirect in the subject-matter of the particular action, and not a mere general interest in the class of subjects to which the particular action belongs, as such interest carries no mark of suspicion either of malice or favor. Ballentine v. Mercer, 109 S. W. 1037, 1038, 130 Mo. App. 605.

As disqualifying or affecting credibility of witnesses

While it seems clear that the term "interest," as used in the statute which limits the competency of persons in interest to testify concerning transactions with decedents, was used in the common-law sense, it is equally clear that, by restricting the disqualification to those having a direct legal interest in the action, the Legislature intended to admit the testimony of some persons having interests, not direct, or not legal, which at common law would have excluded them. In an action by a married woman against the representatives of a decedent to enforce specific performance of a decedent's contract to convey land made before her marriage, the husband's courtesy interest is so remote as not to make him incompetent to testify in behalf of the wife. Hiskett v. Bozarth, 105 N. W. 990, 992, 75 Neb. 70 (quoting and adopting definition in Wylie v. Charlton, 62 N. W. 220, 43 Neb. 844).

Where a corporation was sued by an administrator for damages for wrongfully transferring stock belonging to intestate, the secretary was not disqualified from testifying as to the transfer as a "person interested in the event," within Comp. Laws 1907, § 3413, providing that any person directly interested in the event of an action shall not be a witness when the adverse party sues or defends as administrator as to any transaction equally within the knowledge of witness and decedent. Rasmussen v. Sevier Valley Canal Co. (Utah) 121 Pac. 741, 745.

Testimony of plaintiff contractors for the erection of a church building as to statements made by them as to the doing of extra work, and declarations made by the rector showing his knowledge of such work, were not incompetent within Code Civ. Proc. § 829, defining when a person interested in the event shall not be examined as a witness. Kelly v. St. Michael's Roman Catholic Church in City of Brooklyn, 133 N. Y. Supp. 328, 335, 148 App. Div. 767.

In determining the competency of a witness for "interest," the test is not whether the witness may be interested in the question in issue, or may entertain wishes on the subject, or may even have occasion to test the same question in a future suit, but whether the proceeding can be used as evidence for him in some pending or future suit. He must have an interest to be affected by the result of the suit, or by force of the adjudication. Sayre v. Woodyard, 66 S. E. 320, 322, 66 W. Va. 288, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 388.

In an action to recover a ring, a witness testified that plaintiff purchased the ring of him and paid for it, and when it was delivered the ring was loaned to defendant's intestate by plaintiff under a parol agreement with intestate; title and ownership being retained in plaintiff. Code Civ. Proc. § 829, provides that "upon the trial of an action * * * a party or person interested in the event, or a person from, through or under whom such a party or interested person derives his interest or title," shall not be examined as a witness in his own behalf, or in behalf of the party succeeding to his title or interest, concerning a personal transaction between witness and decedent. Held, that the witness testifying for plaintiff was not a "person interested in the event," within the statute; he having sold the ring and been paid therefor. Abbott v. Doughan, 97 N. E. 599, 600, 204 N. Y. 223.

"Interested in the event thereof," as used in Gen. St. 1894, § 5660, making incompetent testimony of a witness as to transactions with a person since deceased, means a direct and immediate pecuniary interest adverse to that of the party against whom his testimony was offered. Pital v. Winter, 105 N. W. 673, 674, 96 Minn. 499, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1009.

A chauffeur charged with negligently running his master's taxicab to the injury of a third person who sues the master therefor, is an interested witness, though he has no pecuniary interest in the result of the suit; and the action of the court in refusing to charge that he is an interested witness, and in charging that only those witnesses who are financially interested in the result are interested witnesses within the rule authorizing the jury to refuse to receive the testimony of an interested witness, is error. Harris v. Fifth Ave. Coach Co., 132 N. Y. Supp. 743.

The mother of an illegitimate child is not a "party interested in the event" of an action brought by the child against the executor of his putative father on a contract whereby the father agreed to settle a sum of money on the child in consideration of support by the mother until a certain date, within Code Civ. Proc. § 829, rendering such persons incompetent as witnesses to transactions with decedents in actions against executors or administrators. Rousseau v. Rousseau, 86 N. Y. Supp. 497, 501, 91 App. Div. 230.

Where a fire policy sued on provided that it should be void in case of fraud or false swearing by the insured, whether before or after a loss, insured's husband was not a "party in interest" within an instruction that while the law permits a party in interest to testify in his own behalf, the jury in weighing the evidence of parties so testifying should "consider the fact that such party is interested in the matter in controversy," etc. Orient Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., v. Kaptur, 95 N. E. 230, 176 Ind. 303.

Where the motorman of a street car which struck plaintiff was not made a party to an action by her to recover for her alleged injuries, and, as executrix of her husband's estate, for injuries sustained to the community by reason thereof, and such motorman had not been notified to appear in the suit wherein he was allowed to testify, the record in such action was not binding on him, nor conclusive as to his liability over to the defendant in case plaintiff recovered, and he was not a "party in interest or to the record" who was admitted "to testify in his own behalf," within the meaning of the statute (2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5991), which would have prohibited him as such a party from testifying to a conversation with the husband before his death. O'Toole v. Faulkner, 75 Pac. 975, 977, 34 Wash. 871.

"Interest" is a premium paid for the use of money. Barker Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Webster County, 121 N. W. 1072, 1073, 143 Iowa, 255.

Webster defines "interest" as a premium paid for the use of money, usually reckoned as a percentage. Hagan v. Commissioners' Court of Limestone County, 49 South. 417, 421, 160 Ala. 544, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1027.

"Interest" is a consideration paid for the use of money, or for forbearance in demanding it when due. Maryland Casualty Co. of Baltimore, Md., v. Omaha Electric Light & Power Co., 157 Fed. 514, 519, 85 C. C. A. 106.

"Interest" may include recompense for the use of anything that has an ascertained pecuniary value, as well as money. Wasey v. Whitcomb, 132 N. W. 572, 578, 187 Mich. 58.

"Interest" is the legal damages for injurious detention of money due. McDonald v. Loewen, 180 S. W. 52, 55, 145 Mo. App. 49.

"Interest" is a compensation for the use of money for its detention." Mills' Ann. St. Colo. § 2252, which provides that "creditors shall be allowed to receive interest when there is no agreement as to the rate thereof at the rate of eight per centum per annum for all moneys after they become due, * * *" is mandatory in an action at law to recover for labor performed and materials furnished, and requires the allowance of interest at the statutory rate from the date of demand of payment, and the court cannot, as in equity cases, take into consideration the laches of plaintiff in bringing suit. City of Denver v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 141 Fed. 69, 71, 72 C. C. A. 402.

"Interest" for money as a legal consequence was unknown to the common law. Cherry's Ex'rs v. Mann, Cooke (3 Tenn.) 268 (5 Am. Dec. 696). It has, however, been given by statute on judgments, and on a large class of assignable and negotiable instruments, and upon liquidated accounts signed by the parties. Code, §§ 1942, 1945. It is defined by the statute to be the compensation which may be demanded by a lender from the borrower, or by the creditor from the debtor, for the use of money. Code, § 1943. In all cases which are left as at common law, the jury has an equitable power, and may, in the form of damages, give interest, if they think justice demands it. Cole v. Sands, 1 Tenn. 106. Under our statute and decisions interest has become an incident of debt after maturity, because either given by positive law, or, in the absence of counter-vailing equity, by the inevitable verdict of the jury, or by the court acting in the place of the jury." In the absence of express statute, the jury in an action against a railroad for damages to property, caused by fire from a locomotive, have an equitable power to allow "interest" on the amount of plaintiff's loss as found by them. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Fort, 80 S. W. 429, 435, 112 Tenn. 432 (quoting and adopting Davidson County v. Olwill, 4 Lea [72 Tenn.] 34).

A personal injury does not create a debt, and does not become a definite obligation until a verdict entered; and "interest," which is compensation for the use of money which is due, may not be considered in determining the amount of damages, which must be such as will fairly compensate the injured person for the loss of time, physical and mental suffering suffered and likely to be suffered, and money reasonably expended and to be expended in consequence of the injury. Cochran v. City of Boston, 97 N. E. 1100, 1101, 211 Mass. 171, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 120, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 206.

The words "put on interest," "the interest of my property shall be paid annually," and "the principal shall go," etc., as used in a will, all relate, in their ordinary sense, to dealing with money, the value of the use of money measured by interest and securities, dischargeable by the payment of money, and not the rents and profits of real estate. Benner v. Mauer, 113 N. W. 663, 664, 133 Wis. 325.

"It is also settled law that the term 'interest,' as used in the Constitution and statutes fixing jurisdiction of the several courts, has a limited signification, and that in cases of this character a claim for interest is part of the amount in controversy." Under the constitutional and statutory provisions limiting the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace to $200 exclusive of interest, parties on appeal to the county or district court cannot enlarge the demand sued upon beyond the jurisdiction of the justice, and where the amount of interest, regarded as damages, constitutes the amount in controversy and exceeds $200, the county court has no appellate jurisdiction. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Walter Hunt & Co., 85 S. W. 1168, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 460.

The use of the word "interest," in the verdict of a jury as follows: "We, the jury herein, do find the issues joined in favor of the plaintiff, and that she be awarded $21, 000 and interest," meant from the time from which by law interest ought to be reckoned and the interest claimed by the petition. Miller v. Steele, 153 Fed. 714, 722, 82 O. C. A. 572.

Interest, defined by Sayles' Rev. Civ. St. art. 3097, as "the compensation allowed by law or fixed by the parties to a contract for the use, forbearance or detention of money," is not allowed on a judgment unless it is based upon a contract to pay interest, or the money for which it is rendered is wrongfully withheld. Jones v. United States & Mexican Trust Co., 105 S. W. 328, 329, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 430.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 8105, providing that all judgments of the several courts of the state shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, except where the contract on which the judgment is founded bears a greater rate, and article 8097, defining "interest" as compensation allowed by law or fixed by the parties "to a contract for the use or forbearance or detention of money," a judgment in favor of the state on a liquor dealer's bond does not bear interest. Hawthorne v. State, 87 S. W. 839, 841, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 122.

"Interest" on legacies is the compensation allowed for the deprivation of a legacy beyond the period when it is payable under the will or by statute. A legacy does not carry interest, pending a contest of the will, after one year from the grant of letters testamentary, for, as the law suspends payment of the legacy until the determination of the contest, the administrator pendente lite appointed pursuant to Rev. St. 1899, § 18 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 342), having no power in the meantime to pay it over, the legacy does not fall due until capable of being paid by the executor. Good Samaritan Hospital v. Mississippi Valley Trust Co., 117 S. W. 637, 640, 137 Mo. App. 179.

Where, in an action for $98.65 damages, plaintiff recovered judgment for that sum on appeal to the county court, with interest thereon, which made the total amount recovered $100.45, the additional amount over the sum sued for was an element of the damages recoverable, and not "interest," within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 996, subd. 3, giving the Court of Civil Appeals appellate jurisdiction of cases of which the county court had appellate jurisdiction when the judgment shall exceed $100 exclusive of interest, etc., so that the Court of Civil Appeals would have jurisdiction of the appeal. Pecos & N. T. Ry. Co. v. Faulkner (Tex.) 118 S. W. 747, 748.

In an action for damages, with legal interest, the interest prayed for is recoverable as part of the damages only, and not as "interest" within the meaning of that term as used in Const. art. 5, § 16, giving the county court concurrent jurisdiction with the district court when the matter in controversy does not exceed $1,000 "exclusive of interest"; and, where the damages claimed and the interest thereon at the legal rate from the time of the injury to the institution of the suit or the time of the trial aggregated more than $1,000, the action was not within the jurisdiction of the county court. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Rayzor (Tex.) 125 S. W. 619.

Payment of a commission of more than 6 per cent. for a loan of government bonds which are subject to market fluctuations and are bought and sold on the market as other securities was not in violation of the New York usury law, prohibiting the payment of more than 6 per cent. interest for the loan or forbearance of any money, goods, or any other things in action, and did not render the loan usurious, since the terms "interest" and forbearance," as used in the usury law (Consol. Laws, c. 20, § 373), are applicable only to a loan of money. Title Guaranty & Surety Co. v. Klein, 178 Fed. 689, 690, 102 C. O. A. 189, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 620.

Rev. St. 1909, § 3389, which directs, after providing for the making of loans by building and loan companies by competitive bidding for premiums, that the by-laws of the company may dispense with bids and provide for the making of loans to members at such a rate of interest and premium as may be provided in the by-law, "such premium to be paid in gross installments." Section 3390 provides that premiums shall consist of a percentage of the amount loaned. Held that, as "installment" means a part of a greater amount and is a word only fitly used in connection with an ascertained amount, especially when qualified by "gross," and as "interest" is a certain rate per cent. of the sum loaned for the time the money is detained by the borrower, while a "bonus" or "premium" is a definite sum agreed upon which is paid in addition to interest, either in advance or by installments, the statute means that the premium referred to should be in gross, payable in installments, and it does not therefore authorize the charging of a rate per cent. for the uncertain period for which the money may be kept, so that, though such a charge be called a "bonus" in by-law authorizing it, it is without statutory authority. Holmes v. Royal Loan Ass'n, 150 S. W. 1111, 1113, 166 Mo. App. 719.

The "mercantile method" of computing interest in case of partial payments consists in calculating interest on each item of the debt and adding these amounts together and deducting therefrom the sum of all partial payments with interest on each payment from the date it was made. Christie v. Scott, 94 Pac. 214, 215, 77 Kan. 257.

As commission

A loan made under a contract providing for a loan of $70,000 for one year, with 6 per cent. interest, payable semiannually, and providing for the payment of a cash commission of $1,400 for the loan, is not a loan of $70,000 for one year at 6 per cent. interest, payable semiannually, but a loan at 8 per cent. interest; the commission being "interest." Atlantic Trust & Deposit Co. v. Union Trust & Title Corp., 67 S. E. 182, 184, 110 Va. 286, 135 Am. St. Rep. 937.

Demurrage distinguished

The distinction between "interest" and "demurrage" is not based upon the actual repair of the injured vessel by the owner, but "interest" attends an allowance for loss of value; "demurrage," an allowance for cost of repair. The Cumberland, 135 Fed. 234, 236 (citing The Earnest A. Hamill, 100 Fed. 509).

As incidental to debt

The term "debt" embraces interest as well as principal, and "interest," in the absence of an express agreement, is a mere incident of the debt, and may be recovered as damages for its detention. Central Bank & Trust Corp. v. State, 76 S. E. 587, 589, 139 Ga. 54.

Interest is merely an incident to the debt to be paid from time to time or when the principal falls due in consideration of forbearance to the debtor, and becomes a part of the debt, or a debt at all, only when earned. Carlson v. City of Helena, 102 Pac. 89, 41, 89 Mont. 82, 17 Ann. Cas. 1233.

Income or earnings synonymous

The word "interest," as used in an antinuptial contract providing that a wife should receive in lieu of dower for each year she might survive her husband the interest on a certain sum, is synonymous with "income," as distinguished from an "annuity," so as to render the annual tax payable out of the interest rather than out of the residue of the husband's estate. Dulaney's Adm'r v. Dulaney, 54 S. E. 40, 42, 105 Va. 429.

A bequest of the "interest" on $2,000 to be paid to testatrix's son semiannually during his life was a bequest of the income of the fund for life. In re Dull's Estate, 66 Atl. 567, 217 Pa. 358.

The words "interest or earnings" in a will whereby testator gave property to trustees to control and pay the interest or earnings to his children for life, with gift over to their heirs, and whereby he provided that on the death of a child leaving no living heirs the spouse of the child might, if living, receive annually a specified sum of the interest money due the deceased, and in case of the death of a child leaving no living heirs his estate, principal and interest, should be divided equally with the grandchildren, are synonymous with each other, and with the word "income" in its ordinary sense. Ex parte Humbird, 80 Atl. 209, 211, 114 Md. 627.

As legal interest

The word "interest," as used in an antinuptial contract providing that the wife should receive in lieu of dower for each year she might survive her husband the interest on a certain sum, is to be taken as meaning "legal interest." Dulaney's Adm'r v. Dulaney, 54 S. E. 40, 41, 105 Va. 429.

As penalty

"Interest" is a premium paid for the use of money. The penalty for nonpayment of special assessments was a penalty and not interest. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Webster County, 121 N. W. 1072, 1073, 143 Iowa, 255.

The interest fixed by Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 5686, in relation to the construction of sewers by municipalities, providing that the tax bill of an assessment shall bear interest at a specified rate from 30 days after the date of issue, etc., is not interest at all; that is to say, it is not a consideration provided for the use of money, but it is a penalty inflicted as a punishment for a breach of duty. City of St. Joseph v. Forsee, 91 S. W. 445, 446, 115 Mo. App. 510.

The imposition by Rev. St. 1899, § 9225, of one per cent. per month as an additional tax or penalty for failure to pay general taxes before the end of the year, is not "interest" in any proper sense. Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Woesten, 75 S. W. 464, 468, 176 Mo. 49.

Legal interest is the measure of damages for failure to pay debts when they are due, and hence a contract to pay an amount in excess of such interest on account of a default in the payment of money when it is due is an agreement for a penalty which the courts will not enforce. United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Abbott, 158 Fed. 762, 763, 86 C. O. A. 118.

The statute providing for the collection of 10 per cent. "interest" on special tax bills for the first 6 months excluding the first 30 days, and for 15 per cent. per annum thereafter until paid, and allowing interest on a judgment thereafter from the date of its rendition at 15 per cent. per annum, imposed a penalty; and hence where the tax bill sued on was defective, in that it was issued against the estate of the holder of the record title, instead of defendant, who was the owner, defendant was only liable for interest on the judgment at the rate of 6 per cent. City of St. Joseph ex rel. Gibson v. Forsee, 84 S. W. 1138, 1139, 110 Mo. App. 237 (citing City of St. Louis v. Allen, 53 Mo. 57; Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Woesten, 75 S. W. 464, 176 Mo. 60; Tipton v. Norman, 72 Mo. 380; Eyerman v. Blaksley, 78 Mo. 145).

The term "interest," when used to designate a rate per cent. to be paid for the use of money, has a distinct significance derived from commercial usage, meaning simply the market value of the use of money, which value may be limited by law; while the term "penalty" is used to designate a clause in an agreement by which the obligor agrees to pay a certain sum of money if he shall fail to fulfill the contract contained in another clause of the same agreement. A "penalty" always includes two distinct agreements, so that when the first is fulfilled the second is void; and when a breach has taken place the obligee has the option to require the fulfillment of the first obligation or payment of the penalty, but not before. National Life Ins. Co. v. Hall, 125 Pac. 1108, 1109, 34 Okl. 395 (citing Words and Phrases).

Premium

Complainant, a New York life insurance corporation, made so-called "policy loans" to policy holders in Louisiana; the transactions being as follows: When sufficient premiums had been paid on a policy to give it a recognized reserve value, complainant on application would advance the amount of such reserve value to the holder, taking the policy in pledge and requiring the insured to pay in addition to each future annual premium a sum equal to the interest on the amount of the advance. Such advance was never collected until the policy matured or lapsed, when it was deducted from the amount due from complainant thereon. This additional payment may be called "interest" or may be called an "additional premium." As a matter of fact, it is essentially an additional premium paid by the policy holder in order to obtain the privilege of drawing down the earned reserved value of his policy. It is thereafter treated strictly as a part of the premium. N. Y. Life Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors, for Parish of Orleans, 158 Fed. 462, 467.

INTEREST IN COMMON

Civ. Code, § 686, defines the term "interest in common" as every interest created in favor of several persons in their own right unless declared in its creation to be a joint interest. Conde v. Dreisam Gold Min. Co., 86 Pac. 825, 828, 3 Cal. App. 583.

Civ. Code, § 1350, provides that a devise to more than one person vests in them as owners in common. Section 683 defines a "joint interest" as one owned by several persons in equal shares by title created by a single will or transfer, when expressly declared in the will or transfer to be a joint tenancy. Section 685 declares that an "interest in common" is one owned by several persons not in joint ownership or partnership. Where a bequest was made of all the testator's estate to two persons without declaring any joint tenancy or right of survivorship, it created a clear tenancy in common. In re Hittell's Estate, 75 Pac. 53, 54, 141 Cal. 432.

INTEREST OF DRAINAGE DISTRICT

The phrase, "with a view to promoting the interests of said drainage district," used in Laws 1907, p. 474, c. 153, authorizing the establishment of drainage districts, relative to the duties of the county commissioners in establishing a district, means the public interest, and not the private advantage to be gained by any property owner. State ex rel. Harris v. Hanson, 115 N. W. 294, 295, 80 Neb. 724.

INTERFERE—INTERFERENCE

When the owner of an easement is deprived of his right, he is not referred to as having been "dispossessed" of the land, but it is referred to as an "interference," "obstruction," or "disturbance." The remedy is on the case, for damages for the injury done, or, if this is inadequate, permanent injunction is the proper remedy. Kansas & C. P. R. Co. v. Burns, 79 Pac. 238, 240, 70 Kan. 627.

In mining parlance an interference exists where within the boundaries of the lands sold, or partially within those boundaries, there are other lands owned by other parties; and it is a prejudicial interference, when the intervening lands are so situated as to interfere with the operation and use of the lands sold, and thereby affect their value. Hotchkiss v. Bon Air Coal & Iron Co., 78 Atl. 1108, 1113, 108 Me. 34.

The term "interference," used with reference to a public street or highway, conveys the idea of actual disturbance. People v. Eckerson, 117 N. Y. Supp. 418, 422, 133 App. Div. 220.

Where a nonunion laborer was kept out of employment by threats of violence to his person, made by union laborers, there was an interference with the employment of the nonunion laborer, within Rev. St. 1899, § 2155 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1385), prohibiting interference with lawful employment by threats. Carter v. Oster, 112 S. W. 995, 996, 134 Mo. App. 146.

INTERFERENCE WITH FREEDOM TO CONTRACT

The limitation of employment in bakeries, attempted by Rev. St. 1899, § 10088, fixing the number of days in a week employes shall work, and between what hours in certain cases, is an arbitrary "interference with freedom to contract" guaranteed by Const. U. S. Amend. 14, § 1, and by similar provisions in Const. Mo. art. 2, §§ 4, 30. State v. Miksicek, 125 S. W. 507, 509, 225 Mo. 561, 135 Am. St. Rep. 597.

INTERFERENCE WITH INTERSTATE COMMERCE

See Interstate Commerce.

INTERIOR

In a contract by which there was to be delivered to the commissary of the United States troops stationed at certain points and camps as were situated in the "interior" of the Island of Cuba, at certain times such quantities of fresh meat fit for immediate use as from time to time might be required, the word "interior" means remote from the sea coast, and does not include Los Quemados, the camp of the main body of troops near Havana, and only 6 or 8 miles therefrom, and 2½ miles from the beach of Mariacao. Simpson v. United States, 26 Sup. Ct. 54, 55, 199 U. S. 397, 50 L. Ed. 245.

INTERIOR FINISH

New York Building Code, § 105, relating to fireproof buildings, provides that no woodwork or other inflammable material shall be used in any of the partitions, furrings, or ceilings in any fireproof building, except the doors and window frames in certain buildings less than 12 stories high, and that, when the building exceeds 12 stories, the floor surfaces shall be of stone or similar incombustible material, or the floors and sleepers may be of wood treated by some process approved by the board of buildings to render same fireproof, and that all inside window frames and sash and other "interior finish" may be of wood covered with metal, or of wood treated with some fireproofing process. Held, that the words "interior finish" related to the permanent structure, and that the section did not require trade fixtures used in a fireproof building over 12 stories high to be covered with metal or treated with a fireproofing process. City of New York v. A. T. Stewart Realty Co., 96 N. Y. Supp. 513, 515, 109 App. Div. 702.

INTERLOCK

An "interlock" occurs where the title papers of one person are not limited to or bounded by those of another, but the courses and distances or natural objects called for carrying the claim of the one over onto the land of the other so that the calls in the title papers of the former necessarily describe a portion of the land included in those of the latter. The word necessarily implies a lapping of boundaries, or there can be no interlock within which actual adverse possession of a part can ripen the junior title into good title to the whole as against the senior claimant. A mere dispute between conflicting claimants as to where the true lines and corners are does not constitute an interlock, within the meaning of the West Virginia decisions, respecting adverse possession of interlocks. Robinson v. Sheets, 61 S. E. 347, 348, 63 W. Va. 394 (citing Storrs v. Felck, 24 W. Va. 606; Oney v. Clendenin, 28 W. Va. 34).

Where one grant conflicts in part with another, occasioning what is called a "lap" or "interlock," the elder patentee under his grant acquires at once constructive seisin in deed of all the land embraced within its boundaries, although he has taken no actual possession of any part thereof. The junior grantee under his grant acquires similar constructive seisin in deed of all the land embraced by his boundaries, except that portion within the interlock, the seisin of which had already vested in the senior grantee. Green v. Pennington, 54 S. E. 877, 878, 105 Va. 801 (citing Kolner v. Rankin's Heirs, 11 Grat. [52 Va.] 427).

"Interlocking" means united with, to embrace, to connect with, to flow into, to be connected in one system, to interlace firmly." As used in an inventor's description of certain parts of a milk can, it did not necessarily mean that such parts were to be interlocked in a sense that a door is locked. Iron Clad Mfg. Co. v. Dairymen's Mfg. Co., 138 Fed. 123, 129.

INTERLOCUTORY

"Interlocutory" (in law) means that which does not decide the cause, but settles some intervening matter relating to the cause. In re Sullivan's Estate, 78 Pac. 945, 946, 86 Wash. 217.

INTERLOCUTORY APPLICATION

An "interlocutory application" is "a request to the court or to a judge at chambers for its interference in a matter arising in the progress of a cause or proceeding; and it may either relate to the process of the court, or to the protection of the property in litigation pendente lite, or to any matter upon which the interference of the court or judge is required before, or in consequence of, a decree or order." Horn v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 151 Fed. 626, 636 (quoting and adopting Daniel's Ch. Pl. & Fr. [4th Am. Ed.] 1734, 1735).

INTERLOCUTORY DECREE OR JUDGMENT

See, also, Final Decree or Judgment.

An "interlocutory decree" is properly a decree pronounced for the purpose of ascertaining matter of fact or law preparatory to a final decree. Crockett v. Crockett, 106 N. W. 944, 946, 132 Iowa, 388.

An "interlocutory decree," such as is provided for in divorce cases by Comp. Laws 1907, §§ 1184, 1212, as amended by Sess. Laws 1909, c. 109, §§ 1, 2, is one made pending a cause and before final hearing on the merits, one where further action of the court is necessary to give complete relief. Parsons v. Parsons (Utah) 122 Pac. 907, 908 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, 3712).

The term "interlocutory decree" indicates that it is not final, that it is intermediate, that something may supervene affecting the status of the thing adjudged. Jordan v. Missouri & Kansas Telephone Co., 116 S. W. 432, 434, 136 Mo. App. 192.

An "interlocutory decree" is usually one which determines some matter between the commencement and the end of a suit, but leaves something else to be determined, not being a final disposition of the matter in issue. Reed v. Reed, 100 Pac. 897, 898, 9 Cal. App. 748.

A decree sustaining demurrers to a cross-bill and dismissing the same is not appealable as an "interlocutory decree," under Code 1907, § 2838, authorizing appeals from certain interlocutory decrees. Aston v. Dodson, 49 South. 856, 857, 161 Ala. 518.

In Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, § 7, 26 Stat. 828, creating the Circuit Courts of Appeals, as amended by Act Feb. 18, 1895, c. 96, 28 Stat. 666, and Act June 6, 1900, c. 803, 31 Stat. 660, relating to appeals from Circuit and District Courts, and providing that "where upon a hearing in equity * * * an injunction shall be granted or continued or a receiver appointed, by an interlocutory order or decree * * * an appeal may be taken from such interlocutory order or decree," the phrase "hearing in equity" does not mean the trial of an equity cause on the merits; the right of appeal being given from an "interlocutory" order or decree, which means one entered pending the cause and before final hearing on the merits, and disposing of some intervening matter relating to the cause. Taylor v. Breesa, 163 Fed. 678, 683, 80 C. C. A. 558.

An interlocutory judgment is an intermediate or incomplete judgment, where the rights of the parties are settled but something remains to be done. White v. Gibson, 113 N. Y. Supp. 983, 985, 61 Misc. Rep. 436.

Interlocutory judgments are such as are given in the middle of a cause upon some plea, proceeding, or default, which is only intermediate, and does not finally determine or complete the suit. Any judgment leaving something to be done by the court before the rights of the parties are determined, and not putting an end to the action in which it is entered, is interlocutory. Leonard v. Sibley, 56 Atl. 1015, 76 Vt. 254.

"Interlocutory judgments" are such as are given in the progress of a cause upon some plea, proceeding, or default, which is only intermediate and does not finally determine or complete the suit; but contemplates further proceeding for that purpose. Elliott v. Mayfield, 3 Ala. 223, 226 (citing 2 Toml. Law Dict. 287; Bing. Judgm. 2, 13; 3 Bl. Comm. 396).

An order of the court, made in the progress of the court, requiring something to be done or observed, but without determining the controversy, is an interlocutory order, which is sometimes called an "interlocutory judgment." Neyens v. Flesher, 79 N. E. 1087, 1089, 39 Ind. App. 399 (citing Pfeiffer v. Crane, 89 Ind. 485).

An interlocutory order or judgment from which an appeal will not lie is one that relates only to some question of law or matter of practice in the course of the proceeding, and leaves something remaining to be done by the court entering the order, or by some other court having jurisdiction to entertain the same, and to proceed further therewith. City of Batesville v. Ball, 140 S. W. 712, 714, 100 Ark. 496.

An order of the court, made in the progress of the cause, requiring something to be done or observed, but not determining the controversy, is an "interlocutory order," and is sometimes called an "interlocutory judgment." Mak-Saw-Ba Club v. Coffin, 82 N. E. 461, 462, 169 Ind. 204 (citing Pfeiffer v. Crane, 89 Ind. 485).

A judgment which merely settles some preliminary point or reserves for future determination some detail essential to the adjustment of the litigation is interlocutory. State ex rel. Potter v. Riley, 118 S. W. 647, 655, 219 Mo. 667.

An "interlocutory judgment" is one which is given in the middle of a cause upon some plea, proceeding, or default which is only intermediate, and does not finally determine or complete the suit. Miller v. Crawford, 126 S. W. 984, 985, 140 Mo. App. 711.

A judgment is interlocutory under Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, defining a judgment as either interlocutory or final where it is entered against the defendant after demurrer to reply to a separate defense has been overruled, dismissing the separate defense, and providing that plaintiff recover a certain sum as costs and disbursements on the trial of the demurrer and issue of law. Maeder v. Wexler, 87 N. Y. Supp. 402, 403, 43 Misc. Rep. 19.

The term "interlocutory judgment," in Code Civ. Proc. § 1774, providing that no final judgment in divorce shall be entered in an action until after three months from the filing of the decision, and that a judgment annulling the marriage or divorcing the parties shall be interlocutory only, and shall provide for the entry of judgment three months after the entry of the "interlocutory judgment," unless otherwise ordered by the court, must be regarded as referring to the form of judgment not heretofore within the meaning of the term, and the term is not restricted to its ordinary meaning, and the interlocutory judgment employed by the statute is not intended to serve as an adjudication annulling or dissolving the marriage, but serving, as in the case of the English decree nisi, as a cautionary measure delaying the final judgment for a period of three months in order to give the party in interest an opportunity to show cause why final judgment should not be entered. The entry in an action for absolute divorce of an interlocutory judgment of divorce does not affect the dissolution of the marriage, but it remains unimpaired until the entry of the final judgment. Petit v. Petit, 91 N. Y. Supp. 979, 980, 45 Misc. Rep. 155.

Under Acts 1903, p. 125, c. 59, supplementary to Acts 1901, p. 461, c. 207, relating to interurban railways crossing steam railroads at grade, and permitting an appeal from a decision adverse to the objections of the company whose way is crossed, to the point of crossing under the restrictions provided for appeals in civil cases, an appeal from an order fixing the point of crossing is an appeal from an "interlocutory order" within Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 659, and must be dismissed where appellant has failed to comply with the procedure required in such an appeal. Terre Haute & L. Ry. Co. v. Indianapolis & N. W. Traction Co., 78 N. E. 661, 662, 167 Ind. 193 (citing Black, Judgm. § 21; Elliott, App. Proc. § 83).

A judgment granted plaintiff "a divorce from bed and board for the term and period of two years from" the date of the judgment, and awarded her the right to possession, use, and income of a portion of the property for the term of five years from its date, and expressly provided that it should not prejudice the right of plaintiff to apply for judgment of divorce from the bonds of matrimony, or from bed and board forever, in the event that defendant did not refrain from the use of intoxicating liquors, and that it should not be deemed to provide for or to be a final distribution and division of the property of defendant between the parties thereto. The judgment was based on findings of cruel and inhuman treatment and habitual drunkenness. Held, that such judgment was interlocutory, within Rev. St. 1898, § 2883, which provides that "in case of a finding or decision substantially disposing of the merits, but leaving an account to be taken, or issue of fact to be decided, or some condition to be performed, * * * an interlocutory judgment may be made, disposing of all the issues covered by the finding or decision, and reserving further questions," and that it did not bar plaintiff from filing a subsequent application in the same cause, after the expiration of two years, asking for separation from bed and board forever. Lamberton v. Lamberton, 104 N. W. 807, 811, 125 Wis. 616.

Code Civ. Proc. § 3367, provides for the trial of issues raised by the petition and answer in a condemnation proceeding by the court or referee. Section 3369 provides for judgment on the decision of the court or referee, and provides that, if in favor of the defendant, the petition shall be dismissed, with costs, but, if in favor of plaintiff, the judgment shall adjudge that condemnation is necessary, and the court shall thereupon appoint commissioners to ascertain the compensation, nothing being said as to costs being included in this judgment. Section 3371 provides that, upon confirmation of the commissioners' report, the final order shall be entered directing payment of the compensation, and that thereupon plaintiff shall be entitled to possession. Section 3372 provides for an offer by the plaintiff to purchase the property, and that if the offer is not accepted, and the compensation awarded by the commissioners does not exceed the offer, no costs shall be allowed, but that if the compensation exceeds the offer, or if no offer is made, the court shall in the final order direct that the defendant recover the costs of the proceeding at the same rate as where the defendant is the prevailing party in an action. It also provides that if a trial has been had, and the issues determined in favor of plaintiff, costs of the trial caused by the interposition of the unsuccessful defendant shall be allowed plaintiff. Section 3373 provides that upon entry of the final order it shall be attached to the judgment roll, and the amount directed to be paid as compensation, or costs, or expenses, shall be docketed as a judgment. Held, that a judgment dismissing the petition, entered on a decision in favor of defendant, is a "final judgment"; but the judgment directing the appointment of commissioners, entered on a decision in favor of plaintiff, is interlocutory. Marshall v. Hatfield, 138 N. Y. Supp. 733, 735.

Accounting or reference

A decree which perpetuates an injunction restraining defendant from cutting timber alleged to belong to plaintiff, and which appoints a master to ascertain the damages, is an "interlocutory decree," within Code 1906, § 35, providing that an appeal from an interlocutory decree must be applied for within 10 days after the date thereof. Smith v. Hollifield, 54 South. 84, 98 Miss. 649.

An "interlocutory judgment" is an intermediate or incomplete judgment, where the rights of the parties are settled, but something remains to be done, as when there is an accounting to be had, a question of damages to be ascertained, or a reference required to determine the amount of the rent due for use and occupation. White v. Gibson, 113 N. Y. Supp. 983, 985, 61 Misc. Rep. 436 (quoting Cambridge Valley National Bank v. Lynch, 76 N. Y. 514, 516).

A decree, in a suit for specific performance of a contract for the exchange of property, which directs defendant to convey on the delivery to him by plaintiff of a special sum, less whatever amount may be found to be due plaintiff on an accounting, and which adjuges that plaintiff is entitled to an accounting for the profits of the real estate which defendant agreed to convey, less the amount paid by him for taxes, repairs, and interest on an incumbrance, is an "interlocutory decree," and defendant is not required to appeal from it. Gray v. Ames, 77 N. E. 219, 220, 220 Ill. 251, 5 Ann. Cas. 174.

Final decree or judgment distinguished
See Final Decree or Judgment.

INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTION

"Preliminary or 'interlocutory injunctions' are those granted prior to the final hearing and determination of the trial, and continue until answer, or until the final hearing, or until the further order of the court. * * * Their object is to maintain the status quo, to maintain property in its existing condition, to prevent further or impending injury—not to determine the right itself." In re Sharp, 124 Pac. 532, 534, 87 Kan. 504, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 460 (quoting definition in 22 Cyc. p. 740).

Under B. & O. Comp., § 417, defining an injunction as an order requiring a defendant to refrain from a particular act, an interlocutory injunction operates in personam, and does not determine the merits of the case or the rights of the parties, and does not change the possession of real or personal property, the title to which is in dispute, but it merely seeks to preserve the status quo pending the trial. Gobbi v. Dileo, 111 Pac. 49, 51, 58 Or. 14, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 951.

INTERLOCUTORY MOTION

A motion under Rev. St. c. 84, § 23, to require a party to produce books and papers for inspection, is "interlocutory." Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Bodwell Granite Co., 66 Atl. 314, 316, 102 Me. 148.

INTERLOCUTORY ORDER

See Final Order.

Interlocutory order or decree, see Interlocutory Decree.

Interlocutory order or judgment, see Interlocutory Judgment.

"Interlocutory orders" are orders made in the course of the cause which does not touch the merits of the cause so as to affect the rights of the parties. Nelson v. Brown, 10 Atl. 721, 722, 59 Vt. 600.

An order setting aside a default before entry of judgment thereon is not appealable; it not being an "order after judgment" or an "interlocutory order," within Code Civ. Proc. § 963, making appealable interlocutory orders entered in actions to redeem mortgaged property or in partition suits, etc. Savage v. Smith, 97 Pac. 821, 822, 154 Cal. 325.

Where, in an action against a railroad company to recover for an alleged illegal discrimination in the distribution of cars, a rule on defendant to produce distribution sheets is made absolute, an appeal will not lie from the order before judgment is rendered against defendant by default on such rule, as provided by Act Feb. 27, 1798, as such order is "interlocutory." Quinn v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 67 Atl. 949, 950, 219 Pa. 24 (citing Logan v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 19 Atl. 137, 132 Pa. 408).

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 3644, providing that the plaintiff in a civil action may have a temporary injunction, that after answer filed a motion may be made to dissolve the injunction, and that on such motion the parties may introduce testimony, and that the court shall decide on the weight of the testimony, an order on a motion to dissolve is an "interlocutory order," and the effect is not changed by section 806, providing that an appeal may be taken from any order dissolving an injunction, and that failure to appeal from any decision before final judgment shall be without prejudice to the right to have the action reviewed on appeal from the final judgment; nor is the character of such order affected by the fact that on the motion to dissolve testimony was heard on the merits of the whole case, and that the account of the receiver appointed by the court on its own motion as an adjunct of the temporary injunction was settled. State ex rel. Manning v. Smith, 86 S. W. 867, 869, 188 Mo. 167.

INTERMEDDLE—INTERMEDDLING

See, also, Maintenance.

Under Revival 1905, § 28, providing that a foreign executor has no authority to "intermeddle" with the "estate" until he shall have entered into bond, etc., a foreign executor to whom land situate in North Carolina is devised in his representative capacity, with power to sell and receive the price, has no authority to convey the land without first qualifying in North Carolina; the word "estate" embracing an interest in anything that is the subject of property, and the word "intermeddle" meaning any interference with or control over any part of the estate including a sale thereof. Glascock v. Gray, 62 S. E. 433, 435, 148 N. C. 346.

INTERMEDDLER

An "intermeddler" is a person who officiously intrudes into a business to which he has no right, and the distinction between an intermeddler and a trespasser is not in any case very great. Vassor v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 54 S. E. 849, 852, 142 N. C. 68, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 950, 9 Ann. Cas. 535; Aga v. Harbach, 102 N. W. 833, 835, 127 Iowa, 144, 109 Am. St. Rep. 377, 4 Ann. Cas. 441 (quoting and adopting definition in Sloan v. Central Iowa Ry. Co., 16 N. W. 331, 62 Iowa, 728).

INTERMEDIATE ORDER

Code Civ. Proc. § 515, abolishes writs of error and certiorari in criminal proceedings, and section 517 provides for appeal to the Supreme Court from a judgment of conviction and review thereon of intermediate orders forming a part of the judgment roll.

Held, that an "intermediate order," within the meaning of section 517, is not confined to orders made between the finding of the indictment and the preparation of the judgment roll in the first instance, but the word "intermediate" as thus used means between the finding of the indictment and the completion of the judgment roll by the attachment of the case thereto whenever it is filed. People v. Jackson, 100 N. Y. Supp. 126, 138, 114 App. Div. 697.

An order granting a new trial was not reviewable upon appeal from the judgment on the second trial as an "intermediate order," under Rev. Code Civ. Proc. § 463, providing that upon appeal from a judgment the Supreme Court may review any intermediate order or determination of the court which involves the merits and necessarily affects the judgment appearing upon the record transmitted from the circuit court. Ewing v. Lunn, 115 N. W. 527, 529, 22 S. D. 95.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 542, providing that the Supreme Court may reverse, vacate, and modify a judgment of a district court, or other court of record, excepting a probate court, for errors appearing on the record, and in the reversal of such judgment or order may reverse, vacate or modify any "intermediate order" involving the merits of the action or any portion thereof, the "intermediate order" mentioned is an order from which no appeal can be taken under the Code, and which therefore but for this provision could be reviewed, and applies exclusively to non-appealable orders. White v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 88 Pac. 54, 56, 74 Kan. 778, 11 Ann. Cas. 550 (quoting and adopting definition in Brown v. Willoughby, 5 Colo. 1, 8; and citing McCourtney v. Fortune, 42 Cal. 387, 390; Maynard v. Johnson, 2 Nev. 16).

An order for the inspection and copy of documents made under Code Civ. Proc. § 368, is reviewable after judgment as an intermediate order involving the merits. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Burks, 96 Pac. 950, 951, 78 Kan. 515, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 231.

Where a final judgment was entered in a mortgage foreclosure action by direction of the court in the form of an order overruling a demurrer to the complaint as frivolous, an appeal from the judgment raised the propriety of the decision directing its entry, and did not limit the review to the question whether the judgment complied with the order, though the notice of appeal did not state an intention to review the order, since the order was not appealable and was not an "intermediate order" within Code Civ. Proc. § 1347, specifying appealable orders. Smith v. Thompson, 103 N. Y. Supp. 336, 337, 118 App. Div. 6.

An "intermediate order," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1316, providing that an appeal taken from a final judgment brings up for review an interlocutory judgment or an "intermediate order" which is specified in the notice of appeal and necessarily affects the final judgment, etc., is one made between the commencement and termination of the action. Where, after a referee made a report dismissing the complaint, plaintiff moved to amend, and to recommit the report to the referee for further findings, orders denying such motions were not "intermediate orders" reviewable on appeal from the final judgment, and were therefore reviewable only by a direct appeal. Spencer v. Huntington, 91 N. Y. Supp. 561, 568, 100 App. Div. 468.

An order overruling a demurrer to the complaint is an intermediate order within Rev. Codes 1905, § 7216, and a stay of proceedings on an appeal from such an order is, under the statute, within the discretion of the court. Devereaux v. Katz, 133 N. W. 553, 22 N. D. 351.

An order denying a motion to interpose an additional plea of former jeopardy is intermediate and not appealable, as it may be gotten into the judgment roll, as defined by Code Cr. Proc. § 485, and so, under section 517, reviewable on appeal from a judgment on conviction. People v. Wendel, 112 N. Y. Supp. 837, 838, 128 App. Div. 437.

INTERMEDIATE POINT

Where freight less than a car load destined for a point on a branch line was loaded into a car intended to go through without breaking bulk, and the car at the junction was shifted from the carrier's main to its branch line, and transported to destination, the junction point was an "intermediate point" within Revisal 1905, § 2632, entitling a carrier to a delay of 48 hours at one intermediate point for every 100 miles of distance or fraction thereof without penalty for delay. Wall-Huske Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., 61 S. E. 277, 278, 147 N. C. 407.

A station at which a car must be taken out of a local train which comes into the station and then placed into another train leaving the station for the point of destination is not an "intermediate point," within Revisal 1905, § 2632, requiring transportation of freight within a reasonable time, and authorizing a delay at an intermediate point. Brooks Mfg. Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., 68 S. E. 243, 245, 152 N. C. 665.

A station on defendant's railroad which was the terminus of two other railroads was not an "intermediate point" with reference to freight not transferred to the other lines but shipped through on defendant's line to points beyond, within the meaning of Revisal 1905, § 2632, providing what shall be a reasonable time for the transportation of freight, and authorizing a delay of 48 hours at one intermediate point for each 100 miles. Davis & Hooks v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 59 S. E. 53, 54, 145 N. C. 207.

INTERMENTS

The word "interments," as used in a statute empowering boards of health to regulate interments, is not confined to the acts done within burial grounds, and properly includes and describes the removal of bodies for the purpose of burial. Commonwealth v. Goodrich, 13 Allen [95 Mass.] 546, 548.

INTERNAL

INTERNAL AFFAIRS

"Internal affairs," within Const. art. 4, § 7, subd. 11, prohibiting the Legislature from passing private, local, or special laws regulating the internal affairs of municipalities, are those which are governmentally, and not merely territorially, internal to the municipalities. Meehan v. Board of Excise Com'rs of Jersey City, 70 Atl. 363, 364, 75 N. J. Law, 557.

Where a corporate act complained of affects the complainant only in his relation as a shareholder or officer of the corporation, and no public right is involved, then the controversy must be said to relate to the "internal affairs" of the company, and, in case of a foreign corporation, the great weight of authority is opposed to the jurisdiction of the court of equity. Westminster Nat. Bank v. New England Electrical Works, 62 Atl. 971, 975, 73 N. H. 465, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 551, 111 Am. St. Rep. 637 (citing Bradbury v. Waukegan & W. Mining & Smelting Co., 113 Ill. App. 600).

The word "internal," as used in the constitutional prohibition of special legislation in regard to the internal affairs of municipalities, means governmentally, not territorially, internal. Such matters of local government as are confided to the municipalities at once become, and until recalled remain, their internal affairs, but it is not every matter of governmental regulation, local in its effect when territorially considered, that is an internal affair of the municipality within the meaning of the constitutional interdict, as otherwise there would have been little need for the prohibition of special legislation regulating roads, public grounds, etc., and the constitutional inhibition is not violated by P. L. 1903, p. 777, relative to the creation of the Passaic Valley sewerage district. Van Cleve v. Passaic Valley Sewerage Com'rs., 58 Atl. 571, 575, 71 N. J. Law, 183.

A suit in equity by a trustee in bankruptcy of a foreign corporation against all resident stockholders, who alone are solvent, to set aside a fraudulent dividend by which unpaid stock subscriptions were nominally satisfied and to recover the amount thereof, is not a suit relating to the management of the internal affairs of the corporation, which is foreign to the jurisdiction of the court, as the term "internal affairs" does not extend to cheating creditors, but is confined to relations affecting only the stockholders and the corporation among themselves; and, as the corporation and creditors are represented in the litigation by the trustee, all the necessary parties are before the court, and it will take jurisdiction of the controversy. Edwards v. Schillinger, 91 N. E. 1048, 1053, 245 Ill. 231, 33 L. R. A. 895, 187 Am. St. Rep. 308.

Where an act complained of affects complainant solely in his capacity as a member of a corporation, whether as stockholder or officer, and is the act of the corporation, whether acting in stockholders' meeting or through the board of directors, such action is the management of the "internal affairs of a corporation." Jackson v. Hooper, 75 Atl. 568, 573, 76 N. J. Eq. 592, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 658.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT

The term "works of internal improvement," in Const. art. 3, § 34, declaring that the General Assembly shall not have power to involve the state in the construction of "works of internal improvement" or in granting any aid thereto, was not intended to and does not embrace the public highways contemplated by Acts 1904, p. 388, § 225, authorizing the furnishing of state aid for the construction of roads by counties and appropriating a certain sum annually for that purpose. Bonsal v. Yellott, 60 Atl. 593, 597, 100 Md. 481, 69 L. R. A. 914.

The construction and maintenance of parks, waterworks, sewers, and a public lighting system are not works of "internal improvement," within Const. art. 14, § 9, providing that the city shall not be a party to or interested in any work of internal improvement, nor engage in carrying on any such work, etc., such undertakings being mere contributions to the public health, safety, and welfare. Attorney General ex rel. Brotherton v. Common Council of City of Detroit, 111 N. W. 860, 861, 148 Mich. 71.

Canals and other works constructed for irrigation or water power purposes are works of "internal improvement," and the right of eminent domain is extended to persons and corporations engaged in the construction of such works. Cline v. Stock, 102 N. W. 265, 266, 71 Neb. 70.

To erect and maintain a public wharf is not a "work of internal improvement," within Const. 1850, art. 14, § 9 (Const. 1908, art. 10, § 14), providing that the state shall not be a party to or interested in any work of internal improvement, etc., nor engage in carrying on any such work except in certain immaterial cases. Hence there is no constitutional limitation on the power of the Legislature to authorize a city of the fourth class to erect and maintain a public wharf. Nicholls v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge, 120 N. W. 343, 155 Mich. 455.

The construction, operation, and maintenance of an oil refinery, for the purpose of receiving, manufacturing, and handling oil and its by-products, and marketing the same, constituted a "work of internal improvement," within a constitutional provision prohibiting the state to carry on such works. State v. Kelly, 81 Pac. 450, 457, 458, 459, 71 Kan. 811, 70 L. R. A. 45, 6 Ann. Cas. 298.

An appropriation of money from a state general revenue fund to build roads and bridges constitutes a "work of internal improvement" within a constitutional prohibition against the state being a party to such works. Cooke v. Iverson, 122 N. W. 251, 253, 108 Minn. 388.

INTERNAL INJURIES

The complaint, after alleging injuries to the head, hips, knee, shoulder, the small of his back, and kidneys, alleged that "he suffered other internal injuries not yet fully ascertained and determined." Held, that evidence of injuries to a testicle, which was immediately known was not admissible. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Bennette, 119 S. W. 181, 182, 184 Ky. 19.

INTERNAL ORGANS

Injury to the pelvic organs may well be included in a claim in a declaration in an action for injuries to the "internal organs," specific notice that pelvic injury was claimed being given to defendant's surgeon. O'Donnell v. Rhode Island Co., 66 Atl. 578, 28 R. I. 245.

An allegation of a petition that plaintiff was injured "internally" was sufficient to admit proof of injury to her womb or any of her internal organs. Houston Electric Co. v. McDade, 79 S. W. 100, 101, 84 Tex. Civ. App. 497.

INTERNAL REVENUE COLLECTOR'S CERTIFICATE

As record, see Record.

INTERNATIONAL

The word "international" is a generic term pertaining to relations between nations, and, when applied to business or transactions of private character, it imports dealings of some sort in matters or with people of different nations. Travelers' Ins. Mach. Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., 134 S. W. 877, 881, 142 Ky. 523 (quoting from Koehler v. Sanders, 25 N. E. 235, 122 N. Y. 65, 9 L. R. A. 576).

INTERPLEADER

See Bill in the Nature of Interpleader; Bill of Interpleader; Strict Interpleader.

Under Code, § 189, which provides that a defendant may apply for an order substituting in his stead another who claims the debt, an order making a third person a party makes such person an "interpleader," though the order designates him as a "substitute." Maynard v. Life Ins. Co. of Virginia, 44 S. E. 405, 182 N. C. 711.

INTERPRETATION

In common usage "interpretation" and "construction" are usually understood as having the same significance, although there may be an abstract difference between them, and both are included in the word "construction" as used in Act March 2, 1907, authorizing a writ of error on behalf of the government from the federal Supreme Court to review a judgment of the District or Circuit Court quashing an indictment, when based upon the construction of the statute upon which the indictment was founded. United States v. Kettel, 29 Sup. Ct. 123, 127, 211 U. S. 370, 53 L. Ed. 230.

The object of an "interpretation" of a written instrument always is or should be to reach the actual intention of the parties as that intention is expressed in the writing. Laclede Const. Co. v. T. J. Moss Tie Co., 84 S. W. 76, 87, 185 Mo. 25 (citing Ellis v. Harrison, 16 S. W. 200, 104 Mo. 279).

INTERPRETER

As witness, see Witness.

An "interpreter" who is selected by persons speaking different languages as the medium of their communication with each other is regarded as their joint agent for that purpose. Kelly v. Ning Yung' Benev. Ass'n, 84 Pac. 321, 323, 2 Cal. App. 460.

An interpreter is a witness, for the purpose of interpreting testimony of others. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Jung, 49 South. 434, 440, 161 Ala. 461, 18 Ann. Cas. 557.

INTERROGATORIES

See Special Interrogatories.

INTERRUPT—INTERRUPTION

Rev. Civ. Code La. 1870, art. 3518, defined a legal "interruption" (of prescription) as taking place when the possessor has been cited to appear before a court of justice on account either of the ownership or of the possession, and provided that the prescription was interrupted by such demand, whether the suit had been brought before a court of competent jurisdiction or not. Lockhart v. Lockhart, 87 South. 860, 861, 113 La. 872.

Under a policy insuring rents, but requiring insured to rebuild as soon as the nature of the case would admit, and providing that insurer should not be liable for loss caused by "interruption of business," insurer is not liable for loss of rent from interruption of business caused by delays in rebuilding resulting from the fall of debris of the fire throughout the burnt district. Palatine Ins. Co. v. O'Brien, 71 Atl. 775, 778, 109 Md. 100.

INTERSECT—INTERSECTION

Cross and intersect, see Cross.

M. street runs east and west, and is joined on the north by P. avenue, which runs approximately north and south, and on the south by B. street; each of those streets ending at M. street. The southerly line of P. avenue, where it joins that street, is 19 feet from the northerly line of B. street, measured in the northerly line of M. street, and 29½ feet measuring at the southerly line. Defendant's street car track on the northerly side of M. street is 19 feet from the curb of M. street at the corner of P. avenue. Plaintiff was injured by the collision of a street car with a hack, in which he was being driven from P. avenue across M. street, in going to a place at the corner of B. street, and claimed that the collision was caused by defendant's negligent violation of an ordinance requiring the speed of cars to be slackened to four miles an hour when crossing intersecting streets. Held, that P. avenue and B. street were not "intersecting streets," within the meaning of the ordinance, nor were P. avenue and M. street "intersecting streets"; to "intersect" ordinarily meaning to cross, to cut into or between. Atwood v. Connecticut Co., 74 Atl. 899, 901, 82 Conn. 539.

Under St. 1885, c. 153, § 3, providing that, before any work shall be done or improvement made, the city council shall pass a resolution of intention so to do, and describing the work, the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco passed a resolution of intention to order the following street work in the city, to wit: "That granite curbs be laid where not already laid on the intersection of San Jose avenue, Twenty-Eighth and Guerrero streets, and that the roadway of said intersection be paved with bituminous rock except that portion required by law to be kept in order by the railroad company having tracks thereon." Such resolution was followed by a resolution ordering the work, and directing "that granite curbs be laid where not already laid on the intersection of San Jose avenue, Twenty-Eighth and Guerrero streets, and that the roadway of said intersection be paved with bituminous rock except that portion required by law to be kept in order by the railroad company having tracks thereon." Held, that the word "intersection" interpreted in its broadest sense meant the place where the three streets crossed each other, and that the letting of a contract for the improvement of a space outside such intersection was unauthorized, and an assessment levied thereon was void on its face, the act requiring that the notice of intention shall describe the work, and the limits of the district with common certainty, so that a person of ordinary understanding would know what it was proposed to do. Pacific Paving Co. v. Verso, 107 Pac. 590, 592, 12 Cal. App. 362.

An "Intersection," when applied to streets, means: "A place of crossing; a point where two lines or the lines in the two surfaces cross each other." Godfrey v. City of New York, 93 N. Y. Supp. 899, 903, 104 App. Div. 357 (quoting Stand. Dict.).

A provision of the transfer directing that it be tendered "at the intersection of the issuing line" means any point on the issuing line where a passenger can continue his direct journey by taking another car, and the fact that the point is at an intersection of tracks merely, and not an intersection of lines, is immaterial. Charbonneau v. Nassau Electric R. Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 105, 109, 123 App. Div. 531.

Under a statute authorizing railroad companies to "intersect, join, and unite," it is not essential, when more than two companies consolidate, that the line of each shall intersect the line of every other. Bonner v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co., 151 Fed. 985, 988, 81 C. C. A. 476.

"Ordinarily, we do not speak of a street, which starts from or terminates in another, as 'intersecting' it. It is only when it crosses or cuts through the other that it is said to intersect it, and that the streets are said to be 'intersecting streets.' Otherwise it is said to extend to or from the street in which it terminates. Intersect ordinarily means to cross, literally to cut into or between." Atwood v. Connecticut Co., 74 Atl. 899, 901, 82 Conn. 539.

INTERSECTING BOUNDARY

A turnpike may be treated as an "intersecting boundary" within the annexation act (Acts 1888, p. 113, c. 98), as amended by the Foutz act (Acts 1902, p. 198, c. 130), defining a block for taxation purposes to be an area bounded by intersecting avenues, streets, or alleys, etc. Coulson v. City of Baltimore, 71 Atl. 990, 109 Md. 271.

INTERSECTING WAY

St. 1909, c. 534, § 1, which defines the meaning of various terms used in the subsequent sections, providing that "intersecting way" shall mean any way which joins another at an angle, whether or not it crosses the other, is applicable to section 16, which makes it an offense to operate an automobile at a greater rate of speed on certain streets than is reasonable and proper, having regard to traffic, etc., notwithstanding section 33, providing that section 16, etc., shall take effect July 1, 1909, and that the act, except as otherwise provided, shall take effect on December 1, 1909. Commonwealth v. Cassidy, 95 N. E. 214, 216, 209 Mass. 24.

INTERSTATE BUSINESS

See Business of an Interstate Character.

Where the points of transmission and destination of a telegram sent over the lines of a single company were within the same state, the fact that a part of the transmission was made over lines of the company in another state did not make the same "interstate business" nor prevent it from being subject to a state statute providing a penalty for delay. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hughes, 51 S. E. 225, 227, 104 Va. 240.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE

See Connection with Interstate Commerce; Railroad Engaged in Interstate Commerce.

Restraint of, see Restraint of Commerce. Used in interstate commerce, see Use—Used.

See, also, Commerce; Regulate Commerce.

By "interstate traffic" is meant "traffic that is moving from one state or territory into or through some other state or territory." United States v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., 162 Fed. 775, 781.

Commerce among the states cannot stop at the external boundary line of each state, but may be introduced into the interior. It is not intended to say that these words comprehend that commerce which is completely internal, which is carried on between man and man in a state, or between different parts of the same state, and which does not extend to or affect other states. Such a power would be inconvenient, and is certainly unnecessary. Comprehensive as the word "among" is, it may very properly be restricted to that commerce which concerns more states than one. "Interstate commerce," or commerce among the several states, is commerce that concerns more than one state. The only form of commerce within the limits of the United States which is not subject to the vast and exclusive power of Congress is the purely internal commerce of each state, which is reserved to each by direct implication. Kansas Natural Gas Co. v. Haskell, 172 Fed. 545, 560 (citing Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. [22 U. S.] 1, 6 L. Ed. 23).

Commerce being intercourse, it is unimportant, in determining whether a transaction was interstate commerce, whether the negotiations were conducted by mail, by traveling salesmen, by telegraph, or by telephone. Every negotiation, initiatory and intervening act, contract, trade, and dealing between citizens of any state or territory, or the District of Columbia, with those of another political division of the United States, which contemplates and causes importation from one such division to another, whether it be of goods, persons, or information, is a transaction of interstate commerce. United States v. Tucker, 188 Fed. 741, 743.

Safety Appliance Act Cong. March 2, 1893, c. 196, § 6, as amended by Act Cong. April 1, 1896, c. 87, requiring common carriers "engaged in interstate commerce by railroad" to equip their cars with automatic couplers, etc., must be construed with the "Act to regulate commerce," etc., approved February 4, 1887 (Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104), as thereafter amended, and known as the "Interstate Commerce Act" (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591), which relates to "any common carrier engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad," etc., "under a common control, management, or arrangement, for a continuous carriage or shipment" from one state to another, such laws being part of one scheme, which is limited strictly to interstate commerce, and not intended to affect railroads operated wholly within a state independent of outside connections, and it is only when there is an arrangement with outside carriers for a continuous carriage from one state to another that the act applies; and hence, where the difference in gauge between defendant's line and that of a connecting carrier prevented a continuous carriage in the same car, and there was no through bill of lading and no conventional division of through charges, each company receiving its own charges according to its own rates, defendant was not "engaged in interstate commerce" within the meaning of the act though the goods carried were intended for shipment beyond the state. United States v. Geddes, 180 Fed. 480.

The mere hauling of an empty car from one state to another, though for the purpose of repairing a defect, is "engaging in interstate commerce." United States v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 157 Fed. 616, 619.

A city ordinance merely providing that no person shall distribute in any public street or from any buildings handbills, cards, circulars, or papers of any description except newspapers, reasonably construed and enforced by the officers as a police regulation only, to protect people on the streets from annoyance, is not unlawful as an "interference with interstate commerce," as against a concern doing business in another state and desiring to distribute on the public streets circulars advertising such business. International Text-Book Co. v. Auburn, 155 Fed. 986, 987.

Act Feb. 23, 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 81), imposing a penalty on a carrier failing to adjust and pay within a specified time a claim for loss of freight, is not unconstitutional, as an "interference with interstate commerce." De Lorme v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 60 S. E. 440, 441, 79 S. C. 370.

A tax upon property within the state which is the product of the soil of other states, imposed under the authority of Const.

Tenn. 1870, art. 2, §§ 28-30, and Acts Tenn. 1903, c. 258, §§ 1, 2, which exempt like property when produced from the soil of Tennessee, violates Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, as directly "interfering with interstate commerce." I. M. Darnell & Son Co. v. City of Memphis, 28 Sup. Ct. 247, 252, 208 U. S. 113, 52 L. Ed. 413.

Failure to deliver freight is not "interstate commerce." Hockfield v. Southern R. Co., 64 S. E. 181, 182, 150 N. C. 419, 134 Am. St. Rep. 945 (citing Morris-Scarboro-Moffitt Co. v. Southern Exp. Co., 59 S. E. 667, 146 N. C. 171, 15 L. R. A. [N. S.] 983).

A corporation engaged in the manufacture and sale of tobacco in its various forms, which purchases its raw materials and supplies in different states and in foreign countries, and ships them by means of common carriers into other states for manufacture, and its products from one state into another between its different factories and agencies, and sells the same by means of agencies and salesmen throughout the United States and in the markets of the world, is engaged in "interstate commerce," and it is immaterial that it distributes its products by means of common carriers or that the title technically passes on delivery to such carriers. United States v. American Tobacco Co., 164 Fed. 700, 704.

Webster defines "commerce" to be "the exchange or buying and selling of commodities, especially the exchange of merchandise on a large scale between different places or communities; extended trade or traffic." In Gibbons v. Ogden, it was said that "commerce" is more than traffic; it is intercourse; and that it is regulated by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse. It has even been held that "commerce" includes navigation and transportation of both persons and property, as well as traffic generally, and all the cases agree in treating the word "commerce" as one of large and extensive meaning. In Hopkins v. United States, 171 U. S. at page 597, 19 Sup. Ct. at page 47, 43 L. Ed. 290, it is said that the term "interstate commerce" is one of very large significance; that it comprehends intercourse for the purposes of trade in any and all its forms, including transportation, purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities between the citizens of different states, and the power to regulate it embraces all the instruments by which such commerce may be conducted. Brooks v. Southern Pac. Co., 148 Fed. 986, 991 (citing Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 847; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. Ed. 238; Gloucester Ferry Company v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 29 L. Ed. 158; Hooper v. California, 15 Sup. Ct. 207, 155 U. S. 648, 653, 39 L. Ed. 297; United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 15 Sup. Ct. 249, 156 U. S. 1, 39 L. Ed. 325).

A single shipment of a commodity, as tobacco, from one state into another to be marketed, constitutes "interstate trade and commerce," within the meaning of Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, § 1. Steers v. United States, 192 Fed. 1, 4, 112 C. C. A. 423.

Car loads of coal shipped from one state into another remain subjects of "interstate commerce" until delivery to the consignee, and an order of a state corporation commission directing the railroad company to place the cars on a certain track for unloading, as requested by the consignee, is without jurisdiction, and void, as an interference with "interstate commerce." Southern Ry. Co. v. Greensboro Ice & Coal Co., 134 Fed. 82, 91.

In determining the meaning and scope of the clause of the federal Constitution giving Congress power to regulate commerce, the Supreme Court has deemed it undesirable to give to the words employed therein any hard and fixed definition, or to mark with absolute certainty the extent of the power thereby conferred. It has been declared that "interstate commerce" is a term of very large significance, and that the power conferred by the Constitution as to interstate and foreign commerce, one without limitation. It authorizes legislation with respect to all subjects of foreign and interstate commerce, the persons engaged in it, and the instruments by which it is carried on. "Commerce" undoubtedly is traffic, but it is something more; it is intercourse. In view of the large significance given to the terms of the commerce clause and the scope of the power thereby conferred, Act Cong. June 11, 1906, 34 Stat. 232, c. 3073, commonly called the "Federal Employers' Liability Act," is a "regulation of commerce between the states, or with foreign nations," within the meaning of the commerce clause of the Constitution, and hence within the power of Congress. Kelley v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 152 Fed. 211, 217 (citing Hopkins v. U. S., 19 Sup. Ct. 40, 171 U. S. 578, 597, 43 L. Ed. 290; Sherlock v. Ailing, 93 U. S. 101, 23 L. Ed. 819; Telegraph Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 464, 26 L. Ed. 1067; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. [22 U. S.] 1, 189, 194, 6 L. Ed. 23).

"Interstate commerce" comprehends intercourse for the purposes of trade in any and all of its forms, including transportation, purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities between the citizens of different states; and if any commercial transaction reaches an entirety in two or more states, and if the parties dealing with reference to that transaction deal from different states, then the whole transaction is a part of the interstate commerce of the United States, and subject to regulation by Congress under the Constitution. In re Charge to Grand Jury, 151 Fed. 834, 840.

"Interstate commerce" is a term of the "largest import, comprehending intercourse for the purposes of trade in any and all its forms, including transportation." Act Cong. June 11, 1906, c. 3073, 34 Stat. 232, relating to the liability of common carriers engaged in commerce between the states to their employes, as stated in its title, commonly called the "Federal Employers' Liability Act," is a regulation of "interstate commerce." Spain v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 151 Fed. 522, 523.

The "power to regulate commerce" conferred by the federal Constitution on Congress is the power to regulate; that is, to prescribe the rule by which "commerce" is to be governed. Like all other powers vested in Congress, it is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than those prescribed by the Constitution. Webster defines "commerce" as the "exchange, or the buying and selling of commodities, intercourse." In Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (22 U. S.) 1, 6 L. Ed. 23, it is said that: "Commerce undoubtedly is traffic; but it is something more. It is intercourse." In Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 7 Sup. Ct. 4, 118 U. S. 557, 80 L. Ed. 244, it is held that "transportation of freight and passengers is commerce." "Interstate commerce" is the trading and trafficking in commodities between and amongst citizens of different states. It is transporting, by common carriers, passengers and property from one state into another state. It is the selling and buying of a commodity, or commodities, by a citizen of one state to a citizen of another state, which commodity is to be transported from the state of the seller to the state of the buyer, or to another state, and there resold, or used, as may serve the purpose of the buyer. Under these definitions, Act June 11, 1906, c. 3073, 34 Stat. 232, "relating to the liability of common carriers * * * engaged in commerce between the states * * * to their employes," and which makes every such carrier liable to any employe or his personal representative for all damages which may result from the negligence of any of its officers, agents, or employes, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency due to its negligence in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, ways or works, is not a regulation of "interstate commerce," but establishes new rules of liability, growing out of the relation of master and servant, which, if valid, are binding on all courts, both state and federal, but which have no such relation to "interstate commerce" as to bring them within the constitutional power of Congress to regulate such commerce, and the act is for that reason void. Howard v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 148 Fed. 997, 999, 1000 (citing Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. Ed. 238; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 347; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 114 U. S. 198, 29 L. Ed. 158; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 7 Sup. Ct. 4, 118 U. S. 557, 80

"Interstate commerce" within the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress, involves, as an essential and indispensable element, the transportation of property or intelligence from one state to another, embracing not only the property or intelligence so sent, but the physical agencies, as the railroad, express and telegraph companies engaged in the commerce, and their employes, as well as all persons who are directly connected as principals or agents in carrying on the business, except that as applied to intelligence it does not include all persons who write letters, but is confined to those persons, such as the postal authorities and employes of telegraph companies, through whose agency or instrumentality the intelligence desired to be sent is conveyed, and those who send or exchange intelligence as an essential part of their business and that directly results in the transportation of property. Defendant, a foreign corporation, operated a scheme to obtain commercial credits by publishing a list of attorneys throughout the United States, to promptly remit all moneys collected, and placed in the hands of subscribing business concerns throughout the United States. The attorneys paid defendant for advertisement or representation in the list, and also agreed to furnish defendant's business customers gratis credit reports direct concerning business houses in the vicinity of the attorney's residence with whom the business subscribers were contemplating contracts. These reports were sent through the mail irregularly and had no direct relation to the sale of goods to be transported in interstate commerce. Held, that the furnishing of such reports by defendant through its attorneys was not "interstate commerce," so as to relieve defendant from liability for a license tax under Ky. St. § 4224 (Russell's St. § 6157), providing that each corporation and its representatives in the state, engaging in reporting credits, shall pay a license tax of $100. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Commonwealth, 129 S. W. 314, 317, 139 Ky. 27, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 333.

Whatever may be the precise meaning of the words "interstate commerce," and their significance is certainly very broad, goods brought from one state into another at some time reach a stage where they are no longer immune by reason of the interstate commerce clause from any otherwise legal intrastate regulation. Respecting intoxicating liquors, that point of time is fixed by Act Cong. Aug. 8, 1890, c. 728, 26 Stat. 313, to be upon arrival in the state. Commonwealth v. People's Exp. Co., 88 N. E. 420, 423, 201 Mass. 564, 131 Am. St. Rep. 416 (citing Hopkins v. United States, 19 Sup. Ct. 40, 171 U. S. 578, 597, 43 L. Ed. 290).

While the installation of a new elevator in a building by a foreign corporation engaged in the business of manufacturing, constructing, and installing elevators might be an act of "interstate commerce," the repair of an old elevator is not. Haughton Elevator & Mach. Co. v. Detroit Candy Co., 120 N. W. 18, 19, 156 Mich. 25.

Agencies or instruments of

A sectionhand working on the track of a railroad over which both interstate and intrastate traffic is moved is employed in "interstate commerce" within Employers' Liability Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65. Zikos v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 179 Fed. 893, 898.

"Interstate commerce," though perhaps not limited thereto, includes interstate intercourse. "Interstate intercourse" is the passage of property, persons, or messages from within one state to within another state. It has certain adjuncts, to wit, the persons corporate or natural and their employés effectuating the passage; the means by which they effectuate it, including the ways, artificial, or natural, over which, and the instrumentalities by which, the passage is made and the money charged for the services rendered. Strictly speaking, these things are not interstate intercourse or commerce. They are merely the adjuncts thereof, but Congress is empowered by the provision of subsection 3, § 8, art. 1, of the Constitution, conferring on it the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states and with the Indian tribes, to regulate the adjuncts of interstate commerce as much so as interstate commerce itself. Its power to regulate them is as extensive, full, and complete as its power to regulate it. United States v. Adair, 152 Fed. 737, 743.

A connecting railroad carrier over whose line an interstate shipment passes is engaged in "interstate commerce" with respect to such shipment and subject to the law regulating the same, although its line may lie wholly within one state. United States v. Standard Oil Co., 155 Fed. 805, 810.

The headlight law (Act Aug. 17, 1908; Laws 1908, p. 50), requires a railroad company to equip and maintain every locomotive running on its main line after dark with a good and sufficient headlight, which shall consume not less than 300 watts at the arc, with a reflector not less than 23 inches in diameter, and to keep such headlight in good condition, and provides that any railroad company violating the act shall be liable to indictment and punishment, and that the act shall not apply to tram roads, mill roads, and roads engaged principally in lumber or logging transportation in connection with mills. Held, that the act does not violate Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, par. 3, giving Congress power to regulate commerce among the states, etc., because it would require at the state line a change of headlights on locomotives doing an interstate business, if other states required headlights different from those prescribed by the act, though such change might involve some loss of time and expense on the part of the railroad company. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. State, 69 S. E. 725, 729, 135 Ga. 545, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 20.

Revisal 1905, § 1097 (5), requiring that a railroad shall, in certain cases, put in side tracks to private industrial concerns, is not an interference with interstate commerce although such a road may run through several states, and may carry freight over this side track to other states. Corporation Commission v. Southern Ry. Co., 69 S. E. 621, 622, 153 N. C. 559.

A foreign corporation controlling the subordinate councils of a beneficial association within a state is not engaged in interstate commerce in such sense as to preclude the Legislature from excluding it from the state. National Council Junior Order United American Mechanics v. State Council Junior Order United American Mechanics, 51 S. E. 166, 169, 104 Va. 197.

Act Cong. April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65, imposing on interstate carriers liability to employés engaged in interstate commerce for injuries received through negligence of fellow servants, held a valid regulation of interstate commerce. Owens v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co., 128 N. W. 1011, 1013, 113 Minn. 49.

A corporation organized for the purpose of maintaining a stockyard, with the usual facilities of such yards as to loading and unloading and caring for freight, which lawfully owns and operates a railroad system for the transportation of cars to and from trunk lines, in the course of their transportation from beyond the state and to points outside of the state, is an interstate railway carrier, within the meaning of the interstate commerce act of February 4, 1887, and as such is obliged to file its tariffs with the Interstate Commerce Commission, as required by section 6 of that act. United States v. Union Stockyard & Transit Co. of Chicago, 33 Sup. Ct. 83, 85, 226 U. S. 286, 57 L. Ed. 226.

Commencement

Produce does not become a matter of interstate commerce until delivered to the carrier to be transported out of the state to the state of its destination, or until it has started on its ultimate transportation to that state. State v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 115 N. W. 614, 617, 81 Neb. 15.

"Interstate commerce" does not begin until the freight has been shipped or started for transportation from one state to another. Reid v. Southern Ry. Co., 69 S. E. 618, 619, 153 N. C. 490.

Employers' Liability Act

Where an employé of defendant, an interstate railroad company, was injured, in part through the negligence of a fellow servant, when working in repair shops connected with an interstate track, engaged in repairing a car used by defendant indiscriminately in both interstate and intrastate commerce as occasion required, defendant was at the time "engaged in interstate commerce," and the employé was employed by defendant in such commerce, within the meaning of Employers' Liability Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, § 1, and an action for his injury or death may be maintained against defendant thereunder. Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Maerkl, 198 Fed. 1, 4, 117 C. C. A. 237.

Employés of a railroad company, injured while repairing a car of another company which had reached the end of its run, been unloaded, and was lying at a station awaiting orders, were not at the time employed in interstate commerce within Employers' Liability Act. Heimbach v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 197 Fed. 578, 579.

An employé of a railroad company engaged in interstate commerce, who was killed in a collision while riding to his home by permission on one of the company's trains, but who was not at the time and so far as appeared had not just previously been employed in interstate commerce, was not within Employers' Liability Act, and there can be no recovery for his death thereunder. Bennett v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 197 Fed. 578, 579.

A member of a railroad bridge gang, injured, while engaged and within the scope of his employment in repairing bridges, by an alleged defective scaffold, though his duties required work in the repair of bridges for the railroad company in different states, was not "employed in interstate commerce," within the Employers' Liability Act, making a common carrier by railroad, while engaged in commerce between the several states, liable in damages to any person suffering an injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce, etc. Taylor v. Southern Ry. Co., 178 Fed. 380, 381.

An extra conductor in the employ of a railroad company directed on reporting for work to ride to another point within the same state for service on a work train, and who was injured while proceeding to his train, was not at the time employed in interstate commerce within Employers' Liability Act. Feaster v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 197 Fed. 580, 581.

Where interstate, a fireman on one of defendant's switch engines, was ordinarily employed in interstate commerce, though mingled with employment in commerce wholly within the state, he was engaged in interstate commerce within the federal Employers' Liability Act, so that an action for his alleged wrongful death could be maintained thereunder, though at the precise time of the accident he was working on an intrastate train.

Behrens v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 192 Fed. 581, 582.

A brakeman on a train running between points in this state, but consisting in part of freight cars consigned to points outside the state, injured by the negligence of a fellow servant while engaged at a siding in cutting out cars shipped from and billed to points in this state, was engaged in interstate commerce within the federal Employers' Liability Act, so that an action for his injury could be maintained thereunder; his work at the siding being merely an incident to the operation of the entire train in interstate commerce. Carr v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 136 N. Y. Supp. 501, 506, 77 Misc. Rep. 346.

When an engine and tender used by defendant railroad company in hauling interstate trains between two points reached the end of their run and had been placed on a fire track as usual to await the time for starting on the return trip, plaintiff, who was employed in making running repairs, was sent to replace a bolt which had been lost from a brake shoe of the tender, and while so employed was injured through the negligence of a fellow servant. Held, that defendant was engaged in interstate commerce, and plaintiff was employed therein at the time of his injury, within the meaning of Employers' Liability Act, and could maintain an action thereunder. Darr v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 197 Fed. 665, 668.

Where a train was being prepared to leave a town, and the conductor was engaged in getting it ready for transportation of freight both within the state and beyond the boundaries, he was "engaged in interstate commerce," within the Employers' Liability Act. Neil v. Idaho & W. N. R. R., 125 Pac. 331, 336, 22 Idaho, 74.

A carrier was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the death of an engineer from a collision occurring after the arrival with his train from another state at the terminus of the railroad in this state while switching certain cars of his train preparatory to placing them in the yards according to orders previously received. Kansas City, M. & O. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Pope (Tex.) 152 S. W. 185, 187.

Employés of a railroad company engaged in hauling freight from some intermediate point on its line to another point where it is taken up by regular trains for interstate shipment are "employed in interstate commerce" within the meaning of Act March 4, 1907, c. 2939, § 2, regulating the hours of service of employés. United States v. Chicago, M. & P. S. Ry. Co., 197 Fed. 624, 626.

Brokers or soliciting agents

A broker, engaged in buying and selling cotton for future delivery, employed a local agent to take orders of those desiring to buy or sell future cotton contracts, which were executed by the broker at the New York or New Orleans exchange. The customer, at the time of giving the order, deposited with the agent money as margin to protect the broker against loss in the event the course of the market was adverse to the customer. The broker furnished the customer with a memorandum reserving the right to close the transaction when the margin deposited was exhausted, and to settle the contract in accordance with the customs of the exchange at which the order was placed. The order of the customer was transmitted by wire by the agent to the broker's office in New York or New Orleans, where it was executed. Held, that the contracts entered into by the broker with his customers were not "interstate commerce," and the broker was properly chargeable with the tax imposed by Gen. Acts 1903, p. 207, imposing a tax on persons engaged in the business of buying and selling futures for speculation. A shipment of cotton in discharge of such contract, though made from one state to another, was not interstate commerce by virtue of the contract, but by the subsequent and independent act of a party thereto; and the fact that the contracts were sometimes discharged by the delivery of cotton did not relieve the broker of the liability to pay the tax imposed. Ware v. Mobile County, 41 South. 153, 155, 146 Ala. 163, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1081, 121 Am. St. Rep. 21 (citing Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 183, 19 L. Ed. 357; Hooper v. California, 15 Sup. Ct. 207, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. Ed. 297; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 20 Sup. Ct. 962, 178 U. S. 389, 44 L. Ed. 1116).

Code 1896, § 5087, prohibiting the soliciting of orders for spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors to be shipped into a district in which the sale of such liquors is prohibited, in so far as it purports to apply to residents of other states soliciting orders for spirituous liquors to be transported from another state into Alabama, is violative of the commerce clause of the federal Constitution. Moog v. State, 41 South. 166, 168, 145 Ala. 75 (citing Austin v. Tennessee, 21 Sup. Ct. 182, 179 U. S. 343, 45 L. Ed. 224; Walling v. Michigan, 6 Sup. Ct. 454, 116 U. S. 446, 459, 29 L. Ed. 691; Lelsy v. Hardin, 10 Sup. Ct. 681, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. Ed. 128; Plumley v. Massachusetts, 15 Sup. Ct. 154, 155 U. S. 461, 470, 471, 479, 480, 39 L. Ed. 223; In re Rahrer, 11 Sup. Ct. 865, 140 U. S. 545, 564, 35 L. Ed. 572; Rhodes v. Iowa, 18 Sup. Ct. 664, 170 U. S. 412, 426; 42 L. Ed. 1088; In re Bergen, 115 Fed. 339; State v. Hanaphy, 90 N. W. 601, 117 Iowa, 15; Westheimer v. Weisman, 57 Pac. 969, 60 Kan. 753).

The business of taking orders on commission for the purchase and sale of grain and cotton for future delivery, and transmitting them to other states, is not interstate commerce, so as to be exempt from state taxation, where, in those cases in which contracts for purchases for future delivery result in an actual delivery, the property is bought in the state to which the orders are transmitted, and there held for the purchaser, and in those cases in which there is a delivery upon a contract of sale made by the broker, the seller is at liberty to acquire the property in the market where delivery is required or elsewhere. Ware & Leland v. Mobile County, 28 Sup. Ct. 526, 529, 209 U. S. 405, 52 L. Ed. 855, 14 Ann. Cas. 1031.

Defendant, having taken orders for groceries in Missouri, sent them to wholesale grocers in Illinois, where the different articles were made up in packages, and all shipped together in one or more large boxes and barrels to the grocers' own order in Missouri, with directions to their agent not to deliver the goods to defendant until paid for. Such agent received the goods and removed them to his warehouse, where the bulk was broken, and the different packages for each customer segregated and delivered to them, through defendant, on their paying the price to defendant, and he delivering the money to such agent. Held, that the sale was not a transaction in "interstate commerce." Town of Canton v. McDaniel, 86 S. W. 1092, 1097, 188 Mo. 207.

The sale of picture frames, etc., by an agent acting for a principal in another state, where the pictures were made and shipped to the purchaser, constituted "interstate commerce"; and hence the agent was not subject to a state law (Acts 1906, p. 202) imposing a license tax on picture solicitors. Commonwealth v. Baldwin, 96 S. W. 914, 915.

In a prosecution for violation of a city ordinance imposing a license tax on persons soliciting orders for the sale of goods, where defendant is the agent of a nonresident merchant, carries samples and solicits orders, which he sends to his principal for approval, that the principal ships the goods to the same agent with authority to deliver and collect the price will not prevent the transaction from being interstate commerce. City of Kinsley v. Dyerly, 93 P. 228, 229, 79 Kan. 1, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 405.

Where a foreign corporation shipped perfumery to its agent within the state, who was in charge of a canvassing crew, and they carried the perfumery from house to house, to be purchased or sold by the householder or his children, and later accounted for to another agent of the corporation, such transaction did not constitute "interstate commerce," beyond the authority of plaintiff city to regulate. City of Muskegon v. Hanes, 112 N. W. 1077, 1078, 149 Mich. 460.

Where a foreign corporation, without office or place of business in the state, employed agents soliciting orders in the state for lightning rods for future delivery, according to sample rods exhibited when orders were solicited, and the rods ordered were crated and shipped from the place of business of the corporation in the sister state to the nearest railway point of the buyers, consigned to the corporation, and its agents made deliveries, the transaction was "interstate commerce," and not within Code 1907, § 2361, subd. 58, imposing licenses on persons engaging in the business of selling or delivering lightning rods. Clark v. State, 59 South. 236, 237, 4 Ala. App. 202.

A transaction wherein a foreign corporation shipped building material f. o. b. cars in Wisconsin and Illinois, where the material was manufactured, pursuant to an order received by its salesman in Wisconsin and approved at the company's home office in Illinois, constituted interstate commerce within the federal Constitution, and hence the corporation is not prevented from suing on a claim arising from the transaction because it has not complied with St. 1898, § 1770b, prescribing requirements before a foreign corporation may lawfully do business in Wisconsin. United States Gypsum Co. v. Gleason, 116 N. W. 238, 241, 135 Wis. 539, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 906.

Incidental passage through second state

Plaintiff purchased a car of guano which was delivered for transportation from Charleston, destination at Barksdale, both within the state, a part of the route over defendant's railway, however, being through the state of Georgia. Held, that such shipment constituted interstate commerce, since the transportation was and hence was not subject to Act Feb. 15, 1907 (25 St. at Large, p. 490), imposing a penalty on carriers for delay. Traynham v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 75 S. E. 381, 382, 92 S. C. 43.

A shipment of freight from one point in the state to another point therein by way of a town outside the state, is interstate shipment and is not governed by Revisal 1905, § 2632, imposing a penalty on a carrier for its failure to transport freight within a reasonable time. Shelby Ice & Fuel Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., 60 S. E. 723, 724, 147 N. C. 61.

Under Act March 18, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 29, c. 25), providing that when freight has been transported by two or more railroad corporations, or partly by one or more of them doing business as carriers in the state, suit for damages may be brought against any one or all of such carriers in any court of competent jurisdiction in any county in which either does business or has an agent, an action against the initial and connecting carriers for injuries to freight is properly brought in the county where the initial carrier has a line of railroad and has an agent, though the shipment was an interstate shipment, because in transporting the freight from one point in the state to another point in the state it passed through sister states.

Texarkana & Ft. S. Ry. Co. v. Shivel & Stewart (Tex.) 114 S. W. 196, 197.

If merchandise is consigned from one point in a state to another point in the same state, but is, during transit, carried through a portion of another state, the transaction constitutes "interstate commerce." United States v. Erie R. Co., 166 Fed. 352, 354.

A shipment from New York City to Buffalo, by way of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, is "interstate commerce," and so is subject to the provisions of the Elkins law (Act Feb. 19, 1903, c. 708) as to rebates; the Interstate Commerce Act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 1), though providing that the provisions of the act shall apply to any carrier engaged in the transportation of passengers or property from one state to any other state, having a proviso that the provisions of this act shall not apply to the transportation of property "wholly" within one state. United States v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 152 Fed. 269, 271 (citing Hanley v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 23 Sup. Ct. 214, 187 U. S. 617, 47 L. Ed. 333; Lord v. Goodall N. & P. S. S. Co., 102 U. S. 541, 26 L. Ed. 224; Pacific Coast S. S. Co. v. Board of Railroad Com'rs, 9 Sawy. 253, 18 Fed. 10; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 12 Sup. Ct. 806, 145 U. S. 192, 36 L. Ed. 672; United States ex rel. Kellogg v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 115 Fed. 373).

A contract to carry freight between two points within a state constitutes "interstate commerce," where the carrier's line for some distance between the two points passes through another state. Mires v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 114 S. W. 1052, 1055, 134 Mo. App. 379.

A continuous transportation of freight between points within a state is "interstate commerce," free from the interference of the state, where a part of the route is outside of the state because of the unsafe condition of a bridge forming a part of the line of road in the state between such points. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 113 S. W. 203, 204, 87 Ark. 562.

The carrying of a pleasure party on a steamboat is not "interstate commerce," although the boat may touch the shores of different states. State v. Seagraves, 85 S. W. 925, 927, 111 Mo. App. 353.

Where a defendant manufactured whisky in Kentucky, sent it to Ohio, and then shipped it back into the state on orders for whisky solicited in local option territory in Kentucky, with the express purpose of evading the prohibition laws of Kentucky, the whisky shipped in filling such orders is not "interstate commerce." Origler v. Commonwealth, 87 S. W. 276, 279, 120 Ky. 512.

Laws 1907, c. 276, requiring carriers to transport live stock within the state at a speed not less than 15 miles per hour unless unavoidably prevented, does not apply to interstate commerce, and a shipment of live stock between points in the state which passes for a short distance over territory of another state is interstate commerce, and non-compliance with the act in such a shipment affords no ground for recovery against the carrier. Leibengood v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 109 Pac. 988, 989, 83 Kan. 25, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 985.

Merchandise transported between two points within the state, but carried by a carrier's lines through a neighboring state, is interstate commerce. Hardwick Farmers' Elevator Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 124 N. W. 819, 821, 110 Minn. 25, 19 Ann. Cas. 1088.

Insurance

The business of insuring property against loss by fire, or contracting for indemnity, as carried on by a company with citizens of different states, is not "interstate commerce" within the commerce clause of Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3. State v. Insurance Co. of North America, 106 N. W. 768, 769, 71 Neb. 320 (citing and adopting New York Life Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 20 Sup. Ct. 962, 178 U. S. 389, 44 L. Ed. 1116; Hooper v. California, 15 Sup. Ct. 207, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. Ed. 297, and Crutcher v. Kentucky, 11 Sup. Ct. 851, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. Ed. 649).

Sale of goods in another state

A sale for delivery beyond the state constitutes "interstate commerce." The national commerce includes not only carriage, but the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities, and any agreement which directly operates upon the sale, transportation, and delivery of an article of "interstate commerce" by preventing or restraining its sale thereby regulates such commerce to that extent, and to the same extent trenches upon the power of the national Legislature. Laws Wis. 1905, p. 37, c. 19, as amended by Laws Sp. Sess. 1905, p. 19, c. 12, which provides for the inspection, grading, and weighing of grain at Superior, and requires all grain sold, delivered, stored, or reshipped at that point to be in accordance with the weights and grades so established and all warehouse receipts to be based thereon, and expressly prohibiting any sales or deliveries under Minnesota grades, is an interference with "interstate commerce." Globe Elevator Co. v. Andrew, 144 Fed. 871, 882.

Where plaintiff furnished certain furniture, fittings, etc., for certain United States vessels under a subcontract with the contractor, and all of the articles of furniture, etc., were brought from New Jersey into Pennsylvania and delivered in Philadelphia, the transaction constituted interstate commerce as to which Act Pa. 1874 (P. L. 108), requiring a foreign corporation to register before doing business within the state, was inapplicable. United States v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 178 Fed. 721, 725.

The selling by a corporation created by another state of goods manufactured in that state and shipped into the state of Texas is an interstate transaction, and, in a suit for the balance of the price of the goods, it is not necessary for plaintiff to allege or prove a permit to do business in Texas. Heisig Rice Co. v. Fairbanks, Morse & Co., 100 S. W. 959, 960, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 383.

Transactions involving a physical transfer of merchandise from the possession and title of an owner in one state to the possession and ownership of purchasers in another state are interstate. Loverin & Browne Co. v. Travis, 115 N. W. 829, 831, 135 Wis. 322.

Where plaintiff, engaged in the wholesale liquor business in Ohio, without any place of business in Michigan, except one where a few samples were kept, contracted in Michigan to sell defendant whisky to be shipped from Ohio to defendant in Michigan in the original packages, the transaction constituted "interstate commerce," and not a sale of liquor within Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 4018, 5379, regulating sales of liquor within the state, and imposing a tax on the business of selling such liquors at wholesale. Sloman v. William D. C. Moebis Co., 102 N. W. 854, 855, 139 Mich. 834 (citing Lyng v. Michigan, 10 Sup. Ct. 725, 135 U. S. 161, 34 L. Ed. 150; Lelsy v. Hardin, 10 Sup. Ct. 681, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. Ed. 128; Scott v. Donald, 17 Sup. Ct. 265, 165 U. S. 58, 41 L. Ed. 632; Vance v. W. A. Vandercook Co., 18 Sup. Ct. 674, 170 U. S. 438, 42 L. Ed. 1100; American Express Co. v. Iowa, 29 Sup. Ct. 182, 196 U. S. 133, 49 L. Ed. 417).

A corporation engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling hay presses, and employing agents in a state other than of its domicile to solicit orders, which are forwarded to it in such other state, for approval, and, if approved, the presses are shipped to the purchaser or to the agent for the purchaser, is engaged in "interstate commerce," and is not subject to the penalty imposed by a state statute for failure to comply with a requirement that it shall file in the office of the Secretary of State a statement of the location of its office and the name of its agent on whom process can be served. Commonwealth v. Eclipse Hay Press Co. (Ky.) 104 S. W. 224.

Intoxicating liquor shipped from one state into another on a C. O. D. contract is "interstate commerce," and cannot be controlled by state laws. Sedgwick v. State, 85 S. W. 813, 815, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 627.

Where a package of liquor was shipped C. O. D. from without the state by means of defendant express company to a consignee, within the state, to whom it was delivered upon payment of the price with the cost of transportation added, the liquor having been ordered by the consignee in the state from which it was shipped, the shipment constituted "interstate commerce," and was not a violation of the local option law of the district to which the liquor was consigned. Adams Express Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 96 S. W. 593, 594.

The sale of goods by citizens of one state to citizens of another state constitutes "interstate commerce," and no state may forbid or control such transactions. Frank A. Menne Factory v. Harback Bros., 107 S. W. 991, 993, 85 Ark. 278.

Transportation

The intention or purpose of the owners of an interstate shipment of a car load of grain to forward such car from the original terminal point to another point in the same state does not make the shipment between such two points, when performed by a connecting carrier to which the car was delivered by the original terminal carrier in obedience to the instructions of the owner, an "interstate" one, and, as such, exempt from the regulations of the State Railroad Commission. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Texas, 27 Sup. Ct. 360, 362, 204 U. S. 403, 51 L. Ed. 540.

Where a company in a foreign state ships to an agent only such goods as are ordered, placing several packages in a box, and the agent opens the box and delivers the packages to customers in accordance with their previous orders, the particular package involved being delivered in the form the company received them from the manufacturers, the whole transaction constitutes "interstate commerce." State v. Eckenrode, 127 N. W. 56, 62, 148 Iowa, 173.

The transportation of merchandise from a place in one state to a place in another is commerce among the states, or "interstate commerce." Hardy v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 5 Pac. 6, 9, 32 Kan. 698.

Transportation by a common carrier by railroad of articles of interstate commerce for an independent express company is "engaging in interstate commerce by railroad," within Safety Appliance Acts, Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, § 1, Act April 1, 1896, c. 87, and Act March 2, 1903, c. 976, § 1. United States v. Colorado & N. W. R. Co., 157 Fed. 342, 344, 85 C. O. A. 48.

The reference in Safety Appliance Act March 2, 1903, c. 976, "to any railroad engaged in interstate commerce," applies to the interstate highway as an instrument of commerce; and, Congress having taken affirmative action in reference thereto, its control of the interstate highway being thereby conclusive, the statute requiring vehicles running on interstate highways to be provided with certain appliances embraces all uses of the highway, whether for the transportation of interstate traffic or for the transportation of traffic from a point within the state to another point in the same state by carriers engaged in interstate commerce. United States v. Southern Ry. Co., 164 Fed. 347, 351.

Defendant owned a railroad located wholly in Cook County, Ill. Its road constituted a belt which intersected the trunk lines leading into Chicago, and forming, by means of Y's, direct physical connection with such trunk lines. Defendant's business consisted entirely of transporting cars between industries located along its line and trunk lines and between such trunk lines, for which it received an arbitrary charge per car, which was collected monthly from the railroad companies, defendant having no dealings with shippers. Defendant paid no attention to the class of traffic, but acted as an agent for the trunk lines in transferring cars. Defendant moved a train of freight cars, containing one consigned from a point in Illinois and destined to Wisconsin from the tracks of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad to those of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad. Held, that such transfer constituted in effect a continuous carriage over both such roads, so that defendant with respect thereto was engaged in interstate commerce, and was within the safety appliance acts in relation to power brakes. Act Cong. March 2, 1893, c. 196, Act Cong. April 1, 1896, c. 87, and Act Cong. March 2, 1903, c. 976. Belt Ry. Co. of Chicago v. United States, 168 Fed. 542, 543, 93 C. C. A. 668, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 582.

Defendant purchased whisky in North Carolina, and while transporting it from the place of purchase to his home, after entering South Carolina, was arrested for a violation of the state law, and the whisky seized. The liquor was for his personal use, was being conveyed by him in his buggy, and nothing had been done to break the continuity of the transportation from the place of purchase to his home. Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, provides that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce among the several states, and the "Wilson Act" (26 Stat. 313) provides that all liquors transported into any state, or remaining there for use, consumption, or sale therein, shall on arrival in such state be subject to the laws of such state enacted in the exercise of its police powers. Held, that the whisky had not at the time of its seizure "arrived," within the meaning of the Wilson Act, but was in course of transportation, and was not subject to seizure under the state laws. State v. Holleman, 33 S. E. 366, 367, 55 S. C. 207, 45 L. R. A. 567.

A so-called "lake cargo rate," made by a railroad company for the carriage of coal in car load lots from a mining district in Ohio to Huron and Cleveland, ports in that state on Lake Erie, which includes the loading of vessels with such coal for transportation to ports in other states on the Upper Lakes, is a rate for transportation in interstate commerce, and not subject to regulation by the Railroad Commission of Ohio. Railroad Commission of Ohio v. Worthington, 187 Fed. 965, 969, 110 C. C. A. 85.

Where defendant railway company, which had, in accordance with the federal statutes, published its rate for interstate traffic, and filed this rate with the Interstate Commerce Commission and the State Railroad Commission, joined with other carriers in transporting marble, consigned to plaintiff, from Vermont to Kentucky, the shipment was interstate commerce, and subject to the freight rates fixed for interstate commerce, and not the local rates fixed by the State Railroad Commission, though defendant had no agreement with the initial carriers that it would constitute a part of a through line for interstate commerce from Vermont to Kentucky. Corcoran v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 101 S. W. 1185, 1186, 125 Ky. 634.

A shipment of a case of beer from another state into local option territory in Kentucky is "interstate commerce," and is therefore not subject to the control of the prohibition statute in force where received. Commonwealth v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. (Ky.) 101 S. W. 894, 895.

"Interstate commerce," as that term is understood with reference to the provision of the federal Constitution, consists of intercourse and traffic between citizens of the states, including the transportation of persons and property between points in different states. It applies to all commerce crossing the state line, regardless of the distance of the point from which it comes or to which it is bound, before or after crossing such line; nor is it material, as applied to a particular carrier, that the whole line is within the state, if the transportation by the carrier is a part of one continuous journey from one state to another under one continuous contract of carriage. State v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 92 N. E. 814, 825, 246 Ill. 188.

Acts 1906, p. 413, c. 257, amending the charter of the C. & P. Railroad Company so as to prohibit it from allowing its tracks to connect with the tracks of the B. & O. Railroad Company, which passes through other states, unless the latter shall so arrange its freight charges on coal delivered to it from the former that the combined freight charges of the two companies shall not exceed the lowest freight charges on coal shipped to the same destination over the B. & O. from any point in Pennsylvania or West Virginia, which is as far or further distant from the destination than the point in Allegany county, where the coal is delivered to the C. & P. is invalid as an attempt to regulate "interstate commerce." State v. Cumberland & P. R. Co., 66 Atl. 458, 461, 105 Md. 478.

A sale is not the test of "interstate commerce." All sales of sound articles of merchandise, which necessitate the transportation of goods sold from one state to another, are "interstate commerce"; but all "interstate commerce" is not sales of goods. Importation into one state from another is the indispensable element, the test, of "interstate commerce"; and every negotiation, contract, trade, and dealing between citizens of different states, which contemplates and causes such importation, whether it be of goods, persons, or information, is a transaction of "interstate commerce." Butler Bros. Shoe Co. v. U. S. Rubber Co., 156 Fed. 1, 7, 84 C. C. A. 167.

"Interstate commerce" consists of intercourse and traffic between citizens of different states, and includes the transportation of persons and property, and the navigation of public waters for that purpose, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities. La Moine Lumber & Trading Co. v. Kesterson, 171 Fed. 980, 983 (citing Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 828, 114 U. S. 196, 208, 29 L. Ed. 158).

The term "interstate commerce" always implies the idea of goods, wares, or merchandise, manufactured, produced, or prepared in one jurisdiction, and carried into another for the purpose of sale. Cook v. Marshall County, 93 N. W. 372, 373, 119 Iowa, 384, 104 Am. St. Rep. 283.

The importation into one state from another is the test of "interstate commerce." Every part of every transportation of articles of commerce in a continuous passage from a commencement in one state to a prescribed destination in another is a transaction of "interstate commerce." Every carrier who transports such goods through any part of such continuous passage is engaged in "interstate commerce," whether the goods are carried upon through bills of lading or are re-billed by the several carriers. United States v. Colorado & N. W. R. Co., 157 Fed. 321, 323, 85 C. C. A. 27, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 167, 13 Ann. Cas. 893.

What is intended by the phrase commerce among the states is "interstate traffic," buying and selling of merchandise, transportation by common carriers of persons or property by land or by water from one state to another, and the use of navigable waters throughout the United States—all is comprehended. While "interstate commerce" necessarily involves interstate transportation, the converse is not always true. A railroad or ferry company, for example, which transports persons or property from one state to another, is undoubtedly engaged in "interstate commerce," and a tax by the state upon owners of vessels or common carriers so transporting persons or property has been held void as a regulation of commerce. On the other hand, interstate transportation.

may be conducted without constituting commerce or traffic, which has been defined to be the exchange of merchandise between individuals, communities, or countries, whether direct in the form of barter or by the use of money or other medium of exchange. A manufacturer who sends his goods manufactured in Connecticut to his own entrepot or store in New York City transports the products from one state to another, but the transportation by such owner is not of itself, so far as the owner is concerned, interstate commerce in the sense that the city of New York has no power to tax the goods thus stored and awaiting sale in New York, although the merchandise may be intended for a foreign market. The transaction lacks the essential element of trade, namely, sale or exchange. Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Co. v. Borough of Junction, 68 Atl. 806, 808, 75 N. J. Law, 922, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 514 (citing Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 702, 26 L. Ed. 238; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 114 U. S. 196, 203, 29 L. Ed. 158; Kidd v. Pearson, 9 Sup. Ct. 6, 128 U. S. 1, 32 L. Ed. 346; Smith v. Turner, 7 How. [48 U. S.] 283, 12 L. Ed. 702; Pickard v. Pullman Southern Car Co., 6 Sup. Ct. 635, 117 U. S. 84, 29 L. Ed. 785; American Steel & Wire Co. v. Speed, 24 Sup. Ct. 365, 192 U. S. 500, 48 L. Ed. 538).

"'Interstate commerce' consists of intercourse and traffic between citizens or inhabitants of different states, and includes not only the transportation of persons and property and the navigation of public waters for that purpose, but also the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities." Barnhard Bros. & Spindler v. Morrison (Tex.) 87 S. W. 876, 378.

"'Interstate commerce,' or commerce among the states, means the exchange of property in another state. Its essential characteristic is that the property affected must be transported to some point without the state. There must be interstate movement of property. The interchange may be between residents of different states or residents of the same state, but the property exchanged must move from one state to another. There can be no interstate commerce without interstate transportation of property, which includes money as well as merchandise and whatever can become the subject of exchange. People ex rel. Hatch v. Beardon, 77 N. E. 970-977, 184 N. Y. 481, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314, 112 Am. St. Rep. 628, 6 Ann. Cas. 515.

"'Interstate commerce,' or commerce among the several states of the Union, is commerce which concerns more states than one. Strictly considered, it consists in intercourse and traffic; including in these terms navigation and the transportation and transfer of persons and property, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities." Belle City Mfg. Co. v. Frizzell, 81 Pac. 58, 59, 11 Idaho, 1.

Holding, inspecting, or storing goods

Complainant shipped coal from Pennsylvania to its own order to a dock in New Jersey, where it was transferred from the cars either into bottoms for continued transportation to consignees then determined upon, or, when no bottoms were available, the coal was dumped onto a dock, from which it was later transferred to bottoms as occasion required. Held, that the coal so temporarily stored at the dock ceased to be "interstate commerce," notwithstanding the intention to trans-ship, and was therefore subject to state taxation, under the rule that, to claim exemption from taxation under the commerce clause of the federal Constitution, there must be a continuous movement of the merchandise in interstate commerce, pursuant to an existing contract of sale or consignment. Susquehanna Coal Co. v. South Amboy, 184 Fed. 941, 944.

Where goods were transported in interstate commerce to destination in Oregon, and received by the consignee, placed in a warehouse, and freight paid, the interstate character of the shipment terminated, and subsequent transportation in the original packages to other points in Oregon by the consignee was intrastate traffic, for which the carrier was only entitled to charge state rates provided by the State Board of Railroad Commissioners. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Campbell, 180 F. 253, 254.

The agreement of the local agent of an express company to hold for a few days a C. O. D. interstate shipment of intoxicating liquors, to suit the convenience of the consignee in paying for such liquor and taking it away, does not destroy the character of the transaction as "interstate commerce," so as to render the express company amenable to prosecution for violating a state local option law. Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 27 Sup. Ct. 606, 607, 206 U. S. 129, 51 L. Ed. 987, Defendant, a domestic corporation, agreed with the agent of plaintiff, a foreign corporation, to purchase a bale of sponges, subject to inspection. The agent had the sponges, together with other consignments, shipped to him at the city in which defendant conducted its business, and, on defendant's direction, inspected the bales by cutting the cords, examining the contents, and then putting all the sponges back, and refastening the bales as they were before they were opened. Thereupon a bale was delivered to defendant. Held, that the facts justified a finding that the sponges were shipped merely for purpose of inspection, and were delivered to defendant in the original package, and had not lost before their delivery their character as the subject of "interstate commerce." Greek-American Sponge Co. v.

Richardson Drug Co., 102 N. W. 888, 890, 124 Wis. 469, 109 Am. St. Rep. 961.

Coal shipped from Pennsylvania and stored in New Jersey to await orders for sale and then to be trans-shipped to customers purchasing, after such storage, is not in "interstate commerce." Lehigh & Wilkesbarre Coal Co. v. Borough of Junction, 66 Atl. 923, 75 N. J. Law, 68.

Telegraphing and telephoning

Intercourse between the states by the telegraph is "interstate commerce." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Commercial Mill Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 59, 60, 218 U. S. 406, 54 L. Ed. 1088, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 220, 21 Ann. Cas. 815.

Telegraph business is interstate commerce, and the telegraph company is engaged in interstate commerce. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. City of Mobile, 179 Fed. 955, 956.

A telegraph line is an "instrument of commerce," and telegraph companies are subject to the regulating power of Congress in respect to their foreign and interstate business under Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, authorizing Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states and with the Indian tribes, but the state is not precluded from enforcing a penalty for failure to deliver a message sent over a telegraph line from another state under Code 1887, § 1291. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Umstadter, 50 S. E. 259, 260, 103 Va. 742, 2 Ann. Cas. 511.

While all telegraph lines extending through different states are instruments of commerce, so that messages passing over them from one state to another constitute "interstate commerce," within the meaning of the provisions of the federal Constitution relating thereto, in absence of the enactment by Congress of statutes upon the same subject, a statute such as Rev. Laws, c. 122, § 9, requiring a telegraph company to receive dispatches from any person and transmit them impartially on payment of the usual charges, is not a regulation of interstate commerce, within the meaning of such constitutional provision, being a proper police regulation, which only incidentally affects interstate commerce. Vermilye v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 93 N. E. 635, 639, 207 Mass. 401.

Communication by telegraph or telephone between points in different states is "interstate commerce." Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Eureka, 172 Fed. 755, 758.

Conducting correspondence school

It has been decided by the federal Supreme Court that a foreign corporation conducting a correspondence school is "engaged in interstate commerce," within the federal Constitution. International Text-Book Co. v. Gillespie, 129 S. W. 922, 927, 229 Mo. 397.

"Interstate commerce" is unconstitutionally regulated by the provisions of Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 1283, under which the filing of a statement of financial condition is made a prerequisite to the right of a foreign corporation engaged in imparting instruction by correspondence to do business in the state, where such business involves the solicitation of students in Kansas by local agents, who are also to collect and forward to the home office the tuition fees, and the systematic intercourse by correspondence between the company and its students and agents, wherever situated, and the transportation of the needful books, apparatus, and papers. Commerce is conducted among the states, within the meaning of the federal Constitution, by a corporation engaged in imparting instruction by correspondence, whose business involves the solicitation of students in other states by local agents, who are also to collect and forward to the home office the tuition fees, and the systematic intercourse between the corporation and its scholars and agents, wherever situated, and the transportation of the needful books, apparatus, and papers. International Text-Book Co. v. Pigg, 30 Sup. Ct. 481, 485, 217 U. S. 91, 54 L. Ed. 678, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 493, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103.

Where plaintiff was engaged in business of instruction by correspondence in various subjects, the instruction being carried on entirely by letter through the mails, it was not engaged in interstate commerce within the federal Constitution, so as to prevent a state from requiring it to pay a license tax as a condition precedent to doing business therein under the protection of its laws. International Text-Book Co. v. Lynch, 69 Atl. 541, 543, 81 Vt. 101.

The business of a Pennsylvania correspondence school is carried on in New York by agencies in various parts of the state to solicit persons to contract with it for instruction. It has different division offices, each in charge of the corporation's district superintendent having under him a corps of the corporation's representatives. The expenses of the offices are paid by the corporation, and the payments made by subscribers are collected by the superintendents, deposited in special accounts in their own names in the cities where the offices are situated, and are from time to time sent to the corporation. The corporation sells textbooks, drawings, and other outfits in the state, and each of its superintendents and representatives is required to be qualified to give instruction to its students, and assistance therein is given at the division offices to such students as desire it. Held, that its business in the state is not "interstate commerce." International Text-Book Co. v. Connelly, 124 N. Y. Supp. 693, 698, 67 Misc. Rep. 49.

INTERURBAN RAILROAD

"There has recently come into existence a certain class of railroads, known as 'interurban roads,' which are a sort of hybrid, having in some respects the characteristics of the ordinary railroad and in others those of the street railroad. Within the limits of the cities which they enter, they usually pass along the streets, and perform the ordinary functions of street railroads, stopping where desired to let passengers on or off, and serving the public need for local street travel. Outside the cities, on their way from one city or town to another, they frequently travel upon a roadway obtained from private persons, not upon a public road, and stop, as in case of ordinary railroads, only at stations established by them for that purpose. They also often convey freight as well as passengers." San Francisco & S. M. Electric Ry. Co. v. Scott, 75 Pac. 575, 576, 583, 142 Cal. 222.

Code Supp. § 2083a, requires that any railway operated on the streets of a city or town by other than steam power, which extends beyond the limits of such city or town to another city or town, shall be known as an "interurban railway." Section 2083b makes all the statutory provisions relative to railways in general applicable to interurban street railways, and section 2083c declares that any interurban railway shall, within the corporate limits of any city or town acting under a special charter upon such streets as it shall use for transporting passengers and such freight, as it may carry in its passenger or combined baggage cars only, be deemed a street railway and subject to the laws governing street railways. A company owning street railway systems in two cities connected them by an interurban line in such a manner that the interurban traffic passed over but one or two blocks of the existing street railway lines, and in the main traversed only its own tracks, which were not within the city limits. The accounts of the interurban line and the existing street railway systems were separately kept; the only apparent connection between the two, other than common ownership, being the giving of transfers from each line to the other. Held, that the entire system should, for purposes of taxation, be regarded as an "interurban line." Waterloo & C. F. Rapid Transit Co. v. Board of Sup'rs of Black Hawk County, 108 N. W. 316, 317, 181 Iowa, 237.

Under Code Supp. § 2083a, declaring that any street railway operated by other power than steam, which extends beyond the corporate limits to another city or village, shall be known as an "interurban railway," a corporation operating a line connecting three different municipal corporations and organized under Code, § 2026, authorizing street railway corporations to extend their lines beyond the limits of a city along public roads, is an "interurban railway." Cedar Rapids & M. C. Ry. Co. v. Cummins, 101 N. W. 176, 177, 125 Iowa, 480.

INTERVENE—INTERVENTION

Right of intervention as remedy at law, see Remedy.

"Intervene," when applied to matters of law, means to interpose in a lawsuit so as to become a party to it, and at civil law signifies the act of a third person who becomes a party in a suit pending between other persons. In re Ghio's Estate, 108 Pac. 516, 524, 157 Cal. 552, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 552, 137 Am. St. Rep. 145.

"Intervention" is an act by which a third person becomes a party in a suit pending between other parties. A statute allowing third persons to intervene in an action is liberally construed in the interests of good practice, with due reference to its terms and to the nature of the issues involved, so as to effectuate the legislative intent. Faricy v. St. Paul Inv. & Sav. Soc., 125 N. W. 676, 679, 110 Minn. 311.

The practice of "interventions," which has grown up in our equity courts, seems to have been borrowed from the civil law, and Mr. Beach says: "Intervention is the generic designation in the civil law of the various technical processes by which, when a suit is pending between two parties, a third party is allowed to interpose for the assertion of some collateral, implicit, or ulterior right, adverse to that of either or both of the others, or to defend a responsibility involved in the issue of the controversy * * * No one, even in equity, is entitled to be made a party to the suit, unless he has an interest in its object; yet it is the common practice of the court to admit strangers to the litigation, claiming an interest in its subject-matter, to intervene in their own behalf, to assert their title. Ex parte Gray, 47 South. 286, 288, 157 Ala. 358, 131 Am. St. Rep. 62 (citing 1 Beach, Modern Eq. Pr. § 571).

"Literally, to 'intervene' means, as the derivation of the word indicates [inter, between, venire, come], to come between. * * * When the term is used in reference to legal proceedings, it covers the right of one to interpose or become a party to a proceeding already instituted, as a creditor may intervene in a foreclosure suit to enforce a lien upon property or some right in connection therewith; a stockholder may sometimes intervene in a suit brought by a corporation; the government is sometimes allowed to intervene in suits between private parties to protect a public interest, and whether we look to the English ecclesiastical law, the civil law, from which the Argentine Law is derived, or the common law, the meaning is the same." The word "intervene," as used in the Argentine Treaty of 1853 (10 Stat. 1009), giving to consular officers the right to "intervene" in the possession, administration, and judicial liquidation of the estate of a deceased fellow countryman, conformably with the laws of the country, for the benefit of the creditors and legal heirs, is to be construed to allow such officers to "intervene" in an administration instituted otherwise than by them, without intending to take away from the states the right of legal administration provided by their laws upon the estates of deceased citizens of a foreign country and to commit the same to the consuls of such foreign nation to the exclusion of those entitled to administer as provided by the legal laws of the state within which such foreigner resides and leaves property at the time of decease; and hence, if the most favored nation clause, included in the treaty with Italy in 1878, carries the provisions of the Argentine Treaty in regard to administration by consuls, it does not grant the Italian consul the right of original administration upon the estate of a deceased Italian to the exclusion of that authorized by local law. Rocca v. Thompson, 32 Sup. Ct. 207, 223 U. S. 317, 330, 56 L. Ed. 453 (citing Black, Law Dict. p. 651).

As the treaty with the Argentine Republic of July 27, 1853 (10 Stat. 1005), giving the Consul General or consul of either nation the right to intervene in the administration and judicial liquidation of the estate of a subject of his nation dying in the other nation, intestate, relates to local proceedings for the settlement of estates, the word "intervene," used therein, should be given the meaning it usually has in that connection, which, in proceedings in rem, does not usually include the right to take the property from the custody of the court or officer upon whom the law imposes the duty of administering and distributing it, and hence the word in the treaty will be deemed to imply an intention to give a right to the consul to appear as a party in a pending administration or action carried on by another person, and not a right to institute and carry on the proceeding itself, especially as the object of the treaty to allow the consul to represent the subjects of his country who are interested as heirs or creditors would be fully met by such construction. In re Ghio's Estate, 108 Pac. 516, 524, 157 Cal. 552, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 552, 137 Am. St. Rep. 145.

The treaty of May 8, 1878 (20 Stat. 732), between the United States and Italy, by article 17, provides that the respective consuls shall enjoy in both countries all the rights and privileges which are or hereafter may be granted to the officers of the same grade of the most favored nation. The treaty of July 27, 1853 (10 Stat. 1009), between the Argentine Republic and the United States, by article 9, provides that, if any citizen of either country die without will in the territory of the other, the consul of the nation to which decedent belongs shall have the right to intervene in the administration of decedent's estate conformably with the law, for the benefit of creditors, etc. Held, that the Italian consul was entitled to letters of administration upon the estate of an Italian subject killed in this country, as against a creditor of decedent. In re Scutella's Estate, 129 N. Y. Supp. 20, 22, 145 App. Div. 156.

INTERVENING CAUSE

See Independent Intervening Cause.

An "intervening cause" is one which moves from sources independent of the plaintiff and defendant. The phrase is probably not capable of definition in terms which will be applicable in all cases. The approved doctrine is sufficiently summarized in Harrison v. Berkley (S. C.) 1 Strob. 525, 47 Am. Dec. 578, where it is said that the natural and proximate consequences of a wrongful act are all those which are not controlled by the unforeseen agency of a moral being capable of discretion and left free to choose, or by some unconnected cause of greater influence. Fishburn v. Burlington & N. W. R. Co., 103 N. W. 481, 485, 127 Iowa, 483.

The intervening cause which will relieve from liability for injury is an independent cause which intervenes between the original wrongful act and the injury, and produces a result which otherwise would not have happened. City of Winona v. Botzet, 169 Fed. 321, 329, 94 C. C. A. 563, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 204.

INTERVENING EQUITY

An "intervening equity" is not necessarily one that "comes in after the fraud is discovered." Where a receiver of a mutual fire insurance company sued a member to recover assessments, a fraud perpetrated by the company on a member in inducing him to become such cannot be set up as against the rights of bona fide creditors and later members of the company which had intervened after the date when defendant became a member of the company. Van Dyke v. Baker, 63 Atl. 594, 595, 214 Pa. 163.

INTERVENER

As party, see Party.

INTESTACY—INTESTATE

The word "intestacy," in Code Civ. Proc. § 2660, providing that administration in case of "intestacy" must be granted to the relatives of the decedent entitled to succeed to his personality in the order enumerated, when considered in connection with section 2662, providing that one entitled absolutely or contingently to administration on the estate of an intestate may present a written petition praying for letters of administration, etc., refers to the person and not to specific property. In re Maccaffil, 107 N. Y. Supp. 1115, 1118, 57 Misc. Rep. 264.

Testator gave his residuary estate to his mother, directed that no part of his estate should come into the possession of a sister or her descendants, and provided that on the death of his mother "intestate" the property should go to a third person. The mother devised real estate to a devisee, who, because of onerous conditions imposed, renounced the gift. Held, that the mother died "intestate" as to such real estate, and it passed to the third person; the word "intestate" not being limited to the ordinary meaning of one dying without making a will, but including the death of the mother without effectually disposing of the property devised to her. Bradford v. Leake, 137 S. W. 96, 100, 124 Tenn. 812, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1140.

INTESTATE LAWS

The words "Intestate laws," as used in Tax Law (Consol. Laws, c. 60), § 220, subd. 1, refer to the statutes governing the descent and distribution of a decedent's property. In re Green's Estate, 124 N. Y. Supp. 863, 68 Misc. Rep. 1.

"The intestate laws of this state" comprise that body of laws which provide and prescribe the devolution of estates of persons who die without disposing of their property by last will or testament. One who dies intestate dies without leaving a will and without disposing of his property and estate by will or testament. Kohny v. Dunbar, 121 Pac. 544, 545, 21 Idaho, 258, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1107, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 492 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, 3732).

Laws 1905, c. 368, § 220, subd. 1, provides for a tax upon the transfer of any property or interest therein when the transfer is by will or the intestate laws of the state, from any person dying seised or possessed of property; the term "intestate laws" referring to the statutes governing the descent and distribution of a decedent's property. Real Property Law (Laws 1896, c. 547) § 280, in force when chapter 368 was enacted, provided that the article (relating to descent) did not affect tenancy by curtesy or dower. Held, that an estate by curtesy, not being derived from the wife's estate nor acquired by inheritance, is not taxable under section 220; there being no "transfer" thereof within the section. In re Starbuck's Estate, 122 N. Y. Supp. 584, 585, 137 App. Div. 866.

INTESTINES

"While all of the numerous internal organs of the human anatomy having their place within the abdominal cavity have each of them a technical name by which they are known to the professional man, yet, to the layman they are all of them included within the one general comprehensive term of 'intestines.' Webster, in the last edition of his International Dictionary, defines the word 'intestine' as meaning: 'On the inside, within; internal, inward, opposed to external; depending upon the internal constitution of a body or entity; the bowels; entrails; viscera'—thus making it synonymous with the word 'viscera,' which is defined as being applied to the organs contained in the abdomen. According to the Century Dictionary, the term 'intestines' is used in biology in a wider sense to include the whole enteron, and the term 'enteron' is there defined as meaning, in anatomy, 'the intestines, alimentary canal, including its annexes and appendages.'" On an indictment charging that defendant pulled out the intestines of the deceased, it may be shown that the great omentum was so torn out. Hampton v. State, 39 South. 421, 426, 50 Fla. 55.

INTIMACY—INTIMATE

A statement that a married woman was "too intimate with the hired man," was slanderous per se if the word "intimate" was used in a defamatory sense; it being capable of being so used. Arnold v. Lutz, 120 N. W. 121, 141 Iowa, 596.

INTIMATE ACQUAINTANCE

A witness who has known accused but a short time, and who has formed only a casual acquaintance with him, and who has but limited opportunity to observe his conduct, is not an "intimate acquaintance of accused within Rev. Codes, § 7887, and he is not competent to testify to the mental condition of accused, the word "intimate" meaning close in friendship or acquaintance; familiar; confidential. State v. Leakey, 120 Pac. 234, 239, 44 Mont. 354.

Where persons have known a testatrix for upwards of 20 years, and were on terms of social intimacy with her, and had seen and conversed with her immediately before and after the execution of the will, they were "intimate acquaintances" within Code Civ.

Proc. § 1870, permitting the opinion of an intimate acquaintance respecting the mental sanity of a person. In re McKenna's Estate, 77 Pac. 461, 462, 143 Cal. 580.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3146, subd. 10, providing that the opinion of "intimate acquaintanceship" respecting the mental sanity of a person, together with reasons therefor, may be given, the question whether a witness has an "intimate acquaintanceship" with or is an "acquaintance" of the person whose sanity is in issue, is a matter of discretion not reviewable except in a clear case of abuse; and two newspaper reporters whose only acquaintance with defendant, charged with homicide, consisted of their conversation with him for a half hour shortly after the homicide, are not "intimate acquaintances," within the statute. State v. Penna, 90 Pac. 787, 789, 35 Mont. 535.

To be an "intimate acquaintance," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 10, making admissible the opinion of an intimate acquaintance, necessarily requires a familiarity with the mental temperament of the person, the soundness of whose mind is in question. In re Budan's Estate, 104 Pac. 442, 444, 156 Cal. 230.

The words "intimate acquaintances," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 10, authorizing the intimate acquaintances of a person whose mental condition is in question to testify as to his mental sanity, do not include a person who had an acquaintance with the testator which was of a mere casual character, or of another person who knew him only through having given him massage treatments on three occasions. Huyck v. Rennie, 90 Pac. 929, 930, 151 Cal. 411.

The California Code makes competent evidence the opinion of an intimate acquaintance as to the sanity of a person. In construing this phrase the court says: "The phrase 'intimate acquaintance' cannot include all 'acquaintances.' Worcester, under the word 'acquaintance,' has the following: 'Acquaintance expresses less than familiarity; familiarity less than intimacy. Acquaintance springs from occasional intercourse; familiarity from daily intercourse; intimacy from unreserved intercourse. Acquaintance, having some knowledge; familiarity, from long habit; intimacy, by close connection.'" Carpenter v. Bailey, 29 Pac. 1101, 1103, 94 Cal. 406, 414.

INTIMATION OF OPINION

A charge that the state contended that defendant was seen by a certain witness to take and carry away a basket containing articles testified about, that it was afterwards found in a wagon he was driving, and that this was the only possible way to account for the theft, so particularized and argumentatively enforced on the jury the inference of guilt as to amount to an intimation of opinion, within Civ. Code 1895, § 4334, declaring that a judge shall not intimate his opinion as to the guilt, or innocence of defendant, and that such an intimation shall be reversible error. Johnson v. State, 58 S. E. 684, 685, 2 Ga. App. 405.

INTIMIDATE—INTIMIDATION

See With Intent to Intimidate.

"Intimidation," as relates to law, has a definite meaning, and consists in putting a person in fear in some way. Pray v. Pray, 55 South. 666, 667, 128 La. 1037.

"Intimidation," in the Penal Code definition of robbery, is synonymous with the "putting in fear" in the common-law definition thereof. Johnson v. State, 57 S. E. 1056, 1057, 1 Ga. App. 729.

What amounts to coercion, intimidation, or threats of injury, within the law holding that a combination to injure another by threatening injury to the trade of those who have business relations with him, depends on the facts of each particular case; but intimidation, within the law, is not necessarily limited to threats of violence to person or property, and combinations between persons to do injurious acts expressly directed to another by way of intimidation or constraint, either of himself or persons employed or seeking to be employed by him, are unlawful. Lohse Patent Door Co. v. Fuelle, 114 S. W. 997, 1005, 215 Mo. 421, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 607, 128 Am. St. Rep. 492.

The word "intimidation" denotes two kinds of coercion: (1) A threat by word or act of an individual, or by a combination of persons to do something unlawful, reasonably calculated to compel the person threatened to do or not to do something; and (2) request or persuasion by or on behalf of a combination of persons to do or not to do something, resulting in coercion of the will from the mere force of numbers. In the first case, the nature of the act, and the coercion, determine liability; in the second, the conspiracy or concerted act and the coercion determine it. A threatens B. with assault unless he quits work, and thus coerces him. A number of men, representing themselves and a larger number, request B. to quit work, and by force of numbers coerce him to do so. Civil liability follows in both cases: In the first, from the nature of the act threatened; in the second, from the coercion by force of numbers. In this case, however, it is unnecessary to go to the extent of holding that coercion of the second description would be a violation of the injunction, as I find that the company's workmen, and those about to become workmen, were coerced by threats of unlawful acts. A simple request to do or not to do a thing made by one or more of a body of strikers under circumstances calculated to convey a threatened intimidation with a design to hinder or obstruct workmen is unlawful intimidation in violation of an injunction against the use of such means, and not less obnoxious than the use of physical force for the same purpose. Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Iron Molders' Union No. 125, 150 Fed. 155, 173.

"Intimidation" is not limited to threats of violence or of physical injury to person or property. It has a broader signification, and there may also be a moral intimidation. Patrolling or picketing plaintiff's premises in furtherance of a conspiracy to prevent workmen from entering into or continue in his employment, the patrol at times going further than simple advice, not obtruded beyond the point where the other person was willing to listen, which patrol was used in combination with social pressure, threats of personal injury, or unlawful harm, was a means of intimidation. Vegelahn v. Guntner, 44 N. E. 1077, 1078, 187 Mass. 92, 98, 102, 107, 35 L. R. A. 722, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443.

"Picketing" has been condemned by every court having the matter under consideration. It is a pretense for "persuasion," but is intended for "intimidation." Gentlemen never seek to compel and force another to listen to the art of persuasion. To stop another on the street, get in his road, follow him from one side of the street to another, pursue him wherever he goes, stand in front of his residence, is not persuasion. "Intimidation" cannot be defined. Neither can fraud be defined. But every person knows whether his acts are fraudulent, and he knows whether his acts are intimidating. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Ruef, 120 Fed. 119, 121.

What amounts to intimidation, as an element of a restrainable boycott, depends on the facts of each particular case, not being limited to threats of violence, but extending to a combination to do injurious acts to another by way of intimidation or constraint, either of himself or third persons. Baldwin v. Escanaba Liquor Dealers' Ass'n, 130 N. W. 214, 216, 165 Mich. 98.

INTO

See Entered Into; Intruded Into.

"Unto a jail or building" is not a common form of expression, and in no popular sense has it ever been used to mean to convey 'within' a building. Probably no case can be cited where that word has ever been construed to be synonymous with or to mean 'into.' People v. Klammer, 100 N. W. 600, 601, 137 Mich. 399.

The word "into," as used in Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 54, § 48, giving to proprietors of land bordering on navigable waters the exclusive right to make improvements into the waters in front of their respective land, etc., is a term inconsistent with entire separation from the land. Wharfs, piers, and landings are examples of such improvements. Western Maryland Tidewater R. Co. v. City of Baltimore, 68 Atl. 6, 10, 106 Md. 581; Hess v. Muir, 5 Atl. 540, 6 Atl. 673, 65 Md. 603.

The preposition "into" indicates entrance, passing from the outside to the inside, a penetrating, and is used in the statute authorizing extension of public aid to railroads in its ordinary and generally accepted meaning, implying that the line of railroad to which a city can extend aid must be a line entering into the city, and must of necessity, therefore, come from the outside, and must either pass through the city or to a point in the city. A railroad whose beginning and termination is wholly within the corporate limits of the city is not such a line of railroad as the statute authorizes a city to aid. Water, Light & Gas Co. v. Hutchinson Interurban Ry. Co., 87 Pac. 883, 884, 74 Kan. 661.

An assault committed on the gallery of a private residence is within the statute making it an aggravated assault, where the party assaulting goes "into" a private residence. Herd v. State, 99 S. W. 1119, 1120, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 600.

The word "into" carries the notion of entering, and in connection with the word "through" in a contract of subscription in aid of a railroad, conditioned on the construction and operation of the road "through or into" a certain city, definitely expresses that the road is intended to go inside the city limits. St. Louis, Memphis & S. E. R. Co. v. Houck, 97 S. W. 963, 966, 120 Mo. App. 634.

The words "into court," as used in the Missouri Constitution, providing that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation, and, until the same shall be paid to the owner or "into court" for the owner, the property shall not be disturbed or the proprietary rights of the owner therein vested, means in the condemnation proceedings, and payment in an interpleader suit was not a payment into court for the benefit of the owner of the property. Holmes v. Kansas City, 108 S. W. 9, 14, 209 Mo. 513, 123 Am. St. Rep. 495.

V. S. 3921, inflicting a penalty if a person having control of a detached engine or engine with a passenger train attached runs it into or through a passenger depot at a speed exceeding four miles an hour, was intended to apply only to passenger depots covering the main tracks of the railroad into and through which trains running on such tracks must pass; the word "into" being used in the sense of "inside of" or "within" and "through," meaning from end to end or from side to side of, into or out of at the opposite, or at another point. Blodgett v. Central Vermont Ry. Co., 73 Atl. 590, 82 Vt. 289.

One who, while inside of an occupied dwelling, shoots a pistol at a floor thereof, is guilty of shooting "at" or "into" such dwelling, within the meaning of the act approved August 13, 1910 (Acts 1910, p. 137). English v. State, 74 S. E. 286, 10 Ga. App. 791 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 596; Blackwell v. State, 17 S. W. 1061, 30 Tex. App. 416).

INTOXICATED—INTOXICATION

See State of Intoxication; Under the Influence of Liquor; Which Produces Intoxication.

By reason of intoxication, see By Reason Of.

See, also, Drunkenness.

To judge that a man is "intoxicated" by liquor indicates nothing as to the degree, as that expression is commonly used. It may mean much, or it may mean very little. Brehony v. Pottsville Union Traction, 96 Atl. 1006, 218 Pa. 123.

The word "intoxicated" in an indictment charging a violation of Acts 1908, p. 284, c. 189, § 19, providing that no person shall knowingly sell intoxicating liquor to any intoxicated person, means a materially changed condition produced by the immoderate or excessive use of intoxicants, as contrasted with normal condition and conduct. O'Donnell v. Commonwealth, 62 S. E. 373, 374, 108 Va. 882.

When, in a homicide case, the court directed the attention of the jury to the question whether defendant was under the influence of intoxicating liquors, he sufficiently defined "intoxication" for all practical purposes, and the jury could not have misunderstood in their practical knowledge of human affairs what was meant, and the court, having told the jury to consider evidence that defendant was intoxicated in determining whether he was so far under the influence of intoxicating liquor as to deprive him of the power to deliberate and form a guilty intent, did not err in refusing an instruction specifically defining the term "Intoxication." State v. Pell, 119 N. W. 154, 158, 140 Iowa, 655.

"Intoxication" excusing a criminal act must be such as to render the accused incapable of forming the felonious intent which is a necessary element of the crime. Collins v. State, 92 N. W. 266, 268, 115 Wis. 596.

"Intoxication" within Code 1899, c. 32, § 16 [Code 1906, § 928] punishing sales of liquors to intoxicated persons is such a mental condition due to the use of liquor as attracts the observation of others or gives them reason to believe the person is intoxicated and testimony of a by-stander as to such a state will sustain a finding on the question of intoxication. State v. Nethken, 55 S. E. 742, 743, 60 W. Va. 673.

The word "intoxication," as used in Acts 33d Gen. Assem. Iowa, c. 78, §§ 1, 6, providing that any mayor shall be removed from office upon charges made in writing, and hearing, for intoxication, or upon conviction of being intoxicated, refers to one's private habits as well as his official duties. A contention that the word means intoxication in office, and that it can have no reference to one's private habits, or, in other words, that private misconduct cannot be made the ground of removal as distinguished from official conduct, is purely theoretical and not practical. It cannot be argued, of course, that an official could be privately intoxicated and officially sober, and the most that can be claimed is that an official might be intoxicated at a time and place and under circumstances when no official duties devolved upon him, and in that sense his private misconduct would not actively interfere with the performance of his official duties. State v. Henderson, 124 N. W. 767, 769, 145 Iowa, 657, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1286.

"Intoxication" affects different men in different ways. In some it quickens the intellectual faculties and sharpens the physical senses, and in others the intellectual faculties are for a time destroyed and the physical senses blunted. The effects of intoxicating liquors depend on the character of the man and the nature of the liquor. It cannot be said, however, that drunkenness never places the person intoxicated beyond the protection of the law, nor gives another the right to injure or kill him. Texarkana & Ft. S. Ry. Co. v. Frugla, 95 S. W. 563, 565, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 48.

The word "intoxication" is comprehensive enough to include partial as well as total intoxication, and therefore where, in an action for injuries to plaintiff while walking on a railroad track, he testified that he was perfectly sober, and the engineer of the train that struck him also testified that he looked like a sober man—the court having charged that if plaintiff went on the track, and failed to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, or if he was intoxicated, and any one of such acts contributed to his injury, he could not recover—it was not error to refuse to charge that if plaintiff entered on and remained on the track "in a state of partial or total intoxication" he could not recover. International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Davis (Tex.) 84 S. W. 669, 670.

Drugs

Intoxication from the voluntary use of any drug, taken to gratify the appetite, is considered in law the same as intoxication from the voluntary use of liquor. Commonwealth v. Detweiler, 78 Atl. 271, 272, 229 Pa. 304.

Drunkenness or inebriety

Though one may be said to be under the influence of liquor, he is not necessarily intoxicated, this being far short of "intoxication" which is the synonym of "inebriety" and "drunkenness"; the word "intoxicated" being synonymous with "drunk," and "drunk" being defined in the Standard Dictionary as to have lost the normal control of one's bodily and mental faculties. Freeburg v. State, 138 N. W. 143, 144, 92 Neb. 346, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1101 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3734, 3735).

"Intoxication" is a synonym of "inebriety" or "drunkenness," implying or evidenced by undue and abnormal excitation of the passions or the impairment of feelings, or an impairment of the capacity to think and act correctly and effectually. A man is intoxicated whenever he is so much under the influence of spirituous or intoxicating liquor that it so affects his acts or conduct or movement that the public or parties coming in contact with him can readily see and know that it is affecting him in that respect. O'Connell v. State, 62 S. E. 1007, 1008, 5 Ga. App. 234 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3734-3736).

The words "intoxicated" and "drunk" mean under the influence of intoxicating liquor to such an extent as to lose the normal control to one's bodily and mental faculties, and, commonly, to evince a disposition to violence. Hughes v. State ex rel. Sutton, 98 N. E. 839, 841, 50 Ind. App. 617.

To prevent the intoxication of a passenger resulting in injuries from being contributory negligence barring recovery, the intoxication must have rendered the passenger mentally or physically incapable of protecting himself from danger or of appreciating his danger, which condition must be known to the carrier's agent whose negligence is alleged to have caused the injury; so that, in an action for decedent's death by falling from the platform where he went when intoxicated, alleged to have been caused by the railroad company's negligence in permitting him to go onto the platform in such condition, it was error to instruct that the jury should find for plaintiff if decedent was "drunk," and defendant's servants, knowing his condition, knowingly suffered him to go out upon the platform while the train was running at such a speed as to make it dangerous for him, being "drunk" to stand on the platform, the word "drunk" being synonymous with "intoxicated," and indicating varying degrees of intoxication. Paris & G. N. R. Co. v. Robinson, 140 S. W. 434, 435, 104 Tex. 482 (quoting 8 Words and Phrases, p. 2208).

An instruction, in an action against a railroad company for wrongfully ejecting a passenger for alleged drunkenness, that for one to be in an "intoxicated condition" he must be under the influence of intoxicating liquors to such an extent as to have lost the normal control of his faculties, and show a disposition to violence, quarrelsomeness, and bestiality, was erroneous, since one may be intoxicated without being violent or quarrelsome, and a man may be said to be "drunk" whenever he is under the influence of intoxicating liquors so as to affect his acts or conduct, so that persons coming in contact with him could readily know that the intoxicants had affected him in that respect. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Waters (Ark.) 152 S. W. 137, 139.

In an action on a fraternal benefit certificate, evidence held to support a finding that a negative answer to the questions asked the member in his application, "Have you ever been addicted to excessive or intemperate use of any liquors?" "If intoxicated during the last year, how many times?" was true; the word "intoxication" having a very broad meaning, and a different meaning to different persons, and being defined as a state of being drunk; inebriety; drunkenness. National Council of Knights and Ladies of Security v. Wilson, 143 S. W. 1000, 1002, 147 Ky. 293.

"Intoxication" is of varying degrees. A person so under the influence of liquor as not to be entirely at himself is intoxicated, yet he may not betray it by either movement or word, and his condition may not be discernible by his intimate friends. It would hardly be contended that as to such a person the carrier must resort to other than the ordinary means for his safety. Again, a person may be "staggering drunk," and yet be capable of transacting with intelligence important business, and with great foresight providing under given circumstances for his own safety and comfort. In the absence of knowledge on the part of the carrier that he was in or about to get in the place of danger, it could not with reason be insisted that the carrier, in the exercise of the high degree of care it owed to such a person as a passenger, should provide a guard for him or resort to other extraordinary means to insure his safety. Paris & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Robinson, 114 S. W. 658, 661, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 12.

In an action on a mutual benefit insurance policy, the insurer set up, as a breach of warranty, the falsity of insured's statement in his application that he had never been intoxicated. Upon defendant's request, the court defined "intoxication" as the condition of a man whose physical and mental powers are affected by the use of intoxicating liquors. The court also charged the jury that the term "intoxicated" was defined as "inebriated," "made drunk," "excited to frenzy," and that "it is a pretty strong definition when you get it right down to the intoxication." Held that the latter definition of intoxicated was erroneous and prejudicial to defendant. Gall v. Sovereign Camp of Woodmen of the World, 132 N. W. 468, 469, 166 Mich. 690.

"A man becomes 'intoxicated'—that is, drunk—when he passes under the influence of alcoholic liquor. And there are degrees of 'intoxication' varying all the way from slight stimulation to complete coma. It is only at some point along the line between the two extremes that the loss of control of the mental faculties occurs. It follows that a defense to a crime involving intention cannot be established by merely showing that the perpetrator was at the time intoxicated; he must go farther and make it appear that his intoxication had progressed so far as to rob him of his mental faculties, and hence that he was no longer capable of forming an intent or purpose. Stated in another way, a man may be drunk, but his responsibility for crime continues while he retains control of his mental faculties sufficient to appreciate what he is doing." State v. Yates, 109 N. W. 1006, 1006, 182 Iowa, 475.

INTOXICATING BITTERS

"Intoxicating Bitters" include those bitters, beverages, or decoctions in which the distinctive character and effect of intoxicating liquors are present, so that it may be used as a beverage, notwithstanding the other ingredients it may contain; and if it can be used as a beverage, though the other ingredients are medicinal and predominate, and alcohol is used to preserve these medicinal ingredients and serve as a vehicle therefor, then it may or may not be included, depending on the evidence in each particular case—it being without the province of any court to declare as a matter of law that a particular bitters or beverage is or is not intoxicating, unless the statute or law so declares, or it be one the effect of which every one is presumed to know. Marks v. State, 48 South. 864, 868, 150 Ala. 71, 133 Am. St. Rep. 20.

The Legislature cannot pass an act defining "intoxicating liquors" as used in the Constitution. Keller v. State (Tex.) 87 S. W. 669, 675, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 489.

An "intoxicating liquor" is one which, when taken in such reasonable quantities as the human stomach will hold, will make drunk. James v. State, 91 S. W. 227, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 384.

The words "intoxicating liquors," as used in the Constitution, mean liquors which will intoxicate, and which are commonly used as beverages for such purpose, and all mixtures or substitutes for such liquors used as a beverage that possess intoxicating qualities. Markinson v. State, 101 Pac. 353, 354, 2 Okl. Cr. 323.

The act of 1902 does not exclude from the term "intoxicating liquor" fluid extracts and toilet articles, of which alcohol is the solvent principle. State v. Krinski, 62 Atl. 37, 38, 78 Vt. 162.

Toilet and culinary preparations recognized as such by standard authority, and not reasonably capable of use as intoxicating beverages, e. g., tincture of gentian, paregoric, bay rum, cologne, essence of lemon, wood alcohol, are not ordinarily to be regarded as being within the meaning of the expression "intoxicating liquors," though such articles are liquid, contain alcohol, and may produce intoxication. Mason v. State, 58 S. E. 139, 140, 1 Ga. App. 534.

Alcohol

In a prosecution for violating a local option law, an instruction that alcohol was per se an intoxicant, and when sold as a concoction or as a beverage or alone in any quantity would constitute a violation of the law, was erroneous as a definition of intoxicating liquor, which is a liquor intended for use as a beverage, or capable of being so used, which contains alcohol in such a proportion that it will produce intoxication when taken in such quantities as may practically be drunk. Walker v. State (Tex.) 98 S. W. 265.

Under Local Option Act (Laws 1909, p. 14) § 15, providing that the act shall not be construed to prohibit the sale in a prohibition district of pure alcohol for medicinal, mechanical, manufacturing, or scientific purposes, provided that it shall not be sold, except upon a written application therefor, and providing that intoxicating liquors shall never be sold in prohibition districts as medicine, except upon the written prescription of a duly licensed physician, a sale in prohibition districts of pure alcohol for medicinal, mechanical, manufacturing, or scientific purposes, or wines for sacramental purposes, may be legally made upon the written application of the purchaser, and pure alcohol may be sold for medicinal purposes without the prescription of a duly licensed physician. The provision of Local Option Act (Laws 1909, p. 14) § 15, requiring a physician's prescription before a legal sale can be made of intoxicating liquors, applies only to intoxicating liquors used as a beverage, and not to pure alcohol. Local Option Act (Laws 1909, p. 14) § 15, makes it a misdemeanor to sell pure alcohol, except on written application prescribed by the act, and also makes it a misdemeanor to sell intoxicating liquors that are used as a beverage, except on the prescription of a duly licensed physician. State v. Osmer, 120 Pac. 165, 166, 21 Idaho, 18.

Alcohol is judicially recognized as a spirituous and intoxicating liquor. Cureton v. State, 70 S. E. 332, 333, 135 Ga. 660.

Alcohol of 188 proof, expressly excepted from Acts 1909, c. 10, which prohibits the manufacture in this state, for purposes of sale, of any intoxicating liquor, including all vinous, spirituous, or malt liquors, is an "intoxicating liquor." Motlow v. State (Tenn.) 145 S. W. 177, 181.

As alcoholic beverage

The words "intoxicating liquor," as used in the title of the local option law, are broad enough to cover beverages dealt with therein which do not contain a sufficient percentage of alcohol to intoxicate those who drink the same, and hence such law is not violative of Const. art. 4, § 28, in that it deals with matters not expressed in its title. State v. Hanson, 137 S. W. 968, 969, 234 Mo. 583.

The words "intoxicating liquor," as used in the local option law, embrace every kind of beverage which contains any percentage whatever of alcohol. State v. Burk, 137 S. W. 969, 971, 234 Mo. 574.

Rev. Codes 1899, § 7598, defining intoxicating liquors, includes liquors that will produce intoxication, and it is error to instruct, on trial for keeping a liquor nuisance, that any liquors which contain any percentage of alcohol, if sold as a beverage, are intoxicating liquors under the law. State v. Virgo, 103 N. W. 610, 611, 14 N. D. 293.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 3016, defining intoxicating liquor as any composition of which spirituous liquor is a part, and the local option law adding the phrase "or beverage containing alcohol in any quantity," "intoxicating liquor," within the dramshop act and the local option law, means any liquid containing alcohol in any quantity which is capable of being used as a beverage, and, on a trial for violating the local option law, the issues are whether or not the liquid sold contained alcohol and was of such a character that it could be used as a beverage, or whether it contained alcohol and was sold as a beverage. State v. Wills, 136 S. W. 25, 27, 154 Mo. App. 605.

Any liquor containing alcohol which is based on such other ingredients, or, by reason of the absence of certain ingredients, so that it may be drunk by an ordinary person as a beverage, and in such quantities as to produce intoxication, is "intoxicating liquor." Heintz v. Le Page, 62 Atl. 605, 606, 100 Me. 542.

Under Code, § 2382, declaring that the term "intoxicating liquor" shall be construed to mean alcohol and all intoxicating liquors whatever, evidence is not admissible, on a prosecution for keeping a liquor nuisance, that a liquor sold as a beverage containing from 1 to 2 per cent. of alcohol is not intoxicating. State v. Colvin, 103 N. W. 968, 127 Iowa, 632.

Laws 1909, p. 277, c. 187, defining intoxicating liquors to include any kind of beverage whatsoever, which retaining the alcoholic principle or other intoxicating qualities as a distinctive force, may be used as a beverage and become a substitute for the ordinary intoxicating drinks, is intended to describe a beverage which contains alcohol or other drug having an intoxicating quality in a quantity reasonably appreciable, and in which such drug has not by chemical combination with others lost its intoxicating principle, which liquor according to ordinary experience will be resorted to by those accustomed to use intoxicating liquors as a beverage on inability to procure the ordinary intoxicating drinks in the usual way. In such liquor alcohol or other drug of kindred quality preserving its native characteristics must be present, but not necessarily in such quantity as to produce intoxication. State v. Fargo Bottling Works Co., 124 N. W. 387, 389, 19 N. D. 396, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 872.

An intoxicating liquor is any liquor containing alcohol, which can be drunk as a beverage in such quantity as to produce intoxication. Ex parte Townsend (Tex.) 144 S. W. 623, 632.

The term "intoxicating liquor," as used in the local option law (Laws 1887, p. 179), embraces any beverage containing alcohol in any quantity whatever; it not being necessary that the beverage contain any particular per cent. of alcohol to make it an intoxicating liquor within the act. State v. Burk, 131 S. W. 883, 885, 151 Mo. App. 188.

Intoxicating liquor, as used in the local option law, is a liquor intended for use as a beverage, or capable of being so used, which contains alcohol, obtained by fermentation or by distillation, in such proportion that it will produce intoxication, when taken in such quantities as may practically be drunk. Sandoloski v. State (Tex.) 143 S. W. 151, 153.

An instruction that the law does not recognize any degree in intoxication, and any alcoholic liquor which will produce intoxication in any degree in the law would be "intoxicating liquor," was incorrect; an "intoxicant" being any liquor intended for use as a beverage, or capable of being so used, which contains alcohol, obtained either by fermentation or by the additional process of distillation, in such a proportion that it will produce intoxication when taken in such quantities as may practically be drunk. Murray v. State, 120 S. W. 437, 56 Tex. Cr. App. 438.

It cannot be said, as a matter of law, that liquor which contains 3 per cent. or more of alcohol is "intoxicating." State v. Piche, 56 Atl. 1052, 1053, 98 Me. 348.

"Intoxicating liquor" is defined to be "any liquor intended for use as a beverage or capable of being so used, which contains alcohol, either obtained by fermentation or by the additional process of distillation, in such a proportion that it will produce intoxication when taken in such quantities as may be practically drunk as an intoxicant." In a prosecution for violating the local option law, a requested charge to acquit defendant if the beverage sold was not intoxicating liquor if drunk in reasonable quantities was incorrect, what is a reasonable quantity being left undefined, and the expression "reasonable quantities" not being equivalent to such quantities as may practically be drunk. Murry v. State, 79 S. W. 568, 569, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 123 (quoting Decker v. State, 44 S. W. 845, 39 Tex. Cr. R. 20).

"Intoxicating liquor" is a liquor intended for a beverage, or capable of being so used, which contains alcohol, either obtained by fermentation or by distillation, in such a proportion that it will produce intoxication when taken in such quantities as may practically be drunk. Mason v. State, 119 S. W. 852, 853, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 261; Murray v. State, 120 S. W. 438, 56 Tex. Cr. App. 420; Arbuthnot v. State, 120 S. W. 478, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 517; Mason v. State, 58 S. E. 139, 1 Ga. App. 534.

Under Laws 1891, p. 128, § 26, now Rev. St. 1899, § 3016 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1728), defining the term "intoxicating liquors" to mean fermented, vinous, and spirituous liquors, or any composition of which fermented, vinous, or spirituous liquors is a part, a beverage containing alcohol in any quantity is an intoxicating liquor, without regard to the quantity of alcohol present. State v. Gamma, 129 S. W. 734, 738, 149 Mo. App. 694.

Ale and porter

Porter and ale are taken to be "intoxicating liquors." State v. Barr, 77 Atl. 914, 915, 84 Vt. 88.

Beer and near beer

The courts will take judicial knowledge that beer is an intoxicating liquor. Moreno v. State, 143 S. W. 156, 158, 64 Tex. Cr. 660; Lamble v. State, 44 South. 51, 53, 151 Ala. 86; State ex rel. Lyon v. City Club, 65 S. E. 730, 731, 83 S. C. 509; State v. Mitchell, 114 S. W. 1113, 134 Mo. App. 540; Vines v. State, 116 Pac. 1013, 1016, 19 Wyo. 255.

Beer is not necessarily "intoxicating liquor," and an information for selling intoxicating liquor is not sustained by the mere proof of a sale of two bottles of beer, without proof that the beer was intoxicating. Sullivan v. State, 87 S. W. 150, 151, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 201.

To constitute a violation of the local option law (Rev. St. 1895, p. 657), the liquor sold must have been "intoxicating liquor," and proof of a sale of beer is not sufficient in the absence of a showing that it was intoxicating. Harris v. State (Tex.) 86 S. W. 763.

"The word 'beer,' without restriction or qualification, denotes an intoxicating malt liquor, and is within the meaning of the words 'intoxicating liquor' as used throughout the statute." Feddern v. State, 113 N. W. 127, 129, 79 Neb. 651.

A charge of unlawfully selling "intoxicating liquors" is sustained by proof that the liquor sold was beer, without any further description or testimony that it was intoxicating. State v. Carmody, 91 Pac. 446, 447, 448, 50 Or. 1, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 828.

When the word "beer" is used without restriction, it denotes an intoxicating malt liquor, and, being included by the constitutional provision among intoxicating liquors, one unlawfully handling it has the burden of showing that it is not intoxicating if he so claims. Rochester Brewing Co. v. State, 109 Pac. 298, 26 Okl. 309; Antonelli v. State, 107 Pac. 951, 953, 8 Okl. Cr. 580; Id., 107 Pac. 953, 3 Okl. Cr. 585; Pettitt v. State, 107 Pac. 954, 955, 3 Okl. Cr. 537.

"Beer," when employed in connection with sales in a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, means an "intoxicating" drink. Hall v. People, 134 Ill. App. 559, 560.

Beer is an "intoxicating liquor" as that term is used in the statutes. Steinkuhler v. State, 109 N. W. 395, 396, 77 Neb. 331.

"Intoxicating liquors" mean "fermented, vinous or spirituous liquors, or any composition of which fermented, vinous or spirituous liquor is a part." Hence, where an indictment alleged an illegal sale of "spirituous liquors, to wit, one pint of beer," and the proof showed sale of a pint of beer, the phrase "spirituous liquors" should be treated as surplusage, and there was no variance. State v. Watts, 74 S. W. 377, 101 Mo. App. 658 (quoting definition in Rev. St. 1899, § 3016).

In a prosecution for selling "intoxicating liquor, to wit, beer," under Const. art. 1, § 7, making it unlawful to sell "any intoxicating liquor of any kind including beer," and the state proves that accused sold beer, the presumption is that the beer sold was intoxicating, and the burden is on accused to rebut the presumption by evidence, and, if no evidence is produced on that question, by either side, the presumption that the beer sold was intoxicating is conclusive on the jury. In a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor, to wit, beer, under Const. art. 1, § 7, making it unlawful to sell "intoxicating liquor, including beer," in rebutting the presumption arising upon the state's proof that accused sold beer, that the beer sold was intoxicating, accused need produce only sufficient evidence to raise a reasonable doubt as to the intoxicating quality, when it devolves upon the state to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the beer sold was in fact intoxicating. Moss v. State, 111 Pac. 950, 954, 4 Okl. Cr. 247.

Code, § 2882, prohibits the sale of "intoxicating liquor," except as otherwise provided, and defines the same to mean alcohol, ale, wine, beer, spirituous, vinous, and malt liquor, and all intoxicating liquor whatever. Held, that beverages regulated by such section are divided into two classes: First, all intoxicating liquors; and, second, certain described liquors including beer or malt liquor, whether intoxicating in their ordinary use as a beverage or not, and would include a malt liquor known as "justus beer," which contains but one-half of one per cent. of alcohol. Sawyer v. Botti, 124 N. W. 787, 788, 147 Iowa, 453, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1007.

In a prosecution for selling "intoxicating liquor, to wit, beer," under Const. art. 1, § 7, forbidding the sale of "intoxicating liquor, including beer, ale and wine," it is necessary to allege that the liquor sold was intoxicating and to prove that fact either by evidence of its intoxicating quality or effect, or by evidence showing that the liquor sold was of that kind presumed by law to be intoxicating. Moss v. State, 111 Pac. 950, 954, 4 Okl. Cr. 247.

Under the decisions of the Texas courts, "beer" is not an intoxicant, and evidence of a sale of beer is not proof of the sale of an intoxicant. Potts v. State (Tex.) 89 S. W. 886.

Beer sold in prohibition territory is presumed to be an "intoxicant" within the penal statutes. Beer, whether bock, lager, or common beer, is an "intoxicating" beverage, and common beer is a malt liquor within Ky. St. § 2557 (Russell's St. § 3635), prohibiting the sale of malt liquors in local option territory, and its sale is prohibited irrespective of the label on the bottles or the name adopted. Flanders v. Commonwealth, 180 S. W. 809, 811, 140 Ky. 88.

"Near beer," being a malt liquor, falls within the definition of section 31 of the local option statute (Sess. Laws 1909, p. 18), and is as a matter of law an intoxicating liquor. Ex parte Lockman, 110 Pac. 253, 255, 18 Idaho, 465.

The expression "near beer" does not import an intoxicating liquor, and evidence of the sale of such a beverage, without proof that, if drunk to excess, it will produce intoxication, will not support a conviction of violation of the prohibitory law contained in section 426 of the Penal Code of 1910. Abbott v. State, 74 S. E. 621, 622, 11 Ga. App. 43 (citing Stoner v. State, 63 S. E. 602, 5 Ga. App. 716; Campbell v. City of Thomasville, 64 S. E. 815, 6 Ga. App. 212).

Brandy

Brandy sold in prohibition territory is presumed to be an "intoxicant" within the penal statutes. Flanders v. Commonwealth, 181 S. W. 495, 140 Ky. 659.

Cider

Rev. Laws, c. 100, §§ 1, 2, provide that no person shall sell, expose, or keep for sale, spirituous or intoxicating liquor except as authorized by the chapter, and that ale, porter, lager beer, cider, all wines, any beverage which contains more than 1 per cent. of alcohol by volume at 60 degrees Fahrenheit, shall be deemed to be "intoxicating liquors" within the meaning of the chapter. Held, that the provision relating to the percentage of alcohol related to cider, and hence proof that defendant kept cider for sale containing more than 1 per cent. of alcohol was sufficient to sustain a conviction. Commonwealth v. McGrath, 69 N. E. 840, 185 Mass. 1.

V. S. 4460, regarding the sale of "intoxicating liquors," provides that the phrase shall be held to include fermented cider. Section 4463 provides that nothing in the chapter shall prevent the manufacture and sale of cider, but that no person shall sell it at an inn, grocery, or other public resort or at any place to an habitual drunkard. This section refers to unfermented cider such as is not by law within the term "intoxicating liquors." It follows that the provision in section 4465 as to "intoxicating liquors" includes fermented cider, and that the word "cider" as therein used has reference only to such cider as is not included in that phrase. Where an indictment charged defendant with selling intoxicating liquor and cider without authority, but did not allege the cider was sold at a public place, a conviction was proper on evidence that defendant had sold fermented cider irrespective of the character of the place of sale. State v. Waite, 47 Atl. 397, 72 Vt. 108.

The term "intoxicating liquors," in Rev. St. c. 29, § 40, declaring that wine, ale, porter, strong beer, lager beer or other malt liquors and cider when kept and deposited with intent to sell the same for tippling purposes or as a beverage as well as distilled spirits, are "intoxicating liquors," includes the enumerated liquors, and, in determining whether or not liquor is to be regarded as intoxicating under such enumeration, it is immaterial whether it is intoxicating in fact or not, and when a liquor comes within the scope of the enumeration it is intoxicating, and cider kept and deposited with intent to sell for tippling purposes or as a beverage is an intoxicating liquor, though it may be unfermented and unintoxicating in fact. State v. Frederickson, 63 Atl. 535, 537, 101 Me. 37, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 186, 115 Am. St. Rep. 295, 8 Ann. Cas. 48.

In a prosecution under the local option statute (24 Del. Laws, c. 65), making it unlawful to sell vinous liquors except for medicinal or sacramental purposes, under an indictment charging accused with selling to a specified person, not for medicinal or sacramental purposes, a certain vinous liquor, the correct name of which was to the grand jurors unknown, but which was then and there called "cider," the state must prove to the jury's satisfaction that accused sold the liquor in the county where the prosecution was had to the person named in the indictment, that the liquor was at the time vinous liquor commonly called "cider," and that it was not sold for medicinal or sacramental purposes. State v. Coverdale (Del.) 77 Atl. 754, 756, 1 Boyce, 555.

Corn liquor

In a prosecution for selling intoxicants, proof of the sale of corn liquor is sufficient to support an allegation that accused unlawfully sold intoxicating liquor. Wilburn v. State, 68 S. E. 460, 8 Ga. App. 28.

Manhattan cocktail

A "manhattan cocktail" is generally and popularly known to be intoxicating, and hence no proof of its intoxicating character is necessary in prosecutions under the prohibition law. State v. Pigg, 97 Pac. 859, 860, 78 Kan. 618, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 848, 130 Am. St. Rep. 387.

Medicinal preparations

As Medicine, see Medicine.

The mere fact that a liquor sold was popularly known as a medicine, and its formula prescribed in the United States Dispensary or like standard authority, would not prevent it from being an intoxicating liquor; nor would the fact that the distinctive character and effects of intoxicating liquors had been eliminated, and its use as a beverage rendered undesirable by other ingredients, render it any the less an intoxicating liquor within the statute. Arbuthnot v. State, 120 S. W. 478, 479, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 517.

Patent medicines, cordials, bitters, tonics, and other articles are to be regarded as intoxicating liquors, if they are capable of being used as a beverage, and contain such a percentage of alcohol as that, if drunk to excess, they will produce intoxication. Mason v. State, 58 S. E. 139, 140, 1 Ga. App. 534.

The act of 1902, No. 90, does not exclude from the term "intoxicating liquor" medicinal preparations of which alcohol is the solvent principle. State v. Krinski, 62 Atl. 87, 88, 78 Vt. 162.

Medicinal preparations recognized as such by standard authority (such as the United States Dispensary), and not reasonably capable of use as intoxicating beverages—e. g., tincture of gentian, paregoric, bay rum, cologne, essence of lemon, wood alcohol—are not ordinarily to be regarded as being within the meaning of the expression "intoxicating liquors," though such articles are liquid, contain alcohol, and may produce intoxication. Mason v. State, 58 S. E. 139, 140, 1 Ga. App. 534.

Spirituos, vinous, fermented, and malt liquors in general

See, also, Spirituous Liquor.

Sess. Laws 1909, p. 18, § 31, defines intoxicating liquors as including spirituous, vinous, malt, and fermented liquors, and all mixtures and preparations thereof, including bitters and other drinks that may be used as a beverage and produce intoxication. Held, that it is unnecessary for the state to prove that any liquor or beverage falling within the enumerated class will in fact produce intoxication. Under Sess. Laws 1909, p. 18, § 31, the state must prove the intoxicating quality of all preparations used or intended to be used as beverages which do not fall within the class enumerated in such section as spirituous, vinous, malt, and fermented liquors. Ex parte Lockman, 110 Pac. 253, 255, 18 Idaho, 465.

"Intoxicating liquors," as used in Ky. St. § 2569a, and other local option legislation, means spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, by whatever name called, that contain alcohol, and are intended to be or may be used as a beverage, and, when so used, will intoxicate. Commonwealth v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 130 S. W. 798, 800, 140 Ky. 21.

Where a "beverage, liquid mixture or decoction of any kind, producing intoxication" is sold in local option territory, and the offense does not consist of a sale of spirituous, vinous, or malt liquor, the indictment must be under Ky. St. § 2557a, prohibiting the sale of a beverage, liquid mixture, or decoction of any kind producing intoxication in local option territory, and the indictment must charge, and the evidence show, the sale of a beverage, liquid mixture, or decoction producing intoxication though it is not necessary that it be known as a spirituous, vinous, or malt liquor. Ky. St. § 2557, provides that, after the adoption of county option in any county, city, town, district or precinct, it shall be unlawful to sell, barter, or loan spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors to any person except as thereafter provided, and any person who shall sell, barter, or loan, directly or indirectly, any such liquors in such county, city, town, district, or precinct shall on conviction be fined, etc. Held, that such section does not prohibit the sale of every beverage, liquid mixture, or decoction producing intoxication, and hence, to sustain a conviction thereunder a sale of "spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors," that are intoxicating must be alleged and proved. Sizemore v. Commonwealth, 131 S. W. 37, 39, 140 Ky. 338.

"Vinous liquor" is liquor which has undergone fermentation. State v. Coverdale (Del.) 77 Atl. 754, 756, 1 Boyce, 555.

Laws 1907, p. 297, providing for the creation by popular vote of antisaloon territory, is not unconstitutional because it defines intoxicating liquors as liquors including distilled, spirituous, vinous, fermented, and malt liquors, without stating how much water might be mingled with the liquors without affecting their intoxicating quality. People v. McBride, 84 N. E. 865, 869, 234 Ill. 146, 123 Am. St. Rep. 82, 14 Ann. Cas. 994.

Rev. Pol. Code, § 2834, requires a license to engage in the business of selling any spirituous, vinous, malt, brewed, or other intoxicating liquors. The prior license law (Sess. Laws 1890, p. 229, c. 101, § 6) makes all spirituous, malt, etc., or other intoxicating liquors, or mixtures that will produce intoxication, intoxicating liquors within the act. Held that, in view of the omission of the definition of intoxicating liquors in section 2834, that section makes the liquors named therein intoxicating, and in a prosecution thereunder, upon showing that the liquors sold were of the class named, the state need not prove that they were intoxicating. State v. Ely, 118 N. W. 687, 689, 22 S. D. 487, 18 Ann. Cas. 92.

Laws Or. 1893, p. 574, § 48, subd. 18, empowered the common council to license, tax, regulate, or prohibit saloons and all places where spirituous, malt, or vinous liquors are sold. Act Feb., 1905 (Special Laws Or. 1905, p. 243), reincorporating the city of Eugene, repealed all acts and parts of acts in conflict therewith. The amendment (Sp. Laws Or. 1905, p. 252, § 48, subd. 18) empowered the common council to license, tax, regulate, or prohibit barrooms, etc., in all places where spirituous, malt, vinous, or intoxicating liquors are sold. Held, that the old charter was not amended in respect to the power to prohibit; the word "Intoxicating" used in the new charter being a synonym of the kinds of liquor specified in the old. Renshaw v. Lane County Court, 89 Pac. 147, 148, 49 Or. 526.

A charge that the United States internal revenue license for selling "malt liquor" was prima facie proof that defendant was then and there engaged in selling "intoxicating liquor" is erroneous, notwithstanding Acts 28th Leg. p. 57, c. 40, art. 402, providing that in prosecutions under the act an examined copy of the entries on the books of the internal revenue collector showing the issuance of a United States internal revenue or malt license shall be admissible and prima facie evidence that the person paying the tax is engaged in selling intoxicating liquors, where the evidence was conflicting as to whether the malt liquor alleged to have been sold was intoxicating. Uloth v. State, 87 S. W. 822, 823, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 295.

Under Act March 5, 1908 (99 Ohio Laws, p. 36) § 3, providing that the phrase "Intoxicating liquor" as used in the local option statute shall be construed to mean any distilled, malt, vinous, or any intoxicating liquor whatever, it is unlawful to sell malt liquor as a beverage where the county local option law is in force, whether such malt liquor is in fact intoxicating or not. State v. Walder, 98 N. E. 531, 532, 83 Ohio St. 68.

The term "Intoxicating liquor," in Rev. St. 1895, art. 5060a, regulating the sale of liquor in local option territory and imposing an annual tax on all persons selling spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, or medicated bitters capable of producing intoxication, on prescription in such territory, refers to liquor possessing intoxicating quality, and, if the liquor sold is not of such quality, it is not an offense though the sale is made without a license. Ex parte Gray (Tex.) 83 S. W. 828, 829.

Circular No. 33, issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue May 10, 1910, instructing subordinates in his department that "all forms of distilled spirits from which the substances congeneric with ethyl alcohol have been removed for practical purposes altogether, and which have been heretofore marked as 'pure, neutral, or cologne spirits,' will be marked 'alcohol,' under which the marking of any distilled product as "spirits" has been discontinued, is in violation of Rev. St. § 8287, which provides that "all distilled spirits shall be drawn from the receiving cisterns into casks or packages, * * * and the particular name of such distilled spirits as known to the trade, that is to say, high-wines, alcohol, or spirits, as the case may be, shall be marked or branded on the head of such cask or package"; it being shown that one distinct product of alcoholic distillation is known to the trade as "spirits," while another product is known as "alcohol," the distinction being so well known and established that their being so marked does not constitute a misbranding, and therefore the provision therefor is not by implication repealed by Food and Drugs Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, 34 Stat. 768. Union Distilling Co. v. Bettman, 181 Fed. 419, 420.

In passing the local option law (Laws 1887, p. 179), the title of which is "An act to provide for the preventing of the evils of intemperance by local option * * * by submitting the question of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors to the qualified voters of such county or city," the Legislature must be deemed to have had in mind the definition of "intoxicating liquors" in the then existing general law, which was "fermented, vinous or spirituous liquors, or any composition of which fermented, vinous or spirituous liquors is a part." Therefore the provision in the local option law prohibiting the sale of beverages containing alcohol, in any quantity whatever, did not violate Const. art. 4, § 28 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 185), forbidding the bill to contain more than one subject which should be clearly expressed in its title. State v. Martin, 129 S. W. 931, 933, 230 Mo. 1, 139 Am. St. Rep. 628.

In view of Rev. St. 1909, § 7222, providing that the term "intoxicating liquor," as used in this act, shall be construed to be fermented, vinous, or spirituous liquor or any composition of which vinous, fermented, or spirituous liquor is a part, the local option law, which deals with the same subject as the dramshop law, is not violative of Const. art. 4, § 28, providing that no statute shall contain more than one subject, in that it deals with intoxicating liquors and with beverages which do not contain a sufficient percentage of alcohol to intoxicate persons who drink the same, since liquors which actually intoxicate and those which contain an insufficient quantity of alcohol to produce intoxication are embraced within the term "intoxicating liquor." State v. Hanson, 137 S. W. 968, 969, 234 Mo. 583.

"Intoxicating," as applied to liquor, is confined to spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors; that is, liquors containing alcohol, produced either by distillation or fermentation, capable of producing intoxication when taken into the human stomach in such quantities as it may reasonably contain. Thompson v. State (Tex.) 97 S. W. 316, 317.

"Intoxicating liquor" is defined by Act March 5, 1908 (99 Ohio Laws, p. 35, § 8), as any distilled, malt, vinous, or intoxicating liquor whatever. Schen v. State, 98 N. E. 969, 971, 83 Ohio St. 146.

In a prosecution under Act March 24, 1908 (Laws 1907-08, c. 69, art. 3, § 1; Snyder's Comp. Laws, § 4180), forbidding the sale of any spirituous, vinous, fermented or malt liquors or any imitation or substitute therefor, it is not necessary to allege or prove that the liquor sold was intoxicating; the allegation and proof that the liquor sold was a spirituous, vinous, fermented, or malt liquor, as the case may be, or an imitation of or substitute for one, or the other of such liquors being sufficient. Moss v. State, 111 Pac. 950, 956, 4 Okl. Cr. 247.

Spirituous and vinous liquors are intoxicating beverages. Under Ky. St. § 2557 (Russell's St. § 8635), prohibiting the sale of spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors in local option territory, a sale of malt liquor whether it intoxicates some people or not or is only a mild intoxicant, or whether accused believed that it was an innocent soft drink, is an offense. Flanders v. Commonwealth, 130 S. W. 809, 811, 140 Ky. 38.

Whisky

"Intoxicating liquor" and "whisky" are synonymous, and hence an instruction, that if defendant sold "intoxicating liquor" as charged he was guilty, applied the facts to the allegations of the information which alleged a sale of "whisky." Wilcoxson v. State (Tex.) 91 S. W. 581.

Whisky is an "intoxicating liquor" as that term is used in the statutes. Steinkuhler v. State, 109 N. W. 395, 396, 77 Neb. 331.

A charge that defendant bought "whisky" contrary to law is equivalent to charging that he bought intoxicating liquors, the word "whisky" being of equal import with the expression "intoxicating liquors." Rutherford v. State, 90 S. W. 172, 173, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 21.

Whisky is an "intoxicating liquor." State v. Barr, 77 Atl. 914, 915, 84 Vt. 38.

Whisky sold in prohibition territory is presumed to be an "intoxicant" within the penal statutes. Flanders v. Commonwealth, 131 S. W. 495, 140 Ky. 659.

Wine

Wine sold in prohibition territory is presumed to be an "intoxicant" within the penal statutes. Flanders v. Commonwealth, 131 S. W. 495, 140 Ky. 659.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS AND MIXTURES

An indictment, alleging that accused in a designated magisterial district unlawfully sold and delivered "intoxicating liquors and mixtures thereof," sufficiently charges a violation of Revenue Law (Acts 1904, p. 42, c. 20) § 141, forbidding the sale without a license of "wine, ardent spirits, malt liquors, or any mixture thereof," and further providing that "all mixtures, preparations, and liquors (except pure apple cider) which will produce intoxication shall be deemed 'ardent spirits' within the meaning of this section." Fletcher v. Commonwealth, 56 S. E. 149, 151, 106 Va. 840.

The legislative declaration contained in Code 1899, c. 32, § 1, that "intoxicating mixtures" shall be deemed spirituous liquors, is equivalent to a declaration that they are spirituous liquors for the purposes of the act, whether they are such in fact or not. State v. Good, 49 S. E. 121, 122, 56 W. Va. 215.

"Intoxicating liquors," or mixtures thereof, reasonably construed, mean liquors which will intoxicate, and which are commonly used as beverages for such purpose, and also any mixtures of such liquors as, retaining their alcoholic qualities, may be used as a beverage, and become a substitute for the ordinary intoxicating drinks. Roberts v. State, 60 S. E. 1082, 1084, 4 Ga. App. 207.

Whisky, brandy, wine, or beer sold in prohibition territory are presumed to be intoxicants, within the penal statutes; but, to convict for selling concoctions or mixtures, the intoxicating effect of which is not established, such effect must be alleged and proved. Flanders v. Commonwealth, 131 S. W. 495, 140 Ky. 659.

INTRALIMINAL

"Intraliminal," with reference to property rights conferred by a lode location, embraces all within its boundaries, down to the center of the earth. Jefferson Min. Co. v. Anchoria-Leland Min. & Mill. Co., 75 Pac. 1070, 1073, 32 Colo. 176, 64 L. R. A. 925.

INTRICATE QUESTION

An action for damages to a holder of railroad bonds for breach of an agreement as to reorganization of the road, under which he deposited his bonds, the measure of damages depending on the value of the road with its various appurtenances as a going concern, involves questions of intricacy authorizing a trial by special jury under Laws 1901, p. 1465, c. 602, § 5. Industrial & General Trust v. Tod, 95 N. Y. Supp. 44, 46 Misc. Rep. 492.

INTRINSIC

INTRINSIC DANGER

The "intrinsic danger" of the undertaking on which the exception rendering the owner liable for the negligence of an independent contractor is based is the danger inherent in the performance of the contract resulting directly from the work to be done, and not from the negligence of the contractor. Laffery v. United States Gypsum Co., 111 Pac. 498, 501, 83 Kan. 349, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 930, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 590.

INTRINSIC FAIRNESS AND HONESTY

The terms "intrinsic fairness and honesty," as used in the definition of color of title in the statute of limitations relate to the means of proving the right of property in the land so as to make the title equitably equal to a regular chain. Pearson v. Burditt, 26 Tex. 157, 173, 80 Am. Dec. 649.

INTRINSIC VALUE

While the term "market value" is not synonymous with "intrinsic value"—the one meaning the actual price at which the commodity is commonly sold and the other its true, inherent, and essential value, independent of accident, place or person, the same everywhere and to every one—yet the latter is so generally a factor in the former that a thing which has no intrinsic value is generally without market value, and therefore, where a party was prepared to meet an issue as to the market value of animals, the refusal of a continuance to procure evidence to meet an issue as to their intrinsic value presented by a trial amendment was not prejudicial. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Clements, 115 S. W. 664, 666, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 143.

INTRODUCE

The word "introduce," in an indictment alleging that accused "did * * * introduce" from without the limits of Indian Territory intoxicating liquors, is synonymous with the words "carry or have carried into," as used in Act Cong. March 1, 1895, c. 145, § 8, 28 Stat. 697, punishing any person "who shall carry or in any manner have carried" into Indian Territory any intoxicating liquors. United States v. Buckles, 97 S. W. 1022, 1024, 6 Ind. T. 819.

INTRODUCTION OF EVIDENCE

The word "evidence," as used in rule 3 of the Superior Court (66 S. E. xiii, 128 N. C. 655), providing that "in all cases, civil or criminal, when no evidence is introduced by the defendant, the right of reply and conclusion shall belong to his counsel," does not mean the tendering of a witness for the evident purpose of having his fees taxed as costs. The "introduction of evidence" includes something more than the mere tendering of a witness and is, as stated in Starkie, Ev. p. 8, § 3, "that which is legally submitted to a jury to enable them to decide upon the questions in dispute or issue as pointed out by the pleadings, and as distinguished from all comment and argument." Witnesses are vehicles or means of proof, while evidence is the proof itself. Unless the party tendering a witness examines such witness with the view of eliciting proof in support of his side of the controversy, he cannot be said to introduce evidence. Brown v. Southern Ry. Co., 52 S. E. 198, 140 N. C. 154.

INTRUDE

INTRUDED INTO

The words "intruded into," in Code Civ. Proc. § 2232, subd. 4, authorizes the maintenance of summary proceedings to recover possession of real property where the defendant had "intruded into" or "squatted upon" any real property without permission of the person entitled to possession thereof, etc., refer to the original entry, and do not include an entry by a vendee under contract of sale. Stockwell v. Washburn, 111 N. Y. Supp. 413, 415, 59 Misc. Rep. 543.

INTRUDER

As de facto officer, see De Facto Officer.

An "intruder" is one "who attempts to perform the duties of an office without authority of law and without the support of public acquiescence. * * * No one is under obligation to recognize or respect the acts of an intruder; and for all legal purposes they are absolutely void." Oates v. State, 121 S. W. 370, 381, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 571 (quoting and adopting definition in Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 751).

Where a lease was terminated by a warrant in summary proceedings for nonpayment of rent, an assignment of the lease without the landlord's consent, in violation of the covenants of the lease, did not confer any right upon the assignee, where his occupancy of the premises covered by the lease did not begin until after its termination; but such occupancy rendered him a mere "squatter" or "intruder," within Code Civ. Proc. § 2232, subd. 4, authorizing summary proceedings to recover possession of land from a person who has intruded into or squatted upon any real property without the permission of the person entitled to the possession thereof. Mathoney v. Hoffman, 109 N. Y. Supp. 13, 14, 58 Misc. Rep. 217.

INTRUST

Goods are not "intrusted" for sale within a statute providing that an agent to whom goods are "intrusted" for sale is the true owner thereof so far as to render valid a sale of them by him to a bona fide purchaser, where the person in whose hands they are has stolen them. Prentice Co. v. Page, 41 N. E. 279, 280, 164 Mass. 276 (citing Rodliff v. Dallinger, 4 N. E. 805, 141 Mass. 1, 55 Am. Rep. 439; Thacher v. Moors, 134 Mass. 156; Stollenwerck v. Thacher, 115 Mass. 224; Dows v. National Exch. Bank, 91 U. S. 618, 23 L. Ed. 214; Soltau v. Gerdau, 23 N. E. 864, 119 N. Y. 380, 16 Am. St. Rep. 843).

One to whom a child is given by its parent to expose is one to whom it had been "intrusted or confided," within Code, § 4766, declaring a punishment if a parent of a child under six years of age, or a person to whom such child has been intrusted or confided, expose such child with intent to abandon it. State v. Sparegrove, 112 N. W. 83, 84, 134 Iowa, 599.

In an action for injuries to a coal mine employé by the fall of the roof of the entry, the evidence held to show that a third person was intrusted with superintendence over the miners and the mine, within Code 1907, § 3910, subd. 2, making an employer liable for injuries to an employé caused by the negligence of a coemployé intrusted with superintendence. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Green, 49 South. 301, 303, 159 Ala. 178.

A corporation of Baltimore, which was in possession of a steamer, registered elsewhere, under a contract of purchase, although it had not paid the purchase price, and the title was retained by the vendor, was a "person intrusted with management," within Act June 23, 1910, c. 373, § 2, 36 Stat. 604, and presumptively authorized to order repairs and supplies; and persons furnishing the same were entitled to a lien on the vessel therefor, in the absence of knowledge on their part, or anything to put them on inquiry, as to the terms of the contract, as required by section 3 of the act. The City of Milford, 199 Fed. 956, 959.

INURE

The word "inure" means "to take or have effect; to serve to the use, benefit or advantage of a person," and, as used within the organic act (Act May 2, 1890, c. 182, § 23), relating to vacation of highways, means that, when the easement is abandoned, the title to the strip abandoned becomes ipso facto again coupled with the use. Mean v. Callison, 116 Pac. 195, 28 Okl. 737.

As used in the United States Pension Laws (Rev. St. § 4747) providing that no money due or to become due to any pensioner shall be liable to attachment or seizure under any legal or equitable process, but shall inure wholly to the pensioner's benefit, the words "shall inure wholly to the pensioner's benefit" relate to the words "due or to become due" and have no force after delivery of the money to the pensioner; and under the statute pension money is only exempt "while due, or to become due." In re Ferguson's Estate, 123 N. W. 123, 140 Wis. 583, 17 Ann. Cas. 1189.

In the statute providing that no money due to any pensioner shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure, whether the same remains with the Pension Office, or any officer or agent thereof, or is in the course of transmission, but shall "inure wholly to the benefit of such pensioner," the words quoted mean only that the pension funds shall be protected until they come safely into the hands of the pensioner, after which they are liable for his debts; and hence pension money, in the hands of a bankrupt at the time of the adjudication, neither invested nor mingled with other funds, is not exempt. In re Jones, 166 Fed. 337, 338.

INVALID

The expression "invalid," used in Lien Law N. Y. § 235, providing that chattel mortgages should be invalid under certain circumstances, means not valid; null or void. In re Thomas, 199 Fed. 214, 227 (citing Cent. Dict.).

A holding that a paving ordinance was "invalid," because conferring certain discretionary powers on the engineer, did not render the ordinance void in toto, so as to render wholly void an ordinance amending the first ordinance in the particulars in which it was faulty. Johnson v. People ex rel. Reed, 66 N. E. 1081, 1083, 202 Ill. 306.

The word "invalid," as applied to a contract, does not always mean an absolute nullity, for a contract may be so imperfect as not to be enforceable, but not such an absolute nullity that it cannot be perfected. Jones v. Bank of Cumming, 63 S. E. 36, 40, 131 Ga. 614.

A sale under a power in a deed of trust, made after the death of the grantor or mortgagor, and before the expiration of the four years within which administration might be begun, but where no administration had been begun, was valid, and passed the title to the lands conveyed, subject only to be set aside by an administration for the payment of such preferred claims as might have existed under the law at the time, and is not invalid or void, nor in a state of suspense, except as subject to such administration; the terms "invalid" and "void," sometimes applied to such trust deeds, meaning nothing more than ineffectual to pass title; the term "void" being seldom regarded as implying a complete nullity, but as being, in a legal sense, and under certain circumstances, subject to qualification. Wiener v. Zwieb, 141 S. W. 771, 777, 105 Tex. 262.

The words "void" and "invalid," when used in regard to contracts not immoral or against public policy, usually mean voidable at the option of one of the parties or some one legally interested therein. Doney v. Laughlin, 94 N. E. 1027, 1028, 50 Ind. App. 38 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7334, 7335).

INVEIGLE—INVEIGLEMENT

To warrant a conviction under P. S. 5721, punishing one who forcibly seizes or inveigles or kidnaps another under the age of 16 years, it is not necessary to show that accused used actual force on the person of prosecutrix, a child 15 years old, and thus caused her to go out of the state. The word "inveigle," in P. S. 5721, punishing one who forcibly seizes or "inveigles" or kidnaps another, is used in its ordinary sense, and carries the idea of deception for the accomplishment of an evil purpose. State v. Rivera, 78 Atl. 786, 788, 84 Vt. 154.

On a trial for a violation of P. S. 5721, punishing one who forcibly seizes or inveigles or kidnaps another, an instruction defining the word "inveigle" as to lead astray by making blind to the truth or consequences, to mislead by deception, enticing into a violation of duty, propriety or self-interest, to blind, to delude, to lead astray, to persuade to something evil by deception, to entice, to ensnare, to seduce, to wheedle, is not misleading because of the terms "to blind, to delude, to entice," when used in connection with the expressions "to mislead by deception," "to persuade to something evil by deception." State v. Rivera, 78 Atl. 786, 788, 84 Vt. 154.

"A new combination with a new mode of operation may be 'inventive,' even if all the parts thereof are old, and even if the functions of the combination be also old." Where a new organization of old elements produces a new mode of operation and beneficial result, they may be a "patentable invention" whether that result be new or old. The combination of old devices in a new article without producing any new mode of operation is not invention. Louden Machinery Co. v. Janesville Hay Tool Co., 141 Fed. 975, 978 (quoting and adopting Walker, Patents, §§ 26, 37).

"In determining the question of 'invention,' each case must depend upon its own facts; the inquiry always being whether what has been done required the exercise of the inventive faculties. Has a new or better result been obtained? Is it cheaper and more durable? Has it new capabilities? Does it perform new functions?" Rumford Chemical Works v. New York Baking Powder Co., 134 Fed. 385, 388, 67 C. C. A. 367.

•Where the idea of a machine has been conceived, and the conception carried into effect by the construction of the machine, which is used, or is capable of being used, for the purpose for which it was designed, it is no longer an "experiment," but an "invention," and the subsequent abandonment of the use of the machine does not render it an abandoned experiment, nor lessen its effect as an anticipation which will invalidate a subsequent patent to another for substantially the same machine. Buser v. Novelty Tufting Mach. Co., 151 Fed. 478, 492, 81 C. C. A. 16.

"Invention" consists of the conception of the idea and of means for putting it in practice and producing the desired result. Until the latter conception is complete and ready to be put in some practical form, there is no available conception of the invention within the meaning of the patent law. Burson v. Vogel, 29 App. D. C. 388, 395.

Where a contract for the payment of royalty on a patented device provided that the royalty was to be paid on the "invention" above referred to, the use of the word "invention" did not open the state of the art and allow the defendant to meet the plaintiff's claim by proving that he had invented nothing new, but the royalty was to be paid on the "invention" described in the specified applications—on the contrivances there described—unless and until there was a final adverse action by the patent office. Eclipse Bicycle Co. v. Farrow, 26 Sup. Ct. 150, 152, 199 U. S. 581, 50 L. Ed. 317.

The coupling without modification of a motor that will run any kind of a machine to a machine that will run with any kind of a motor is not "patentable invention." National Regulator Co. v. Powers Regulator Co., 160 Fed. 460, 463, 87 C. C. A. 444.

Adaptation to new use

A patent for a material for making steam packing may involve "invention," although a similar material had previously been used for other and wholly different purposes. Forsyth v. Garlock, 142 Fed. 461, 466, 73 C. C. A. 577.

Aggregation or combination

Merely bringing together old devices in a combination in which each performs its old function, without producing any new result by reason of the combination, is not "invention." Self-Sealing Can Co. v. Hocker, 136 Fed. 418, 420 (citing Hailes v. Van Wormer, 20 Wall. [87 U. S.] 354, 22 L. Ed. 241).

The mere assembling of old parts to make a structure of a new design, although new lines and curves and a harmonious and novel whole are produced, does not involve "invention" so as to render the design patentable. Crier v. Innes, 160 Fed. 103, 106, 107.

The mere bringing together of old elements, which in their new places do no more than their original work and do not co-operate with other elements in doing something new and useful, is not "invention"; but, if they coact with each other in a new and unitary organization so as to produce a more beneficial result than by their separate operation, it may constitute a patentable combination. National Tube Co. v. Aiken, 163 Fed. 254, 261, 91 C. C. A. 114.

Change of material

The use of a different material in constructing an article previously patented involves invention where it produces a useful result, increased efficiency, or a decided saving in operation. George Frost Co. v. Samstag, 180 Fed. 739, 740, 105 C. C. A. 37.

Development of idea

"Invention" is not confined to the concrete mechanical form into which an idea ultimately evolves. "Invention" is the idea itself, the burst of new thought, the discovery; and patentable invention is the conjunction of these with appropriate and efficient mechanical means. Confessedly, an old idea, carried out mechanically in a new form, is patentable invention. A new idea, carried out mechanically in an old form, ought equally to be regarded as patentable invention. To hold otherwise is to dethrone the head and enthrone the hands; to leave genuine genius unrecompensed, while placing the inventor's crown on mechanical skill. Brown v. Crane Co., 138 Fed. 235, 237, 66 C. C. A. 676.

Extension of original idea

It is not "invention" to merely extend the use of an old combination of elements, where no new result is produced and no new method of producing the old result. Voightmann v. Weis & Ridge Cornice Co., 148 Fed. 848, 853, 78 C. C. A. 538.

The mere carrying forward or a mere extended application of the original thought is not "invention," even though it results in improvement in degree. Voightmann v. Weis & Ridge Cornice Co., 133 Fed. 298, 303 (citing Consolidated Roller-Mill Co. v. Walker, 11 Sup. Ct. 292, 138 U. S. 124, 34 L. Ed. 920; Wright v. Yuengling, 15 Sup. Ct. 1, 155 U. S. 47, 39 L. Ed. 64).

Improvement

"Invention," in the nature of improvements, is the double mental act of discerning, in existing machines, processes, or articles, some deficiency, and pointing out the means of overcoming it. General Electric Co. v. Sangamo Electric Co., 174 Fed. 246, 251, 98 C. C. A. 154.

Not every improvement is "invention." If ordinary mechanical skill is adequate to make the selection of elements from machines in the prior art and their union or combination in a new machine, operating in the old way and accomplishing the same result, although it may be an improved result, and no new idea is involved in the process, there is no patentable "invention," however great the improvement. American Laundry Machinery Mfg. Co. v. Troy Laundry Machinery Co., 171 Fed. 870, 877 (citing Dodge Coal Storage Co. v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 150 Fed. 788-741, 80 C. C. A. 404; Dunbar v. Eastern Elevating Co., 81 Fed. 201, 26 C. C. A. 330; Atlantic Works v. Brady, 2 Sup. Ct. 225, 107 U. S. 192, 199, 200, 27 L. Ed. 438).

Mechanical skill

"Invention" is not the offspring of mere mechanical skill, no matter how highly developed it may be; and, while it may be said to be the product of the intellect as against mere handiness in the use of tools, it is not every new mental conception in a useful art which marks an advance in such art that will raise the mechanic into an inventor under the patent laws. Lord & Burnham Co. v. Payne, 190 Fed. 172, 178.

It is not "invention" to produce a device which a skilled mechanic, upon suggestion of what was required, would produce, especially so when he is aided in the work of construction by devices and appliances in practical use pregnant with suggestions of larger and better use. Ross v. Dowden Mfg. Co., 157 Fed. 681, 684, 85 C. C. A. 449 (citing Tie-man v. Kraatz, 85 Fed. 439, 29 C. C. A. 259).

Mental conception

A conception of the mind is not sufficient as an "invention," or a completed "invention," within section 4886, Rev. St. (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3382), requiring that, to be entitled to a patent, the person must have "invented" or "discovered" some new, etc., thing. Westinghouse Mach. Co. v. General Electric Co., 190 Fed. 907, 916.

That which influences the mental conception, and leads one, step by step, until his device is successfully produced, is "invention," as distinguished from mere "mechanical skill." Stainer & Voegtly Hardware Co. v. Tabor Sash Co., 178 Fed. 831, 841.

A conception alone, although first in time, is not patentable, but must be accompanied by mechanical embodiment, which, to make the invention patentable, must itself be unanticipated. Volghtmann v. Perkinson, 138 Fed. 56, 57, 70 C. C. A. 482.

A theory or mental conception of a new device is not "invention" within the patent law, and the date of an invention cannot be carried back of the time when it was embodied in a model or drawing, or some concrete form would enable those skilled in the art to construct the device. Corrington v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co., 178 Fed. 711, 715, 103 C. C. A. 479.

INVENTIVE DISCOVERY

"Inventive discovery" involves the intelligent apprehension of relations not before recognized by others, although actually existing, followed by the conception of how they can be practically utilized. Eck v. Kutz, 132 Fed. 758, 779.

INVENTOR

The general rule is that he who first reduces an invention to practice is ordinarily held to be the "inventor" as against another who claims to have previously conceived the idea which led to the invention, but made no practical application of it. Killeen v. Buffalo Furnace Co., 140 Fed. 33, 36, 37.

INVENTORY

See Complete Inventory.

A covenant in a policy issued to a corporation conducting a tobacco warehouse covering the tobacco therein, which required the insured to keep "a complete itemized inventory of stock on hand, showing grades and brands," did not require such inventory to contain a statement of values which were readily ascertainable from the statement of grades or brands. Kline Bros. & Co. v. Royal Ins. Co., 192 Fed. 378, 384.

"Lexicographers say that 'inventory' is an itemized list of the various articles constituting a collection, estate, stock in trade, etc., with their values." Under an iron-safe clause requiring the keeping of a complete itemized inventory, an inventory which lumps bills of goods, without setting out the items or their quality or the stock thereof, is insufficient, especially where two inventories which more nearly comply with the clause had been started and never completed but destroyed and the books as kept were not sufficient without the clause. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Sherman, 66 S. E. 81, 83, 110 Va. 435.

An inventory of a stock of merchandise, within the meaning of the term "inventory" as used in what is known as the "Iron-safe clause" of a fire insurance policy, means a list of all the articles of merchandise in the stock, sufficiently itemized to show the kinds and numbers or quantities thereof, together with their values at the time of making the same, as nearly as they can be ascertained. In the case of a store opening with an entirely new stock of goods, at or about the date of the issuance of the policy, the invoices of the first lot of goods put into it, giving the quantities thereof by items, with the cost prices, if preserved and kept for production, on the demand of the insurer, as and for an inventory, will constitute such a list, and the insurer will have substantially complied with so much of the policy as requires the taking of an inventory. In determining what constitutes such an inventory, regard must be had to the purpose for which it is required, and, in seeking this, all parts of the "Iron-safe clause" should be read and considered together. Ruffner Bros. v. Dutchess Ins. Co., 53 S. E. 943, 944, 59 W. Va. 432, 115 Am. St. Rep. 924, 8 Ann. Cas. 866.

An inventory, in the sense used in an insurance policy, means an itemized list or enumeration of property, article by article, and is not intended merely to show the gross value of the property insured, but it is to enable the parties to ascertain the different articles which go to make up the entire stock in order that the insurance company may test the correctness of the claim for damages in two respects: First, whether the articles composing the stock belong to the class of property covered by the policy; second, whether the valuation attached to the different items is reasonable. Shawnee Fire Ins. Co. v. Thompson & Rewell, 119 Pac. 985, 989, 30 Okl. 466.

An invoice of goods purchased is not an "inventory" of stock to be produced under the iron-safe clause of a fire policy, nor is a set of books such an "inventory." Johnson v. Sun Fire Ins. Co., 60 S. E. 118, 120, 3 Ga. App. 430 (citing Everett-Ridley-Ragan Co. v. Traders' Ins. Co., 48 S. E. 918, 121 Ga. 228, 104 Am. St. Rep. 99; Southern Fire Ins. Co. v. Knight, 36 S. E. 821, 111 Ga. 622, 52 L. R. A. 70, 78 Am. St. Rep. 216; Hester v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., 41 S. E. 552, 115 Ga. 454).

Invoices and entries in a ledger made from them, stating the aggregate value of goods sent from one store to another by the proprietor of both, not in all cases specifying the kind of goods, was not an inventory within the iron-safe clause of a policy of fire insurance making the taking of "inventory" at least once a year a condition precedent to the insurer's liability on the policy. An "inventory" is a "detailed and itemized enumeration of the articles composing the stock with the value of each." Coggins v. Aetna Ins. Co., 56 S. E. 506, 508, 144 N. C. 7, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 839, 119 Am. St. Rep. 924 (quoting and adopting definition in Roberts, Willis & Taylor Co. v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 48 S. W. 559, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 344).

An "inventory," "One car load household furniture," is not such an inventory of attached goods as the statute requires to be made by a constable serving the attachment by which an action in a justice court is commenced, so that jurisdiction is not conferred on the justice by the service thereof, with the writ, on the person in whose possession the goods were found. Knack v. Berlin, 114 N. W. 342, 343, 150 Mich. 550.

The word "schedule" has a meaning as the equivalent to "inventory." An inventory is a list or catalogue of property merely, without attempt to describe the same in detail. A schedule of property for taxation is a list of assessable articles without attempt to describe the same in detail. A statement is defined to be "a formal, exact, detailed presentation." A statement would contain all that would appear in a schedule or list, but would contain minutiae and matter of description not necessary to a schedule or inventory. Section 49 of the revenue act (3 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, p. 3423, c. 120), prescribing a penalty for the failure of a railroad to file a statement with the county clerk, refers to the statement or schedule showing the property held for right of way and the length of tracks and turnouts and tracts of land through which the road runs (which property is afterwards described as "railroad track"), which is required to be filed by section 41 of the act, and cannot be extended by implication to include the failure to report the value of the railroad track annually, or to return the lists of rolling stock required to be returned by section 44, or to the failure to make the list or schedule of personal property or real estate, which is required to be listed by section 46. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. People, 75 N. E. 368, 370, 217 Ill. 164.

Invoices distinguished

Under a fire policy of insurance covering a stock of goods in a warehouse which contained a covenant for its avoidance unless an inventory should be taken within 30 days, an "inventory" meant a list made by the merchant of the goods in his store, and though an "invoice" is also a list of goods, it is made by the consignor at the point of shipment and does not show that the goods therein listed have reached the consignee or what portion thereof has been sold, and the requirement of the policy would not be met by the invoices of the insured plus his books. Day v. Home Ins. Co., 58 South. 549, 551, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652.

INVEST—INVESTMENT

See Capital Invested; Money Loaned and Invested; Reinvest—Reinvestment; Splendid Investment.

Investments in bonds, stocks, or otherwise, see Otherwise.

It has been adjudged that general deposits in a bank are not "investments" within the meaning of a statute forbidding investments by a state treasurer. Warren v. Nix, 135 S. W. 896, 899, 97 Ark. 374 (citing State v. McFetridge, 54 N. W. 1, 998, 84 Wis. 473, 20 L. R. A. 223).

"To 'invest' means to lay out money or capital in business with a view of obtaining an income or profit, as to 'invest' money in bank stock; to employ for some profitable use; to convert into some other form of wealth, usually of a more or less permanent nature." In re Curtis, 60 Atl. 240, 241, 26 R. I. 580.

"The Century Dictionary defines the word 'invest' as follows: 'To employ for some profitable use; convert into some other form of wealth, usually of a more or less permanent nature, as in the purchase of property or shares, or in loans secured by mortgages, etc.; said of money or capital; followed by in; as, to invest one's means in lands or houses or in bank stock, government bonds, etc.; to invest large sums in books.' 'Investment' in the same dictionary is defined as: 'An investing of money or capital; expenditure for profits or future benefits; a placing or conversion of capital in a way intended to secure income or profit from its employment; as, an investment in active business, or in stocks, land, or the like; to make safe investment of one's principal.' In 23

Cyc. p. 848, 'invest,' 'as used in connection with money or capital, to give money for some other property; to lay out money for some other kind of property, usually of a permanent nature; literally, to clothe money in some thing; to lay out money in some permanent form so as to produce an income; to lay out money or capital in business with the view of obtaining an income or profit; to place money so that it will yield a profit.' Hence the carrying out of a proposed merger agreement, by which stockholders may surrender their shares and receive in exchange therefor the shares of the merged company, so far as such merger affects a life insurance company owning shares in the constituent companies upon expenditures of money, made when not prohibited by law, does not offend against the provisions of Insurance Law, § 100, as amended by Laws 1906, p. 797, c. 326, providing that life insurance companies shall not invest in any shares of the stock of any corporation other than a municipal corporation. Morse v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 108 N. Y. Supp. 986, 988, 124 App. Div. 235.

"An 'investment' is some form of property into which money has been put with the intention of holding it for gain or increase or for permanent safe-keeping. In its common meaning the word 'investment' involves the idea of intended profit, and ordinarily the word implies a certain measure of permanence, in contrast to a speculation or temporary venture. A temporary deposit of money subject to call, though some interest is received for it, is not an 'investment' of the money, in the usual sense of the word (Law's Estate, 22 Atl. 831, 144 Pa. 499, 507, 14 L. R. A. 103), though it has been held to be so in a broader sense (Jennings v. Davis, 31 Conn. 134, 143). The purchase of a note or of corporate stock or of real estate yielding rent, or to be used in business, or to be held for an expected rise in value, is an 'investment' in the strictest sense." Testator's will devised the bulk of his estate to trustees for the benefit of grandchildren, and declared that it would be lawful for the trustees and their successors to change investments existing under the will, and that, in case of the death of any married granddaughter, if she left issue her portion should be paid to the guardian of any child or children, to be held in trust for its or their benefit. Held, that the term "investments," as used in such will, included real estate, and authorized the trustees to sell real estate belonging to the testator which had become unproductive. In re Curtis, 60 Atl. 240, 241, 26 R. I. 580 (quoting Una v. Dodd, 39 N. J. Eq. 173, 186; Savings Bank of San Diego County v. Barrett, 58 Pac. 914, 126 Cal. 413; Colorado Sav. Bank v. Evans, 58 Pac. 981, 12 Colo. App. 334, 342; People v. Utica Ins. Co. [N. Y.] 15 Johns. 353, 392. 8 Am. Dec. 243; Lyon v. Zimmer, 30 Fed. 410).

The retention of money in his own hands by the guardian of a ward and the giving of a note therefor cannot be said to amount to an "investment." The accepted definitions of that term, as well as its derivation, involve the idea of the clothing or investiture of the funds with new and different attributes. It is defined "to convert into some other form of wealth, usually of a more or less permanent nature," and "to be the laying out of money in the purchase of some species of property, especially a source of income or profit," and giving money for some other property, or the laying out of money in such manner that it may produce a revenue. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Freud, 80 Atl. 603, 605, 115 Md. 29.

INVEST AND MANAGE

In a will creating a trust in the residue, a power to "invest and manage" implies a power of sale. Robinson v. Robinson, 72 Atl. 883, 885, 105 Me. 63, 134 Am. St. Rep. 537.

INVESTMENT COMPANY

A corporation organized to purchase land, and whose capital is invested therein, is not an investment company within Revenue Law, § 56, requiring the president or other officer to make a statement of the capital stock and to deliver the same to the assessor, and providing that such stock shall be assessed as property belonging to other corporations and individuals, and that, if the bank, association, or company shall have acquired land or other tangible property assessed separately, the assessed value thereof shall be deducted from the valuation of the stock. Bressler v. Wayne County, 122 N. W. 23, 24, 84 Neb. 774.

INVESTMENT IN BONDS

Under Rev. St. Ohio 1890, § 2730, declaring that "investments in bonds" shall include all moneys in bonds or certificates of indebtedness or other evidences of indebtedness of whatever kind, whether issued by incorporated or unincorporated companies, cities, counties, or other corporations, and section 2731, subjecting to taxation all investments in bonds, municipal bonds deposited by a foreign corporation with the superintendent of insurance for the security of policy holders, and which are not returned by either the company or the superintendent of insurance, may be listed for taxation by the auditor of the county in which they are held. Western Assur. Co. v. Halliday, 127 Fed. 830, 831.

INVESTMENT SECURITY

Such stock and evidences of indebtedness of private corporations as may be bought on the market are commonly referred to as "investment securities." Robotham v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 58 Atl. 842, 847, 64 N. J. Eq. 673.

Subject to investigation, see Subject To.

Where a watchman employed by a railway company was authorized to "investigate" the matter of throwing sticks at passenger cars, his act in arresting plaintiff on a charge of throwing sticks at a train was within the scope of his authority so as to render the railway company responsible therefor. Johnston v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 110 N. W. 424, 426, 130 Wis. 492.

The word "investigation," in Acts 1897, c. 14, relative to the preservation of the purity of elections, and defining and punishing offenses against the elective franchise, and providing that a person offending against any provisions of the act is a competent witness against another person so offending and may be compelled to attend and testify on any trial, hearing, proceeding, or investigation, relates, when construed with reference to the words "trial, hearing, and proceeding," to proceedings and investigations before a grand jury when the state is proceeding by indictment or presentment, and all the words are terms pertaining to proceedings of a criminal nature and mark the different steps in a criminal prosecution, and an offender can be compelled to testify only in some criminal trial, hearing, proceeding, or investigation of some other offender, and cannot be compelled to testify or punished for failure to testify in a civil proceeding growing out of a fraudulent election. Lindsay v. Allen, 82 S. W. 648, 649, 113 Tenn. 517.

INVIOULATE

To be "inviolate" is to be unhurt, uninjured, unpolluted, or unbroken. Ridgely v. Taylor, 110 N. Y. Supp. 665, 667, 126 App. Div. 303.

Const. art. 1, § 7, declaring that the right of a trial by jury shall remain inviolate, does not withhold from the Legislature the power to pass general laws providing for the manner in which, and the persons by whom, jurors shall be selected, drawn, summoned or impaneled; the word "inviolate" meaning freedom from hurt, harm, defilement, profanation, or substantial impairment, but not importing immunity from all regulation. State v. De Lorenzo, 79 Atl. 839, 840, 81 N. J. Law, 613, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 329.

The term "inviolate," as used in Const. art. 1, § 7, providing that "the right to trial by jury shall remain 'inviolate,'" means freedom from hurt, harm, defilement, profanation, or such other idea connoting partial destruction or substantial impairment, and it in no sense imports immunity from all regulation. Humphrey v. Eakley, 60 Atl. 1097, 1098, 72 N. J. Law, 424, 5 Ann. Cas. 929.

INVITATION

See Implied Invitation; Licensee by Express Invitation; Licensee by Implied Invitation.

The word "invitation," in the rule that a licensee who goes on the premises of another by the latter's invitation, and for purposes of the latter, is an invitee, includes enticement, allurement, and inducement, where the case holds such features, and the invitation may also be implied by a dedication, or it may arise from known customary use, or it may be implied by any state of facts on which it naturally and reasonably arises. Glaser v. Rothchild, 120 S. W. 1, 3, 221 Mo. 180, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045, 17 Ann. Cas. 576.

The word "invitation," within the rule that an owner of land who holds out any invitation for others to go thereon must keep his premises in a safe condition, imports that the person entering on the premises did not act merely for his own convenience and pleasure, and from motives to which no act of the owner contributed, but that he entered the premises because he was led to believe that they were intended to be used by visitors, and that such use was not only acquiesced in by the owner, but that it was in accordance with the intention and design with which the place was adapted and prepared or allowed to be so used. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Godfrey, 47 South. 185, 190, 156 Ala. 202, 130 Am. St. Rep. 76.

The term "invitation," as used in determining the degree of care necessary to be extended toward one on the property of another, includes both an actual bidding or an express invitation, and also an allurement or enticement which amounts to an implied invitation. Such implied invitation may be inferred from some act or line of conduct or from a designation or dedication, but mere acquiescence in the use of one's land by another is not sufficient. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Slaughter, 79 N. E. 186, 189, 167 Ind. 330, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 597, 119 Am. St. Rep. 503 (quoting and adopting definitions in Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Barnhart, 16 N. E. 121, 115 Ind. 399; citing Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Griffin, 100 Ind. 221, 50 Am. Rep. 783; Sweeny v. Old Colony R. Co., 10 Allen [92 Mass.] 368, 87 Am. Dec. 644; Carleton v. Franconia Iron & Steel Co., 99 Mass. 216; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Grush, 67 Ill. 262, 16 Am. Rep. 618; Doss v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 59 Mo. 27, 21 Am. Rep. 371; Elliott v. Pray, 10 Allen [92 Mass.] 378, 87 Am. Dec. 653; Stratton v. Staples, 59 Me. 95; New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. v. Hanning, 15 Wall. 649, 21 L. Ed. 220; Bennett v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 102 U. S. 577, 26 L. Ed. 235; Lary v. Cleveland, O., C. & I. Ry. Co., 78 Ind. 323, 41 Am. Rep. 572; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Bingham, 29 Ohio St. 364; Jeffersonville, M. & I. Ry. Co. v. Goldsmith, 47 Ind. 43; Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 Mich. 1; Nicholson v. Erie R. Co., 41 N. Y. 525; Durham v. Musselman [Ind.] 2 Blackf. 96, 18 Am. Dec. 133; Gillis v. Pennsylvania Ry. Co., 59 Pa. 129, 98 Am. Dec. 317; Burdick v. Cheadle, 26 Ohio St. 393, 20 Am. Rep. 767).

The word "invitation" has both a colloquial and a legal meaning. The former imports a fact of well-known signification; the latter a conclusion of law to which definite rights and liabilities attach. The averment in a declaration that a car came nearly to a standstill at the instance and request of the plaintiff, who then and there, at the instance and request of defendant, was then and there invited to become a passenger, is a statement of a conclusion drawn by the pleader from inadequate or undisclosed facts, and is bad on demurrer. In a pleading imputing legal liability, the word "invitation" must be given its legal, and not its colloquial, meaning. Kennedy v. North Jersey St. Ry. Co., 60 Atl. 40, 72 N. J. Law, 19.

Where a complaint for injuries to a child on defendant's premises nowhere alleged that the child was on the premises by an express invitation, and in using the words "invitation of" always preceded them with the words "with the knowledge and consent," so that the word "invitation" thus used would not mean an express invitation or an implied one, the complaint could not be considered as alleging an express invitation. Paolino v. McKendall, 53 Atl. 268, 269, 24 R. I. 432, 60 L. R. A. 133, 96 Am. St. Rep. 736.

"Temptation" is not always "invitation." As the common law is understood by the most competent authorities, it does not excuse a trespasser because there is a temptation to commit it, or hold property owners bound to contemplate the infraction of property rights because the temptation to untrained minds to infringe them might have been foreseen." Plaintiff's intestate, a boy 7½ years old, was killed on a Sunday afternoon by the falling of a brick chimney attached to a dwelling house which was being demolished by defendants. The bricks supporting the chimney were left in a safe condition by defendants at the close of work on Saturday, the day before, but were removed by deceased and another child while playing on the first floor of the house without defendants' permission. The lot on which the house was situated was not fenced. The building was left unguarded, and no means were taken to prevent persons from trespassing on the land. Held, that though defendants might have contemplated that children would be attracted to the house, and that such accident might occur, they were not liable for the death of decedent, since, in the absence of a neglect of some legal duty, the duty was not imposed on them of protecting children from yielding to temptation to unlawfully enter the premises. Wilmot v. McPadden, 65 Atl. 157, 160, 79 Conn. 367, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1101 (quoting and adopting the definition in Holbrook v. Aldrich, 48 N. E. 115, 168 Mass. 16, 36 L. R. A. 493, 60 Am. St. Rep. 364).

Where the porter or guard of a passenger train called out: "Jersey City! Last stop! All out!" and followed it by opening the vestibule door of the car, such statement and act did not constitute a positive assurance to passengers that the car had stopped, nor an "invitation" to passengers to alight before the car had in fact stopped. Mearns v. Central R. R. of New Jersey, 139 Fed. 543, 545, 71 C. C. A. 331.

Where plaintiff, by permission of defendant's janitor, went into defendant's cellar to use its grindstone, and was injured by the breaking of a defective floor, plaintiff was not there by "invitation," so that defendant owed him no duty except to refrain from intentional injury, and was not liable for his injuries. Forbrick v. General Electric Co., 92 N. Y. Supp. 36, 45 Misc. Rep. 452 (citing Larmore v. Crown Point Co., 4 N. E. 752, 101 N. Y. 391, 54 Am. Rep. 718; Beck v. Carter, 68 N. Y. 283, 23 Am. Rep. 175).

In pleas alleging that decedent, without invitation from defendant, boarded the car on which he was riding, the word "invitation" is a term of considerable breadth, including not only express invitation, but the invitation that may be implied from custom, usage, or conduct on the part of the carrier, or of its servants, if notorious or actually known to the carrier or its alter ego. Lawrence v. Kaul Lumber Co., 55 South. 111, 113, 171 Ala. 300.

Where a city, in addition to approving a long and continuous usage of streets by the public as highways, extended its public sewer and lighting systems over such streets, its acts constituted an invitation to the public to use them as public thoroughfares which the city had undertaken to maintain in a reasonably safe condition for travel. Tweedell v. City of St. Joseph, 152 S. W. 432, 433, 167 Mo. App. 547.

"Mere use by the public (of a path along a railroad right of way) without objection of the owner is not sufficient to authorize the inference of an 'invitation.'" De La Pena

v. International & G. N. R. Co., 74 S. W. 58, 59, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 241.

In an action to recover money lost in playing poker, the court instructed that if defendants invited or otherwise induced plaintiff to visit their place, and that a poker game was being carried on by defendants, and that while playing said game plaintiff lost at any time and within 24 hours $5 or more, a verdict should be returned for the amount of plaintiff's losses not exceeding the sum sued for, and that by "inviting" or "inducing" is not meant merely personal application to the person invited, but any conduct that induces such person to visit such place. Plaintiff requested an instruction that by "inviting, persuading, or inducing," is not meant that personal application be made to such person visiting such place, but the mere setting up and furnishing such a place to carry on a game of chance is sufficient invitation." Held, that it was error to refuse this instruction. Roberts v. Respass, 114 S. W. 341, 343, 131 Ky. 10.

License distinguished

As respects the question whether a person is on premises as a licensee or by invitation, "invitation" is inferred where there is a common interest or mutual advantage, while license is inferred where the object is the mere pleasure or benefit of the person using it." Southern Ry. Co. in Kentucky v. Goddard, 89 S. W. 675, 676, 121 Ky. 567, 12 Ann. Cas. 116 (quoting and adopting distinction stated in 1 Whart. Neg. § 349).

"Invitation" is a term whose legal import is known and may be used to express the relation between an owner or occupier of land, and one who comes thereon under certain circumstances. The invitation which creates such relation may be express, as when the owner or occupier of lands by words invites another to come on it, or make use of it, or something thereon, or it may be implied, as when such owner or occupier by acts or conduct leads another to believe the land or something thereon was intended to be used as he uses them, and that such use is not only acquiesced in by the owner or occupier, but is in accordance with the intention or design for which the way or place or thing was adapted and prepared or allowed to be used. There is a clear distinction between a "license" and an "invitation" to enter premises, and an equally clear distinction as to the duty of an owner in the two cases. An owner owes to a licensee no duty as to the condition of premises, unless imposed by statute, save that he should not knowingly let him run upon a hidden peril, or willfully cause him harm; while to one invited he is under obligation for reasonable security for the purposes of the invitation. Mere permission to enter the premises creates the relation of licensee; invitation, expressed or implied, is necessary to create the more responsible relation, and the consequent higher duty upon the owner or proprietor. Mandeville Mills v. Dale, 58 S. E. 1060-1062, 2 Ga. App. 607 (quoting and adopting definition in Sweeny v. Old Colony & N. R. Co., 10 Allen [92 Mass.] 373, 87 Am. Dec. 644; Turess v. New York, S. & W. R. Co., 40 Atl. 614, 61 N. J. Law, 314; Beehler v. Daniels, 18 R. I. 563, 565, 29 Atl. 6, 27 L. R. A. 512, 49 Am. St. Rep. 790).

A licensee who goes on the premises of another by that other's invitation and for that other's purposes is an "invitee," and the duty to take ordinary care to prevent injury is at once raised, and the word "invitation" in the rule covers and includes in it enticement, allurement, and inducement if the case holds such features, and the invitation may also be implied by dedication, or it may arise from known customary use, or it may be implied by any state of facts on which it naturally and reasonably arises. Where a proprietor of a store invited plaintiff to come to the store to advise him in a business transaction, and plaintiff on reaching the store found the proprietor busy and while waiting, as he was required to do, he asked permission to go to the basement to a closet and permission was granted, and while going he fell into an unguarded pit in the basement, plaintiff was on the premises in response to the proprietor's "invitation" and was not a bare licensee at the time, and the proprietor owed him the duty of exercising ordinary care for his protection. Glaser v. Rothschild, 120 S. W. 1, 8, 221 Mo. 180, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045, 17 Ann. Cas. 576.

"It is sometimes difficult to determine whether the circumstances make a case of 'invitation,' in the technical sense of that word, as used in a large number of adjudged cases, or only a case of mere license. 'The principle,' says Mr. Campbell, in his treatise on Negligence, 'appears to be that invitation is inferred where there is a common interest or mutual advantage, while a 'license' is inferred where the object is the mutual pleasure or benefit of the person using it.'" Defendant operated a railroad to the summit of Pike's Peak and leased certain buildings to H. for a hotel for 25 per cent. of H.'s gross receipts. The hotel was higher than the station platform, and a retaining wall protected the platform from loose stones which might roll down the side of the mountain. The wall was ascended by a flight of steps, and the buildings were located 16 feet from the top thereof. Plaintiff arrived at the hotel at about 10 o'clock p. m., and, after being informed that the beds were all full, he obtained an employee's bed. Later in the night he went out of doors for a private purpose, and, not keeping within the light reflection from the house, stepped off the retaining wall and was injured. Held, that plaintiff was not an "invited" guest of the railroad company, but was at most a mere licensee thereof, as to whom it owed no active duty to light or rail the wall. Watson v. Manitou &

Pikes Peak Ry. Co., 92 Pac. 17, 19, 41 Colo. 188, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 916.

An implied "invitation" to use dangerous premises, as distinguished from a mere license, arises when a benefit accrues to the owner from such use, or when the use is in the interest of both parties, or is connected with the owner's business. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Powers, 88 N. E. 1073, 1077, 173 Ind. 105 (citing Northwestern El. R. Co. v. O'Malley, 107 Ill. App. 599; Plummer v. Dill, 31 N. E. 128, 156 Mass. 426, 32 Am. St. Rep. 463; Dixon v. Swift, 56 Atl. 761, 98 Me. 207, 29 Cyc. p. 454).

INVITED

Under a petition for certiorari to review proceedings of highways commissioners which averred that the appellants were "invited" to attend the trial before the justice, the word "invited" may be understood to mean that they were summoned, and, if nothing more appears in the petition to show that the justice had not jurisdiction, the petition would be insufficient. Hegenbaumer v. Heckenkamp, 67 N. E. 389, 202 Ill. 621.

INVITED ERROR

Invited error is in the nature of equitable estoppel, and arises where a party induces the trial court to take certain action, and then insists that the action was erroneous, and does not exist through making of the contention which is held against a party or where correctness of the contention has been consistently insisted upon. Ben C. Jones & Co. v. Gammel-Statesman Pub. Co. (Tex.) 141 S. W. 1048, 1052.

A requested instruction cannot be regarded on appeal as having "invited error," where it appears that it was refused on the ground that it had already been given in the main charge. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bowen, 81 S. W. 27, 28, 97 Tex. 621.

INVOICE

See Cuban Invoice.

Where a marine insurance policy covering importations fixed the value of the insured property at invoice, in the absence of anything to show that any other invoice was known or commonly employed in importations, the word "invoice" referred to the invoice required by Act Cong. June 10, 1890, c. 407, 26 Stat. 131, prohibiting importations exceeding $100 in value, except on invoice and affidavit showing the actual cost or actual market value. Insurance Co. of North America v. Willey, 98 N. E. 677, 678, 212 Mass. 75.

Under a marine insurance policy covering an importation valuing the property at the invoice, an invoice, not stating the actual cost or actual market value, as required by Act Cong. June 10, 1890, c. 407, 26 Stat. 131, to be stated in the "invoice" accompanying importations, was not such an invoice as the contract contemplated; and hence the policy was an open and not a valued one, and, the insured having paid in reliance on the valuations given in such invoice, might recover back the excess over the actual value. Insurance Co. of North America v. Willey, 98 N. E. 677, 679, 212 Mass. 75.

The statement of value on a "pro forma invoice" is wholly that of the importer made in order to effect an entry. An entry on a pro forma invoice remains open until the conditions of the bond for the production of the consular invoice have been fulfilled, or until the bond has become forfeited. The provision in Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 7, 26 Stat. 134, that duty shall not be assessed on "less than the invoice or entered value," does not prevent assessment on less than the value stated in a "pro forma invoice" on which entry is made under section 4, 26 Stat. 131; and where a certified invoice is produced in accordance with the latter section, and the value stated therein is approved by the appraiser, duty may properly be assessed on that value, even though less than that given in the pro forma invoice. United States v. Commercial Cable Co., 141 Fed. 473, 474.

As bill of lading

Where a contract of sale provided for a discount of 5 per cent. on receipt of cash on December 1st "from date of invoice" and that no deduction should be made nor allowed from the invoice for overcharge on freight, unless previously arranged, the word "invoice" was used in the sense of bill of lading, and did not render the clause ambiguous, and hence evidence of a custom of the fertilizing trade with reference to the allowance of discount was inadmissible. A. D. Birely & Sons v. Dodson, 68 Atl. 488, 490, 107 Md. 229.

As evidence of title

An "invoice" is a "list sent to a purchaser, factor, or consignee, etc., containing the items together with prices and charges of merchandise, sent, or to be sent, to him." An "invoice" is not a bill of sale nor is it evidence of a sale. B. F. Sturtevant Co. v. Cumberland Dugan & Co., 68 Atl. 351, 355, 106 Md. 587, 14 Ann. Cas. 675 (quoting and adopting definition in 23 Cyc. p. 857).

Inventory distinguished

Under a fire policy of insurance covering a stock of goods in a warehouse, which contained a covenant for its avoidance unless an inventory should be taken within 80 days, an "inventory" meant a list made by the merchant of his goods in his store, and, though an invoice is also a list of goods, it is made by the consignor at the point of shipment and does not show that the goods therein listed have reached the consignee, or what portion has been sold, and the requirement of the policy would not be met by the invoice of the insured plus his books. Day v. Home Ins. Co. (Ala.) 58 South. 549, 551, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652.

INVOICED AS PER COST MARK

Where a contract provided for the exchange of a stock of merchandise for real estate, the cost "to be invoiced as per the following cost mark," it did not necessarily mean that the goods actually cost what they were marked, and the expression was sufficiently indefinite and ambiguous to justify the admission of evidence as to its meaning. Webb v. Steiner, 87 S. W. 618, 619, 113 Mo. App. 482.

INVOLUNTARY

See Casual and Involuntary.

INVOLUNTARY ALIENATION

"Involuntary alienation" is such alienation as would result from attachment, levy, and sale for taxes or other debts due from the owner. Manierre v. Welling, 78 Atl. 507, 523, 32 R. I. 104, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1311.

INVOLUNTARY BAILMENT

"Involuntary bailments" arise when the goods of one person have by an unavoidable casualty been lodged upon another's land; and a railroad company, which takes property of another temporarily stored upon its right of way, does not become an involuntary bailee, and liable to account only as such, by restoration of the property and damages for its use. Walker v. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co., 67 S. E. 722, 724, 67 W. Va. 273.

Involuntary deposit distinguished

"Involuntary bailments" and "involuntary deposits" may be contradistinguished from those which are necessary and voluntary, inasmuch as the latter presuppose some act of the depositor, whereas the former may be without his assent or knowledge. They arise whenever the goods of one person have by an unavoidable casualty or accident been lodged upon another's land, as where lumber floating in a river is cast upon a neighbor's land by a sudden freshet and left there, or where goods are blown upon another's land by a tempest. Walker v. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co., 67 S. E. 722, 724, 67 W. Va. 273.

INVOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE

A sale of a part of the owner's tenement by the sheriff for debt is regarded as an "involuntary conveyance" by the owner of the parcel held and conveyed. Damron v. Damron, 84 S. W. 747, 748, 119 Ky. 806.

INVOLUNTARY DEPOSIT

Involuntary bailment distinguished, see Involuntary Bailment.

INVOLUNTARY EXPOSURE

A merely inadvertent and unintentional exposure to a known danger under peculiar circumstances not affording opportunity for deliberate action is an "involuntary," not voluntary, "exposure," within the meaning of a clause in an accident insurance policy limiting the liability of the insurer in case of an injury resulting from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, etc. Diddle v. Continental Casualty Co., 63 S. E. 962, 964, 65 W. Va. 170, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 779 (citing Keene v. New England Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 36 N. E. 891, 161 Mass. 149; Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Chambers, 24 S. E. 896, 93 Va. 138, 40 L. R. A. 432; Equitable Acc. Ins. Co. v. Osborn, 9 South. 869, 90 Ala. 201, 13 L. R. A. 267).

INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER

Unlawful act as element, see Unlawful Act.

"Involuntary manslaughter" is where one doing an unlawful act not felonious or tending to great bodily harm, or doing a lawful act without proper caution or requisite skill, undesignedly kills another. According to the common-law writers, it is where death results unintentionally, so far as the defendant is concerned, from an unlawful act on his part not amounting to felony or from a lawful act negligently performed. At common law it included all those homicides which were below the grade of murder, and were neither justifiable nor excusable, and which were the accidental result of some unlawful act less than a felony, not aimed or directed against the person slain. "An unintentional killing in the commission of an unlawful act." Tyner v. United States, 103 Pac. 1057, 1058, 2 Okl. Cr. 689 (citing Whart. Homicide [3d Ed.] p. 6; Wharton, Cr. Law, p. 305; And. Law Dict.; Siberry v. State, 39 N. E. 936, 149 Ind. 684; Commonwealth v. Mink, 123 Mass. 422, 25 Am. Rep. 109; Jewell v. Territory, 43 Pac. 1075, 4 Okl. 53; McMannus v. State, 36 Ala. 285).

The unintentional killing of another through carelessness, without criminal intent or design, is involuntary manslaughter. Ringier v. State, 85 S. W. 410, 412, 74 Ark. 262.

Involuntary manslaughter is the killing of another in doing some unlawful act, but without intent to kill. Commonwealth v. Couch (Ky.) 106 S. W. 830, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 327.

"Involuntary manslaughter" is an involuntary killing done without any design, intention, or purpose of killing, but in the commission of some unlawful act, or in the improper performance of some lawful act. Tharp v. State, 137 S. W. 1097, 1098, 99 Ark. 188.

The common-law definition of involuntary manslaughter is an unintentional killing resulting from an unlawful act on the part of the accused not amounting to a felony, or from a lawful act negligently performed. State v. Clifford, 52 S. E. 981, 985, 59 W. Va. 1.

"Involuntary manslaughter" is the unintentional killing of another in the performance by the slayer of an unlawful act, or by the doing of a lawful act in an unlawful manner." Commonwealth v. Mosser, 118 S. W. 915, 916, 133 Ky. 609.

"Involuntary manslaughter" occurs where one is doing an unlawful act, not felonious or tending to great bodily harm, or in doing a lawful act without proper precaution or requisite skill, undesignedly kills another. State v. Underhill (Del.) 69 Atl. 880, 882, 6 Pennewill, 491; State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 539, 7 Pennewill, 479.

"Involuntary manslaughter" arises where one in committing an unlawful act, not felonious nor tending to great bodily harm, or in committing a lawful act without proper caution or without requisite skill, unguardedly or undesignedly kills another. State v. Morahan (Del.) 77 Atl. 488, 489, 7 Pennewill, 494.

To constitute involuntary manslaughter through commission of an unlawful act, accused must be engaged in the act when the killing occurs. If accused unlawfully assaulted decedent, and inflicted the injuries as charged, and such injuries caused decedent's death, he could be convicted of involuntary manslaughter. State v. Woods (Del.) 77 Atl. 490, 491, 7 Pennewill, 499.

"Involuntary," as applied to manslaughter means that the killing was committed by accident, or without intention to take life. State v. Setser, 119 Pac. 346, 347, 61 Or. 90 (quoting 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3762).

"Involuntary manslaughter" arises where death results unintentionally, so far as the defendant is concerned, from an unlawful act on his part not amounting to a felony, or from a lawful act negligently done." State v. Turnage, 49 S. E. 913, 138 N. C. 566 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Whart. Cr. Law [10th Ed.] § 305; citing Barnes v. State, 32 South. 670, 134 Ala. 36).

"Involuntary manslaughter" is defined by Pen. Code 1895, § 67, as the killing of a human being without any intention to do so, in the commission of an unlawful act, or of a lawful act which might produce such a consequence in an unlawful manner. Maughon v. State, 67 S. E. 842, 845, 7 Ga. App. 660.

The term "involuntary" signifies inadvertence. It is inconsistent with the willful shooting of another with fatal effect. One may so willfully shoot, pointing a gun at another and discharging it purposely, and yet not aim the weapon on the vital part of the body in the sense of a mental and physical operation to that end, though the presumption, without explanation, would be to the contrary, and so not necessarily a specific design to effect death. Johnson v. State, 108 N. W. 55, 59, 129 Wis. 146, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809, 9 Ann. Cas. 923.

Involuntary manslaughter is thus defined by 3 Greenl. § 128: "Where one doing an unlawful act, not felonious nor tending to great bodily harm, or doing a lawful act without proper caution or requisite skill, undesignedly kills another." Accused cannot be said to be guilty of that offense, where he handled a pistol carelessly and recklessly, which tended to great bodily harm. Selby v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 80 S. W. 221, 222.

Where one doing an unlawful act, not feloniously nor tending to great bodily harm or doing a lawful act without proper caution or requisite skill, undesignedly kills another, it is "involuntary manslaughter." Thomas v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 86 S. W. 694, 695 (quoting and adopting definition in 3 Greenl. Ev. § 128; citing 1 Roberson's Ky. Cr. Law & Proc. § 198; 4 Bl. Comm. *191; Conner v. Commonwealth, 13 Bush [76 Ky.] 714; Buckner v. Same, 14 Bush [77 Ky.] 602).

Involuntary manslaughter is the killing of another in doing some unlawful act, but without an intent to kill, and the offense may arise either when the act is directed against the person killed, or when it is directed against another person or thing, and one is killed who was not intended to be hurt. If accused did not exercise reasonable care in carrying his pistol, and from such cause fired the shot which killed decedent, he would be guilty of involuntary manslaughter, though he did not intentionally fire the shot that killed decedent. Lewis v. Commonwealth, 131 S. W. 517, 518, 140 Ky. 652.

If one willfully points and discharges a pistol at another, in violation of Ky. St. 1903, § 1908, and death ensues, he is at least guilty of involuntary manslaughter. Ewing v. Commonwealth, 111 S. W. 352, 355, 129 Ky. 237.

"Involuntary manslaughter" is the killing of another person in doing some unlawful act not amounting to a felony, nor likely to endanger life, but without an intention to kill, or where one kills another while doing a lawful act in a lawful manner." A criminal intent is not necessary in involuntary manslaughter. It is said that any person neglecting to discharge a duty required of him either by law or contract, thereby causing the death of another, is guilty of involuntary manslaughter. Thus, if a husband neglects to provide necessities for his wife or medical attention in case of her illness, he will be guilty of involuntary manslaughter if she dies, provided it appear that she was in a helpless state and unable to appeal elsewhere for aid, and that the death, though not intended nor anticipated by him, was the natural and reasonable consequence of his negligence. Westrup v. Commonwealth, 93 S. W. 646, 123 Ky. 95, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 685, 124 Am. St. Rep. 316 (quoting and adopting Roberson's Ky. Cr. Law & Proc. § 198, and citing Conner v. Commonwealth, 13 Bush [76 Ky.] 718; Trimble v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky. 177; York

v. Commonwealth, 82 Ky. 368; Whart. Cr. Law, § 332).

Where accused killed decedent by the discharge of a pistol of his own volition, without any element of accident or inadvertence, the case did not involve an "involuntary killing," within St. 1898, §§ 4355, 4362, defining manslaughter in the third and fourth degrees. Duthey v. State, 111 N. W. 222, 224, 131 Wis. 178, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032.

The crime of voluntary and involuntary manslaughter is defined by Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 1981, as whoever unlawfully kills any human being without malice, express or implied, either voluntarily upon a sudden heat, or involuntarily, but in the commission of some unlawful act is guilty of manslaughter. That a pistol, by the accidental discharge of which deceased was killed while defendant was playing with him, was carried by defendant in violation of law, does not make him guilty of involuntary manslaughter. Potter v. State, 70 N. E. 129, 130, 162 Ind. 213, 64 L. R. A. 942, 102 Am. St. Rep. 198, 1 Ann. Cas. 32.

Where a homicide occurs in the commission of an act not in itself wrongful, and the attendant circumstances, showing no intent to kill, authorize an inference that the killing resulted from the negligence, the homicide is involuntary manslaughter in the commission of a lawful act without necessary caution. Flannigan v. State, 70 S. E. 1107, 1108, 136 Ga. 132.

A statute making it manslaughter to involuntarily kill another while engaged in the commission of an unlawful act or a lawful act without due caution follows in substance the common-law definition of "involuntary manslaughter," and an indictment under the statute must allege facts showing an unlawful act or a lawful act negligently committed, but need not allege malice or an intention to kill. State v. Whitney, 102 Pac. 288, 289, 54 Or. 438 (citing Whart. Homicide, p. 879).

Under Cr. Code, § 145, defining "involuntary manslaughter" as a killing without intent in the commission of an unlawful act, or of a lawful act which might produce such consequence in an unlawful manner, provided that if, in commission of an unlawful act, its consequences naturally tended to destroy life, the killing was murder, defendant, in striking deceased with his fist without intent to kill, for an insult just offered to defendant's niece, was not guilty of murder, but of involuntary manslaughter. People v. Mighell, 98 N. E. 236, 239, 254 Ill. 53.

While under Pen. Code, § 192, subd. 2, providing that a person is guilty of involuntary manslaughter where death results in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, and that the aider and abettor can be guilty of no greater offense than the principal, an instruction in a murder trial that if defendant was present, aiding and abetting in the commission of an unlawful act, and that if in the commission thereof one R. was killed, a verdict of murder in the first degree should be rendered, was erroneous, abstractly considered, it was not prejudicial, the only unlawful act of which there was any evidence being a deliberate attempt to take the life of R. and his associates, unless it would be held that there was some evidence of an attempt to commit robbery, which latter contingency would bring the instruction within the contemplation of the statute. People v. Petruzo, 110 Pac. 324, 327, 13 Cal. App. 569.

Rev. Codes, § 6565, defines involuntary manslaughter as an unlawful killing in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony, or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection. Held, that the statute does not circumscribe the means or agency causing the death, but includes any and all means and mediums by which a death is caused by one engaged in an unlawful act, and a prosecution of manslaughter may be had where the death has been caused by fright, fear, or nervous shock produced by one while in commission of an unlawful act, though he made no hostile demonstration and directed no overt act at decedent's person. Ex parte Heigho, 110 Pac. 1029, 1032, 18 Idaho, 566, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 877, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 138.

"Involuntary manslaughter" is defined as the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, either express or implied, and without intent to kill or inflict an injury causing death, committed accidentally in the commission of some unlawful act not felonious. This definition includes homicides resulting from negligent performance without actual criminal intent of a lawful act, and the common-law rule is undoubtedly that criminality may be affirmed of a lawful act carelessly or negligently done. The negligence, however, must be aggravated, culpable, gross; that is, it must be such a departure from what would be the conduct of an ordinarily prudent or careful man under the same circumstances as evidences a disregard of human life or indifference to consequences. The negligence in such cases supplies in a measure the direct criminal intent. State v. Clardy, 53 S. E. 493, 500, 73 S. C. 340 (quoting and adopting note in 90 Am. St. Rep. 571-581).

Where there was no evidence that a killing was unintentional or lawful, but, on the contrary, it appeared without dispute that it was intentional and not lawful, there was no necessity for a charge on "involuntary manslaughter." Ware v. State, 41 South. 181, 147 Ala. 690 (citing Johnson v. State, 10 South. 667, 94 Ala. 41).

An instruction on a trial for murder that if the weapon used was not a deadly weapon, or if a deadly weapon was not used in a deadly manner, then, if decedent used opprobrious words and epithets to defendant, it was for the jury whether defendant was justified in the use of the weapon and if the jury believed he was justified, but used it without due caution and circumspection, defendant would be guilty of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of a lawful act, but, that if the weapon was a deadly weapon in the manner in which it was used, words would not justify the use of it, and if the killing was done in that way without intent to kill, and there was no malice, defendant was guilty of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act, fully and properly presented the law of involuntary manslaughter. Dorsey v. State, 58 S. E. 477, 478, 2 Ga. App. 228.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, the court instructed that manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, and that it is of two kinds—voluntary (that is, upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion); involuntary, in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, or in the commission of a lawful act, which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection. The instruction was in the language of Pen. Code, § 192. Held, that the portion of the section defining involuntary manslaughter might well have been omitted, but could not have misled the jury, as they were fully instructed elsewhere as to the rights of self-defense and of defendant to act upon appearances. People v. Lee, 108 Pac. 738, 739, 13 Cal. App. 48.

If defendant had the right to interfere to prevent decedent striking defendant's brother, even though he thought decedent intended only to assault and beat and not to seriously injure his brother, and he struck suddenly and killed decedent with no intention to kill, his offense would be "involuntary manslaughter in the commission of a lawful act without due caution and circumspection." Warnack v. State, 60 S. E. 288, 290, 3 Ga. App. 590.

Under Mansf. Dig. Ark. § 1532 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 875), defining manslaughter as the unlawful killing of a human being, without malice or deliberation; section 1533 (section 876), providing that it must be voluntary under a sudden heat of passion caused by a provocation apparently sufficient to make the passion irresistible, and section 1534 (section 877), describing the killing to be manslaughter if it be in the commission of an unlawful act without due caution, there is no such thing as "involuntary manslaughter." Carney v. United States, 104 S. W. 606, 7 Ind. T. 247.

INVOLUNTARY NONSUIT

An "involuntary nonsuit" is one that is taken by reason of some adverse ruling of the court which prevents a recovery by plaintiff. Grattan v. Suedmeyer, 129 S. W. 1038, 1040, 144 Mo. App. 719.

An "involuntary nonsuit," is where the plaintiff, by some adverse ruling of the court, which precludes his recovery, is compelled to take nonsuit; and, until there is an actual ruling which puts a complete stop to any further progress by plaintiff, he must continue despite adverse rulings. Diamond Rubber Co. v. Wernicke, 148 S. W. 160, 166 Mo. App. 128.

INVOLUNTARY PAYMENT

See, also, Voluntary Payment.

The power of the city to withhold water placed the parties on unequal terms, and the law would have regarded as involuntary any payment made to secure a restoration of service. Holly v. City of Neodesha, 127 Pac. 616, 620, 88 Kan. 102.

To constitute "involuntary payment" there must be some actual or threatened exercise of power possessed, or supposed to be possessed by the person exacting or receiving the payment over the person or property of the party making the payment, from which the latter has no other means of immediate relief than by advancing the money. Wheeler v. Plumas County, 87 Pac. 802, 804, 149 Cal. 782 (citing Brumagin v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 272, 79 Am. Dec. 176).

The duress which will render a payment "involuntary" must in general consist of some actual or threatened exercise of power, possessed or believed to be possessed by the party exacting or receiving the payment over the person or property of another from which the latter has no other means or reasonable means of immediate relief except by making payment. "The payment must have been made upon compulsion—as, for example, to prevent the immediate seizure of his goods or the arrest of the person—and not voluntary." Monaghan v. Lewis (Del.) 59 Atl. 948, 950, 5 Pennewill, 218, 10 Ann. Cas. 1048 (quoting 2 Dillon, Munic. Corps. § 940).

An action may be brought to recover an illegal tax paid where the tax is void and the payment is involuntary, as where made through coercion of law or fact. Fifth Ave. Coach Co. v. State, 131 N. Y. Supp. 62, 64, 73 Misc. Rep. 496.

A payment of taxes in order to be involuntary, so as to entitle the taxpayer to recover them for illegality, must be made on compulsion to prevent an immediate seizure of the taxpayer's goods or the arrest of his person; mere threats of litigation or apprehension of levy of distress warrants being insufficient. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co.

v. Hamilton County, 113 S. W. 361, 363, 120 Tenn. 1.

Where a bank, in an attempt to comply with a tax law requiring every bank to collect the tax due on the shares of its stock from the owners thereof and pay the same to the receiver of taxes, paid without the authority and against the will of a stockholder, an illegal tax imposed on the stock, the tax was involuntarily paid, authorizing the stockholder to recover it from the municipality in an action for money had and received. Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. City of New York, 95 N. Y. Supp. 770, 772, 108 App. Div. 192.

To make a payment of taxes involuntary, it must appear that the officer authorized to collect the same had in his hands process authorizing the seizure of the person or property of the taxpayer, that such seizure was imminent, and that there were no other legal means of protecting the person or property than by payment; and under such circumstances payment under protest saves the rights of a taxpayer to recover if the taxes are illegal. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Marion County, 108 S. W. 1058, 1059, 120 Tenn. 347.

Plaintiff was appointed an assistant district attorney by the county commissioners to collect bonds in criminal cases. He had property of defendant's surety sold under execution to satisfy a judgment of $275.85 for fees and costs, and plaintiff bought in the property as trustee for the county. Subsequently the county commissioners compromised the judgment for $25, and requested plaintiff to assign the certificate of purchase to the surety's wife. Plaintiff refused to do so at first, and only complied when the district attorney was requested to direct him to do so, and after his salary had been withheld for two months, and then at the same time he paid to the county treasurer the balance of the judgment and costs against defendant. It did not appear that the payment to the county treasurer was in any manner coerced, requested, or even known to defendant, or to the board of county commissioners. Held, that the payment was not an "involuntary payment," made under duress, which could be recovered, since to constitute the coercion or duress sufficient to make a payment involuntary there must be some actual or threatened exercise of power possessed, or believed to be possessed, by the person exacting or receiving the payment, over the person or property of another, from which the latter has no other means of immediate relief than by making the payment. Taylor v. Kelleher, 97 Pac. 253, 254, 43 Colo. 424.

INVOLUNTARY PEONAGE

Voluntary peonage distinguished, see Voluntary Peonage.

INVOLUNTARY SELF-DESTRUCTION

"Voluntary self-destruction" obviously can mean nothing more than the taking of one's life purposely and intentionally. "Involuntary self-destruction" would then include all those cases where a person, without intending to accomplish his own death, carelessly and negligently does acts which may naturally and probably result, and do in fact result, in death." Courtemanche v. Supreme Court, 1 O. O. F., 98 N. W. 749, 751, 136 Mich. 30, 64 L. R. A. 668, 112 Am. St. Rep. 345.

INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE

The word "servitude," as used in Const. U. S. Amend. 13, is of larger meaning than slavery, as the latter is popularly understood in this country, and the obvious purpose was to forbid all shades and conditions of African slavery. It was very well understood that in the form of apprenticeship for long terms as it has been practiced in the West India Islands, on the abolition of slavery by the English government, or by reducing slaves to the condition of serfs attached to the plantation, the purpose of the article might have been evaded, if only the word "slavery" had been used. It is, however, clear that the words "involuntary servitude" include something more than slavery in the strict sense of the term. They include also serfage, vassalage, villenage, peonage, and all other forms of compulsory service for the benefit or pleasure of others. Ex parte Drayton, 153 Fed. 986, 990 (quoting and adopting definitions in the Slaughterhouse Case, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. Ed. 394).

The word "servitude," as used in Const. U. S. Amend. 13, providing that neither slavery nor involuntary "servitude" except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, etc., means a condition of enforced compulsory service of one to another; "servitude" being defined by Webster as "the state of voluntary or compulsory subjection to a master." Hodges v. United States, 27 Sup. Ct. 6, 8, 203 U. S. 1, 17, 51 L. Ed. 65.

INVOLUNTARY TESTIMONY

The evidence of a witness subsequently prosecuted for manslaughter, taken at a coroner's inquest pursuant to a subpoena, where such witness was not at the time under arrest, or accused of the crime, and where there is nothing indicating that the testimony was involuntarily given, it is not deemed "involuntary" merely because it was given in response to a subpoena. State v. Finch, 81 Pac. 494, 495, 496, 71 Kan. 793.

INVOLUNTARY TRUST

Under Civ. Code, §§ 2217, 2219, 2223, 2224, 2228, 2235, 3529, defining an "involuntary trust" as one created by operation of law, etc., a person occupying fiduciary relations will be held to the strictest good faith, and trusts will arise in vindication of right, not only in the absence of a valid declaration, but even against the desires and intention of the involuntary trustee. Sanguinetti v. Rossen, 107 Pac. 560, 562, 12 Cal. App. 628.

Where a person procures a mortgage as a preference from a bankrupt, there is the creation of a trust of which he is the trustee under Rev. Civ. Code, § 1609, providing that an "involuntary trust" is one created by operation of law, and section 1615, providing that one who wrongfully detains a thing is an "involuntary trustee" for the benefit of the owner. Bowler v. First Nat. Bank of Pipestone, 113 N. W. 618, 622, 21 S. D. 449, 130 Am. St. Rep. 725.

A trust imposed on one against his will by equity law, because he has done a wrong thing in taking property bought with trust property, is a trust sometimes called an "involuntary trust." Newman v. Newman, 55 S. E. 377, 379, 60 W. Va. 371, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 370.

INVOLUNTARY TRUSTEE

One who gains a thing by fraud is, unless he has some other and better right thereto, an "involuntary trustee" of the thing gained for the benefit of a person who would otherwise have had it. Muller v. Palmer, 77 Pac. 954, 955, 957, 144 Cal. 305.

Under Civ. Code, § 2224, providing that one gaining a thing by wrongful act is an involuntary trustee thereof for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it, a grantee under a deed of land by a grantor, not possessing legal capacity to execute a deed, is an "involuntary trustee" of the land for the benefit of the owner thereof. Clapp v. Vatcher, 99 Pac. 549, 551, 9 Cal. App. 462.

Where money was deposited in bank under the mistaken belief of the depositor that it belonged to a partnership composed of the depositor and a decedent, and it was subsequently judicially determined that the partnership never existed, and that the money belonged to the estate of the decedent, the bank in which the money was deposited was an "involuntary trustee" thereof for the benefit of the decedent's estate, under Civ. Code, §§ 2223, 2224, defining an involuntary trustee as one who wrongfully detains a thing or gains the same by fraud, accident, mistake, or other wrongful act. First Nat. Bank of Modesto v. Wakefield, 83 Pac. 1076, 1077, 148 Cal. 558.

Where a person procures a mortgage as a preference from a bankrupt, there is the creation of a trust of which he is the trustee under Rev. Civ. Code, § 1609, providing that an "involuntary trust" is one created by operation of law, and section 1615, providing that one who wrongfully detains a thing is an "involuntary trustee" for the benefit of the owner. Bowler v. First Nat. Bank of Pipestone, 113 N. W. 618, 622, 21 S. D. 449, 130 Am. St. Rep. 725.

Where the receiver of a corporation sold certain of its property, and thereafter the order appointing the receiver and authorizing a sale was reversed on appeal, the purchasers held the property and the proceeds of their sale thereof as involuntary trustees for the corporation, and the receiver held the purchase price as an "involuntary trustee" for the purchasers, under Civ. Code, §§ 2958, 2959, declaring that one who wrongfully detains a thing is an "involuntary trustee" for the benefit of the owner, and that one who gains a thing by fraud, accident, mistake, or other wrongful act, unless he have some other or better right thereto, is an "involuntary trustee" for the benefit of the person who should otherwise have had it. Lutey v. Clark, 77 Pac. 305, 307, 31 Mont. 45.

Civ. Code, § 2224, declares that one who gains a thing by fraud, accident, or undue influence, violation of trust, or other wrongful act, is an "involuntary trustee." One who fraudulently obtained his wife's money and applied it to the purchase of property held title as an "involuntary trustee" for her benefit. Heinrich v. Heinrich, 84 Pac. 826, 827, 828, 2 Cal. App. 479.

INVOLUNTARY UNDERLETTING

"A sale made in the enforcement of a mechanic's lien on a leasehold is an 'involuntary underletting,'" and, in the absence of collusion or fraud, is not prohibited by a provision in a lease that the lessee will not underlet the whole or any part of the premises without the written consent of the lessor. Reed v. Estes, 80 S. W. 1086, 1087, 118 Tenn. 200.

INVOLVE

See Subject-Matter Involved.

The word "involve" means "to imply"; "to include"; or "necessitate as a result or legal consequence." Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Evans, 82 N. E. 773, 779, 169 Ind. 410 (citing Stand. Dict.; 23 Cyc. pp. 352, 353).

A suit to restrain the defendant from setting up title to certain gold mines in the Philippine Islands, or interfering with the same, and to obtain an accounting, in which the meaning and effect of the provisions of Act July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. 708, c. 1369) § 45, concerning mining titles, are in question, is one in which a statute of the United States is "involved," within the meaning of section 10 of the act (32 Stat. 695), defining the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States over the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands. Reavis v. Fianza, 30 Sup. Ct. 1, 2, 215 U. S. 16, 54 L. Ed. 72.

Cases "involving the construction of the revenue laws," in which the Supreme Court has jurisdiction on direct appeal from the circuit courts under Const. art. 6, § 12, and Const. Amend. 1884, § 5, must involve state laws, as distinguished from special city charters, but it is not material whether the provision appears under the title "revenue" or not, if revenue is directly and primarily, and not merely incidentally, concerned, and laws relating to preservation and disbursement of revenue are within the clause as well as those relating to its assessment, levy, and collection; but, where a question in a case relates merely to general practice of the court, revenue is not involved in a constitutional sense, though the case relates to collection of taxes. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Adkins, 119 S. W. 1091, 221 Mo. 112.

A determination by the Supreme Court of the territory of Arizona, in a habeas corpus case, as to which custodian a child of tender years shall be committed, is not appealable to the Supreme Court of the United States, under Rev. St. U. S. § 1909, as a case "involving the question of personal freedom," within the meaning of that section. New York Foundling Hospital v. Gatti, 27 Sup. Ct. 53, 54, 203 U. S. 429, 51 L. Ed. 254.

Relate synonymous

Laws 1891, p. 118, § 1, provides that limitation of the right of appeal in cases where the judgment exceeds $2,500 shall not apply where the matter in controversy "relates" to a franchise or freehold. Section 4, subd. 3, provides that the Court of Appeals shall have jurisdiction in cases where the controversy "involves" a franchise or freehold. Held, in view of section 15, and Code 1887, p. 206, § 388, the word "involve" was synonymous with the word "relate," and that the Supreme Court has jurisdiction of appeals in cases which relate to a freehold. Note to Beverlin v. Casto, 57 S. E. 411, 420, 62 W. Va. 158.

The answer, in an action for the release or reconveyance of land, conveyed to defendant's intestate by absolute deed, alleged to have been a mortgage, defended by the mortgagee's administrator and sole heir at law, admitted that the deed was a mortgage, but insisted that it was so held by defendant administrator as security for a larger indebtedness claimed to be due from the plaintiff to the estate of the mortgagee, and prayed judgment therefor, but asserted no claim to the property described in the deed as sole heir at law. Held, that the words "relates to a * * * freehold," as used in the act establishing the Court of Appeals, should be given the same construction as the like expression found in the provision of the Code of Civil Procedure for appeals to the Supreme Court; that the terms "relate to" and "involve" were synonymous in this connection; and that a judgment for plaintiff with a money judgment for defendant for the balance found due did not involve a freehold, so that the Court of Appeals, as well as the Supreme Court, was without jurisdiction. Fehringer v. Martin, 126 Pac. 1131, 1183, 22 Colo. App. 634.

The words "relate" and "involve," in the act creating the Court of Appeals (Laws 1911, p. 269) and providing for the retransfer by the Court of Appeals to the Supreme Court of cases which involve the construction of the federal or state Constitutions or relate to a freehold, are synonymous. Monte Vista Canal Co. v. Centennial Irrigating Ditch Co., 123 Pac. 831, 832, 22 Colo. App. 364.

Involving freehold

See, also, Freehold.

Where the only question involved in partition proceedings was whether defendant had a lien by reason of a mortgage or of having advanced money or paid taxes superior to plaintiff's interests, under a levy of execution on the property, as belonging to the judgment debtor, an heir of the owner, a freehold was not "involved" within Mills' Ann. Code, § 388, so as to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction of an appeal from a judgment for plaintiff. Hallett v. Alexander, 114 Pac. 490, 492, 50 Colo. 37, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 328, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1277.

A freehold is "involved," within the meaning of the Constitution and statute providing for appeals directly to the Supreme Court in such case, only where the necessary result of the decree or judgment is that one party gains or the other loses a freehold estate, or where the title is so put in issue by the pleadings that the decision of the case necessarily involves such issue. In re Ross' Estate, 77 N. E. 126, 127, 220 Ill. 142.

A freehold is "involved" within the contemplation of the Constitution, fixing the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court only in cases where either the necessary result of the judgment or decree is that one party gains and the other loses a freehold estate, or where the title is so put in issue by the pleadings that the decision of the case necessarily involves a decision of such issue. Where a suit to construe a will involved only the power of the executors to invest and reinvest the residue in real property both within and without the state of Illinois, and also to invest in stocks of corporations in which the testator was interested, the suit did not "involve" a freehold, and was not appealable direct to the Supreme Court. Merchants' Loan & Trust Co. v. Northern Trust Co., 92 N. E. 306, 310, 245 Ill. 511.

A freehold is not "involved" within the Constitution giving the Supreme Court jurisdiction of appeals where "freehold is involved," where the litigation may on certain contingencies result in its loss, but will not necessarily have that effect. Van Tassell v. Wakefield, 73 N. E. 340, 342, 214 Ill. 205.

A freehold is "involved" within the Constitution, giving the Supreme Court jurisdiction of appeals where a freehold is involved, in cases where the necessary result of the judgment or decree is that one party gains and the other loses a freehold estate. Wachsmuth v. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co., 83 N. E. 85, 86, 231 Ill. 29.

A suit to enjoin the issuance of a tax deed, on the ground that it will cloud the title to the land involved, does not "involve a freehold," so as to make a writ of error lie directly to the Supreme Court. Glos v. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago, 79 N. E. 562, 224 Ill. 272 (citing Gage v. Busse, 94 Ill. 590; Kronenberger v. Heinemann, 60 N. E. 64, 190 Ill. 17; Johnson v. McDonald, 63 N. E. 730, 196 Ill. 394; First Nat. Bank of Denver v. Gibson, 77 N. E. 562, 221 Ill. 295).

A freehold is "involved," within the meaning of the statute relating to jurisdiction of appeals, where the necessary result of the judgment or decree is that one party gains and the other loses an estate in land, or where the title to the estate is so put in issue by the pleadings that the determination of the case necessarily involves a decision of that issue. The necessary result of a decree, in an action by a husband to set aside for fraud and conspiracy a conveyance of land to his wife prior to their marriage, involves the freehold. Hursen v. Hursen, 70 N. E. 904, 905, 209 Ill. 466.

Involving real estate

If defendant was the owner of a farm which was sold to A. and later to a bank, whereupon it was agreed between A., defendant, and the bank, that A. would execute to the bank a note for $2,000 to procure defendant's overdraft at the bank, the balance of such sum to be credited to defendant's account, such agreement between the bank and defendant would not be one involving real estate within the statute of frauds, precluding parol evidence thereof. Burns v. Vaught, 113 Pac. 906, 907, 27 Okl. 711.

Involving title

Title to land is not "involved," so as to give the Court of Appeals appellate jurisdiction, where the judgment for the recovery of money recites that on plaintiff's motion the lien created by the levy on real estate under the attachment sued out in the action is waived. Rhodes v. Frankford Chair Co. (Ky.) 79 S. W. 768.

An action to collect delinquent real estate taxes does not "involve" title to real estate, so as to confer appellate jurisdiction on the Supreme Court, under Const. art. 6, § 12. The suit necessarily assumes that the title to the land is in the defendants. The purpose of the suit is not to divest title out of defendants, but to enforce the lien of the taxes on the land, and to sell the land to satisfy the judgment. The plaintiff does not claim any title to the land. He seeks only to charge it with a lien. The enforcement of the judgment by a sale under the execution may have the effect to pass the title to some one other than the defendants, but that does not make the case one which involves title to real estate, any more than any judgment in personam, enforced by execution, would involve title. State ex rel. Reed v. Elliott, 79 S. W. 696, 698, 180 Mo. 658.

A suit to set aside a deed in the chain of title as fraudulent "involves" title to real estate within Const. art. 6, § 12 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 218), conferring on the Supreme Court jurisdiction of appeals in "cases involving title to real estate." A proceeding to establish a lost deed under Rev. St. 1899, § 4565 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2480), involves title to real estate within Const. art. 6, § 12 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 218), conferring on the Supreme Court jurisdiction of appeals in "cases involving title to real estate"; a judgment establishing the deed conclusively destroying the rights of the adversary party, and a judgment denying relief conclusively establishing that the title remains in the adversary party. Thomas v. Scott, 113 S. W. 1093, 1095, 1096, 214 Mo. 430.

Under Const. art. 6, § 12 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 218) giving the Supreme Court jurisdiction of appeals in "cases involving title to real estate," in order for title to real estate to be so involved, the title must be directly affected by the judgment, and though a widow's right to dower was put in issue by the pleadings, yet where the relief prayed was merely a money award in lieu of dower, and the judgment was for a sum of money and a lien on the land therefor, the title to real estate was not so involved as to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction of an appeal. Kennedy v. Duncan, 123 S. W. 856, 857, 224 Mo. 661.

An action to quiet title to a mining claim, where plaintiff recovered judgment for only part of the land in controversy and defendant denied plaintiff's title and ownership to all the land, "involves the title" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1022, providing that costs are allowed of course to plaintiff on a judgment in his favor in an action for the recovery of real property or "involving the title" to real estate. Sierra Water & Mining Co. v. Wolff, 77 Pac. 1038, 1039, 144 Cal. 430.

A suit to enforce a mechanic's lien, the judgment in which establishes the lien, does not "involve title to real estate," within Const. art. 6, § 12, so as to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction on appeal, though there is a side issue of who was the owner, for determining whether notice was given the owner, as required by Rev. St. 1899, § 4221. The judgment itself must affect the title to the land. P. M. Bruner Granitoid Co. v. Klein, 70 S. W. 687, 170 Mo. 255.

Where a plaintiff alleged in his petition that the defendant was the assignee of a note of $200 secured by a deed of trust, and that the same had been paid, and praying that the interests of each party be determined, and plaintiff's title was admitted, as was the validity of the deed, the suit does not involve the title to land within Rev. St. 1899, § 650; the only issues involved being the assignment of the note and its payment, and the Supreme Court has not jurisdiction. Vandeventer v. Florida Sav. Bank, 185 S. W. 23, 25, 232 Mo. 618.

Involving treaty

Judgments of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands denying any liability of the present city of Manila upon municipal obligations incurred prior to the cession of the Philippine Islands to the United States by treaty with Spain (Act Dec. 10, 1898, 30 Stat. 1754), are rendered in cases in which a treaty of the United States is "involved," within the meaning of Act July 1, 1902, c. 1369, § 10, 32 Stat. 695, governing the appellate jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court, although no distinct claim under that treaty was made in the pleadings. Vilas v. City of Manila, 31 Sup. Ct. 416, 417, 220 U. S. 345, 55 L. Ed. 491.

IRON AND MANGANESE ALLOY

Merchandise, consisting of an alloy in the form of pigs, invoiced as "iron and manganese alloy" which is used chiefly in hardening manganese bronze, and which, in order to produce that effect, must be melted and mixed with other metals, comes within paragraph 183, Schedule C, § 1, c. 11, Tariff

Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 166, relating to "metallic mineral substances in a crude state, and metals unwrought," rather than paragraph 193, 30 Stat. 167, relating to articles composed of metal, or paragraph 122, 30 Stat. 159, by similitude to the "ferro-manganese" there enumerated. Thomas v. William Cramp & Sons' Ship & Engine Bldg. Co., 142 Fed. 734, 735, 74 C. C. A. 66.

IRON FITTERS

It appears that on railroad tracks at certain points there are what are called guard rails, which are short rails laid near the main rails which run for a distance parallel to the main track and then curve inward, leaving open spaces at the ends where these curves occur. Persons passing under or across the tracks and switches at those points are liable to have their feet caught in these open spaces and have some difficulty in withdrawing the feet from them. The danger arising from the same, has been greatly lessened, if not entirely done away with by closing spaces with blocks of wood or with what are spoken of as "iron fitters." Ray v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 37 South. 43, 46, 113 La. 502.

IRON HUNTER

An "iron hunter" is a sawmill employé whose duty it is to inspect logs before they come to the carriage, for the purpose of removing spikes driven in the logs for rafting. Covington Sawmill & Mfg. Co. v. Clark, 76 S. W. 348, 349, 116 Ky. 461.

IRON ORE

Hematite iron ore in a form in which it cannot be used as a pigment is dutiable as "iron ore," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 121, 30 Stat. 159. Hill v. Francklyn & Ferguson, 162 Fed. 880, 882, 89 C. C. A. 570.

IRON SAFE

IRON-SAFE CLAUSE

As promissory warranty, see Promissory Warranty.

An "iron-safe clause" in an insurance policy is one requiring insured to keep books clearly and plainly presenting a complete record of business transacted, including purchases, sales, and shipments. Everett-Ridley-Ragan Co. v. Traders' Ins. Co., 48 S. E. 918, 121 Ga. 228, 104 Am. St. Rep. 99.

What is known as an "iron-safe clause" of a policy of fire insurance is a provision by which the insured binds himself to keep specified books and an inventory securely locked in a fireproof safe at night and at all times when the store or other place of keeping the property insured is not actually open for the prosecution of business. Powell v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 60 S. E. 120, 121, 3 Ga. App. 436.

An "iron-safe clause," in an insurance policy providing that the assured will take a complete itemized inventory of the stock on hand, will keep a set of books, clearly presenting a complete record of business transacted, which books shall be securely locked in a fireproof safe at night, and in the event of failure to produce such books for the inspection of the insurer the policy shall become void, is frequently attached to policies of insurance and is generally upheld by the courts as a reasonable limitation on the liability of the insurer, and, when such clause is properly made a part of the contract of insurance, it will be enforced as a valid and binding stipulation. Coggins v. Aetna Ins. Co., 56 S. E. 506, 507, 144 N. O. 7, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 839, 119 Am. St. Rep. 924 (citing Southern Fire Ins. Co. v. Knight, 36 S. E. 821, 111 Ga. 622, 52 L. R. A. 70, 78 Am. St. Rep. 216; Sowers v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 85 N. W. 763, 113 Iowa, 551; Lozano v. Palatine Ins. Co., 78 Fed. 278, 24 C. C. A. 85; Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Kearney, 94 Fed. 314, 36 C. C. A. 265; Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Calhoun, 67 S. W. 153, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 409; North British Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Kemendo, 61 S. W. 1102, 94 Tex. 367; Black's Law Dict. 643).

A clause in a fire insurance policy that the insured make an inventory of his stock of goods and keep books correctly detailing purchases and cash and credit sales and keep them in an "iron-safe" or away from the store building when closed for business is called "an iron-safe clause," and such a clause is reasonable and valid. Maupin v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., 45 S. E. 1003, 1004, 53 W. Va. 557.

Under the "iron-safe clause" in an insurance policy, the insured agrees to keep a set of books, showing a record of the business transacted, including all purchases and sales, both for credit, cash, and exchange, as well as the last inventory of the stock, taken within 12 months prior to the happening of the loss, and to keep books and inventory securely locked in a fireproof safe at night and when the store is not actually open for business. German Ins. Co. v. Allen, 77 Pac. 529, 69 Kan. 729.

An "iron-safe clause" in an insurance policy provides that the insured shall take a complete itemized inventory of the stock once a year, keep a set of books which shall present a complete record of the plaintiff's credit, including all purchases, sales, and shipments, from date of inventory and during the continuance of the policy, and will keep such books and inventory securely locked in a fireproof safe at night, and at all times when the building is not open for business, or, failing in this, the assured will keep such books and inventory in some place not exposed to fire which would destroy the building. McMillan v. Insurance Co. of North America, 58 S. E. 1020, 1021, 78 S. C. 433.

IRON SAND

So-called "iron sand," a completed article produced by a series of manufacturing processes from cast iron and steel scrap, is not within the provision for "all iron in * * * forms less finished than iron in bars, and more advanced than pig iron," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 124, 30 Stat. 159, but is dutiable as "iron manufactured," under paragraph 193, 30 Stat. 167. Harrison Supply Co. v. United States, 164 Fed. 155, 156.

IRON SHEETS

Sheets consisting of a plate of iron or steel or with a sheet of nickel welded thereto, the material being rolled to the desired thickness after welding, are not "sheets of iron or steel, common or black," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 131, 30 Stat. 160. Boker v. United States, 180 Fed. 959, 960.

IRON WALL

See Self-Supporting Iron Wall.

IRRATIONAL—IRRATIONALITY

A question to a witness as to whether a person was acting "rational" or "irrational" did not call for the opinion of the witness as to the mental sanity of the defendant, but for the result of his observations, at the various times he came in contact with the defendant, as to his appearance in the respects suggested. "To say that a man acts 'rational' or 'irrational' is but to describe an outward manifestation drawn from observed facts. It is the last analysis, the ultimate fact deduced from evidentiary facts coming under observation, but so transitory and evanescent as to be like drunkenness—easy of detection, and difficult of explanation." People v. Manoogian, 75 Pac. 177, 179, 141 Cal. 592.

Insanity synonymous

While the word "irrationality" is sometimes used as a synonym of "insanity," the admission of evidence of the irrationality of a defendant did not cure the rejection of evidence of his insanity. Territory v. McNabb, 120 Pac. 907, 912, 16 N. M. 625.

IRREDEEMABLE GROUND RENT

"Irredeemable ground rent" is defined to be a rent reserved to himself and his heirs, by the grantor of land, out of the land itself. It is not granted like an annuity or rent charge, but is reserved out of a conveyance of the land in fee. It is a separate estate from the ownership of the ground, and is held to be real estate, with the usual characteristics of an estate in fee simple, descend-

IRREFRAGABLE

"Irrefragable" means that cannot be refuted or overthrown, incombustible, undeniable. Tracy v. Frey, 88 N. Y. Supp. 874, 878, 95 App. Div. 579 (quoting and adopting the definition in Webst. Dict.).

IRREGULAR

IRREGULAR DEPOSIT

Technically, a bailment which is solely for the benefit of receiver is more in the nature of a deposit than a loan, and, where the thing deposited was money, was what was known in the civil law as an "irregular deposit." Woods v. Latta, 88 Pac. 402, 406, 35 Mont. 9.

IRREGULAR JUDGMENT

An "irregular judgment" is one rendered contrary to the course and practice of the courts. Currie v. Golconda Min. & Mill. Co., 72 S. E. 980, 983, 157 N. C. 209.

An "irregular judgment" is one entered contrary to the method of procedure and the practice of the court. Glisson v. Glisson, 69 S. E. 55, 56, 153 N. C. 185.

IRREGULAR PROCESS

Void process distinguished, see Void Process.

IRREGULAR RECORDS

"Irregular records" made by a workman's time recorder are those records which are made when a workman enters or leaves before or after the regular time fixed by the rules of employment. Where the work hours of the forenoon are from 7 to 12 o'clock, a workman who enters and records his time after 7 has made an "irregular record," and one who leaves and records his time before 12 also makes an "irregular record." Day-Time-Register Co. v. W. H. Bundy Recording Co., 169 Fed. 807, 814.

IRREGULARITY

An "irregularity" is the failure to observe that particular course of proceeding which, conformable with the practice of the court, ought to have been observed in the case. Griggs v. Hanson, 121 Pac. 1094, 1096, 86 Kan. 632, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 242.

An "irregularity" is a want of adherence to some prescribed rule or mode of proceeding, and consists in either omitting to do something necessary for the due and orderly conducting of a suit, or doing it at an unreasonable time or in an improper manner. Ex parte Cooks (Tex.) 135 S. W. 139, 140.

The term "irregularity" is defined: "The want of adherence to some prescribed rule or mode of proceeding, and consists either in omitting to do something that is necessary for the due and orderly conduct of a suit, or in doing it in an unreasonable time or improper manner; the technical term for every defect in practical proceedings; a comprehensive term including all formal objections to practical proceedings; the want of adherence to some prescribed rule or mode of proceedings; the doing or not doing that in the conduct of a suit at law which, conformable with the practice of the court, ought or ought not to be done; * * * a deviation from certain minor provisions of the statutes, designed to procure method and convenience in procedure." 23 Cyc. 355. "When a proceeding (judicial or extrajudicial) is done in the wrong manner, or without the proper formalities, it is said to be irregular or an irregularity, as opposed to a proceeding which is legal or ultra vires." State v. Lazarus, 65 S. E. 270, 272, 83 S. C. 215.

The court, in Treasurers v. Bourdeaux's Representatives (S. C.) 3 McCord, 142, says: "In Tidd, Prac. 434, it is said: 'An "irregularity" may be defined to be the want of adherence to some prescribed rule or mode of proceeding, and consists either in omitting to do something that is necessary for the due and orderly conducting of a suit, or in doing it in an unreasonable time or improper manner.'" State v. Norton, 48 S. E. 464, 465, 69 S. C. 454.

An "irregularity" is defined to be the want of adherence to some prescribed rule or mode of proceeding; and it consists either in omitting to do something that is necessary for the due and orderly conducting of a suit or doing it in an unreasonable time or improper manner. It is a departure from some prescribed rule or regulation. Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5583 (Pierce's Code, § 1228), providing that sales of real estate in partition proceedings shall be in the manner required for sales of real estate on execution, and Laws 1890, p. 88, c. 53, § 6, subd. 2, providing that, though objections to confirmation of an execution sale be filed, the sale shall be confirmed unless it appear there was a substantial irregularity, the irregularity must be in the proceedings concerning the sale itself, so that it is not ground for refusing confirmation that a higher or better bid is submitted after sale. Merritt v. Graves, 100 Pac. 164, 165, 52 Wash. 57 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3768-3771; 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7693).

The term "irregularity," as used in the street bond act of 1893, declaring that bonds for street work assessment, after their issuance, shall be conclusive evidence of the regularity of all proceedings thereto, includes the failure to perform a required proceeding, as well as the defective or imperfect performance of such proceedings as were taken, excepting those necessary to constitute due process of law or to comply with other constitutional mandates. Chase v. Trout, 80 Pac. 81, 84, 146 Cal. 350.

A motion to set aside a judgment for irregularity, as contemplated by a statute providing that judgment shall not be set aside for irregularity on motion unless made within three years after judgment, is available only where there is some irregularity in the judgment itself or on the face of the proceeding antecedent thereto, and, while the irregularity need not be such as would render the judgment absolutely void, it must show that the judgment was contrary to the established form and mode of procedure, an irregularity, in the sense of the statute, being a want of adherence to some prescribed mode of procedure, which may consist either in omitting something necessary to the orderly conduct of the suit, or in doing it at an unseasonable time or in an improper manner. Cross v. Gould, 110 S. W. 672, 675, 181 Mo. App. 585.

Under Gen. St. 1901, § 5054, subd. 3, providing that a judgment may be set aside at a subsequent term for mistake, neglect of the clerk, or irregularity in obtaining it, the court may vacate a judgment on the pleadings for misapprehension as to their allegations. Cooper v. Rhea, 107 Pac. 799, 800, 82 Kan. 109, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 980, 136 Am. St. Rep. 100, 20 Ann. Cas. 42.

The absence of a seal to a writ of venire is an "irregularity," within the meaning of Civ. Code 1902, § 2947, providing that no irregularity in a writ of venire facias shall be sufficient to set aside the verdict, unless the accused was injured thereby or an objection was made before the return thereof. State v. Benton, 67 S. E. 143, 85 S. C. 107.

Failure of a city tax collector to return to the city council the delinquent list within the time prescribed by the city charter is an "irregularity" only within, and cured by, Code 1899, c. 31, § 25 (Code 1906, § 884), and hence not a fatal objection to a tax deed. Ritchie Lumber Co. v. Nutter, 66 S. E. 646, 649, 66 W. Va. 444.

Code 1899, c. 31, § 25 (Code 1906, § 884) provides that no "irregularity, error or mistake" in the delinquent list, or the return thereof, or in the affidavit thereto, or in the list of sales filed with the clerk of the county court, or in the recordation of such list or affidavit, shall, after deed made, invalidate the sale. Held, that the irregularity, error or mistake in the recordation of such list or affidavit, intended by the statute to be provided against, did not refer to the delinquent list, but to the list of sales filed with the clerk. Ritchie Lumber Co. v. Nutter, 66 S. E. 646, 647, 649, 66 W. Va. 444.

Personal misconduct of the judge having a case under advisement may be an "irregularity in the proceedings of the court" for which a new trial may be granted under Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 1. Gay v. Torrance, 78 Pac. 540, 543, 145 Cal. 144.

IRRELEVANCY—IRRELEVANT

The term "irrelevant" means not relevant; not relating to or applicable to the matter in issue; not supporting the issue. Berry v. Geiser Mfg. Co., 85 Pac. 699, 700, 15 Okl. 364 (quoting and adopting the definition in Black Law Dict. p. 644).

An allegation or pleading is "irrelevant" when it has no connection with the issues involved. Bank of Timmonsville v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 121 Fed. 934, 935.

"An allegation is 'irrelevant' when the issues formed by its denial can have no connection with nor reflect upon the cause of the action." Guignard v. Evans, 61 S. E. 1003, 1005, 80 S. C. 491 (quoting Pom. Rem. [2d Ed.] § 551).

A pleading is "irrelevant" only where it has no substantial relation to the controversy between the parties to the action, and not where it states facts that tend to and might by proper averment constitute a cause of action or defense. Ellison v. Branstrator, 88 N. E. 963, 965, 45 Ind. App. 307.

An "irrelevant allegation" in pleading is one which has no substantial relation to the controversy between the parties to suit, and which cannot affect the decision of the court, because it has no bearing upon the subject-matter of the controversy. Bell v. Clarke, 92 N. Y. Supp. 411, 412, 45 Misc. Rep. 275.

"Irrelevant" allegations are those which have no substantial relation to the controversy and which cannot affect the result, and the test of any allegation is whether it tends to constitute a cause of action or a defense. Kolb v. Mortimer, 120 N. Y. Supp. 543, 544, 135 App. Div. 542.

The answer, in an action for injury to an employé, raising the question of the employment, a material allegation of the complaint, is not "irrelevant," within Code Civ. Proc. § 545, allowing the striking out of irrelevant matter in a pleading. Johnston v. Simpson Crawford Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 141, 143.

Where a claim under a special contract for services is united with one for the reasonable value of the services, the allegation as to reasonable value of the services is not surplusage, neither is it redundant nor irrelevant; "redundancy" being an excessive statement or a representation, and an "irrelevant" allegation being one that does not relate to or affect the matter in controversy. E. D. Metcalf Co. v. Gilbert, 116 Pac. 1017, 1021, 19 Wyo. 331.

Within Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 181, providing that redundant or "irrelevant matter" in a pleading may be stricken out on motion of any party aggrieved, matter is "irrelevant" which has no substantial relation to the controversy. Alexander v. Du Bose, 52 S. E. 786, 788, 73 S. C. 21 (citing Smith v. Smith, 27 S. E. 545, 50 S. C. 67; Pom. Code Rem. § 551; Bliss, Code Pl. § 214).

As impertinence

Offered evidence not pertinent to any issue made by the pleadings is certainly "irrelevant." Morehouse v. Morehouse, 73 Pac. 738, 739, 140 Cal. 88.

"Irrelevant" and "redundant" was said in Carpenter & Wilcox v. West & Vanthuyssen, 5 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 53, 55, to mean what is usually understood as impertinent; for a pleading in equity is "impertinent" when it is stuffed with long recitals or long digressions which are altogether unnecessary and totally immaterial to the matter in hand. In an action for injuries, an order striking out from the complaint allegations involved in a common-law action, unless plaintiff serve an amended complaint separately stating his common-law action, and action under the employers' liability act, is not authorized by the Code, authorizing the striking out of irrelevant and redundant matter. Acardo v. New York Contracting & Trucking Co., 102 N. Y. Supp. 7, 8, 116 App. Div. 793.

IRRELEVANT, IMMATERIAL, AND INCOMPETENT

The words "irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent," commonly employed in connection with an objection to a question, are a meaningless formula, and are tantamount to no objection at all. Shandrew v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 142 Fed. 320, 322, 73 C. C. A. 430.

IRREPARABLE

IRREPARABLE DAMAGES

"Irreparable damages" to warrant issuance of an injunction does not mean that complainant must show that all his financial transactions will be ruined unless the relief sought is granted; it means that, with reference to the particular right or property referred to in the bill of complaint, the complainant will be irreparably deprived of it unless the relief sought is granted." Oliphant v. Richman, 59 Atl. 241, 242, 67 N. J. Eq. 280.

"Whether damages are to be viewed in equity as 'irreparable' depends more upon the nature of the right which is injuriously affected than upon the pecuniary measure the loss suffered. Where plaintiffs' land was drained by a ditch which they were entitled to maintain, the fact that such land had been damaged to the extent of $15 only by defendant's unauthorized obstruction of the ditch was no defense to plaintiff's right to enjoin such obstruction on the ground that the damages were trifling." Robertson v. Lewie, 59 Atl. 409, 77 Conn. 345.

Where a landlord reserved the right to enter upon premises for inspection and improvement, and the tenant, by threats of personal violence, prevented him from entering for that purpose, where the tenant had agreed to give a chattel mortgage on the crop to secure the rent, but refused to do so and threatened to remove a large part of the crops and allow the remainder to stand unharvested, and where the defendant was insolvent, the landlord's injuries could not be adequately compensated in damages, and were difficult if measured by any pecuniary standard, and as such were "irreparable" within the meaning of the law authorizing an injunction. Cole v. Manners, 107 N. W. 777, 778, 76 Neb. 454 (citing Eldemiller Ice Co. v. Guthrie, 60 N. W. 717, 42 Neb. 238, 28 L. R. A. 581).

"Irreparable damage" which may be prevented by injunction includes damage "irreparable" in the sense that it cannot be estimated by any accurate standard, but only by conjecture. Columbia College of Music & School of Dramatic Art v. Tunberg, 116 Pac. 280, 282, 64 Wash. 19.

IRREPARABLE INJURY

"When 'irreparable injury' is spoken of, it is not meant that the injury is beyond the possibility of repair, or beyond the possibility of compensation in damages, but it must be of such constant and frequent recurrence that no fair or reasonable redress can be had therefor in a court of law." Donovan v. Pennsylvania Co., 26 Sup. Ct. 91, 99, 199 U. S. 279, 50 L. Ed. 192 (quoting and adopting definition in Chicago General Ry. Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 54 N. E. 1026, 181 Ill. 605).

By irreparable injury is not meant such injury as is beyond the possibility of repair, or beyond possible compensation or damages, but that species of injury, whether great or small, that ought not to be submitted to on the one hand, or inflicted on the other, and which because it is so large on the one hand, or so small on the other, or is of such constant or frequent recurrence that no fair or reasonable redress can be had therefor in a court of law. Heine v. Roth, 2 Alaska, 416, 421.

An injury is "irreparable" so as to authorize an injunction, where it consists of a serious change of, or is destructive to, the property it affects, either physically or in the character in which it has been held and enjoyed, and when the property has some peculiar quality or use, so that its pecuniary value will not fairly recompense the owner for the loss thereof. Dunker v. Field & Tule Club, 92 Pac. 502, 504, 6 Cal. App. 524.

"An injury is 'irreparable' when it is of such a nature that the injured party cannot be adequately compensated therefor in damages, or when the damages which may result therefrom cannot be measured by any certain pecuniary standard." Eau Claire Water Co. v. City of Eau Claire, 106 N. W. 679, 681, 127 Wis. 154 (quoting definition in Wilson v. City of Mineral Point, 89 Wis. 160).

"Irreparable injury" which may be prevented by injunction includes damage "irreparable" in the sense that it cannot be estimated by any accurate standard, but only by conjecture. Columbia College of Music & School of Dramatic Art v. Tunberg, 116 Pac. 280, 282, 64 Wash. 19.

An injury is "irreparable" when there is no legal remedy furnishing full compensation or adequate redress because of the ineffectiveness of such legal remedy, or when, owing to the delay incident to the prosecution and enforcement of an action at law, a judgment would be fruitless. Gorham v. City of New Haven, 72 Atl. 1012, 1014, 82 Conn. 153.

"An injury is 'irreparable' either from its own nature, as when the party injured cannot be adequately compensated therefor in damages, or when the damages which may result therefrom cannot be measured by any certain pecuniary standard, or when it is shown that the party who must respond is insolvent, and for that reason incapable of responding in damages." Cleveland v. Martin, 75 N. E. 772, 777, 218 Ill. 73, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 629 (quoting and adopting definition in Lloyd v. Catlin Coal Co., 210 Ill. 460, 71 N. E. 835).

"By 'irreparable injury' is not meant such injury as is beyond the possibility of repair, or beyond possible compensation in damages, nor necessarily great injury or great damage, but that species of injury, whether great or small, that ought not to be submitted to on the one hand, or inflicted on the other, and because it is so large on the one hand, or so small on the other, is of such constant and frequent occurrence that no fair or reasonable redress can be had therefor in a court of law. Melvin v. E. B. & A. L. Stone Co., 94 Pac. 390, 391, 7 Cal. App. 827 (quoting and adopting Wahle v. Reinbach, 76 Ill. 322); Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Americus Constr. Co., 65 S. E. 855, 858, 133 Ga. 392 (citing Wood, Nuis. § 770).

A city actually appropriating a narrow strip of land of an individual, and casting on his land the entire sewage of the city, having a population of 5,000, causes "irreparable injury," justifying relief in equity. Onen v. Herkimer, 138 N. W. 198, 200, 172 Mich. 593 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3772).

An "irreparable injury" justifying the granting of an injunction is one for which the complainant cannot be adequately compensated in damages. The inadequacy of damages as the compensation may be due to the nature of the injury itself, or to the nature of the right of property injured, or may be due to the insolvency or want of responsibility of the person committing it. Devou v. Pence (Ky.) 106 S. W. 874, 875 (citing 22 Cyc. p. 764).

"Irreparable injury," as used in the law of injunctions, does not necessarily mean that the injury is beyond the possibility of compensation in damages, nor that it must be very great, and the fact that no actual damages can be proved, so that in an action at law the jury could award nominal damages only, often furnishes the very best reason why a court of equity should interfere in a case where the nuisance is a continuous one. Espenschild v. Bauer, 85 N. E. 230, 232, 235 Ill. 172.

"An injury to be 'irreparable' need not be such as to render its repair physically impossible; but it is irreparable when it cannot be adequately compensated in damages or when there exists no certain pecuniary standard for the measurement of the damages." The preventing of one from hunting upon an arm of the Great Lakes from a rowboat one half mile from shore, such water being navigable water of the state, is an "irreparable injury," the threatening of which justifies an injunction. Ainsworth v. Munoskong Hunting & Fishing Club, 116 N. W. 992, 994, 153 Mich. 185, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1236, 126 Am. St. Rep. 474, 15 Ann. Cas. 706.

"The phrase 'irreparable injury' is apt to mislead. It does not necessarily mean, as used in the law of injuries, that the injury is beyond the possibility of compensation in damages, nor that it must be very great, and the fact that no actual damages can be proved, so that in an action at law the jury could award nominal damages only, often furnishes the very best reason why a court of equity should interfere in cases where the nuisance is a continuous one. If the nuisance is merely temporary in its nature, and there is no danger that it will affect any substantial rights of the complainant in such a manner that he cannot be compensated therefor in damages, courts of equity will generally refuse to interfere; but if the nuisance is a continuing one, invading substantial rights of the complainant in such a manner that he would thereby lose such rights entirely but for the assistance of a court of equity, he will be entitled to an injunction upon a proper showing, notwithstanding the fact that he might recover some damages in an action at law." Tise v. Whitaker Harvey Co., 57 S. E. 210, 211, 144 N. C. 507 (quoting and adopting definition in El-lott, Roads & S. § 665).

In the case of a nuisance such as a barn so managed as to give off noxious odors, where the damages to adjoining property owners cannot well be measured from a pecuniary standpoint, the injury is irreparable within the meaning of the law, and equity will interpose, though the pecuniary damage be not shown to be great. Lead v. Inch, 134 N. W. 218, 220, 116 Minn. 467, 89 L. R. A. (N. S.) 234, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 891.

"Irreparable injury" from a nuisance is some such injury which causes a loss of health or destruction of means of subsistence or permanent ruin to property, and, when such injury will follow the building of a street railway constructed under a void staff ordinance, the construction may be enjoined. Ward v. Colorado Eastern R. Co., 125 Pac. 567, 573, 22 Colo. App. 332.

IRREPARABLE LOSS

In Ladd v. Oxnard, 75 Fed. 703, Judge Putnam, at page 732, in considering what "loss" is "irreparable" within the meaning of the law as affecting the right to a preliminary injunction, when the word "irreparable" is held to cover cases "where the loss of health, the loss of trade, the destruction of the means of subsistence, or the ruin of the property must ensue." Sampson & Murdock Co. v. Seaver-Radford Co., 129 Fed. 761, 772 (citing Parker v. Winnipiseogee Lake Cotton & Woolen Co., 2 Black, 545, 17 L. Ed. 333).

IRRESISTIBLE

IRRESISTIBLE FORCE

By "irresistible force" is meant such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable. It may result also from a cause beyond human control. Cook & Laurie Contracting Co. v. Denis, 49 So. 1014, 1015, 124 La. 161.

IRRESISTIBLE IMPULSE

The distinction between the doctrine of "irresistible impulse" and the "right and wrong test" is that in the latter case the person committing the act is unable, by reason of mental infirmity, to comprehend that the act is wrong, while the doctrine of "irresistible impulse" applies where the person knows that the act is wrong, but is driven by an irresistible impulse to commit it. State v. Riddle, 150 S. W. 1044, 1045, 245 Mo. 451, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 150.

IRREVOCABLE

IRREVOCABLE LICENSE

As easements, see Easement.

The irrevocability of a parol license proceeds upon the ground of preventing fraud, and depends upon some conduct of the licensor which, if permitted to deny, will amount to fraud upon the licensee. The Supreme Court of Oregon has frequently defined an irrevocable license, recognizing three essential elements, viz.: The license must be upon some consideration paid by the licensee or some benefit accruing to the licensor; there must be an oral agreement therefor; and improvements or expenditure in reliance thereon. Falls City Lumber Co. v. Watson, 99 Pac. 884, 886, 53 Or. 212 (citing Lavery v. Arnold, 57 Pac. 906, 58 Pac. 524, 36 Or. 84; Miser v. O'Shea, 62 Pac. 491, 37 Or. 231, 52 Am. St. Rep. 751; Ewing v. Rhea, 62 Pac. 790, 37 Or. 583, 52 L. R. A. 140, 82 Am. St. Rep. 783; Brown v. Gold Coin Mining Co., 86 Pac. 361, 48 Or. 277).

IRRIGATION PURPOSES

"Regardless of technical definitions, the phrase 'irrigation purposes' or 'purposes of irrigation' is a common expression in the legislation of this state, and has acquired a well-defined meaning, which is synonymous with 'agricultural purposes,' or, at least, the former is included within the latter." Under a statute providing punishment for persons making any aperture in any structure erected to conduct water for "agricultural purposes," with intent to destroy the same, an information is sufficient which charges that the structure was erected to conduct water for "irrigation purposes" or "purposes of irrigation." State v. Tiffany, 87 Pac. 932, 934, 44 Wash. 602.

IRRIGATION SEASON

The "irrigation season" is defined by law (Sess. Laws Idaho 1899, p. 882) as extending from April 1st to November 1st; but, in a contract for water for irrigating purposes beginning July 6th and providing that water shall be delivered free during the first irrigating season, the purchaser is entitled to free use of water during the irrigating period for one year from the date on which water was first delivered to him. Twin Falls Land & Water Co. v. Lind, 94 Pac. 164, 165, 14 Idaho, 348.

IS

Code 1868, c. 31, § 25, as re-enacted by Acts 1882, p. 387, c. 160, provides that no sale or deed of any real estate under the provisions of this chapter shall be set aside or in any manner affected by reason of the failure of any officer to perform any duty herein required to be done or performed by him after such sale "is" made. Held, that the word "is" does not relate to past sales, and the statute is to be given a prospective operation only. State v. Harman, 50 S. E. 828, 832, 57 W. Va. 447.

When the Constitution of a state says that the Legislature "is invested" with a certain power, it invests it with that power and does so none the less that in the absence of those words a more or less similar power would be implied by more general expressions in the same instrument. Tampa Waterworks Co. v. City of Tampa, 26 Sup. Ct. 23, 24, 199 U. S. 241, 50 L. Ed. 170.

As has been

"The word 'is' supports the argument. It is the present tense, not the perfect, 'has been.'" State v. Boner, 49 S. E. 944, 57 W. Va. 81.

In Civ. Code Prac. § 337, subsec. 5, providing that, if the judge who presided at the trial did not preside when a motion for a new trial "is" overruled, the bill of exceptions may be certified by bystanders, and be controverted and maintained pursuant to the provisions of subsections 3 and 4, the word "is" was intended as an equivalent to the words "has been." Louisville Southern R. Co.'s Receivers v. Lewis, 41 S. W. 3, 4, 101 Ky. 296 (citing Hayden v. Ortkeiss' Adm'r, 83 Ky. 396).

As shall or may be

As used in a constitutional provision that where an old county is reduced for the purpose of forming a new one the seat of justice in the old county shall not be removed without the concurrence of two-thirds of both branches of the Legislature, and two-thirds of the qualified voters of the county, etc., but that the provision requiring a two-thirds majority shall not apply to certain counties, the word "is" is used in the sense of "shall" or "may be." Lindsay v. Allen, 82 S. W. 171, 173, 112 Tenn. 637.

As will be

The word "is" is used in a city water supply contract, providing that the water proposed to be furnished is pure and wholesome, in the sense of "will be." It was not the affirmation of a then existing fact. Jersey City v. Flynn, 70 Atl. 497, 510, 74 N. J. Eq. 104.

ISLAND

An "island" is defined by the authorities to be a body of land surrounded by water. A body of land which was originally a part of the main land, but which had been cut off by a ditch through which the tide flowed, which body of land was about 8 miles in length and 600 or 700 yards in width, the stream which was gradually formed by the washing of the wind and tide ranging in width from 48 to 60 feet and being navigable by small boats, was an "island," though the land composing the tract belonged to the person who owned it before it was cut off. State v. Barco, 63 S. E. 673, 675, 150 N. C. 792 (citing 23 Cyc. p. 857).

In determining whether a formation in a river is an "island" or a part of the shore land, account should be taken of the size and stability of the formation, its physical features, and the relative size and permanence of the channels around it. McBride v. Steinweden, 83 Pac. 822, 824, 72 Kan. 508.

"A mussel-bed over which the water flows at every tide cannot properly be called an 'island.' Such formations constitute what are called 'flats.'" Fowler v. Wood, 85 Pac. 763, 776, 73 Kan. 511, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162, 117 Am. St. Rep. 534 (quoting and adopting definition in King v. Young, 76 Me. 76, 49 Am. Rep. 596).

Revisal 1905, § 3474, forbids the anchoring of a floathouse for fishing or hunting in shoal water not more than 300 yards from the mainland on the west side of Currituck Sound. A floathouse was anchored off a body of land originally a part of the mainland, but had been cut off by a ditch through which the tide flowed. This land was about 8 miles in length and 600 or 700 yards in width, and the stream which was gradually formed by the washing of the wind and tide ranged in width from 48 to 60 feet and was navigable by small boats. Held that, though the land belonged to the person who owned it before it was cut off, it was an "island," defined to be "a body of land surrounded by water." State v. Barco, 63 S. E. 673, 675, 150 N. C. 792.

To constitute an "island" in the river, the same must be of a permanent character, not merely surrounded by water when the river is high, but permanently surrounded by a channel of the river, and not a sandbar subject to overflow by a rise in the river and connected with the land when the water is low. McBride v. Steinweden, 83 Pac. 822, 824, 72 Kan. 508.

ISOLATED

"In the federal law, the carrying on of business within a state means something more than a casual or occasional purchase of goods; the business must be continuous or at least of some duration." St. Louis Wire-Mill Co. v. Consolidated Barbed-Wire Co., 32 Fed. 802. The conclusion would have fitted the facts if the judge in writing that opinion had used the word "isolated" instead of the words "casual or occasional." New Haven Pulp & Board Co. v. Downingtown Mfg. Co., 130 Fed. 605, 609.

ISSUE

See Bond Issue; Contract in Issue; Duly Issued; For Successive Issues; Person to Whom Issued.
Date of issue, see Date.

"Issue" is defined by Webster to mean to send out, to put into circulation. Cunningham v. Royal Neighbors of America, 124 N. W. 434, 435, 24 S. D. 489, 140 Am. St. Rep. 793.

Of bank bill or note

The word "issue" and the word "issued" have many different meanings depending on the subject-matter of the writing or discourse, or on the context, or both; but, when the word "issue" is used with reference to the giving out of obligations by banks, it has a restricted, special, and almost technical meaning relating exclusively to the money currency of the country. Lusk v. Stoughton State Bank, 115 N. W. 813, 815, 135 Wis. 311.

Of bonds, negotiable instruments, etc.

Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 38, § 124, providing that whoever fraudulently utters any receipt or other written evidence of the delivery of any grain, etc., when the quantity specified has not in fact been delivered, etc., shall be imprisoned as therein prescribed, a writing evidencing the depositing in a building of grain belonging to the owner of the building would be regarded as "issued" when assigned, transferred, or delivered by the owner of the building to some other person. McReynolds v. People, 82 N. E. 945, 948, 230 Ill. 623.

The word "issue," in its ordinary sense, means send out, emit, deliver. The word "issue," as used in the North Carolina statute, directing railroad aid bonds of a county to be "issued" by a board of trustees, is used in its ordinary sense, and the statute should not be construed as requiring that the bonds should be executed by the trustees. The statute being silent in the subject of execution, such bonds are properly executed by the county's board of commissioners. Board of Com'rs of Onslow County v. Tollman, 145 Fed. 753, 769, 76 C. C. A. 317 (quoting 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3779).

"Bonds are sometimes said to be 'issued' when they are merely authorized. Again, they are said to be 'issued' when they are executed and delivered for value." The word "issued" is used in the former sense in the provision of the Wright Act (St. Cal. 1887, p. 35, c. 34) that "if a majority of the votes cast are, 'Bonds—Yes,' the board of directors shall immediately cause bonds in such amount to be issued." Wright v. East Riverside Irr. Dist., 138 Fed. 313, 323, 70 C. C. A. 603.

"Issue" of a bill or note is its first delivery, complete in form, to a person who takes it as holder. Vander Ploeg v. Van Zunk, 112 N. W. 807, 810, 135 Iowa, 350, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 490, 124 Am. St. Rep. 275.

Under Negotiable Instrument Law 1905, pp. 244, 245, 246, 265, §§ 6, 12, 13, 17, 191, declaring that the validity of a note is not affected by the fact that it is undated, that the instrument is not invalidated because antedated or postdated, providing that, where an instrument expressed to be payable at a fixed date after date is issued undated, any holder may insert therein the true date of issue, but the insertion of a wrong date does not avoid the instrument in the hands of a subsequent holder in due course, and defining the word "issue" to be the first delivery of the instrument complete in form to the one taking it as a holder, the original holder of an undated accommodation note may not postdate the note and bind the accommodation indorsers; and, where the original holder postdates the note, he cannot recover from the accommodation indorsers, especially where when the indorsers notified the holder when delivering the note that they would not lend their credit to a further extension of the debt. Bank of Houston v. Day, 122 S. W. 756, 760, 145 Mo. App. 410.

Same—As deliver or put in circulation

The word "issue" is defined in the Century Dictionary as to send out, deliver for use, deliver authoritatively. A county warrant is not issued until it is actually delivered into the hands of the person authorized to receive it. American Bridge Co. v. Wheeler, 76 Pac. 534, 535, 35 Wash. 40.

In financial parlance the term "issue" seems to have two phases of meaning: "Date of issue," when applied to notes, bonds, etc., of a series, usually means the arbitrary date fixed as the beginning of the term for which they run, without reference to the precise time when convenience or the state of the market may permit of their sale or delivery. The other sense or the other phase of meaning is, "when the bonds are delivered to the purchaser, they will be issued to him." State Nat. Bank v. Board of Com'rs of Port of New Orleans, 46 South. 307, 310, 121 La. 269 (quoting and adopting definition in Yesler v. Seattle, 25 Pac. 1014, 1 Wash. 308).

A bond is "issued" when it comes into the hands of the holder so executed and delivered as to bind the obligor. Zimmermann v. Timmermann, 86 N. E. 540, 543, 193 N. Y. 486.

As used in a city charter providing that, when bonds were "issued," a fund should be provided to pay the interest and for a single fund, the word "issued" referred to the time of the sale of the bonds, or when they passed into the hands of some one who claimed them as a debt against the city. City of Austin v. Valle (Tex.) 71 S. W. 414, 416.

Under Sess. Laws 1909, c. 146, providing for the creation of irrigation districts with power to issue bonds, and declaring in sections 42, 43, 44, that the bonds shall be issued and negotiated under the direction of the board of commissioners, that bonds shall be signed by the president and attested by the secretary of the board, under the corporate seal of the district, and shall be a lien on the lands in the district, bonds executed and sealed by the president and secretary of the board of commissioners of a district are valid, though not negotiated until after the expiration of their term of office, and their successors need not re-execute the bonds to make them valid, though the word "issue" means the delivery of the bonds to the purchaser, and has no reference to the arbitrary date fixed as the beginning of the time for which they run. O'Neill v. Yellowstone Irr. Dist., 121 Pac. 283, 290, 44 Mont. 492.

City bonds are not "issued" until actually or constructively delivered under a contract of sale, so that even if Const. art. 8, § 7, providing for the issuing of bonds by cities or towns, and requiring them, on issuing such bonds, to create a sinking fund for their redemption, required such fund to be created before the bonds could be legally issued, unsold bonds still in the hands of a town council were not invalid on that ground, though dated after the creation of the sinking fund. Black v. Fishburne, 66 S. E. 681, 682, 84 S. C. 451, 19 Ann. Cas. 1104.

Laws 80th Leg. 1907, p. 78, approved March 23, 1907 (sections 1-21, inclusive), provide the steps by which a drainage district may be created, and for the issuance of bonds, etc. Section 22 directs the county commissioners' court to make an order directing the issuance of drainage bonds. Section 23 provides that all bonds "issued" under the act shall be signed by the county judge and attested by the county clerk. Section 24 provides that any drainage district desiring to "issue" bonds in accordance with this act shall, before such bonds are offered for sale, forward to the Attorney General a "copy" of the bonds to be "issued," a certified copy of the order of the commissioners' court levying the tax to pay interest and provide a sinking fund, and a statement of the total indebtedness of the district, etc.; whereupon the Attorney General shall examine the bonds in connection with the facts and laws on the subject, and, if he finds that the bonds are valid and binding, shall so certify. Section 25 provides that, when the bonds have been examined and his certificate attached thereto, they shall be registered by the State Comptroller in a book kept for that purpose and the certificate preserved for use in litigation. Held, that the word "issued" in section 23 meant bonds executed by signing and attesting them, etc., but the word "issue," as used in section 24 in the phrase "desiring to issue bonds," meant to put bonds into circulation by selling them, while the phrase "the bonds to be issued" meant those to be offered for sale, and not those to be prepared and executed, and the word "copy" meant one of a set or number of reproductions or imitations containing the same matter and of the same form and appearance, the purpose of the law being that, after the bonds were ready for sale, one of them should be submitted to the Attorney General for examination in order to determine the validity of the whole issue, so that the Attorney General was not required to pass upon bonds until they were actually printed and signed by the proper officials as required by statute. Hidalgo County Drainage Dist. No. 1 v. Davidson, 120 S. W. 849, 851, 102 Tex. 539 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3773-3781).

Of corporate stock

As sale, see Sale.

The word "issue," as used in the Missouri Constitution, declaring that no corporation shall "issue" stock except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received, is obviously used in its ordinary commercial or financial sense, meaning to "emit," "put into circulation," or "dispose of" securities already authorized and prepared for disposition. Scott v. Abbott, 160 Fed. 573, 577 (citing Black's Law Dict.; Century Dict.; Folks v. Yost, 54 Mo. App. 55, 59).

Stock Corporation Law, § 54, provided that stockholders should be liable to creditors to an amount equal to the stock held by them until the capital stock issued and outstanding should have been fully paid. In an action to enforce the liability of a stockholder, it appeared that a stock of goods had been transferred to the corporation under an agreement whereby, in consideration therefor, it was to issue to the owner and to defendant a certain amount of stock, and that defendant had forgiven certain indebtedness owing him by the transferor of the goods on account of the issue of the stock, and that defendant had been one of the directors of the corporation, his only qualification being the ownership of the stock in question. Held, that the stock was "issued" and was "held" by the parties, though no certificate or scrip representing the same had been issued. Flour City Nat. Bank v. Shire, 72 N. E. 1141, 179 N. Y. 587.

Const. art. 12, § 3, provides that each stockholder of a corporation shall be individually liable for such portion of the debts incurred while he was a stockholder as the amount of stock owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock. Held, that a complaint to enforce stockholders' liability under such section, alleging that the whole capital of the corporation was divided into 60,000 shares, of which about 37,735 shares were "issued," was not equivalent to an allegation that only that number of shares were "subscribed," and that the complaint was therefore fatally defective for failure to allege the whole number of shares subscribed. San Francisco Commercial Agency v. Miller, 87 Pac. 630, 631, 4 Cal. App. 291 (citing San Joaquin L. & W. Co. v. Beecher, 35 Pac. 349, 101 Cal. 70; California Southern Hotel Co. v. Callender, 29 Pac. 859, 94 Cal. 127, 28 Am. St. Rep. 99; Mitchell v. Beckman, 28 Pac. 110, 64 Cal. 121; Tulare Sav. Bank v. Talbot, 63 Pac. 172, 131 Cal. 49).

Of execution

The term "issue," as applied to an execution, means more than the mere clerical preparation and attestation of the writ, and includes its delivery to an officer for its enforcement. Bourn v. Robinson, 107 S. W. 873, 875, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 157 (citing 1 Freem. Ex'n, § 9a; Schneider v. Dorsey, 74 S. W. 527, 96 Tex. 544).

Under Code 1904, § 3577, providing that, where execution "issues" within a year from judgment, an action may be brought on the judgment within 10 years from return of execution, an execution regular in all respects, duly attested by the clerk, and marked "to lie," though never delivered to an officer, was "issued" within the statute. Davis v. Roller, 55 S. E. 4, 5, 106 Va. 46, 117 Am. St. Rep. 977.

Of insurance policy or certificate

The legal definition of "issuance" is the act of sending out officially, delivering for use, and putting into circulation; and the issuance of an insurance policy is the date of its delivery to insured, and a provision therein requiring an inventory of insured goods within 30 days of the issuance of the policy meant 30 days from its delivery, and not from its date. Homestead Fire Ins. Co. v. Ison, 65 S. E. 463, 465, 110 Va. 18.

A certificate is not "issued," within the meaning of a proviso in the constitution of a beneficial society to the effect that a member shall be liable for dues, etc., for the month in which his benefit certificate is "issued or dated by the supreme secretary," until it has been delivered to and accepted by the member. Logsdon v. Supreme Lodge of Fraternal Union of America, 76 Pac. 292, 293, 34 Wash. 666.

The word "issued" in an application for insurance, reciting that the policy shall not take effect until it was signed by the secretary of the company and issued, was used as indicative of the completed signing and execution of the instrument, making it ready for delivery. Stringham v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 75 Pac. 822, 825, 44 Or. 447.

Where the point in controversy in an action on a policy was whether the policy had been in fact "issued," an instruction that the company admits that the insured applied for a policy, and that "they issued a policy, but never delivered it to him," is not erroneous, as the word "issue" was used in the sense of preparing and signing the policy, but did not include delivery. Dargan v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 51 S. E. 125, 126, 71 S. C. 356.

An allegation of the answer in an action on a fire policy that "defendant issued to the plaintiff its policy of insurance" on the goods insured, admitted the unconditional delivery of the policy to insured; the word "issue" meaning to deliver for use, and, as used in an allegation in an answer that plaintiff procured a policy of insurance to be issued to him, is equivalent to an allegation that it was delivered to and accepted by plaintiff. De Michele v. London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co. (Utah) 120 Pac. 846, 848.

Of notice

The verb "to issue" includes among its meanings "to deliver by authority." The charter of a mutual insurance company, requiring the payment of assessments "within thirty days after the issuing of said notice" of assessment, means within 30 days after the giving or delivery of such notice. Miner v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Manistee, Benzle and Mason Counties, 117 N. W. 211, 212, 153 Mich. 594 (citing 23 Cyc. p. 358; Thomas v. Abbott, 63 N. W. 984, 105 Mich. 687).

Of patent

The term "issuance of patent," as used in Act July 1, 1902, c. 1362, 32 Stat. 643, § 16, under the law as it then stood, referred to the time when the patent was delivered to the allottee, there being no provision making its record necessary to the passing of title; but under Act April 26, 1906, c. 1876, 34 Stat. 139, § 5, which provides that "all patents or deeds to allottees . . . shall be recorded in the office of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, and when so recorded shall convey legal title," and repeals all acts and parts of acts inconsistent therewith, the recording of a patent is equivalent to its issuance under former acts so far as it affects the period of restriction. In re Lands of Five Civilized Tribes, 199 Fed. 811, 820.

Of process, summons, or writ

A summons is not "issued," within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 317, providing that a civil action shall be commenced by filing a complaint, and causing a summons to be issued thereon, until it is delivered to the officer charged by law with its service. Marshall v. Matson, 86 N. E. 839, 342, 171 Ind. 238.

Garnishee summons is issued under Rev. Laws 1905, § 4229, when delivered by the plaintiff or his attorney to the proper officer for service on the garnishee, and when the writ is sent to the officer by mail delivery is not completed until received by him. Webster Mfg. Co. v. Penrod, 114 N. W. 257, 103 Minn. 69.

While the date of a writ is prima facie evidence of the time it was actually issued, a suit is not commenced by writ until the writ is delivered or transmitted to an officer with the bona fide intention of having it served. People ex rel. McCallum v. Gebhardt, 118 N. W. 16, 17, 154 Mich. 504.

Under Rev. St. § 2730, providing that attachment shall be issued on plaintiff's request by the clerk either at the time of the "issuing" of the summons in the action or at any time thereafter before final judgment, the word "issuing," when considered with statutes as a whole, refers to the actual delivery of the writ of attachment or summons to the sheriff to be executed. Barth v. Burnham, 81 N. W. 809, 810, 105 Wis. 548.

Code 1896, § 2667, provides that civil suits before justices of the peace, must be commenced by a summons "issued" by him, etc., and section 2814 declares that the suing out of a summons for the commencement of a suit shall have that effect, whether it be executed or not, if the suit be continued by an alias or recommenced at the next term of the court. Held, that where there was no constable in the justice's precinct, and the justice was also a deputy sheriff, a summons signed by him as justice while in his hands, whether as justice or deputy sheriff, was not "issued" so as to stop the running of limitations, as the issuance of summons under such circumstances contemplates a delivery to and acceptance by an officer having power to execute it. Southern Ry. Co. v. Dickens, 60 South. 109, 163 Ala. 114.

Of trading stamps

The phrases "issued in the regular way" and "collected in the regular way," in a contract providing for the redemption of trading stamps so issued and collected, have the same meaning and describe the same transaction. Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Hertzberg, 60 Atl. 368, 870, 69 N. J. Eq. 264.

ISSUE (Descendants)

See Die Leaving No Issue; Die Without Issue; Die Without Leaving Issue; Immediate Issue; In Default of Issue; Lawful Issue; Legal Issue; Legitimate Issue; Lineal Issue; Should They Leave Issue.

"Issue" primarily means descendants of whatever degree. Perry v. Bulkley, 72 Atl. 1014, 1017, 82 Conn. 158.

The word "issue," when used in a will and unexplained by the context, means all descendants of each of the sisters and brother of decedent. In re Bauerdorf, 138 N. Y. Supp. 682, 77 Misc. Rep. 656.

Unless the language of the will or the external circumstances afford a strong reason for a contrary construction, the word "issue" is ordinarily given its primary meaning of "descendants." Seitz v. Faversham, 126 N. Y. Supp. 801, 802, 141 App. Div. 903.

In its legal sense as used in statutes and wills and deeds and other instruments, "issue" means descendants, lineal descendants, offspring. Schafer v. Ballou, 128 Pac. 498, 499, 35 Okl. 169.

"Issue" embraces lineal descendants of every generation, and must be so construed when used in a will, unless the testator by expression or necessary inference has shown an intent to use the word in a restricted sense. Bassett v. Wells, 106 N. Y. Supp. 1068, 1069, 56 Misc. Rep. 81 (citing Kingsland v. Rapelye [N. Y.] 3 Edw. Ch. 1. See, also, Adams v. Law, 17 How. [58 U. S.] 421, 15 L. Ed. 149; Palmer v. Horn, 84 N. Y. 516; Bodine v. Brown, 42 N. Y. Supp. 202, 12 App. Div. 335, affirmed, 49 N. E. 1093, 154 N. Y. 778; Drake v. Drake, 32 N. E. 114, 134 N. Y. 220, 225, 17 L. A. R. 664; Soper v. Brown, 32 N. E. 768, 136 N. Y. 244, 32 Am. St. Rep. 731; N. Y. Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Viele, 55 N. E. 311, 161 N. Y. 11, 19, 20, 76 Am. St. Rep. 238; Chwatal v. Schreiner, 43 N. E. 166, 148 N. Y. 683; Bisson v. West Shore R. R. Co., 38 N. E. 104, 143 N. Y. 128; Phelps v. Cameron, 96 N. Y. Supp. 1014, 109 App. Div. 798; Price v. Sisson, 13 N. J. Eq. 168, 178; Weehawken Ferry Co. v. Sisson, 17 N. J. Eq. 475; Hilliker v. Bast, 72 N. Y. Supp. 301, 64 App. Div. 552; Emmet v. Emmet, 73 N. Y. Supp. 614, 67 App. Div. 183; Wilson v. Wilson, 78 N. Y. Supp. 408, 76 App. Div. 232; U. S. Trust Co. v. Tobias, 21 Abb. N. C. 392).

In construing statutes, the word "issue," as applied to descent of estates, includes all lawful lineal descendants, pursuant to the rule of construction in Code, § 48, par. 7. Rice v. Burkhardt, 107 N. W. 308, 130 Iowa, 520.

A legacy to the "issue" of decedent's brothers and sisters goes to the descendants of such brothers and sisters of every degree where a different intention is not shown by the context and the distribution is per capita, and not per stirpes. In re Bauerdorf, 138 N. Y. Supp. 673, 678, 77 Misc. Rep. 656.

Rev. St. c. 1, § 6, par. 9, provides that "the word 'issue' applied to the descent of estates includes all lawful lineal descendants of the ancestor." Healey v. Cole, 49 Atl. 1065, 1066, 95 Me. 272.

The word "issue" should be construed, "where its meaning is unrestricted by the context, as including all lineal descendants and importing representation, and certainly, when the issue take as of a particular time after the death of the testator, and only the issue living at that time take, the issue of deceased issue take by a certain substitution for their ancestors." Coates v. Burton, 77 N. E. 311, 191 Mass. 180 (quoting and approving Jackson v. Jackson, 26 N. E. 1112, 153 Mass. 374, 11 L. R. A. 805, 25 Am. St. Rep. 643).

The primary meaning of "issue" is descendants, and, in the absence of the use of the word in a will in another sense, it will be so construed. Under a residuary bequest to testator's stepmother and half-sister, in equal portions, and, in the event of either dying without issue, the share of the one so dying to the survivor, the stepmother dying before testator, he does not die intestate as to the share given, but there is an implied bequest of it to her issue. In re Disney's Will, 103 N. Y. Supp. 391, 392, 118 App. Div. 378 (quoting and adopting definition in New York Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Viele, 55 N. E. 311, 161 N. Y. 11, 76 Am. St. Rep. 238; Chwatal v. Schreiner, 43 N. E. 166, 148 N. Y. 683).

The word "issue" means lineal descendants, though it may appear from the context of the deed to have been used in the limited meaning of children, or children and grandchildren, and the word when used in its primary sense, and not affected by any indication of a contrary intention, includes lineal descendants generally and indefinitely; but where the failure of issue is restrained to some particular time, and the word is used as descriptive of the class to take at that time, it imports a definite failure of issue, and refers to lineal descendants in being at the time specified, so that, if at the time fixed there are lineal descendants in being, a limitation over on failure of issue is void. Robeson v. Cochran, 99 N. E. 649, 651, 255 Ill. 355.

Where a will devised the income of real estate for life, and, upon the death of the first life tenant, to his son for life, and then in equal proportions to named brothers and sisters of the testatrix, and, if any of such brothers and sisters were dead at the termination of the life estates, to the children of such deceased brother or sister, taking the parent's share by representation, and, in the event of the brothers and sisters dying before the termination of the life estates leaving no children living, then equally between the brothers and sisters then living, and the issue then living of any deceased brother or sister, the limitation over to the brothers and sisters and to the children of any deceased brother or sister was not repugnant to the statute against perpetuities; but the limitation over to the issue of a deceased brother or sister in the event that any of them should have died without a child living at the termination of the life estates was repugnant to the statute; the word "issue," read with the context, not meaning immediate issue or children, but issue of a more remote degree. Sumner v. Westcott, 84 Atl. 921, 86 Conn. 217.

The phrase "their living issue" in a contract of life insurance, directing the payment of the amount of the policy at the death of the insured to his brothers and sisters or their living issue, according to the right of representation, means and refers to living lineal descendants of deceased brothers and sisters. Hemenway v. Draper, 97 N. W. 874, 91 Minn. 235.

Adopted children

P. S. 2936, subd. 1, provides that the estate of an intestate shall descend in equal shares to his "children," or the legal representatives of deceased children, and subdivision 2 provides that, if the deceased is a married person and leaves no "issue," the surviving husband or wife, if such survivor does not take dower or testamentary provision, shall be entitled to one-half of the estate of deceased forever if it does not exceed $2,000, otherwise the $2,000 and one-half of the remainder, etc. Held, that the word "children," as used in subdivision 1, and the word "issue," in subdivision 2, were not limited to natural children, but included as well children by adoption. In re Walworth's Estate, 82 Atl. 7, 11, 85 Vt. 322, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 849.

Under St. 1876, p. 210, c. 213, providing that a person adopted shall take the same share of the property which the adopted parent could have devised by will that he would have taken if born to such parent in lawful wedlock, and that he shall stand in regard to the legal descendants, but to no other of the kindred of such parent, in such position as if so born to him, a child adopted after the enactment of such statute, whose adopted father died in 1903, was not entitled to take as the "issue" or "heir" of her adopted father under the will of her adopted grandfather. Blodgett v. Stowell, 75 N. E. 138, 139, 189 Mass. 142.

Under Pub. St. 1901, c. 195, §§ 10-13, providing that a widow by waiving the provisions of her husband's will in her favor may obtain after the payment of his debts one-third of his property where he leaves "issue" surviving him, and one-half where there is no surviving "issue," the same provisions being made for the husband in case of his wife's death, an "adopted child" cannot be considered as "issue," even though it be the child of the deceased husband by a former wife, and the adopting parents take the same part of the other's estate upon the death of either that they would have taken had the child not been adopted. Morae v. Osborne, 77 Atl. 403, 404, 75 N. H. 487, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 324.

Shannon's Code, § 4163, provides that an intestate's land shall descend equally to all the sons and daughters, and that if intestate died "without issue" his lands shall descend equally to his brothers and sisters of the whole or half blood, born before his death or afterwards. Held, that such provisions must be construed in connection with Shannon's Code, § 5411, regulating adoption, and declaring that the adopted child shall have all the privileges of a legitimate child to the applicant, with capacity to inherit and succeed to the real and personal estate as the applicant's heir or next of kin, so that, where a foreign adoption is recognized in Tennessee by comity, to the extent that such status was fixed by the foreign statutes conferring the same power of inheritance, a nonresident foster parent, dying intestate in another state, owning lands in Tennessee, and leaving a duly adopted child there, did not "die without issue" within section 4163. Finley v. Brown, 123 S. W. 359, 363, 122 Tenn. 316, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1285.

After-born children

A devise to the "issue" of testatrix's niece as joint tenants, when the youngest should become 21 years old, etc., is properly construed as a valid devise to issue existing at testatrix's death, and as not including after-born children, since the latter construction would make the clause void under the statute against perpetuities (Real Property Law [Consol. Laws 1909, c. 501] § 42). Seitz v. Faversham, 98 N. E. 385, 386, 205 N. Y. 197.

As children

Children as including, see Child—Children.

"Issue" is an ambiguous term. "It may mean descendants generally or merely children, and whether in a will it shall be held to mean the one or the other depends on the intention of the testator as derived from the context or the entire will, or such extrinsic circumstances as can be considered." In re Tenney, 93 N. Y. Supp. 811, 816, 104 App. Div. 290 (quoting and adopting the definition in Palmer v. Horn, 84 N. Y. 516).

The word "issue" is to be interpreted according to its primary signification as importing descendants, unless it appears that testator used the word in its secondary or restricted meaning of children. The word "issue" may be restricted to children only, or include descendants generally, or descendants taking by right of representation, and the meaning depends upon the intention of testator as gathered from the whole will. Union Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Dudley, 72 Atl. 166, 170, 104 Me. 297.

"The word 'issue,' which is coextensive with 'descendants' and includes every degree, has been restrained to the sense of 'children.'" Snyder v. Greendale Land Co., 91 N. E. 819, 821, 48 Ind. App. 178.

Where it is apparent from extrinsic circumstances or the provisions of a will that testator intended to use the word "issue" in the sense of "children," its meaning will be so limited. Clark v. Kittenplan, 118 N. Y. Supp. 404, 405, 409, 63 Misc. Rep. 122.

In a bequest "to the issue of my sister M." and their heirs, the word "issue" is used to denote children. Logan v. Cassidy, 50 S. E. 794, 798, 71 S. C. 175.

The use of the word "issue," in Code, § 1886, prescribing the rules of inheritance, does not limit the right of inheritance to the natural children only, as the word "issue" is there used in the same sense as the words "child" and "children." In re Winchester's Estate, 74 Pac. 10, 140 Cal. 468 (citing In re Newman's Estate, 16 Pac. 887, 75 Cal. 219, 7 Am. St. Rep. 146).

The word "issue," when used in a will and unexplained by context, means descendants of every degree of remoteness, and, when employed in that sense, the descendants of the different degrees take in equal shares per capita and not per stirpes; but the word may be, and frequently is, explained by the context to mean "children." Rasquin v. Hamersley, 137 N. Y. Supp. 578, 580, 152 App. Div. 522.

Same—When used with "child or children"

Where testator uses the words "children" and "issue" interchangeably for "children," in two clauses of his will in construing a third clause, where there is a doubt as to the meaning of the word "issue," it would be construed as meaning "children." In re Duckett's Estate, 68 Atl. 880, 882, 214 Pa. 362.

Testator gave the residue of his estate to his daughter during her natural life, "and to her issue but should she die without issue then I direct" that the estate of which she shall die possessed shall be divided among the children of my son. Held, that the word "issue" meant "children." In re Nice's Estate, 75 Atl. 1025, 1028, 227 Pa. 75.

If it is apparent from the reading of a will that the testator has used the words "heirs," "issue," and "children" interchangeably or synonymously, the court is warranted in construing them in like manner so as to carry out the testator's intention. Stisser v. Stisser, 85 N. E. 240, 241, 235 Ill. 207 (citing Gannon v. Peterson, 62 N. E. 210, 193 Ill. 327, 55 L. R. A. 701; Butler v. Huestis, 68 Ill. 594, 18 Am. Rep. 589; Leiter v. Shepard, 85 Ill. 242).

A will directed the trustees to pay over the annual income of a part of the residue to his daughter H. for life, and "upon her decease leaving issue, my said trustees shall appropriate so much of such annual income as shall be necessary for the support and education of her children" until they become of age, and then pay over the principal to the children, and further provided that, if the daughter die leaving no issue, the trustees should pay over the funds equally among her heirs at law, and the subsequent provision gave to the trustees a sixth part of the residue to pay over the net income thereof to daughter M. during her life, and at her "decease leaving issue" then under age the trustees should appropriate so much thereof as was necessary for the support and education of the children until they arrived at age, and pay over the principal "to and among said issue, as they respectively arrive at that age in equal portions," and that if the daughter "shall de cease without issue" the trustees should pay over the income to the daughter's husband for life, and the principal should be divided among her heirs at law at his de cease. Held, that the word "issue," in the devise to daughter M., meant "children." Silsbee v. Silsbee, 97 N. E. 758, 759, 211 Mass. 105.

Same—In gift to one for life with remainder to issue

Where testatrix bequeathed the income of a trust fund to her son for life, the remainder on his death to be transferred to his issue in the proportion they would have received had he died intestate, and if he died, without issue the remainder to go to other persons named, the word "issue" means descendants, and not children only. Metropolitan Trust Co. v. Rankin, 184 N. Y. Supp. 462, 463, 74 Misc. Rep. 542.

A testator devised land to his nephew during his natural life, and at his death to his surviving issue. He also provided that, if his nephew died without surviving issue, "the land herein bequeathed to his children" should be disposed of as directed. Held that, although "surviving issue" without qualification ordinarily means heirs of the body, the subsequent provision of the will showed that the testator meant surviving children, and hence that the issue of a child of the nephew who died before the nephew would take no interest in the land. Guy v. Osborne, 74 S. E. 617, 618, 91 S. C. 291.

Same—In expression leaving issue, etc.

Testator devised his residuary estate in trust for his wife for life, and directed that at her death the same should be divided equally, share and share alike, between his three children, "or such of them as shall survive my said wife, but if any of my said children shall have died, leaving issue, such issue shall take the share the parent would have taken if living." A child died after the death of the testator and before the wife, leaving children and children of a deceased child. Held, that the word "issue" was equivalent to "children," and the grandchildren of the deceased child of the testator took nothing. Coyle v. Coyle, 68 Atl. 224, 225, 73 N. J. Eq. 528.

Where a testator in one paragraph devised certain real estate to his son, to have and to hold the same to him for life, and, in case he should die leaving lawful male issue, then to such male issue his or their heirs and assigns forever, and in another paragraph directed his executors to pay the legacies to his children within three years and to release all claims and demands which he had against any of his children, the word "issue" was used in its legal sense as synonymous with "descendant," and not as synonymous with "children," and therefore included children of a deceased child of the devisee.

Wilson v. Wilson, 78 N. Y. Supp. 408, 409, 76 App. Div. 232.

A testatrix left all her real property to her husband for life, or until his remarriage, and, upon his death or remarriage, she devised it to her brothers "in fee simple and share alike," with the qualification that if either brother should die before testatrix, or before the death or remarriage of her husband, "not leaving lawful issue him surviving, then the survivor of them shall have and take the share of the said real and personal estate which the deceased if living would have taken, but if the deceased shall leave lawful issue, then I give and devise and bequeath to such issue their parent's share in said real and personal estate." The will further directed that the executor take charge of her estate during the life, or until the remarriage, of her husband, pay the rents and income to her husband, and, after the death or remarriage of her husband, to deliver said real estate to her brothers "or to such other person or persons as shall be entitled to same" under the will. Held, that "issue," as used in the will, meant descendants, and was not limited to the children of the deceased brothers, and therefore, where one of the brothers died before the death or remarriage of the husband, leaving a bankrupt child surviving, and such child conveyed his interest in the real property to his mother, and died before the death or remarriage of the husband, the conveyance was void, as his interest vested in his children under the will on the death of the bankrupt. Riker v. Gwynne, 124 N. Y. Supp. 124, 125, 139 App. Div. 423.

Sess. Acts 1815-16, p. 32, abolished estates tail, and Rev. St. 1825, p. 216, and Rev. St. 1899, § 4592, provide that in cases where by the common law or the statute law of England any person might become seised in fee tail of any lands, etc., he shall have only a life estate, and the remainder in fee simple shall pass to the person next in line, and Rev. St. 1899, § 4593, provides that where a remainder in lands shall be limited to take effect on the death of any person without heirs or without issue, or, on failure of issue, the word "heirs" or "issue" shall be construed to mean heirs or issue living at the death of the person named as ancestor. Testator devised lands to his two sons, and to their heirs and assigns forever, and provided that the same, should not be sold before the younger of the two should become of lawful age, and that, should either of them die without issue, the survivor, his heirs and assigns, should take the part bequeathed to the son so dying, and that, in the event both should die without issue, then testator's surviving heirs should take. Held, that, by the use of the word "heirs" in connection with the word "issue," testator created what would have been at common law or by the statute de bonis an estate tail, or, Rev. St.

1899, § 4598, not being applicable to an executory devise, even if the estate was a fee simple in the first instance, it was cut down to a fee tail by the clause declaring that in case of the death of both sons without leaving issue the estate was to revert to the heirs of testator—the failure of issue referred to being an indefinite failure of issue—and hence, under section 4592, the two sons took a life estate, with remainder in fee to their children. Gannon v. Pack, 83 S. W. 453, 457, 183 Mo. 265.

Children of living parent

The word "issue" is a word of broader import than the word "descendant" and may include the children of a living parent, as well as the children or descendants of one who is dead. But, in an accurate sense, one cannot have a living ancestor, nor can a living person, although he may have children, have descendants. Parrish v. Mills (Tex.) 102 S. W. 184, 188 (quoting and adopting definition in Hillen v. Iselin, 39 N. E. 368, 144 N. Y. 374).

"Issue," as used in Rev. St. § 4200, providing that no estate in lands shall be granted by deed or will to any person but such as are in being at the time of making such deed or will, and all estates given in tail shall be and remain an absolute estate in fee simple to the issue of the first donor in tail," is limited by the word "immediate" to the children of a person in being. Dunagan v. Kline, 90 N. E. 938, 940, 81 Ohio St. 371 (citing Turley v. Turley, 11 Ohio St. 173).

A deed conveyed property in trust for the use of F. for life, and, after her death, in trust to her lawful issue living at the time of her death, taking per stirpes, and not per capita, as tenants in common. Held that, while the word "issue" was a broader term than "children" or "grandchildren" and generally included all lineal descendants, its meaning might be restricted by other words and the limitation in the deed to those taking per stirpes confined those taking at death to the immediate issue and the children of such of them who were deceased, so that the children of living children at F.'s death took nothing. Vale Royal Mfg. Co. v. Santee River Cypress Lumber Co., 65 S. E. 955, 956, 84 S. C. 81.

As descendants

See Descendant.

Grandchildren

The word "issue," in its ordinary legal meaning embraces grandchildren and remoter descendants, as well as children. When used in a will, a more restricted meaning may be attributed to it, if, from the terms of the testamentary disposition, it appears that the testator used the word in a particular meaning less general than the ordinary meaning. Coyle v. Coyle, 68 Atl. 224, 73 N. J. Eq. 528.

"The word 'issue,' in its ordinary legal meaning, embraces grandchildren and remoter descendants, as well as children. When used in deeds, it has been adjudged to have a technical sense to that effect. But when used in a will a more restricted meaning may be attributed if, from the terms of the testamentary disposition, it clearly appears that the testator used the word in a particular meaning less general than its ordinary meaning." Where, by his will, a testator gave one half of his residuary estate to trustees for the use of his wife for life, and upon her death to divide the same among his lawful issue or to trustees for their use respectively, as his wife should direct by any will duly executed, in default of which he gave the same to the persons then entitled to the other half of his residuary estate, to be distributed in the same proportions and held upon the same trusts and with like powers as were mentioned in another clause of his will, the phrase "lawful issue" includes testator's grandchildren, although children of a living child. Inglis v. McCook, 59 Atl. 630, 635, 68 N. J. Eq. 27 (quoting Weehawken Ferry Co. v. Sisson, 17 N. J. Eq. 475; Emans v. Emans, 3 N. J. Law, 968; Den ex dem. Van Middlesworth v. Schenck, 8 N. J. Law, 89; Ballentine v. De Camp, 39 N. J. Eq. 87).

"As used in a devise of a life estate to the lawful 'issue' of testator's daughter Eliza, if more than one, share and share alike, the word 'issue' was not synonymous with children, but included grandchildren as well." In re Tenney, 93 N. Y. Supp. 811, 816, 104 App. Div. 290 (quoting and adopting the definition in Soper v. Brown, 32 N. E. 768, 186 N. Y. 244, 32 Am. St. Rep. 731).

Devise of a remainder to a daughter and the "issue" of her body living at her death extends to the daughter of such devisee and the children of a deceased daughter of such devisee, the grandchildren of testator. Dixon v. Pendleton, 72 S. E. 501, 502, 90 S. C. 8.

Testator directed that after the termination of a life estate his property should be divided among his 11 children and four named grandchildren, children of a deceased child, and that, if either of the children died, leaving issue, the portion given to such child or children should be equally divided between their "issue." Held that there being nothing in the will to indicate a contrary intention, the word "issue" would be given its ordinary meaning to include children and grandchildren. Security Trust Co. v. Lovett, 79 Atl. 616, 618, 78 N. J. Eq. 445.

Testator directed his executors to hold his real estate until a designated date and then divide it into shares, and he gave one share to his son, and provided that it was his purpose to distribute his property equally between his children and to the heirs of those of his children who were dead. By a codicil he declared that the devise to the son should be for his sole use, independent of his wife, and that on his death without issue living at his death the devise should go to persons designated. Held, that the word "issue" in the codicil included grandchildren. Love v. Walker, 115 Pac. 296, 302, 59 Or. 95.

In the second clause to his will, testator made a bequest to children of a deceased sister and the issue then living of any deceased child; the issue of such deceased child to take by representation the share that the parent would have taken if living. By the fourth and seventh clauses the word "issue" was used in the same connection. By the sixth clause testator created a trust in favor of a niece, and provided that on her death the fund should be transferred to her issue, and in default of issue to her next of kin. Held, that in view of the use of the word "issue" in other clauses, and in the absence of evidence that the niece's grandchildren were alive when the will was made, or of any facts from which an intent to benefit her grandchildren at the expense of her children could be inferred, the word "issue" would be construed to include only her children. In re Tenney, 93 N. Y. Supp. 811, 814, 104 App. Div. 290.

As heirs at law

Heirs as including, see Heirs.

The words "children" and "issue" in a deed will not be read as meaning "heirs," where not to do so will carry into effect the lawful intention of a grantor that the grantee take only a life estate, and his children living at his death the remainder; while to do so would defeat such intention. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 122 S. W. 15, 17, 103 Tex. 15.

Where a will, after a devise to two persons, provides that, in case either should die leaving no heirs, the other shall be entitled to all, and the will as a whole shows a fixed purpose to devolve the entire estate upon these two devisees to the exclusion of all other direct descendants of the testatrix, the word "heirs" in the limitation over will be construed as meaning "issue" or direct descendants of the persons named; the words "heirs" and "issue" being convertible when such a construction is necessary to carry out the paramount intent of the testatrix. Brown v. Tuschoff, 138 S. W. 497, 499, 235 Mo. 449.

As heirs of the body

Heirs of the body as including, see Heirs of the Body.

"Issue," as used in a will, prima facie means heirs of the body. Beckley v. Riegert, 61 Atl. 641, 642, 212 Pa. 91; Stayman v. Paxson, 70 Atl. 803, 221 Pa. 446; Graham v. Abbott, 57 Atl. 178, 179, 208 Pa. 68 (citing Wistar v. Scott, 105 Pa. 200, 51 Am. Rep. 197).

The words "their issue" in a devise mean the same as the heirs of "the body." Wright v. Gaskill, 72 Atl. 108, 109, 74 N. J. Eq. 742.

The primary meaning of the word "issue" in a will is heirs of the body, and "dying without issue," standing alone, means an indefinite failure of issue; but this general rule does not apply where the devise over of land to take effect is expressly or impliedly for a period of a life or lives in being and 21 years thereafter. Todd v. Armstrong, 62 Atl. 1114, 1115, 213 Pa. 570 (citing Beckley v. Riegert, 61 Atl. 641, 212 Pa. 91).

The word "issue" is one of limitation and means lineal descendants indefinitely; hence heirs of the body. Lamb v. Medsker, 74 N. E. 1012, 1013, 35 Ind. App. 662 (citing 8 Jarm. Wills, 200).

The term "issue" in its primary and more usual meaning means an indefinite succession of lineal descendants who are to take by inheritance, and hence heirs of the body. Harrel v. Hagan, 60 S. E. 909, 911, 147 N. C. 111, 125 Am. St. Rep. 539.

The words "heirs of the body" and "issue" in a will are generally equivalent, and the word "issue" is one of limitation, and not less extensive in its import than the words "heirs of the body." Rembert v. Vetoe, 71 S. E. 959, 965, 89 S. C. 198.

Illegitimate child

"Issue," in a will bequeathing property to the issue of the testator's daughter, means legitimate issue. Kemper v. Fort, 67 Atl. 991, 995, 219 Pa. 85, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 820, 123 Am. St. Rep. 623, 12 Ann. Cas. 1022.

"The decisions are unanimous that, in the absence of statutory provisions modifying the common law with respect to illegitimate children, the words 'issue,' 'child,' or 'children,' found in a will or statute, whether qualified by the word 'lawful' or not, are to be construed as only those who are legitimate, and, if others are intended, this must be deduced from the language employed, without resort to extrinsic facts. This is on the ground that at the common law a bastard child had no inheritance blood, was kin to no one, could have no ancestor, nor be an heir, and could have no heirs, save those of his own body. But this rule has been greatly modified by the enactment of statutes ameliorating his condition, and in different degrees conferring the rights of legitimate children. The bastard was nullius filius mainly in the matter of inheritance. In many other respects his status was the same as others. He could not marry within the levitical degrees, and was held to be within the act requiring the consent thereto of parent or guardian. His settlement was that of his mother." In a will providing for the distribution of an income to the lawful issue of testator's children, the words "lawful issue" mean children, and include only the lawful children of testator's children, and an illegitimate child would not share in the income, although recognized by its father. Brisbin v. Huntington, 103 N. W. 144, 147, 128 Iowa, 166, 5 Ann. Cas. 931.

A will, dated and which took effect in 1872, gave property in trust for the testator's son, with remainder to his "lawful issue." The son was then married and had children. After the death of his then wife, he married the mother of certain illegitimate children. Laws 1895, c. 531, providing that illegitimate children whose parents had theretofore intermarried or should thereafter intermarry should thereby become legitimized. Held, that the illegitimate children were not entitled to share in the remainder, since, while all children, whether legitimate or not, are the "issue," of their parents, that word, when qualified by the adjective "lawful," which is the antithesis of unlawful or illegitimate, is ordinarily understood to mean those only begotten and born in lawful wedlock, and it cannot be assumed that the testator considered the contingencies of the birth of illegitimate children, the enactment of a statute by which they might be legitimized, and the marriage of their parents. Central Trust Co. of New York v. Skillin, 138 N. Y. Supp. 884, 886, 154 App. Div. 227.

As issue living at death of ancestor

Though in many cases it has been held that "death without issue" may mean death without issue born, such construction has been excluded except when clearly intended by Rev. St. 1898, § 2046, which provides that "when a remainder shall be limited to take effect on the death of any person without heirs, or heirs of his body, or without issue, the words 'heirs' or 'issue' shall be construed to mean heirs or issue living at the death of the person named as ancestor." Korn v. Friz, 107 N. W. 659, 662, 128 Wis. 428.

The word "issue" is defined by Real Property Law (Laws 1896, c. 547) § 38, providing that where a remainder shall be limited to take effect on the death of any person without heirs, or heirs of his body, or without issue, the words "heirs" or "issue" shall be construed to mean heirs or issue living at the death of the person named as ancestor. Schlereth v. Schlereth, 66 N. E. 130, 132, 173 N. Y. 444, 93 Am. St. Rep. 616.

As taking per capita

Under a gift to "issue," using the word without qualification, the ancestor's children and issue of such children, though the parent is living, as well as issue of deceased children, take in equal shares per capita and not per stirpes, as primary objects of the disposition. Schmidt v. Jewett, 88 N. E. 1110, 1111, 195 N. Y. 486.

"It is settled that under a gift to 'issue,' where the word is used without any terms in the context to qualify its meaning, the children of the ancestor and the issue of such children, although the parent is living, as well as the issue of deceased children, take in equal shares, per capita and not per stirpes, as primary objects of the disposition. It might well be doubted whether a testator actually contemplated that the children of a living parent would take an equal interest with the parent under the word 'issue,' or that the issue of a deceased child should not take by representation the share of its parent. Lord Loughborough referred to this in Freeman v. Parsley, 3 Ves. 421, and, while he held that all were entitled equally per capita, said that he expected that it was contrary to the intention, and regretted that there was no medium between the total exclusion of the grandchildren and admitting them to share with their parents." Phelps v. Cameron, 96 N. Y. Supp. 1014, 1016, 109 App. Div. 798 (quoting Soper v. Brown, 32 N. E. 768, 136 N. Y. 244, 250, 32 Am. St. Rep. 731).

While the word "issue" in a strictly technical meaning is equivalent to the word "descendants," and when used in a will, in the absence of other words or extrinsic circumstances requiring a different meaning, entitles remaindermen to take per capita and not per stirpes, it will not be given that meaning where the language of the will shows a different intention, and hence where a will provided for a per capita taking in equal portions by all living grandchildren, "including the issue of any grandchild or grandchildren then deceased leaving issue then alive who shall take the same share together, if more than one, which such deceased parent or parents would have taken if living," thus clearly showing the testator's intention to apply the term only to descendants of a particular class at a particular time and to treat the child or children of each grandchild as one class, the remainder will be equally divided among the different classes. Kernochan v. Whitney, 109 N. Y. Supp. 721, 722, 125 App. Div. 371.

Testator gave to his executors in trust the residue of his estate, one-third of the income to be paid to his wife for life, and the remaining two-thirds to his three children during their lives, and, after the death of his wife and his children, the executors were to hold the estate in trust for the use of the "lawful issue of my said children," with a provision that, if there should be no "lawful issue," then the same to be divided between his heirs. The testator had used the word "issue" in two other clauses of his will as the equivalent of "children." On the death of the wife and the three children, there survived three children of one of the sons, and nine children of a daughter. Held, that the word "issue" should be construed as meaning "children," and that the estate should be divided per capita among the grandchildren. In re Duckett's Estate, 63 Atl. 830, 832, 214 Pa. 362.

A will of one who died survived by a widow and one daughter, to whom 11 children were born, gave one-third of a residue of the estate in trust for the widow's life, one-third in trust for the daughter's life, and one-third in trust for the support of the grandchildren, and provided that at the widow's death the trust income should be divided between the daughter and the grandchildren, and that at the daughter's death the estate should "then" go to the grandchildren "and to the issue" of any grandchild who might have died leaving issue, per stirpes, share and share alike. The widow predeceased a grandchild, who died without issue, but leaving a will, and the daughter still lives. Held, that the deceased grandchild took a vested remainder in one-eleventh of the estate, and not jointly with the other grandchildren, nor as a member of a class; the gift to the "issue" of grandchildren being substitutional, and not original, "and" in the quoted phrase being subject to construction as meaning "or," if necessary. Staples v. Mead, 137 N. Y. Supp. 847, 849, 152 App. Div. 745.

As within rule in Shelley's Case

Under a deed to F. in trust, to hold for the use of L., A., and E. in fee, and to the survivors of them, "provided, however, that if the said A. or E. shall die leaving issue, then to the use of such surviving issue who shall take the same per stirpes and not per capita," the word "issue" includes grandchildren of A. and E. whose parents predecease them, so that under the rule in Shelley's Case the fee would not, on the death of L., vest absolutely in A. and E.; but on the death of either the use shifts to her issue. Campbell v. Cronly, 64 S. E. 213, 217, 150 N. C. 457.

Testator devised and bequeathed to his son M. and his heirs, in trust for the use of his son E. for life, certain described lands, and after the death of E., to his issue forever, and in case of his death without "issue," testator devised the lands to E.'s surviving brothers and their heirs, and in case of their death before him, and leaving children, to such issue and their heirs. Held, that the word "issue" was used as a correlative term for "children," and was not sufficient to indicate a purpose to create an estate of inheritance in E., and hence the latter took a life estate in the lands, remainder to his children in fee, and not a fee under the rule in Shelley's Case. Faison v. Odum, 56 S. E. 793, 794, 144 N. C. 107 (citing Brinton v. Martin, 47 Atl. 841, 197 Pa. 618; Hauser v. Craft, 46 S. E. 756, 134 N. C. 329; Starnes v. Hill, 16 S. E. 1011, 112 N. C. 1, 22 L. R. A. 598; Robins v. Keel, 20 S. E. 209, 115 N. C. 68).

As word of purchase or limitation

"The word 'issue' may be a word either of purchase or limitation, and will be construed the one or the other as may be necessary to effectuate the intent with which it appears to have been used in the instrument where it is employed." In re Tenney, 93 N. Y. Supp. 811, 818, 104 App. Div. 290 (quoting and adopting the definition in Drake v. Drake, 82 N. E. 114, 184 N. Y. 220, 17 L. R. A. 664).

"Issue" is primarily a word of limitation, and will not be construed as a word of purchase, unless other language of the will requires it to carry out testator's manifest intent. Arnold v. Muhlenberg College, 76 Atl. 80, 81, 227 Pa. 321.

The primary and usual meaning of the term "issue," when used as a word of purchase, is descendants of every degree, and is not equivalent to "immediate issue," which, by the settled construction of the statute against perpetuities, means only children. Bartlett v. Sears, 70 Atl. 33, 35, 81 Conn. 34.

The word "issue," as a word of purchase, in the absence of any indication of a contrary intention, includes descendants generally; but where it is apparent, from extrinsic circumstances or the provisions of the will, that testator intended to use the word in the sense of "children," it will be so limited. Clark v. Kittenplan, 118 N. Y. Supp. 404, 408, 63 Misc. Rep. 122.

"The word 'issue' in a deed or will, when used as a word of purchase, and where its meaning is not otherwise defined by the context, and there are no indications that it was used in any other than its legal sense, comprehends all persons in the line of descent from the ancestor, and has the same meaning as 'descendants.' While it embraces the children of the ancestor, it is because they are descendants in common with all other persons who can trace direct descent from a common source. It is common learning that this has been the accepted meaning of the word 'issue' in that large class of limitations to 'issue' of the first taker, accompanied with a gift over in default of 'issue.'" In re Tenney, 93 N. Y. Supp. 811, 818, 104 App. Div. 290 (quoting and adopting the definition in Soper v. Brown, 32 N. E. 768, 136 N. Y. 244, 32 Am. St. Rep. 731).

Where a deed in the granting clause conveys to A. "for her sole and separate use during her life and at her death to her issue," and the habendum clause reads "to A. and her issue," the word "issue" is one of limitation, and not of purchase, and hence does not convey a fee to A. Arledge v. Arledge, 68 S. E. 549, 550, 86 S. C. 237.

Under a deed to the grantee and "his lawful issue and their lawful issue forever," the grantee took a fee conditional estate; the word "issue" being one of limitation, and not of purchase. Williams v. Gause, 65 S. E. 241, 242, 83 S. C. 265.

Testator devised all her property to L. and her four children named in trust for the sole benefit "of the lawful issue" of L.'s children named, "without power to sell"; the said L. and her children "having a life interest, share and share alike, in the annual products of said farm." The will provided that "when the youngest devisee of the real estate shall attain the age of 21 or marry there shall be a division of said real estate." At the time of testator's death two of L.'s children were dead; one dying unmarried and without issue, and the other leaving four children. The other two children of L. were living; neither of them being married. Held that the word "issue" is either a word of purchase or of limitation, and its use in one sense excludes the other; that it was used in the will as a word of purchase; that the children named took life interests and their children took in fee on testator's death; and that grandchildren of the children named took nothing under the will. Carolina Bond & Investment Co. v. Caldwell, 68 S. E. 640, 641, 86 S. C. 331.

Testator gave his estate to trustees to invest the same in real estate and pay the income to his two daughters and granddaughter until they respectively reached the age of 30, and provided that, as each reached that age, she could demand and receive a third of the estate as her distributive share, and, if either died without issue and before receiving her distributive share, her share should go to the survivors. By a codicil he provided that lapsed legacies should revert to the estate. Held, that the provision for a devise over, in the event of the death of a beneficiary without issue and before receiving her distributive share, raised a devise by implication in favor of the children of the granddaughter dying before attaining the age of 30; the word "issue" in the devise over being a word of purchase and implying, a devise to the issue, who thereby took as purchasers under the will. In re Blake's Estate, 108 Pac. 287, 297, 157 Cal. 448.

ISSUE (In Practice)

See Feigned Issue; General Issue; Matter in Issue; Put in Issue.

Any issue in the case, see Any.

"The term 'issue' is collective, and, in a case where there was several issues, it is sufficient merely to swear the jury to try the issue." First Nat. Bank of New Martinsville v. Lowther-Kaufman Oil & Coal Co., 66 S. E. 713, 717, 66 W. Va. 505, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 511 (citing 24 Cyc. 371; White v. Clay, 7 Leigh [34 Va.] 68; Mackey v. Fugua, 3 Call [7 Va.] 19; Hatcher v. Fowler, 1 Bibb. [4 Ky.] 837; Bate v. Lewis, 1 J. J. Marsh. [24 Ky.] 816; Pointer v. Rust, 7 Humph. [26 Tenn.] 532).

"An 'issue' is defined as a single, certain, and material point arising out of the allegations or pleadings of the parties, which would generally be made up by an affirmative or negative. The object of pleadings is to bring out this 'issue' between the parties, and to this end certainty is one of the most common requirements." Schwindt v. Lane Poeter Lumber Co., 107 Pac. 818, 819, 40 Mont. 537, 135 Am. St. Rep. 639.

The office of pleading is the formation of an "issue," which is a specific point or matter affirmed on one side and denied on the other, and the Code of Civil Practice accomplishes this purpose by requiring that pleadings shall set forth the facts in a plain and concise manner. National Stamping & Electric Works v. Wicks, 108 S. W. 598, 129 Mo. App. 382.

The pleadings, and not the evidence, must be looked to in determining the issues made; an "issue" being a question of fact or law raised by the pleadings. Provident Nat. Bank v. Webb (Tex.) 128 S. W. 426, 428.

It is proper for the court to include in an interlocutory judgment adjudging a divorce a determination as to the disposition of the homestead; such question having been an "issue in the cause," within the meaning of such words as used in Civ. Code, § 147, requiring the court in rendering a decree of divorce to make disposition of the homestead; section 146, providing that if a homestead has been selected from the property of either spouse it shall on divorce be assigned to the former owner; and section 131, providing that all issues shall be tried and determined at the time when the court determines whether the divorce shall be granted. John v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 90 Pac. 53, 5 Cal. App. 262.

In an action on a judgment, an answer denying any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the existence of the judgment in question does not make an "issue," for, the judgment being a public record and presumably within defendants' knowledge, they should have made an investigation, and if it did not exist they should have denied in positive terms the existence thereof. Gravitt v. Mountz (Ky.) 87 S. W. 304.

Cause synonymous

Where "issue" and "cause," as used in the definition of perjury as false swearing in a matter material to the issue or cause in question, are synonymous, as in a divorce action based upon a single specific act of adultery, evidence could not be material on the "cause" and not on the "issue." People v. Teal, 89 N. E. 1086, 1089, 196 N. Y. 372, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 120, 17 Ann. Cas. 1175.

As matter in dispute

The issues in a cause are the points in dispute between the parties on which they put their cause to trial, and the matter in issue is that matter on which plaintiff proceeds by his action, and which defendant controverts by his pleading. Abner T. Bowen v. W. O. Eaton & Co., 89 N. E. 961, 964, 46 Ind. App. 65.

ISSUE AT LAW

The words "issue at law," as used in the act to quiet title to real estate, providing that upon the application of either party an issue at law shall be directed to try the validity of the claim of title or to settle the facts, mean such an issue as had been always known and employed in the administration of equity jurisprudence. The only additional force to be given to the verdict is that so long as it is permitted to stand the Court of Chancery is bound by it. A defendant in a suit to quiet title is not entitled, as a constitutional right, to a trial by jury in an action at law, as distinguished from a trial of an "issue at law" directed by the Court of Chancery. Brady v. Carteret Realty Co., 64 Atl. 1078, 1079, 70 N. J. Eq. 748, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 866, 118 Am. St. Rep. 778.

ISSUE OF FACT

The terms "issue of fact" in Rev. Codes, § 6793, defining a new trial as a re-examination of an issue of fact after a trial, when considered in connection with section 6723, refers only to an issue arising on formal pleadings, and though, under section 7712, the provisions as to new trials apply to probate proceedings, a motion for new trial in such proceedings does not lie in the absence of formal pleadings raising an issue of fact. In re Antonelli's Estate, 111 Pac. 1033, 1034, 42 Mont. 219.

Under Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. of Okl. 1903, an "issue of fact" arises where there is a material allegation in the petition controverted by the answer, or where there is new matter in the answer controverted by the reply, or where there is new matter in the reply which is considered as controverted by the defendant without further pleading. Where the action is for the recovery of a money judgment on notes and an issue is joined as to the amount due, the trial must be had before a jury, as an "issue of fact" is involved. Sherman v. Randolph, 74 Pac. 102, 103, 13 Okl. 224.

It is expressly provided by B. & C. Comp. § 1375, that an "issue of fact" arises (1) upon a plea of not guilty, or (2) upon a plea of former conviction or acquittal of the same crime and, in the absence of a plea or opportunity to plead, a conviction cannot stand. State v. Walton, 91 Pac. 490, 491, 50 Or. 142, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 811.

Municipal Court Act (Laws 1902, c. 580) § 332, subd. 2, provides that where, after trial of an issue of fact raised by answer, plaintiff recovers 400 or over, he shall have $30 as costs. Subdivision 3 declares that where, upon nonappearance of defendant or failure to answer, plaintiff recovers $400 or over, he shall have $15 as costs. Held, that where a verified complaint and answer were served, and the issue adjourned for trial, and defendant defaulted, and plaintiff had judgment for over $400, he was entitled to $30 costs; there being a trial of an "issue of fact raised by appearance and answer" of defendant, within subdivision 2. Pape v. Tomoor, 123 N. Y. Supp. 924, 925.

An "issue of fact" arises when an allegation of one party is actually or impliedly denied by the other, but the issue may sometimes relate to a fact capable of being resolved into two or more essential elements, and a failure to prove either of which will leave the issue unproven, in which case a special finding on any single essential element inconsistent with a general verdict will be as fatal as a special verdict on the broader issue. Plyler v. Pacific Portland Cement Co., 92 Pac. 56, 60, 152 Cal. 125.

ISSUE OF LAW

"A demurrer to a complaint interposes an 'issue of law' the determination of which constitutes a 'trial by court.'" State v. Richardson, 85 Pac. 225, 228, 48 Or. 309, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 362.

It is expressly provided by B. & C. Comp. § 1376, that an "issue of law" arises upon a demurrer to the indictment. State v. Walton, 91 Pac. 490, 491, 50 Or. 142, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 811.

ISSUES (Of Property)

Where, under a will, corporate stock was placed in trust, "the dividends, issues, and profits thereof" to be paid to the beneficiaries, the words "dividends, issues, and profits" were interchangeable with income, and referred to the earnings paid over by the officers of the corporation in the form of dividends to the trustees. In re Stevens et al 95 N. Y. Supp. 297, 305, 46 Misc. Rep. 623.

IT

IT BEING UNDERSTOOD

See Being Understood.

IT WAS SO UNDERSTOOD

In detinue for a mule claimed by plaintiff under a mortgage, plaintiff testified that he sold the mule to the mortgagor, who had had possession prior to the sale and execution of the mortgage, and that the mule was his up to the time that the mortgage was executed, and that it was "so understood." Held, that it was not error to refuse to exclude the expression "it was so understood," since, as used, it should be taken as synonymous with "agreement" and the statement of a fact, and not a condition. Holman v. Clark, 41 South. 765, 767, 148 Ala. 286.

ITEM

See Made Out in Items; Proper Cash Item.

All items, see All.

An "item" means an article, an entry; anything which can form part of a detail; the particulars of an account. United States v. Young, 128 Fed. 111, 114.

ITEMS OF ACCOUNT

Bill of particulars synonymous, see Bill of Particulars.

ITEMIZE

To itemize an account, within Civ. Code 1902, § 806, requiring itemization of all claims against counties, means merely to state in detail the particulars of the claim so that the account may be examined and its correctness tested. State ex rel. People's Bank of Greenville v. Goodwin, 62 S. E. 1100, 1105, 81 S. C. 419.

An estimate of the cost under a paving resolution as follows: "Granite concrete combined curb and gutter on cinders, 7,126 lineal feet at 70 cents, $4,988.20; paving with asphalt on six inches of Portland cement concrete swept with natural hydraulic cement, 11,349 square yards at $2.50, $28,372.50; adjustment of sewers, catch-basins and man-holes, $1,139.30; total, $34,500.00"—is sufficiently "itemized" under Local Improvement Act, § 7 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 392), providing that, when the board of local improvements shall originate an improvement to be paid for by special assessment, it shall adopt a resolution describing the improvement, and shall cause an estimate of the cost thereof to be made in writing by the engineer of the board, "which shall be 'itemized' to the satisfaction of said board." Hulbert v. City of Chicago, 72 N. E. 1097, 1098, 213 Ill. 452.

Where, in an action by a bank on an account, the petition contained a specific statement of the account, consisting of checks for money drawn and deposits, a balance being stated as the sum due plaintiff, the petition was in itself a sufficiently itemized "statement of account," as provided by Rev. St. 1899, § 630, and was not objectionable for failure to have attached thereto an itemized statement thereof. Citizens' Bank of Laredo v. Lowder, 125 S. W. 1180, 141 Mo. App. 603.

ITINERANCY—ITINERANT

"Itinerancy," in the doctrines of the Methodist Church, means that no preacher having charge of a congregation shall remain at any one place longer than a brief period, ranging at different times from three months to three years. People ex rel. Griffin v. Steele (N. Y.) 2 Barb. 397, 407.

ITINERANT DEALER

Agents, who traveled through the country with teams, selling machines in regularly established places of business, and by means of such teams going through the country were "itinerant dealers." Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Brickell, 199 Fed. 654, 656.

ITINERANT OPTICIAN

As merchant, see Merchant.

ITINERANT PHYSICIAN

Under Code, § 2579, defining a "physician" as one who publicly professes to be a physician and assumes the duties, or who makes a practice of prescribing and furnishing medicine for the sick, or who publicly professes to cure diseases, and section 2580, providing a penalty for the practice of medicine without having obtained a certificate, and section 2881, defining an "itinerant physician" as a physician practicing medicine or professing to heal diseases, "by any medicine, appliance, or method," who goes from place to place and provides for a license for so doing, a nonresident who professed to cure diseases by dieting his patients, prescribing exercises, and furnishing them with glasses, and who went from place to place and by advertisement solicited persons to meet him at other places than his residence, and who for a money consideration attempted while so practicing to cure diseases, is an "itinerant physician"; the term any "medicine, appliance or method" not meaning a medicine or something administered as a medicine merely, but covering any or every kind of public professions to cure by the use of any method or device. State v. Edmunds, 101 N. W. 481, 483, 127 Iowa, 338.

ITINERANT TRADER

An "itinerant trader" is a person who actually travels or passes from place to place for the purpose of trading by sample or otherwise. Smith v. Whiddon, 75 S. E. 635, 138 Ga. 471.

ITINERANT VENDOR

See, also, Hawker.

Pub. Acts 1897, p. 855, c. 152, making it an offense for an itinerant vender to expose goods for sale without having obtained a license, and defining an itinerant vender as a person who engages in a temporary business, either in one locality or in traveling, selling goods, etc., and who for such purpose hires or occupies any structure, does not include a transient sale by any person who engages in the sale solely as a single transaction, and does not forbid any transient sale, unless made by one of a class of wandering, intermittent traders. State v. Feingold, 59 Atl. 211, 212, 77 Conn. 326.

Laws 1905, p. 275, c. 114, § 3, requires a license from itinerant vendors, except as provided. Section 1 defines an itinerant vendor as a person engaged in either a temporary or transient business in the state in one locality, or by traveling from place to place selling merchandise, and also those who, for the purpose of carrying on their temporary or transient business, occupy a building, etc., for the sale of manufactured goods. Section 2 exempts commercial travelers or agents selling to merchants in the usual course of business. Held, that the act in effect imposes a tax upon nonresidents bringing merchandise into the state for the privilege of selling to a customer, and it is violative of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, providing that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Leonard v. Reed, 104 Pac. 410, 411, 46 Colo. 307, 133 Am. St. Rep. 77.

A soliciting agent taking orders for goods similar to samples carried by him, subject to the approval of his principal, a corporation which prepares the goods for delivery by him and keeps accounts with all customers, is not an "itinerant vendor," within a statute defining peddlers to include such vendors selling by sample, or by taking orders for immediate or further delivery. State v. Bristow, 109 N. W. 199, 200, 131 Iowa, 864.

Laws 1905, p. 275, c. 114, § 3, requires a license of a person engaged in the business of an itinerant vender, except as otherwise provided. Section 1 (page 274) defines "itinerant vender" to include any person who engages in either a temporary or transient business in the state, either in one locality or in traveling about the country selling manufactured goods or merchandise. Held, that the statute does not apply to those maintaining a permanent place of business in the state to dispose of their merchandise through agents soliciting orders therefor. Eaton v. People, 104 Pac. 407, 408, 46 Colo. 361.

Laws 1905, p. 222, prohibiting any itinerant vender or hawker of any drug, nostrum, etc., for the treatment of any disease or injury, to offer the same for sale without securing a license from the board of pharmacy, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 281, defining the term "itinerant vender" to include all persons who carry on the business described, by passing from house to house or by haranguing the people on public streets or in public places, or use the customary devices for attracting crowds, and therewith recommending their wares and offering them for sale. Held, that an information in the language of the statute charging that defendant, while being a traveling vender of a drug, offered to sell the same without securing a license, etc., was not demurrable, as alleging a mere conclusion of law concerning defendant's occupation; defendant being required to take notice that it was intended to charge that he was an "itinerant vender" as defined in the amendment. State v. Miller, 103 Pac. 519, 520, 54 Or. 381.

ITS

Where a railroad company was in possession of tracks and of the yard in which they were laid, and was engaged in switching cars on such tracks, the use of the possessive word "its," in an allegation that the company had or permitted a telegraph pole to be on the south side of its main switch track in its switch yard, does not necessarily indicate ownership in fee, as the possessive word "its" may as well designate a right by arrangement to use the track and switch yard as an absolute ownership thereof. Illinois Terminal R. Co. v. Thompson, 71 N. E. 828, 831, 210 Ill. 228.

J

J. P.

The letters "J. P.," following the name of a person affixed to the jurat of an affidavit, are sufficient to designate the official character of such person as a justice of the peace, and if the name is of one who is commissioned justice of the peace of the state it is immaterial that it does not appear from the face of the affidavit where the same was executed; until the contrary appears from the affidavit or otherwise the presumption would be that it was executed in the state and at such a place where such an officer would be authorized to administer such an oath. Abrams v. State, 48 S. E. 965, 968, 121 Ga. 170.

JACQUARD FIGURED GOODS

Silk goods woven on Jacquard looms, with broad and narrow stripes, the body between having a watered effect, are within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 391, 30 Stat. 187, for "Jacquard figured goods" of silk. United States v. Johnson & Faulkner, 139 Fed. 55, 56, 142 Fed. 1039, 71 C. C. A. 686.

In regard to a fabric of two colors, one of which is produced by threads introduced by the swivel process to form figures, and not extending across the cloth from selvage to selvage, held, that the swivel threads are not a part of the filling, and that the goods are not within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 391, 30 Stat. 187, for Jacquard figured silks containing two or more colors "in the filling." Wimpfheimer v. United States, 142 Fed. 849, 850; Id., 149 Fed. 1022, 79 C. C. A. 532.

JACTITATION

An action of "jactitation" is one to force the defendant to sue for the recovery of real property and to throw on him the burden of his assertion, and can be maintained only where defendant has slandered plaintiff's title. Bossier's Heirs v. Jackson, 38 South. 525, 526, 114 La. 707.

JAGGER

A "jagger" is a point of iron projecting from the end of an iron shaft and produced,

JAIL

A "jail" is a prison appertaining to a county or municipality in which are confined, for punishment, persons convicted of misdemeanors committed in the county or municipality. Denham v. Commonwealth, 84 S. W. 538, 539, 119 Ky. 508.

A building used as a jail, and in which a prisoner is confined for a violation of law, is within the protection of a statute punishing jail deliveries, though it is not situated in an incorporated town, and is not the property of the county. Irrington v. State, 78 S. W. 928, 929, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 559.

Revised St. §§ 1042, 5296, provide that when a poor convict, sentenced to imprisonment, or to pay a fine, or a fine and costs, has been confined in prison 30 days solely for the nonpayment of such fine or fine and costs, he may apply to take a poor debtor's oath, on which he shall be discharged, and the commissioner shall give to the keeper of the "jail" a certificate setting forth the facts. Held, that the word "jail" did not imply that no prisoner should be held in a penitentiary for nonpayment of a fine or a fine and costs, but was used merely to indicate the place of confinement, and hence a federal prisoner could be properly retained in the same institution where he had served his term of imprisonment for the nonpayment of a fine, or a fine and costs, assessed as a part of the sentence, until the fine was paid, or the prisoner applied to take the poor debtor's oath after the expiration of 30 days from the completion of his term. Haddox v. Richardson, 168 Fed. 635, 639, 94 C. C. A. 99.

One who is arrested under a warrant naming him as John Dow, his real name being unknown, is guilty of "jail breaking" if escaping from that custody; the arrest being warranted despite Bill of Right, § 15, and Code Cr. Proc. § 36. State v. King, 80 Pac. 606, 607, 71 Kan. 287.

JANNEY COUPLER

A "Janney coupler" is a car coupler of the Janney type. It had at the end of, and integral with, a rigid drawbar, a drawhead having a bifurcated jaw with a vertical rotating hook adapted to engage and interlock with a similar hook on another car and so form a coupled joint. In one sense, the Janney coupler was automatic, in that after it was properly set the brakeman did not, as in the old link and pin device, stand between the cars and guide at the dangerous instant of coupling. *Coup v. Berry jams are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263, 30 Stat. 171, as sweetmeats or preserved fruits, rather than as "jelly" under the same paragraph, or as "edible fruits prepared," under paragraph 262, 30 Stat. 171. Bogle v. United States, 175 Fed. 889, 891.

JENNY

When a female of the species ass is meant, the word "Jenny" is used. Teal v. State, 45 S. E. 964, 965, 119 Ga. 102.

"It is a matter of common knowledge and observation that among our people the word 'mare,' when used without a word of qualification, is understood to mean a female of the horse species. We apprehend that one rarely, if ever, hears the expression 'a mare horse' employed to describe a female of the species horse, but that the term universally used in this state for this purpose is the single word 'mare.' On the other hand, when a female of the species mule is intended, the expression used is 'a mare mule,' and, when a female of the species ass is intended, the word 'jenny' is used." McLamb & Co. v. Lambertson, 82 S. E. 107, 109, 4 Ga. App. 553 (quoting Teal v. State, 45 S. E. 964, 119 Ga. 104).

JEOPARDY

JEOPARDY (In Criminal Law)

See, also, Same Offense.

The Constitution does not undertake to give the word "jeopardy" a different definition from that in which it was ordinarily understood when placed in that instrument, and the Legislature could not change the meaning of the word as understood when the Constitution was adopted. Keller v. State (Tex.) 87 S. W. 669, 675, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 489.

Acts 31st Leg. c. 50, § 1, in force March 17, 1909, provides that if any person by promise of marriage shall seduce an unmarried female under 25, and if, after prosecution is begun, the parties marry before the defendant pleads to the indictment, and the defendant, within two years after said marriage, without his wife's fault, such as would entitle him to a divorce, shall abandon her, he shall be guilty of a penitentiary offense. Held, that the act does not provide for putting one twice in jeopardy for the same offense, within Const. art. 1, § 14. Thacker v. State, 186 S. W. 1095, 1096, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 294.

Acquittal in general

"Jeopardy" attached where accused was tried in a court of competent jurisdiction on a valid information for attempting to bribe a witness and was acquitted by a verdict. People v. Hill, 79 Pac. 845, 146 Cal. 145.

One is in "jeopardy" within the meaning of Const. U. S. Amend. 5, protecting all persons from being twice put in jeopardy for the same offense, when put on trial before a court of competent jurisdiction on an indictment sufficient to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been impaneled and sworn to try him, and a formal judgment of acquittal after a trial regularly conducted is rendered. Nordlinger v. United States, 24 App. D. C. 406, 409, 70 L. R. A. 227.

"A person has been in 'jeopardy' when he is regularly charged with a crime, before a tribunal properly organized and competent to try him"; certainly so after acquittal, and hence no appeal would lie by the government from a judgment of the court of first instance in the Philippine Islands, acquitting one accused of embezzlement. Kepner v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 797, 804, 195 U. S. 100, 49 L. Ed. 114, 1 Ann. Cas. 655.

Acquittal or conviction for distinct offense

Where defendants break into a house at night with intent to steal money, which they abstract from the householder's pocket, and on his awakening shoot him, the burglary and the shooting do not constitute a single transaction, out of which two offenses cannot be carved, so as to render a conviction of the shooting a bar to a prosecution for the burglary. Mann v. Commonwealth, 80 S. W. 438, 439, 118 Ky. 67, 111 Am. St. Rep. 289.

"A person is in legal 'jeopardy' when he is put upon trial before a court of competent jurisdiction upon indictment or information sufficient in form to sustain the conviction, and the jury has been charged with his deliverance; consequently an acquittal under an indictment charging burglary is not a bar to a prosecution for larceny where the conviction of larceny could not have been charged thereunder." Thomas v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 150 S. W. 376, 377 (quoting Williams v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky. 93).

An accused is not placed "twice in jeopardy for the same offense," within the meaning of Act July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. 692, c. 1369) § 5, because the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands, upon reversing the judgment below in a criminal case, on an appeal taken by the accused, convicted him, on the same facts, of a different offense, carrying an increased sentence. Nor does the treating as two different offenses assaults on two different individuals place the accused "twice in jeopardy for the same offense," even if these assaults occurred very near each other, in one continuing attempt to defy the law. Flemister v. United States, 28 Sup. Ct. 129, 207 U. S. 372, 52 L. Ed. 252.

A person is not placed twice in "jeopardy" within the meaning of Act July 1, 1902, c. 1369, 32 Stat. 691, for the government of the Philippine Islands, by a conviction of homicide in the Supreme Court of those islands, on an appeal taken by the accused from a judgment of the trial court, which, after acquitting of murder, convicted the accused of assault, which is included in the crime of murder charged in the complaint. Trono v. United States, 26 Sup. Ct. 121, 124, 199 U. S. 521, 50 L. Ed. 292, 4 Ann. Cas. 773.

The rule has frequently been enunciated that the test of once in "jeopardy" is whether if what is set out in the second indictment, had been proved under the first, there could have been a conviction, or whether the first indictment was such that the accused might legally be convicted under it by proof of the same facts as those by which the second is to be sustained. While this rule may determine a great number of cases, it seems not always applicable, as, for instance, in larceny and embezzlement cases, where different articles or sums of money have been taken, and evidence of the other offenses is introduced for some particular purpose. In such cases, the test of identity of transactions is the controlling consideration. Where a county treasurer was charged with several misappropriations in different years, the conviction or acquittal of one act of embezzlement is not a bar to a prosecution.

for another. Storm v. Territory, 94 Pac. 1099, 1101, 12 Ariz. 28.

An acquittal upon the charge of having received the compensation forbidden by Rev. St. U. S. § 1782, from a specified person, described in the indictment as an officer and employé of a corporation, will not sustain a plea in bar of a prosecution upon the charge of having received such compensation from the corporation, where the accused declined to plead further after his demurrer to the answer, alleging that the two offenses are not, in legal effect, identical, was overruled. Burton v. United States, 26 Sup. Ct. 688, 698, 202 U. S. 344, 50 L. Ed. 1057, 6 Ann. Cas. 362.

Where one is put on trial on a valid criminal charge in a court having jurisdiction, a dismissal of the cause over his objection is equivalent to acquittal within Const. art. 1, § 14, relating to "former jeopardy." Where the facts necessary to conviction on a second prosecution would not necessarily have convicted on the first prosecution, the first prosecution is dismissed, after jeopardy has attached, and will not bar the second prosecution. A plea of one charged with selling intoxicating liquors to a person intoxicated in violation of Acts 1905, p. 720, c. 169, § 573, making it an offense to sell, barter, or give away intoxicating liquor to a person intoxicated, which alleges that before the commencement of the prosecution he had been placed on trial on the charge of giving away intoxicating liquors to the same person when intoxicated, and that over his objections the case, on motion of the prosecuting attorney, was dismissed, does not set forth a "former jeopardy," though the plea alleges that the former charge was for the same offense as that charged as a sale. State v. Reed, 81 N. E. 571, 572, 168 Ind. 588 (citing Hensley v. State, 8 N. E. 692, 107 Ind. 587, 589, 590; Boeswell v. State, 11 N. E. 788, 111 Ind. 47, 49; Gillespie v. State, 80 N. E. 829, 168 Ind. 298; State v. Elder, 65 Ind. 282, 285, 286, 32 Am. Rep. 69; Smith v. State, 85 Ind. 553, 557; Davidson v. State, 99 Ind. 366, 368).

A person who has been put in jeopardy for an offense which includes others has been in jeopardy as to each of the included offenses; and this may be so where he has been put in jeopardy for the lowest of the offenses, and such "jeopardy" will bar a prosecution for the others. Commonwealth v. Browning, 148 S. W. 407, 408, 146 Ky. 770.

For "jeopardy" to attach according to 4 Bl. 836, the prosecution must be for the same identical offense, and using the words of Chief Justice Shaw, it must appear that the offense charged was the same in law and in fact. Thomas v. United States, 156 Fed. 897, 912, 913, 84 O. C. A. 477, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 720.

Bringing indictment or information

The filing of an information for manslaughter does not preclude a subsequent indictment for murder. Until "jeopardy" has begun, the prosecution is at liberty to nolle prosequi and begin over again, and the pendency of an indictment or information does not constitute "jeopardy." State v. Ruffin, 41 South. 647, 648, 117 La. 357 (citing State v. Hornsby [La.] 8 Rob. 589, 41 Am. Dec. 314).

Disagreement and discharge of jury

A disagreement of the jury coupled with a failure to find a verdict and their discharge, do not bring defendant within the constitutional provisions that no person shall be twice put in "jeopardy" for the same offense. State v. Keerl, 85 Pac. 862, 863, 866, 33 Mont. 501.

In a prosecution for a felony, the accused has the right to be present at every stage of the trial; and where the court, in such a case, without the consent of the accused and during his enforced absence, he being confined in jail, ordered a mistrial because of the inability of the jury to agree, on a subsequent trial of the same case it was error, requiring a reversal, to strike a plea setting up such unauthorized mistrial and the "former jeopardy" of the accused. Bagwell v. State, 58 S. E. 650, 652, 129 Ga. 170 (overruling Lester v. State, 33 Ga. 329).

Where a jury in a criminal case is discharged because of bias or prejudice of the jurymen, which was not discovered on the voir dire examination or because of influence subsequently brought to bear on them, the accused may be retried and is not thereby twice put in "jeopardy." State v. Hanford, 92 Pac. 551, 553, 78 Kan. 678, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 548 (citing Simmons v. United States, 12 Sup. Ct. 171, 142 U. S. 148, 35 L. Ed. 968).

Dismissal of prosecution

Where a jury was impaneled and sworn to try accused, and the cause was dismissed after the evidence was all introduced, he was thereby placed in "jeopardy," and cannot be tried again for the crime charged in the information, or any other offense included therein. State v. Hows, 87 Pac. 163, 164, 31 Utah, 168.

One is acquitted if, after he has been arraigned and the trial has been begun upon a valid indictment he is discharged by a competent court before verdict. He has then been "in jeopardy." State v. Keerl, 85 Pac. 862, 864, 33 Mont. 501.

Where one is put on trial on a valid criminal charge in a court having jurisdiction, a dismissal of the cause over his objection is equivalent to acquittal within Const. art. 1, § 14, relating to "former jeopardy." Where the facts necessary to conviction on a second prosecution would not necessarily have convicted on the first prosec-cution, the first prosecution, if dismissed after jeopardy has attached, will not bar the second prosecution. A plea of one charged with selling intoxicating liquors to a person intoxicated in violation of Acts 1905, p. 720, c. 169, § 573, making it an offense to sell, barter, or give away intoxicating liquor to a person intoxicated, which alleges that before the commencement of the prosecution he had been placed on trial on the charge of giving away intoxicating liquors to the same person when intoxicated, and that over his objections the case on motion of the prosecuting attorney was dismissed, does not set forth a "former jeopardy," though the plea alleges that the former charge was for the same offense as that charged as a sale. State v. Reed, 81 N. E. 571, 572, 168 Ind. 588 (citing Hensley v. State, 8 N. E. 692, 107 Ind. 587, 589, 590; Boswell v. State, 11 N. E. 788, 111 Ind. 47, 49; Gillespie v. State, 80 N. E. 829, 168 Ind. 298; State v. Elder, 65 Ind. 282, 285, 286, 32 Am. Rep. 69; Smith v. State, 85 Ind. 553, 557; Davidson v. State, 99 Ind. 366, 368; Durham v. People, 4 Scam. [5 Ill.] 172, 39 Am. Dec. 407).

Impaneling and swearing jury

A person is in legal jeopardy when he is put on trial before a competent court on a sufficient indictment and the jury has been charged with his deliverance; and the jury is so charged when they have been impaneled and sworn. Allen v. State, 41 South. 593, 52 Fla. 1, 120 Am. St. Rep. 188, 10 Am. Cas. 1085 (citing 1 Bish. New Cr. Law, §§ 1013, 1014, et seq.; Robinson v. Commonwealth, 11 S. W. 210, 88 Ky. 386; People v. Cage, 48 Cal. 323, 17 Am. Rep. 436; Ex parte Clements, 50 Ala. 459; Bell v. State, 44 Ala. 393; Ex parte Maxwell, 11 Nev. 428; Commonwealth v. Fitzpatrick, 15 Atl. 466, 121 Pa. 109, 1 L. R. A. 451, 6 Am. St. Rep. 757; Weinzorpflin v. State [Ind.] 7 Blackf. 186; Miller v. State, 8 Ind. 325; McCorkle v. State, 14 Ind. 39; State v. Callendine, 8 Iowa, 288; State v. Webster, 105 S. W. 705, 708, 206 Mo. 558 (quoting and adopting Cooley, Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] p. 267).

An accused is in "jeopardy" when he is put upon his trial upon a valid information before a jury duly impaneled and charged with his deliverance. Schultz v. State, 116 N. W. 259, 571, 135 Wis. 644.

After a person has once been put on his trial before a court of competent jurisdiction upon an indictment which is sufficient to sustain a conviction and the jury has been charged with his deliverance, he is in "jeopardy." State v. Brown, 84 South. 698, 699, 110 La. 591.

The general rule is that the prisoner has been put in "jeopardy" when he has been put upon trial before a court of competent jurisdiction, upon an indictment or information sufficient to sustain a conviction, and the jury has been impaneled and sworn to try the case, and the jury is discharged without sufficient cause, and without the defendant's consent; and such discharge of the jury, although improper, results in an acquittal of the defendant. Schrieber v. Clapp, 74 Pac. 816, 317, 18 Okl. 215.

Where, after a jury is sworn and testimony is introduced, the court learns and determines from an inquiry judicially conducted that a juror is prejudiced and unfit to sit in the case, and that the disqualification is such as would vitiate a verdict, the jury may be discharged and another jury impaneled to try the case, and the accused will not be deemed to have been thereby twice put in "jeopardy" for the same offense. State v. Hansford, 92 Pac. 551, 553, 76 Kan. 678, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 548.

"The courts of Pennsylvania and North Carolina differ from those of New York as to the meaning of the maxim and constitutional provision that a man shall not be put twice in 'jeopardy' for the same offense. The latter courts understand it to mean that he shall not be twice 'tried,' and they view the 'test by which to decide whether a person has been once tried' to be a plea of autrefois acquit, or autrefois convict. The former courts considered the hazard, danger, or peril in which a man shall not be twice placed, as having been once incurred by giving him in charge, on a legal indictment, to a regular jury which has been unnecessarily discharged without rendering a verdict. And this is the interpretation which we give to that clause of our Constitution which privileges an accused person from being 'twice put in jeopardy for the same offense.'" The jeopardy contemplated, as our decisions affirm, attaches from the very moment the trial is begun, and the trial is deemed to have commenced at the time the jury is impaneled. Gillespie v. State, 80 N. E. 829, 833, 836, 168 Ind. 298 (quoting Weinzorpflin v. State [Ind.] 7 Blackf. 186).

"When a person has been placed on trial on a valid indictment or information before a court of competent jurisdiction, has been arraigned, and has pleaded, and a jury has been impaneled and sworn, he is in 'jeopardy'; but, until these things have been done, jeopardy does not attach." Defendant was not put in jeopardy where the information against him for homicide was dismissed on motion of the prosecuting attorney before he was brought to trial under it. State v. Taylor, 71 S. W. 1006, 1006, 171 Mo. 465.

One is in legal jeopardy when he is put on trial before a court of competent jurisdiction on an indictment sufficient to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been impaneled and sworn, unless the jury is discharged with the consent of accused, or when, after verdict of guilty, the same has been set aside on accused's motion for a new trial or the judgment arrested. State v. Keating, 122 S. W. 699, 701, 228 Mo. 86.

When a jury is full, sworn, and all the preliminary things of record are ready for trial, jeopardy attaches, provided the court is so clothed with authority, and the prior proceedings are such, that judgment on a verdict duly returned would be valid. Hence where a jury was impaneled and sworn, and the state had commenced the examination of prosecutrix when accused moved to dismiss because he had not been arraigned and had not pleaded to the information, and the motion was denied, whereupon accused was arraigned and entered a plea of not guilty, and the jury was then discharged over accused's objection, and a new jury was impaneled and sworn, and he was convicted notwithstanding the plea of former jeopardy, "jeopardy" had attached, and accused was entitled to a dismissal. State v. Kinghorn, 105 Pac. 234, 235, 56 Wash. 131, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 136.

Under Const. § 13, providing that no person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense, an actual acquittal, though on improper grounds raised by defense, is a "former jeopardy" and a bar to further prosecution. Commonwealth v. Ball, 104 S. W. 325, 126 Ky. 542.

Invalid indictment or information

The dismissal of an indictment by the court, before submission of the case to the jury, but after they were sworn, on the ground that it did not charge a crime, will not support a plea of former "jeopardy" to a second indictment for the same offense attempted to be charged in the first; the court in the first proceeding never having had jurisdiction of the offense. United States v. Rogoff, 163 Fed. 311, 312.

Same—Conviction

A trial and verdict of guilty on an insufficient information did not constitute "jeopardy." State v. Riley, 78 Pac. 1001, 1002, 36 Wash. 441.

One is in legal "jeopardy" when he is put on trial before a court of competent jurisdiction on an indictment sufficient to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been impaneled and sworn, unless the jury is discharged with the consent of accused, or when, after verdict of guilty, the same has been set aside on accused's motion for a new trial or the judgment arrested. Where accused was convicted on a second count of the information, and the court, on appeal, determined that the information was insufficient as to both counts, accused had not been put in jeopardy by reason of the conviction on the second count and the acquittal by inference on the first count. State v. Keating, 122 S. W. 699, 701, 223 Mo. 86.

JERSEY

"Jersey" is a name commonly given to a wagon (as in this case a grocery wagon) having a covered top. Lexington St. Ry. v. Strader (Ky.) 89 S. W. 158.

JETTY

A "jetty" is in the nature of a dam, usually built in the manner that a dam is constructed, and intended to deflect the current so as to deepen the channel or to form an eddy below the obstruction in which sediment may be deposited, thereby extending and protecting the bank. Morton v. Oregon Short Line Ry. Co., 87 Pac. 151, 153, 48 Or. 444, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 344, 120 Am. St. Rep. 827.

JEWEL—JEWELRY

Articles of "jewelry" have been generally defined by the courts to be such articles as are made of precious metal, silver, gold, diamonds, sapphires, rubies, pearls, etc. William Fine & Bro. v. Southern Exp. Co., 73 S. E. 35, 38, 10 Ga. App. 161 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3811).

The word "jewelry," as used by a revenue agent in the statement filed by him of property belonging to a person omitted from taxation, includes the rings, pins, and other ornaments worn by the taxpayer, his wife, and other members of his family dependent upon him and for whose taxes he is responsible. Commonwealth v. Glover, 116 S. W. 769, 774, 132 Ky. 588.

As baggage

See Baggage; Personal Baggage.

Buckles

Slides or buckles made of steel or base metal some ornamented with rhinestones and some colored in imitation of precious metal and used in ornamenting slippers, are not dutiable as articles commonly known as "jewelry." E. H. Bailey & Co. v. United States, 135 Fed. 917, 918.

As chattel

See Chattel.

Metal purses and handbags

Chatelaine purses of metal, gilded or plated in imitation of gold and silver, and set with imitation precious stones, which range in value from 34 marks per gross to 30 marks per dozen, are not within the provision in paragraph 434, Schedule N, § 1, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 30 Stat. 192, for "articles commonly known as jewelry." A. Steinhart & Co. v. United States, 148 Fed. 512.

Women's silver hand bags or purses, used for holding money, articles of wearing apparel, etc., are not within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 434, 30 Stat. 192, for articles commonly known as "jewelry," but are dutiable as articles of silver, under paragraph 193 of said act, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, 30 Stat. 167. Tiffany v. United States, 131 Fed. 398, 399.

Millinery ornaments

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 434, 30 Stat. 192, providing a duty of 60 per cent. ad valorem on articles commonly known as "jewelry" and parts thereof, does not include so-called "millinery ornaments" used in trimming hats, which are flimsy articles intended for ephemeral use, are not made by jewelers, and contain no gems or precious metals, but are made of base metal either wholly or in combination with imitation jet or imitation precious stones. United States v. S. Schiff & Co., 139 Fed. 549, 550, 71 C. C. A. 533.

Miniature frames

Miniature frames composed of precious metals set with diamonds and pearls, which are not used as articles of personal adornment but for utility, are not dutiable as articles commonly known as "jewelry." United States v. M. Knoedler & Co., 154 Fed. 928.

Pearls

Pearls which, though they had been tentatively worn as a necklace abroad, were imported loose and were increased by the addition of others after importation for completion into a necklace, are not dutiable as "jewelry," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 434, 30 Stat. 192, but as "pearls in their natural state," by similitude, under paragraph 436, 30 Stat. 192. Citroen v. United States, 166 Fed. 693, 694, 92 C. C. A. 365.

Drilled pearls, which had been assembled and matched abroad and were ordered to be made into a necklace in New York, but had never been strung as a necklace, except temporarily, for purposes of display, are not "jewelry" under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 434, 30 Stat. 192, but are dutiable either directly or by similitude as "pearls in their natural state," under paragraph 436, 30 Stat. 192. United States v. Tiffany & Co., 172 Fed. 300.

Imitation whole or half pearls, mounted on wire for purposes of manufacture, are not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 435, 30 Stat. 192, as parts of "jewelry," but under paragraph 435 as imitations of precious stones. United States v. Weinberg, 139 Fed. 1006.

Watch and chain or fob

A watch and fob is within the phrase "jewels and ornaments" in a statute providing that whenever the proprietor of a hotel shall provide a safe for the keeping of any jewels and ornaments belonging to a guest, and the guest does not deposit them there, the proprietor shall not be liable for their loss. Rains v. Maxwell House Co., 79 S. W. 114, 117, 112 Tenn. 219, 64 L. R. A. 470, 2 Ann. Cas. 488.

If a watch or watch movement is not included in the general term "jewelry," it is so closely associated therewith that the public in general regard the dealing therein as a part of the jewelry business, and they are generally handled by jewelers, and in fact are branch of the jewelry trade, so that the Elgin Jewelry Company might easily be mistaken by the public for the Elgin National Watch Company, the maker of what are generally known as the Elgin watches. Elgin Nat. Watch Co. v. Loveland, 132 Fed. 41, 51.

A watch or chain, being each an article of use, and not worn for ornament, is not a "jewel" or "ornament," within the statute relieving an innkeeper from liability for loss of money, jewels, or ornaments, where he provides a safe, posts notice thereof, and the guest neglects to deposit the same in the safe. Jones v. Hotel Latham Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 1084, 1085, 62 Misc. Rep. 620.

As wearing apparel

See Wearing Apparel.

JNO

The sufficiency of an information was not affected by the abbreviating of the accused's name, "John," by use of the letters "Jno." State v. Granger, 102 S. W. 498, 499, 203 Mo. 536.

JOB

See Employés on the Job; Good and Workmanlike Job; On the Job.

JOBBER

See Landjobber; Sharejobber; Stockjobber.

New York City Sanitary Code, § 68, providing that no person shall have or offer for sale adulterated food within the city, is applicable to a "jobber," a middleman in the sale thereof; criminal intent not being an element of the offense. People v. Greenberg, 119 N. Y. Supp. 325, 326, 134 App. Div. 599.

JOCK STRAPS

"Jock straps" are similar to the common swimming trunks made of cotton cloth and which are extensively in use for the purpose of a suspensory bandage, and are designed to hold the male private organs in position of greatest safety for athletes, etc., and, though a "jock strap" may be loosely called a suspensory, there is an important distinction between them, and a "jock strap" must be so made and the material must be of such a sort that, when the parts are placed in the position shown by experience to be the best adapted for safety, they will be maintained in this position in spite of any movements of the body. Sharp & Smith v. Physicians' & Surgeons' Appliance Co., 174 Fed. 424.

JOGGING ALONG

The phrase "jogging along," as used by a witness testifying that decedent was going very slowly, just "jogging along," held to mean a slow trot. Queen Anne's R. Co. v. Reed, 59 Atl. 860, 864, 5 Pennewill, 226, 119 Am. St. Rep. 301.

JOHN DOE

In an indictment charging "John Doe," a Chinese person, whose true name is to the grand jurors unknown, the name "John Doe" is used only as a fictitious designation because the grand jurors were unable to identify the person whom they were indicting. With no other description it was not possible to say what particular Chinese person the grand jury intended to indict, and for that reason the indictment was insufficient. United States v. Doe, 127 Fed. 982, 983.

JOIN

The word "join," as used in the rule that all the defendants must join in an application to remove a cause to a federal court, merely means that, where there are several defendants, all of them must concur in applying to remove the cause, and does not authorize a removal by joint defendants who do join in case one or more of them is not entitled to remove. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Huber, 92 S. W. 832, 834, 100 Tex. 1.

JOINT

See Low Joint.

The word "joint" is defined in general to mean "produced by or involving the combined action of two or more; united in or having a common relation, action, or interest; participated in or used by two or more; held or shared in common." But, as a legal term, the word is generally used to mean joined together in unity of interest or liability. Hill v. Wadley Southern Ry. Co., 57 S. E. 795, 799, 128 Ga. 705 (citing following dictionaries: Standard, Webster, Century, and Worcester).

Under a deed to a man and his wife, "for their joint lives and the life of the survivor of them," and "to their joint heirs," the first takers take a joint estate in fee simple, to the exclusion of their heirs. It was contended that the use of the word "joint" before "heirs" was word of explanation indicating that the grantor meant to use the word in a qualified sense as a mere descriptio personarum, and that as thus used it explained who was to take after the termination of the life estate and prevented the operation of the rule in Shelley's case. Waller v. Pollitt, 64 Atl. 1040, 1041, 104 Md. 172.

JOINT ADVENTURE

A "joint adventure" may exist where persons embark in an undertaking without entering on the prosecution of the business as partners strictly, but engage in a common enterprise for their mutual benefit and have the right to demand and expect from their associates good faith in all that relates to their common interests. Jackson v. Hooper, 74 Atl. 130, 136, 76 N. J. Eq. 185.

A "joint venture" is a limited partnership not limited in a statutory sense as to liability, but as to scope and duration, and under the New York law joint adventures and partnerships are governed by the same rules. Jones v. Walker, 101 N. Y. Supp. 22, 23, 51 Misc. Rep. 624 (quoting and adopting definition in Ross v. Willett, 27 N. Y. Supp. 785, 76 Hun, 211).

Where plaintiff and defendant's testator engaged in buying, training, and selling horses on the understanding that testator should advance the money and that the profits should be shared equally, there was a "joint adventure," authorizing plaintiff to compel an accounting. Rice v. Peters, 113 N. Y. Supp. 40, 41, 128 App. Div. 776.

Where plaintiff advanced money to another to be used solely in carrying on of a specified business under the latter's name, the venture to continue five years, and plaintiff to be paid one-fourth of the net profits, and provision being made that, upon the death of the other, or the expiration of the stipulated period, the amount advanced, or so much thereof as should remain in the business, must be paid back to plaintiff, with a proportionate share of profits, plaintiff and the other stood towards each other in a "quasi partnership" or "joint adventure" relation. Kirkwood v. Smith, 95 N. Y. Supp. 926, 929, 47 Misc. Rep. 301.

Defendant, being the owner of a play and a patented air reservoir, contracted with plaintiff and another to give to each one-third interest in both the play and the patent, and that, on securing a contract satisfactory to him, the three as joint owners would share equally all receipts, expenses, and profits in connection with the development of plays and the use of the reservoirs. Held, that such arrangement constituted a joint adventure, and made the parties liable as partners between themselves. Voegtlin v. Bowdoin, 104 N. Y. Supp. 394, 395, 54 Misc. Rep. 254.

JOINT AGENT

An interpreter who is selected by persons speaking different languages as the medium of their communication with each other is regarded as their "joint agent" for that purpose. Kelly v. Ning Yung Benev. Ass'n, 84 Pac. 321, 324, 2 Cal. App. 460.

JOINT AND MUTUAL WILL See Mutual Will.

JOINT AND SEVERAL TRESPASSERS

Joint trespassers distinguished, see Joint Trespassers.

JOINT CAUSE OF ACTION

"Joint causes of action" include causes of action against joint wrongdoers as well as causes of action against joint parties to a contract. Williamson v. Howell, 17 Ala. 830, 832.

JOINT CONTRACT AND CONTRACTOR

A contract for street improvement recited that whereas plaintiff, as contractor, had offered to do the work for $1,154, "the undersigned property owners" agreed one with the other, and with each other, that they would forthwith have the street graded and would pay therefor on completion and acceptance of the work by the city surveyor the total sum of $1,154, pro rata, as the frontage of their real property bore to the whole work, and that they jointly and severally contracted and agreed with plaintiff that he, with all convenient dispatch and in a good workmanlike manner and to the satisfaction of the city surveyor, etc., should grade the street for the sum of $1,154, payment of which was to be made on the acceptance of the work by the city surveyor. The specifications obligated plaintiff to pay the engineer's fee in amounts proportioned to the payments made by the property owners, or their agents, in the ratio of payments to the contract price, plus such fee. Held, that the signers of the contract, as to the contract, were jointly and severally liable for the entire price of the work, and not each separately liable for his pro rata share according to his ownership of frontage. Moring v. Weber, 84 Pac. 220, 221, 3 Cal. App. 14.

"Where two or more persons execute an instrument at the same time, upon the same consideration, and for the same purpose, they are all, in legal effect, 'joint contractors or obligors' so far as their liability to the other contracting party is concerned, although one may be designated thereon as surety, and sign it as such." White v. Savage, 87 Pac. 1040, 1042, 48 Or. 604 (quoting and adopting definition in Bowen v. Clarke, 37 Pac. 75, 25 Or. 595).

JOINT CONVENTION

"Joint convention" is a body as different and with as distinct power and functions from those of the two separate houses as a partner is from the members composing it. "Joint conventions" are not composed of the Senate and the House of Representatives, but of the members of the General Assembly without regard to the houses to which they were elected. Richardson v. Young, 125 S. W. 664, 680, 122 Tenn. 471 (quoting and adopting language of Prouty v. Stover, 11 Kan. 256).

JOINT DEBTORS

The term "joint debtor," used in Civ. Code 1902, § 2841, providing that a creditor may release a separate joint debtor by an instrument exonerating him therefrom, is broader and more comprehensive than that of "surety" or "guarantor." A statute was enacted to prevent an injustice which had followed a technical and strict construction of the mutual rights of the makers of an obligation. Where one signs a note as surety and for a valuable consideration, and he and another guarantee its payment, and judgment is obtained against the three, they are "joint debtors." Symmes v. Cauble, 51 S. E. 862, 863, 72 S. C. 330.

JOINT DEFENDANT

The right given by Civ. Code 1910, § 5971, to one joint defendant paying off the execution to control the judgment and execution against his codefendants to compel contribution, applies to judgments against partners based on service upon all. Higdon v. Williamson, 73 S. E. 528, 529, 10 Ga. App. 876.

JOINT INDORSEES

Burns' Ann. St. 1894, § 8136, provides that the survivor of persons holding personal property in joint tenancy shall have the same right only as the survivors of tenants in common unless otherwise expressed in the instrument. Held, that a corporation may be one of several joint indorsees or bearers of a negotiable instrument using the term "joint" in its general sense, and not in its restricted sense, as when applied to a tenancy of real property, and hence may sue thereon as one of several co-obligees joined as plaintiffs: Thomas v. Green County, 159 Fed. 339, 343, 89 C. C. A. 405.

JOINT INTEREST

Civ. Code Cal. § 683, defines a "joint interest" as one owned by several persons in equal shares, by a single will or transfer, when expressly declared in the will or transfer to be a joint tenancy. Conde v. Dreisam Gold Mining & Mill. Co., 86 Pac. 825, 828, 3 Cal. App. 583.

Where a husband and wife deposited money in a savings bank in their joint names and accepted in lieu thereof a passbook and writing reciting that the money should be paid on demand of either producing the book, the deposit was community property, and not owned by them as joint tenants, under Civ. Code, § 683, defining a "joint interest" as one owned by several persons in equal shares, by a title created by a single will or transfer, when expressly declared to be a joint tenancy or when granted or devised to executors or trustees as joint tenants. Lynam v. Vorwerk, 110 Pac. 355, 356, 13 Cal. App. 507.

JOINT MAKER

The rule that when one, in order to give the maker of a note credit with the payee, writes his name on the back of the note before delivery and acceptance thereof by the payee he is to be considered a "joint maker" of the note, and liable as such, applies, although the parties so signing told the payee that they would "indorse" the note. Lake v. Little Rock Trust Co., 90 S. W. 847, 848, 77 Ark. 53, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1199, 7 Ann. Cas. 394.

JOINT OBLIGATION

"A 'joint obligation' is one by which several obligors promise to the obligee to perform the obligation." United States v. Green, 136 Fed. 618, 647 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

"Whenever an obligation is undertaken by two or more, or a right given to two or more, it is the general presumption of law that it is a 'joint obligation or right.'" Where a note, signed by ten makers, states that the liability of each is limited to one-tenth of the amount of the note, an indorsee of the note cannot maintain a joint action thereon against the makers. National Bank of Phoenixville v. Buckwater, 63 Atl. 689, 690, 214 Pa. 289 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Parsons, Cont. p. 11).

JOINT OWNERS

As owner, see Owner.

JOINT OWNERSHIP

To constitute "joint ownership" the shares must generally extend to the whole estate and be such as that neither of the owners would have an interest in the proceeds set apart to the other joint owner. Fullenwider v. Johnson, 139 S. W. 1096, 1097, 145 Ky. 19.

JOINT RATE

A "joint rate" within the meaning of Act Oct. 14, 1879 (Acts 1878, p. 125) § 5, as amended by Acts 1889, p. 131, and Civ. Code 1895, § 2189, declaring that the railroad commissioners shall have power to make just and reasonable joint rates for all connecting railroads as to traffic passing from one road to the other, is a rate charged for the transportation of goods or passengers over connecting lines of two or more railroads and divided among them for the services rendered by each respectively, and may be made by deducting some prescribed per cent. from each of the local rates and adding together the two rates thus reduced, but such method is not exclusive. Hill v. Wadley Southern Ry. Co., 57 S. E. 795, 798, 128 Ga. 705.

Where the railroad commissioners declared that a continuous mileage rate should apply to two connecting railroad companies, the stock and bonds of one of which were owned by the other, though each had its separate directors and was operated separately, applying the rate previously fixed for the owning company, such rate was a "joint rate" within the meaning of the statute, and the action of the commissioners was not ipso facto illegal on the ground that it was not a joint rate and not authorized by the statute, if the rate so fixed was reasonable and just. Hill v. Wadley Southern Ry. Co., 57 S. E. 795, 799, 128 Ga. 705.

JOINT RESOLUTION

An act of Congress governs all persons under the jurisdiction of the enacting power; whereas, a "joint resolution" is merely a rule for the guidance of the agents and servants of the government. S. H. Hawes & Co. v. Wm. R. Trigg Co., 65 S. E. 538, 552, 110 Va. 165.

JOINT SESSION

Code Supp. 1907, § 1989a29, requiring notice to the landowners when and where the boards of supervisors of the several counties will meet in joint session to consider a petition for the establishment of a drainage district including lands in more than one county, and providing that the boards shall sit and act jointly in all matters to be disposed of by the joint action of the several boards, the boards of supervisors of two counties, in proceedings for the establishment of a district including lands in two counties, must act jointly, and not concurrently as separate bodies; the word "joint" meaning united or combined, and the law contemplating that the boards must act as one body. Schumaker v. Edington, 132 N. W. 966, 969, 152 Iowa, 596.

"The term 'joint session' * * * implies the meeting together, a mingling of the two houses, which when so held and mingled act as one body." Richardson v. Young, 125 S. W. 664, 681, 122 Tenn. 471.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES AND ASSOCIATIONS

A joint-stock association owes its existence, not to the state but to the contract of its members, and, though it may have some of the rights of a corporation and may sue and be sued in the name of its president, it does not exist as an entity distinct from its members and it exists wherever it does business or owns property. In re Willmer's Estate, 138 N. Y. Supp. 649, 651, 153 App. Div. 804.

A "joint-stock association" is an association of individuals in the nature of a partnership and possessing the element of personal liability. Almost the full measure of corporate attributes have been bestowed upon them according to the courts of New York until the difference, if there be one, is obscure, elusive, and difficult to see and describe. Bishop v. Bishop, 71 Atl. 583, 589, 81 Conn. 509 (People ex rel. Luckemeyer v.

Coleman, 80 N. E. 1150, 133 N. Y. 625; People ex rel. Platt v. Wemple, 22 N. E. 1046, 117 N. Y. 136, 6 L. R. A. 303).

Corporations and partnerships distinguished

As person, see Person.

As within term corporation, see Corporation.

Where diversity of citizenship was the basis of federal jurisdiction in a suit to restrain defendant from prosecuting an action in the state court, and a bill alleged that complainant was a "joint-stock company" duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of New York and a citizen of that state, and that defendant was a citizen of Missouri, where the suit was brought, jurisdiction was not shown, since a "joint-stock company" is not a corporation but a partnership, and it could not be presumed that the members were all nonresidents of Missouri. Rountree v. Adams Express Co., 165 Fed. 152, 154, 91 C. C. A. 186.

An unincorporated joint-stock company carrying on the business of a savings bank in this district is a copartnership. Norwood v. Francis, 25 App. D. C. 463, 466, 4 Ann. Cas. 865.

The history of "joint-stock associations" both in England and this country is interesting. When unincorporated companies, with a joint stock divided into numerous transferable shares, began to assume importance and to force themselves upon the attention of the legislative and judicial departments of the state, the reception they met with was by no means encouraging. Owing to the then established rules relating to parties to actions at law and suits in equity, a joint-stock company could not practically sue its own debtors, nor could disputes between its members be readily, if at all, adjusted. At the same time the doctrine that each member was answerable for the whole of the debts of the company was studiously promulgated and rigorously enforced. A joint-stock company is like a corporation, but not the same. More or less they crowd upon and overlap each other, but without losing their identity, and so, while it cannot be said that a joint-stock company is a corporation, it can be said that a joint-stock company is a partnership with some of the powers of a corporation. A joint-stock company derives its existence from the contract of individuals, a corporation from the sovereignty of the state. In re Jones' Estate, 65 N. E. 570, 571, 172 N. Y. 575, 60 L. R. A. 476 (quoting and adopting definition in Lindley Law of Companies [5th Ed.] p. 2; People ex rel. Winchester v. Coleman, 31 N. E. 96, 133 N. Y. 279, 16 L. R. A. 183; Van Aernam v. Bleistein, 7 N. E. 538, 102 N. Y. 360).

A "joint-stock company" is defined in the text-books to be "an association of individuals for purposes of profit, possessing a common capital, which is divided into shares, of which each member possesses one or more, and which are transferable by the owner. These associations, formed for business purposes, were at common law, and as a general rule still are, considered merely as partnerships, and their rights and liabilities are in the main governed by the same rules and principles which regulate commercial partnerships. While it is true that many companies called joint-stock companies have many of the essential characteristics of a corporation, yet there is a distinction between such companies and regularly organized corporations so called. It is said: "In respect to their formation there is a broad distinction between a corporation, technically so called, which always owes its existence to the sovereign power of the state, and a joint-stock company, which, being essentially a partnership, is brought into being by the contract of its members inter sese." Counsel refer to cases in other states and in the federal courts holding that joint-stock companies possess many of the characteristics of corporations, but the definition which characterizes them as partnerships has been recognized as correct, if not actually adopted, by the decisions of the Illinois courts. People v. Rose, 76 N. E. 42, 43, 46, 219 Ill. 46.

"Joint-stock associations" are not in all essential aspects, except the personal liability of the stockholders, like corporations. They have an artificial name, in which their contracts are made and their business transacted. They have a seal. They have officers. The interests of the partners are represented by shares of stock. They survive the death of their shareholders, and, quite like corporations, they have for all practicable purposes an existence apart from the shareholders and thereby may have perpetual succession. The interests of the stockholders in the assets of the association are analogous to that of the stockholders in the corporation. The practicable difference is that ordinarily the creditor of a corporation can only have recourse to the corporate property for the satisfaction of his claim, while the creditor of the 'joint-stock association,' after first exhausting his remedy against the association and its assets, may recover any deficiency of the shareholders; but in many instances there is a qualified statutory personal liability of stockholders of corporations. There can be no doubt, however, that it is competent for the members of a 'joint-stock association' to have the contracts so drawn as to confine the liability to the assets, and thus create the same situation as to their rights and liabilities as if the 'joint-stock association' were a corporation and they were stockholders." Hibbs v. Brown, 98 N. Y. Supp. 353, 357, 112 App. Div. 214 (citing chapter 236, p. 412, Laws 1894; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1919, 1924; Matter of Jones, 65 N. E. 570, 172 N. Y. 575, 60 L. R. A. 476; Westcott v. Fargo, 61 N. Y. 542, 19 Am. Rep. 300; People ex rel. Winchester v. Coleman, 81 N. E. 96, 133 N. Y. 279, 16 L. R. A. 183).

In "joint-stock companies" the death of a member, or the withdrawal or transfer of his interest, does not dissolve the company, as there is no delectus personæ; and, while a joint-stock company is a partnership, it is different from an ordinary partnership, and all who have dealings with such a company know that the directors have authority to manage the business and that a shareholder has no power to contract for the company whether it is incorporated or unincorporated. Spotswood v. Morris, 85 Pac. 1094, 1102, 12 Idaho, 360, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 665 (citing the definition in 4 Cyc. pp. 308, 310; Willis v. Greiner [Tex.] 26 S. W. 858).

A "joint-stock company" at common law was a hybrid, midway between a corporation and a partnership, e. g., it had directors and officers, articles of association, a common capital divided into shares; these shares represented the interests of the members and were transferable without the consent of the other members; hence there was no delectus personæ, and the death of a member did not dissolve the company, but, on the other hand, each member was liable for the debts of the concern so that such company had characteristics of both a corporation and a partnership. State ex rel. Pearson v. Louisiana & M. R. R. Co., 94 S. W. 279, 282, 196 Mo. 523 (citing Hunnewell v. Willow Springs Canning Co., 53 Mo. App. 245; Laney v. Fickel, 88 Mo. App. 60).

A "joint-stock company" is a partnership whereof the capital is divided, or agreed to be divided, into shares, and so as to be transferable without the express consent of all the copartners. Bradford v. National Ben. Ass'n, 26 App. D. C. 268, 273.

A "joint-stock company," whatever else may be said about it, is certainly for most, if not all practical, purposes, a legal entity, capable in law of acting and assuming legal obligations quite independent of the shareholders. Hibbs v. Brown, 82 N. E. 1108, 1115, 190 N. Y. 167.

JOINT TENANCY

See Tenants in Common.

To create a "joint tenancy" there must exist unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession. Where tenants in common of land made a deed directly to one of the tenants and a third person as joint tenants, it created a joint tenancy, so that the surveyor of the grantees took all the land. Colson v. Baker, 87 N. Y. Supp. 238, 239, 42 Misc. Rep. 407.

A "joint tenancy" is where two or more persons have any subject of property jointly in which there is unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession. 2 Black. Com. 180. At common law a grant or devise to two or more persons without limitations created a joint tenancy, and words or circumstances of negation were necessary to avoid this result. The chief characteristic of joint estates is the doctrine of survivorship. 2 Black. Com. 184. The doctrine of survivorship is not in accordance with the genius of our institutions. Hence this incident of estates has been generally abolished in the United States except in a few instances, and in those jurisdictions where joint estates are still recognized they are very much restricted by statutes. Gaunt v. Stevens, 89 N. E. 812, 813, 241 Ill. 542 (citing Burnett v. Pratt, 22 Pick. [89 Mass.] 557; Freeman, Cotenancy, § 118; Warvelle, Abstracts of Title, § 247).

The meaning of "four unities" required as essential to the existence of a "joint tenancy" is: That the interest of each of the joint tenants must be equal, the same; one cannot have a life estate and the other an estate for years. Second, the estate of joint tenancy must be created by the same act or instrument. Third, the estate of joint tenancy must arise in each at the same time. Fourth, each must have possession of the whole. Colson v. Baker, 87 N. Y. Supp. 238, 239, 42 Misc. Rep. 407.

An estate in "joint tenancy" does not exist unless there is unity of interest, title, time, and possession; "unity of interest" meaning that the interests must accrue by one and the same conveyance, "unity of time," that they must commence at one and the same time, and it must also appear that the interests of the joint holders remain the same until the death of one of them, when the survivor takes it all. Staples v. Berry, 85 Atl. 303, 304, 110 Me. 32.

An estate in "joint tenancy" is one held by two or more tenants jointly, with an equal right in all to share in the enjoyment of the land during their lives, and on the death of any one of the tenants his share vests in the survivors. Sharp v. Baker (Ind.) 96 N. E. 627, 628.

An estate in "joint tenancy" can only be created by purchase. To create an estate in "joint tenancy," the tenants must have one and the same interest which must accrue by one and the same conveyance, must commence at the same time, and must be held by the same undivided possession. Sharp v. Baker (Ind.) 96 N. E. 627, 628.

A "joint tenancy" by the common law is one where the interests are created by one and the same person, and by one and the same conveyance and commence at the same time, and are held by the same possession. Bassler v. Rewodlinaki, 109 N. W. 1032, 1033, 130 Wis. 26, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 701.

Estate by entirety distinguished

An estate in entirety is not a "joint tenancy" in which each holds an individual right. A joint tenant may destroy the joint tenancy and thereby destroy the right of survivorship by conveying his right to a third person. But neither the husband nor the wife in an estate of entirety can so destroy the character of the estate as to prevent the survivor becoming the sole owner. An estate in entirety owned by husband and wife remains, as at common law, an estate in which neither has an interest to the exclusion of the other, but each owns the whole while both live, and, at the death of either, the other continues to own the whole free from the claim of any heirs of the deceased, and Rev. St. 1899, § 4840, declaring what shall be the separate property of a married woman, and saying that it shall be under her sole control, does not apply to estates in entirety. Frost v. Frost, 98 S. W. 527, 528, 200 Mo. 474, 118 Am. St. Rep. 689.

In passing on the effect of a statute providing that all joint tenants might be compelled to make partition, the court stated the distinction between the estates as follows: "Now, although these laws use the broadest terms, 'all joint tenants that be, or hereafter shall be, of estates of inheritance,' etc., may be compelled to make partition, etc., yet it is most certain that they have never been supposed to reach the case of lands given in fee (or for any lesser estate) to husband and wife; for all the books, from the oldest I have been able to examine down to the present day, agree, una voce, in this: That husband and wife not only cannot compel each other to make partition, but that, even if they concur in the wish, they have not the power to sever the tenancy. It is a sole and not a joint tenancy. They have no moieties. Each holds the entirety. They are one in law, and their estate one and indivisible. If the husband alien, if he suffer a recovery, if he be attainted, none of these will affect the right of the wife, if she survive him. Nor is this by the jus accrescendi. There is no such thing between them. That takes place where by the death of one joint tenant the survivor receives an accession, something which he had not before, the right of the deceased. But husband and wife have the whole from the moment of the conveyance to them, and the death of either cannot give the survivor more." Kunz v. Kurtz, 68 Atl. 450, 451, 8 Del. Ch. 404 (quoting and adopting definition in Thornton v. Thornton, 3 Rand. [24 Va.] 179, 183).

Tenancy in common distinguished

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3841, providing that all conveyances and devises made to two or more persons shall be construed to create estates in common and not in "joint tenancy," unless it shall be expressed therein that the grantees or devisees shall hold the same in joint tenancy, and to the survivor of them, or it shall manifestly appear that it was intended to create an estate of joint tenancy, a will devising property in remainder, to be owned equally and jointly by testator's children, "or in case of the decease of any of said children his or her share to descend to the heirs of their body" "creates a tenancy in common and not a 'joint tenancy,'" notwithstanding the use of the word "jointly." Taylor v. Stephens, 74 N. E. 980, 983, 165 Ind. 200; Id. (Ind.) 72 N. E. 609, 611.

JOINT TENANT

A widow, to whom dower has been assigned and set off by metes and bounds, is not a "joint tenant," with the owner of the fee, within Gen. Laws 1909, c. 380, § 4, authorizing joint tenants, coparceners, and tenants in common to sue for partition, since her estate is a life estate in severalty in the entire premises within the metes and bounds, and she may not sue for partition. Newell v. Willmarth, 76 Atl. 433, 30 R. I. 529, 19 Ann. Cas. 807.

"If an estate in fee be given to a man and his wife, they are not properly 'joint tenants'; for, husband and wife being considered as one person in law, they cannot take the estate by moieties, but both are seised of the entirety, per tout et non per my, the consequence of which is that neither the husband nor the wife can dispose of any part without the assent of the other, but the whole must remain to the survivor." Green v. Cannady, 57 S. E. 832, 834, 77 S. C. 193 (quoting definition in 1 Shars. Bl. Comm. 181).

JOINT TORT-FEASORS

As privies, see Privy—Privy.

"Joint tort-feasors" are those who contribute to the tort with the common intent. Adler & Co. v. Pruitt, 53 South. 315, 318, 169 Ala. 218, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 889.

Where two railroads and defendant city were alleged to have jointly contributed to detain surface water so as to flood plaintiff's land, they were all "joint tort-feasors" and properly joined as defendants in a suit for the damages sustained, as authorized by Civ. Code Prac. § 83. Pickerill v. City of Louisville, 100 S. W. 873, 875, 125 Ky. 213.

To make tort-feasors liable jointly, there must be some sort of community in the wrongdoing, and the injury must be in some way due to their joint work; but it is not necessary that they be acting together or in concert, if their concurring negligence occasions the injury. Strauhel v. Asiatic S. S. Co., 85 Pac. 230, 233 (citing Consolidated Ice Machine Co. v. Kelfer, 25 N. E. 790, 124 Ill. 481, 10 L. R. A. 696, 23 Am. St. Rep. 688; Brown v. Cox Bros. & Co., 75 Fed. 699).

JOINT TRESPASSERS

Where an agent commits an active trespass on behalf of his principal, such principal is a "joint trespasser" with the agent. Williams v. Inman, 57 S. E. 1009, 1010, 1 Ga. App. 321.

"Persons engaged in committing the same trespass are 'joint and several trespassers,' and not 'joint trespassers' exclusively. Like persons liable on a joint and several contract, they may all be sued in one action, or one may be sued alone, and cannot plead the nonjoinder of the others in abatement; and so far is the doctrine of several liability carried that the defendants, where more than one are sued in the same action, may sever in their pleas, and the jury may find several verdicts, and on several verdicts of guilty may assess different sums as damages." The executive officers of a corporation, who were large stockholders, and had full management of its affairs, and instigated and controlled its action in willfully infringing complainant's trade-mark and simulating her labels, are jointly and severally liable with it for the infringement; and, where they directed and controlled its defense when sued therefor, the final decree in the suit is conclusive on them as to the matters adjudicated, including the damages found due complainant, on an accounting, and a suit will lie against them to recover the amount of such decree from them individually, when, through their control and influence, they caused the corporation to transfer its property and to declare and pay dividends pending the suit against it, by which it was rendered insolvent. Saxlehner v. Elsner, 140 Fed. 938, 941 (quoting and adopting the definition in Lovejoy v. Murray, 3 Wall. 1, 18 L. Ed. 129).

JOINT WILL

A "joint will" is a single instrument containing the wills of two or more persons. A mutual will, or more strictly speaking a reciprocal will, is one by which each testator makes testamentary disposition in favor of the other. Bower v. Daniel, 95 S. W. 347, 357, 198 Mo. 289 (citing Schumaker v. Schmidt, 44 Ala. 454, 4 Am. Rep. 135; In re Diez, 50 N. Y. 88; Cawley's Estate, 20 Atl. 567, 136 Pa. 628, 10 L. R. A. 93).

A testamentary disposition contained in one writing disposing of property held jointly is a "joint will"; whereas, the same document, if it refers to and deals with property held separately, would be a "mutual will." Deseumeur v. Rondel, 74 Atl. 703, 705, 76 N. J. Eq. 394.

A "joint will" is one where the same instrument is made the will of two or more persons and is jointly signed by them, being not necessarily either mutual or reciprocal. A will that is both joint and mutual is one executed jointly by two or more persons, the provisions of which are reciprocal, and which shows on its face that the devises are made one in consideration of the other. A joint will which is not reciprocal is simply the individual personal will of each of the persons signing it and is subject to the same rules as apply to several wills. Frazier v. Patterson, 90 N. E. 216, 217, 243 Ill. 80, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 508, 17 Ann. Cas. 1003.

JOINTLY

The word "jointly," in a finding that plaintiff, jointly with others, should have a perpetual right to use the waters of a ditch for irrigating purposes, means only that his right to such use is in no degree exclusive or superior to the rights of others interested therein, but that he, with the others interested, have the right together as a common right. Blankenship v. Whaley, 76 Pac. 235, 237, 142 Cal. 566.

The word "equally" in a conveyance to two or more persons equally unaccompanied by any controlling word implies a tenancy in common. "Under a statute providing that all conveyances and devises made to two or more persons shall be construed to create estates in common and not in joint tenancy, unless it shall be expressed therein that the grantees or devisees shall hold the same in joint tenancy, and to the survivor of them, or it shall manifestly appear that it was intended to create an estate of joint tenancy, a will devising property in remainder to be owned equally and jointly by testator's children or in case of the decease of any of said children his or her share to descend to the heirs of their body, creates a tenancy in common and not a joint tenancy, notwithstanding the use of the word 'jointly.'" Taylor v. Stephens, 74 N. E. 980, 983, 165 Ind. 200 (citing 2 Powell, Devises, 370; Freeman, Co-Tenancy & Partition, § 23).

In an action by a tenant in common against his several cotenants for partition of the land in which defendants interposed the statute of limitations, an instruction that if defendants held possession of the land "jointly, openly, and exclusively," as against plaintiff, plaintiff was not entitled to recover, was not objectionable in using the word "jointly," since it was obviously used in the sense that it was necessary for all of the defendants to have concurred or united in the adverse holding in order that plaintiff's interest in the land should be defeated as to each of them. Wrighton v. Butler (Tex.) 128 S. W. 472, 474.

Under highway law (Laws 1890, p. 1201, c. 593) § 130, as amended by Laws 1896, p. 265, c. 416, providing that, when public free bridges are constructed over streams forming the boundary lines of towns, such towns shall be "jointly liable" to pay the expenses of construction, the expense must be divided equally between the towns. People ex rel. Canton Bridge Co. v. Board of Town Auditors of Town of Horicon, Warren County, 120 N. Y. Supp. 696, 699, 136 App. Div. 166.

JOINTLY AND SEVERALLY

In a depositary's bond running to the head banker of a fraternal insurance society, and to the society "jointly and severally," and conditioned in a penal sum to be paid to him as banker and to the society "or either him or it," the words "jointly and severally" do not refer to the obligation of the makers of the bond, rather than to the rights of the obligees. Bort v. E. H. McCutcheon & Co., 157 Fed. 182, 185, 84 C. C. A. 630.

JOINTER

A "jointer" is a machine used for planing boards which are held with the hands flat side down and pushed over the revolving knives, and consists of knives about 16 inches long, fastened into a square iron bar operated by a belt conveying power from an engine. Heightman v. Sammons, 107 S. W. 31, 127 Mo. App. 703.

JOINTURE

See Equitable Jointure.

The term "jointure" means such an estate as may be conveyed or devised to a wife in lieu of dower. It must be in satisfaction of it; and, if transferred to her without any intention or purpose that it shall be so, it does not operate to bar her claim. If, however, the grantor or deviser intends the estate conveyed or devised as in lieu of dower, then it is a jointure and so operates. The bar arises not by operation of law, but from the express or implied intention of the husband. Morgan v. Sparks (Ky.) 108 S. W. 233, 234 (quoting Pepper v. Thomas, 4 S. W. 297, 85 Ky. 589).

JOS.

The letters "Jos." are recognized as a common abbreviation for Joseph, a name in common use, and a proceeding by or against a party designated by such an abbreviation is not a nullity. Feld v. Loftis, 88 N. E. 281, 283, 240 Ill. 105.

JOSS LIGHT

A dried paste of sandalwood dust and clay, in the form of sticks, cones and coils, which, when lighted, yields a fragrant odor and is burnt at the altars and shrines of joss houses and temples in China and Japan, is "joss light," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 587, 30 Stat. 198. Yamanaka & Co. v. United States, 172 Fed. 249, 250.

JOSS STICK

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 587, 30 Stat. 198, for "joss stick," held to include articles used in setting off fireworks, other than those well known as joss sticks and used for incense. Champion & Staudinger v. United States, 150 Fed. 239.

JOURNAL

See Official Journal.

Under Ky. St. § 3274, which provides that the common council of third-class cities shall cause a journal of its proceedings to be kept, the journal of the clerk is intended merely as an index that will fairly show what the council did, rather than to give a complete report of its proceedings, and a notation therein of the passage of an ordinance for a street improvement, which described with certainty the location of the improvement, is a sufficient entry as against an objection that the ordinance was void because not entered by the clerk of the council in the journal. Meacham Contracting Co. v. Kleiderer, 142 S. W. 720, 146 Ky. 441.

A purported official journal of the Senate made in conformity to the rules of the Senate, being a printed book containing the record of each day's proceedings, signed and attested by the officers of the Senate showing corrections made from day to day, and in which nothing could be inserted, and from which nothing could be abstracted without affording internal evidence of the fact, of which there was none, and the original of which was approved by the Senate, preserved by the Secretary of State as its official journal, and published as such, was the Senate "journal," and where it contained no record of the final passage of a bill or entry of the ayes and noes of the senators voting thereon, as required by Const. art. 5, §§ 13, 22, the act was invalid, though original memoranda made by Senate clerks and stenographers, but not approved or certified as the journal, purported to show the roll call of the Senate on the act in question. People v. Leddy, 123 Pac. 824, 828, 53 Colo. 109.

JOURNEY

Under the statute against carrying weapons, except by persons when on a journey, a "journey" means where one travels a distance from home sufficient to carry him beyond the circle of his neighbors and general acquaintances; and where defendant drove from his home, a distance of 15 miles from the town whose ordinance he was charged with violating, and to which he had been only once or twice, and in which he knew only one person, and started to return home in the evening, accompanied by a lady and a girl, carrying a pistol in the foot of the buggy, he was on a journey, and was not violating the law. Ellington v. Town of Denning, 138 S. W. 453, 99 Ark. 236.

One who is going from home by a highway to a definite point far enough distant to carry him beyond the circle of his neighbors and to detain him throughout the day, and not within the routine of his daily business, is on a "journey," within Manuf. Dig. Ark. § 1907, providing that any person who shall carry as a weapon any dirk, sword, etc., shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, provided that nothing in the act shall be construed to prohibit any person from carrying any weapon when upon a "journey" or upon his own premises; and it cannot be said as a matter of law that one whose daily business as a mail carrier takes him to a point 30 miles distant is not so engaged on a "journey." Easlick v. United States, 104 S. W. 941, 942, 7 Ind. T. 707.

JOURNEYMAN

The term "journeymen" does not include a subcontractor who excavated the cellar for a building with his teams and laborers at a specified price per cubic yard. McNab & Harlin Mfg. Co. v. Paterson Bldg. Co. (N. J.) 63 Atl. 709, 717.

"Master plumbers" and "employing plumbers" are one and the same; those who do not hold themselves out as personally doing the work, but as contracting to furnish the materials and to do the work through others, while "journeyman plumbers" are those skilled in the calling and holding themselves out as able and willing to do the work themselves. Felton v. City of Atlanta, 61 S. E. 27, 28, 4 Ga. App. 183.

JR.

The word "junior" or "Jr.," or words of similar import, are ordinarily mere matters of description and form no part of a person's legal name. Teague v. State, 40 South. 312, 314, 144 Ala. 42.

The suffix "Jr." is no part of a man's name and, except in a few instances, may be disregarded. Ross v. Berry (N. M.) 124 Pac. 342, 343.

JUDGE

JUDGE (In Law)

See Circuit Judge; County Judge; Court and Judges Thereof; De Facto Judge; Police Judge; Presiding Judge. Interest of judge, see Interest (In suit or Action). Prejudice of, see Prejudice. Proceeding to remove, as criminal action, see Criminal Action.

As used in an act relating to the taking of testimony in criminal cases which provides that when any witness is present who shall desire to have his or her evidence taken on any prosecution he shall apply to the judge of the court in which such prosecution is pending to have his or her testimony taken in writing, and thereupon the judge shall order said testimony to be taken in writing before him, etc., the word "judge" means the trial judge. State v. Jackson, 35 South. 598, 599, 111 La. 343.

The commission provided for by Acts 1893, p. 386, c. 231, § 13, providing that if a municipal corporation, after deciding to establish a municipal lighting plant, refuses to purchase a private plant operated by a corporation incorporated by the General Assembly, it may be compelled to do so, and a commission appointed by the superior court to adjudicate whether the plant should be purchased and what the price and conditions of sale should be, is not a court, nor its members judges, within the meaning of the Constitutional provision prescribing the mode by which judges are to be appointed. The functions of the commission are but quasi-judicial. Norwich Gas & Electric Co. v. City of Norwich, 57 Atl. 746, 749, 76 Conn. 565 (citing State v. New Haven & Northampton Co., 43 Conn. 351; New Milford Water Co. v. Watson, 52 Atl. 947, 53 Atl. 57, 75 Conn. 237).

"A 'register' is a 'judge,' and the admission of a will to probate is a 'judicial decision.'" In re Kern's Estate, 61 Atl. 573, 575, 212 Pa. 57 (quoting with approval from Holliday v. Ward, 19 Pa. 485, 57 Am. Dec. 671).

Under Bankr. Act. July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 16, 30 Stat. 544, the judge who must make the adjudication, reference, and dismissal of petitions is defined to be a judge of the bankruptcy court, and, where there are two judges, either may hold a court of bankruptcy and perform all the duties thereof in the same place or at a different place within the district while the other judge is also holding a court of bankruptcy. Ex parte Steele, 162 Fed. 694, 714.

The word "judges," as used in a statute providing that courts and judges may issue attachments for contempts and punish them summarily, contemplates the action of the judges in vacation and confers upon a judge in whose court an injunction is pending power in vacation to punish a refusal to obey as contempt. Powhatan Coal & Coke Co. v. Ritz, 56 S. E. 257, 263, 60 W. Va. 395, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1225.

Cities and Villages Act, art. 11 (Hurd's St. 1909, p. 359) § 5, provides that any 30 legal voters residing within a proposed village may petition the county judge to submit to the legal voters whether they will organize as a village under the act, and if the territory described shall be situated in more than one county, the petition shall be addressed to the judge of the county court of the county where a greater part of such territory is situated, and such petition shall be addressed to the county judge. Section 6 declares that, on the filing of the petition in the office of the county clerk, it shall be the duty of the judge to perform the same duties as are required to be performed by the president and trustees in towns already incorporated; the returns of the election to be made to the county judge who shall cause the result to be entered on the records of the county court. Section 7 provides that, if a majority of the votes cast at such election are for organization, such proposed village shall be deemed an organized village, and the county judge shall fix a time and place for the election of officers. Held, that the terms "county judge" and "judge of the county court" were used interchangeably and synonymously, and that a petition to organize a village should be addressed to the judge of the county court and be filed with the clerk of that court. People v. Shaw, 97 N. E. 1090, 1091, 253 Ill. 597.

Under Acts 1909, p. 62, amending Code 1907, § 6262, providing for bail in all cases where the imprisonment does not exceed five years, and directing that the judge or court must also direct the clerk of the court in which conviction was had to admit the defendant to bail, held, that the judge or court mentioned refers to the Supreme judge or court issuing the writ of error. Ex parte Byrd, 55 South. 203, 204, 172 Ala. 179.

Court

The words "judge" and "court" are often used as practically synonymous terms. Vial v. Elfer, 45 South. 545, 546, 120 La. 673.

The term "judge," as distinguished from "court," denotes the individual; the latter denoting the judicial tribunal. Hartshorn v. Illinois Valley Ry. Co., 75 N. E. 122, 126, 216 Ill. 392.

Congress at times interchanges the words "court" and "judge." The word "courts" in Act March 3, 1899, c. 424, 30 Stat. 1116, providing for pay of bailiffs and criers, and that persons employed under Rev. St. § 715, shall be deemed to be in actual attendance when they attend on the order of the courts, etc., was intended to cover not only courts in session but absent judges. United States v. McCabe, 129 Fed. 708, 711, 64 C. C. A. 236.

A "court" is not a "judge," nor a "judge" a "court," a "judge" is a public officer, who, by virtue of his office, is clothed with judicial authorities. A "court" is defined to be a place in which justice is judicially administered. Chow Loy v. United States, 112 Fed. 354, 359, 50 C. C. A. 279 (citing United States v. Clarke, 1 Gall. 497, 499, 25 Fed. Cas. 441).

A "judge" is not necessarily a court, though a court necessarily includes the "judge," and an act required to be performed by the "judge" may be lawfully performed by him sitting as a court. Sallinger v. West- ern Union Telegraph Co., 126 N. W. 362, 365, 147 Iowa, 484.

In Code Prac. La. art. 86, providing that in matters of jurisdiction the right given to a judge to take cognizance of certain causes against certain persons within his jurisdiction is termed competency, the word "judge" is to be construed as synonymous with the word "court." Bailey v. Janvier, 45 South. 932, 934, 120 La. 893.

As used in Act 1879, amendatory of Act 1875, providing that on complaint in certain proceedings being filed before the county judge in vacation he shall issue his warrant, etc., the word "judge" is a synonym of "court." Dobson v. State, 63 S. W. 796, 797, 69 Ark. 376.

The word "court" is often used interchangeably with the word "judge." Where a statute authorized the court to extend the time for filing a bill of exceptions, an order granting such exception may be made by the judge during vacation. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McDonald, 31 South. 417, 418, 79 Miss. 641.

The appeal to "the judge of the district court of the district," authorized by Act Sept. 18, 1888, c. 1015, § 13, 25 Stat. 479, where a Chinese person has been convicted before a United States commissioner of being unlawfully in the United States, is in effect an appeal to the district court, and not to the district judge as an individual; and the commissioner's transcript and other papers pertaining to the cause may therefore be filed in that court, and the final order of the judge be entered as the final order of the court. In re United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 629, 630, 194 U. S. 194, 48 L. Ed. 931.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 1293, provides that the parties may submit the matter in controversy between them to the court upon an agreed statement of facts made out and signed by counsel and filed with the clerk, and in such case the statement so agreed to and assigned and certified by the "court" to be correct, and the judgment rendered thereon, shall constitute the record of the case. Held, construing the section in view of the prior statutes on the subject (Acts 7th Leg. c. 92, § 12, Rev. St. 1879, arts. 1293, 1379, and Rev. St. 1895, art. 1381), and in view of article 3268, requiring the court to look for the legislative intention keeping in view the old law, the evil and the remedy, that article 1293 did not authorize a statement of facts to be authenticated by the "judge," the term "court" as used therein not being equivalent to "judge," so that a certificate, by the trial judge attached to a purported agreed statement of facts long after the term and after the "court" had ceased by the expiration of the term, was not a compliance with the statute. Chickasha Mill. Co. v. Crutcher (Tex.) 141 S. W. 355, 357.

In Pub. St. tit. 25, entitled "Courts of Probate and Estates of Deceased Persons," the words "judge" and "judge of probate" are constantly used when it is apparent the probate court is intended. Carr v. Corning, 62 Atl. 168, 169, 73 N. H. 362.

The Legislature often uses the words "court" and "judge," "district court" and "district judge," without discrimination. "Court" will be construed to mean "judge," and "judge" will be construed to mean "court," wherever either construction is necessary to carry into effect the obvious intent of the Legislature. It is held, therefore, that by the words "district court," as used in section 1 of the act in question (Gen. Stat. 1909, § 2282), the Legislature meant to confer upon the judge of the district court, in certain counties, authority to appoint a county auditor. Sartin v. Snell, 125 Pac. 47, 49, 87 Kan. 485, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 334.

"'Judge of the district court' and 'district court' are not strictly speaking convertible terms, but they are so in a popular sense," and under section 6 of the Act of March 3, 1891, creating the Circuit Courts of Appeals (26 Stat. 828, c. 517), which gives such courts the power to review by appeal or writ of error final decisions in the district court, an appeal lies to such court from a judgment of a district court rendered on appeal from an order of a commissioner for the deportation of a Chinese person arrested under section 13 of Exclusion Act Sept. 13, 1888, c. 1015, 25 Stat. 479, which authorizes an appeal from a conviction before a commissioner "to the judge of the district court for the district." Tsol Yil v. United States, 129 Fed. 585, 586, 64 C. C. A. 153 (quoting and adopting definition in United States v. Gee Lee, 50 Fed. 271, 1 C. C. A. 516).

Justice of the Peace

The word "judge," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 46, disqualifying a judge for certain reasons, includes a justice of the peace. Truesdell v. Winne, 90 N. Y. Supp. 155, 44 Misc. Rep. 451.

The word "judge," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1778, which provides that in an action against a corporation to recover for nonpayment of a note or other evidence of a debt due on demand at a particular time, unless defendant serves with a copy of his answer or demurrer an order of a judge directing that the issues be tried, plaintiff may take judgment as by a default after 20 days after service of the complaint, does not include a justice of the peace, since Laws 1892, c. 667, § 6, declares that the term "judge" includes every judicial officer authorized, alone or with others, to hold or preside over a court of record. Center v. Hoosick River Pulp Co., 88 N. Y. Supp. 548, 549, 43 Misc. Rep. 247.

Magistrate

A police magistrate of the city of New York, not being a judge, within Laws 1892, p. 1487, c. 677, declaring the term to mean a judicial officer authorized to hold or preside over a court of record, and not being within any of the other classes authorized by Laws 1896, p. 609, c. 547, § 248, to take an acknowledgment of a conveyance of real estate, an acknowledgment to an instrument before such a magistrate does not authorize its admission in evidence, under Code Civ. Proc. § 937. Tully v. Lewitz, 98 N. Y. Supp. 829, 833, 50 Misc. Rep. 350.

Magistrates are within Const. art. 5, § 26, providing that judges shall not charge juries in respect to matters of fact, but shall declare the law; they being included in the word "judge" in section 6, and there being nothing to show a different intention in section 26. Marchbanks v. Marchbanks, 36 S. E. 438, 58 S. C. 92.

Referee

Section 1 of the Bankruptcy Act defines "judges" as meaning a judge of a court of bankruptcy not including the referee. Mueller v. Nugent, 22 Sup. Ct. 269, 273, 184 U. S. 1, 46 L. Ed. 405.

Since the word "judge," wherever used in the bankruptcy act (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544), signifies the judge of the District Court, and not the referee, the provision that an application for confirmation of a composition may be filed in the court of bankruptcy, after the consideration and the cost of the proceedings have been deposited in a place designated by and subject to the order of the judge, requires these matters to be presented to the judge, rather than the referee. In re Bloodworth-Stembridge Co., 178 Fed. 372, 374.

Under Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 18d, 30 Stat. 551, which provides that, when the facts alleged in a petition for involuntary bankruptcy are controverted, "the judge shall determine as soon as may be the issues presented by the pleadings," and section 1a(16), which defines "judge" to mean "a judge of a court of bankruptcy not including the referee," a judge has no authority to make a general reference of such issues to a referee, but is required to exercise his personal judgment in their determination, and where direct issue is joined on the jurisdictional averments, and it appears that the facts for the solution of such primary issues are readily ascertainable, such issues should be determined by the judge, on direct hearing if possible, as a condition precedent to inquiry upon the other issues raised. In re King, 179 Fed. 694, 695, 103 C. C. A. 240.

Where an answer is interposed to an involuntary petition in bankruptcy the judge may refer the proceeding to a special commissioner to take the testimony and return the same to the judge, with his opinion, notwithstanding Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 18, subd. "d," 30 Stat. 551, providing that the judge shall determine as soon as may be the issues presented by the pleadings without the intervention of a jury, except in cases where a jury trial is given by the act, and section 1a, cl. 16, 30 Stat. 544, defining "judge" to mean a judge of a court of bankruptcy, not including a referee. In re Lacov, 134 Fed. 237, 67 C. C. A. 19.

Register

"A 'register' is a judge, and the sentence of his court is the judgment of a tribunal of exclusive and peculiar jurisdiction." Boyd v. Cloud (Del.) 62 Atl. 294, 299, 5 Pennewill, 479 (quoting and adopting the definition in Rash v. Purnel [Del.] 2 Har. 451).

"A register having exclusive jurisdiction of the probate of wills is a 'judge' and the admission of a will to probate is a judicial decision." In re Kerns' Estate, 61 Atl. 573, 575, 212 Pa. 57 (quoting with approval from Holliday v. Ward, 19 Pa. 485, 57 Am. Dec. 671).

As state officer

See State Officer.

JUDGE PRO TEMPORE

Where a district judge is assigned by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court to hold court in another district than his own, such judge while so acting is a judge pro tempore of the district in which he is sitting. Dobbs v. State, 115 Pac. 370, 371, 5 Okl. Cr. 475.

JUDGMENT

See Best Judgment; Prejudgment.

The word "judgment," in Rev. St. 1899, § 7900, providing that, where a policy shall be surrendered to the company for a consideration adequate in the "judgment" of the holder, the article of which the section is a part shall not be applicable, implies deliberate action or knowledge of the fact and implies conscious consent. Where a life insurance company, having foreclosed its lien as pledgee of a policy and applied part of its surrender value to the payment of the debt for which the policy stood as security, sent the residue of such surrender value to the beneficiary and insured by its check, which was never received by either, the policy, was not surrendered to the company by the transaction for a consideration adequate in the judgment of the holder. Burridge v. New York Life Ins. Co., 109 S. W. 560, 566, 211 Mo. 158.

The expression, "in the judgment of such commission," in Laws 1895, p. 373, c. 570, providing for the incorporation of associations for the improvement of the breed of forces and establishing a state racing commission and authorizing the commission to issue licenses for running races if "in the judgment of such commission" a proper case for the issuance of a license is shown, etc., implies a discretion as absolute to grant or refuse an application for a license as do the provisions authorizing the commission to revoke a license if for any reasons the continuance thereof shall not be deemed conducive to the interests of legitimate racing express an absolute discretion to revoke. People ex rel. Empire City Trotting Club v. State Racing Commission, 103 N. Y. Supp. 955, 961, 57 Misc. Rep. 331.

As used in a stipulation of facts stating that in the "judgment" of the respondents the bridge in question was not a practical bridge, the word "judgment" was used as synonymous with "opinion" and "belief." State ex rel. Ellis v. Switzer, 112 N. W. 297, 300, 79 Neb. 78.

It is not error to instruct the jury to act on their "judgment;" the law requiring them so to do and their verdict being the expression of their judgment—the word being defined by the Standard Dictionary as "the act of judging; the mental operation by which facts are weighed, comparisons and deductions made, and conclusions reached; the result of judging; the decision or conclusion reached, as after consideration or deliberation." State v. Tedder, 65 S. E. 449, 451, 83 S. C. 437.

A "judgment" is what the court pronounces. Groton Bridge & Mfg. Co. v. Clark

A deposit of money in court by a party to a suit pending therein, to abide the "judgment" of the court and to be applied in satisfaction of such judgment as the court may direct, is a deposit to abide the final judgment of the Supreme Court, and a judgment rendered by the superior court from which an appeal is pending is not a "judgment" prescribing the condition of the deposit. Higgins v. Keyes, 90 Pac. 972, 973, 5 Cal. App. 482.

A "judgment" is the final determination of the rights of the parties in action. Consequently, on the rendition of a judgment, the right of action to sue for malicious prosecution accrues, and the running of limitations is not tolled by the suing out of the writ of error; such writ not being a continuation of the old suit. Levering v. National Bank of Morrow County, 100 N. E. 322, 324, 87 Ohio St. 117, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 611, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 917 (citing General Code, § 11,582).

A "judgment" is the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action. Section 5916, Comp. Laws 1909. Fooshee & Brunson v. Smith, 124 Pac. 1070, 1071, 1072, 34 Okl. 247.

Same—Interlocutory judgments

Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 1200, provides that a "judgment" is either interlocutory or the final determination of the rights of the parties in the action. The "judgment" referred to in section 547, added by Laws 1908, p. 462, c. 166, authorizing judgment on the pleadings after issue joined where one is entitled thereto, may be either an interlocutory or final judgment, though the Code does not define an "interlocutory judgment," which is an intermediate or incomplete judgment, where the rights of the parties are settled, but something remains to be done. White v. Gibson, 113 N. Y. Supp. 983, 985, 61 Misc. Rep. 436.

Under Acts 30th Leg. c. 133, authorizing an appeal from a judgment sustaining a plea of privilege, such a "judgment," though interlocutory, is final for the purpose of an appeal. Luter v. Ihnken (Tex.) 143 S. W. 675.

As sentence of the law

"At common law a 'judgment' is the determination or sentence of the law, pronounced by a competent judge or court, as the result of an action or proceeding instituted in or before such court or judge, affirming that, upon the matters submitted for its decision, a legal duty or liability does or does not exist. It is 'an adjudication of the rights of the parties in respect to the claim involved.'" Marsh v. Johnston, 108 N. Y. Supp. 161, 123 App. Div. 596 (quoting and adopting definition in 23 Cyc. p. 665; citing McNulty v. Hurd, 72 N. Y. 518, 521; In re Lyman, 14 N. Y. Supp. 198, 60 Hun, 82, 84).

A "judgment" is the sentence of the law decreed and pronounced after due inquiry and deliberation. In re Lance, 106 N. Y. Supp. 211, 214, 55 Misc. Rep. 18.

A "judgment" is the application of the law to the facts found, the sentence of the law upon the record, the determination of the cause, the act of the whole court to effectuate the reasoning and findings of the opinion. Donnell v. Wright, 97 S. W. 928, 932, 199 Mo. 304.

"A 'judgment' is a decision or sentence of the law." Fay v. Sullens, 81 Pac. 426, 427, 15 Okl. 171.

A "judgment" is the sentence of the law upon the record. Howell v. Sherwood, 147 S. W. 810, 819, 242 Mo. 513; State ex rel. McManus v. Muench, 117 S. W. 25, 29, 217 Mo. 124, 129 Am. St. Rep. 536.

A "judgment" is the sentence of the law, pronounced by a court of competent jurisdiction, as the result of proceedings instituted. It is a judicial act, and, to be valid, must be pronounced by the court at a time and place appointed by law, and in the form it requires. People ex rel. Board of Com'rs of Montrose County v. Hebel, 76 Pac. 550, 19 Colo. App. 523 (citing Cooper v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 3 Colo. 318); O'Brophy v. Era Gold Min. Co., 85 Pac. 679, 683, 36 Colo. 247 (quoting and adopting the definition in Cooper v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 3 Colo. 318).

A "judgment" is but the conclusion in a syllogism having for its major and minor premises the issues raised by the pleadings and the proofs thereon. A judgment is the sentence of the law upon the record. Spindle v. Hyde, 152 S. W. 19, 24, 247 Mo. 32.

Entry

The "judgment" of a court is that which it pronounces, that is, the judicial act by which it declares the decision of the law upon the matter at issue; its entry being a ministerial act affording permanent evidence of the judicial act. Coleman v. Zapp, 151 S. W. 1040, 1041, 105 Tex. 491.

The rendition of a judgment is a judicial act, but its entry is purely ministerial, and, in absence of statute, an entry is not essential, though a judgment is essential to the validity of the entry; but, in the absence of statute, there is a distinction between a judgment and a decree, in that a "judgment" can only speak by the record, while a "decree" takes effect immediately, and its enrollment adds nothing to its force. Burke v. Burke, 119 N. W. 129, 130, 142 Iowa, 206.

A "judgment" is a judicial act of the court, and it is as final when pronounced by the court as when it is entered and recorded by the clerk as required by the statute; the entry being the ministerial act of the clerk. Central Trust Co. of California v. Holmes Min. Co., 97 Pac. 390, 391, 30 Nev. 437.

A "judgment" is a decision or sentence of the law, pronounced by the court and entered upon its docket, minutes, or record. A mere oral decision is not a "judgment," from which an appeal can be entered, until it has been put in writing and entered as such. Easterling v. State, 74 S. E. 899, 900, 11 Ga. App. 184 (citing 4 Words & Phrases, p. 3832).

The judgment issues from the court, not from the attorneys or the clerk of the court. It precedes a formula and is authority for which the formula is prepared; but the formula constitutes no part of the judgment. It is only the evidence of the existence of a judgment that enables plaintiff to have it enforced. The rendition of a judgment is a judicial act of the court pronouncing the sentence of law upon the facts in controversy as ascertained by the pleadings and verdict. Blohme v. Schmancke, 61 S. E. 1060, 1062, 81 S. C. 81 (quoting Clark v. Melton, 19 S. C. 498; 1 Black, Judgm.).

Comp. Laws 1907, § 3195, provides that the clerk must enter judgments in a book "called the judgment book." Section 3197 provides that, immediately after entering the judgment, the clerk must attach and file certain papers including "a copy of the judgment," which constitutes the judgment roll. Section 3301 provides that an appeal may be taken within six months from the entry of the judgment appealed from. Held that, before an appeal can be taken from a judgment, it must be entered in the judgment book. Robinson v. Salt Lake City, 109 Pac. 817, 819, 37 Utah, 520.

Form

An entry in the docket of a justice that I "find" that, there is due the plaintiff the sum of $58, was a "judgment" notwithstanding the use of the word "find." Fowler v. Thomsen, 94 N. W. 810, 811, 68 Neb. 578.

The "judgment" of a court is its pronouncement from the bench, the written order being merely the evidence of what the court decided, and the requirement that the judge sign it is directory. United States v. Stoller, 180 Fed. 910, 913.

An oral opinion of a judge sustaining a motion for a preliminary injunction is not a "judgment," either under the Ohio statutes or the rule of the federal courts, nor does it become effective as an order and binding on the parties until reduced to writing and entered of record, nor, in Ohio, until bond has been given and approved. Mannington v. Hocking Valley Ry. Co., 183 Fed. 133, 141.

The "judgment" contemplated as the indispensable prerequisite to a final judgment against a garnishee is a formal, duly entered judgment—one capable of present enforcement. A mere verbal announcement by a justice of the peace after the trial of a cause as to what conclusions he has reached does not in law constitute a "judgment." Such an announcement is not a judgment upon which an execution can issue, or which can be enforced in any way save by its being properly reduced to writing and signed by the justice. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. v. Brown, 60 S. E. 319, 320, 3 Ga. App. 561 (citing Hargrove v. Turner, 34 S. E. 1, 108 Ga. 580, 582).

Entry of ruling on a motion to strike or quash or on demurrer to a complaint, "Being considered by the court overruled," is but a memorandum of the ruling, and not a sufficient "judgment" to authorize review. Ferrell v. City of Opelika, 39 South. 249, 250, 144 Ala. 135 (citing Morgan v. Flexner, 16 South. 716, 105 Ala. 356; Hereford v. Combs, 28 South. 582, 126 Ala. 369; Cartledge v. Sloan, 26 South. 918, 124 Ala. 596; Bessemer Land & Improvement Co. v. Dubose, 28 South. 380, 125 Ala. 442; Dantzler v. Swift Creek Mill Co., 30 South. 674, 128 Ala. 410).

Where a court ordered, adjudged, and decreed that defendant within 10 days pay plaintiff a certain sum, instead of adopting the expression "that plaintiff do have and recover," etc., the determination was a judgment within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 577, defining a "judgment" as a final determination of the rights of the parties in an action, and it was not merely an interlocutory order, for, no particular form being prescribed by the Code, the test of the sufficiency of a judgment must be the substance, rather than its form. Hentig v. Johnson, 96 Pac. 390, 391, 8 Cal. App. 221.

A "judgment" is the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding, as expressly provided by Rev. Codes, § 6710, and while, when there is an answer, any relief may be awarded consistent with the complaint and within the issues, as expressly provided by section 6713, yet the award may not extend further, and, when trial is to a jury, the judgment must be in conformity with the verdict, as expressly provided by section 6800, and hence in ejectment, where plaintiff sought to recover only part of a tract, which part was all that the verdict awarded him, when properly construed, a judgment adjudicating title to the undisputed portion and awarding plaintiff restitution thereof was erroneous. Consolidated Gold & Sapphire Mining Co. v. Struthers, 111 Pac. 152, 155, 41 Mont. 565.

A sentence, reciting that "it is therefore ordered that defendant be confined in the penitentiary for a term of ten years," is a final "judgment," though the term "considered" is not used. State v. Branton, 87 Pac. 535, 538, 49 Or. 86.

A judgment of conviction for violating a municipal ordinance, reciting that accused stood "committed to house of correction" until a fine and costs should be "worked out at 50 cents per day," was not bad as failing to show what house was meant, or whether the fine was to be worked out outside or inside the house. City of Chicago v. Coleman, 98 N. E. 521, 522, 254 Ill. 388.

The entry of "judgment satisfied" is not a part of the judgment of the court. It is an entry of record, to be used as evidence in case there is a question about plaintiff's right afterwards to collect the judgment. This entry has no effect on plaintiff's right to appeal from the judgment itself. Preston v. Henshaw, 77 N. E. 1153, 192 Mass. 34.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1007, providing that a final "judgment" dismissing the complaint either before or after trial does not prevent a new action for the same cause of action unless it expressly declares or it appears by the judgment roll that it is rendered upon its merits, a "judgment" to be a bar to another action for the same cause of action must be a judgment on the merits, and the fact that it is on the merits must appear by express declaration, either from the judgment or elsewhere in the judgment roll. Glass v. Basin & Bay State Min. Co., 90 Pac. 753, 755, 35 Mont. 567.

Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 881, defining a "judgment," and declaring what it shall contain, a judgment consists of the facts judicially ascertained, together with the manner of ascertaining them, entered of record, and the recorded declaration of the court pronouncing the legal consequence of the facts thus judicially ascertained, and both of these parts are equally essential. Robinson v. State, 126 S. W. 276, 279, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 550.

An instrument headed, "Account made by R.," indorsed, "Within account approved," over the signature, "B., County Judge of P. County, Chickasaw Nation," and "recorded" over the signature of the clerk, is not a "judgment," defined by Mansf. Dig. Ark. § 5163 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 3368), as the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action. Howell v. Brown, 83 S. W. 170, 177, 5 Ind. T. 718.

"No technical form is required to constitute an appealable 'judgment or decree.' Its effect determines its appealability, and, if it concludes the litigation in the trial court, it is sufficient." Willis v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co., 92 S. W. 604, 606, 122 Ky. 658, 18 Ann. Cas. 74.

Power to enforce

The word "judgment," as used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 218, authorizing the issuance of a writ of garnishment without bond, where plaintiff has judgment, means a judgment unsatisfied; a judgment actually satisfied is in the sense of a statute no longer a judgment for it is functus officio. Neither would a judgment lacking the elements of finality satisfy the definition, for in such case something would remain to be determined. For a like reason, a judgment marked "satisfied" by an official entry true at the time, duly authorized and duly made and evidenced by an execution duly returned "satisfied" by an official entry true at the time, legally authorized and duly made, would not satisfy the requirement, because such a judgment is not prima facie enforceable. Masterson v. Keller, 89 S. W. 803, 804, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 333.

Award for costs

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 779, 1251, providing for the collection of awards for costs out of personal property of the person against whom they are granted, such awards are not "judgments," and constitute no liens against the debtor's real estate. Clinton v. South Shore Natural Gas & Fuel Co., 113 N. Y. Supp. 289, 290, 61 Misc. Rep. 339.

Adjudication in probate

The "judgment" referred to in Rev. Codes 1899, § 6296, providing that the probate court must render judgment either rejecting a will or admitting it to probate, is the same as or a part of the decree or final order defined in section 6233 as the final determination of the rights of the parties, which in the county court is the document signed by the judge and filed, embracing findings, conclusions, and statement of relief awarded. In re Lemery's Estate, 107 N. W. 865, 866, 15 N. D. 312.

Allowance of claim in probate

An allowance by a probate court of a claim against an estate is a "judgment." Owsley v. Central Trust Co. of New York, 196 Fed. 412, 415.

Allowance of claim in bankruptcy

Though the rule that a creditor who has not stipulated for interest and accepts payment of the indebtedness in full cannot subsequently recover interest thereon is applicable to the payment of claims by a trustee in bankruptcy, allowed claims proved in bankruptcy proceedings as required by Bankruptcy Act (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 560, § 57, and General Order 21 (89 Fed. ix, 32 C. C. A. xxii), are entitled to be treated as judgments, and, as such, to interest before and after allowance. In re John Osborn's Sons & Co., 177 Fed. 184, 186, 100 C. C. A. 392, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 887.

Allowance of claim in insolvency

In proceedings in the county court under Cobbey's St. 1907, §§ 3500-3545, relating to assignments for benefit of creditors, if the deed of assignment is void, an order allowing claims of creditors is not a judgment, and the distribution of the assigned property and the discharge of the assignee do not amount to a judicial exhaustion of the property of the assignor. Talmage v. Minton-Woodward Co., 118 N. W. 1099, 1100, 83 Neb. 29.

Allowance of damages in highway establishment proceedings

Allowances made to property owners as damages in highway establishment proceedings are not "judgments" against the county; the county not being a party to the proceedings, and no relief being asked against it. Lortz v. Davis, 97 N. E. 200, 208, 50 Ind. App. 337.

As cause of action

A "judgment" on which execution has been issued is not a cause of action within the purview of Rev. St. 1895, art. 3367, providing that limitations shall not run on a cause of action if the defendant shall be without the limits of the state; for, even though the judgment debtor be without the state and leave no property therein, execution may be issued and the judgment be kept alive and is efficacious as a second judgment. Where no execution has been issued on a judgment within 12 months from its rendition, and none can be issued because of the inhibition of Rev. St. 1895, art. 2326a, and the judgment can only be revived under scire facias provided by article 3361, the judgment is a cause of action within the purview of article 3367, stopping the running of limitations during the absence of the defendant from the jurisdiction. Spiller v. Hollinger (Tex.) 148 S. W. 338, 339.

A "judgment" is a cause or right of action of the highest nature and an action thereon accrues when the judgment is rendered. Snell v. Rue, 101 N. W. 10, 11, 72 Neb. 571, 117 Am. St. Rep. 818.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 2326a, provides that, if no execution is issued within 12 months after the rendition of a judgment, the judgment shall become dormant, and no execution shall be issued unless it shall be revived, but, where the first execution has issued within 12 months, it shall not become dormant unless 10 years shall have elapsed from the issuance of execution thereon. Article 1664 applies the same provisions to judgments of justices of the peace. Held, that as a dormant judgment is one on which execution was not issued within 12 months or one which has not been satisfied nor extinguished by lapse of time, but which has remained so long unexecuted that execution cannot now be issued upon it without first reviving the judgment, a judgment upon which judgment was first issued within 12 months after its rendition still subsists after the lapse of 10 years from execution, being the same sort of judgment as one on which execution was not issued within 12 months, and no time being prescribed in which it can be revived, it is within article 3358, providing that every action other than for the recovery of real estate shall be brought within 4 years after accrual of the right of action, and so such dormant judgment is a cause of action within the purview of article 3367, providing for a stoppage of the running of limitations on any cause of action during defendant's absence from the jurisdiction. Spiller v. Hollinger (Tex.) 148 S. W. 338, 341.

As chose in action

See Chose in Action.

Claim distinguished

The word "claim," as used in the Code, relating to the liability of stockholders of a corporation, cannot be intended to be synonymous with the word "judgment"; hence a creditor whose claim has not been reduced to judgment may maintain an action against an insolvent corporation on behalf of himself and other creditors to enforce stockholders' liabilities, as defined by Rev. Codes 1899, § 2902, §§ 5767-5770, authorizing such an action. Marshall Wells Hardware Co. v. New Era Coal Co., 100 N. W. 1084, 1086, 13 N. D. 396.

Under Kirby's Dig. §§ 6169, 6228, declaring that the rights of parties are determined by a judicial examination of the issues, and defining a "judgment" as the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action, an assessment for benefits received by the public roads in a drainage district established in pursuance of section 1414 et seq. is not a judgment against the county, though the assessment has been approved by the county court, but it is only a claim the legal right to recover which can only be determined on a presentation thereof to the county court for allowance. Rolfe v. Spybuck Drainage Dist. No. 1, 140 S. W. 988, 990, 101 Ark. 29.

As a debt of record

"It is a well-settled proposition that a 'judgment' for money rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction creates a debt of record for which the person against whom it is rendered is liable, and an action may be maintained thereon against the judgment debtor. Such a judgment, rendered either in an action arising out of contract or tort, until set aside by some legal method, is conclusive evidence of a fixed, ascertained, and legitimate debt of the person against whom it is rendered." Heinl v. Terre Haute, 66 N. E. 450, 452, 161 Ind. 44 (citing Davidson v. Nebaker, 21 Ind. 334, 83 Am. Dec. 350; Gould v. Hayden, 63 Ind. 443; Becknell v. Becknell, 10 N. E. 414, 110 Ind. 42; City of Hammond v. Evans, 55 N. E. 784, 23 Ind. App. 501; Black, Judg. §§ 1, 7, 11; Freem. Judgm. § 217).

Decision in criminal proceeding

The "judgment" is the sentence of the court upon the verdict or finding of guilty. People v. Markham, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1092, 1093, 114 App. Div. 387 (citing People v. Bradner, 13 N. E. 87, 91, 107 N. Y. 1, 11; People v. Bork, 78 N. Y. 346, 350; People v. Canepi, 74 N. E. 473, 474, 181 N. Y. 398, 402); People ex rel. Dauchy v. Pitta, 103 N. Y. Supp. 258, 259, 118 App. Div. 457.

The time at which a judgment or sentence of imprisonment shall be carried into execution, forms no part of the "judgment" which is the penalty of the law, as declared by the court, while the direction with respect to the time of carrying it into effect is in the nature of an award of execution, so that, where the penalty is imprisonment, the sentence may be satisfied only by the actual suffering of the imprisonment imposed, unless remitted by death or some legal authority. In re Collins, 97 Pac. 188, 190, 8 Cal. App. 367; Ex parte Eldridge, 106 Pac. 980, 981, 3 Okl. Cr. 499, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 625, 139 Am. St. Rep. 967 (quoting and adopting definitions in Ex parte Ridley, 106 Pac. 553, 3 Okl. Cr. 350, 26 L. R. A. [N. S.] 110, and In re Collins, 97 Pac. 188, 8 Cal. App. 367).

In common parlance the words "conviction" and "judgment" are used interchangeably, and this is done in Acts 27th Gen. Assm. p. 58, c. 109, authorizing a longer term of imprisonment for burglary and larceny in case of two prior convictions referred to in the indictment. State v. Smith, 106 N. W. 187, 188, 129 Iowa, 709, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 539, 6 Ann. Cas. 1023.

Since the Code of Criminal Procedure requires judgment to be entered in criminal cases as a matter of course on the return of a verdict, the incompetency of a witness based on his conviction of crime cannot be established by producing only such a judgment. To show such incompetency the record of a conviction showing sentence must be produced. If that which is called the judgment in the criminal procedure of the state were, in its legal effect, the same as a judgment of conviction at common law, such judgment would be proper evidence of incompetency; but at common law the judgment was the final act of the court adjudging the guilt, and included that which is now treated separately as the sentence. It was pronounced after the court had heard what the accused could say in bar of it, and, when it had been rendered, the sanction of both the court and jury was given to the conviction. Under the statutory procedure the judgment adjudges accused to be guilty and fixes the punishment, and is merely the consequence of the verdict, and the court in rendering it finally determines nothing as to the sufficiency of the procedure and evidence to justify the conviction. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnson, 81 S. W. 4, 5, 98 Tex. 76.

Court and Practice Act 1905, § 473, provides that the Supreme Court may, on petition within one year, grant to a person aggrieved by any order, decree, decision, or judgment of the superior court, who has failed to file or prosecute a petition for a new trial because of lack of evidence newly discovered, the right to file a motion for a new trial. Gen. Laws 1896, c. 251, § 3, for which such section was substituted, affords such remedy in the case of "indictment or other criminal prosecutions in which verdict or judgment shall have been rendered against petitioner." Held, that the word "judgment" in section 473 was used in its broad sense, and included a sentence in a criminal prosecution, and the fact that the application of the remedy to criminal prosecutions might cause inconvenience in cases in which the sentence had been wholly or partly executed would not be ground for not applying it to such prosecutions. State v. Lynch, 68 Atl. 315, 28 R. I. 463.

Decree

The final "decree" of a court of equity is often alluded to as its "judgment"; the word "judgment" being used as synonymous, whether applied to a decree in chancery or a judgment at law. Hudson Trust Co. v. Boyd, 84 Atl. 715, 717, 80 N. J. Eq. 267.

Since by the Code distinctions are abolished, judgments at law and decrees in equity are all "judgments." Matthews v. Wilson, 67 N. E. 280, 282, 31 Ind. App. 90.

The terms "judgment" and "decree," while strictly speaking applicable to suits at law, and to suits in chancery, are usually employed as convertible terms, especially as the statute provides that all general provisions, phrases, and expressions shall be liberally construed in order that the true intent and meaning of the Legislature may be fully carried out. Lamson v. Hutchings, 118 Fed. 321, 323, 55 C. O. A. 245.

As used in B. & C. Comp. § 59, permitting a defendant, against whom service of summons by publication is ordered, to defend after judgment upon good cause shown, and section 396, providing that chapter 5, which includes section 59, shall apply to suits in equity, the term "judgment" includes "decrees," so that a decree of mortgage foreclosure, based on service by publication, may be vacated, and the defendant therein allowed to defend. Waymire v. Shipley, 97 Pac. 807, 808, 52 Or. 464 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3835).

The rendition of a judgment is a judicial act, but its entry is purely ministerial, and, in absence of statute, an entry is not essential, though a judgment is essential to the validity of the entry; but, in the absence of statute, there is a distinction between a judgment and a decree, in that a "judgment" can only speak by the record, while a "decree" takes effect immediately, and its enrollment adds nothing to its force. Burke v. Burke, 119 N. W. 129, 130, 142 Iowa, 206.

A claim evidenced by a final decree in equity is a debt established by "judgment," within Court and Practice Act, § 1027, giving judgment creditors a right of action on administration bonds. Probate Court of City of Pawtucket v. Williams, 78 Atl. 382, 386, 80 R. I. 144, 19 Ann. Cas. 554.

While decrees in equity often extend to matters beyond the purview of judgments at law, they are nevertheless judgments within Code Civ. Proc. § 1000, defining a judgment as the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding, and, so far as the decree awards a recovery of money, it is in nowise different from judgments at law. Raymond v. Blancgrass, 93 Pac. 648, 651, 36 Mont. 449, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 976.

A decree of divorce, which required the husband to pay to the wife a specified sum as a part of her share of the community property of the parties and attorney's fees, and a specified sum per month for the support of the children of the parties, is a "judgment" within Rem. & Bal. Code, § 457, making judgments bear interest and the sums awarded bear interest; there being no distinction under the Code between "decrees" and "judgment." Smith v. Smith, 115 Pac. 166, 167, 63 Wash. 288.

In view of code, § 2998, declaring that all decrees for money may be enforced by execution, and sections 3002-3007, requiring clerks of courts to issue executions on judgments rendered in their respective courts and section 2970, declaring the word "judgment" to include decrees, a master authorized to sell land under a decree to enforce a vendor's lien thereon is authorized to issue an execution for unpaid balance, though such decree does not, in terms, provide therefor. Hyder v. Butler, 52 S. W. 876, 877, 108 Tenn. 289.

Gen. St. 1887, § 1145, provided that writs of error from judgments and decrees of the superior court might be brought to the Supreme Court of Errors to review matters of law only, and by Pub. Acts 1897, c. 194, the words "and decrees" were dropped from section 1145. Held, that such amendment did not prevent the suing out of a writ of error to review a decree in equity, since the words "judgments of the superior court," as used in section 819, Gen. St. 1902, include final decisions of that court in equity. Cary v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 78 Atl. 426, 429, 83 Conn. 690.

Discharge in bankruptcy

A discharge in bankruptcy is nothing more than a "judgment" of the federal court by which it is granted and must be proved when offered in evidence in the same manner as any other judgment. Hamon v. Foust, 150 S. W. 418, 127 Tenn. 32.

As evidence of indebtedness

See Evidence of Indebtedness.

Exclusion of alien

A certificate, made by a United States commissioner, that a certain Chinese person was tried before him for being unlawfully in the United States and discharged, is not a "judgment," nor copy of a judgment, and is not admissible in evidence to prove the fact so recited. Ex parte Hung Foot, 174 Fed. 70, 71.

Findings of court

A "judgment" is a final determination of the rights of parties in an action, and a finding of facts by the court corresponding to the verdict of a jury is not a judgment. Nelson v. Schmoller, 110 N. W. 658, 659, 77 Neb. 717.

Same—Finding and certificate on inquiry of insanity

An inquest of insanity held by two justices of the peace upon the alleged insanity of any person or inhabitant of their county, and their certificate that said person therein named is insane and a proper subject for treatment in the hospital for the insane, is not a judgment of a court or equivalent thereto, nor is such finding and certificate equivalent to a verdict of a jury or a finding of a court that such person is of unsound mind and incapable of managing his own estate, its purpose being to establish the fact that such person is entitled to admission to a hospital for the insane for treatment. Leinss v. Weiss, 71 N. E. 254, 255, 256, 83 Ind. App. 344.

Judgment in special proceeding

Since a summary proceeding is a special proceeding and not an action, there can, properly speaking, be no "judgment" in summary proceedings, although the final order is in effect a judgment and is frequently referred to as such. Seymour v. Hughes, 105 N. Y. Supp. 249, 250, 55 Misc. Rep. 248.

In Code Civ. Proc. § 1340, authorizing an appeal to the Appellate Division from a final judgment rendered by a county court in certain cases, the word "judgment" means a judgment in an action which is clearly distinguishable from a special proceeding, such as a summary proceeding to recover possession of lands. Barrus v. Parsons, 96 N. Y. Supp. 359, 361, 109 App. Div. 634.

The word "judgments," as used in Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 190, subd. 1, providing that appeals may be taken to the Court of Appeals from judgments or orders finally determining actions or special proceedings and from orders granting new trials or exceptions where the appellants stipulate that upon affirmance judgment absolute shall be rendered against them, referred only to a judgment in an action, and the words "special proceed-

"orders" relate to the antecedent word "orders," and hence a final order to be reviewed must be an order in special proceedings. Strictly speaking, there can be no judgment absolute in a special proceeding at all, because a special proceeding is terminated by an order and not by a judgment eo nomine. Thus a final termination of the rights of the parties to a special proceeding in the Surrogate's Court is styled indifferently "final order" or a "decree," but not a "judgment." In re Gibson, 88 N. E. 1100, 1102, 195 N. Y. 466 (quoting Van Arsdale v. King, 49 N. E. 866, 155 N. Y. 325).

Same—Condemnation proceedings

A "judgment" confirming the award in a condemnation proceeding and vesting the title in plaintiff therein is a "judgment" within the statutes requiring the payment of interest on judgments. Brunn v. Kansas City, 115 S. W. 446, 448, 216 Mo. 108.

Judgment by default

A garnishee petitioned the Supreme Court, under Court and Practice Act 1905, § 471, and Gen. Laws 1909, c. 297, § 1, for trial as to the question of its liability as garnishee in a case in which no trial had been had, but in which judgment was rendered by default, and showed that, by mistake, an officer of the corporation garnishee failed to set out in his account or return that he was an officer of the corporation garnishee, and that because of such mistake in the filing of its account it was charged as garnishee with the amount of judgment against defendant in the action. Held that, as the garnishee became liable by force of statute and not by an adjudication of the court, the fact that he was "charged by his default" could not be regarded as a "judgment," and it might show the filing of the return, or any defense it had in the pending action. Premium Tea Co. v. Malloville, 79 Atl. 825, 826, 32 R. I. 335.

As judgment lien

The word "Judgment," in Bankr. Act July 1, 1893, c. 541, § 67f, 30 Stat. 565, providing that all levies, judgments, attachments, or other liens obtained through legal proceedings against an insolvent within four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy against him shall be void in case he is adjudged a bankrupt, refers only to the lien of the judgment, the judgment remaining an assignable claim against the estate. Davis v. Jewett Bros. & Jewett, 97 N. W. 16, 17, 17 S. D. 410.

Justice court judgment

In Code, art. 93, § 114, providing that in paying the debts of a decedent an administrator shall pay all taxes in preference to other debts, and next claims for rent in arrear for which a distress might be levied by law, and then judgments and decrees shall next be wholly discharged, the priority provision is not limited to judgments or decrees of courts of record, but extends to and includes a judgment of a justice of the peace. Newcomer v. Beeler, 82 Atl. 460, 116 Md. 647.

Judgment against contractor as judgment against subcontractor

A "judgment" against a contractor for injuries to a pedestrian falling over an obstruction in a street caused by a subcontractor in the performance of his contract is not a judgment against the subcontractor within a policy stipulating that insurer will indemnify the subcontractor against loss for injuries to employees and the public, since a loss is not sustained until liability has been established against the subcontractor by a judgment, and the fact of notice to defend the action against the contractor merely makes the judgment against him conclusive evidence as against the subcontractor as to the issues actually litigated. Creem v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 126 N. Y. Supp. 555, 560, 141 App. Div. 493.

As judgment establishing mechanic's lien

The word "judgment," in an undertaking given to discharge a mechanic's lien under Lien Law (Laws 1897, p. 523, c. 418, § 20), conditioned to pay any judgment which may be recovered in an action to enforce the lien, means a judgment that a valid lien exists, and hence the sureties on an undertaking given to discharge a mechanic's lien, and conditioned to pay any judgment which may be recovered in an action to enforce the lien, are not liable, unless the judgment establishes the validity of the lien. Casey v. Connors Bros. Const. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 1103, 53 Misc. Rep. 101.

License

"The order of a county court granting a license to keep a dram shop is a 'judgment.'" Weber v. Lane, 71 S. W. 1099, 1102, 99 Mo. App. 69.

Naturalization

"It is settled by the authorities that an order admitting an alien to citizenship is a 'judgment' of the same dignity as any other judgment of a court having jurisdiction. This being so, such judgment must possess the same qualities as any other judgment of a court having jurisdiction, and consequently it cannot be set aside, except in some recognized lawful mode." Hence, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing a motion to set aside a judgment only in case it is made within ten months after judgment is taken, where a motion to annul an order admitting an alien to citizenship was made more than three years after the original order, the appearance of the naturalized citizen and his consent to the granting of the motion would not give the court jurisdiction. In re Tinn, 84 Pac. 152, 148 Cal. 773, 118 Am. St. Rep. 354.

Nisi judgment

While a nisi judgment is in some senses a "judgment," it is not a judgment within Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 1193 (Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 1143), which allows district and county attorneys and clerks of courts a 5 per cent. commission on all fines, forfeitures, etc., collected for the state or county on judgments; and hence the incumbent in the office of clerk of a district court when final judgment was rendered under forfeiture of a bail bond, and not his predecessor, who was the incumbent when nisi judgment was obtained, is entitled to the commission. McHugh v. Reese (Tex.) 149 S. W. 743, 745.

Opinion and reasons

"A 'judgment' or decree is a declaration of the law applicable to the facts upon the issue involved, and, when the court rendering it has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, it is binding upon them until modified or set aside in the manner prescribed for that purpose. * * * The opinion forms no part of the judgment." Where the terms of a decree are in conflict with recitals of fact in the opinion, the decree is controlling. State v. Gray, 71 Pac. 978, 979, 42 Or. 261.

Order

An order, which takes the form of a final judgment in a cause, is termed a "judgment," as distinguished from an "order" made during the pendency of the suit. City of Chicago v. Coleman, 98 N. E. 521, 522, 254 Ill. 338.

An order by which the findings and conclusions of a special master, to whom was referred a contested application for a discharge, were affirmed, and his report "adopted as the opinion, conclusions, and judgment of the court," is not a "judgment granting or denying a discharge," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 25a (2), 30 Stat. 553, and is not appealable. Ragan, Malone & Co. v. Cotton & Preston, 195 Fed. 69, 70, 115 C. C. A. 576.

An order of the district court, quashing a resolution of county commissioners designating a newspaper as the official county newspaper and as the one in which the notice and delinquent tax list shall be published, is not a "judgment," the entry by the clerk of a judgment signed by him being a necessary step, and is not appealable. Darby v. Board of Com'rs of Steele County, 123 N. W. 662, 663, 109 Minn. 258.

An order staying an action to foreclose a mortgage on which interest and part of the principal are overdue, as authorized by Rem. & Bal. Code, § 1126, on payment into court of amount due with costs, determines the action and provides a final judgment therein, and is appealable within section 1716, subd. 6, authorizing appeals from an order determining the action and preventing a final judgment. Knissell v. Brunet, 111 Pac. 894, 895, 60 Wash. 610.

A "judgment" is the decision or sentence and law pronounced by a court or other competent tribunal on the matter contained in the record. It is the final consideration and determination of a court of competent jurisdiction on the matters submitted to it. It includes an order of the probate court on an administrator to pay over a sum of money, or to sell property belonging to the estate to pay debts. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 496, 504, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072.

An order of a recorder in the city of New Orleans, in a proceeding under an ordinance relating to juvenile vagrants for the commitment of such a person to the House of the Good Shepherd, is not a "judgment." State ex rel. Caillouet v. Marmouget, 85 South. 529, 533, 111 La. 225.

An order of notice is not a judgment, so as to preclude a probate court from amending its records by inserting an order of notice of appointment of executors. Smith v. Whaley, 61 Atl. 173, 175, 27 R. I. 185.

An order denying motions for findings and judgment on the ground that there has been a settlement of the controversy is an order striking the cause from the calendar, and is not a judgment, though such order recited the facts, and ordered and adjudged that the action was fully settled, as a judgment, as defined by Rev. St. 1898, § 2882, is the final determination of the rights of the parties in the action. Dr. Shoop Family Medicine Co. v. Schowalter, 98 N. W. 940, 941, 120 Wis. 668.

An unconditional order made under Cebey's Ann. St. 1903, § 1228, that a garnishee pay money into court, is a "judgment," within the meaning of the statutes, making judgments, when docketed in the office of the clerk of the district court, a lien on the land of the debtor situated in the county. Johnson v. Samuelson, 117 N. W. 470, 471, 82 Neb. 201, 130 Am. St. Rep. 666.

The words "judgment or final order," in Comp. Laws 1897, § 10642, providing that any "judgment or final order" in a suit in garnishment may be set aside or removed to the Supreme Court in like manner and with the same effect as other personal actions, include an order adjudging that a writ of garnishment be quashed and the garnishee defendant released from liability with costs to defendant, since the order is in effect and in fact a judgment against plaintiff and in favor of garnishee defendant finally disposing of the garnishment proceedings with costs and attorneys' fees against plaintiff to be taxed, and the order is reviewable by the Supreme Court on error. Recor v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 102 N. W. 643, 644, 139 Mich. 156.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1003, defining an "order" as every direction of a court or judge made or entered in writing and not included in a judgment, the determination by the judge of a superior court to dismiss proceedings to compel a witness to answer questions and complete his deposition, contained in an order virtually denying the motion, was not a "judgment," within the meaning of section 577, defining a "judgment" as a final determination of the rights of the parties in the action or proceeding. In re Scott, 96 Pac. 385, 389, 8 Cal. App. 12.

In legal parlance an order of court which apparently finally determines the rights of parties in the action or suit is spoken of as a "judgment" or decree. In fact, so general are these terms in the common understanding that the word "valid," "voidable," or "void" is usually prefixed to them in order to mark their relative value. Schlarb v. Castaing, 97 Pac. 289, 291, 50 Wash. 331.

The words "judgment" and "order," in Code, § 542, subd. 3, which provides that the Supreme Court may reverse, vacate, and modify a judgment of a district court for errors appearing on the record, and in reversing such "judgment" or order may reverse, vacate, or modify any immediate order involving the merits of the action or any part thereof, are used somewhat indiscriminately, so much so as to suggest that any specific independent part of a "judgment" is appealable. Kremer v. Kremer, 90 Pac. 998, 999, 76 Kan. 134.

Motions are not original and independent proceedings, but are only incidental steps taken in all classes of cases pending; and the rulings of the court thereon are not "judgments." State ex rel. Shackelford v. McElhinney, 145 S. W. 1139, 1143, 241 Mo. 592.

Under L. O. L. § 549, providing that any party to a judgment or decree may appeal therefrom, and section 548, defining a "judgment" as an order affecting a substantial right and determining the action or suit, or an order setting aside a judgment and granting a new trial, an order denying a motion for new trial is not appealable. Macartney v. Shipherd, 117 Pac. 814, 815, 60 Or. 133, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1257.

In view of Mills' Ann. Code, § 371, providing that "every direction of a court or judge made or entered in writing and not included in a judgment is denominated an order," and section 442 providing that a judgment includes "all final orders, decrees and determinations in an action," a certificate of a clerk of the district court authenticating the record of a judgment appealed from, which states it to be a "true, perfect, and complete transcript of all the files and of all 'orders' of court made and entered in the" case, is sufficient as including the record of the "judgment." State Bank of Chicago v. Plummer, 102 Pac. 1082, 1083, 46 Colo. 71.

Code Civ. Proc. § 577, defines a "judgment" as a final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding. Section 1716 declares that all issues of fact joined in probate proceedings must be tried in conformity with the requirements of article 2, c. 2, of this title, and that judgments therein on issues joined, as well as for costs, may be entered and enforced by execution or otherwise by the court as in civil actions; and section 963 authorizes an appeal from a judgment or order against or in favor of setting apart property or making an allowance to a widow. Held, that an order denying an alleged widow's petition for a homestead allowance, based on her claim of widowhood, on which issue is joined, is not a mere order made on a motion in a pending proceeding, but a "judgment," to which the doctrine of res judicata applies. Harrington's Estate, 81 Pac. 546, 547, 147 Cal. 124, 109 Am. St. Rep. 118.

A "judgment" is defined by Rev. St. § 2882, as the final determination of the rights of the parties in the action. There can be but one judgment in one action, and that must finally dispose of the rights of the parties. In a garnishment where a judgment against the garnishee was reversed on appeal, an order thereafter made, requiring plaintiff to restore to the garnishee the amount collected on the judgment, was not a "judgment," within the statute prohibiting appeals from judgments for less than $100, but was appealable as a final order affecting a substantial right made in special proceedings or upon a summary application in an action after judgment, within Laws 1895, c. 212, subd. 2. Lewis v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 72 N. W. 976, 97 Wis. 368.

The words "judgment of the court," in Sess. Laws 1903, c. 59, p. 74, § 4, providing that appeals from the "judgment of the court," in a tax foreclosure, may be taken to the Supreme Court at any time within 30 days, seem to be broad enough to comprehend any final judgment rendered in the action against the owner of the land whereby he is deprived thereof and would apply to an appeal, from an order in such action, to vacate the judgment, though the litigation is between a private certificate holder and owner of the property. Brown v. Davis, 78 Pac. 779, 36 Wash. 185.

An appeal from an order continuing to the hearing, an injunction restraining defendant from trespassing on land, pending litigation, is not an appeal from the "judgment" but from a judicial order. The term "order" is sometimes applied to an interlocutory judgment or decree, and, under the Codes of the several states, interlocutory judgments and decrees are no longer recognized, and "orders" have been substituted therefor. Carter v. White, 46 S. E. 983, 984, 134 N. C. 466, 101 Am. St. Rep. 853.

Order dismissing action

An order dismissing a petition for a bankruptcy adjudication is a "judgment refusing to adjudge defendant a bankrupt," within Bankr. Act, § 25a, making such a judgment appealable. Stevens v. Nave-McCord Mercantile Co., 150 Fed. 71, 73, 80 C. C. A. 25.

"Judgments" of dismissal and for costs are within the rule that a judgment by a court having jurisdiction of the case cannot be collaterally attacked. Clark v. Southern Can Co., 81 Atl. 271, 274, 116 Md. 85, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 980.

Order dismissing appeal

Rev. St. 1889, § 2882, defines a judgment to be the final determination of the rights of the parties in the action. A judgment is essentially different from an order dismissing an appeal from a decision of a county board disallowing a claim against the county, and such a dismissal is an order from which an appeal may be taken under section 3062. Ellis v. Barron County, 98 N. W. 232, 233, 120 Wis. 390.

Order for execution or sentence

An order appointing a day for execution, made in a capital case after the sentence of death has been pronounced, is not a "judgment," within Criminal Procedure Act of 1898 (P. L. 1898, p. 885) § 55, or within the rule that, when the term in which final judgment was regularly perfected has expired, the court has no power to grant a new trial unless it be shown that the judgment was rendered without jurisdiction or was obtained by fraud. State v. Tolla, 63 Atl. 338, 339, 73 N. J. Law, 249.

Order for judgment

A decision is in some respects like the verdict of a jury; it affords a proper basis upon which a judgment may be entered, but is not itself a "judgment." So, also, an order for judgment made by the court is not itself a "judgment." Kennedy v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 93 N. W. 71, 72, 119 Iowa, 123.

A minute order denying the relief prayed for in the complaint is not a judgment from which an appeal can be taken, under Rev. Codes, § 4907. Bissing v. Bissing, 115 Pac. 827, 828, 19 Idaho, 777.

Order of sale

An order for the sale of real estate by a guardian and the confirmation thereof in an ex parte proceeding, although different in form from judgments in adversary proceedings, has the force and effect of a final judgment and is a "judgment," within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 295, cl. 4, limiting the time within which actions may be brought for the recovery of realty, sold by guardians, etc., under a judgment specifically directing the sale. Sell v. Kelsner, 96 N. E. 812, 814, 49 Ind. App. 101.

"An order of seizure and sale is not a 'judgment' for all purposes and in the full sense of the term, but it is a decree of a court in aid of the execution of an obligation which, by law, is given the effect of a judgment quoad the particular property to which it refers. It is a judgment in so far that an appeal will lie therefrom for the review of the question of the sufficiency of the evidence upon which it is based." Huber v. Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate, 35 South. 889, 893, 111 La. 747.

An order of seizure and sale is not a "judgment" in the legal sense of the term, and an action to annul a sale made under executory process is not an action to annul a judgment, and as such subject to the prescription of one year. Pons v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 47 South. 449, 450, 122 La. 156.

A judgment of sale for whatever is due is not a judgment against the property for a definite or specific amount. The statute contemplates a judgment against the property, and an order for the sale of the same to satisfy the judgment, and the entry of a "judgment of sale" is rather an order for the enforcement of a judgment than a judgment itself. Gage v. People, 69 N. E. 80, 82, 205 Ill. 547.

Wright*, 53 S. E. 251, 260, 124 Ga. 596.

JUDGMENT BOOK

In a court it was the practice for the clerk, as each order for judgment was made, to promptly write out the judgment with a typewriter on separate sheets of paper of uniform size, to sign the judgment and affix the seal of the court, to number the sheets consecutively according to the chronological order in which the judgments were written out, and to place and securely keep these sheets in their proper order in a compact parcel in an inclosed box or case in the form of a book, labeled "judgment book," until there should be sufficient of them to make a bound volume, when they were permanently bound together, preserving the same order and same paging. The sheets as kept constituted a "judgment book," within Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, §§ 5479, 5487, 5488, which required the clerk of the district court to keep among the records of the court a judgment book in which the judgment in each case is to be entered by the clerk upon the order of the court or judge. Lynch v. Burt, 132 Fed. 417, 426, 87 C. C. A. 305.

JUDGMENT BY CONFESSION

See Decree Pro Confesso.

See, also, Confession of Judgment.

A judgment by a justice, reciting that the cause coming on to be heard, plaintiff and defendant present, and the petition of the plaintiff being read by his attorney, defendant confesses judgment for the amount claimed, is a "judgment by confession," and not by default. Wade v. Swope, 81 S. W. 471, 472, 107 Mo. App. 875.

JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT

A "judgment by default" is equivalent to a judgment on confession, and no appeal lies therefrom. Kieley v. Reinhardt, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1012 (citing Adams v. Oaks [N. Y.] 20 Johns. 282).

"A 'judgment by default' does not involve the merits of the case. The issues of fact or law therein are not decided. The default is based solely upon the fact that, whatever case the party had, he did not appear at the proper time to present it." In re Stillman's Petition, 67 Atl. 4, 5, 28 R. I. 298.

A "default" is the failure to take the steps required in the progress of an action, and a "default judgment" is a judgment against a party failing to take such steps. Peterson v. Kissell, 125 N. W. 808, 809, 148 Iowa, 516.

A default on which a judgment may be rendered is an admission of every traversable allegation of the declaration or complaint necessary to plaintiff's cause of action, also, that defendant is the person named in the writ and intended to be served, and that the court has acquired jurisdiction of his person, and has jurisdiction of the cause of action, and also constitutes an admission of the due execution of the instrument sued on. Utah Ass'n of Credit Men v. Bowman, 113 Pac. 63, 67, 38 Utah, 326, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 384.

"Judgment by default," in its strict sense, is rendered when the previous default of defendant has obviated the necessity of proof. When a defendant omits to plead within the time allowed for that purpose, or fails to appear at the trial, he "makes default," and the judgment entered in the former case is a "judgment by default." Leahy v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 107 N. W. 1060, 1062, 144 Mich. 304, 115 Am. St. Rep. 443 (quoting and adopting definition in And. Law Dict., tit. "Default"; and Burrell, Dict.).

Under Code, § 3788, which specifies when a judgment by default may be entered, a judgment entered in the absence of defendant on issues joined and on evidence adduced is not a "judgment by default"; and section 3790, providing for the setting aside of default, has no application in such case. Acheson v. Inglis Bros., 135 N. W. 632, 633, 155 Iowa, 239.

A judgment of the circuit court, rendered in his absence on appeal by defendant from a justice's judgment against him, after two appearances and trial before the justice and subsequent appearance and continuance obtained on his motion in the circuit court, is not a default judgment, within Code 1906, c. 184, § 5, providing that the court in which there is a judgment by default may, on motion, reverse such judgment for any error for which an appellate court might reverse it, and any error in respect thereof is reviewable only on writ of error to the Supreme Court of Appeals. Dadisman v. West Virginia Eastern Telephone Co., 70 S. E. 855, 856, 69 W. Va. 43.

A "judgment by default and inquiry" carries only a judgment for a penny and costs, since such a judgment merely admits a cause of action while the precise character of the cause of action and the extent of defendant's liability remains to be determined by a hearing in damages and final judgment thereon. Osborn v. Leach, 45 S. E. 783, 784, 133 N. C. 427 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Black, Judg. § 698).

Where defendant appears, and is only prevented from trying his case by reason of the refusal of the justice to permit the filing of his answer, a judgment against him is not a "default judgment." S. Perceval, Inc. v. Ernest H. Fleischmann Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 139, 140, 78 Misc. Rep. 252.

JUDGMENT CREDITOR

The receiver or general creditors of an insolvent corporation are not "judgment creditors," within P. L. 1898, pp. 699, 700, §§ 71, 72, relating to conditional sales of chattels, and protecting only judgment creditors, subsequent purchasers, and mortgagees, without notice. Smith v. Hotel Ritz Co., 70 Atl. 187, 74 N. J. Eq. 616.

JUDGMENT DEBT

A "judgment debt" is one which is evidenced by matter of record. Hudson Trust Co. v. Boyd, 84 Atl. 715, 716, 80 N. J. Eq. 267.

JUDGMENT DEBTOR

Public officers are, when proceeded against to judgment, "judgment debtors," within Code Civ. Proc. § 710, providing that a transcript of a judgment may be filed with the Controller of the State or auditor of any municipal corporation from "which money is owing to" the judgment debtor, whereon the controller or auditor shall draw his warrant in favor of the creditor, or pay so much money into court as will cancel the judgment, and which "belongs to or is owing to the judgment debtor." Ruperich v. Baehr, 75 Pac. 782, 784, 142 Cal. 190.

JUDGMENT DOCKET

The fact that a clerk's certificate to the transcript of a judgment docket stated that the transcript was a correct copy of the original "judgment lien docket," while such record is denominated by B. & C. Comp. § 584, a "judgment docket," did not affect the lien of the judgment created on the filing of such transcript, under section 205, providing that, on the filing of such a transcript, the judgment shall be a lien on all the real estate of defendant within the county where the transcript is filed, where it appeared from the entry itself that it was made in a book in which the judgments and decrees of the court were docketed, and that it substantially conformed to the requirements of section 584 as to the entries to be made on the judgment docket. Budd v. Gallier, 89 Pac. 638, 640, 50 Or. 42.

JUDGMENT FILE

"Judgment files" are only indirectly the creations of statute. The statutes provide that all courts of record shall keep a record of their proceedings, and cause the facts on which they found their final judgments and decrees to appear on the record. Gen. St. 1902, § 763. To secure a proper compliance with this requirement, we have sections 94, 96, of the rules of court. In the first of these sections it is provided that in all actions the judgment shall be formally written out within one week after its rendition; the paper so prepared to be known as the "Judgment File." There is recognized a clear distinction, not only between the judgment and the writing which is required to be made to evidence it, but also between the rendition of the judgment and the preparation of this writing at some subsequent time. Appeal of Bulkeley, 57 Atl. 112, 113, 76 Conn. 454.

JUDGMENT FOR FRAUD

See, also, Fraud.

A judgment for costs in a criminal prosecution is not a debt based on fraud, so as to prevent its release by discharge of the judgment debtor in bankruptcy. Olds v. Forrester, 102 N. W. 419, 420, 128 Iowa, 456.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, subd. 2, 30 Stat. 550, providing that judgments in actions for fraud or obtaining property by false pretensions or false representations are not released by a discharge in bankruptcy, comprehends judgments rendered in actions the gist of which is the actual fraud of defendants, and in determining whether an action is in such category the courts will look to the pleadings and judgment, and if the relief granted in the judgment is based on actual, as distinguished from constructive, fraud of the bankrupt, he will not be discharged from its obligation though the action may not be strictly ex delicto in form. Moody v. Muscogee Mfg. Co., 68 S. E. 604, 609, 184 Ga. 721, 20 Ann. Cas. 301.

JUDGMENT FOR MONEY

See Money Judgment.

JUDGMENT FOR NECESSARIES

A judgment for rent of a place of residence, with interest from the date on which payment of rent was demanded and refused, is a "judgment for necessities," within Rev. Laws, c. 168, § 80, authorizing equitable process after judgment for necessities furnished to the judgment debtor or his family, both for the rent recovered and the interest thereon, though interest is allowed as damages for the detention of the principal, and though the declaration must allege that a demand has been made. Darrigan v. Williams, 84 N. E. 797, 798, 198 Mass. 457.

JUDGMENT FOR RECOVERY OF PROPERTY OR FOR ENFORCEMENT OF LIEN

Under Rev. Codes, § 4475, execution may issue after death of the judgment debtor, where the judgment is for the recovery of real or personal property, or for the enforcement of a lien. Where an action is brought to collect a debt, and an attachment was levied and judgment entered, and before execution the judgment debtor dies, an execution cannot issue, for the reason that the judgment is not one for recovery of real or personal property, or the enforcement of a lien, within such section. Rose v. Dunbar, 115 Pac. 920, 921, 20 Idaho, 1, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1046.

JUDGMENT IN PERSONAM

A "judgment in personam" is in form as well as substance between the parties claiming the right involved, and that it is so inter partes appears by the record itself. Stiller v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 124 Pac. 595, 598, 34 Okl. 45 (quoting and adopting definition in Woodruff v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 65).

JUDGMENT IN REM

A "judgment in rem" is a judgment against a thing as contradistinguished from a judgment against a person or a judgment whereby a status is determined. Galveston

Chamber of Commerce v. Railroad Commission of Texas (Tex.) 187 S. W. 737, 746.

"A 'judgment in rem' is an adjudication pronounced upon the status of some particular subject-matter by a tribunal having competent authority for that purpose. It differs from a judgment in personam in this: That the latter judgment is in form as well as substance between the parties claiming the right, and that it is so inter partes appears by the record itself. A judgment in rem is founded on a proceeding instituted, not against the person as such, but against or upon the thing or subject-matter itself whose state or condition is to be determined. It is a proceeding to determine the state or condition of the thing itself, and the judgment is a solemn declaration of the status of the thing, and it ipso facto renders it what it declares it to be." Stiller v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 124 Pac. 595, 598, 34 Okl. 45 (quoting and adopting definition in Woodruff v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 65).

JUDGMENT LIEN

A "judgment lien" is a mere incident and cannot exist independent of the judgment. When the judgment becomes dormant, the lien ceases to exist. Harvey v. Godding, 109 N. W. 220, 222, 77 Neb. 289, 124 Am. St. Rep. 841.

JUDGMENT NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO

See Non Obstante Veredicto.

JUDGMENT OF A COURT

Though the court in making an assessment in a proceeding under Ky. St. § 4260, for assessment of omitted property, acts ministerially, and not judicially, it acts as a court, and its decision is the judgment of a court, within Civ. Code Prac. § 518, declaring the power of the court, in which a judgment has been rendered, to vacate it for unavoidable casualty or misfortune preventing the party from appearing or defending. Commonwealth v. Weissinger, 136 S. W. 875, 878, 143 Ky. 368.

JUDGMENT OF ACQUITTAL

See Acquit—Acquittal.

JUDGMENT OF HIS PEERS

The words "judgment of his peers," as used in constitutions, is usually understood to imply a trial by a jury of 12 men. Lincoln v. Smith, 27 Vt. 323, 362. Or a trial by jury according to the recognized and established mode of proceeding. Jelly v. Dils, 27 W. Va. 267, 274, 275.

JUDGMENT OF LAND DEPARTMENT

JUDGMENT OF NONSUIT

See Nonsuit.

JUDGMENT OF REVIVOR

Revivor of a dormant judgment under our statute has no other effect than to reinstate the judgment, and authorize execution to collect the same. Tierney v. Evans, 138 N. W. 140, 141, 92 Neb. 330.

A "judgment of revivor" is not the creation of an original judgment obligation, but is a recognition of the existence of the original judgment and a continuation of its force. Schneider v. Maney, 145 S. W. 823, 824, 242 Mo. 36.

JUDGMENT ON THE MERITS

See Merits.

JUDGMENT ROLL

A statement on a motion for new trial is no part of the "judgment roll," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1196, providing that the pleadings, a copy of the verdict or findings, all bills of exceptions, all orders, matters, and proceedings deemed excepted to without bill of exceptions, and a copy of any order made on demurrer, or relating to a change of parties, and a copy of the judgment, shall constitute the judgment roll. Powell v. May, 74 Pac. 80, 29 Mont. 71.

A "judgment roll" consists of such papers as constitute the record of the case in the court below. It should contain only such papers as the statute makes a part of that record. Featherman v. Granite County, 72 Pac. 972, 974, 28 Mont. 462.

An order of the district court sustaining a motion to dismiss an action appealed to it from a justice's court is properly a part of the judgment roll, within Rev. Codes, § 6806. Mettler v. Adamson, 99 Pac. 441, 443, 38 Mont. 198.

The judgment roll consists of such papers as are necessary to support the judgment thereupon entered, and where an action for negligence was brought against two defendants and by stipulation and consent, was discontinued as against one of the defendants, though the order of discontinuance was not made until after judgment was entered against the other defendant, it is not necessary to include in the judgment roll a copy of the answer of the defendant as to whom action was discontinued. Bohnhoff v. Fischer, 132 N. Y. Supp. 603, 604, 147 App. Div. 672.

An indictment is a proper part of a "judgment roll" introduced to prove a former conviction. Ball v. United States, 147 Fed. 32, 39, 78 C. C. A. 126 (citing Kirby v. People, 15 N. E. 83, 123 Ill. 436).

Where an appeal is taken from the judgment on the judgment roll alone and defendant has answered, the judgment roll, under the express provisions of Rev. Codes, § 4456, subdiv. 2, as amended by Laws 1909, p. 76, consists of the pleadings, a copy of the verdict or the findings of the court or referee, a copy of an order made on demurrer or relating to a change of parties, and a copy of the judgment, but bills of exceptions are no part of the judgment roll. Haas v. Teters, 113 Pac. 96, 97, 19 Idaho, 182.

The "judgment roll," on an appeal from an order settling the accounts of an executor, consists of the petition and account and reports accompanying the same, objections and exceptions thereto, findings of the court, and the order settling the account. Laymance v. Utter, 81 Pac. 658, 659, 1 Cal. App. 104.

Though, where there is a return to a writ of review, the petition for the writ can serve no purpose on appeal, unless embodied in a bill of exceptions, the appeal being on the judgment roll, which, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1077, consists of the judgment, writ, and return thereto, yet a demurrer to the petition being in effect to adopt the facts in the petition as the return, the petition, on appeal from the judgment sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the writ, may be brought up and considered as the return, and therefore as part of the judgment roll. Stoner v. City Council of City of Los Angeles, 97 Pac. 692, 694, 8 Cal. App. 607.

Under Comp. Laws 1907, § 3197, defining what papers shall constitute the judgment roll, a petition for removal of the cause is not a part of such roll, and, to make it a part of the record on appeal, it and the proceedings thereon must be incorporated into the bill of exceptions, though, under the federal practice, the petition is part of the record without a bill. Neesley v. Southern Pac. Co., 99 Pac. 1067, 1068, 35 Utah, 259.

Though Civil Practice Act, § 340, provides, among other things, that if any written opinion be placed on file, in entering judgment or making an order below, a copy shall be furnished, certified in like manner, etc., a written opinion and findings of the lower court do not constitute any part of the "judgment roll," but are only intended to aid the appellate court in the determination of an appeal. Werner v. Babcock, 116 Pac. 357, 358, 34 Nev. 42.

An order granting leave to amend an answer is no part of the judgment roll, within Code Civ. Proc. § 670, subd. 2, declaring what shall constitute the judgment roll, and it need not be entered thereon. Segerstrom v. Scott, 116 Pac. 690, 692, 16 Cal. App. 256.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1237, providing that the summons, pleadings, final judgment, interlocutory judgment, if any, and each paper on file, and a copy of each order which in any way involves the merits or necessarily affects the judgment shall be included in the "judgment roll" affidavits, and notice of a motion for a reference are not a part of the "judgment roll." Schrader v. Fraenckel, 99 N. Y. Supp. 137, 113 App. Div. 395.

The term "judgment roll" is applicable only to civil cases. Hence, in taxing costs against the county, from which a change of venue in a criminal action was taken, it was error to include in the clerk's fees a charge for a judgment roll. Green Lake County v. Waupaca County, 89 N. W. 549, 554, 113 Wis. 425.

Comp. Laws, § 5103, provides that, when there is an answer, the judgment roll shall consist of the summons, pleadings, or copies thereof, and a copy of the judgment, with any verdict, etc. Section 4756 defines "verdict" as including findings of fact by a judge or referee. Held, that court's findings of fact are a part of the "judgment roll," and need not be included in a bill of exceptions. Colonial & U. S. Mortg. Co. v. Bradley, 55 N. W. 1108, 1109, 4 S. D. 158.

JUDICIAL

See Quasi Judicial.

Acts of courts

"The word 'judicial' is defined: (1) Pertaining to courts of justice as judicial powers. (2) Practice in the distribution of justice, as judicial proceedings. (3) Proceeding from a court of justice as a judicial determination. A judicial investigation proceeds after notice and eventuates in a judgment which is the final determination of the rights of the parties unless reversed by an appellate tribunal. The necessity of notice in the inception and conclusive character of the determination constitute the test as to what proceedings are judicial." Kalbfell v. Wood, 92 S. W. 230, 233, 193 Mo. 675 (quoting and adopting definition in Home Ins. Co. of St. Paul v. Flint, 13 Minn. 244 [Gil. 228]).

JUDICIAL ACT

When it becomes necessary to determine a question of fact or law, the act is "judicial." People v. Salsbury, 96 N. W. 936, 938, 941, 134 Mich. 537.

As act done by court

"To render the proceedings of special tribunals, commissioners, or municipal officers judicial in their nature, they must affect the rights of property of the citizens in a manner analogous to that in which they are affected in the proceedings of courts acting judicially. * * * Where proceedings are judicial, if no right of appeal is given certiorari will lie, but the fact that no right of appeal is given has no bearing on the question whether the proceedings are judicial in their nature." State ex rel. Grant v. Iverson, 100 N. W. 91, 92, 92 Minn. 355 (quoting State ex rel. Hardy v. Clough, 67 N. W. 202, 64 Minn. 378).

As exercise of judicial power

A "judicial act" is "an act done by a member of the judicial department of government in construing the law or applying

It to a particular state of facts presented for the determination of the rights of the parties thereunder; an act done in furtherance of justice, or a judicial proceeding by a person having the right to exercise judicial authority; an act that determines what the law is, and what the rights of the parties are, with reference to transactions that have been had; an act that undertakes to determine questions of right or obligation; an act done or performed in the exercise of judicial power; the performance of a duty which has been confided to judicial officers to be exercised in a judicial way" (quoting 23 Cyc. p. 1614). Consequently the functions exercised by the court under Laws 1907, c. 538, providing for a hearing and determination by the Supreme Court of an election contest, are judicial in their nature, since the proceedings involve the determination of whether the petition presented conforms to the requirements of the statute, and states facts sufficient to justify the procedure authorized, the approval of the form and sufficiency of the bond, the judicial determination of the legality of each ballot cast, which is disputed or challenged, or the making of orders embodying the results and conclusions reached, and those necessary to carry the determination into effect. Metz v. Maddox, 105 N. Y. Supp. 702, 712, 121 App. Div. 147.

Discretion involved

"Judicial acts" involve the exercise of discretionary power or judgment, and are not confined to the jurisdiction of judges. City of Biddleford v. Yates, 72 Atl. 335, 337, 104 Me. 506, 15 Ann. Cas. 1091.

A "quasi judicial duty" is one lying in the judgment or discretion of an officer other than a judicial officer. The functions of the board of liquidation of the city debt of the city of New Orleans are not strictly judicial, nor, on the other hand, ministerial, but are quasi judicial. When an officer is charged with looking into and acting upon facts not in a way which it specifically directs but after a discretion in its nature judicial, the function is termed "quasi judicial." An act is judicial when it requires the exercise of judgment or discretion by one or more persons or by a corporate body when acting as public officers in an official character in a manner which seems to them just and equitable. State ex rel. Board of Liquidation of City Debt v. Briede, 41 South. 487, 489, 117 La. 183 (citing Bishop, Cont., § 785; Thropp, Pub. Off. § 533; Grider v. Tally, 77 Ala. 422, 54 Am. Rep. 65; People v. Board of Sup'rs [N. Y.] 35 Barb. 414).

A proceeding, authorized by Acts 31st Leg. c. 17, §§ 9a, 9b, 9c, 9f, 9g, for the revocation by the Comptroller of Public Accounts of liquor licenses for violations of the law by liquor dealers is not a suit by the state for a "forfeiture" or "penalty," within Const. art. 5, § 8, conferring on the district court exclusive jurisdiction of such suits; for, though an official act may be judicial as involving the exercise of discretion and judgment, yet, when discretion is conferred on an executive officer in the discharge of administrative or executive duties, the acts of the officer are not "judicial." Baldacchi v. Goodlet (Tex.) 145 S. W. 325, 328.

Legislative act distinguished

An act is a "judicial" one where it undertakes to determine a question of right or obligation or of property as the foundation on which it proceeds. A "judicial act" determines what the law is and what the rights of parties are in reference to transactions already had; a "legislative act" determines what the law shall be in future cases. Newell v. Franklin (R. I.) 74 Atl. 1006, 1011; In re County Com'rs of Seventh Judicial Dist., 98 Pac. 557, 560, 22 Okl. 435; Tyson v. Washington County, 110 N. W. 634, 636, 78 Neb. 211, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 350 (citing and adopting definition in Cooley, Const. Lim.); (quoting and adopting definition in Sinking Fund Cases).

"A 'judicial act' is one which imposes burdens, or confers privileges, in specific cases, according to the discretionary judgment of some person or board, as to the propriety of imposing the burden or granting the privilege, in the specific case." A municipal ordinance providing for the paving of a street at the cost of the property benefited thereby to the extent of the benefit, being a judicial and not a legislative act, is invalid because passed without notice to the property owners affected thereby. Sears v. Atlantic City, 64 Atl. 1062, 1063, 78 N. J. Law, 710, 118 Am. St. Rep. 724.

The official action of a legal body, which is the result of judgment and discretion, is a "judicial act" rather than a legislative one, and so, too, an act which determines the rights and duties of parties under existing law with relation to existing facts is said to be judicial rather than legislative. Gulnac v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Bergen County, 64 Atl. 998, 1000, 74 N. J. Law, 543, 122 Am. St. Rep. 405 (citing Supervisors of Onondaga v. Briggs [N. Y.] 2 Denio, 26, 39; Mills v. City of Brooklyn, 32 N. Y. 489, 495; East River Gas-Light Co. v. Donnelly [N. Y.] 25 Hun, 614; Harrington v. Township of Woodbridge, 56 Atl. 141, 70 N. J. Law, 28, 29). See, also, Grider v. Tally, 77 Ala. 422, 425, 54 Am. Rep. 65. See Mabry v. Baxter, 11 Heisk. (58 Tenn.) 682, 690; also the Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 761, 25 L. Ed. 496.

State courts, in reviewing orders of the Public Service Commission, act "judicially," and not legislatively. Where the Public Service Commission, on complaint after hearing and the taking of evidence, entered an order requiring that complainants stop its interstate trains at a station, the Commission's act was legislative and not "judicial." Deleware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Stevens, 172 Fed. 595, 603, 606.

The passage of a city ordinance granting a franchise to a public service corporation involves legislative action only, and such action cannot be reviewed by writ of certiorari. Tenny v. City of Columbia, 92 Pac. 895, 896, 48 Wash. 150.

That which distinguishes a "judicial" from a "legislative" act is that the one is a determination of what the law is in relation to some existing thing already done or happened, while the other is a predetermination of what the law shall be for the regulation of future cases falling under its provision. Tyson v. Washington County, 110 N. W. 634, 636, 78 Neb. 211, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 350.

Ministerial act distinguished

"The distinction between ministerial and judicial and other official acts seems to be that where the law prescribes and defines the duty to be performed with such precision and certainty as to leave nothing to the exercise of discretion or judgment the act is ministerial, but where the act to be done involves the exercise of discretion or judgment in determining whether the duty exists it is not to be deemed merely ministerial." Burnam v. Terrell, 78 S. W. 500, 501, 97 Tex. 309 (quoting Commissioner of General Land Office v. Smith, 5 Tex. 471, 479); Rainey v. Ridgway, 43 South. 843, 844, 151 Ala. 532 (citing Flournoy v. City of Jefferson, 17 Ind. 169, 79 Am. Dec. 468; Tennessee & C. R. Co. v. Moore, 36 Ala. 371; Morton v. Comptroller General, 4 S. C. 430; Commissioner of General Land Office v. Smith, 5 Tex. 471; Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 8 Pet. [33 U. S.] 291, 8 L. Ed. 949); State ex rel. Higdon v. Jenks, 35 South. 60, 61, 138 Ala. 115.

The "rendition of a judgment" in a court of record is essentially a "judicial act," and, if performed when the court is not in session (that is, out of term), it is open to a fatal jurisdictional objection. Meade v. Scribner, 85 Pac. 729, 730, 10 Ariz. 33.

The rendition of a judgment by the court is a "judicial act," but the entry thereof by the clerk is not, but is a ministerial act. Jaqua v. Harkins, 82 N. E. 920, 922, 40 Ind. App. 639.

The act of a state board of health, in revoking a license to practice medicine, is not a "judicial action," and cannot be regulated by the writ of prohibition. State ex rel. McAnnally v. Goodier, 93 S. W. 928, 931, 195 Mo. 551.

Allowance of accounts

The determination and allowance by the circuit court of the expenses and fees of a coroner's inquest, as authorized by Comp. Laws, § 11828, providing that the expense of an inquest shall be paid by the state, etc., on the account of expenses being first allowed by the circuit court, involve the exercise of judicial discretion and judgment, and constitute a "judicial act." In re Toepel, 102 N. W. 369, 370, 139 Mich. 85.

Appointment or removal of officer

The removal of an officer under a statute authorizing a mayor and city council to remove such officer for specified causes, upon hearing and evidence, is a "judicial act," as distinguished from a political or administrative act, and the right of mayor and city council to try him under the statute should be denied; the judicial power being vested in the courts. State ex rel. Lee v. Chaney, 102 Pac. 133, 137, 23 Okl. 788; Christy v. Kingfisher, 76 Pac. 135, 141, 13 Okl. 585.

The determination of the civil service commission of a city in classifying the position of battalion chief in the city fire department in the competitive class, made without hearing any testimony, but after arguments of counsel and the protests of citizens expressing their views and the views of officers of other municipalities on the practicability of subjecting applicants to the position to a competitive examination, though involving the exercise of judgment, is not "judicial," and therefore is not reviewable on certiorari. People ex rel. Schau v. McWilliams, 77 N. E. 785, 786, 185 N. Y. 92.

Approval of bond

The approval or refusal to approve a bond by a justice of the peace, under Code 1907, § 4281, providing that an appeal in unlawful detainer does not prevent the issuance of a writ of restitution unless defendant executes bond with sufficient surety, in a sum to be ascertained by the justice of the peace, is a "judicial act," within the rule that a judicial officer is not liable for damages for erroneous rulings in his judicial capacity, while acting within his jurisdiction. King v. Sawyer, 55 South. 320, 321, 1 Ala. App. 439.

Canvass

Inspectors of an election, in determining what ballots shall be counted for or against any candidate or any question voted on, or what ballots shall be rejected, "act judicially." People ex rel. Haverly v. Hanes, 90 N. Y. Supp. 61, 62, 44 Misc. Rep. 475.

Decision as to jurisdiction

Where a judge is called upon by the facts before him to say whether his authority extends over the matter, such an act is a "judicial" one, and such officer is not liable in a suit to the person affected by his decision, whether such decision be right or wrong; but when no facts are presented, or only such facts as have neither legal value nor color of legal value in the affairs, then in that event for the magistrate to take jurisdiction is not in any manner the performance of a "judicial act," but simply the commission of an official wrong. Rush v. Buckley, 61 Atl. 774, 779, 100 Me. 322, 70 L. R. A. 464, 4 Ann. Cas. 318 (quoting and adopting definition in Grove v. Van Dryn, 44 N. J. Law, 654, 43 Am. Rep. 412).

Taking acknowledgment of deed

The taking and certification of an acknowledgment is a "judicial act." Byrd v. Bailey, 53 South. 773, 169 Ala. 452, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 331. Contra. Ardmore Nat. Bank v. Briggs Machinery & Supply Co., 94 Pac. 533, 538, 20 Okl. 427, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1074, 129 Am. St. Rep. 747, 16 Ann. Cas. 133.

Taxation

Where a city ordinance authorizes the assessment of omitted property by the city council on notice of hearing to the owner, the action of the council in assessing omitted property is purely ministerial, although it has mixed certain discretion as to finding values and the like, which is not reviewable, and which quality is sometimes called "judicial," though it is not "judicial" in the sense that it is the act of a court; and hence such ordinance is not violative of the constitutional limitations on the Legislature to create any judicial tribunals other than the courts expressly named in that instrument. Muir's Adm'r v. City of Bardstown, 87 S. W. 1096, 1098, 120 Ky. 739.

The assessment of property for purposes of taxation is not a "judicial function," and a statute providing for an appeal from the county board of equalization to the district court is unconstitutional and void. Silven v. Board of Com'rs of Osage County, 92 Pac. 604, 605, 76 Kan. 687, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 716, 14 Ann. Cas. 163.

Valuation of property for taxation is not such an exercise of "judicial authority" as necessarily involves the right of appeal to a judicial tribunal; taxes being recoverable without judge or jury. State v. Bley, 50 South. 263, 264, 162 Ala. 239.

JUDICIAL ACTION

Rev. St. 1909, § 3674, providing that, when the county seat of a county has been destroyed by the erosion of the banks of any river, the county court may select a suitable county seat where all courts of the county shall be held, etc., excludes the theory of the existence of power to establish a temporary county seat where the courthouse has been destroyed by fire, and there are no suitable buildings at the county seat, but the act of the county court in removing the offices and records to another place on such grounds is not judicial and is not reviewable on certiorari; "judicial action" being an adjudication on the rights of parties brought before the court by notice or process and on whose claim some decision or judgment is rendered. State ex rel. Powell v. Shocklee, 141 S. W. 614, 617, 237 Mo. 460.

JUDICIAL ADMISSION

"A 'judicial admission' is a waiver of proof." Where there are two suits between the same parties on different causes of action, the pleadings in the first suit are admissible as evidence in the second suit, but are not conclusive. Commonwealth v. Monongahela Bridge Co., 64 Atl. 909, 912, 216 Pa. 108, 8 Ann. Cas. 1073.

JUDICIAL BUSINESS

Service of notice of appeal is not "judicial business," and such notice may be served on a legal holiday other than Sunday. Ferrari v. Beaver Hill Coal Co., 95 Pac. 498, 54 Or. 210.

The term "judicial business," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 134, does not include an election to determine whether a proposed municipal corporation should be created, and hence such election may be held on a legal holiday named in Pol. Code, § 10, for on holidays, transactions not within the statutory prohibition may be carried on as on other days. People ex rel. Russell v. Town of Loyalton, 82 Pac. 620, 621, 147 Cal. 774.

JUDICIAL CONFESSION

A confession, made by accused on preliminary examination before a magistrate, is a "judicial confession," and is sufficient to justify a conviction, under Kirby's Dig. § 2385, providing that a confession, unless made in open court, will not warrant a conviction unless corroborated by proof of the commission of the offense. Skaggs v. State, 113 S. W. 346, 349, 88 Ark. 62, 16 Ann. Cas. 622.

The provisions of the Louisiana Code, establishing estoppel by "judicial confession," which is defined to the declaration which the party or his special attorney makes in a judicial proceeding, must be construed in its relations to other provisions of law which determined the capacity of the individual and the validity of his acts. One cannot confess away that which in the interest of public order and good morals he is prohibited by law from alienating. Ackerman v. Larnier, 40 South. 581, 586, 116 La. 101.

JUDICIAL CONTEMPT

A "judicial contempt" is any willful disregard of the authority of the court, rightfully exercised. Powell v. State, 48 Ala. 154, 156.

JUDICIAL COURT

A justice's court in Illinois is a "judicial court" with power to permit amendments, and to restore lost records. Treharne v. Matson, 93 N. E. 553, 556, 46 Ind. App. 705.

JUDICIAL DECISION

As law, see Law.

A register who has exclusive jurisdiction of the probate of wills and testaments under Act March 15, 1832 (P. L. 136), is a judge, and the admission of a will to probate by him is a "judicial decision." In re Kern's Estate, 61 Atl. 573, 575, 212 Pa. 57 (quoting Holliday v. Ward, 19 Pa. 485, 57 Am. Dec. 671).

JUDICIAL DECREE

A decree, entered by agreement, and not as the result of findings by the court, is not in a strict legal sense a "judicial decree," but is in the nature of a solemn contract between the parties entered by the court. Hohenadel v. Steele, 86 N. E. 717, 719, 237 Ill. 229.

JUDICIAL DICTUM

See Dictum.

JUDICIAL DISCRETION

See, also, Discretion.

"Judicial discretion" implies the liberty to act as a judge should act, applying the rules and analogies of the law to the facts found after weighing and examining the evidence, to act upon fair judicial consideration, and not arbitrarily. State v. Foren, 97 Pac. 791, 793, 78 Kan. 654.

"Judicial discretion" means the exercise of final judgment by the court in the decision of such questions of fact as from their nature and the circumstances of the case come peculiarly within the province of the presiding judge to determine, without the intervention, and to the exclusion of the functions of a jury." United States v. Mel-drum, 146 Fed. 390, 391 (quoting and adopting definition in Bundy v. Hyde, 50 N. H. 116, 120); Jacques v. Chandler, 62 Atl. 713, 715, 73 N. H. 376 (quoting definition in Darling v. Town of Westmoreland, 52 N. H. 401, 408, 13 Am. Rep. 55).

"Judicial discretion" is not the arbitrary will of the judge, but is a legal discretion to be exercised in discerning the course prescribed by law, which when discerned it is the duty of courts to follow. Alexander Smith & Sons Carpet Co. v. Ball, 122 N. Y. Supp. 187, 188, 137 App. Div. 100.

By "judicial discretion" is never intended the whim or caprice of the magistrate nor a course of judicial action inconsistent with itself in dealing with cases essentially alike. Hubbard v. Hubbard, 58 Atl. 969, 970, 77 Vt. 73, 67 L. R. A. 969, 107 Am. St. Rep. 749, 2 Ann. Cas. 315.

"Judicial discretion" does not mean a self-willfulness that may prompt any and every act, but discretion guided by the law (see what the law discloses upon a certain statement of facts, and then decide in accordance with the law), so as to do substantially equity and justice. People v. Steinhart, 93 N. Y. Supp. 1026, 1031, 47 Misc. Rep. 252.

The term "judicial discretion" may be defined generally as a discretion which is sound and guided by fixed principles of law, while a nonjudicial discretion, such as may be vested in the officers of a corporation, does not admit of the application of fixed rules of law, but depends wholly upon the will and judgment of the person exercising it. Conway v. Minnesota Mut. Life Ins. Co., 112 Pac. 1106, 1107, 62 Wash. 49, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 148.

"Judicial discretion," in its broadest meaning, is that sense of justice from which has arisen a variety of legal and equitable rules, and in its narrower sense is the capacity of a judge to understand and apply the law of the land to the particular facts, so that the legal rights of the parties may be declared and enforced. Scott v. Marley, 137 S. W. 492, 493, 124 Tenn. 388.

Whether an appeal from an interlocutory judgment of the justice of the peace should be dismissed is a question addressed to the court assuming jurisdiction, and its action thereon is a "judicial" determination of a question incident to the proceedings and properly arising therein, and hence its determination to assume jurisdiction was not void but merely irregular, and therefore not subject to collateral attack. Jennings v. Manden, 102 S. W. 945, 946, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 520.

Granting or denying injunction

Where a suit to enjoin a change of the grade of a way involved the relative rights of the parties in the way owned in common, to be determined not only by their original rights under conveyances, but also by the subsequent acts of the parties, an order continuing a temporary injunction halting defendant in work incidental to the improvement of his land, but not immediately necessary for any present use thereof, was within the trial court's judicial discretion, and should not be disturbed on appeal. Alexander Smith & Sons Carpet Co. v. Ball, 122 N. Y. Supp. 187, 189, 137 App. Div. 100.

Granting specific performance

The "judicial discretion" to be applied in determining whether a contract will be specifically enforced must be a sound legal discretion. Stevens v. Trafton, 93 Pac. 810, 813, 36 Mont. 520.

JUDICIAL DUTY

A "judicial duty," within the meaning of the Constitution, is such a duty as legitimately pertains to an officer in the department designated by the Constitution as judicial. An act is none the less ministerial because the person performing it may have to satisfy himself that the state of facts exists under which it is his right and duty to perform the act. The act of a state board of health in revoking a license to practice medicine and surgery is not a judicial action, and cannot be regulated by the writ of prohibition. State ex rel. McAnally v. Goodier, 93 S. W. 928, 931, 195 Mo. 551.

Where an officer's duty necessarily requires examination of evidence in the decision of questions of law and fact, the duty is not ministerial, but judicial or discretionary. An act, however, is none the less ministerial because the person performing it may have to satisfy himself that a state of facts exists under which it is his right and duty to perform the act, though in doing so he must to some extent construe the statute by which the duty is imposed. Stephens v. Jones, 123 N. W. 705, 708, 24 S. D. 97.

JUDICIAL FUNCTION

"That a function may be held to be 'judicial,' it must be exercised in determining the merits of the issue. The criterion that, if the action of the tribunal calls for the exercise of judgment and discretion, it is judicial is unsound. While it is true that there must be exercise of judgment or discretion to make a function judicial, yet it is not true that every function wherein judgment and discretion are exercised is a judicial one. The act of a board of supervisors in letting a contract for public printing is not a judicial one. Hammer v. Smith, 94 Pac. 1121, 11 Ariz. 420.

The mere fact that a ministerial duty is imposed on a judge by law does not necessarily make it a "judicial function." Such functions are determined by the intrinsic character of the duty or act itself, and not by the character of the official designated to perform it. "When an officer acts in both a judicial and ministerial capacity, he may be compelled to perform the ministerial acts in a particular way, but, when he acts in a judicial capacity, he can only be required to proceed; the manner of his doing so is left entirely to his judgment." Hamma v. People, 94 Pac. 328, 328, 42 Colo. 401, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 621, 15 Ann. Cas. 655 (quoting Webster; Bouv. Law Dict. p. 416; 27 Cyc. p. 793).

The exercise of the Attorney General's discretion to bring quo warranto proceedings against persons usurping public office, vested in him by Code Civ. Proc. § 1948, providing that the Attorney General may maintain an action on his own information or of a private person against any person usurping, intruding into, or unlawfully holding or exercising within the state a franchise or public office, is not a "judicial function," and therefore a determination by him not to bring such a proceeding is no bar to him or his successor bringing the proceeding subsequently. People v. McClellan, 103 N. Y. Supp. 148, 148, 118 App. Div. 177.

The state board of license commissioners exercises "judicial functions" in deciding that licensees have violated the license law and that they are no longer entitled to enjoy a license, and, where the board has jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter, its judgment is valid until set aside on appropriate proceedings. Barry v. Little, 68 Atl. 40, 41, 74 N. H. 319 (citing State v. Corron, 62 Atl. 1044, 73 N. H. 434, 6 Ann. Cas. 486).

"Determining whether a rate has been legally established, or whether the same is or is not reasonable, is a 'judicial function.'" Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Indiana, 78 N. E. 338, 344, 38 Ind. App. 439. But the fixing of a rate by a city, when not a matter of contract, is a legislative or administrative rather than a "judicial function." Pocatello v. Murray, 173 Fed. 382, 385 (citing Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 14 Sup. Ct. 1047, 154 U. S. 397, 38 L. Ed. 1031; Southern Pacific Co. v. Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., 101 Fed. 779, 42 C. C. A. 12).

The function exercised by voters or a representative body, upon whose approval the inception of a franchise grant by the Legislature is made conditional, is not the exercise of a "judicial function." It is the exercise of the function of "referendum." Duffield v. Ashurst, 100 Pac. 820, 825, 12 Ariz. 390.

JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Proceedings for the probate of a will are not a civil action, but a judicial inquiry to ascertain whether the instrument before the court is the last will and testament of the deceased, and section 4 of the Evidence Act is inapplicable. In re Veazey's Will, 85 Atl. 176, 177, 80 N. J. Eq. 466.

"A 'judicial inquiry' investigates, declares, and enforces liabilities as they stand on present or past facts, and under laws supposed already to exist." The establishment of railway passenger rates by the Virginia corporation commission is not res judicata in a suit which seeks injunctive relief on the ground that the rates are confiscatory, though the commission, for some purposes, is a court enacted only after hearing an investigation, since proceedings to establish rates do not involve a "judicial inquiry." Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 69, 211 U. S. 210, 53 L. Ed. 150.

JUDICIAL NOTICE

"Judicial notice" is a term used to express the duty or power of the courts to accept for the purposes of the trial the truth of certain well-known facts without requiring proof thereof. City of Chicago v. Williams, 98 N. E. 666, 668, 254 Ill. 360.

"Judicial notice" takes the place of proof, and is of equal force, and as a means of establishing facts it is superior to evidence, as it stands for proof, and fulfills the object which evidence is designed to fulfill, and makes evidence unnecessary. Beardsley v. Irving, 71 Atl. 580, 581, 81 Conn. 489. See, also, Gay v. City of Eugene, 100 Pac. 306, 308, 53 Or. 289, 18 Ann. Cas. 188.

The doctrine of judicial notice is not a hard and fast one, but is modified by judicial discretion, the courts not being bound to take judicial notice of matters of fact; whether they will do so or not being dependent on the nature of the subject, the issue involved, and the apparent justice of the case. City of St. Louis v. Niehaus, 139 S. W. 450, 452, 236 Mo. 8.

"That a matter is 'judicially noticed' means merely that it is taken as true without the offering of evidence by the party who should ordinarily have done so. But the opponent is not prevented from disputing the matter by evidence if he believes it disputable." Thus where, in a proceeding to abate a dam as a public nuisance, it is alleged that the stream is navigable, the court, on demurrer to the complaint, cannot take judicial notice that the stream is nonnavigable and prevent the introduction of proof to show the contrary. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Norcross, 112 N. W. 40, 43, 182 Wis. 534, 122 Am. St. Rep. 998.

"'Judicial notice' does not depend on the actual knowledge of the judges. When the fact is alleged, they must investigate and may refresh their recollection by resorting to any means which they may deem safe and proper." In a proceeding for the violation of a liquor injunction, the court can take judicial notice of the decree violated, although the presiding judge has no personal knowledge or remembrance thereof. Haaren v. Mould, 122 N. W. 921, 923, 144 Iowa, 296, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 404 (quoting and adopting definition given in State ex rel. Marr v. Stearns, 75 N. W. 210, 72 Minn. 200).

In the interpretation of an ambiguous statute, courts should examine, in the light of the history of its enactment, as disclosed by the legislative journal, the contemporary conditions and situation of the people, the economic and sociologic policy of the state, its Constitution and laws, and all other matter of common knowledge within the limits of their jurisdiction. The consideration of this knowledge, without proof of the facts, is generally termed "judicial notice" for the want of a better expression; but the term means no more than that courts, in construing the law, will bring to their aid those facts which are known by all well-informed persons because they are matters of public concern. State v. Kelly, 81 Pac. 450, 452, 71 Kan. 811, 70 L. R. A. 450, 6 Ann. Cas. 298.

The appellate tribunal should not extend the rule regarding "judicial notice" further than is proper to follow it in the court of first instance. In the appellate court the evidence directly pertinent should be well known to all parties in interest. Courts will not take judicial notice of statutes under which a company is organized, not offered in evidence and not proven. The district court is without authority to take judicial notice of proceedings in a case in another jurisdiction. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 41 South. 492, 493, 117 La. 199 (citing Jones on Evidence, verbo "Judicial Notice"; overruling Graham v. Williams, 21 La. Ann. 596).

"What is known need not be proved." Peterson v. Standard Oil Co., 106 Pac. 337, 339, 55 Or. 511, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 625 (quoting and adopting definition in Town of North Hempstead v. Gregory, 65 N. Y. Supp. 887, 53 App. Div. 350, and citing Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 37, 23 L. Ed. 200; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378).

JUDICIAL OFFICER

Any judicial officer, see Any.

Other judicial officers, see Other.

Assessors of taxes and county clerks are "ministerial officers," and, while in some respects their acts may be construed as judicial, they are not "judicial officers," as that term is used in the Constitution. They have no power to inflict penalties for violation of laws or to determine whether a law has been violated and adjudge persons guilty. Cleveland, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. People, 72 N. E. 725, 726, 212 Ill. 638.

Attorney

Acts 1880, p. 18, No. 11, making it unlawful for any "judicial" or ministerial officer of any of the courts of the state to go bail for any prisoner, etc., refers exclusively to such officers as judges, clerks, sheriffs, and their deputies, etc., as directly constitute the machinery of the court, and does not prohibit an attorney from becoming a surety on his client's bail bond, though an attorney is an "officer of the courts" generally. State v. Babin, 50 South. 825, 828, 124 La. 1005, 18 Ann. Cas. 837.

A city attorney is an executive or "judicial officer," within Comp. Laws § 11312, punishing the receiving of bribes by such officers. People v. Salisbury, 96 N. W. 936, 938, 941, 134 Mich. 537.

Coroner

A coroner who, by Laws 1887, p. 400, c. 321, Laws 1899, p. 940, c. 464, has been given the powers of a magistrate in a limited class of cases, with the right to issue warrants, hold examinations, and commit or discharge an accused, but can exercise that jurisdiction only when some person has been killed or dangerously wounded by another, is a "judicial officer" within the meaning of Pen. Code, § 72, relating to the acceptance of bribes by such officers. People v. Jackson, 84 N. E. 65, 66, 191 N. Y. 293, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1173, 14 Ann. Cas. 243.

Under Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 34-37, vesting judicial power in enumerated tribunals, not including the coroner, provided for in article 9, §§ 10, 11 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 262, 263), a coroner, though exercising discretion in determining whether an inquest shall be held, is not a judicial officer, and though Rev. St. 1899, §§ 6642, 6643 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3299), require a coroner's verdict to be in writing, and to be signed by the coroner and the jurors, a coroner's verdict is not competent in an action on a mutual benefit certificate to prove the cause of death, though it may be competent as a part of the proof of his death. Queatham v. Modern Woodmen of America, 127 S. W. 651, 654, 148 Mo. App. 33.

Justice of the peace

A justice of the peace, in disposing of any cause, civil or criminal, which has been properly brought before him, holds a court of record, and acts as a "judicial officer." McVeigh v. Ripley, 58 Atl. 701, 702, 77 Conn. 136.

Mayor

Const. art. 3, distributes the powers in government into three departments—the legislative, executive, and judicial—and article 6, § 1, vests the judicial power in the courts of the state. St. Louis City Charter, art. 4, §§ 5, 15, 16, 47, and the ordinances adopted pursuant thereto, empower the mayor to enforce the laws and ordinances of the city, and to remove officials occupying positions in other departments of the city government on due notice and hearing before him. Held, that the mayor was not a judicial officer within the Constitution while exercising the power of removing city officers under the charter, his functions being merely quasi judicial, and the charter provisions empowering him to remove officers were not unconstitutional on that ground. State ex rel. Heimbürger v. Wells, 109 S. W. 758, 760, 210 Mo. 601.

Municipal board of health

Greater New York Charter, § 1173 (3 Laws 1901, p. 500, c. 466), relating to the city board of health, and providing that the actions of the board shall at all times be regarded as in their nature judicial and be treated as prima facie just and legal, and that all meetings of the board in every suit and proceeding be taken to have been duly called and regularly held, and all orders and proceedings to have been duly authorized, unless the contrary be proved, and that courts shall take judicial notice of the seal of the board and the signature of its secretary and chief clerk, does not change the members of the board from administrative to "judicial officers." People ex rel. Lodes v. Department of Health of City of New York, 82 N. E. 187, 189, 189 N. Y. 187, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 894.

Recorder

The framers of the Constitution, in providing for the continuance in office of "judicial officers," had in view those who to a general intent and purpose were such and not those who were incidentally and casually intrusted with some attribute of judicial character. The recorder of the municipal court of the city of Bangor was not, in the sense contemplated by the Constitution, a "judicial officer," and therefore might be removed from office by the Governor and council. Morrison v. McDonald, 21 Me. 550, 555.

Referee

A referee, under the Constitution and statutes is a judicial officer appointed by the circuit court, and, being substituted for the judge, has all the powers of the court over the case referred to him. Robertson v. Wilson, 51 South. 849, 850, 59 Fla. 400, 138 Am. St. Rep. 128.

Senator

Under Const. art. 4, § 1, dividing the powers of government into the executive, legislative, and judicial departments, and article 5, §§ 1, 9, 11, 16, 17, vesting the legislative authority in the General Assembly, making each House a judge of the election and qualifications of its members, with power to expel a member, and providing that the government and other state and judicial officers shall be liable to impeachment, and article 8, § 1, vesting the judicial power in the Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, in the Supreme Court, district courts, etc., a state senator is a member of the legislative department, though the Senate when sitting as a court of impeachment is a court exercising judicial functions, with power to judge the law and the evidence, and the term "judicial offices" in Laws 1909, c. 113, requiring nominations for judicial offices to be made by petition only as provided by Rev. Codes, § 524, does not include a Senator; the term "judicial officers" being limited to judges of the Supreme and district courts, justices of the peace, and judges of other inferior courts. State ex rel. Haviland v. Beadle, 111 Pac. 720, 723, 42 Mont. 174.

Superintendent

A state superintendent of a water district is not a "judicial officer," within the meaning of Const. art. 3, § 18, providing that judicial officers shall be liable to impeachment for high crimes and misdemeanors, in such manner as to permit his removal from office only by impeachment. State ex rel. Hamilton v. Grant, 82 Pac. 2, 13 Wyo. 41, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588, 116 Am. St. Rep. 982 (citing Farm Inv. Co. v. Carpenter, 61 Pac. 258, 9 Wyo. 110-143, 50 L. R. A. 747, 87 Am. St. Rep. 918).

JUDICIAL POWER

The "judicial" is the power that expounds and applies the laws. In re Appointment of Revisor of Statutes, 124 N. W. 670, 671, 141 Wis. 592, 18 Ann. Cas. 1178.

"Judicial power" implies the construction of laws and the adjudication of legal rights. People v. Apfelbaum, 95 N. E. 995, 997, 251, Ill. 18.

"Judicial power" is authority vested in some court, officer, or person to hear and determine when the rights of persons or property or the propriety of doing an act are the subject-matter of adjudication." State ex rel. Higdon v. Jenks, 35 South. 60, 62, 138 Ala. 115; State v. Blaisdell, 132 N. W. 769, 773, 22 N. D. 86, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1089; Rainey v. Ridgway, 43 South. 843, 844, 151 Ala. 532 (citing Flournoy v. City of Jefferson, 17 Ind. 169, 79 Am. Dec. 468).

The "judicial power," within Const. art. 3, dividing the powers of government into the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, is the power which adjudicates on and protects the rights and interests of individual citizens, and to that end construes the laws, and applies them in particular cases, and is exercised by the judge, with such assistants as he may lawfully have to aid him. Witter v. Cook County Com'rs, 100 N. E. 148, 149, 256 Ill. 616.

The power conferred on the federal Supreme Court by the Constitution is exclusively "judicial," limited to "cases" and "controversies," and it cannot be required or authorized to exercise any other, so that Congress cannot provide for a final judicial determination in the Supreme Court of the constitutionality of legislation without a "case" or "controversy." Muskrat v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 250, 253, 219 U. S. 346, 55 L. Ed. 246.

The "judicial power" of the United States, vested by Const. art. 3, § 1, in the federal courts, embraces all controversies of a justiciable nature arising within the territorial limits of the nation, no matter who may be the parties thereto, except so far as there are limitations expressed in the Constitution on the general grant of judicial power. State of Kansas v. State of Colorado, 27 Sup. Ct. 655-661, 206 U. S. 46, 51 L. Ed. 956.

Whether or not a state has ceased to be republican in form, within the meaning of the federal Constitution, because of its adoption of the initiative and referendum, is not a "judicial" question but a political one which is solely for Congress to determine. Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. State of Oregon, 32 Sup. Ct. 224, 228, 223 U. S. 118, 56 L. Ed. 377.

The "judicial power" vested in courts by Const. art. 3, § 1, providing that the judicial power shall be vested in courts specifically mentioned and provided for, includes the right to enforce and protect rights, prevent and redress wrongs, punish offenses against the public, and determine the rights, obligations, and liabilities of persons arising out of their relation to and dealings with each other, and the Legislature may not, even on the fullest, fairest, and most deliberate investigation, after due notice, pass an act declaring that an individual is indebted to the state in a given amount, and by legislative fiat create a lien on his property. Carolina Glass Co. v. State, 69 S. E. 391, 398, 87 S. C. 270.

In the constitutional division of the powers of a state into legislative, executive, and judicial departments, there can be no absolute line of demarcation between the functions of such departments, and where it is scarcely ascertainable whether the several powers conferred by a statute belong more properly to one or the other department, and their assignment to one works no practical encroachment on the functions of another, the fact that all such powers are vested in a single body or tribunal for practical reasons will not invalidate the statute. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Campbell, 173 Fed. 957, 967.

Orders for the entry nunc pro tunc of a judgment and an order overruling a motion for a new trial are the exercise of "judicial power," and a court has no power in vacation to make such orders, either under its implied powers or Rev. St. 1895, art. 1357, authorizing courts in vacation to amend a judgment or decree. Accoust v. G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. (Tex.) 83 S. W. 1104, 1105.

As vested in courts or judges

The "judicial power" referred to in the constitutional provision declaring that the judicial power of the state as to matters of law and equity shall be vested in the Supreme Court, and other courts specifically named, means such powers and authority as courts and judges exercise; such as legitimately pertains to an officer in the department designated by the Constitution as "judicial"; such as exercised in the ordinary forms of a court of justice, in a suit between parties with process. It does not include every authority judicial in its nature which requires the exercise of judgment or discretion. State ex rel. School Dist. No. 1, Township 45, Range 3 East, v. Andrae, 116 S. W. 561, 568, 216 Mo. 617.

The intangible assets act (Act April 17, 1905, p. 351, c. 146), which makes the Secretary of State and the Comptroller, required by Const. art. 4, §§ 21, 23, to perform prescribed executive duties and such others as may be prescribed by law, members of a state tax board, with power to value the intangible assets of railroads, and for the distribution of the values for local taxation, is not void as vesting in them judicial power, in conflict with Const. art. 2, § 1, dividing the powers of government into the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, as the word "judicial," as used in the section and in article 5, creating the judicial department, when strictly construed, means courts with power to determine causes between parties affecting the rights of persons as to their life, liberty and property. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Shannon, 100 S. W. 138, 141, 100 Tex. 379, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 681.

"Judicial power" is "the authority exercised by that department of government which is charged with the declaration of what the law is and its construction so far as it is written law; the power to construe and expound the law as distinguished from the legislative and executive functions" (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.). It is "the power of a court to decide and pronounce a judgment and carry it into effect between persons and parties who bring cases before it for decision" (quoting Miller, Const. 314). "Judicial act is the power of interpreting law, of declaring what the law is or has been" (quoting And. Law Dict. 579). Metz v. Maddox, 105 N. Y. Supp. 702, 719, 720, 121 App. Div. 147.

Other powers distinguished

Theoretically the "legislative power" is the authority to make, order, and repeal, the "executive power," to administer and enforce, and the "judicial power," to interpret and apply, the laws. Richardson v. Young, 125 S. W. 664, 668, 122 Tenn. 471.

"To declare what a law is or has been is a 'judicial power'; to declare what it shall be is 'legislative.'" Act July 6, 1906 (Pub. Acts 1905, p. 413, c. 217), which limits the recovery in a suit against an administrator for the statutory penalty for failure to file an inventory, does not invade the judicial province nor interfere with, dictate to, or coerce the judicial department. Atwood v. Buckingham, 62 Atl. 616, 618, 78 Conn. 423 (citing Dash v. Van Kleeck [N. Y.] 7 Johns. 477, 498, 5 Am. Dec. 291).

Admission of attorney

"'Judicial power' is that power which adjudicates and protects the rights and interests of individual citizens, and to that end construes and applies the laws." Revisal 1905, §§ 207, 208, relating to the admission of attorneys, and making it the duty of the court to license an applicant where he has complied with the formal prerequisites and shows himself to have a competent knowledge of the law, is not in violation of Declaration of Rights, § 8, which provides that legislative, executive, and supreme judicial powers of the government shall be kept separate and distinct. In re Applicants for License, 55 S. E. 635, 637, 143 N. C. 1, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288, 10 Ann. Cas. 187 (quoting and adopting definition in People ex rel. Kern v. Chase, 46 N. E. 454, 165 Ill. 527, 36 L. R. A. 105).

Determination of rates

The railroad commission act of Oregon of February 18, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 67), which requires every railroad to charge reasonable and just rates, creates a state railroad commission, with power to determine in the first instance the reasonableness of rates charged, and, if found unreasonable, to fix rates which shall be prima facie reasonable and just, and shall be conformed to by the railroad company, with the right, however, to bring suit in a court of the state to determine their reasonableness, in which suit it shall have the burden of proof, is not unconstitutional, as conferring executive and judicial functions on the commission, in violation of article 3, § 1, of the state Constitution, providing that the powers of government shall be divided into three separate departments, legislative, executive, and judicial, and that, except as provided in the Constitution itself, no person charged with official duties under one of these departments is competent to exercise any function on the other. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Campbell, 173 Fed. 957, 967.

Drain proceedings

Rev. St. 1899, § 8284, requiring the report of the commission appointed to locate drains in proceedings for the establishment of a drainage district, etc., when considered in connection with sections 8286, 8287, as amended relating to hearing before the court on the report, etc., is not in conflict with Const. art. 6, § 1 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 212), vesting the judicial power in courts, as it does not undertake to control the decision of the county court, and make the decision depend on the report of the commission appointed under the act. State ex rel. Applegate v. Taylor, 123 S. W. 892, 915, 916, 224 Mo. 398.

Contempt

The power to punish for contempt is essentially a judicial power, except in the limited degree in which it inheres in the legislative body. It can be exercised only by a tribunal possessing judicial functions. State ex rel. Haughey v. Ryan, 81 S. W. 435, 436, 182 Mo. 349.

Extension of city limits

Gen. St. 1901, § 1172, empowering county boards to determine the application of a city of the third class for permission to extend its limits, is not in violation of the Constitution as conferring on county boards "judicial powers." And the same is true of the provision giving the county board power to determine whether the proposed extension of a city will cause manifest injury to individuals, though so far judicial as to permit an appeal from such determination to the courts. Nash v. City of Glen Elder, 106 Pac. 292, 293, 81 Kan. 446.

Issuing warrant

Authority in the clerk of an inferior court of criminal jurisdiction to issue warrants of arrest is not "judicial power," which can be conferred only on judicial officers, as such warrants are issued only on verified complaints, and returnable to the court from which they issue. Kreulhaus v. City of Birmingham, 51 South. 297, 299, 164 Ala. 623, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 492.

Preliminary examination

"Judicial power," under Const. art. 6, § 1 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 212], providing that the judicial power of the state shall be vested in certain courts specified, is the power which vests in a court to try and determine causes, as distinguished from the judicial function to examine and discharge or commit for trial, and Rev. St. 1899, § 2441 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1478], vesting in justices of the peace the power to make a preliminary examination of one accused of felony, is not a grant of the judicial power of the state. State ex rel. Board of Education of St. Louis v. Nast, 108 S. W. 563, 565, 209 Mo. 708.

Punishment for contempt

The "judicial power" referred to in Const. art. 6, § 1, providing that the judicial power shall be vested in a supreme court, district court, justice of the peace, police magistrate, and such other courts inferior to the district court as may be created by law, when considered in connection with section 18, providing that justices of the peace shall exercise such jurisdiction as may be provided by law, includes the power of a justice of the peace to commit a witness for refusal to testify in proceedings to take his deposition under the statute authorizing justices to take depositions and to punish persons refusing to answer proper questions. In re Button, 120 N. W. 203, 204, 83 Neb. 686, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1173.

Quasi judicial acts

"The 'judicial power' vested by the Constitution in courts relates to that administration of remedies for remediable rights formerly exercised exclusively by courts. The discretionary, denominated quasi judicial, authority vested in such boards as the State Board of Dental Examiners is a necessary incident of purely administrative duties. The two in many branches of civil government are inseparable and have no similarity to authority exercisable by courts through the instrumentality of judicial remedies." The authority of the State Board of Dental Examiners to pass upon the reputability of colleges is neither legislative nor judicial, but is quasi judicial, and hence does not contravene the constitutional provision vesting judicial authority in the courts. State ex rel. Milwaukee Medical College v. Chittenden, 107 N. W. 500, 511, 127 Wis. 468.

Where judgment is exercised by an administrative board as an incident to a ministerial power, it is not an exercise of "judicial power," within the meaning of the Constitution separating the departments of government. Conover v. Gatton, 96 N. E. 522, 523, 251 Ill. 587.

Removal or appointment of officer

The removal of a village marshal by a board of trustees is not such an exercise of "judicial power" as to be repugnant to the Constitution. It is only the exercise of an administrative and governmental function belonging to the municipality. Conwell v. Village of Culesac, 92 Pac. 535, 536, 13 Idaho, 575.

"Judicial power" includes the authority to appoint all necessary subordinate officers and assistants essential to the conducting of judicial business. People v. Crissman, 92 Pac. 949, 952, 41 Colo. 450 (quoting and adopting definition in State ex rel. Douglas v. Westfall, 89 N. W. 175, 178, 85 Minn. 437, 446, 57 L. R. A. 297, 89 Am. St. Rep. 571).

Appointment to office, while generally called an executive function, cannot under Const. art. 13, § 9, providing for the election of officers whose election or appointment is not provided for by the Constitution, by electors of the counties, cities, or towns, as the case may be, be classified as exclusively a function of either of the three great departments of government, but may be exercised by either the legislative or "judicial" department when it becomes necessary or proper, in the execution of their proper duties, to have administrative acts performed by assistants, provided the Constitution does not otherwise direct. In re Appointment of Revisor of Statutes, 124 N. W. 670, 672, 141 Wis. 592, 18 Ann. Cas. 1176.

Settling and signing case

The settling and signing of a case-made by the judge trying the cause is the exercise of "judicial power," and one which the law has conferred upon the judge trying the cause, and on no one else. City of Enid v. Wigger, 85 Pac. 697, 698, 15 Okl. 507.

JUDICIAL PROCEEDING

See, also, Proceeding.

As privileged communication, see Privileged Communication.

"Judicial proceedings," within the meaning of the rule that statements, otherwise slander, which are made in judicial proceedings, are absolutely privileged, means proceeding in a court of justice established or recognized by law, wherein the rights of parties recognized and protected by law are involved and may be determined. Proceedings of a municipal investigating committee do not constitute judicial proceedings within the meaning of the rule. Blakeslee v. Carroll, 29 Atl. 473, 475, 64 Conn. 223, 25 L. R. A. 106.

The term "judicial proceeding" is synonymous with the word "suit," and means any proceeding for the purpose of obtaining such remedy as the law allows. State ex rel. West v. McCafferty, 105 Pac. 992, 997, 25 Okl. 2.

Where, in a proceeding before a local board not having the character of an ordinary court, public notice is required, and a hearing of objections to the contemplated action is provided for, and the order to be made affects the property or rights of the citizens, the proceeding is judicial in character, and reviewable on certiorari within Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, authorizing writ of review. Imperial Water Co. No. 1 v. Board of Sup'rs of Imperial County, 120 Pac. 780, 782, 162 Cal. 14.

The publication of pleadings or other preliminary papers to which the attention of no judicial officer has been called, and no judicial action invited, thereon, is not, within the common-law privilege, accorded to the publication of judicial proceedings. While under some circumstances the words "proceedings" or even "judicial proceedings" may be used in a sense to include the services or filing of a pleading, the phrase "judicial proceedings," or rather "report of a judicial proceeding," had attained a perfectly definite significance in the law of libel, the subject which the Legislature were attempting to regulate in that they used it in the sense they did. Isley v. Sentinel Co., 113 N. W. 425, 427, 133 Wis. 20, 126 Am. St. Rep. 928.

Arbitration

The statutory arbitration provided for and regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure is a "judicial proceeding," and hence, in view of section 6, forbidding a "court" to be open or transact any business on Sunday, to proceed with the hearing of arbitration on Sunday, in the face of objections and protest of parties is illegal and constituted misconduct violating the award. In re Picker, 114 N. Y. Supp. 289, 292, 130 App. Div. 88.

Foreclosure

A chancery foreclosure of mortgage is a "judicial proceeding." Butters v. Butters, 117 N. W. 203, 206, 153 Mich. 153.

A proceeding, professing to determine the right of property where no notice, written or constructive, is given, is not a "judicial proceeding," under Code 1907, §§ 2932, 4741, relative to notice of levy of attachment, and notice to a subtenant of a levy on his crop in attachment against the tenant to enforce a landlord's lien is required, and, where the record does not show notice and an opportunity to defend, a judgment is not prima facie evidence against him. Hudson v. Wright, 51 South. 389, 391, 164 Ala. 390, 137 Am. St. Rep. 55.

Justice's or police magistrate's proceedings

An information laid before a magistrate, whether before or after arrest, places before him for judicial action the question whether he is authorized to issue judicial process thereon; and, though he holds it insufficient, a "judicial proceeding" is had, on which accused, after discharge, may base an action for malicious prosecution. MacDonald v. National Art Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 708, 710, 69 Misc. Rep. 325.

Proceedings before corporation commission

The establishment of railway passenger rates by the Virginia Corporation Commission is not res judicata in a suit which seeks injunctive relief on the ground that the rates are confiscatory, although such commission for some purposes is a court, and acted only after hearing and investigation, since proceedings to establish rates are legislative, and not judicial, in their nature. Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 69, 211 U. S. 210, 53 L. Ed. 150.

Proceeding for summary process

A preliminary affidavit, filed for the purpose of procuring a writ of capias ad respondendum, is not such a "judicial proceeding" that the publication of a fair and impartial report thereof is privileged within the law relating to libel. Todd v. Every Evening Printing Co. (Del.) 62 Atl. 1089, 1091.

Proceeding to obtain liquor license

A proceeding to obtain a license, to sell intoxicating liquors, is a "judicial proceeding," in the nature of a civil action. Bryan v. De Moss, 73 N. E. 156, 157, 34 Ind. App. 473; Scanlon v. Deuel, 94 N. E. 561, 562, 176 Ind. 208.

JUDICIAL PROCESS

"Judicial process" includes the mandate of a court to its officers, and a means whereby courts compel the appearance of parties, or compliance with its commands, and includes a summons. Ex parte Hill, 51 South. 786, 787, 165 Ala. 365.

Bankruptcy proceeding

The filing of a petition in bankruptcy is "judicial process," and operates as an attachment or sequestration from that time of the property of the bankrupt for the equal benefit of all of his creditors, and as a restraint to its disposition by him. In re Smith & Shuck, 132 Fed. 301, 303.

Distress

A distress for taxes is not a "judicial process." Acme Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Hinkley, 122 N. W. 482, 483, 23 S. D. 509, 21 Ann. Cas. 743 (citing Ross v. Holtzman, 3 Cranch, 391, 20 Fed. Cas. 1239).

JUDICIAL PURPOSES

The registration of a chattel mortgage is not within the meaning of the term "judicial purposes" under a statute attaching an unorganized county to an organized county for "judicial purposes"; that term being defined as purposes of the courts in administration of justice. First Nat. Bank of Portales, N. M., v. McElroy, 112 S. W. 801, 804, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 284.

Under a statute attaching an unorganized county to an organized county for "judicial purposes," the grand jury of the organized county has jurisdiction to indict, and its courts can try and punish for offenses committed in the unorganized county. First Nat. Bank of Portales, N. M., v. McElroy, 112 S. W. 801, 804, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 284.

JUDICIAL QUESTION

It is a judicial question whether the common law invoked in a judicial proceeding has been modified by constitutional or statutory law, "judicial decisions," or the conditions and wants of the people, and consequently to what extent it remains in force in the state. Cooper v. Seaverns, 105 Pac. 509, 514, 81 Kan. 267, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 517, 135 Am. St. Rep. 359, 19 Ann. Cas. 168.

While the right to exercise the police power is acknowledged by the courts, the question whether the constitutional rights of a citizen as to his person or property have been unduly invaded in a particular instance is always a "judicial question." In re McCapes, 106 Pac. 229, 230, 157 Cal. 26.

JUDICIAL RECORD

A "judicial record" is a public writing. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc. v. Boyd, 100 Pac. 239, 242, 155 Cal. 193.

JUDICIAL SALE

As sale, see Sale.

Purchaser at sale as purchaser, see Purchaser.

A "judicial sale" is a sale authorized by a court which has jurisdiction to grant such authority. Laurel Oil & Gas Co. v. Galbreath Oil & Gas Co., 165 Fed. 162, 165, 91 C. C. A. 196.

"Judicial sales" are involuntary sales, the officer conducting the same being the agent of the debtor, so that the conveyance by such officer does not estop the judgment creditor. Brady v. Carteret Realty Co., 60 Atl. 938, 939, 67 N. J. Eq. 641, 110 Am. St. Rep. 502, 3 Ann. Cas. 421 (citing Den v. Wilnans, 14 N. J. Law 1).

In a "judicial sale" the court is the vendor, and in selling it acts as the agent of defendant, compelling him to do what it determines he ought to have done, and in making a "judicial sale" the court does not act by authority of the plaintiff. The court acts by the authority of the law of the land, and the plaintiff is in no sense his principal, and, where judgment for the enforcement of bonds and mortgages is reversed after the sale of property to a third person, appellees are only responsible for the amount received from the sales, with interest, and, when the sale was made to the mortgagee, the appellant may either allow the sale to stand and take the money, or have the sale set aside subject to a lien on the property for taxes paid and expenses incurred by the mortgagee. Hess v. Deppen, 101 S. W. 362, 363, 125 Ky. 424, 15 Ann. Cas. 670.

Sales of real property of a lunatic in proceedings before the proper probate judge or clerk of the superior court of North Carolina acting as a probate court are "judicial sales." Rexford v. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., 181 Fed. 462, 471, 104 C. C. A. 210.

Administrator's sale

The term "judicial sale" denotes more than what is known in the text-books as such, and a sale by an administrator or executor under an order of court is in the nature of a "judicial sale." Green v. Freeman, 55 S. E. 45, 47, 126 Ga. 274, 7 Ann. Cas. 1069.

A sale of real estate by an administrator under an order and decree of court is a "judicial sale." Pierce v. Vansell, 74 N. E. 554, 556, 35 Ind. App. 525.

A sale to pay a decedent's debts, made under an order of the orphans' court, is a "judicial sale." Podesta v. Binns, 60 Atl. 815, 818, 69 N. J. Eq. 387.

Administrators' sales under orders of the probate court are "judicial sales," and the county court may modify an order of sale made by itself so as to authorize property which has been ordered to be sold at private sale to be sold at a public sale. Rhodes v. Bell, 130 S. W. 465, 471, 230 Mo. 138.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3172, provides that every lease of lands for an unexpired term of three years or more shall be subject to execution and sale as real property. Section 2933 gives a widow dower in leasehold estates of her husband for a term of 20 years or more to be assigned as in real estate, and for a term of less than 20 years to be assigned as personal property. Held, that such sections were not in conflict, but supplemented each other, and section 3172, being sufficiently broad to include all "judicial sales," which embraces a sale of real estate under an order of the probate court, and where a leasehold for an unexpired term of three years or more not assigned to a widow as dower is required to be sold for the lessee's debts, it must be sold in the manner provided by sections 147, 148, for sales of real estate, which can only be made on the administrator's petition, accompanied by an inventory of the decedent's real estate and remaining personal property and a list of the debts unpaid, and after notice to those interested. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 486, 502, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072.

Foreclosure

Where a county before any administrative sale of real estate for taxes sues to foreclose a tax lien and obtains a decree, a sale thereunder is a "judicial sale" and does not become complete until confirmation; the time for redemption dating from such confirmation. Smith v. Carnahan, 120 N. W. 212, 213, 83 Neb. 667.

Guardian's sale

A guardian's ex parte sale of realty is a "judicial sale" within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 3052, which vests title in the wife as to her inchoate interest upon judicial sale of her husband's real estate. Huffman v. Huffman (Ind.) 99 N. E. 769, 771.

Partition sale

A sale in partition made under process of the court by an officer appointed and commissioned to sell, which becomes absolute only on confirmation by the court, is a "judicial sale." Staser v. Gaar, Scott & Co., 78 N. E. 987, 988, 38 Ind. App. 696.

A sale under a decree of the probate court for division between the heirs of a deceased owner is a "judicial sale," and the fact that the property was at the time of the sale in the adverse possession of a third person does not invalidate the deed from the commissioner to the purchaser, though the deed was made before the present Code went into effect. Williams v. Williams, 54 South. 107, 108, 170 Ala. 143.

Receiver's sale

A sale by a receiver appointed by a court is a "judicial sale," and the maxim "caveat emptor" applies to such sale. Southern Cotton Mills v. Ragan, 75 S. E. 611, 613, 138 Ga. 504.

A sale by a receiver in bankruptcy, confirmed by the court, is a "judicial sale." F. A. Ames Co. v. Slocumb Mercantile Co., 51 South. 994, 995, 166 Ala. 99.

Trustee's sale

A sale of personal property by a trustee in bankruptcy, under an order to sell issued by the court, is a "judicial sale." Carney v. Averill (Me.) 85 Atl. 494, 496.

JUDICIAL TRIBUNAL

A legislative investigating committee charged with the duty of gathering and reporting information for legislative guidance is not a "judicial tribunal" within the meaning of the Constitution. State ex rel. Rosenheim v. Frear, 119 N. W. 894, 896, 138 Wis. 173.

The charter of the city of La Follette (Acts 1897, c. 161), provides by section 13, that a contest over the election of any city officer shall be heard and determined by the council, under such rules as it should have previously established for such hearing. Shannon's Code, § 6063, provides that circuit courts are courts of general jurisdiction in all cases where the jurisdiction is not conferred upon another tribunal. Held, that the city council was not a "judicial tribunal," within the sense and meaning of section 6063, so that the circuit court had original jurisdiction of a contested mayoralty election in such city. Taylor v. Carr, 141 S. W. 745, 747, 125 Tenn. 235, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 155.

A "judicial tribunal" decides upon the legality of claims and conduct, and it applies the law and defines the rights of parties with reference to transactions already had. A statute authorizing the Governor, on the recommendation of the Supreme Court, to appoint an additional judge for the time recommended by the court lodges legislative power with the court in conflict with Const. art. 4, § 1. In re Commissioners of Counties Comprising Seventh Judicial Dist., 98 Pac. 557, 559, 22 Okl. 435 (quoting and adopting definition in Merrill v. Sherburne, 1 N. H. 204, 8 Am. Dec. 52).

Where a city ordinance authorizes the assessment of omitted property by the city council on notice of hearing to the owner, the act of the council in assessing omitted property is purely ministerial, although it has mixed certain discretion as to finding values and the like, which is not reviewable, and which quality is sometimes called "judicial," though it is not judicial in the sense that it is the act of a court; and hence such ordinance was not violative of the constitutional limitation on the Legislature to create any "judicial tribunals" other than the courts expressly named in that instrument. Muir's Adm'r v. City of Bardstown, 87 S. W. 1096, 1098, 120 Ky. 739.

By inability to enforce in the "judicial tribunals of the state" a right claimed by defendant seeking to remove a case to the federal court is meant any judicial tribunal of the state that may have jurisdiction of the prosecution. It was intended thereby to provide that if a defendant in a criminal proceeding pending in a state tribunal cannot enforce his right to the equal protection of the laws in such court, or in any court to which it may be carried, then he was entitled to a removal. Commonwealth of Kentucky v. Powers, 139 Fed. 452, 487.

JUMP

JUMPING A WIRE

"Jumping a wire" by a telephone company consists in taking a pair of unused wires from a cable supplying another area or cable district and carrying it aerially into the cable box of another district from which they are extended to the phone to be connected. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Kelly, 160 Fed. 316, 325, 87 C. C. A. 268, 15 Ann. Cas. 1210.

JUNCTION

Rev. Laws Minn. 1905, § 2033, requiring railroads to stop their trains before reaching junctions with other roads, imposes no duty on them to stop such trains before reaching connections of their own tracks with double tracks and connection of such tracks with side tracks which are all parts of one railroad directed by the same management or controlled by the same operator; such connections not being "junctions" within the meaning of the statute. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co. v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 176 Fed. 237, 240, 100 C. C. A. 41, 20 Ann. Cas. 1200.

JUNIOR

The word "junior" or "Jr." or words of similar import, are ordinarily mere matters of description and form no part of a person's legal name. Teague v. State, 40 South. 312, 314, 144 Ala. 42.

The affixes "Sr." and "Jr." do not form part of a name, but are descriptive merely; hence in legal contemplation their presence or absence is immaterial. State v. Lewis, 83 Atl. 692, 693, 83 N. J. Law, 161.

The suffixes "Jr." or "Sr." are no part of a man's name and, except in a few instances, may be disregarded. Ross v. Berry (N. M.) 124 Pac. 342, 343.

In indictment

The word "junior" added to the name of a person referred to in an indictment is mere matter of description, constituting no part of the name, and need not be proved when proof of the name is necessary. State v. Simpson, 76 N. E. 544, 546, 166 Ind. 211 (citing Allen v. State, 52 Ind. 486).

In legal proceedings and papers

The addition of the word "junior" or "senior" to a name is mere matter of description and not a part thereof, so that the fact that the suit was brought by plaintiff as administratrix of C. G. "Jr.," deceased, and judgment was rendered against the administratrix under that name, while the assignment of errors omitted "Jr." from decedent's name, was not ground for dismissal of the appeal. Guthell v. Dow, 97 N. E. 426, 177 Ind. 149.

JUNK

Old iron chains are not "junk, old," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 588, 30 Stat. 198, but are dutiable as "scrap iron" * * * fit only to be remanufactured," under section 1, Schedule C, par. 122, 30 Stat. 151. G. W. Sheldon & Co. v. United States, 152 Fed. 318, 320.

The provision for "scrap iron" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 122, 30 Stat. 159, is more specific than for "junk, old," in section 2, Free List, par. 588, 30 Stat. 198, as the latter includes an infinite variety of things, of which one kind is "scrap iron." G. W. Sheldon & Co. v. United States, 159 Fed. 105, 106, 86 C. C. A. 295.

JUNK DEALER

One who dealt in scrap iron and steel in large quantities, and handled no single pieces of iron, was not a "junk dealer," within the meaning of an ordinance providing that junk dealers must be duly licensed, and that "any one dealing in the purchase and sale of junk, old rope, old iron, brass, copper, tin, or lead, rags, slush, or empty bottles shall be deemed to be a junk dealer, and the place of business a junk shop." The court said: "The respondent deals in scrap iron and steel and purchases articles like boiler tubes, axles, car wheels, switches, tracks, crossings, steel frames of buildings, sections of elevated railroad fabrics and of bridges, all of great bulk and weight, which he ships to mills and furnaces. He does not buy or sell single pieces of iron, and the smallest purchases shown were one of two barrels of horse shoes and one of four tons of such articles. I think that such traffic is not that of a junk dealer. 'Junk,' originally a nautical term, meant old rope or cordage, and it has been extended to mean cast-off odds and ends, like scrap iron, old bottles, metals, glass, and the like. * * * It is quite clear that section 22, after the use of the general term 'junk,' does but define it by the further terms 'old rope,' 'old iron,' 'brass,' etc. The fact that a thing is composed of old iron or old steel does not make it junk. It is the size and character of the article rather than its composition that must determine whether it is within that term. It may not be easy to define the term, because it covers nondescript articles, but it is not difficult to determine whether an article is within it. It seems to me clear that the general character and scope of the business of the defendant does not fall within the description of a dealer in junk. There is a radical difference between the buyer of great masses of metal weighing tons at a time, parts of railroad equipment, sections of elevated railroad structures or bridges, and the like, and one who may buy old bottles, scraps, or pieces of metal, slush, old rope, and the like, which might readily be pilfered or stolen, and carried away to be secretly sold by the culprit. It is the business of this character that is to be licensed, located, regulated, and made subject to the scrutiny of the police authorities. The business of the respondent is not necessarily within the terms of the ordinance, while the reasons for the enactment of it and the further sections of regulation do not exist." City of New York v. Vandewater, 99 N. Y. Supp. 306, 308, 113 App. Div. 456 (citing Commonwealth v. Farnum, 114 Mass. 267; Eastman v. City of Chicago, 79 Ill. 178; Commonwealth v. Ringold, 65 N. E. 374, 182 Mass. 308; 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3874).

Gen. St. 1902, § 4654, provides that every person who engages in the business of buying and selling junk, etc., unless licensed, shall be fined, and section 4653, as amended by Pub. Acts 1903, p. 30, c. 43, and Acts 1905, p. 305, c. 88, provides for the issuance of such licenses to dealers and traders in junk and for the regulation of their business. Held, that an employé of a licensed junk dealer, acting in good faith as such in the purchase and sale of junk for his employer, was not a "junk dealer," within such sections, and was not required to be licensed. State v. Rosen- baum, 68 Atl. 250, 251, 80 Conn. 827, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288, 125 Am. St. Rep. 121.

JUNK SHOP

A "junk shop," within an ordinance forbidding the carrying on, without a license, of what is commonly called a junk store, is a place where junk is dealt with in small quantities, and not a wholesale establishment, which buys by the car load or from licensed junk shops in wagon load lots, as other provisions of the ordinance, providing for the keeping of books describing each article bought, and giving the name and residence of the persons from whom it was bought, prohibiting resale of any article within 10 days of purchase, and providing for the business being constantly under the surveillance of the police department, would, if applied to a wholesale dealer, be impracticable, and so burdensome as to render the ordinance void as an unreasonable interference with his business. City of Chicago v. Lowenthal, 90 N. E. 287, 288, 242 Ill. 404.

A wholesale dealer in metals that buys old and new metals in lots of from 500 pounds to a car load, and refines about one-quarter of them, and sells its metals to foundries at wholesale, and has no dealings with peddlers, nor in old iron or any article of a kindred character, does not keep a "junk shop," within section 2040, Revised Municipal Code of Chicago, providing that no person shall keep a junk shop without being first licensed. West Side Metal Refining Co. v. City of Chicago, 140 Ill. App. 599, 600.

"Jurat" is defined to be that part of an affidavit where the officer certifies that the same was sworn to before him." Partridge v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 77 Atl. 410, 412, 77 N. J. Eq. 208 (citing and adopting Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawles' Rev.] p. 111).

A deed, of record for more than 40 years, and on which there appeared, after the grantor's signature, the words, "Signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of [two parties named], Jurat," was presumptively legally probated and duly registered; the word "jurat," when written on a deed by an officer authorized to take probate, meaning "proved." Moore v. Quickle, 74 S. E. 927, 928, 159 N. C. 129.

JURATORY CAUTION

The term "juratory caution" means a stipulation by oath without sureties, and, if it be not required, it is a misnomer to call the proceedings by that name. Under the civil law, cautions with respect to the manner in which they were taken were: Cautio fide jussoria (by sureties); pignoratitia (by deposit); juratoria (by oath); nude promissoria (bare promise).

Bradford v. Bradford, 8 Fed. Cas. 1129, 1130, note, 2 Flap. 280.

JURIDICAL CONVICTION

"Juridical conviction" may be defined to be the fitting of facts to hypothesis. If, in criminal issues, there is reasonable doubt whether the facts fit the hypothesis of guilt, then there must be an acquittal. In civil issues, when there are conflicting hypotheses, the judgment must be that for which there is a preponderance of proof." In re Friedman, 164 Fed. 131, 142 (quoting and adopting definition in Whart. Ev.).

Commissioner of Pensions or Secretary of the Interior

In Rev. St. § 4746, as amended in 1898, which makes it a criminal offense for any person to procure the making or presentation of any false or fraudulent affidavit or other paper or writing pertaining to any matter "within the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Pensions or of the Secretary of the Interior" the word "jurisdiction" is used in its legal sense, meaning authority to hear and determine a cause, and the provision, if applicable at all to anything outside of pension or bounty land matters, does not apply to papers or writings presented to the officers of a local land office relating to the entry or purchase of lands under the public land statutes in which the Secretary of the Interior has no power to act except in case of an appeal. Nor, if applicable to any such papers or writings, would it apply to such as are not required by statute, but only by a regulation made by the land department. United States v. Keltel, 157 Fed. 396, 406.

Religious society

Under the Presbyterian form of government, "jurisdiction" or power of government, viz., that part of the sovereignty of the whole which belongs to each particular church organization, is lodged in the church session, and not in the members at large. Landrith v. Hudgins, 120 S. W. 783, 791, 121 Tenn. 553.

State

"Jurisdiction" is the sovereign authority to make, decide on, and execute laws. Meyler v. Wedding, 60 S. W. 20, 24, 107 Ky. 685 (dissenting opinion, citing Arnold v. Shields, 5 Dana [35 Ky.] 22, 30 Am. Dec. 669).

The word "jurisdiction," as used in the Virginia compact, means, primarily at least, jurisdiction—authority to apply the law to the acts of men—and not in the sense of sovereignty, and was similarly used in the agreement between New York and New Jersey, giving New York exclusive jurisdiction over the waters and lands under the waters of New York Bay, west of the middle line thereof. Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. Jersey City, 28 Sup. Ct. 592, 593, 209 U. S. 473, 52 L. Ed. 896.

The word "jurisdiction," as used in the Virginia Act providing for the formation of Kentucky, and declaring that the use and navigation of the Ohio river, so far as the territory of the proposed state, or the territory which shall remain within the limits of Virginia, lies thereon, shall be free and common to the citizens of the United States, and the respective jurisdiction of Virginia, and of the proposed state, on the river as aforesaid, shall be concurrent only with the states which compose the opposite shores of the said river, is not confined to any one of the three agencies of jurisdiction, legislative, executive, or judicial. State v. Faudre, 46 S. E. 269, 270, 54 W. Va. 122, 63 L. R. A. 877, 102 Am. St. Rep. 927, 1 Ann. Cas. 104.

"Jurisdiction," whatever else or more it may mean, is jurisdiction in its popular sense of authority to apply the law to the acts of men." The state of Oregon cannot, by virtue of its concurrent jurisdiction under Act Cong. Feb. 14, 1859, over the Columbia river, make criminal the operation of a purse net in that river within the territorial limits of Washington, under authority and license from that state. Nielsen v. State of Oregon, 29 Sup. Ct. 383, 384, 212 U. S. 315, 53 L. Ed. 528 (quoting and adopting definition in Wedding v. Meyler, 24 Sup. Ct. 822, 192 U. S. 573, 48 L. Ed. 570, 66 L. R. A. 833).

JURISDICTION (Of Courts)

"Jurisdiction" is the foundation of judicial proceedings. Moody v. Port Clyde Development Co., 66 Atl. 967, 975, 102 Me. 365.

The term "jurisdiction," when applied to courts and not restricted by the written law conferring it, means the power to hear and decide issues, both of law and fact, and the power to enforce the conclusion reached by the court. It is also defined as the power conferred on a court by Constitution or statute to take cognizance of the subject-matter of a litigation and the parties brought before it, and to legally hear, try, and determine the issues joined by them, either of law or of fact, or both. Western Union Tel. Co.

v. Arnold, 77 S. W. 249, 250, 83 Tex. Civ. App. 306 (citing Brown, Jurisdiction, § 2; Townes, Tex. Pl. pp. 18, 19).

"The power and authority constitutionally conferred upon a court or judge to pronounce the sentence of the law or to award the remedies provided by law upon a state of fact proven or admitted, referred to the tribunal for decision, and authorized by law to be the subject of investigation or action by that tribunal in favor of or against persons who present themselves or who are brought before the court in some manner sanctioned by law as proper and sufficient," constitutes "jurisdiction." Ingram v. Fuson, 82 S. W. 606, 607, 118 Ky. 882 (quoting Black, Judgm. § 215).

The term "jurisdiction," as used in Const. art. 7, § 8, declaring that the circuit court shall have jurisdiction in all matters, civil and criminal, within the state, together with appellate jurisdiction from all inferior courts, with power to use all writs necessary to carry into effect its orders, judgments, or decrees, is used in its broad general sense, that of judicial power. "A court may have jurisdiction of a particular subject-matter, but by settled judicial policy ought not to exercise it. Again, it may, by the settled law, established by its own practice, deemed to be as binding as the written law, have power in a constitutional sense to adjudicate disputed matters of a particular character, acting by recognized unbending principles of procedure, but not jurisdiction to adjudicate such matters in the particular way attempted." The constitutional jurisdiction of the circuit courts is substantially co-extensive with that of the English courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Chancery combined. Harrigan v. Gilchrist, 99 N. W. 909, 939, 121 Wis. 127.

"Jurisdiction" is jurisdiction in its popular sense of authority to apply the law to the acts of men. Jurisdiction is acquired by an Indiana court by service of process on the Ohio river on the Kentucky side of the low-water mark on the Indiana shore, in view of the condition contained in the Virginia Compact of 1789, § 11, declaring that the jurisdiction of the proposed state of Kentucky on the Ohio river should be concurrent only with the states which may possess the opposite shores of the river, which condition Congress assented to and adopted when it consented to the Virginia Compact by the act of February 4, 1791, admitting Kentucky to the Union. Wedding v. Meyler, 24 Sup. Ct. 322, 324, 192 U. S. 573, 48 L. Ed. 570, 66 L. R. A. 833.

"Jurisdiction" is the right to put the wheels of justice in motion and to proceed to the final determination of a cause upon the pleadings and evidence. It exists in the Circuit Court of the United States under the express terms of the act of August 13, 1888, if the plaintiff be a citizen of one state, and defendant a citizen of another, if the amount in controversy exceed $2000, and the defendant be properly served with process within the district. Venner v. Great Northern R. Co., 28 Sup. Ct. 328, 330, 209 U. S. 24, 52 L. Ed. 666 (quoting and adopting definition in Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Adams, 21 Sup. Ct. 253, 180 U. S. 28, 45 L. Ed. 412).

Laws 1911, c. 569, which increases to $5,000 the limit of the amount for which judgment in actions to recover money only can be rendered by the City Court of New York, does not violate Const. art. 6, § 18, which provides that the Legislature shall not "confer" on any inferior or local court any equity jurisdiction or any greater jurisdiction in other respects than is conferred on County Courts by the article, though that article limits the jurisdiction of County Courts, in actions for recovery of money only, to suits where not more than $2,000 is demanded, since chapter 569 gives the City Court no new jurisdiction, but merely changes the limit, and since the test of jurisdiction depends on the condition of things at the time the action is brought, and the term "jurisdiction," as used in the Constitution, refers to subject-matter and persons rather than to the locality in which or the amount for which actions may be brought. Lewkowicz v. Queen Aeroplane Co., 136 N. Y. Supp. 894, 897, 77 Misc. Rep. 151.

Under Acts 1908, No. 124, providing that, whenever suit is brought by the state to forfeit a corporation's charter, the court shall have jurisdiction of all the corporation's property from the date of filing the suit, the word "jurisdiction," as there used, meant legal control and seisin, so that voluntary dissolution proceedings taken by the stockholders of a corporation, after suit brought by the Attorney General to forfeit its charter, were ineffectual to authorize liquidation by the corporation's liquidators, instead of by a liquidator to be appointed by the Governor. State ex rel. Guion v. People's Fire Ins. Co. of New Orleans, 52 South. 763, 765, 126 La. 548.

Where a demurrer to a bill in a circuit court assigned as grounds want of "jurisdiction" in the court as a federal court, because neither diversity of citizenship nor any federal question was disclosed, and also want of "jurisdiction" as a court of equity for lack of equity in the bill, a decree sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the bill for want of jurisdiction must be construed to refer to the real jurisdictional grounds, and an appeal therefrom lies to the Supreme Court, and not to the Circuit Court of Appeals, under sections 5 and 6 of Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, 26 Stat. 828. Crawford v. McCarthy, 148 Fed. 198, 200, 78 C. C. A. 356 (citing Courtney v. Pradt, 25 Sup. Ct. 208, 196 U. S. 89, 49 L. Ed. 398; Bache v. Hunt, 24 Sup. Ct. 547, 193 U. S. 525, 48

L. Ed. 774; Louisville Trust Co. v. Knott, 24 Sup. Ct. 119, 191 U. S. 225, 48 L. Ed. 159; Blythe v. Hinckley, 19 Sup. Ct. 497, 173 U. S. 501, 43 L. Ed. 783; Smith v. McKay, 16 Sup. Ct. 490, 161 U. S. 355, 40 L. Ed. 731).

As authority or power

"Jurisdiction," in its strict sense, means power, as distinguished from mere judicial rules as to when it may be exercised. State ex rel. Cook v. Houser, 100 N. W. 964, 968, 122 Wis. 534.

"Jurisdiction" is simply power. Any power possessed by a judicial tribunal, either affirmative or negative, is jurisdiction. This is the definition of jurisdiction given by Chief Justice Greene of New Jersey, and Van Fleet, in his work on Collateral Attack, says it is the best he has ever seen." Johnson v. McKinnon, 45 South. 23, 25, 54 Fla. 221 (citing Garvin v. Watkins, 10 South. 818, text 821, 29 Fla. 151).

"Jurisdiction" means the power of him who has the right of judging, and the competency of the judge, quoad the subject-matter, and the parties litigant being conceded, it includes not only the power expressly conferred by law, but all such power as may be necessary to the full exercise and enjoyment of that expressly conferred. State ex rel. Dauphin v. Ellis, 32 South. 335, 348, 108 La. 521.

A judicial officer has "jurisdiction" when he has power to inquire into the facts, to apply the law, and to pronounce the judgment. Benedict v. Clarke, 123 N. Y. Supp. 964, 966, 139 App. Div. 242.

"Want of 'jurisdiction' means want of legal power to act." People ex rel. Scharff v. Frost, 91 N. E. 376, 378, 198 N. Y. 110, 139 Am. St. Rep. 801 (dissenting opinion of Judge Vann).

"Jurisdiction" is the power of a court or a judge to entertain action, petition, or other proceeding. Perry v. Morse, 57 Vt. 509, 513.

Acts 1894-95, p. 498, is entitled "An act to limit the criminal jurisdiction of justices of the peace and notaries public within certain precincts in J. county and in the wards of a certain city," and provides that justices and notaries in such territory shall not have jurisdiction over any criminal case, except to take affidavits and to issue warrants thereon returnable to the police court of B. in all cases in which that court has jurisdiction, and to take affidavits and issue warrants and examine persons charged with offenses of which such court has not jurisdiction. Held, that the word "jurisdiction," as used in the title, was synonymous with "power" or "authority," as distinguished from "power to hear and determine," and that the act was therefore not objectionable as containing matter not expressed in the title of the act. Lee v. State, 39 South. 366, 367, 143 Ala. 93.

The subject-matter presented to a Court of Appeals is the action of the trial court as shown by its rulings and judgment as preserved in the record, and where it has no power to review the action of the trial court of a county outside of its territorial limits, it has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the appeal; "Jurisdiction" being the power which one has to do justice in cases brought before him. State ex rel. St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Co. v. Nixon, 184 S. W. 538, 541, 232 Mo. 496.

As authority to hear and determine "Jurisdiction" is the right to hear and determine. Staples v. Shiver (Ky.) 122 S. W. 828.

"Jurisdiction" is the power to hear and determine, and is in truth the power to both, or either, to hear without determining, or determine without hearing. Lockard v. Lockard, 110 N. W. 104, 105, 21 S. D. 134.

"Jurisdiction" is the power to hear and determine. The nature of the functions to be exercised controls, whether they are brought into activity by primary process or by the removal from an inferior tribunal. People's Sec. Bank of Worthing v. Sanderson, 123 N. W. 873, 877, 24 S. D. 443.

"Jurisdiction" is authority to hear and determine a cause. Lange v. Superior Court of Solano County, 108 Pac. 908, 909, 11 Cal. App. 1; Threadgill v. Colcord, 85 Pac. 708, 710, 16 Okl. 447 (quoting and adopting definition in McNit v. Turner, 16 Wall. 366, 21 L. Ed. 341); State ex rel. McNamee v. Stoble, 92 S. W. 191, 197, 194 Mo. 14; Bonham v. Doyle, 79 N. E. 458, 459, 39 Ind. App. 438; Ex parte Wade, 100 Pac. 35, 38, 2 Okl. Cr. 100 (quoting 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3877); Carter's Adm'r v. Skillman, 60 S. E. 775, 780, 108 Va. 204; Davis v. Cleveland, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 156 Fed. 775, 777, 84 O. C. A. 458; Rose v. Christinet, 92 S. W. 866, 77 Ark. 582 (adopting definition in 1 Freem. Judgm. § 118); People v. Harper, 91 N. E. 90, 244 Ill. 121.

"Jurisdiction" is the power to hear and determine a cause. It is coram iudice whenever a case is presented which brings this power into action. Rexford v. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., 181 Fed. 462, 470, 104 C. C. A. 210.

The word "jurisdiction" is defined in law as the power to hear and decide a legal controversy. Douglas County v. Vinsonhaler, 118 N. W. 1058, 1063, 82 Neb. 810.

"Jurisdiction" is the power vested by law in a tribunal to hear and determine causes properly coming before it. Saylor v. Duel, 86 N. E. 119, 120, 236 Ill. 429, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 377.

"Jurisdiction," when applied to courts, and speaking generally, consists, in the power to hear and determine causes. It presupposes always and of course that there is a court to exercise it, for it is not predicable of anything but a lawfully existing tribunal. It relates to the subject-matter of the controversy or to the person, and never is applied to any question touching the existence of the court itself. It is not conferred until the court designated to exercise it has been brought into being according to the mode prescribed by law." An alleged plea to the jurisdiction of the court in a criminal case alleging that the court was not lawfully constituted because the Governor was out of the state at the time he directed the holding of the term and signed the judge's commission was a nullity, since the court could not pass on its own existence as a court. State v. Hall, 55 S. E. 806, 807, 142 N. C. 710.

"Jurisdiction" is the power to hear and determine a cause; the authority by which judicial officers take cognizance of and decide causes. Courts of bankruptcy, in the administration of bankrupt estates, are invested with the exercise of equitable 'jurisdiction,' and by the bankrupt act, as now amended, 'jurisdiction' is expressly conferred upon the bankrupt court over suits between trustees in bankruptcy and third parties to recover from them property or funds held by them in fraud of the bankrupt act, or as preferred creditors." Blake v. Nesbet, 144 Fed. 279, 283.

"Jurisdiction" is the power of a court to hear and decide a cause. The "jurisdiction" of a federal circuit court as a federal court is so involved as to sustain a direct writ of error from the federal Supreme Court under Act March 3, 1891, § 5, in a judgment dismissing the suit on the ground of the invalidity of the attachment and garnishment of the property of the nonresident defendant and upon the lack of a general appearance by him. Davis v. Cleveland, C. & St. L. R. Co., 80 Sup. Ct. 463, 466, 217 U. S. 157, 54 L. Ed. 708, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 823, 18 Ann. Cas. 907.

"Jurisdiction" is the authority by which courts and judicial officers take cognizance of and decide cases; power to hear and determine a cause. If a court has 'jurisdiction' of the persons to the action, and the cause is the kind of a cause triable in such court, it has jurisdiction and power to render any rightful judgment." Thurston v. Washington, 90 Pac. 16, 18, 18 Okl. 362 (quoting definition in Parker v. Lynch, 7 Okl. 631, 56 Pac. 1082); Jarrell v. Block, 92 Pac. 167, 169, 19 Okl. 467.

"Jurisdiction" is the authority by which judicial officers take cognizance of and decide cases; power to hear and determine a cause; the right of a judge to pronounce a sentence of the law on a case or issue before him, acquired through due process of law. State v. Wakefield, 60 Vt. 618, 15 Atl. 181, 183.

The word "jurisdiction," as used in Rev. St. 1887, § 4994, declaring that the writ of prohibition arrests the proceedings when they are without or in excess of the jurisdiction, means the right to hear and determine a matter, and carries with it the idea of exercising judicial or quasi judicial functions. Stein v. Morrison, 75 Pac. 246, 256, 9 Idaho, 426.

"Jurisdiction" is the power to hear and determine. Hence the nature of the functions to be exercised controls, whether they are brought into activity by primary process or by the removal from an inferior tribunal. Thus, on a trial de novo, the power of an appellate court in dealing with the pleadings and the evidence, the application of the law, and the rendition of judgment are independent of the action of the trial court, but are in no manner different from what it would be had the case been begun there originally. People's Sec. Bank of Worthing v. Sanderson, 123 N. W. 873, 877, 24 S. D. 443.

Same—Particular controversy

"Jurisdiction" is the power to hear and determine. As applied to a particular claim or controversy, it is the power to hear and determine that controversy. City Council of City of Cripple Creek v. Hanley, 75 Pac. 600, 601, 19 Colo. App. 390 (quoting Field, J., in People ex rel. Whitney v. Board of Delegates of San Francisco Fire Department, 14 Cal. 480, 496).

"Jurisdiction" is authority to hear and determine a cause; authority to decide. It is the power conferred by law to hear and determine controversies concerning certain subjects, and, as applied to the particular controversy, it is the power to hear and determine that controversy. Sumner v. Village of Milford, 73 N. E. 742, 743, 214 Ill. 388 (citing 11 Cyc. p. 660; People ex rel. Raymond v. Talmadge, 61 N. E. 1049, 194 Ill. 67).

"Jurisdiction" is the power to hear, determine, and pronounce judgment on the issues before the court. In re Hatch, 99 Pac. 398, 399, 9 Cal. App. 333; Menard v. MacDonald, 115 S. W. 63, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 627.

"Jurisdiction" is the right to adjudicate concerning the subject-matter in a given case, which depends upon the court's cognizance of the class of cases to which the one to be adjudicated belongs; presence of the proper parties and the point decided being in substance and effect within the issue. City of Rockland v. Inhabitants of Hurricane Isle, 76 Atl. 286, 287, 106 Me. 169.

Same—Subject-matter in controversy

"Jurisdiction" consists first in authority over the subject-matter, and, second, authority over the parties concerned; jurisdiction of the subject-matter coming wholly from the Constitution or statutes of the state. Smith v. Potter, 137 N. W. 854, 861, 92 Neb. 39 (quoting 2 Cooley, Tax. p. 879).

"Jurisdiction" is the power to hear and determine the subject-matter in controversy. If the law confers the power to render a judgment or decree, then the court has jurisdiction." Raine v. Lawlor, 82 Pac. 688, 689, 1 Cal. App. 483; Franklin Union, No. 4, v. People, 77 N. E. 176, 180, 220 Ill. 355, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1001, 110 Am. St. Rep. 248.

"Jurisdiction" means lawful power to hear and determine the matter in controversy, and this includes the power to determine the legal results to follow from the facts pleaded and proven. Menard v. MacDonald, 115 S. W. 63, 65, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 627.

"Jurisdiction" is defined to be the power to hear and determine the subject-matter in controversy in the suit before the court, and the rule is universal that, if the power is conferred to render the judgment or enter the decree, it includes also the power to issue proper process to enforce such judgment or decree. Phelps v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 112 Fed. 453, 458, 50 C. C. A. 339, 61 L. R. A. 717 (citing Riggs v. Johnson County, 6 Wall. [73 U. S.] 166, 187, 18 L. Ed. 768).

As authority to declare the law

"Jurisdiction" in courts is the power and authority to declare the law. The very word in its origin imports as much. It is derived from 'juris' and 'dico'—'I speak by the law.' And that sentence ought to be inscribed in living light on every tribunal of criminal power. It is the right of administering justice through the laws, by the means which the law has provided for that purpose. But here the mode and the manner of administering the justice of the country was not provided or prescribed by the law and is directly prohibited by it. There was therefore no jurisdiction." Hence the existence and legal constitution of a court is an inseparable part of its jurisdiction. Johnston v. Hunter, 40 S. E. 448, 449, 50 W. Va. 52 (quoting and adopting the definition in Mills v. Com., 13 Pa. 630).

Consent

"Jurisdiction" comes solely from the law; in no degree from the consent of litigants. So that neither consent nor anything else can authorize a court to act in a cause outside the sphere which the law has ordained for it. State v. Mortenson, 73 Pac. 562, 565, 26 Utah, 312.

Correctness of decision immaterial

"Jurisdiction" is the power to decide—wrong, as well as right." Armantage v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 81 Pac. 1033, 1034, 1 Cal. App. 130.

"Jurisdiction" is authority to hear and determine a cause, and does not depend either on the regularity of the exercise of that power or on the rightfulness of the decisions made. State ex rel. McNamee v. Stoble, 92 S. W. 191, 197, 194 Mo. 14.

"Jurisdiction" is the power to hear and determine a cause, and carries with it the power to decide a cause within the jurisdiction of the court incorrectly as well as correctly, and it does not relate to the rights of the parties, but to the power of the court. Dahlgren v. Superior Court of Santa Cruz County, 97 Pac. 681, 688, 8 Cal. App. 622.

The "jurisdiction" of a question is the lawful power to enter upon a consideration of and to decide it, and it is not limited to authority to render a correct decision, but includes the power to decide wrong as well as right. Ex parte Moran, 144 Fed. 594, 604, 75 C. C. A. 396.

"The test of 'jurisdiction' is whether the tribunal has power to enter upon the inquiry, and not whether its conclusions in the course of it were right or wrong." Clark v. Rossiter, 78 Pac. 358, 360, 10 Idaho, 348, 3 Ann. Cas. 231 (quoting Van Fleet, Collateral Attack, § 61).

"The test of 'jurisdiction' is whether the court has power to enter upon the inquiry. The 'jurisdiction' of the subject-matter embraces the power to determine every issue or controverted question in the case within the scope of the authority of the court according to its own view of the law and evidence, and it is not dependent upon the correctness of the conclusion which the court reaches. Where, under the general rules of the common law or by express provision of statute, the existence of some particular fact must be established at the trial to enable the court having cognizance of such cases to pronounce judgment in favor of one party or the other, an erroneous conclusion of the court in respect thereof is merely an error in the course of the proceeding, and it is not a jurisdictional defect." Flannigan v. Chapman & Dewey Land Co., 144 Fed. 371, 373, 75 C. C. A. 310.

"'Jurisdiction' is authority to hear and determine a cause. Since jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine, it is not dependent either upon the regularity of the exercise of that power or upon the rightfulness of the decision made. When there is jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter, the decisions of all other questions arising in the case are but an exercise of that jurisdiction." In adjudicating the question whether an instrument proposed was the last will and testament of testator, the county court has power to determine all facts pertinent, including the question whether or not the will was a forgery and whether it was executed with essential formalities and properly attested. Error of the county court in deciding any pertinent fact, including the question whether or not such will was a forgery and whether or not it was executed with essential formalities, including proper attestation, was an error in the exercise of jurisdiction, and not in the assumption thereof. Camplin v. Jackson, 83 Pac. 1017, 1018, 34 Colo. 447.

Though the circuit and superior courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the Supreme Court in habeas corpus proceedings, that fact does not authorize them to decide a question contrary to the way it has been decided in the Supreme Court, for jurisdiction is authority to hear and decide a case, and does not depend upon actual facts alleged, nor the correctness of the decision made, but upon authority to determine the existence or nonexistence of alleged facts and to render judgment according to the findings. Hence when the Supreme Court has, by affirming a conviction, determined its validity, and that fact appears on a petition for habeas corpus, neither the superior court nor any judge thereof has jurisdiction to determine that it is void and cannot grant a writ of habeas corpus to determine the validity of the imprisonment thereunder. People v. Superior Court of Cook County, 84 N. E. 875, 878, 284 Ill. 186, 14 Ann. Cas. 753.

Essentials

To obtain jurisdiction of a cause three things are necessary. Black, in his work on Judgments (volume 1, § 242), said: "First, the court must have cognizance of the class of cases to which the one to be adjudged belongs; second, the proper parties must be present; and, third, the point decided must be, in substance and effect, within the issue." In St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. State, 17 S. W. 806, 807, 55 Ark. 200, 205, the court said: "'Jurisdiction' is defined to be 'the right to adjudicate concerning the subject-matter in the given case.'" In Babb v. Brubere, 23 Mo. App. 604, jurisdiction is defined to be "the power to hear and determine the particular cause." In Hope v. Blair, 16 S. W. 595, 105 Mo. 85, 24 Am. St. Rep. 368, it is said there are three essentials to jurisdiction: "First, the court must have cognizance of the class of cases to which the one adjudged belongs; second, the proper parties must be present; and, third, the point decided must be, in substance and effect, within the issue"—thus approving and adopting the definition of "jurisdiction" given by Black. Nenno v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 80 S. W. 24, 26, 105 Mo. App. 540.

"Jurisdiction" is the right to adjudicate concerning the subject-matter in a given case; essentials thereto being cognizance of the class of cases to which the particular one belongs, proper parties, service of process on defendant, and a point to be decided within the issues. In re Casey, 195 Fed. 322, 328; Sloan v. Byers, 97 Pac. 855, 857, 37 Mont. 503 (quoting Munday v. Vail, 34 N. J. Law, 418); Rankin v. Schofield, 98 S. W. 674, 81 Ark. 440 (quoting and adopting definition in St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. State, 17 S. W. 807, 55 Ark. 205); Forrest v. Price, 29 Atl. 215, 219, 52 N. J. Eq. 16 (quoting and adopting definition in Munday v. Vail, 34 N. J. Law, 418, 422; Cowling v. Nelson, 88 S. W. 913, 915, 76 Ark. 146 (quoting and adopting definition in Falls v. Wright, 18 S. W. 1044, 55 Ark. 562, 29 Am. St. Rep. 74); City of Rockland v. Inhabitants of Hurricane Isle, 76 Atl. 286, 287, 106 Me. 169; J. P. Jorgenson Co. v. Rapp, 157 Fed. 732, 739, 85 C. C. A. 364 (citing Black, Judgm. § 242); State ex rel. McManus v. Muench, 117 S. W. 25, 29, 217 Mo. 124, 129 Am. St. Rep. 536; Robinson v. Levy, 117 S. W. 577, 582, 217 Mo. 498 (quoting and adopting definition in Munday v. Vail, 34 N. J. Law, 422).

Though jurisdiction depends on service of process and upon the fact that the subject-matter of the action is one upon which the court is given authority to exercise judicial authority, these things do not in themselves constitute "jurisdiction," since, when parties are before the court and present to it a controversy which the court has authority to decide, a decision appropriate to that question, but erroneous, is a proper exercise of "jurisdiction." Calhoun v. Bryant, 133 N. W. 266, 269, 28 S. D. 266.

"Jurisdiction exists wherever there is a suit, the subject-matter of which is cognizable in a court of chancery, and parties are brought before the court whose rights in relation to such subject-matter the court may adjudicate, and the effect of such adjudication between the parties, until reversed or set aside, does not depend upon the fact that the power of the court may have been erroneously exercised in making it. If there be necessary parties wanting, whose absence may render the adjudication fruitless or ineffectual, because the rights of such parties cannot be determined, that may be good cause for arresting proceedings or dismissing the suit, but it does not deprive the court of the power to proceed." The want of necessary parties does not deprive the court of jurisdiction, but the decree will bind the parties to it until set aside in a direct proceeding. Tod v. Crisman, 99 N. W. 686, 689, 123 Iowa, 693.

"Jurisdiction" may be defined to be the right to adjudicate concerning the subject-matter in the given case. To constitute this there are three essentials: First, the court must have cognizance of the class of cases to which the one to be adjudicated belongs; second, the proper parties must be present; and, third, the point decided must be, in substance and effect, within the issue. That the court cannot go out of its appointed sphere, and that its action is void with respect to persons who are strangers to its proceedings, are propositions established by a multitude of authorities. S. granted certain land to his five daughters, by name, for life, and then to the heirs of their body forever, and thereafter a creditor of S., after the latter's death, sued to set aside the deed, the petition alleging that S. had conveyed the land to avoid his debts, and prayed that the land be subjected to payment of his debts, and the defendants in the creditor's suit, who were the daughters and three of the minor heirs, the remaindermen under S.'s deed, the rest being then unborn, answered, and the judgment decreed that the deed from S. to his daughters and their heirs be set aside and divested defendants of all interest under the deed, and vested the same in widow and heirs at law of S.; but the land was never sold to satisfy the creditor's judgment, it being otherwise paid, and the decree setting aside the deed was never enforced. Defendants claim through the heirs of S., and contend that the decree in the creditor's suit setting aside the deed completely divested the remaindermen of all title therein. Held, that there was no issue raised in the creditor's suit between the life tenants and the remaindermen under S.'s deed, the only question in issue being whether the deed was void as against the complaining creditor, and the decree divesting the title of the remaindermen under the deed and vesting it in the heirs of S. was in excess of the court's jurisdiction and void. Charles v. White, 112 S. W. 545, 549, 214 Mo. 187, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 481, 127 Am. St. Rep. 674 (quoting and adopting Munday v. Vail, 34 N. J. Law, 418).

"Jurisdiction" has been defined as the power to hear and determine a cause, and it is coram iudice whenever a case is presented which brings this power into action; but, before this power can be affirmed to exist, it must be made to appear that the law has given the tribunal capacity to entertain the complaint against the person or thing sought to be charged or affected, that such complaint has actually been preferred, and that such person or thing has been properly brought before the tribunal to answer the charge therein contained. When these appear the jurisdiction has attached, the right to hear and determine is perfect, and the decision of every question thereafter arising is but the exercise of the jurisdiction thus conferred. Jurisdiction cannot be made to depend upon the records disclosing such a state of facts to have been shown in evidence as to warrant the exercise of its authority. Fisher & Lanning v. Quillen, 81 N. E. 182, 183, 76 Ohio St. 189 (citing Sheldon's Lessee v. Newton, 3 Ohio St. 494; Ludlow's Heirs v. Johnston, 3 Ohio 560, 17 Am. Dec. 609; Lessee of Adams v. Jeffries, 12 Ohio 253, 40 Am. Dec. 477).

Subject-matter and person

Legal jurisdiction consists of jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, and authority to determine the controversy. West Cove Grain Co. v. Bartley, 74 Atl. 730, 733, 105 Me. 293.

"Jurisdiction" is of two kinds—jurisdiction of the person, and jurisdiction of the property or thing in controversy; or, in other words, jurisdiction in personam and jurisdiction in rem. And jurisdiction in either case is sufficient to authorize a valid judgment to be rendered. Dillon v. Heller, 18 Pac. 693, 695, 39 Kan. 599.

"Jurisdiction" is of two kinds—one of the subject, the other of the parties—and both must exist in order to authorize the court to try and determine the cause. Unless the law gives the court jurisdiction of the subject, jurisdiction cannot be acquired by the consent of the parties; but, if the law gives jurisdiction of the subject, the court may acquire jurisdiction of the parties by their consent. If A. and B. both reside in this state and A. should sue B. for a debt in the circuit court of a county in which neither resides, and the writ is served on B. in that county, the court would have jurisdiction of the subject—that is, jurisdiction of subjects of that character—but it would not have jurisdiction of that case by virtue of the service of the process. But if B., without challenging the jurisdiction of the court, should file his answer pleading to the merits, neither party could afterwards question the jurisdiction of the court because by their actions they are conclusively presumed to have consented to give the court jurisdiction of their persons—that is, their personal rights—in that case." State ex rel. Furstenfeld v. Nixon (Mo.) 133 S. W. 340, 342.

Where the action provided for in place of quo warranto was erroneously begun by the Attorney General, the defect could be taken advantage of by demurrer, for, while the court had jurisdiction over the defendants by their appearance, jurisdiction involves, not only authority over the person of defendant but authority over the subject-matter, and the complaint showed that the action had not been commenced according to law. State v. Mills, 119 Pac. 763, 766, 61 Or. 245.

In holding that, if the district court had "jurisdiction" of the parties and the matter adjudicated, the injunction cannot be said to be absolutely void, the word "jurisdiction" in the sense used does not mean simple jurisdiction of the particular case occupying the attention of the court, but jurisdiction of the class of cases to which the particular case belongs. It is sufficient that the case belongs to a general class over which the authority of the trial court extends. If it does, then jurisdiction attaches, and is not lost because of an erroneous decision, however erroneous it may be. Lytle v. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co., 90 S. W. 316, 317, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 112.

The word "jurisdiction," as used in Act March 3, 1891, 26 Stat. 827, c. 517, § 5, authorizing direct writs of error from the Supreme Court when the jurisdiction of the lower court is in issue, is applicable to "initial questions of the jurisdiction of the United States District or Circuit Court, whether in law or in equity over the subject-matter and the parties, and not to questions whether a court of equity or of law is the proper forum for the working out of rights properly within the particular federal jurisdiction for adjudication." United States v. Larkin, 28 Sup. Ct. 417, 418, 208 U. S. 333, 52 L. Ed. 517 (quoting United States ex rel. Mudsill Min. Co. v. Swan, 65 Fed. 647, 13 C. C. A. 77).

Territorial Limitation

Under Cr. Code, § 272, making it an offense for any person to hire, persuade, or induce a witness in a criminal case to leave the "state," so that he cannot be produced as a witness, an indictment alleging that witnesses were induced to absent themselves from the "jurisdiction" of the court was sufficient, as the word "jurisdiction" is synonymous with the word "state" as used in the statute. Tedford v. People, 76 N. E. 60, 62, 219 Ill. 23.

The term "jurisdiction" may be used "in the sense in which it is applied to the right of a court over a person in a county other than that of his residence." A change of venue by agreement, in a suit for land brought in the county in which it is situated, does not destroy the force or jurisdiction of the suit as lis pendens in such county. Jones v. Robb, 80 S. W. 395, 402, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 263.

Venue distinguished

The question of where a suit should be brought is not one of "jurisdiction," and the question of venue either as to person or subject-matter may be waived; and where the court is one of general jurisdiction, having jurisdiction generally of the subject-matter of an action, and no objection is made to the venue, the question of venue will be treated as waived by defendant on whom service was obtained. Burke v. Malaby, 78 Pac. 105, 107, 14 Okl. 650.

Under Judiciary Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, § 1, 24 Stat. 552, as amended by Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, § 1, 25 Stat. 433, which confers federal "jurisdiction" over a controversy between citizens of a state and foreign states, and provides that no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another in any civil action in any Circuit or District Court, and that no civil suit shall be brought before those courts in any other district than that in which he is a resident, but that, when jurisdiction is founded only on the fact of a diversity of citizenship, suit shall be brought only in the district where either the plaintiff or the defendant resides, the court's "jurisdiction" depends on the status of the parties, which cannot be waived, as distinguished from the venue, which is a personal privilege granted to defendant and which may be waived either expressly or by failure to take appropriate and seasonable advantage of it. Fribourg v. Pullman Co., 176 Fed. 981, 984.

JURISDICTION OF THE PERSON

"'Jurisdiction' of the person or property of an alien is founded on its presence or situs within the territory." Wallace v. United Electric Co., 60 Atl. 1046, 1047, 211 Pa. 473 (citing and adopting definition in Steel v. Smith [Pa.] 7 Watts & S. 447).

The demurrer authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 488, subd. 1, in cases where it appears upon the face of the complaint "that the court has no jurisdiction of the person," means that the person is not subject to the jurisdiction of the court, and not that the suit has been irregularly begun; and a foreign corporation, sued under Code Civ. Proc. § 1780, making foreign corporations subject to the general jurisdiction of the courts where personal service is made as directed by the Code, cannot, by demurrer, raise the question of proper service. Heney v. Chartered Co. of Lower California, 128 N. Y. Supp. 436, 487, 71 Misc. Rep. 237.

The variance between an ordinance, for the paving of a street and the curbing of it with limestone, and the publication notice and delinquent list, specifying an assessment for curbing with wooden blocks and paving the street, goes to the merits, and can be raised without a special appearance questioning the jurisdiction of the court to render judgment and order of sale of property for nonpayment of a special assessment; for jurisdiction is authority to hear and decide a case, and "jurisdiction of the person" means the authority obtained by service of a summons or other proper notice or by an appearance to render a personal judgment, and "jurisdiction of the subject-matter" is the power to hear and determine cases of the general class to which the proceeding in question belongs. People v. Harper, 91 N. E. 90, 244 Ill. 121 (quoting 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3885, 3886).

The term "jurisdiction of the person" means the power obtained by the service of summons or other proper notice, or by an appearance, to render a personal judgment. Sanipoli v. Pleasant Valley Coal Co., 86 Pac. 865, 866, 31 Utah, 114, 10 Ann. Cas. 1142.

"Jurisdiction of the person" is the power of the court to deal with the person of defendant and to render a personal judgment against him, and is acquired by the service of the summons or other proper notice, or by voluntary appearance in person or by counsel. Jurisdiction of the person may be conferred, or, if lost, restored, by consent, and defects arising from irregularities in the commencement of an action or subsequent proceedings may be waived by appearance, or even by failure to make seasonable objections. Hobbs v. German-American Doctors, 78 Pac. 856, 857, 14 Okl. 236.

"'Jurisdiction of the person' is generally understood to mean the authority, obtained by the service of a summons or by other proper notice, or by an appearance, to render a personal judgment." When an ordinance for the improvement of a street provided that the curbing should be of limestone, and the publication notice and delinquent list specified a curbing of wooden blocks, the notice gave the court "jurisdiction of the person" of a delinquent property owner in an application for judgment and order of sale. People v. Harper, 91 N. E. 90, 244 Ill. 121 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3885).

JURISDICTION OF THE SUBJECT-MATTER

"Jurisdiction of the subject-matter" is the power to hear and determine cases of the general class to which the particular proceeding belongs. Daniels v. Bruce, 95 N. E. 569, 572, 176 Ind. 151; Gulf, T. & W. Ry. Co. v. Lunn (Tex.) 141 S. W. 538, 541; People v. Harper, 91 N. E. 90, 91, 244 Ill. 121; Rush v. Buckley, 61 Atl. 774, 778, 100 Me. 322, 70 L. R. A. 464, 4 Ann. Cas. 318 (quoting and adopting definition in State ex rel. Walnut St. Ry. Co. v. Neville, 19 S. W. 491, 110 Mo. 345); State ex rel. Bogle v. Superior Court of King County, 114 Pac. 905, 907, 63 Wash. 96.

"Jurisdiction of the subject-matter" means "jurisdiction of the class of cases to which the particular case belongs." Myer v. Minch, 91 N. E. 32, 33, 45 Ind. App. 495 (quoting Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Sutton, 30 N. E. 291, 130 Ind. 405); United States Health & Accident Ins. Co. v. Clark, 83 N. E. 760, 761, 41 Ind. App. 345 [quoting and adopting the definition in Chicago & A. Ry. Co. v. Sutton, 30 N. E. 291, 130 Ind. 405, 410; McCoy v. Able, 31 N. E. 453, 131 Ind. 417].

"Jurisdiction of the subject-matter" does not mean simple jurisdiction of the particular case before the court, but jurisdiction of the class of cases to which the particular case belongs. The court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, if the complaint states a case belonging to a general class over which the court's authority extends, whether the complaint is good or bad. State v. Smith, 72 Atl. 710, 714, 29 R. I. 513.

"Jurisdiction of the subject-matter" means the power, lawfully conferred, to deal with the particular subject involved in a particular action in a civil court, or of a particular offense charged in an indictment in a criminal prosecution. People v. Blake, 106 N. Y. Supp. 319, 324, 121 App. Div. 613.

In respect to jurisdiction over the subject-matter, by which is meant the nature of the cause of action and of the relief sought, jurisdiction is acquired only by the Constitution of the court. Wolff v. McGaugh, 57 South. 754, 755, 175 Ala. 299.

"Jurisdiction of the subject-matter" is the power of the court to deal with the general subject involved in the action, and is conferred by the law, and must be sought for in the general nature of its powers or the general laws defining its jurisdiction. This power cannot be conferred by agreement, nor can the lack of jurisdiction over the subject-matter be waived either by acquiescence, consent, or express agreement. Hobbs v. German-American Doctors, 78 Pac. 356, 357, 14 Okl. 236.

"Jurisdiction of the subject-matter" means, not only authority to hear and determine a particular class of actions, but authority to hear and determine the particular questions the court assumes to decide. Though it has general jurisdiction over the subject-matter, for instance, of actions to foreclose mortgages, to quiet title to real property, or for damages for personal injuries, its power to decide and determine matters in dispute between the parties in a given action is limited to those questions which are brought before it by the pleadings. The foundation of the rule that judgments of a court of competent jurisdiction are attended with a presumption of absolute verity is the fact that the parties have been properly brought into court and given an opportunity to be heard upon the matters determined. But the foundation falls and the rule of verity ceases when it affirmatively appears from the record that the judgment adjudicated and determined matters upon which the parties were not heard. When the court goes beyond and outside the issues made by the pleadings, and in the absence of one of the parties determines property rights against him which he has not submitted to it, the authority of the court is exceeded, even though it has jurisdiction of the general subject of the matters adjudicated. Sache v. Wallace, 112 N. W. 386, 387, 101 Minn. 169, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 803, 118 Am. St. Rep. 612, 11 Ann. Cas. 348.

"Jurisdiction of the subject-matter" is the power lawfully conferred to deal with the general subject involved in the action." The jurisdiction of the district court conferred by Const. art. 8, § 7, providing that the district court shall have original jurisdiction in all matters civil, is the power to pass on the subject-matter of the controversy without reference to whether it has jurisdiction of a particular case. Snyder v. Pike, 83 Pac. 692, 694, 30 Utah, 102 (quoting and adopting definition in Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 129).

The variance between an ordinance, for the paving of a street and the curbing of it with limestone, and the publication notice and delinquent list, specifying an assessment for curbing with wooden blocks and paving the street, goes to the merits, and can be raised without a special appearance questioning the jurisdiction of the court to render judgment and order of sale of property for nonpayment of a special assessment; for jurisdiction is authority to hear and decide a case, and "jurisdiction of the person" means the authority obtained by service of a summons or other proper notice or by an appearance to render a personal judgment, and "jurisdiction of the subject-matter" is the power to hear and determine cases of the general class to which the proceeding in question belongs. People v. Harper, 91 N. E. 90, 91, 244 Ill. 121 (quoting 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3885, 3886).

The statement of the court in Re Leggat, 56 N. E. 1009, 162 N. Y. 437, and People ex rel. Asmus v. Melody, 86 N. Y. Supp. 837, 91 App. Div. 570, to the effect that a discharge of a judgment debtor from custody on a writ of habeas corpus, without notice to the judgment debtor's creditors "was without jurisdiction, and the order made in the premises was 'void' and should have been vacated," must be taken as meaning that there was an irregularity requiring reversal of judgment, and not that the judgment was "void"; and the statement of the court in the Leggat Case that, because of the failure to serve the parties in interest, the court had no "jurisdiction of the subject-matter," may have been made to distinguish, instead of to overrule, the case of Savacool v. Boughton (N. Y.) 5 Wend. 171, commented on in 21 Am. Dec. 181. A judgment may be "void" as to the parties, and valid for the purpose of protecting the ministerial officers, where the court issuing process on the judgment had "jurisdiction of the subject-matter" and nothing appears on the face of the process to apprise the officer that the court was without jurisdiction of the person. Levy v. Melody, 99 N. Y. Supp. 153, 156, 50 Misc. Rep. 509 (citing Murfree, Sher. § 101a; Savacool v. Boughton [N. Y.] 5 Wend. 170, 21 Am. Dec. 181; Young v. Stone, 53 N. Y. Supp. 656, 33 App. Div. 268; Welles v. Thornton [N. Y.] 45 Barb. 393; Porter v. Purdy, 29 N. Y. 106, 113, 86 Am. Dec. 283; Kerr v. Mount, 28 N. Y. 659; Roderigas v. East River Sav. Inst., 76 N. Y. 316, 32 Am. Rep. 309).

JURISDICTION ORIGINALLY EXERCISED BY CHANCERY COURT

Under Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 646-701, c. 33, relating to the jurisdiction of probate courts, and sections 8697-8747, chapter 234, relating to guardians and wards, the probate court has exclusive jurisdiction of the settlement of estates of incompetents under guardianship, except where its remedies are inadequate, since the amendment of Rev. St. 1838, pt. 3, tit. 1, c. 4, § 4, giving the judge of probate jurisdiction of all matters relating to the settlement of the estates of minors and others under guardianship, by Pub. Acts 1871, p. 38, No. 39 (Comp. Laws 1897, § 651), adding the proviso that the jurisdiction so conferred shall not deprive the circuit court in chancery of concurrent jurisdiction as originally exercised over the same matters, was merely declaratory of existing law, to remove any doubt of the power of the chancery court to exercise its equity powers where the remedies in the probate court were inadequate, the term "originally exercised over the same matters" referring to the inherent equitable powers of the court as theretofore exercised in the state, and did not give the court of chancery full concurrent jurisdiction "of all matters relating to the settlement of the estates of such * * * minors and others under guardianship," etc., as originally exercised by the court of chancery of England. Nolan v. Garrison, 120 N. W. 977, 979, 156 Mich. 397.

JURISDICTIONAL DEFECT

Nonperformance of some act which is not inherently or constitutionally necessary to a tax sale, but which the Legislature in its discretion may or may not require, is not a "jurisdictional defect." Nind v. Myers, 109 N. W. 335, 340, 15 N. D. 400 (citing Roberts v. First Nat. Bank, 79 N. W. 1049, 8 N. D. 504).

JURISDICTIONAL FACTS

"Jurisdictional facts" are those which condition the power of the court to decide some of the issues in the case, like the nature of the subject-matter and the service of process. Other facts, which condition the character of the decree or the nature of the relief that should be granted or denied, are not jurisdictional, and final adjudications of issues relating to them conclusively estop the parties to the proceedings from again litigating them. The facts essential to invoke jurisdiction differ materially from those essential to constitute a good cause of action for the relief sought. In re First Nat. Bank, 152 Fed. 64, 68, 69, 81 C. C. A. 260, 11 Ann. Cas. 355 (citing In re Plymouth Cordage Co., 135 Fed. 1000, 1004, 68 C. C. A. 434, 438).

JURISDICTIONAL QUESTION

The trial judge's failure to make up and file a statement of facts within the time prescribed by law is not assignable, in the Court of Civil Appeals, on ex parte affidavit showing such failure as an error, since it is not one of the subjects which Rev. St. 1895, art. 1014, authorizes that court to review, and not being an error "apparent upon the face of the record" within such article, nor a "jurisdictional question" within article 998, so as to authorize review, and since there is adequate remedy to bring a statement of facts into the record under articles 1015 and 1382, authorizing the Court of Civil Appeals, for good cause, to extend the time for filing it, and under an application for mandamus to compel the trial judge to make up and file a statement. Applebaum v. Bass (Tex.) 113 S. W. 173, 174.

JUROR

See Answer of Juror; Competent Juror; Objectionable Juror.

Fixed opinion of juror, see Fixed Opinion.

Interest of juror, see Interest (In Suit or Action).

Prejudice of, see Prejudice.

In a verdict, "We, the juror, find the defendant guilty as charged," the word "juror" means "jury." Morris v. State, 45 South. 456, 458, 54 Fla. 80, 14 Ann. Cas. 235.

Rev. St. 1899, §§ 3784, providing that each "juror" not on the regular panel, and summoned to sit as a juror in any criminal case wherein the offense charged is punishable with death or by imprisonment in the penitentiary, shall be allowed certain sums for attendance and mileage whether he sits in the trial of the cause or is challenged off, embraces only such jurors as were qualified on the panel of 40 from which the panel of 12 to try the cause were to be selected. State ex rel. Suter v. Wilder, 95 S. W. 396, 401, 136 Mo. 418, 7 Ann. Cas. 158.

A "juror," within Rev. St. 1899, § 2045, directed against the attempt to improperly influence a "juror" in any civil or criminal case in relation to any matter pending in court before whom such "juror" shall have been summoned or sworn, is one who has been summoned, sworn, and impaneled and thus constituted and made a "juror." State v. Williford, 86 S. W. 570, 572, 111 Mo. App. 668.

A member of a general jury panel, who has not been sworn to try an issue in any particular case, is a "juror," within Code, § 4461, giving the court power to punish as contempt an attempt to influence a juror. Marvin v. District Court of Polk County, 102 N. W. 119, 126 Iowa, 355.

For some purposes, the actual taking of the oath may be essential to constitute a "juror"; but, as soon as a citizen is designated by law as one chosen to sit as a juror, he falls within the letter and spirit of Cr. Code 1902, § 263, punishing attempting to corrupt any juror, and the fact that a juror appears on oral notice, without more formal summons, cannot avail an accused who has attempted to influence such juror before he was sworn. State v. Maddox, 61 S. E. 964, 965, 80 S. C. 452.

Grand juror

The word "jurors," as used in Rev. St. § 802, declaring that jurors shall be returned from such parts of the district from time to time as the court shall direct, etc., embraced both grand and petit jurors. Spencer v. United States, 169 Fed. 562, 565, 95 C. C. A. 60.

The term "juryman," as used in a statute which renders county officers ineligible as jurymen in any civil or criminal case, is not limited to the members of the petit jury, but extends to members of the grand jury. State v. Graham, 60 S. E. 431, 432, 79 S. C. 116.

The expression "the jury," in a verdict in a criminal case, "We, the jury, find defendant guilty," etc., is not necessary to the validity of the verdict. Kehoe v. State (Tex.) 89 S. W. 270.

"A 'jury' has been defined as a body of men who are sworn to declare the facts of a case as they are proven from the evidence placed before them. * * * Our Code defined it as 'a body of men temporarily selected from the qualified inhabitants of a particular district and invested with power (1) to present or indict a person for a public offense; (2) to try a question of fact.' Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4730." State v. Stentz, 70 Pac. 241, 244, 30 Wash. 134, 63 L. R. A. 87.

The word "jury," as used in the Constitution, means a jury of men possessing such qualifications as the law in force at the time prescribes for jurors serving in the courts and selected from one of the lists in use by the courts. Hallett v. Boyer, 114 N. Y. Supp. 559, 560.

"The word 'jury' and the words 'trial by jury' were placed in the Constitution of the United States, with reference to the meaning affixed to them in the law as it was in this country and in England at the time of the adoption of that instrument." State v. McCarthy, 69 Atl. 1075, 1076, 78 N. J. Law, 295.

"A 'jury' implies 12 competent and disinterested men." Blair v. M. McCormack Const. Co., 107 N. Y. Supp. 750, 751, 123 App. Div. 30.

The word "jury" means a tribunal of 12 men, presided over by a court and hearing the allegations, evidence, and argument of the parties. Zanesville, M. & P. R. Co. v. Bolen, 81 N. E. 681, 683, 76 Ohio St. 376, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1107, 10 Ann. Cas. 658.

It may be that, if persons were called or summoned as jurors wholly without color of law, an objection would be available to a litigant, for in such case the persons so called or summoned would not be either a jury de facto or de jure. State v. Ju Nun, 97 Pac. 96, 98, 53 Or. 1.

Number

A "jury," within the meaning of the federal Constitution, and the sixth amendment thereto, is a jury constituted as at common law of 12 persons—neither more nor less. Bettge v. Territory, 87 Pac. 897, 898, 17 Okl. 85.

The word "jury," as used in the Constitution, means a common-law jury of 12 men. State v. Peterson, 41 Vt. 504, 520.

JURY OF THE VICINAGE

The term "jury of the vicinage" literally signifies of the neighborhood where a crime was committed. Commonwealth v. Jones, 82 S. W. 643, 644, 118 Ky. 889, 4 Ann. Cas. 1192.

"The 'jus disponendi' of a testator is a property right (O'Neill v. Supreme Council, A. L. of H., 57 Atl. 463, 70 N. J. Law, 411, 1 Ann. Cas. 422), and one which should be protected by a court of equity from a threatened or anticipated attack." Vanderbilt v. Mitchell, 67 Atl. 97, 101, 72 N. J. Eq. 910, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 304.

JUS PRIVATUM

The "jus privatum" was the right of the King to convey and vest in others of his private will the title to and over the sea, its arms and rivers, where the tide ebbed and flowed, and the shore below high-water mark, subject however to the jus publicum. The term "jus privatum," however, defined, included the ownership of the soil between high and low water marks. Bardes v. Herman, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1098, 1101, 62 Misc. Rep. 428.

"The king of England had title to the land under the navigable waters throughout his kingdom as his private property, which he could dispose of as he saw fit without restraint or hindrance from the law. This was known as the 'jus privatum' held by him in his individual capacity." The "jus privatum" is subject to the "jus publicum," or the king's title as sovereign to the navigable waters within rivers and arms of the sea where the tide ebbed and flowed. A lessee of land under navigable waters to use for the cultivation of oysters has no right in the land that is not subject to the power of the United States to construct improvements in aid of commerce and navigation. Lewis Blue Point Oyster Cultivation Co. v. Briggs, 91 N. E. 846, 847, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1084, 19 Ann. Cas. 694.

The jus privatum of the crown, by which the sovereign of England was deemed to be the absolute owner of the soil of the sea and of the navigable rivers, was not adopted as a part of the common law of the American colonies, and, except in so far as the jus privatum of the crown has devolved upon littoral and riparian owners, such right resides in the people in their sovereign capacity, and the public have a right to use the foreshore of the margin of tide waters for fishing, bathing, and boating, including the necessary incidental right of passage. Barnes v. Midland R. Terminal Co., 85 N. E. 1093, 1096, 193 N. Y. 378, 127 Am. St. Rep. 962.

Under the common law and Act Cong. Feb. 14, 1859, c. 33, 11 Stat. 383, admitting Oregon as a state, and providing that all the navigable waters of the state should be common highways forever free to the inhabitants of the state and to all other citizens of the United States, the tidelands between high and low water mark became the property of the state; and in the title thus acquired there were two elements—the "jus privatum," or private right, and the "jus publicum," or public right; the jus privatum being a species of private property which the state held the same as a private owner, and might grant to any one, in any manner, or for any purpose not forbidden by the Constitution, the grantee thereby taking the title as absolutely as under a private conveyance. Corvallis & E. R. Co. v. Benson, 121 Pac. 418, 422, 61 Or. 359.

JUS PUBLICUM

The king "had title, as sovereign, and in no sense as proprietor, to the navigable waters themselves within rivers and arms of the sea where the tide ebbed and flowed, but he held them in trust for his people, and he could not dispose of them by grant or otherwise. They were incapable of private ownership, for they were the 'jus publicum' held by the king, in a representative capacity. * * * The 'jus publicum' under the right of conquest and the treaty of peace made after the Revolutionary War went to the original states, and, when the Constitution was adopted, became subject to the rights surrendered thereby to the United States." A lessee of land under navigable waters to use for the cultivation of oysters has no right in the land that is not subject to the power of the United States to construct improvements in aid of commerce and navigation. Lewis Blue Point Oyster Cultivation Co. v. Briggs, 91 N. E. 846, 847, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1084, 19 Ann. Cas. 694.

The "jus publicum" was the right of the public to use the sea, its arms and rivers, where the tide ebbed and flowed, and the shore below high-water mark, for the development of commercial navigation. Bardes v. Herman, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1098, 1101, 62 Misc. Rep. 428.

Under the common law and Act Cong. Feb. 14, 1859, c. 33, 11 Stat. 383, admitting Oregon as a state, and providing that all the navigable waters of the state should be common highways forever free to the inhabitants of the state and to all other citizens of the United States, the tidelands between high and low water mark became the property of the state; and in the title thus acquired there were two elements—the "jus privatum," or private right, and the "jus publicum," or public right. The jus publicum, being the dominion of sovereignty in the state, by which it prevents any use of lands bordering on navigable waters which would materially interfere with navigation and commerce thereon, cannot be abdicated or granted. Corvallis & E. R. Co. v. Benson, 121 Pac. 418, 422, 61 Or. 359.

See True and Just.

The word "just" means conformable to rectitude and justice; not doing wrong to any; violating no right or obligation; not transgressing the requirements of truth and propriety; rendering to each his due. Champlain Stone & Sand Co. v. State, 123 N. Y. Supp. 546, 553, 66 Misc. Rep. 434.

The word "just," according to its popular interpretation, means upright, honest, impartial, fair, inequitable, and with its legal interpretation means true, exact, and conformable to law. In its legal sense nothing is "just" which is unlawful and nothing unjust is lawful. In the application of the word to taxes the legal interpretation must be given. State v. Several Parcels of Land, 116 N. W. 682, 684, 81 Neb. 770.

As correct

Where the statute requires that claims filed with an assignee for the benefit of creditors shall be verified by an affidavit that the statement is "true," that the debt is "just," and that there are no credits or offsets, etc., the statute must at least be substantially complied with by a creditor before he is entitled to benefits, and, where the affidavit to a creditor's claim omits to say that the statement is "true," and that it is "just," the statement in the affidavit that the account is "correct" is not equivalent to saying that it is "true," and that the debt is "just." An account might be correct, and yet the debt not be just. The Legislature evidently believed, in enacting the statute, that it was more important that the creditor should state that his debt was "true" and that it was "just," than that he should merely make affidavit that it was "correct." Hughes v. Potts, 87 S. W. 708, 709, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 179.

Reasonable synonyms

The word "just" is a synonym of reasonable. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Everett (Tex.) 86 S. W. 17, 18 (citing Stand. Dict.).

JUST ALLOWANCE

Trustees under an order for "just allowance" are entitled only to charges and expenses. State Bank at Elizabeth v. Marsh, 1 N. J. Eq. 288, 296 (quoting and adopting definition in Manning v. Manning's Ex'rs [N. Y.] 1 Johns. Ch. 527).

JUST AND ADEQUATE COMPENSATION

Where a commercial railroad company occupies the streets of a town or city pursuant to legislative authority and with the consent of the municipal authorities, such permission is subject to the constitutional restraint that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public purposes without "just and adequate compensation being first paid," and the company must first pay or tender to the abutting landowner just and adequate compensation for the damages consequential on the construction of the track and the uses to which it will be put. Athens Terminal Co. v. Athens Foundry & Machine Works, 58 S. E. 891, 893, 129 Ga. 393.

JUST AND EQUAL DISTRIBUTION

Orphan's Court Act N. J. 1898, § 168 (P. L. p. 715), directs the court to order a "just and equal" distribution to the next of kindred to the intestate in equal degrees or legally representing their stocks, each according to his or her respective right pursuant to the laws in such cases of the rules and limitations therein set down. Those rules and limitations direct a distribution to the next of kindred in equal degree, of or unto the intestate and their legal representatives as aforesaid. The words "as aforesaid" seem to have been used to direct attention to the limitation upon the right of representation among collaterals which has been stricken out, and they probably no longer serve any useful purpose. The distribution, to comply with the statute, must answer the following requirements: It must be just and equal. It must be to the next of kin in equal degree,

"and their representatives." It must be to each according to his or her respective right. It must be pursuant to the rules and limitations of the act. The words "just and equal" are perhaps a little difficult to explain. In one sense any distribution authorized by the statute would be just, for prior to the statute the next of kin were without right to share in the personal estate. But the word would have been quite superfluous if nothing more had been meant than a compliance with the statute. I think it had another meaning and referred to that natural right inherent in propinquity of blood mentioned by Chief Justice Beasley in Taylor v. Bray, 32 N. J. Law, 184, and in Schenck v. Vail, 24 N. J. Eq. 551. Whatever the law may be, it cannot be denied that a general sense of justice favors the rights of blood, and this sense of justice appears in the general scheme of our laws on the subject of descent and distribution. Tested by this sense of justice, the first cousins and their descendants seem nearer in blood than great great-grandparents and their descendants, although great great-grandparents and cousins are alike related in the fourth degree. The reasons are that great great-grandparents belong to so remote a generation that they are hardly likely to have been known personally to the intestate, and even their names are probably forgotten. Their descendants naturally become so numerous and so scattered that the intestate seldom can have known them, or even have been aware of the relationship, and the passing of three generations makes proof of kinship difficult. We have no reason to doubt the statement in appellant's brief that hardly 40 per cent. of the claimants who have been excluded from sharing in this estate will be able to legally prove that they are representatives of an ancestor, who, if living, would have stood in equal degree of kinship to the intestate as the living first cousins. Cousins, on the other hand, are ordinarily contemporaries of the intestate, are known to him, and their relationship recognized, while the descendants of first cousins, belonging to a younger generation, are more naturally looked on as having a spes accrescendi, to use Lord Hardwicke's expression in Evelyn v. Evelyn, 3 Atkins, 762. Again, there are eight pairs of great-great-grandparents, and hence at least eight stocks with which the cousins must share, if the appellants' contention is sound. In a perfectly conceivable and not improbable case, the intestate may have but one cousin. To adopt a construction which would give to that cousin only one-ninth of the estate and distribute eight-ninths to remote relatives would lead to a result which must shock the sense of justice of most men. Yet that is an understatement of the difficulties to which the construction would lead; for one of each pair of great-great-grandparents may have remarried after the death of the spouse, and, since the half blood share in the personal estate with the whole blood, there may be 16 stocks to share with the cousin. Such considerations have had weight with the courts in decided cases. The rights of brothers and sisters depend upon the same language of the statute as the right of cousins. They take as next of kin in the second degree; but grandparents are also in the second degree, and it has been contended that the four grandparents were entitled to share with brothers and sisters. They would be entitled to share upon the bare words of section 169, subd. 3; but it was decided in England in several cases prior to our Revolution that grandparents did not share with brothers and sisters. This construction was so thoroughly satisfactory that the cases seem never to have been taken to an appellate court; and we in this state have acquiesced so entirely that, although the case must have arisen, no one seems ever to have mooted the question in court. Yet the only foundation in reason for excluding the grandparents is the sense of natural justice which the framer of the statute had in mind when he required the distribution to be just. If no rule or limitation of the statute militates against such a construction, the just distribution required by section 168 would favor the respondents in this case. The distribution must also be equal. The equality is, of course, not an absolute equality of shares, but an equality according to the respective rights of each and the rules and limitations of the statute. Smith v. McDonald, 65 Atl. 840, 841, 71 N. J. Eq. 261 (citing 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 1591; Ordinary v. Cooley, 30 N. J. Law, 271, opinion of Justice Vredenburg).

JUST AND FAIR

See Fair and Just.

JUST AND REASONABLE DEMAND

Where, prior to an action by a domestic servant for services, plaintiff demanded $2.50, and the amount recovered was $2, the demand was not "just and reasonable," within the provision of Buffalo Municipal Court Act, Laws 1891, p. 233, c. 105, § 458, as amended by Laws 1898, p. 195, c. 101, § 3, entitling plaintiff in such an action to additional costs and a body execution, where it appears that she made a personal, just, and reasonable demand for the amount claimed from the defendant prior to the commencement of the action. Brennan v. Fick, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1008.

JUST AND TRUE ACCOUNT

The words "just and true," when used in connection with an account, mean an account which states truth, and not falsehood, and demands no more than, in right and justice, the claimant ought to have. Kneisley Lumber Co. v. Edward B. Stoddard Co., 88 S. W. 774, 779, 113 Mo. App. 308.

The statement of lien filed is not "a 'just and true statement of account' of the demand due," as required by statute to sustain the lien, where the amount claimed is from 60 to 70 per cent. above the amount due, as claimant must have known. Griff v. Clark, 119 N. W. 1076, 1077, 155 Mich. 611, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 305, 130 Am. St. Rep. 582.

Though a subcontractor's agreement fixed his compensation at a lump sum, a mechanic's lien account, filed by him, must be fairly itemized to constitute it "a just and true account," within Rev. St. 1909, § 8217; and hence an account which merely recites "to contract painting house, * * * $180," is insufficient. Baker v. Smallwood, 143 S. W. 518, 519, 161 Mo. App. 257.

JUST CAUSE

See Justifiable Cause.

"Just cause" means lawful ground. Hence, whether a man has "just cause" to desert his wife, or to refuse to support her, is a question of law to be determined by the court. State ex rel. Mlota v. Baker, 36 South. 703, 704, 112 La. 801.

A "just cause" for the removal of officers means something more than the mere wish of that part of the sovereign people which elected the officer whom it is attempting to remove. The question is not whether there was cause for the removal from office, as the word "cause" has heretofore been used in this connection. The fitness of the incumbent or the propriety or impropriety of his conduct is not alone involved. Malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance in office may call for the exercise of the right conferred, but it includes more than these. A clear conception of the purpose of such a proceeding for removal as distinguished from an ordinary "removal for cause" is necessary. The power to remove a corporate officer from office, for reasonable and "just cause," is one of the common-law incidents of all corporations, and this extends to elective as well as appointive officers, and it is competent for the charter of a city to so provide. Good v. Common Council of City of San Diego, 90 Pac. 44, 46, 5 Cal. App. 205 (citing Richards v. Clarksburg, 4 S. E. 774, 30 W. Va. 491, and Croly v. Board of Trustees of City of Sacramento, 51 Pac. 323, 119 Cal. 234).

Under Laws 1905, c. 363, § 22, providing that no subordinate or employé in the civil service of the state shall be removed, except for just cause, the courts have jurisdiction to determine whether the cause assigned for removal by the removing officer is a "just cause," but not to determine whether such officer correctly determined, on the facts, that such cause existed, and hence, where a state treasurer removed an employé for incompetency and insubordination, the court could not review his action; these being "just causes." State ex rel. Wagner v. Dahl, 122 N. W. 748, 750, 140 Wis. 301.

An instruction that if the jury believe that plaintiff, a passenger on defendant's train, was arrested without just cause, either by the conductor in charge of the train, or by another employé of the defendant by order of the conductor, is misleading in the use of the words "just cause." A conductor may be justified in making an arrest as conservator of the peace, though he has no just cause in the sense of actual cause for making the arrest, since he is entitled to make an arrest if there exist such a state of facts as constitute, in law, probable cause. Davis v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 56 S. E. 400, 401, 61 W. Va. 246, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 993.

Opprobrious epithets or insulting gestures, when applied to a person, constitute a "just or lawful cause of provocation to passion." State v. Brown, 79 S. W. 1111, 1112, 181 Mo. 192.

Probable cause synonymous

"Just cause," as used in an instruction in an action for abuse of process authorizing a recovery if defendant issued an attachment against plaintiffs without just cause, was not synonymous with "probable cause." Sehon, Blake & Stevenson v. Whitt (Ky.) 92 S. W. 280, 281.

JUST CLAIM

The term "just claim," in the rule that want of proper care on the part of the vendor of an article to protect himself from imposition takes from him all just claims for relief, whether his negligence is attributable to his indolence or credulity, is used solely as regards the right of the purchaser to invoke judicial power to save himself from loss, nor with the idea that the moral wrong done by the vendor could be balanced by his victim's negligence. Bostwick v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 92 N. W. 246, 253, 116 Wis. 392, 67 L. R. A. 705.

A claim is not a "just claim," within Gen. Laws 1896, c. 215, § 2, which, after prescribing the time within which claims must be presented to the administrator, concludes in the declaration that no claim other than those presented as aforesaid may be enforced against the estate, but other just claims can be paid out of assets, where it has been extinguished by lapse of time. Kenyon v. Probate Court of East Greenwich, 65 Atl. 267, 268, 27 R. I. 566 (citing Thompson v. Hoxie, 55 Atl. 930, 25 R. I. 377).

JUST COMPENSATION

Fair and just compensation, see Fair and Just.

The words "just compensation," as used in Const. art. 2, § 21, ordaining that private property shall not be damaged or taken for public use without "just compensation," mean exactly the same that they mean when used in everyday business transactions between man and man. They are not circumscribed by any technical definition that places them beyond the comprehension of men of ordinary intelligence. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co. v. Continental Brick Co., 96 S. W. 1011, 1013, 198 Mo. 698.

The term "just compensation," when applied to the taking of land for railroad purposes under the power of eminent domain, means, first, the full value of the land taken; and, second, where a part only of the land is taken, a fair and adequate compensation for all injury to the residue sustained or to be sustained by the construction and operation of the railroad, determined after a consideration of the advantages and disadvantages resulting and to result from the operation of the railroad. Genesee River R. Co. v. Boyington, 112 N. Y. Supp. 343, 345, 60 Misc. Rep. 416.

The "just compensation" which must be paid for the extending of a street across a railroad right of way is merely compensation for the diminution in value of the exclusive right to use for railroad purposes the property sought to be condemned, caused by the existence and use of the street, and the expense of erecting gates, planking, crossing, and maintaining flagmen which will necessarily result therefrom must be regarded as incidental to the exercise of the police powers of the city in opening the street and are not elements of "just compensation." Grafton v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co., 113 N. W. 598, 602, 16 N. D. 813, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1, 15 Ann. Cas. 10.

On the payment of the damages which constitute the "just compensation" for private property taken for public use, the title acquired by the exercise of the power of eminent domain becomes perfected. The owner of land taken for public uses may waive the formality of a statutory assessment of damages, and, when he voluntarily accepts a satisfactory amount agreed upon between the company and himself, the constitutional guaranty of a "just compensation" is fulfilled. Currie v. Bangor & A. R. Co., 75 Atl. 51, 54, 105 Me. 529.

"Just compensation" required to be paid for land taken for public use is not obtained when fixed by an interested tribunal, unless the amount is agreed to. Peirce v. City of Bangor, 74 Atl. 1039, 1041, 105 Me. 413.

Benefits included

The "just compensation" required to be made to an owner where part of his land is taken for public use is the value of the part taken and damages to the remainder, less any special benefit to the remainder by reason of the taking and use for a particular purpose. In re Water Front on North River in City of New York, 105 N. Y. Supp. 750, 757-762, 120 App. Div. 849.

Costs and expenses of action to obtain included

While "just compensation" requires a fair indemnity to the landowner for his necessary expenses in proving the value of the land, he is not to be fully indemnified for any unusual compensation which he may choose to pay his counsel and expert witnesses. Studwell v. Halsted, 116 N. Y. Supp. 68, 70, 62 Misc. Rep. 330.

The provisions of Laws 1905, p. 2027, c. 724, as supplemented by Laws 1905, p. 2051, c. 725, for allowance of expenses and disbursements, including witness and counsel fees, are sufficient to satisfy the constitutional requirement of "just compensation," so far as the landowner's necessary expenses are concerned; the term "expenses" being of broad meaning, and covering any necessary expense, except those items specifically mentioned and otherwise provided for in the statute. In re Board of Water Supply of City of New York, 116 N. Y. Supp. 642, 645, 62 Misc. Rep. 326.

Though, under Code Civ. Proc. § 274, which provides that costs, witness fees, and disbursements shall not be taxed in the Court of Claims, nor shall counsel or attorney's fees be allowed, no costs or disbursements can be recovered by a claimant for the value of land appropriated by the state for a canal improvement, yet his expenses in procuring an abstract of his title, being preliminary to the filing of the claim must be awarded to him. The condemnation law so far as it allows taxation of costs and disbursements in proceedings to condemn real property in general (Code Civ. Proc. § 3372), is not applicable to the Court of Claims, in passing on a claim for the value of land appropriated by the state. Brainerd v. State, 131 N. Y. Supp. 221, 231, 74 Misc. Rep. 100.

Damages to land not taken included

"Just compensation" to the owner of a farm, a part of which is taken by the United States by permanently flooding it in improving navigation, as an incident to which a public highway crossing the flooded land is also flooded, demands an award of the damages to that part of the farm not taken by reason of the destruction of the easement of access to the turnpike by way of the highway thus destroyed. United States v. Grizzard, 31 Sup. Ct. 162, 163, 219 U. S. 180, 55 L. Ed. 185, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1185.

As difference in value before and after taking part

"Just compensation" provided by the Constitution (art. 1, § 6) as damages for the taking of private property for public use is to be measured by the difference in the market value of the premises before and after the appropriation, where a part only of the property is taken. Brainerd v. State, 131 N. Y. Supp. 221, 225, 74 Misc. Rep. 100.

As fair cash value

The "just compensation" required by the Constitution for the taking of private property for a public use is the fair cash value of the property taken. The value of the capabilities of the property for a particular use at the time of the taking must be considered in determining the market price, but the speculative value of the property in the hands of a future owner may not be considered; and where an owner has developed his property, and is using it in the way which possesses a special value to him, just compensation requires that he be paid for it at the place and in the form in which it is taken. Southern Ry. Co. v. City of Memphis, 148 S. W. 662, 669, 126 Tenn. 267, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 828, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 153.

As full and fair equivalent

"Just compensation" means a full and fair equivalent for the loss sustained; the fair market value of the thing taken. Champlain Stone & Sand Co. v. State, 123 N. Y. Supp. 546, 553, 66 Misc. Rep. 434.

In the law of eminent domain the constitutional combination of the two words "just compensation" means a full and perfect equivalent for the property taken, and the just compensation is for the property, and not to the owner. Town of Nahant v. United States, 136 Fed. 273, 283, 70 C. C. A. 641, 69 L. R. A. 723 (citing Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 13 Sup. Ct. 622, 626, 148 U. S. 312, 326, 37 L. Ed. 463).

"Just compensation," within the meaning of the compensation to be awarded in condemnation proceedings, means full compensation for everything or element of value taken. Kennebec Water Dist. v. City of Waterville, 54 Atl. 6, 19, 97 Me. 185, 60 L. R. A. 856.

A requested instruction in condemnation proceedings, stating that the compensation to be paid was the fair cash value in the market of the leasehold interest and the buildings on the various lots at the date of filing the petition, was modified by the court by adding that: "Just compensation is the payment to another of such a sum of money as will make him whole, so that, upon the receipt of the same, he will be no poorer by reason of the taking of his property than he would be if the same were not taken." Held that, while perfect accuracy would require the court to state a maximum beyond which the jury should not go, yet the jury could not have been misled. West Chicago Park Com'rs v. Boal, 83 N. E. 824, 827, 232 Ill. 248.

Where the United States in its sovereign capacity exercises its arbitrary power to condemn private property for necessary public use, the "just compensation" which it is required by the Constitution to make to the owner should be determined on equitable principles, and should be such as to put the owner in as good condition pecuniarily as he would have been if the property had not been taken. United States v. Town of Nahant, 153 Fed. 520, 521, 82 C. C. A. 470 (citing Lewis, Em. Dom. § 494).

The term "just compensation," as used in connection with the taking of property for public use, involves placing the property owner in the same position financially that he would have been in if his property had not been taken on a given date. In re Board of Rapid Transit Com'rs, 112 N. Y. Supp. 619, 635, 128 App. Div. 103.

As market value

"Just compensation" means the fair market value of the thing taken. Champlain Stone & Sand Co. v. State, 123 N. Y. Supp. 546, 553, 66 Misc. Rep. 434.

"Just compensation," provided by the Constitution (article 1, § 6), as damages for the taking of private property for public use, is to be measured by the market value of the property where the whole property is taken. Brainerd v. State, 181 N. Y. Supp. 221, 225, 74 Misc. Rep. 100.

Under the constitutional requirement (article 1, § 6) of "just compensation" for private property taken for public use, an owner against whom benefits are to be charged must be given at least the market value of the lands taken. Brainerd v. State, 181 N. Y. Supp. 221, 232, 74 Misc. Rep. 100.

Where property on which the owner had conducted a large and successful business for several years, and which was peculiarly adapted to such business, was entirely condemned for the use of a railroad company, the owner, under the Constitution and statutes requiring payment of "just compensation," was limited to the reasonable market value of the property at the time of the taking and was not entitled to damages resulting from injury to the business or loss of profits incident to its removal to another location. Hunter's Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 59 S. E. 415, 417, 107 Va. 158.

As money equivalent

"Just compensation" for property taken by condemnation means a fair equivalent in money, which must be paid at least within a reasonable time after the taking, and it is not within the power of the Legislature to substitute for such present payment future obligations, bonds, or other valuable advantage. City of Waterbury v. Platt Bros. & Co., 56 Atl. 856, 858, 76 Conn. 435 (citing Butler v. Ravine Road Sewer Com'rs, 39 N. J. Law, 665; Bloodgood v. Mohawk & H. R. R. Co. [N. Y.] 18 Wend. 9, 35, 81 Am. Dec. 313; Sanborn v. Belden, 51 Cal. 266; Burlington & C. R. Co. v. Schweikart, 14 Pac. 329, 10 Colo. 178).

In the law of eminent domain the owner is entitled to "just compensation," and cannot be compelled to accept any other kind of property in lieu thereof. "In the exercise of the right of eminent domain, no just compensation can be made for the property taken, except in money. Money is a common standard, by comparison with which the value of anything may be ascertained." Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Fox, 78 Pac. 800, 801, 28 Utah, 311 (quoting 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1354).

Speculative damages

The "just compensation" to which one is entitled under the laws of eminent domain means compensation for real damages, and does not include fanciful or speculative damages. Spohr v. City of Chicago, 69 N. E. 515, 518, 206 Ill. 441 (citing Chicago & A. R. Co. v. City of Pontiac, 48 N. E. 485, 490, 169 Ill. 155, 178; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. City of Chicago, 87 N. E. 78, 149 Ill. 457).

JUST DEBTS

See Pay All My Just Debts.

Laws 1909, c. 207, § 1, provides that any municipal council contracting for the performance of any public work shall require a bond of the contractor for the payment of all materialmen and just debts incurred by the contractor. Section 2 makes the city itself liable on failure to take such a bond. An action was brought against the contractor, its receiver, and the municipality for which the contract work was done to recover the contract price for material furnished to the contractor. It appeared that a part of the material furnished was neither used in the work, nor delivered upon the ground to be used therein. Held, that neither as a materialman nor as one to whom a just debt had been incurred in the performance of contract work could plaintiff recover of the city for material not used or delivered on the ground for use. Gate City Lumber Co. v. City of Montezano, 111 Pac. 799, 800, 60 Wash. 586.

JUST INVESTIGATION

See Fair and Just.

JUST OR LAWFUL CAUSE

See Just Cause.

JUST REMUNERATION

"Just remuneration," as used in a contract for the care of cattle, in case any of the animals should be lost, means the "remuneration" which the owner would be justly entitled to under the law for the loss of his cattle by the contractor's negligence, which is the value of the cattle lost. Mattern v. McCarty, 102 N. W. 468, 470, 73 Neb. 228.

JUST SHARE

The plaintiff, a tenant in common, must prove in his action against his cotenant, for money had and received to recover his share of the profits in an enterprise, that defendant has received "more than comes to his 'just share' or proportion. The words 'just share' would imply that his share is to be determined by justice, not by fiction or technicality." Dewing v. Dewing, 42 N. E. 1128, 1129, 165 Mass. 230.

JUST TITLE

The phrase "justo titulo," defined in the Civil Code as "that which legally suffices to transfer the ownership or property right, the prescription of which is in question, "does not mean that the titulo must have been effective in the particular case, for then prescription would be unnecessary. A wholly unauthorized grant of public land in the Philippine Islands by subordinate Spanish officials, showing its invalidity on its face, cannot serve as the basis of a prescriptive title under the Spanish royal decree of June 25, 1880, under which a prescriptive right can be founded on possession for ten years under a "just title" and in good faith. Tiglaio v. Insular Government of Philippine Islands, 30 Sup. Ct. 129-131, 215 U. S. 410, 416, 54 L. Ed. 257.

JUSTLY

The term "justly," as used in the consideration of what a plaintiff in attachment is "justly entitled to recover," includes not only what in good faith the debtor he is entitled to recover, but also what he is entitled to recover in good faith and justice to other creditors. Crim v. Harmon, 18 S. E. 753, 755, 38 W. Va. 596.

"'Justice' is the end of government. It is the end of civil society. It ever has been and ever will be pursued until it be obtained or until liberty be lost in the pursuit." McKinster v. Sager, 72 N. E. 854, 860, 163 Ind. 671, 72 N. E. 854, 68 L. R. A. 273, 106 Am. St. Rep. 268 (quoting from United States v. Nourse, 9 Pet. [34 U. S.] 8, 27, 9 L. Ed. 31).

"Justice" means that end which ought to be reached in a case by the regular administration of the principles of law involved as applied to the facts. Meeks v. Carter, 63 S. E. 517, 518, 5 Ga. App. 421.

Where the colonel of a regiment of the national guard, who had been suspended from duty, wrote the Governor asking that the Governor do him the justice to state that he had done or invited nothing worthy of censure, and subsequently wrote a second letter again demanding "justice" or a court of inquiry, the word "justice" evidently referred to his previous demand that the Governor do him justice by stating that he had done nothing worthy of censure. State ex rel. Higdon v. Jenks, 35 South. 60, 138 Ala. 115.

JUSTICE (An Officer)

See District Court Justice.

Where a motion is made under Rev. St. 1903, c. 84, § 53, for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, the statute requires that the testimony respecting the allegations of the motion shall be heard and reported by the "justice," meaning the justice presiding at the term when the motion is filed. Mitchell v. Emmons, 71 Atl. 321, 324, 104 Me. 76.

JUSTICE AND EQUITY

Under Cobbey's St. 1907, § 8978, authorizing an action, by the owner of property within and contiguous to the boundary of a municipal corporation, to have it disconnected from the municipality, and providing that the court, if it finds that "justice and equity" require that such land, or any part thereof, be disconnected from the municipality, shall enter a decree accordingly, the test of whether "justice and equity" require such disconnection is whether the land has a unity of interest with the platted portion of the municipality in the maintenance of a municipal government, and hence the statute does not authorize the court to exercise legislative policy by determining what justice and equity require without ascertaining any fact or group of facts, upon the determination of which the law will exclude the territory. Bisenius v. City of Randolph, 118 N. W. 127, 128, 82 Neb. 520.

JUSTICE COURT

As judicial court, see Judicial Court.

A "justice's court" is a court of limited jurisdiction, both as to subject-matter and territory. Winn v. Butts, 56 S. E. 406, 407, 127 Ga. 385 (citing Everett v. Brown, 43 S. E. 735, 117 Ga. 342).

"A 'justice's court' is a court of limited jurisdiction, and presumptions in favor of its judgments are not allowed to the same extent that they are in cases of judgments by courts of general jurisdiction." Field v. Peel, 50 S. E. 346, 347, 122 Ga. 503.

A court of "justice of the peace" is of limited jurisdiction. The justice has no powers, except as granted by statute. Hence, in the absence of statutory provision for disposition of causes which are pending in a justice's court and undetermined when the justice dies, the cause abates and dies with him. State ex rel. Faughnan v. Miesen, 105 N. W. 555, 96 Minn. 466.

"Justices' courts" in Nebraska are not mere creatures of the Legislature, but they are courts created by the Constitution itself, and an action pending before a justice is removable to a national court on the petition of a nonresident defendant if there exists the proper diversity of citizenship and the value of the matter in controversy exceeds

$2,000 exclusive of interests and costs. Katz v. Herschel Mfg. Co., 150 Fed. 684, 685.

A court of a "justice of the peace" is one of limited and special jurisdiction, and no presumptions are entertained in favor of its jurisdiction; but the records must show affirmatively that it has jurisdiction of both the subject-matter and of the parties. But after jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties attaches, the rule changes, and in all subsequent proceedings the same presumptions are indulged in favor of the regularity and validity of the proceedings of a justice's court as are extended to a superior court of general jurisdiction. Rhyne v. Manchester Assur. Co., 78 Pac. 558, 559, 14 Okl. 555.

JUSTICE EJECTMENT

The proceeding commonly known as "justice ejectment," given by statute where one in possession of demised premises under a written or parol lease remains in possession, without right, after the termination of the lease by its own limitation, or after a breach of a stipulation contained therein, is available where the tenancy is created by contract, although it is created for life. Foss v. Stanton, 57 Atl. 942, 76 Vt. 365.

JUSTICE MAY REQUIRE

See As Justice May Require.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE

See, also, J. P.

The true conception indicated by the term "justice of the peace," as disclosed by our Constitution and statutes, is that of an officer having both judicial and political functions—judicial, in that he holds a court and decides matters of litigation arising between parties; political, in that he is a member of the quarterly county court, which is the governing agency or legislative body of the county—but that, in performing all of the duties pertaining to these two functions, he is, in the main, dependent upon his civil district, which creates him, which must be his home, which he cannot remove from without forfeiture of his office, and which he represents in the county legislature or county court. Grainger County v. State ex rel. Myntatt, 80 S. W. 750, 756, 111 Tenn. 234.

A "justice of the peace" is a constitutional officer under Const. art. 6, § 17, and is a town officer, who can have no existence as a public officer independent of his town organization, and as a town officer his powers and duties are limited to such as are given him by statute. A justice of the peace cannot try a case before a jury in an adjoining town, where he has an office, even by consent of the parties. Eisenberg v. Lape, 103 N. Y. Supp. 169, 170, 52 Misc. Rep. 329 (citing Gurnsey v. Lovell [N. Y.] 9 Wend. 319; Town of Lyme v. Town of East Haddam, 14 Conn. 394; Lynch v. Vermazen, 15 N. W. 663, 61 Iowa, 76; Gage v. Clark, 15 Atl. 831, 51 N. J. Law, 97).

A "justice of the peace" is an officer of limited jurisdiction, but he has the right upon objection to ascertain whether a summons has properly been served so as to confer jurisdiction in a case before him and for that purpose, entertain an application to set aside its service. People ex rel. Ballin v. Smith, 76 N. E. 925, 926, 184 N. Y. 96.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE IN THE CITY

Rev. St. 1899, § 5664, provides that, when the amount due on any tax bill does not exceed $300, suit may be brought before any justice of the peace in the city issuing them. In a suit before a justice on tax bills the summons showed that he was a justice in the township in which the city was situate. The return of service showed that it was served in the township. The transcript set forth a judgment rendered before a justice "within the city in and for" the township. Held, that the justice had jurisdiction to render judgment, for the phrase "justice of the peace in the city" means a justice in the township in which the city is situate, under Rev. St. 1899, § 3805, making justices township officers. Carpenter v. Roth, 91 S. W. 540, 543, 192 Mo. 658.

JUSTIFIABLE CAUSE

See Just Cause.

"Justifiable cause" which will excuse a husband or wife for leaving the other must be such as could be made the foundation of a divorce from bed and board, and of a nature inconsistent with the marital relation, or such as would render cohabitation unsafe.

Reynolds v. Reynolds, 60 S. E. 381, 383, 68 W. Va. 15, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 889.

JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE

The taking of human life is justifiable, when done in the execution of public justice. State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 538, 7 Pennewill, 479.

"Justifiable homicide" is that committed in the execution of public justice, or for the prevention of any atrocious crime attempted to be committed with force. State v. Watson (Del.) 82 Atl. 1086, 1087.

Homicide is "justified" by law when committed in defense of one's person against any unlawful and violent attack, made in such a manner as to produce a reasonable expectation of death or some serious bodily injury. Jirou v. State, 108 S. W. 655, 658, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 18.

Mansf. Dig. § 1547 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 890), defines "justifiable homicide" as the killing of a human being in necessary self-defense, or in defense of habitation, person, or property, against one who manifestly intends or endeavors by violence or surprise to commit a known felony. Driggers v. United States, 104 S. W. 1166, 1170, 7 Ind. T. 752.

"Justifiable homicide" is defined by section 6570, Rev. St. 1887, as follows: "Homicide is also justifiable when committed by any person, in either of the following cases: (1) When resisting any attempt to murder any person or to commit a felony, or to do some great bodily injury upon any person. (3) When committed in the lawful defense of such persons. * * * When there is reasonable ground to apprehend a design to commit some great bodily injury, and imminent danger of such design being accomplished. The statute having used the word "great," it was a differentiation for an instruction thereunder to use the word "serious"; there being certainly a distinction between the meaning of the two words. State v. Crea, 76 Pac. 1013, 1017, 10 Idaho, 88.

In defining "justifiable homicide" as laid down in section 70, of Pen. Code Ga. 1895, it is inaccurate to use the expression "in self-defense, or in defense of habitation, property, or person, against one who manifestly intends and endeavors by violence or surprise, to commit a felony on either," instead of "one who manifestly intends or endeavors." Mere words or threats will not of themselves justify a homicide or reduce it to manslaughter. Taylor v. State, 63 S. E. 296, 298, 131 Ga. 765.

According to the provisions of Pen. Code, § 205, the homicide is justifiable when committed in the lawful defense of the slayer, or of his or her husband, wife, parent, child, sister, master, or servant, or of any other person in his presence or company, when there is reasonable ground to apprehend a design on the part of the person slain to commit a felony, or to do some great personal injury to the slayer, or to any such person, and there is imminent danger of such design being accomplished. People v. Regan, 94 N. Y. Supp. 841, 843, 107 App. Div. 608.

"Homicide" is "justifiable" when committed either in the lawful defense of the slayer, or of his or her husband, wife, parent, child, brother, sister, master, or servant, or of any other person in his presence or company, when there is reasonable ground to apprehend a design on the part of the person slain to commit a felony, or to do some great personal injury to the slayer or to any such person, and there is imminent danger of such design being accomplished, or in the actual resistance of the attempt to commit a felony upon the slayer in his presence or upon or in a dwelling or other place of abode in which he is. There is a further provision of law as follows: An act otherwise criminal is justifiable when it is done to protect the person committing it, or another whom he is bound to protect, from inevitable and irreparable personal injury, and the injury could only be prevented by the act; nothing more being done than is necessary to prevent the injury. People v. Rodawald, 70 N. E. 1, 7, 177 N. Y. 408.

The killing of a human being in the heat of passion, while reducing the crime to manslaughter, does not constitute "justifiable homicide." People v. Ashland, 128 Pac. 798, 802, 20 Cal. App. 168; Nutt v. State, 128 Pac. 165, 169, 8 Okl. Cr. 266.

Accused in a prosecution for homicide becoming convinced that his wife sustained illegal relations with L., and that B. had been a party to the matter, went to B.'s saloon and shot him, and then went to the place where his wife was staying, thrust his hand with a revolver through the door and shot; the bullet inflicting a fatal wound on her. He testified that all three had ridiculed him, and that he became so angry that he did not know what he did at the time of the shooting, which all occurred in a short space of time, and after it was over he made exclamations and apparently unpremeditated utterances indicating ignorance of and surprise at his wife's injuries. Held, that such facts did not present a case of justifiable or excusable homicide as defined by St. 1898, §§ 4366, 4367, the first of which involves some element of self-defense for the enforcement of a duty, and the second excludes the use of dangerous weapons. Duthey v. State, 111 N. W. 222, 224, 131 Wis. 178, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032.

Apprehension of danger

"Homicide" is "justifiable" and is no offense against the law when committed in necessary self-defense. This occurs when one is attacked in such a manner as to produce in his mind a reasonable apprehension of death or serious bodily injury, or where it reasonably appears to one from the act, or acts, coupled with the words of the person killed, that the slayer is thereby in danger of death or serious bodily injury and he kills to protect himself from such danger. Then such killing is deemed in justifiable self-defense. McCormick v. State, 108 S. W. 669, 672, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 493.

"The law has been long settled on this subject in our state, and is that if a party is in real or apparent danger of death or great bodily harm, or believes himself to be so, as evidenced by circumstances justifying that belief as the facts appear to him, and he in good faith, under such apprehension, kill his adversary, it is "justifiable homicide." Frazier v. State, 100 S. W. 94, 98, 117 Tenn. 430 (quoting and adopting definition in Allsup v. State, 5 Lea [73 Tenn.] 362).

The statute provides that a homicide shall be "justifiable" when there shall be reasonable cause to apprehend a design to commit a felony or do some great personal injury and there shall be reasonable cause to apprehend immediate danger of such design being accomplished. Sylvester v. State, 35 South. 142, 151, 46 Fla. 166.

Under Rev. Pen. Code, § 268, making "homicide justifiable" if committed by a person in lawful defense of his person when there is a reasonable ground to apprehend some great personal injury and imminent danger of such design being accomplished in order to constitute the defense it is not essential that the danger actually exists, but only that there be reasonable grounds to apprehend the existence of such danger; and hence a party may act upon appearances of an assault being made upon her. State v. Lepine, 118 N. W. 1076, 1077, 21 S. D. 500.

"Justifiable homicide" is the killing of a human being in necessary self-defense. In ordinary cases of one person killing another in self-defense, it must appear that the danger was so urgent and pressing that, in order to save his own life or prevent his receiving great bodily injury, the killing of the other was necessary; and it must appear, also, that the person killed was the assailant, and that the slayer had really and in good faith declined any further contest, after the mortal blow or injury was given. Green v. United States, 104 S. W. 1150, 1160, 7 Ind. T. 783.

The intentional infliction of death is "justifiable" when it is inflicted to defend oneself or another from immediate and obvious danger of instant death or grievous bodily harm, if he in good faith, and on reasonable grounds, believes it to be necessary when he inflicts it. Self-defense will justify a person in defending those with whom he is associated, and in killing if he believes life is in danger; and the right may be exercised by the servants and friends of the party assaulted, or any one present in repelling an attempted felony. If defendant, as a reasonable man, believed that another person, who is assaulted, was in danger of losing his life or suffering great bodily harm, he has the same right to defend such other person as that person would have to defend himself. State v. Hennessy, 90 Pac. 221, 225, 29 Nev. 320, 18 Ann. Cas. 1122 (quoting and adopting Desty's American Crim. Law, §§ 125d, 126, 126a).

"In order to make 'homicide justifiable,' it is essential that the defendant who interposes such defense show not only that he believed that his adversary was about to inflict some great personal injury upon him, but as well that he had reasonable grounds for so believing. It is equally clear that he must decide at his peril upon the force of the circumstances in which he is placed, and the mere fact he believed he was in danger of having some injury inflicted upon him, without reasonable grounds for basing such belief, certainly cannot have the effect to reduce the grade of the crime." State v. Clay, 100 S. W. 439, 442, 201 Mo. 679.

A homicide is "justifiable" by one without fault who is attacked by another, where the circumstances furnish reasonable ground for apprehending a design to attack his life or to do him some great bodily harm, and for believing the danger imminent, and that such design will be accomplished, though it may turn out that the appearances were false, and that there was in fact no such design, nor any danger of its being accomplished; but the facts must be such that the jury, in the light of all the facts and circumstances known to him at the time and by him then believed to be true, can see that as a reasonable man he had ground for such belief. Wells v. Territory, 78 Pac. 124, 130, 14 Okl. 436.

The statute declaring that homicide is "justifiable" when there is a reasonable ground to apprehend a design to commit a felony or to do some great personal injury and imminent danger of such design being accomplished only authorizes one to take human life, when it reasonably appears necessary to do so, and he is not justified in killing his fellow man through mere cowardice. The law presumes that a defendant has a reasonable amount of intelligence, that he is reasonably prudent, and that he has the power to act with reasonable courage; and the burden is on him who claims the contrary to at least raise reasonable doubt of the existence of such presumed fact, and, when it is said that a homicide must be viewed from the defendant's standpoint, it only means that the jury must take the facts as they were presented to him in his situation at the time, and from them determine whether he acted on reasonable appearance of danger. Turner v. Territory, 82 Pac. 650, 652, 15 Okl. 557.

Defense of relative

If defendant struck decedent in defense of his brother at a time decedent was really or apparently endeavoring by violence to commit a felony on his person, and the circumstances were sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable man that such was the purpose of decedent, the "homicide" would be "justifiable." Warnack v. State, 60 S. E. 288, 290, 3 Ga. App. 590.

JUSTIFIABLE SELF-DEFENSE

"A man may repel force by force in defense of his person, habitation, or property, against one who manifestly intends, or endeavors, by violence or surprise, to commit a known felony, such as murder, rape, robbery, arson, burglary, and the like upon either. In these cases, he is not obliged to retreat, but may pursue his adversary until he has secured himself from all danger; and if he kill him, in so doing, it is called 'justifiable self-defense.' Of course, where one is attacked in his own dwelling house, he is never required to retreat." An owner of a store in which goods are kept for sale or in deposit is not liable in trespass to a would-be burglar, who is shot by a spring gun placed in the store to shoot persons attempting to burglarize it. Scheuermann v. Scharfenberg, 50 South. 335, 337, 163 Ala. 337, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 369, 136 Am. St. Rep. 74, 19 Ann. Cas. 937 (quoting and adopting definition in Story v. State, 71 Ala. 337).

JUSTIFICATION—JUSTIFY

See Without Excuse or Justification.

"Justification" as applied to the law of libel does not imply that something has been done which is privileged or excused. Ferdon v. Dickens, 49 South. 888, 894, 161 Ala. 181.

The words, "when the finances of the county will justify it," as used in Rev. St. c. 24, § 26, making it the duty of the county board of each county to provide a suitable courthouse, when necessary and the finances of the county will justify it, cannot be construed to mean that the county has no power to make a contract for the repair or construction of a courthouse unless it has cash in its treasury. The fifth paragraph of the section shows that "finances" include all debts and liabilities of every description, and the assets and other means of discharging the same. In passing upon the question, the county board takes into consideration everything in connection with the fiscal affairs of the county, and if, in good faith, without fraud, it determines that the finances justify the erection of the courthouse, the person with whom the contract is made to build the same is not bound to inquire into the correctness of the determination. The conclusion which the board comes to upon the subject is one which must control. Coles County v. Goehring, 70 N. E. 610, 617, 209 Ill. 142.

An instruction, that under the requirements of the law a valid location of a mining claim may be made when the prospector has discovered such indications of mineral that he is willing to spend his time and money in following with the expectation of finding ore, was properly modified by substituting the word "justified" for the word "willing." The question whether the miner is "willing" to spend his time and money is an entirely different one from the question whether he is "justified" in doing it. The former is a question to be answered by the miner himself, while the latter would present a question for experts. Ambergis Min. Co. v. Day, 85 Pac. 109, 113, 12 Idaho, 108.

The word "justify," in the regulations issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue requiring sureties on bonds to justify, means the proceeding by which the sureties establish their ability to perform the undertaking of the bond. United States v. Hardison, 135 Fed. 419, 421.

Where exception was taken to the sureties on appeal, and, by consent, the justification was postponed from time to time and finally waived by appellees, the 30 days within which the transcript must be filed under L. O. L. § 554, subd. 2, to prevent the appeal from being deemed abandoned began to run from the date of waiver of justification, which was equivalent to a "justification," within section 550, subd. 4, providing that from the expiration of the five days allowed to except to the sureties, or from the justification thereof, if excepted to, the appeal shall be deemed perfected, so that the transcript was filed in time, where filed pursuant to an order made during the 30 days so computed, extending the time for filing as authorized by section 554, subd. 2. Cantrall v. Sterling Mining Co., 122 Pac. 42, 43, 61 Or. 516.

St. 1896, § 3092, requiring a bond as a condition of a new trial in ejectment, provides that the sureties shall "justify" their responsibility in the same manner as bail on arrest. Section 2704, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 238, c. 159, prescribing the "qualifications" of bail, provides that each must be worth the amount of property specified over and above all his debts and liabilities, and sections 2705 and 2706 prescribe the manner of "justification" of bail and proceedings thereon. Held, that an undertaking approved by the judge complied with section 3092, though the sureties in their affidavit of qualification failed to state that the property possessed by each was "over and above all his debts and liabilities," the sureties being subject to "justification" subsequently, as provided by sections 2705 and 2706; the term "justification" being used in the statute in its common-law sense of a proceeding on notice to establish qualification as bail when the undertaking is excepted to. Dickinson v. Smith, 120 N. W. 406, 407, 139 Wis. 1.

JUVENILE DELINQUENT

As prisoner, see Prisoner.

K

K. D.

The letters "K. D.," as used in the phrase "K. D. and released" in a bill of lading on a shipment of wagons, meant "knocked down." That is, that the wagons were not set up in running order, but taken to pieces when packed in the car. Mouton v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 29 South. 602, 604, 128 Ala. 537.

KALMIA

Of rhododendrons the Century Dictionary says that "the leaves in the typical species forming the section rhododendron proper, are evergreen," and again, that they "are handsome shrubs, much cultivated for their evergreen, leather leaves," etc.; that "the pontic rhododendron (R. ponticum) is the most common species of European gardens, hardy only as a low shrub in the northern United States." The encyclopedia Britannica says: "The varieties grown in gardens are mostly derived from the pontic species (R. ponticum) and the Virginian (R. catawbiense). These are mostly hardy in England. The common pontic variety is excellent for game covert from its hardness," etc. The genus Kalmia is said to comprise "six species of ornamental hardy evergreen shrubs," of which Kalmia latifolia is the best known and most grown species. 2 Nicholson, Dict. Gardening, p. 216. This species is widely known in the United States as the American laurel ("Kalmia" Cent. Dict.). United States v. Ouwerkerk, 153 Fed. 916, 918.

KANSAS CUT-THROAT MORTGAGE

A "Kansas cut-throat mortgage" is a contract by the terms of which property was pledged as security for debt at an exorbitant rate of interest, and, if not paid within a limited time, all right and title to the property was forfeited. This was a contract which obtained in the early history of frontier life in some of the western states. Such contracts have been upheld, but never in Kentucky. W. G. Duncan Coal Co. v. David Duncan & Co. (Ky.) 97 S. W. 43, 44.

KATE

"Kate" and Kittle are the same name, one being a nickname and the other a pet name for Catherine. Corr v. Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n, 69 N. E. 288, 290, 177 N. Y. 181.

KEEP

Keeping a disorderly house, see Disorderly House.

The word "keep," as used in an agreement where a master agreed with a servant to keep the latter's wages and pay better interest than a bank, does not indicate any trust relation, but indicates that the master is borrowing money. Tucker v. Linn (N. J.) 57 Atl. 1017, 1020.

A building which is being "used" for an unlawful purpose is being "kept" for such purpose. Oilgschlager v. Territory, 79 Pac. 913, 914, 15 Okl. 141.

The court is not authorized to enter of record a verdict of guilty against one indicted for keeping, as a nuisance, a tippling-shop under chapter 73, Rev. St., when three of the jury, upon their being polled, refused to concur in such verdict, but answered guilty of "keeping a bar" there, as the words "keeping a bar" will be construed with reference to the language of the statute to mean having a bar but not necessarily using it. State v. Wright, 5 R. I. 287, 289, 290.

The word "kept," as used in a will providing that the estate should be placed in the hands of a trustee "to be equally divided among" testatrix's children "and to be kept in trust by the Fidelity Trust Company, or any other trust company they may prefer," clearly indicates an intention to continue the holding of the estate in trust after testatrix's death. Cochran v. Lee's Adm'r (Ky.) 84 S. W. 337, 338.

Gift imparted

The deposit of money to the credit of another together with delivery of the bank book, and an unqualified declaration to the donee in presence of a third person that the money was for her to "keep," evidenced an absolute gift. Robinson v. Powell, 59 Atl. 1078, 1080, 210 Pa. 232.

As determined by intent or purpose

One of the meanings of the word "keep," according to the Century Dictionary, is "to have habitually in stock or for sale." The word "own" is given as a synonym of "possess." The word "have" is the most general of these words; it may apply to a temporary or to a permanent possession of a thing. * * * To own is to have a good legal title to." Acts 1905, p. 82, c. 52, is entitled an act to regulate and in certain cases to prohibit the manufacture, sale, "keeping for sale, owning or giving away of cigarettes," etc., and providing penalties for violation thereof, and declares that it shall be unlawful for any person directly or indirectly to manufacture, sell, dispose of, give away, or keep for sale any cigarettes, etc., or "keep or own or to be in any way concerned, engaged or employed in owning or keeping any such cigarettes." The act passed the Senate under a title "An act to regulate the manufacture, sale, and the giving away of cigarettes," etc. When the bill passed the House on third reading, it retained such title, which was afterwards amended by adding a penalty clause. The bill then went back to the Senate, and a conference committee reported the bill with its present title under which it was adopted. Held, that the act should not be construed as intending to prohibit the act of smoking cigarettes or keeping them in possession for the sole purpose of smoking them. State v. Lowry, 77 N. E. 728, 734, 166 Ind. 372, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 528, 9 Ann. Cas. 350.

The Georgia prohibition statute (Acts 1907, p. 81) declares that it shall not be lawful for any person to "keep on hand" at his place of business any intoxicating liquor. The criminal act is the keeping on hand, and it is wholly immaterial for what purpose the intoxicating liquor is there kept on hand. Consequently, an accusation which charged that the defendant, on a day named, "did keep on hand at his place of business intoxicating liquor," was good in form and substance, and on the trial any evidence as to the defendant's purpose in keeping the intoxicating liquor on hand at his place of business was properly excluded as irrelevant and immaterial. Cohen v. State, 65 S. E. 1096, 1097, 7 Ga. App. 5.

As maintain

The words "keep" and "maintain" are frequently used as synonymous, and a person may be convicted under an indictment for keeping and maintaining a gaming house, on proof that he was guilty of either keeping or maintaining. Bryan v. State, 47 S. E. 574, 120 Ga. 201.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 9055, requiring the recorder to "keep" his office at the county seat, section 9069, requiring him to deliver deeds when recorded, and section 9089, requiring him in certain instances to transmit papers from one county to another, he is entitled to reimbursement from the county for stamps used in his official business; "keep," as used in section 9055, meaning to "maintain," to "provide for," involving the idea of effort in that line, i. e., that the office shall be carried on, enjoyed, etc., and showing a legislative intent that the recorder should maintain and provide for his office in a reasonable way, for the benefit of the public, at public expense. Ewing v. Vernon County, 116 S. W. 518, 523, 216 Mo. 681.

If a person, being in possession of a house, makes an executory sale thereof to a lewd woman, so that she may conduct it as a lewd house, and she thereupon occupies it and devotes it to that purpose, he stands in such an accessorial relationship to her act as to be indictable under the provisions of Pen. Code 1910, § 882, which makes it a misdemeanor for any person to keep or maintain a lewd house. Kinard v. State, 72 S. E. 715, 10 Ga. App. 133.

P. S. 5623-5629, provide for the licensing of dogs, which are required to wear collars showing the owner or keeper's name, and provide that one "keeping" a dog contrary to the foregoing provisions shall be fined, etc. Section 5635 authorizes killing of dogs found at large without such collars. Held, that while a constable was authorized to kill defendant's dog on finding it at large without a collar, which had just been lost, defendant is not liable to a fine under section 5629, it appearing that he had no knowledge of such loss; the word "keep" within that section being synonymous with "maintain," and the word "keeping" implying some degree of permanence. State v. Kelley, 84 Atl. 861, 862, 86 Vt. 237, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 437.

As license to sell liquor

A certificate of license "to keep said club," issued by a clerk of the county court to a social club, as provided by Code Supp. 1909, § 1042a, with payment of taxes thereon, constitutes a valid license to sell liquors to members of such club. State v. Atkinson, 68 S. E. 291, 294, 67 W. Va. 537.

As possession

The term "keep," as used in a statute providing that a warrant for the seizure of liquors must set out the person believed to be the owner, possessor, or keeper of such liquors, merely contemplates authority to deal with the liquor, and actual possession is not necessary. Commonwealth v. Intoxicating Liquors, 39 N. E. 848, 349, 163 Mass. 42.

A person who is found in possession of intoxicating liquors with the intention of disposing of same without license is a "keeper" within the meaning of the provisions of Comp. St. 1903, c. 50, § 20. The word "keep" denotes possession, and the statute makes the fact of being found in possession evidence that the person so found is keeping intoxicating liquors within its meaning, and, if it is further shown that the possession is coupled with the "intention of disposing of the same without license in violation" of the law, the crime is complete. Ford v. State, 112 N. W. 606, 607, 79 Neb. 309.

Where a statute permitted seizure of liquors and the vessels containing them, without a warrant, but required that the officer should "keep" them till a warrant could be procured, an officer who attempted to make a seizure without a warrant, but was prevented from consummating it by a scuffle with the defendant in which the vessel was destroyed and the liquor split, did not "keep" them, so that he could not later obtain a warrant therefor to justify the seizure. State v. Howley, 65 Me. 100, 102.

Keep a man

Words charging that a married woman "keeps" some other man than her husband are of doubtful import, and may be understood by an ordinary hearer as imputing adultery. Henicke v. Griffith, 29 Kan. 516, 518.

Keep and maintain

An allegation that one "did keep and maintain" a liquor nuisance applies either to one who occupies or controls the occupation and procures or permits illegal use of the place. State v. Fogg, 77 Atl. 714, 715, 107 Me. 177.

Keep books

Kirby's Dig. § 4375a, provides that in an action on a fire policy proof of substantial compliance with its conditions shall be sufficient. In an action on a fire policy it appeared that insured made an inventory of the goods on hand when the policy was issued, and that defendant's agent was present when the policy was issued and examined the stock; that insured kept a book showing what goods were received and what were sold from the date of the policy to the time of the fire, and kept a cashbook showing the amount of goods sold; and it appeared that insured lost all the goods that were not sold. Held, that there was a substantial compliance with the provision of the policy requiring a set of books presenting a complete record of the business transacted. Security Mut. Ins. Co. v. J. E. Woodson & Co., 95 S. W. 481, 482, 79 Ark. 266, 116 Am. St. Rep. 75.

Where a small store or "commissary" in the country was conducted in connection with a lumber business, and tickets were given to the employes for the sum due them for work, which were treated as cash at the store, the amount of purchases being indicated on the ticket by a punch and entered as a cash sale, and where it appeared that there were no credit sales, but the aggregate of such sales each day was entered at the close of the day, and that all goods were sold at a profit of from 25 to 50 per cent., it cannot be said as matter of law that this was a violation of the requirement as to keeping books. Where a merchandise account was kept as showing goods purchased, the aggregate amount of the whole being $558.87, and where some of the items stated the character of the goods and their price, but there were other items aggregating in amount nearly one-half of the whole sum, which merely stated the name of some person or firm, with the added word "bill," and an amount, in the absence of any other evidence to show that there was in this regard a compliance with the requirement as to "keeping books," it does not on its face appear to meet such requirement. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 56 S. E. 643, 645, 127 Ga. 491, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 667, 9 Ann. Cas. 461 (citing Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Ellington, 21 S. E. 1006, 94 Ga. 785; 2 Cooley, Briefs, Ins. 1822-1824; Standard Fire Ins. Co. of Kansas City v. Willock [Tex.] 29 S. W. 218; McNutt v. Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. [Tenn.] 45 S. W. 61; Brown v. Palatine Ins. Co., 25 S. W. 1060, 89 Tex. 599; Jones v. Southern Ins. Co., 38 Fed. 19; Sun Ins. Co. v. Jones, Co. v. Ware*, 46 S. W. 129, 65 Ark. 336; Aetna Ins. Co. v. Fitze, 78 S. W. 370, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 214).

Keep, care for, and support

A devisee having been in the habit of performing certain personal ministrations for testator, the latter, during an illness which confined him to his bed, made a will devising certain land to the devisee, in fee, in case he should "keep, care for and support testator during the remainder of his life." Testator partially recovered from his illness so as to be able to care for himself and continued to furnish his own living until he died. Held, that the words "keep, care for and support" should be construed to have been used according to their usual and ordinary meaning, and were not substantially fulfilled by such personal ministrations performed by such devisee. Fisher v. Fisher, 113 N. W. 1004, 1006, 80 Neb. 145.

Keep closed

Where defendant's saloon was so arranged that his boarders and employes could go into the barroom on Sunday either to go in or out of the building, the saloon was not "kept closed" as required by law. People v. Norman, 122 N. W. 369, 370, 158 Mich. 37.

Keep for sale

Where defendant was a jobber of candy, and admitted that he had purchased candies from which samples shown to be adulterated were taken, that he had such candies at his place of business, and did not contend that the candy was bought for any other purpose than for resale in the course of his business, it sufficiently appeared that it was kept for sale, within New York City Sanitary Code, § 68. People v. Greenberg, 119 N. Y. Supp. 325, 326, 134 App. Div. 599.

Posts and poles cut by a foreign corporation, peeled and inspected where cut, and kept there to be gradually shipped away, either to a yard to await sale or directly to the consumer, as orders are received at the yard, are "kept for sale" at the place where cut, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1898, § 1040, providing that merchants' goods, wares, and commodities kept for sale shall be assessed in the district where located. Valentine-Clark Co. v. Shawano County, 97 N. W. 915, 916, 120 Wis. 310.

Liquor in possession of a boarding house keeper is "kept for sale," where he keeps it to be disbursed under an agreement that boarders, who pay the regular price, should be entitled to have it to drink with their meals when called for. State v. Wenzel, 56 Atl. 918, 920, 72 N. H. 396.

Where accused, who had, in a warehouse in the state, liquors shipped to him from a sister state, directed a drayman to take the liquor from the warehouse and carry it to a resort maintained by accused, and the liquor, while in the possession of the drayman, was seized by officers, accused was properly found guilty of keeping or having in possession for sale prohibited liquors, in violation of Acts 1909, p. 8, the phrase "keep or have in possession for sale" meaning the same thing; and one who has possession of prohibited liquors for purposes of sale is keeping such liquors for sale, within the statute. Priest v. State, 59 South. 318, 319, 5 Ala. App. 171.

Keep gambling device

The offense of setting up and keeping a gaming device may be prosecuted as a continuing one; the word "keep" itself containing the idea of continuity. State v. Lawson, 145 S. W. 92, 96, 239 Mo. 591.

To "set up a gaming table" is to provide whatever may be necessary for the game, and, either by acts or words, to propose to play it. A man may set up a gaming table, without any table in a literal sense; or without having money or property to stake on the game, for his credit may be substituted. The bank is a fund of money, or property, or credit, offered to be staked on all bets, which others may choose to make against the banker, on the game which he shall exhibit to entice bets. He, who employs such a fund, for such a purpose, thereby sets up a gaming table, whether he deals his cards on a table or a bench. And virtually he keeps the bank or gaming table, although some other person may win in his absence, but at his instance, deal the cards and manage the game for him. Setting up a gaming table is no violation of the statute, unless a game be played, and something be bet. In substance and effect therefore the man who sets up a gaming table "keeps a gaming table," and e converso the person who keeps may, in one sense, be said to set up a gaming table pro hac vice. Commonwealth v. Burns, 4 J. J. Marsh. (27 Ky.) 177, 180, 181.

An instruction that one cannot be convicted of "keeping" a gambling device by reason of playing upon it or betting with others, and that he must have the custody, care, and control of it, and must hold it in readiness to obtain bettors, and that even though defendant frequented a room, and bet and gambled therein, yet, if some one else rented the room, and assumed to control it, and did control it and the tables or devices therein, defendant is not guilty, is proper. City of Mexico v. Harris, 92 S. W. 505, 507, 115 Mo. App. 707.

One who merely furnishes a table upon which to play a game of craps, and participates in the game without becoming banker and playing against the crowd, is not guilty of "keeping and exhibiting a gaming table or bank." Coleman v. State, 87 S. W. 152, 153, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 202.

Keep her red hot

A command of an engineer of a railroad train to the fireman to "keep her red hot" meant, of course, for the fireman to give his concentrated attention to keeping up the steam. Southern Ry. Co. v. Cheaves, 36 South. 691, 692, 84 Miss. 565.

Keep in possession

The words "store and keep in possession," as used in 26 St. at Large, p. 60, prohibiting the unlawful accepting, receiving, storing, and keeping in possession alcoholic liquors contrary to law, involve the idea of continuity or habit, and have no different construction or meaning in counties where the sale of liquor is prohibited from that which they have in counties where liquors are lawfully sold through dispensaries. In a prosecution under 26 St. at Large, p. 60, relating to the unlawful keeping, storing or receiving of alcoholic liquors, the court erred in charging that it was unlawful for one to have liquor in his possession in a prohibition county without reference to the quantity or purpose. State v. Green, 71 S. E. 847, 848, 89 S. C. 132.

Keep in repair

Maintain synonymous, see Maintain.

A covenant in a lease, obligating the lessor to keep the premises in good repair, requires him to maintain them in as sound condition as when the contract was made, and to repair defects caused by the elements, arising from decay or natural causes, but not to improve the property by the construction of a drain to carry water, which, in wet weather, goes into the basement. Kingsted v. Wright County Co-operative Co., 133 N. W. 399, 400, 116 Minn. 131.

The words "keep in repair" as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 3123, making it the duty of the landlord, in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, to keep the premises in "repair," are not technical words, but are used in their ordinary sense. To "repair" is to mend; to restore to a sound state whatever has been partially destroyed; to make good an existing thing; restoration after decay, injury, or partial destruction. An improvement is a valuable and useful addition, something more than a mere repair or restoration to the original condition. Dougherty v. Taylor & Norton Co., 63 S. E. 928, 930, 5 Ga. App. 773.

Where the contract between plaintiffs and defendant was to do and perform, during the space of five years, all the work necessary for building wharves and "repairing and keeping in good order" the levee and the wharves designated, plaintiffs were bound to do, at all times, the work necessary to repair and keep in good order the wharves and levee, and to leave them in good order at the expiration of the period named. Davis v. New Orleans, 13 La. Ann. 624, 625; Cornell v. Vanartsdalen, 4 Pa. 864.

A franchise by which a railway company obtained a right of way through a city street provided that such railroad would "keep and preserve in good order for the use of the citizens of the town" that particular street. Held, the obligation of the railroad will not be measured by the size and condition of the city at the time the contract was entered into, but by the new and improved methods of paving demanded by its growth and changing conditions, which must have been within the purview of the parties at the time of making the contract, so that the railroad must provide a permanent pavement, where it was necessary to provide the public with the same accommodations as were afforded by similar streets of the city. City of New Bern v. Atlantic & N. C. Ry. Co., 75 S. E. 807, 159 N. C. 542 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3125).

Keep insured

A covenant in a contract of sale of realty to keep the property insured for a sum equaling the insurance on some of the buildings at the date of the contract is a covenant to continue the insurance as it was at that date, and no abatement of purchase money can be had for loss by fire of a portion of the property on which there was no insurance; the covenant having been performed. Conklyn v. Shenandoah Milling Co., 70 S. E. 274, 275, 68 W. Va. 567.

Keep on premises

Where five gallons of gasoline ordered by one of the plaintiffs for use at his home was delivered at the insured factory while the buyer was out, and, when he returned shortly thereafter, he directed it to be set outside, where it remained for an hour, when it was taken away, the presence of gasoline under such circumstances was not a violation of the clause in the policy insuring the factory that gasoline should not be kept or allowed on the premises as a matter of law. Clute v. Clintonville Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 129 N. W. 661, 663, 144 Wis. 638, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 240.

A fire policy stipulated that it should be void if gasoline was kept, used, or allowed on the premises, which were used for a restaurant. Gasoline was kept on the premises for use in carrying on the business. Sometimes gasoline was delivered at the restaurant for use in it and in the business of insured in another building; but the quantity used in such other business was not kept in the restaurant, but was sent to such other building. Held, that the gasoline so sent out was not "kept, used, or allowed" on the premises insured. American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Chancey (Tex.) 127 S. W. 577, 579.

A condition in a fire policy rendering it void in case fireworks should be "kept, used, or allowed" on the premises was violated by the taking of fireworks on the premises, and there setting them off for the purpose of an exhibition. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Ocean View Pleasure Pier Co., 56 S. E. 584, 587, 106 Va. 633.

Keep open

The offense of keeping a saloon open on Sunday consists in not keeping it closed on Sunday, and it is not material whether or not any sale was made on that day, nor what was the saloon keeper's intent in not keeping it closed, nor whether any person was seen to enter or depart from the saloon. State v. Schell, 117 N. W. 505, 22 S. D. 340.

A shop, warehouse, or workshop may be kept open on the Sabbath within the prohibition of the statute without being kept wide open, or kept open in the same manner and for the same purpose in which and for which it is kept open for business on week days. Where a person who operated a shop in which he employed nine men and twelve women opened it on the Sabbath to allow those who desired to go in and work, and nine men and one woman went in and worked during the day, when he opened the shop again to permit them to leave in the evening, keeping the doors locked in the meanwhile, he was guilty of "keeping open" his workshop on the Lord's Day. Commonwealth v. Kirshen, 80 N. E. 2, 194 Mass. 151, 10 Ann. Cas. 948.

Pen. Code 1895, § 390, declaring that any person who shall be guilty of "keeping open a tippling-house" on the Sabbath day or Sabbath night shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, was originally aimed at the keeping open of houses where intoxicating liquors should be drank on the Sabbath day. "There can be no keeping open of a tippling-house on Sunday which is innocent, because the law forbids it, and unless he who keeps it open is mentally irresponsible the intention to violate the law will be conclusively presumed. The fact that a saloon is kept open, though but for an instant on the Sabbath day, if unexplained, will authorize a jury to convict—they will not err if they do convict—but the defendant has the right to explain, and then it would be for the jury to decide whether urgent necessity and innocence of intention justified the accused, or whether the excuse is a hollow subterfuge which the jury should not hesitate to spurn if presented." Richardson v. State, 59 S. E. 916, 918, 3 Ga. App. 313.

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4542, requires railroad ticket offices to be kept open for one-half hour prior to the departure of each train. Held that, where the one in charge of a ticket office during the half hour before the departure of a train absented himself a sufficient time to attend to two separate business matters, and to incidentally hold a conversation with a friend, the office was not "kept open" half an hour prior to the departure of the train, within the stat-

uta. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Dyer, 95 S. W. 12, 14, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 93.

KEEPER

See Dramshop Keeper; Innkeeper; Livery Stable Keeper; Restaurant Keeper; Saloon Keeper; Shopkeeper; Time-keeper.

Webster defines a "keeper" as one who has the care, custody, or superintendence of anything, or one who has or holds possession of anything. In re Avdalas, 102 Pac. 674, 677, 10 Cal. App. 507.

Of animal

Where defendant, as the head of his family, occupied certain premises on which a vicious bulldog belonging to his wife was harbored, and defendant was present there each week end from Friday or Saturday until the succeeding Monday, the rest of his time being spent in business in another city, he was properly found to be the keeper of the dog, and so liable for its misconduct. Slater v. Sorge, 131 N. W. 565, 566, 166 Mich. 173.

Where defendant, some six weeks prior to plaintiff's injury by being bitten by defendant's dog, delivered the dog to B., under an arrangement that B. should keep the dog, but that defendant might sell him if a customer was found, and the injury was inflicted on plaintiff in the highway in front of B.'s premises, B., and not defendant, was the "keeper" of the dog, within Comp. Laws, § 5593, making the keeper of a vicious dog, as distinguished from the owner, liable for injuries caused by him. Wetzel v. Bolster, 134 N. W. 1099, 1101, 169 Mich. 43.

Of bawdyhouse

A "keeper" of a bawdyhouse in the ordinary meaning of the word "keeper" is one exercising control and direction over it. Griffin v. People, 99 Pac. 321, 322, 44 Colo. 533.

Code 1906, § 5055, providing that every keeper of a house of prostitution shall be punished as a vagrant, does not exclude the right to prosecute such person for "keeping a bawdyhouse"; the latter offense, which is distinct from vagrancy, being an offense at common law, which still prevails in Mississippi, where not abrogated by statute. Gavlin v. State, 50 South. 498, 96 Miss. 377.

Of building or hotel

Sess. Acts 1901, p. 219, § 1 (Ann. St. 1906, § 9053—1), requires the owner, proprietor, lessee, or "keeper" of office buildings, etc., more than three stories high, to provide fire escapes. Section 5 (section 9053—5) makes the owner, proprietor, lessee, or "manager" of a building, required to be equipped with fire escapes, who neglects for 60 days after the act becomes effective to comply with the act guilty of a misdemeanor. Acts 1903, pp. 251, 252 (Ann. St. 1906, §§ 9053—1 to 9053—3), repealed the first three sections of the act and enacted new sections in their place, but section 1 of the act as amended required the owner, proprietor, lessee or keeper of such buildings to provide escapes as in the original act. Section 2 provided that, if a fire escape was found upon inspection to be unsafe, the owner, proprietor, lessee, or keeper should repair it, and section 5 remained unchanged. Held, that the words "manager of a building" did not necessarily mean the same as "keeper of a building," or denote any particular duties in relation to the building, and one charged as manager of a building with violating the act could not be convicted, in the absence of evidence showing that his duties made him a keeper of the building. State v. Cook, 128 S. W. 212, 213, 148 Mo. App. 383.

The phrase "keeper or proprietor," in Acts 1899, p. 352, c. 178, requiring the "keeper or proprietor" of a hotel over two stories in height to provide means of escape in case of fire, means the party conducting the hotel, whether he be the owner or lessee, and does not mean the owner of the property unless he operates it, and therefore the act does not impose any duty on the owner of a hotel operated by a lessee. Adams v. Cumberland Inn Co., 101 S. W. 428, 430, 117 Tenn. 470.

Of fruit stand

As shop keeper, see Shop Keeper.

Of gambling house

Gambling distinguished, see Gambling—Gaming.

One who permits many people to come and gamble in his residence, and who does not charge any fees or superintend the games, but plays as one of the visitors, and has none of the usual gambling house paraphernalia, is not a keeper of a gambling house within the purview of Acts 31st Leg. c. 59, entitled "An act to define and punish vagrancy." Austin v. State, 135 S. W. 1167, 1171, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 573.

Of saloon or intoxicating liquor

"The words 'dealer' and 'keeper' are synonymous," and were held to be so used in an indictment charging defendant as a liquor dealer or keeper of a barroom. Hofheintz v. State, 74 S. W. 310, 311, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 117.

A person who is found in possession of intoxicating liquors with intent of disposing of the same without license is a "keeper" within Comp. St. 1903, c. 50, § 20. Ford v. State, 112 N. W. 606, 607, 79 Neb. 309.

In an action under Gen. St. 1906, § 4387, authorizing an injunction against the keeping of a place where intoxicants are illegally sold, a finding that defendant was guilty of keeping a place where intoxicants were sold is supported by evidence that he sold beer, which he kept for that purpose in a barrel in an alley, the want of other paraphernalia not preventing the spot occupied being a "place" within the statute, nor did its location prevent his being its "keeper," so long as he used it for his own ends. State v. Dykes, 111 Pac. 179, 180, 83 Kan. 250.

KELLY POOL

KENNEL

A kennel license issued under Pub. Acts 1907, c. 167, § 3, as amended by Pub. Acts 1909, c. 55, § 2, is not vitiated because part of the dogs were kept at the owner's house; the word "kennel" not meaning the house or place in which the dogs are kept, but a pack or collection of dogs usually kept or bred for hunting, or for sale. State v. Tripp, 81 Atl. 247, 249, 84 Conn. 640.

KEPT

See Keep.

Unlawfully kept as unlawfully hold over, see Unlawfully Hold Over.

KEROSENE

As inflammable liquid, see Inflammable Liquid.

It is a matter of common knowledge that "kerosene" is a product of crude petroleum. Moeckel v. C. A. Cross Co., 76 N. E. 447, 448, 190 Mass. 280.

KEYHOLES

"Keyholes" are holes in the crosshead of a locomotive to which the driving rod is connected or fastened by a bolt or pin. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Vestal, 86 S. W. 790, 791, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 554.

KEYSTONE

The word "Keystone," in its primary and ordinary signification, is not geographical. It is only when it is used as an adjective or otherwise to describe a state that it signifies any special locality, and this use is small in comparison to its use in its broader and more general sense. It was therefore properly used as a trade-name. Buzby v. Davis, 150 Fed. 275, 277, 80 C. C. A. 163, 10 Ann. Cas. 68.

KICK—KICKING

The term "kick," as applied to the propulsion of cars, means a light push of cars by an engine by which such cars are driven along the track by their own momentum. Day v. Louisiana Western R. Co., 46 South. 203, 121 La. 180.

A railroad car is "kicked" or "shunted" when it is set in motion by the engine and then detached to travel forward. Lang v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 91 S. W. 1012, 1013, 115 Mo. App. 489.

A car is said to be "kicked" when it is turned loose with a shove from the locomotive. Hurt v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 76 S. W. 502, 116 Ky. 545.

The word "kicking" in railroad parlance is the operation of giving a rapid movement to a train of cars before coming to a switch, of sufficient force to drive the cars intended to go upon the side track off the main line on which the train was moving, and then to quickly reverse the movement of the other cars which remained connected with the engine. Brown v. Erie R. Co., 176 Fed. 544, 547, 100 C. C. A. 132.

Flying switch synonymous

The word "kicking," as used in railroad parlance, is synonymous with making a flying switch. Making a flying switch is not negligence per se as to the employé performing it. It is the attempt to make a running switch when the detached car has no brakeman on it, and is under no control, that is declared to be negligence, because highly dangerous.

Allen v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 58 S. E. 1081, 1082, 145 N. C. 214 (citing Wilson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 55 S. E. 257, 142 N. C. 336).

The practice in railroading of making flying switches embraces what is called "kicking cars." Lacey v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 152 Fed. 134, 136, 81 C. C. A. 352 (citing Beach, Contrib. Neg. [3d Ed.] § 217).

KICK SIGNAL

A "kick signal" is one calling for a quick and sudden movement of the train. Texas Mexican Ry. Co. v. Higgins, 99 S. W. 200, 201, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 523.

KIDNAPPING

Blackstone defines "kidnapping" to be the "forcible abduction of a man, woman, or child from their own country and sending them into another." The word "kidnap" has a technical meaning. It is derived from the common law, and must be interpreted according to its technical meaning at common law. Both under the common law and under the statute it means to take and carry away any person forcibly or fraudulently beyond the boundaries of the state. The characteristics and limits of this offense are differently drawn by legal writers. It has been described as the most aggravated species of false imprisonment, and defined to be the stealing and carrying away and secreting of any person. It has been held that transportation to a foreign country is not a necessary part of the offense; and Bishop defines it as "false imprisonment, aggravated by conveying the imprisoned person to some other place." State v. Harrison, 59 S. E. 967, 870, 145 N. C. 406 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 3928).

In a prosecution for kidnapping, under Pen. Code 1895, § 110, providing that any person who forcibly, etc., takes or entices away a child under the age of 18 years from its parent or guardian or against his will, or without his consent, is guilty of "kidnaping," that a 17 year old girl, alleged to have been kidnapped, was a prostitute, is no defense. Hunt v. State, 69 S. E. 42, 43, 8 Ga. App. 374.

"It is only where the child has no parent or guardian that it is 'kidnapping' to forcibly, maliciously, or fraudulently lead, take, or carry it away, or decoy or entice it away, against its will or without its consent. This being true, a count in an indictment charging that the accused did these things against the will or consent of the child should allege that it had no parent or guardian, and is fatally defective without such an allegation." Sutton v. State, 50 S. E. 60, 61, 122 Ga. 158.

Under the statute subjecting to punishment every person, who without lawful authority, forcibly seizes and confines another, or inveigles or kidnaps another, with intent to send him out of the state against his will, an information charging that defendant did forcibly seize and confine and did inveigle and kidnap another charges the single crime of "kidnapping." The crime charged could have been committed by doing any one or all of the acts alleged. State v. White, 87 Pac. 137, 139, 48 Or. 416.

Where a husband, who by a conclusive decree of divorce lost the custody of a child, took the child while pretending to act under the decree permitting him to visit it at stated periods, and without the consent of the wife, who had been awarded its custody, carried it out of the state pursuant to a willful and deliberate purpose at the time of the taking to obtain the custody thereof, he was guilty of kidnapping, within Rev. St. 1908, § 1668, defining "kidnapping" as the forcible abduction, stealing away, or secreting of a man, woman, or child. Lee v. People, 127 Pac. 1023, 1024, 53 Colo. 507.

KILL

See Assault with Intent to Kill; Intent to Kill; Premeditated Killing; Unlawful Killing.

"The word 'murder' is a legal and technical term and implies something more than mere killing, though it includes all the elements of the latter word, but there is nothing technical about the word 'kill.' It means to deprive of life; to put to death; to slay." An allegation that defendant did "kill and murder" the deceased is a sufficient allegation that the latter died. State v. Sly, 80 Pac. 1125, 1127, 11 Idaho, 110.

The words "kill and murder" form a strictly legal phrase. Canterbury v. State, 43 South. 678, 682, 90 Miss. 279 (dissenting opinion).

An information in extradition proceedings, charging accused with "assault with intent to kill and murder," sufficiently brings the offense within article 10 of the treaty with Great Britain, authorizing extradition of persons charged with "assault with intent to commit murder." An assault with intent to kill and murder is practically the same as an assault with intent to commit murder, though the words "to kill" do not necessarily imply more than the destruction of life, which may have been caused without guilt, while to commit murder implies killing with malice aforethought. But the use of the word "kill" in the conjunctive with "murder" shows that it was intended to charge the commission of the crime of assault with intent to kill with malice aforethought. United States v. Plaza, 138 Fed. 998, 999.

The term "killed," as used in Pen. Code, § 1510, providing that when the coroner is informed that a person has been killed, or has committed suicide, or has suddenly died under such circumstances as to afford a reasonable ground to suspect that his death has been occasioned by the act of another by criminal means, does not embrace every means of death, but is qualified by the other clauses used in the statute, and refers only to a killing that is sudden and unusual and of such nature as to indicate a possibility of death by the hands of the deceased, or through the instrumentality of some other person. Morgan v. San Diego County, 86 Pac. 720, 722, 3 Cal. App. 454.

The word "killed," as used in San Francisco Charter, art. 8, c. 10, § 4, providing a pension for widows of police officers killed while performing duty, applies to death resulting from violence or external force. Edwards v. Sweigert, 115 Pac. 256, 258, 15 Cal. App. 503.

The word "killed" as used in the constitution, providing that a benefit shall be paid to the beneficiaries named in the certificate "in case of death by accident," but that, if a member suspended for nonpayment of dues shall be "injured" during his delinquency, the delinquent shall receive no indemnity therefor, "nor shall his beneficiaries receive anything should he be 'killed' during such period of delinquency," and providing for reinstatement of the delinquent members, refers to the result of the accident, and not to the accident from which death ensues; and, where the death of a member occurred after his reinstatement, and while he was in good standing, his beneficiary was entitled to benefits, though the accident from which death ensued occurred during the member's delinquency. Roth v. Travelers' Protective Ass'n of America, 115 S. W. 31, 33, 102 Tex. 241, 132 Am. St. Rep. 871, 20 Ann. Cas. 97.

KILLED DOWN

"Killed down" is an expression used by electricians, meaning that the current of electricity has been cut off. Woelfen v. Lewiston-Clarkson Co., 95 Pac. 493, 495, 49 Wash. 405.

KILN DOORS

KILO

A "kilo" is the equivalent of 2.20462125 pounds, or practically 2½ pounds. Ellsworth v. Knowles, 97 Pac. 690, 692, 8 Cal. App. 680.

The words "pound" and "kilo" designate units of weight of different systems; a pound being the unit of weight in the system in most common use in this country, while the word "kilo" is an abbreviation of the word "kilogram," which is the unit of weight of a system not in such common use in this country, but well known and understood. Ellsworth v. Knowles, 97 Pac. 690, 692, 8 Cal. App. 630.

KIN

See Kindred; Nearest of Kin; Next of Kin.

The primary and ordinary meaning of the word "kin" is related by the tie of consanguinity. State v. Tucker, 93 N. E. 8, 4, 174 Ind. 715, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 100.

A testator gave his estate to a trustee to pay the income therefrom to his sons and daughter, and "from and after the death of either of my sons or daughter and until the death of all of them to pay the income which he or she would, if living, have received to such person or persons of kin, to such son or daughter as he or she may by will have appointed, and in default of such appointment to the child or children of such son or daughter," and one of the sons on dying appointed the income among his children, including among them an adopted child not of the kin nor blood of the donor. Held, that such appointment to the adopted child is invalid; and that even, if there should be a total default, the adopted child would not be entitled to assert any rights to a portion of the income under the alternative provision in the will of the donor, inasmuch as she is not a child of her adopted father within the meaning of the will of the latter's father; the words "kin" and "kindred" when used in a will being limited to blood relatives. In re Freeman's Estate, 40 Pa. Super. Ct. 31, 39.

With the exception of a few special bequests, and a provision for the erection of a monument and a direction that any note owing him by any of his "kin" should be canceled and the amount given to such "relative," a will provided for the distribution of the estate among testator's relatives "equally as provided by statute, as if no will had been made," thus embracing only blood relatives. Held, that the words "kin," "relative," and "relatives" referred prima facie to blood connections only, so that the husband of testator's niece was still liable on notes given to the testator. Boyd v. Perkins, 113 S. W. 95, 96, 130 Ky. 77.

Any kind, see Any.

The term "kind of light," as used in a requirement that railroad companies shall maintain at all points of street intersection by their railroad the same "kind of lights" maintained by the town at other street crossings, refers to class, or sort, rather than to grades, or degrees, of the same class; that is, it refers to such general kind and classifications as electricity, gas, oil, and the like, and not to various grades of such general classes. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Town of Salem, 82 N. E. 913, 915, 170 Ind. 153, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 658.

A designation of Trinidad Lake asphalt as the material to be used for paving was the designation of a "kind of material" within Kansas City Charter, art. 9, § 2, providing for the selection by property owners of the material with which a street shall be paved from not less than two kinds of material and not the designation only of a species of kind based on mere locality of the material designated. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Field, 86 S. W. 860, 865, 188 Mo. 182.

A bitulithic pavement consisting of a stone foundation upon which rest layers of small stone coated with coal tar, pitch, asphalt, or a mixture thereof, or other equivalent bituminous material, which pavement is patented, is a "kind of pavement," as distinguished from a sheet asphalt pavement, and not merely a different make, style, or brand of the same kind. Union Paving Co. v. Board of Contract and Supply of City of Schenectady, 134 N. Y. Supp. 740, 743, 74 Misc. Rep. 646.

The phrases "kind of trade or business" and "kind of work," as used in a schedule of rates in an employer's indemnity policy, refer generally to the nature of the work carried on, so as to include all who are engaged in the prosecution of the work, even though the kind of work be designated as "boiler makers," "blacksmiths," etc.; and the compensation of all employes, whose injuries or death appellant is indemnified against, furnishes the measure for determining the amount of premiums earned, and includes employes of a power, heat, and light department of the plant, although they are in a building separated from the rest, and timekeepers and drivers, although they did not work upon the premises all of the time. Empire State Surety Co. of New York v. Moran Bros. Co., 127 Pac. 1104, 1106, 71 Wash. 171.

KINDERGARTEN

In Greater New York Charter, authorizing the establishment of elementary schools and kindergartens, and providing that no female teacher of a mixed class shall receive less than $60 a year more than a female teacher of a girls' class of a corresponding grade, the term "female teacher" refers to teachers of the graded classes and is to be distinguished from the "Kindergarten," which refers to teachers in kindergartens in which no grades exist and where the children are usually boys and girls of the ages of from 4 to 6 years. The provision for the additional annual compensation of $80 has reference only to female teachers in the regular graded school work and does not entitle a kindergarten to such additional compensation. Bronx Borough Teachers' Ass'n v. Board of Education, 118 N. Y. Supp. 483, 484.

Const. art. 9, § 5, requires the Legislature to provide for a system of "common schools" by which a free school shall be kept up and supported in each district. Section 6 provides that the "public school system" shall include "primary and grammar schools," and such high schools, evening schools, etc., as may be established by legislative or local authority, and further provides that the entire revenue derived from the state school fund shall be applied exclusively to the support of "primary and grammar schools." Pol. Code, §§ 1622, 1661, reiterate the requirement that the revenue of the state school fund shall be applied solely to primary and grammar schools. Section 1532 requires the Superintendent of Public Instruction to apportion the balance of the state school fund which remains after providing for teachers to the several counties according to their "average daily attendance," as shown by reports of the county superintendents for the preceding year. Sections 1617, 1662, and 1663 recognize, and make certain provisions in relation to, the adoption of kindergartens as part of the "public primary schools" in cities and towns. Held that, notwithstanding the legislative designation of kindergartens as "primary" schools, such institutions are not "primary and grammar schools," within the meaning of the constitutional and statutory provisions for the distribution of the state school fund, and the kindergarten attendance is not to be computed in ascertaining the proportion of the school fund to which a county is entitled. Los Angeles County v. Kirk, 83 Pac. 250, 251, 148 Cal. 385.

"The term 'kindergarten' was devised to apply to a system elaborated for the instruction of children of very tender years, which by guiding their inclination to play into organized movement, and investing their games with an ethical and educational value, teaches, besides physical exercises, habits of discipline, self-control, harmonious action and purpose, together with some definite lesson of fact. It is apparent that the work contemplated by such a system is purely preliminary to, and entirely different in character from, the ordinary work of the common school, and is in fact designed to fit very young children, whose minds and bodies are, solely because of their tender age, not yet capable of the instruction contemplated in an ordinary school, for such school work." Los Angeles County v. Kirk, 83 Pac. 250, 251, 148 Cal. 385 (quoting and adopting Sinnott v.

KINDRED

As child

See Child—Children (In Statutes).

Illegitimates

The statute of descents must be understood as merely laying down general rules of inheritance, and not as completely and accurately defining how the status of the persons who are to take under the statute is to be created by which the capacity to inherit is given, but these requisites must be sought elsewhere, and the words "children" and "child" in the first clause, "issue" in the phrase "if he leaves no issue," in subsequent clauses, and "kindred" in the last two clauses of the statute clearly include a child made legitimate by the marriage of its parents and acknowledged by the father after its birth in the manner pointed out by other statutory provisions. Finley v. Brown, 123 S. W. 359, 363, 122 Tenn. 316, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1285.

As kindred by blood

The word "kindred," in its primary legal acceptance, means relatives by blood. The word "kindred," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 2908, providing that the property of one dying intestate shall descend to his kindred, means blood kinship. Under sections 5246-5248, making it lawful to adopt a child as heir or devisee, and giving an adopted child the same rights against its adopted parents as to support and humane treatment as children have against lawful parents, and confining the effect of such provision to persons executing the deed of adoption, the act of adoption does not bring the adopted child into relationship with any one but the adoptive parent, and such child cannot inherit from the brother of her deceased adoptive father the share which the adoptive father would have taken had he survived such brother. Hockaday v. Lynn, 98 S. W. 585, 587, 200 Mo. 456, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 117, 118 Am. St. Rep. 672, 9 Ann. Cas. 775.

A testator gave his estate to a trustee to pay the income therefrom to his sons and daughter, and "from and after the death of either of my sons or daughter and until the death of all of them to pay the income which he or she would, if living, have received to such person or persons of kin, to such son or daughter as he or she may by will have appointed, and in default of such appointment to the child or children of such son or daughter," and one of the sons on dying appointed the income among his children, including among them an adopted child not of the kin nor blood of the donor. Held, that such appointment to the adopted child is invalid; and that even, if there should be a total default, the adopted child would not be entitled to assert any rights to a portion of the income under the alternative provision in the will of the donor, inasmuch as she is not a child of her adopted father within the meaning of the will of the latter's father the words "kin" and "kindred" when used in a will being limited to blood relatives. In re Freeman's Estate, 40 Pa. Super. Ct. 31, 39.

In a bequest of personalty, the word "family" is synonymous with "kindred," those related by blood who are entitled as next of kin under the statute of distribution. Jacobs v. Prescott, 65 Atl. 761, 762, 102 Me. 63.

Ky. St. § 2071, provides that an adopted child shall be capable of inheriting as though he were the child of the petitioner. Section 1393, subsec. 1, provides that when a person dies intestate his real estate descends, first, to his "children" and their descendants. Section 1401 of the same chapter, limiting section 1393, provides that if an infant having title to real estate derived by gift, devise, or descent from one of its parents dies without issue such estate shall descend to that "parent" and his or her "kindred," and, if none, then to the other parent and his or her kindred. And section 460 declares that the common-law rule that statutes in derogation thereof should be strictly construed does not apply to such revision, but that its provisions are to be liberally construed with a view to promote its object. Held, that the purpose of the limitation was to prevent the estate of the parent from being distributed to strangers to his blood; that the word "kindred" in section 1393 was not necessarily confined to blood relations, but might include a relation in law, as an adopted child, and that the word "children" in subsection 1 was not necessarily confined to children born in lawful wedlock, but might include children by adoption; that within section 1401 the foster parent of an adopted child was a "parent"; and hence that an adopted child inheriting from his parent was on the same footing as a natural child, so that where he inherited from his foster father, and then died in infancy without issue, the estate went back to the father's kindred, to the exclusion of his natural mother. Lanferman v. Vanzile, 150 S. W. 1008, 1010, 150 Ky. 751.

KINETOSCOPE

While a city ordinance imposing a license fee on and prescribing the location of museums, panoramas, cycloramas, kinetoscope, or phonograph parlors, does not specifically refer to the motion picture business, it is sufficiently covered by the words, "panorama" and "kinetoscope," and must be held to be within the contemplation of the ordinance. Laurelle v. Bush, 119 Pac. 953, 955, 17 Cal. App. 409.

A "kinetoscope" is a machine for producing animated pictures, a mechanical contrivance involving, among other things, a transparent or translucent narrow film on which a series of photographs consecutively represent the continuous development of movement or action in the persons or things which are the subject of such photographs.—Laurelle v. Bush, 119 Pac. 953, 955, 17 Cal. App. 409.

KITING

An agent has no authority to use the principal's bank deposit as a basis for a "kit-ing" business with another person, consisting of an exchange of checks to temporarily raise money or credit, for the agent's private benefit. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Williamston v. Germania Life Ins. Co., 64 S. E. 902, 903, 150 N. C. 770.

KITTIE

Kate and "Kittie" are the same name; one being a nickname and the other a pet name for Catherine. Corr v. Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n, 69 N. E. 288, 290, 177 N. Y. 131.

KNEES

In defendant's sawmill where the injuries sued for were sustained, was a carriage or carrier upon which logs were held while being sawed into lumber and upon which were "knees" or upright pieces about 12 or 14 feet apart, connected with which were appliances known as "dogs," controlled by levers in the hands of workmen known as doggers. The dogs were made of iron fashioned like claws, and when in proper condition and properly controlled should close upon the logs and hold them securely against the knees to prevent lateral motion of the logs while being sawed. Moses v. Grant Lumber Co., 38 South. 684, 114 La. 933.

KNOCKED DOWN

"Knocked down," relating to a shipment of wagons, meant that the wagons were not set up in running order, but taken to pieces when packed in the car. Mouton v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 29 South. 602, 604, 128 Ala. 537.

The term "knocked down," used to describe the condition of a traction engine on arrival at its destination, means that its several parts had to be put together in order to its operation. Aultman & Taylor Machinery Co. v. Gay, 62 S. E. 946, 947, 108 Va. 647.

KNOCKING DOWN

The act of cutting or removing coal is called "knocking down." Ivy Coal & Coke Co. v. Alabama Coal & Coke Co., 33 South. 547, 548, 135 Ala. 579, 93 Am. St. Rep. 46.

KNOT

"The log was invented about the same time which inaugurated measuring of the sea or marine miles, known as 'English geographical' miles. * * * The sea mile, knot, geographical or marine mile measures 6,086.7 feet on the sea, on the scale of 60 geographical or sea miles to a degree." In the Muscongus Grant by the council of Plymouth in Devon, England, between 1620 and 1635, after the inauguration of the geographical or marine mile, granting certain land, etc., within three miles of the main land, the three-mile limit is to be measured by the geographical or marine mile or "knot," and not by the statute mile. Lazell v. Boardman, 69 Atl. 97, 99, 103 Me. 292, 13 Ann. Cas. 673 (citing Rockland, Mt. D. & S. S. Co. v. Fessenden, 8 Atl. 550, 79 Me. 140).

KNOW

See Bound to Know; Do not Know.

In law to "know" is to possess information. Bouv. Law Dict. verbo "knowingly." Hence, one who states a fact without possessing information does not know the fact, and makes a "false statement." Statements not known to be true by the person making them are in law false. United States v. Bradford, 148 Fed. 413, 424 (citing Lynch v. Mercantile Trust Co., 18 Fed. 486).

The words "not knowing," or "having no reasonable grounds to suspect," or "knew," or "know," or "had reasonable grounds to suspect" when used in an instruction in an action for injuries to a passenger while attempting to board a train in consequence of the starting of the train, relating to the knowledge or want of knowledge of the conductor in starting the train before the passenger had boarded it, are legal equivalents. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Hickey, 99 S. W. 839, 842, 81 Ark. 579.

In an action for damages from a trespass by defendant's cattle, an issue as to whether defendant "knew or intended" that the cattle herded by him outside of plaintiff's fence would break the fence was not erroneous on the theory that, if defendant either knew or intended, then plaintiff would be entitled to recover, since in such connection the words

"knew" and "intended" were equivalent. Moore v. Pierson (Tex.) 93 S. W. 1007, 1008.

A statutory provision that engineers, after stopping and before proceeding to run a train over a railway crossing, must "know the way to be clear" means not only that the crossing is free from immediate obstruction but free from danger of such obstruction as ought reasonably to be expected, but it does not require knowledge that the way will certainly remain clear against all after-occurring or extraordinary happenings. Southern Ry. Co. v. Bonner, 37 South. 702, 703, 141 Ala. 517.

As actual knowledge

The word "know," used in a rule requiring a brakeman giving a signal to the engineer to "know" that it had been seen and obeyed, does not necessarily import absolute knowledge of a fact, but means the full belief to the exclusion of doubt or uncertainty of a reasonable and prudent man, based upon convincing evidence addressed to his intelligence. Bowers v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 107 Pac. 777, 779, 82 Kan. 95.

KNOWING

See Not Knowing.

The words "knowing the same," as used in La. Rev. St. 1876, § 838, declaring that whoever shall alter or publish as true any false, forged, or counterfeited record, etc., and knowing the same to be false, shall be punished by imprisonment at hard labor, are not technical terms, such as the word "felonious," or such as, in an indictment for murder, the words "malice aforethought"; but they are words used to describe the wrongful act which the statute forbids. Therefore any words equivalent to the words used in the statute may be substituted. Thus, if the word "knowingly" be in the statute, and the word "advisedly" be substituted for it in the indictment, the indictment may be sufficient. State v. Hauser, 36 South. 396, 407, 112 La. 318.

Plaintiff alleged that defendant drove cattle upon a certain strip of land near plaintiff's fence, "knowing and intending" that the cattle should break the fence and enter plaintiff's pasture, which they did. Held, that a charge that plaintiff was entitled to recover, if defendant drove a herd of cattle upon the land in question, "knowing and intending" that they should break plaintiff's fence, was not erroneous on the ground that it required, as precedent to a recovery, that defendant both knew and intended that the cattle should break into the pasture, when either such knowledge or intention would suffice, as "knowing" and "intending" in such connection were synonymous. Moore v. Pierson, 94 S. W. 1132, 1133, 100 Tex. 113.

As actual knowledge or scienter

The fact that the charge did not require that employees on the engine should have "realized" the danger, but made it suffice to raise the duty defined if they had "reasonable ground to believe and it was apparent to them" that the person was in danger, would not render it objectionable, since for practical purposes a person must be treated as "knowing" a fact when he has reason to believe it and when it is apparent to him. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Reynolds, 122 S. W. 531, 532, 103 Tex. 31.

Pen. Code, § 550, as amended by Laws 1908, c. 326, now Penal Law (Consol. Laws, c. 40) § 1308, which provides for the punishment of a person receiving stolen property "knowing" it to have been stolen, includes actual and constructive knowledge. People v. Rosenthal, 90 N. E. 991, 992, 197 N. Y. 394.

By the words "knowing that property was stolen," in an information for receiving stolen goods, was not meant absolute, personal, and certain knowledge on the part of the defendant that the property mentioned in the information had been stolen, but such knowledge and information in his possession at the time he so received the same as would put a man of ordinary prudence or exercising ordinary care on his guard and would cause such a man to believe and to be satisfied that the property had been stolen. State v. Kosky, 90 S. W. 454, 455, 191 Mo. 1.

KNOWINGLY

The word "knowingly," as used in a criminal statute, means that state of mind wherein the person charged was in possession of facts under which he was aware he could not lawfully do the act whereof he was charged. State v. Smith, 105 S. W. 68, 69, 119 Tenn. 521.

"Knowingly," as used in Laws 1903, p. 308, c. 132, entitled an act to prevent the unauthorized use of the name or picture of any person for the purpose of trade, means that such use must not be made if the offender knows that the portrait or picture in question is that of a living person. Rhodes v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., 104 N. Y. Supp. 1102, 1104, 120 App. Div. 467.

The term "knowingly," generally speaking, in a criminal proceeding, imports that the accused person knew what he was about, and, possessing such knowledge, proceeded to commit the crime with which he is charged. State v. Bridgewater, 85 N. E. 715, 718, 171 Ind. 1.

Under the statute defining bigamy as the offense of "knowingly" having a plurality of husbands or wives at the same time, scienter is an essential of the crime, and an honest belief that the marriage has been dissolved is a good defense. Robinson v. State, 65 S. E. 792, 795, 6 Ga. App. 696.

The adverb "knowingly," as used in Comp. Laws, § 11612, making it an offense for any person holding a public office to knowingly and unlawfully appropriate to his own use, or to the use of any other person, money, or property received by him in his official capacity, was intended to exclude, from the definition of the offense, mistakes of fact, accidents, such as loss of money by fire, or other casualty, or inadvertent appropriation. People v. Glazier, 124 N. W. 582, 589, 159 Mich. 528 (citing McGuire v. State, 7 Humph. [27 Tenn.] 54).

The word "knowingly," in an indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses, sufficiently avers a scienter. State v. Blauvelt, 38 N. J. Law, 306, 307.

The word "knowingly," as used in Act July 5, 1884, providing that any person who shall "knowingly" bring into or cause to be brought into the United States, or aid or abet the landing in the United States from any vessel, any Chinese person, refers to knowledge of the fact of landing, and was intended to recognize a distinction between the landing knowingly aided or abetted in and one unwittingly or unconsciously aided, such, for instance, as where a Chinaman might effect a landing from a vessel as a stowaway in another vessel. Sims v. United States, 121 Fed. 515, 519, 58 C. C. A. 92.

The offense denounced by Penal Law (Consol. Laws, c. 40) § 2460, subd. 4, punishing "every person who shall knowingly receive any money, * * * for * * * procuring and placing in the custody of another, for immoral purposes, any woman, with or without her consent," is completed where one knowingly receives money on account of procuring and placing in the custody of prosecutor two women with their consent, for immoral purposes, though prosecutor merely laid a trap for accused, and did not intend to make use of the women for immoral purposes, and did not so make use of them; the word "knowingly" being limited to the receipt of money, to the procuring, and to the immoral purposes for which the women were procured. People v. Moore, 127 N. Y. Supp. 98, 142 App. Div. 402.

"Knowingly" means with knowledge, and the word, as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5198, providing that the charging by a national bank of interest greater than allowed, when knowingly done, shall be deemed a forfeiture of the entire interest on the debt, and that if a greater rate of interest has been paid the person paying it or his representative may recover twice the amount of the payment, means intentionally and designedly, and an allegation in pleading that a contract for the usurious interest was knowingly made is equivalent to charging that it was corruptly made. First Nat. Bank of Blakely v. Davis, 70 S. E. 246, 247, 135 Ga. 687, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 134.

A state court granted naturalization to a woman who had been dead over four years, and the certificate was issued by the clerk. No hearing was had nor evidence taken in open court, as required by Naturalization Act June 22, 1906, c. 3592, § 9, 34 Stat. 599; but affidavits in support of the petition were made out by the clerk, and subscribed and sworn to by defendants, the material statements in which were false. Defendants, however, did not understand the English language, and were not informed of the contents of the affidavits, but signed the same as directed by the clerk. Held, that they were not guilty of "knowingly" giving false testimony, made a crime by section 23 of the act. United States v. Janke, 183 Fed. 277, 279.

P. S. 2053, provides that a person who "knowingly" receives greater fees than the law allows shall pay to the person aggrieved 10 times the excess to be recovered in an action on the statute, etc. Held, that the word "knowingly," when used in a prohibitory statute, is used to import a knowledge of the essential facts, from which the law presumes a knowledge of the legal consequences arising therefrom; the word being also used as in such section in the sense of "intentionally," so that where a tax collector received fees in excess of those allowed by section 6262, but in accordance with a usual custom obtaining in the town, and not with knowledge that the fees were illegal, he was not liable for the penalty. Crawford v. Joslyn, 76 Atl. 108, 83 Vt. 361, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 428.

In an indictment for unlawfully giving intoxicating liquor to a minor, the use of the word "knowingly," in the beginning of the charging part of the indictment, is sufficient as an allegation that defendants gave the liquor knowing the recipient thereof to be a minor. Ferguson v. State, 95 S. W. 111, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 155.

Rev. Laws, c. 212, § 16, as amended by St. 1905, p. 235, c. 816, makes it an offense to "knowingly" distribute an advertisement giving notice of any place where abortions may be performed; and by chapter 218, §§ 17, 29, a crime may be charged in the words used in the statute, with a general averment that defendant committed the act. Held, that an indictment under chapter 212, § 16, charging that defendant "knowingly" distributed an advertisement, was not subject to a motion to quash because it did not more specifically aver guilty knowledge of the contents of the advertisement. Commonwealth v. Hartford, 79 N. E. 784, 785, 193 Mass. 464 (citing Commonwealth v. Hersey, 2 Allen [84 Mass.] 173, 180; Commonwealth v. Lavery, 73 N. E. 884, 188 Mass. 13, 16).

The words "knowingly" or "well knowing" are uniformly held to supply the place of a positive averment in an indictment that defendant knew the fact subsequently stated. An indictment charging that defendant "knowingly" uttered as true a false and forged check, with intent to defraud, was sufficient, under Code, § 4854, prescribing the punishment of a person who utters a forged instrument, "knowing the same to be false." State v. Waterbury, 110 N. W. 328, 329, 183 Iowa, 185.

2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 7313, provides that every person who shall "knowingly" sell or give a minor intoxicating liquors without the written consent of his parent or guardian shall, on conviction, be fined, etc. Held, that an instruction that the sale was made knowingly within such statute if defendant's bartender knew, or in the exercise of reasonable prudence should have known, that his customer was a minor at the date of the alleged sale, correctly defined the term "knowingly." State v. McCormick, 105 Pac. 1087, 1088, 56 Wash. 469.

The word "knowingly," as used in Civ. Code La. art. 2301 (2279), providing that he who receives what is not due to him, whether through error or "knowingly," obliges himself to restore it to him from whom he has unduly received it, does not imply necessarily the idea of wrongdoing or bad faith, but means only "with knowledge." The word "knowingly," as here used, does not necessarily imply the idea of wrongdoing, as is the case in criminal pleading, but is to be given the signification of the French word "sciemment," meaning "with knowledge," and not implying either bad faith or wrongdoing. In an action of this nature, bad faith is important only as affecting the quantum of the recovery. Drainage Commission of New Orleans v. National Contracting Co. of New York, 136 Fed. 780, 782.

On a prosecution under Kirby's Dig. §§ 1593, 1594, for "knowingly" marrying the wife of another, proof of knowledge of facts that would cause a belief of the woman's marriage in a mind not obstinately closed to such belief will sustain a conviction. Brooks v. State, 84 S. W. 1033, 1035, 74 Ark. 58 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 3937).

Under a statute providing for the punishment of one who "knowingly" sells intoxicating liquors to a minor, the sale is made "knowingly," if the seller knew the purchaser was a minor, or had such information from his appearance or otherwise as would lead a prudent man to believe he was a minor, and which, followed by inquiry, would bring knowledge of that fact home to him. State v. Constatine, 86 Pac. 384, 385, 43 Wash. 102, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1043.

In an action against a public officer for knowingly collecting illegal fees, it is not error to define the term "knowingly" in the language of Rev. St. 1898, § 4053, subd. 5, which declares that the term "knowingly" imports only a knowledge that the facts exist which bring the act or omission within the provisions of the Code, but does not require any knowledge of the unlawfulness of the act or omission. Skeen v. Chambers, 86 Pac. 492, 494, 31 Utah, 36.

In that provision of Rev. St. § 5488, which makes it a criminal offense if any one "knowingly" purchases or receives in pledge from any soldier clothes or other public property, such soldier not having the lawful right to pledge or sell the same, the word "knowingly" applies only to the question whether a person purchasing or receiving such property in pledge knew, or should have known from facts which put him on inquiry, that the person offering the same was a soldier. United States v. Koplik, 155 Fed. 919, 922.

An indictment under Rev. St. § 5440, which charges that defendants knowingly, unlawfully, wickedly, and corruptly conspired to defraud the United States out of its title to certain public lands by means of false, fraudulent, and fictitious entries of the same under the land laws, and that in pursuance of, and to effect the object of, such conspiracy, certain acts set forth were committed by one or more of the defendants, is not insufficient, because it does not expressly aver that such acts were done with knowledge of the fraudulent and illegal character of the entries. The essence of the offense is the conspiracy, and while an overt act is an essential element under the statute, the use of the word "knowingly" in charging the conspiracy must fairly be held to apply to and characterize the acts specifically charged to have been done in furtherance of such conspiracy, and for the purpose of carrying it into effect. United States v. Mitchell, 141 Fed. 666, 668.

Proof that a note for $393 was taken for three months' loan of $350 is proof that a charge of excessive interest was "knowingly done," within Rev. St. U. S. § 5198, providing that the reserving, etc., of a rate of interest greater than that allowed by law, when "knowingly done," shall be a forfeiture of the entire interest. Wagoner Nat. Bank v. Welch, 104 S. W. 610, 613, 7 Ind. T. 259.

Kirby's Dig. § 5030, as amended by Acts 1905, p. 726, punishing one who shall interfere with, entice away, "knowingly employ," or induce a laborer, who has contracted with another for a specified time, to leave his employer before the expiration of his contract, does not punish one for merely giving employment to a laborer during the unexpired term of his broken contract with another, but implies that the employment was done as an interference with the laborer's performance of his prior contract with another, or as an enticement of the laborer away from his employer, or as an inducement of the laborer to leave the service of his employer, and is valid as tending towards the preservation of peace and good order. Tucker v. State, 111 S. W. 275, 276, 86 Ark. 486.

Under Acts 1908, p. 284, c. 189, § 19, providing that "no person * * * shall knowingly sell [ardent spirits] to any intoxicated person," and section 27, p. 286, declaring that any person violating any of the provisions of the act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, a licensed barkeeper is criminally liable for a sale of liquor to an intoxicated person made in the conduct of the business by the keeper's son, employed in the barroom and intrusted with the conduct of the same in the absence of the barkeeper; the term "knowingly sell" being referable to the condition of the person to whom the liquor is sold, and not to the sale. O'Donnell v. Commonwealth, 62 S. E. 373, 374, 108 Va. 882.

To commit the offense defined in Rev. St. § 5395, denouncing a penalty against one who "knowingly swears falsely" in making any oath under any law relating to naturalization, it is not necessary that there should be any purpose of gain or any instigation of malice. Holmgren v. United States, 156 Fed. 439, 444, 84 C. C. A. 301.

Where the sufficiency of an indictment for causing nonmailable matter to be deposited in the post office is not questioned until after verdict, the words "willfully, unlawfully, wrongfully, and knowingly," as used therein, were to be taken in their broadest sense as applying to all that was expressed in respect of the act, and therefore as imputing to defendants knowledge of the contents of the circular alleged to have been mailed, and of the book of which it was an advertisement. Burton v. United States, 142 Fed. 57, 59, 73 C. C. A. 243.

An indictment, alleging that accused did "unlawfully and knowingly deposit and cause to be deposited in" a post office a letter concerning a lottery, sufficiently charges knowledge of accused of the contents of the letter; the word "knowingly" qualifying not only the verb "deposit," but the whole matter described subsequently in the indictment. United States v. Purvis, 195 Fed. 618, 619.

In St. 1909, c. 534, § 22 providing for the punishment of any person who, in operating an automobile, "knowingly went away without making himself known after injuring any person or property," the word "knowingly" imports a perception of the facts requisite to make it a crime; and where, after injury to a woman, the driver of the automobile, after waiting awhile, sent a man back to the place with instructions to disclose his identity, there was no violation of statute, though such person failed to state who the driver was. Commonwealth v. Horsfall, 100 N. E. 362, 364, 213 Mass. 232.

As willfully

An instruction that, if the jury believe that any witness has "knowingly" testified falsely, they may disregard his entire testimony, was not subject to the objection that it failed to use the word "willfully," since such words are of equivalent meaning. Peterson v. Pusey, 86 N. E. 692, 693, 237 Ill. 204.

Mines and Miners' Act, § 18, requires a daily inspection of the mine, and provides that no one shall remain in the mine until dangerous conditions discovered therein have been made safe. In a miner's injury action the declaration alleged that the dangerous condition which caused the injury existed the day before it happened, and that defendant "willfully" permitted plaintiff to enter the place. Held, that the word "willfully" was synonymous with "knowingly," and the declaration, at least argumentatively, alleged that defendant knew of the dangerous condition so as to sustain a judgment for plaintiff. Peebles v. O'Gara Coal Co., 88 N. E. 166, 168, 239 Ill. 370.

KNOWINGLY AND FRAUDULENTLY

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 14b, 30 Stat. 550, provides that a bankrupt shall be discharged unless he has committed an offense punishable by imprisonment, and section 29b declares that a person shall be punished by imprisonment on conviction of having "knowingly and fraudulently" concealed while a bankrupt, or after his discharge, property belonging to his estate. Held, that the words "knowingly and fraudulently," as so used, must have their natural significance in considering a charge of concealment in opposition to a discharge, and hence, where the bankrupt received $85.10 as the unearned part of certain insurance premiums on lapsed policies, and he used the same to pay rent after his counsel, who was also counsel for the creditors, had advised him that the money belonged either to an insurance society or to his wife, he did not "knowingly or fraudulently" conceal property. Klein v. Powell, 174 Fed. 640, 641, 98 C. C. A. 394.

KNOWINGLY AND WILLFULLY

The words "knowingly and willfully fails," in a statute imposing a penalty where a corporation or person charged "knowingly and willfully fails" to comply therewith, are about equivalent to "willfully neglects" and mean the same as "willfully omits." New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. United States, 165 Fed. 833, 840, 91 C. C. A. 519.

The words "knowingly and willfully" in Act June 29, 1906, c. 3594, § 3, 34 Stat. 607, punishing a carrier who knowingly and willfully fails to feed, water, and rest cattle shipped, describe an essential element of every right to the penalty therein prescribed. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. United States, 169 Fed. 69, 71, 94 C. C. A. 437.

The words "knowingly and willfully," in Act June 29, 1906, c. 3594, § 3, 34 Stat. 608, relating to confinement of cattle for more than 28 hours without food or water, described an essential element of the offense on account of which penalties are prescribed, without proof of which they cannot be recovered; "knowingly" meaning with knowledge of the facts which, taken together, constitute a failure to comply with the statute, and "willfully" meaning purposely or obstinately, describing the attitude of a carrier, who, having a free will or choice, either intentionally disregards the statute, or is indifferent to its requirements. St. Joseph Stockyards Co. v. United States, 187 Fed. 104, 105, 110 C. C. A. 432.

Defendant's railroad constituted a part of a line of railroad over which live stock was transported under an interstate shipment to defendant's stockyards. At the time the cattle were delivered to defendant by the connecting carrier, they had all been kept in the cars without being unloaded for rest, water, and feed for more than 36 hours, in violation of Act June 29, 1906, c. 3594, § 1, 34 Stat. 607, which fact was disclosed by the waybills, which were not delivered to defendant until after the cattle were in defendant's custody. The next and only place where the cattle could have been unloaded and watered was at defendant's yards at destination, where defendant delivered the cattle with all reasonable dispatch with the facilities it had for handling them. Held, that defendant had not "knowingly and willfully" failed to comply with the provisions of the 28-hour law (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3594, 34 Stat. 607), and was therefore not liable for a penalty for its violation. United States v. Sioux City Stockyards Co., 162 Fed. 556, 562.

"Knowingly" is frequently used in the Customs Laws in contradistinction to innocently, ignorantly, or unintentionally. It has been held, with regard to knowingly and willfully obstructing the mail, that, when the acts which create the obstruction are in themselves unlawful, the intention to obstruct will be imputed to their author, though to attain other ends may have been his primary object, and so "the words 'knowingly and willfully,' as used in a revenue law providing a penalty for so constructing cisterns in a distillery as to permit the abstraction of spirits, do not require an intent to defraud the revenue, but the penalty prescribed by the act is incurred and the offense is complete when the defendants have left undone those things which they ought to have done, and done those things which they ought not to have done, without any fraudulent or criminal intent." United States v. Fifty Waltham Watch Movements, 139 Fed. 291, 300 (citing United States v. Kirby, 7 Wall. [74 U. S.] 482, 19 L. Ed. 278; United States v. McKim, 26 Fed. Cas. 1122).

Where defendant, a terminal railroad company, received cattle from a connecting carrier for the sole purpose of transporting them to certain stockyards to feed, water, and rest them, and then to return them to the carrier from which they have been received, not knowing that such carrier had already confined them in the cars exceeding the time allowed by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3594, § 1, 34 Stat. 607, providing that cattle shall not be confined for a longer period than 36 hours, the terminal carrier, having used due diligence in carrying the cattle to the stockyards and unloading them, was not guilty of itself "knowingly and willfully" violating such act; such words being intended to mean either an intentional violation of the statute or an indifferent disregard of its requirements. United States v. Stockyards Terminal Ry. Co., 178 Fed. 19, 23, 101 C. C. A. 147.

It is no defense to an action for "knowingly and willfully" violating Act June 29, 1906, c. 3594, § 1, 34 Stat. 607, relating to the carriage of live stock and known as the "twenty-eight hour law," that defendant made rules requiring its employes to comply with such statute, and that its failure to do so was through the negligence of an employe, and in violation of its rules. United States v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 178 Fed. 764, 766, 98 C. C. A. 110.

KNOWINGLY MISREPRESENT

To "knowingly misrepresent" is to represent that which is not true with knowledge that the representation is false and with an intent to cause another to act to his prejudice upon such misrepresentation. Hyde v. United States, 198 Fed. 610, 612, 119 C. C. A. 493.

KNOWINGLY PERMIT

The phrase "knowingly permitted," as applied to the mortgagee allowing the mortgagor to sell merchandise covered by the mortgage, is an equivalent to "understood and agreed." Ryan v. Rogers, 94 Pac. 427, 432, 14 Idaho, 309.

Under Ky. St. 1903, § 1972, making it an offense for the owner or controller of a billiard table to "knowingly suffer or permit" a minor to play any game thereon, the owner or controller of the table must know that the party playing upon it is a minor, in order to render him guilty of the prescribed offense. Commonwealth v. Wills, 89 S. W. 144, 121 Ky. 103.

"Knowledge" is the receiving of a mental impression; the state of being aware. Crosby v. Wells, 67 Atl. 295, 302, 73 N. J. Law, 790 (citing Wigmore, Evidence, §§ 244, 245, 300).

"Knowledge" may mean that gained by information or intelligence, and is not confined to what is personally observed. Davenport v. Prentice, 110 N. Y. Supp. 1056, 1063, 126 App. Div. 451.

"The term 'knowledge,' as used in defining assumed risks, means no more than that all the facts and circumstances surrounding the given case must be sufficient to charge the employe with the required information;" and a trainman, struck by a flag shanty negligently located, may recover despite his knowledge of the location when his attention was distracted by the engrossing character of his duty at the moment. King v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 58 S. E. 252, 256, 1 Ga. App. 88.

"Knowledge," within the meaning of the Penal Code of New York, is merely knowledge that the facts exist which constitute the act or omission a crime, and a knowledge of the unlawfulness of the act or omission is not required. People v. Acritelli, 110 N. Y. Supp. 430, 446, 58 Misc. Rep. 574.

"Knowledge," as applied to a person receiving stolen goods, may be deduced from conduct and behaviour, the character of the person from whom the goods are received, the character of the goods, and the hour when received. State v. Richmond, 84 S. W. 880, 884, 186 Mo. 71 (citing Huggins v. People, 25 N. E. 1002, 135 Ill. 243, 25 Am. St. Rep. 357; Frank v. State, 6 South. 842, 67 Miss. 125; Hester v. State, 15 South. 857, 103 Ala. 83; People v. Schooley, 43 N. E. 536, 149 N. Y. 99; Commonwealth v. Finn, 108 Mass 466).

"Knowledge," as used in the law of perjury, with reference to the making of a false statement under oath with knowledge of its falsity, is an intangible thing resting in the mind, the possession of which may be admitted by the party, or be shown by proof of circumstances from which it may reasonably be inferred. State v. Dryden (Del.) 84 Atl. 1087, 1038, 68 Or. 180.

The term "knowledge," used in the rule that a payment, with "knowledge" that the person to whom it was paid was not entitled to receive it, cannot be recovered, is not used in a broad sense, so that recovery may be had, though the payer knew that the payee was not entitled to it but did not recollect it at the time. Citizens' Bank of Fitzgerald v. Rudisall, 60 S. E. 818, 820, 4 Ga. App. 37.

In an action against promoters of a corporation for the contract price of an air compressor, the court charged that, where such promoters had entered into a contract, the same might be ratified by the corporation subsequently formed, and that it was not necessary that the directors as a body, or at a meeting, should by formal resolution ratify the same; the corporation being bound to pay for property which was actually used, which had been bought by its promoters, and the use of which the directors had actual knowledge, if they continued to use it and failed to repudiate it. Held, that the word "knowledge" referred to the corporation's knowledge of the use of the compressor, and the word "repudiate" to the contract, and not to the compressor, and, as so construed, the instruction was not misleading. Possell v. Smith, 88 Pac. 1064, 1065, 39 Colo. 127.

As a rule, where the statute makes knowledge that a claim presented is false or fraudulent a necessary element of the offense of presenting a false claim, knowledge must be alleged, and allegations of the affidavit, in a prosecution of an officer of a bridge company for presenting a false claim to county commissioners for allowance for work done for the county, that accused "unlawfully, feloniously, and knowingly made out and filed a certain false and fraudulent claim," and that the bridge company had no lawful demand therefor against the county, "as he then and there well knew," sufficiently alleged accused's knowledge of the falsity of the claim presented. Bader v. State, 94 N. E. 1009, 1011, 176 Ind. 268.

The word "knowledge" as used in Ky. St. § 597, making it a felony for a bank president to receive deposits with knowledge of the bank's insolvency, has no technical meaning, but meant that the officer had knowledge of the existing condition by means of his relation to the bank, his association with it, and his control over it; his direction thereof being such as to give him actual, personal information concerning it. Parrish v. Commonwealth, 123 S. W. 339, 341, 136 Ky. 77.

A complaint, in an action to foreclose a materialman's lien, brought against the owner, lessee, and contractors, which alleges that the owners at all times knew that the lessee was constructing a building, and did not at any time give notice that they would not be responsible therefor, sufficiently charges the owners with "knowledge," within Comp. Laws, § 3889, providing that every building constructed on lands with the knowledge of the owner shall be held to have been constructed at the instance of the owner, etc. Tonopah Lumber Co. v. Nevada Amusement Co., 97 Pac. 636, 639, 30 Nev. 445.

Where, in a suit for injuries by defective machinery, plaintiff knew the defective condition of the press, but claimed that he did not know the danger, an allegation that he did not have equal means of knowledge with defendant, using the term knowledge" to include actual or constructive knowledge, was material. Ellie v. C. Cowles & Co., 73 Atl. 258, 259, 82 Conn. 226.

It is not enough to assert merely that the discovery (of a right to have a judgment vacated for fraud) was not sooner made. It must appear that it could not have been made by the exercise of reasonable diligence. And that which reasonable diligence would have disclosed, plaintiff is presumed to have known; means of knowledge in such a case being the equivalent of the "knowledge," which it would have produced. The complaint, in an action to vacate a judgment because of fraud in not interposing a certain defense, did not show a right to more than three years for bringing it, under Code Civ. Proc. § 838, subd. 4, providing that the limitation of three years for relief from fraud does not begin to run till discovery of the facts constituting the fraud, by the mere allegation that the failure to interpose the defense was not discovered till within two months before commencement of the action to set aside the judgment; no reason for failure to make the discovery being given, and it not being stated that any diligence was exercised, or that with reasonable diligence the discovery would not have been made sooner. People ex rel. Post v. San Joaquin Valley Agricultural Ass'n, 91 Pac. 740, 744, 151 Cal. 797 (quoting and adopting Truett v. Onderdonk, 53 Pac. 29, 120 Cal. 589; Lady Washington Consol. Co. v. Wood, 45 Pac. 809, 113 Cal. 486).

As belief

"There is a difference between 'knowledge' and 'belief.' A person may honestly believe a thing and yet not know it." One is not guilty of bigamy who contracts a second marriage honestly believing, after exercising reasonable diligence that his first marriage had been dissolved by a divorce. Robinson v. State, 65 S. E. 792, 795, 6 Ga. App. 696.

Information distinguished

Under the Code authorizing a denial on information and belief by an allegation that the pleader has not the knowledge or information on which to base a belief, an allegation that as to plaintiff's corporate existence, the indorsement of the note sued on to it, and as to its being the owner and holder thereof, defendant cannot obtain sufficient information on which to base a belief, and hence denies such allegation, was insufficient; the words "knowledge" and "information" not being synonymous. Welles v. Colorado Nat. Life Assur. Co., 113 Pac. 524, 525, 49 Colo. 508.

As notice

"Knowledge" is not the same as "notice," but to constitute "notice," the "knowledge" must be communicated in the prescribed way. Wade v. Wade's Adm'r, 69 Atl. 826, 827, 81 Vt. 275.

"Knowledge" and "notice" are not always synonymous. Field v. Campbell (Ind.) 67 N. E. 1040, 1041 (citing Kirkham v. Moore, 65 N. E. 1042, 30 Ind. App. 549).

"Notice" is equivalent to "knowledge." Bova v. Norrigan, 67 Atl. 326, 327, 28 R. I. 319, 125 Am. St. Rep. 741.

Actual notice and "knowledge" are not always synonymous, but upon proof of sufficient acts the law will presume that a person has information equivalent in its legal effects to actual knowledge. Dunlap v. Gibson, 112 Pac. 598, 599, 83 Kan. 757, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1071.

"Knowledge" and "notice" are not synonymous, for that which does not amount to actual knowledge may constitute notice. The notice may be of such a character that its effects amount to knowledge. On the other hand, the party may be charged with notice when in utter ignorance of that of which he is presumed to be advised. Rosenberger v. Hawker, 108 N. W. 781, 782, 127 Iowa, 521.

A distinction is to be observed between "knowledge" of the pendency of a suit and notice thereof. Jurisdiction can be acquired, if one does not submit himself to it, in no other way than by actual notice or by constructive notice. Actual notice is given only by personal service of process; constructive notice by some form of substituted service. Where there is no service, there is no notice, irrespective of any knowledge which the defendant may acquire informally. Notice is given only by a service of process. Informal knowledge will not supply it, and cannot be relied upon to put the one acquiring the knowledge on notice or to force him into court to defend himself. National Metal Co. v. Greene Consol. Copper Co., 89 Pac. 535, 537, 11 Ariz. 108, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062.

Where an agent of the authorized sales agent of the owner of lots upon which one in possession was erecting a building had an office, which he visited daily, in plain view of the building being erected, the owner was put on such inquiry as to charge him with "knowledge" under Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, giving a lien upon property for labor and material furnished with knowledge of the owner. National Lumber Co. v. Whalley, 121 Pac. 729, 730, 162 Cal. 224.

The "knowledge" or privity of the managing officer or agent of a corporation is the knowledge or privity of the corporation within the meaning of Rev. St. § 4283, providing for the limitation of liability of shipowners for losses caused without their privity or knowledge. In re Jeremiah Smith & Sons, 193 Fed. 395, 397, 113 C. C. A. 391.

A complaint, alleging that an act by which plaintiff, a passenger, was injured was done with "knowledge" or "notice" of defendant's agent, does not state a cause of action for wantonness; "notice" not being the equivalent of "knowledge," and the averment in the disjunctive not affirming either. Birmingham Ry. & Electric Co. v. Butler, 33 South. 33, 35, 135 Ala. 388.

Code, § 3448, provides that actions for relief on account of fraud are barred within five years, but that, in actions heretofore solely recognized in courts of equity, the cause of action will not be held to have accrued until the alleged fraud is discovered. Held, that "knowledge of fraud," as we have construed that expression in this connection, does not contemplate actual knowledge thereof before the statute begins to run, but such knowledge or notice as would lead a man of reasonable prudence to make inquiries which would disclose the fraud. The record of a deed imparts constructive notice of its contents, and if the facts which the record shows, with other facts known to the creditor, are of a character to suggest fraud, he is charged with the knowledge which inquiry made with reasonable diligence would disclose. This rule has its application, not only as against creditors seeking relief, but as to other persons interested in or making claims to property which has been fraudulently conveyed by the recorded deed. E. B. Piekenbrock & Sons v. Knoer, 114 N. W. 200, 201, 136 Iowa, 534.

Where, in an action against a county to set aside a conveyance, a decree was taken by default, the court, under L. O. L. § 103, may, in its discretion, within one year after notice thereof, relieve a party from a judgment taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, and has jurisdiction to entertain a motion to set aside such decree when filed within one year after knowledge of the decree was acquired by the agents or officers of the county, though not until more than one year after the decree was entered; "notice," as used in such statute, being a synonym of "knowledge." Chapman v. Multnomah County, 126 Pac. 996, 998, 63 Or. 180.

KNOWLEDGE OF DANGER

"Although the terms 'knowledge of danger' and 'appreciation of risk' are frequently used in the discussion of due care, still these elements in and of themselves do not constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law." Frost v. McCarthy, 86 N. E. 918, 919, 200 Mass. 445.

The test of an employee's "knowledge of danger" is not the exercise of ordinary care to discover the danger, but whether the danger was known to, or plainly observable by, him. Rase v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 120 N. W. 360, 365, 107 Minn. 260, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138.

KNOWLEDGE OF THE LAW

See, also, "Ignorance of the Law."

The maxim, "Every one is presumed to know the law," does not obtain literally and generally; it is limited by the reason for the rule, viz., to prevent violators of the Criminal Code from escaping punishment on the ground of ignorance of the law and violators of private rights, escaping liability for actual loss thereby inflicted on such ground. Topolewski v. Plankinton Packing Co., 126 N. W. 554, 561, 143 Wis. 52.

KNOWN ADDRESS

See Last Known Address.

KNOWN AGENT

The division superintendent of a non-resident railroad company is a "known agent" of such company within the meaning of V. S. 1109, providing for the service of attachment, although he may not be a person upon whom, pursuant to section 8948, service of process generally upon such corporation may be made. Boston & M. R. R. v. Gokey, 28 Sup. Ct. 657, 660, 210 U. S. 155, 52 L. Ed. 1002.

KNOWN AND WELL-DEFINED CHANNEL

That water flows naturally through a channel will not make it a "known and well-defined channel." Killian v. Killian, 57 South. 825, 829, 175 Ala. 224.

KNOWN INVENTION

Defendant, a citizen of the United States, conceived an invention, but did not reduce it to practice until some four or five years later, when he applied for and obtained a patent therefor. In the meantime complainant had made the same invention, and reduced it to actual practice and use in a foreign country, but did not patent it, nor was it described in any printed publication. He made a full disclosure of the invention orally to an American, who also saw the device in actual use, and on his return to this country described it, both orally and in writing, to others skilled in the art, who were capable of understanding it, but it was not put into actual use in this country. After defendant's patent had been granted, complainant filed an application for a patent. Held, that the knowledge of the invention by persons in this country, obtained from complainant, in the absence of an actual reduction to practice here, did not make it "known," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 4886, which authorizes the granting of a patent to an inventor for an invention "not known or used by others in this country before his invention or discovery thereof," and that, as between complainant and defendant, neither having reduced it to actual practice in this country, defendant, who was the first to conceive it and to constructively reduce it to practice by the filing of his application, under said section and section 4923, took precedence as the original and first inventor, and was entitled to the patent. Westinghouse Mach. Co. v. General Electric Co., 199 Fed. 907, 910.

KNOWN LODE OR VEIN

A "known vein," within the limits of a placer, when that question is raised collaterally, is one known to exist at the time of application for patent for such placer, and to contain minerals in such quantity and quality as to justify expenditure for the purpose of extracting them. McConaghy v. Doyle, 75 Pac. 419, 420, 32 Colo. 92.

A mineral vein, within the boundaries of a placer claim, is "known" to exist, within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2319, 2333, first, when it is known to the placer claimant; second, when its existence is generally known; and, third, when any examination of the ground sufficient to enable the placer claimant to make oath that it is subject to location as such would necessarily disclose the existence of the "vein." Mutchmor v. McCarty, 87 Pac. 85, 88, 149 Cal. 608 (citing Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Mike & S. Min. Co., 12 Sup. Ct. 543, 143 U. S. 403, 36 L. Ed. 201; Lindley, Mines, § 781; Migeon v. Montana Cent. Ry. Co., 77 Fed. 249, 23 C. C. A. 156).

Rev. St. U. S. § 2333, provides that, where an application for a patent for a placer claim does not include an application for a known vein or lode within its boundaries, the application shall be construed as a declaration that the claimant of the placer claim has no right of possession of the vein or lode claim, but that, where the existence of a vein or lode claim is not known, a patent for the placer claim shall convey all valuable mineral and other deposits within the boundaries thereof. Held, that a "vein or lode" within such section is a body of mineral or mineral-bearing rock within defined boundaries in the general mass of the mountain, and that a "known vein or lode" is one clearly ascertained, and of such extent as to render the land more valuable on that account and justify its exploitation and development. Noyes v. Clifford, 94 Pac. 842, 847, 37 Mont. 138.

KNOWN MINES

The term "mineral lands," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 2302, is one of broader significance than "known mines." It refers to a class of lands, rather than specific tracts easily ascertainable, not only by the land department, but by the applicants themselves. Old Dominion Copper, Mining & Smelting Co. v. Haverly, 90 Pac. 383, 388, 11 Ariz. 241.

KNUCKLES

Railroad couplings resembling two human hands or fists, with the fingers clasped into each other, there being a coupling pin, which has to be pulled out before they will lock, are called "knuckles." McGuire v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co., 107 S. W. 411, 412, 128 Mo. App. 677.

A declaration charged it was defendant's duty to have a competent person "to operate the knuckle where the cars were let down from the mine entry to the tipple below," but that it employed a totally irresponsible boy of 15 years to operate the knuckle and levers necessary in letting down said cars off the hill. The evidence showed that the word "knuckle" was sometimes used to embrace the drumhouse and all appurtenances at the head of the incline, but that the boy was employed simply to operate the check blocks immediately at the knuckle, and that he was 15 years and 4 months old. Held, that the word "knuckle" was employed in the declaration in its restricted sense, and there was no material variance. Wilkinson v. Kana-wha & Hocking Coal & Coke Co., 61 S. W. 875, 64 W. Va. 93, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 331.

KNURLING

A "knurling" is a roughening of the surface of articles, like vices and pincers, to prevent slipping. Capewell Horse Nail Co. v. Putnam Nail Co., 140 Fed. 670, 671.

The mere addition of the letters "L. S." after the name of a signer, without any expression in the instrument of a purpose to seal it, does not make the instrument a sealed instrument. Hughes v. Spratling, 57 South. 629, 630, 8 Ala. App. 517.

The letters "L. S.," placed after the signature of a person or corporation, are an abbreviation of "locus sigilli," meaning "the place of the seal," and are usually inserted within brackets in copies of documents to indicate the position of the seal in the original. Cannon v. Gorham, 71 S. E. 142, 143, 136 Ga. 167, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 89.

When the letters "L. S.," inclosed within parentheses, thus, "(L. S.)," appear opposite the signature of the maker of a promissory note in the usual place for the seal, but with no reference to it in the body of the instrument, whether written or printed, it is evidence of a purpose to make a sealed instrument. Langley v. Owens, 42 South. 457, 459, 52 Fla. 302, 11 Ann. Cas. 247.

The use by the recorder of deeds of the letters "L. S." is a sufficient representation of the seal of a corporate grantor in a recorded deed. It has been variously held that where the seal on original papers is indicated on the record or a copy by the letters "L. S.," or the word "seal," or by a scroll employed for that purpose, it will answer the requirements of the law. Altschul v. Casey, 76 Pac. 1083, 1084, 45 Or. 182 (citing Holbrook v. Nichol, 36 Ill. 161, 164; Moore v. Williamette Transportation & Locks Co., 7 Or. 359; Bucklen v. Hasterlik, 40 N. E. 561, 155 Ill. 423).

Inasmuch as the impression of the device of an official seal upon an instrument cannot be transferred from the instrument to which it is affixed to the record by the officer making the record thereof, it is only necessary that he should, in some appropriate manner, indicate that a seal was affixed thereto, and, when the letters "L. S.," the word "seal," or a scroll are employed for that purpose, they will be sufficient, and, where the official seal on the original is indicated on a certified copy of the record thereof by the letters "L. S.," it must be held to answer the requirement of the law, and such certified copy cannot be excluded from evidence on the ground that no official seal appears to have been annexed to the original. Holbrook v. Nichol, 36 Ill. 161, 164.

LABEL

A "label" is usually much broader in its information than a mere trade-mark, and, to be subject to litigation in case of unfair competition, must indicate the source of the chattel. De Nobili v. Scanda, 198 Fed. 341, 345.

There is no essential difference in the meaning of the term "label," as used in commerce and in common speech. According to standard lexicographers, the term includes a slip or tag of paper, or other material, bearing the description in the form of a word or words, name, monogram, letter, scroll, or trade-mark, indicating the character, origin, or destination of the article to which it is attached. Under the provision of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 320, 30 Stat. 179, for "labels, for garments or other articles, composed of cotton," labels are not to be excluded because in the piece and requiring to be cut apart before used as labels. United States v. Herzog, 145 Fed. 622, 623, 76 C. C. A. 373.

The provision in the Tariff Act for "labels for garments or other articles, composed of cotton," does not include strips of cotton containing certain words woven therein in silk, which are intended, when properly cut, to be attached to the top of shoes. Such articles are dutiable as manufactures of cotton, under said act. Herzog v. United States, 135 Fed. 919.

The word "label," as used in Food & Drugs Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, 34 Stat. 768, which requires packages of drugs shipped in interstate commerce to bear a statement on the label of the quantity or proportion of any alcohol, etc., means a descriptive paper affixed to the package, which must include the statement of how much alcohol, etc., is contained in the package. United States v. Knowlton Danderline Co., 175 Fed. 1022, 99 C. C. A. 667.

Penal Law N. Y. (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 40) § 2354, subd. 6, provides that a person who knowingly sells, offers, or exposes for sale any goods which are represented in any manner, by word or deed, to be the manufacture, packing, bottling, boxing, or product of any person, firm, or corporation other than himself, unless such goods are contained in the original package, box, or bottle and under the labels, marks, or names placed thereon by the manufacturer, is guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the words "labels, marks, or names," which the manufacturer is entitled to use on his packages, are trade-marks in which the manufacturer has a special right, or, if not technical trade-marks, those which are entitled to protection under similar principles, and do not include mere identifying numbers placed on the containers of the goods. B. V. D. Co. v. Kommel, 200 Fed. 559, 561, 119 C. C. A. 89.

For instances of men whose services are held to be labor, see subtitle Laborer.

The word "labor," in legal parlance, has a well-defined, understood, and accepted meaning. It implies continued exertion of the more onerous and inferior kind, usually and chiefly consisting in the protracted exertion of muscular force. "Labor may be business, but it is not necessarily so, and business is not always labor. In legal significance labor implies toil; exertion producing weariness; manual exertion of a toilsome nature." Moore v. American Industrial Co., 50 S. E. 687, 688, 138 N. C. 304 (citing Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 387).

A lending of tools for a few minutes and receiving a board which might otherwise have been allowed to fall without any injury resulting did not constitute "labor," for which a lienable claim could be enforced. Cole v. Clark, 27 Atl. 186, 188, 85 Me. 336, 21 L. R. A. 714.

Where the specific relation which the labor of a lien claimant must bear to the property is pointed out in the statute giving a lien, no other labor furnishes the basis for a lien claim, but where the statute is general, and provides for a lien to any person performing labor on a mining claim, labor of any class bearing a direct relation to the mining operations forms a basis for a lien claim. Comp. Laws 1897, § 2221, giving a lien for labor in a mining claim, gives a lien for manual labor performed on a limestone mining claim, for labor in the care of horses on the claim, used in the mining operations thereon, for labor in a lime kiln, closing lime bins, and gathering up tools at the lime quarry and kiln, all on the mining claim. Gray v. New Mexico Pumice Stone Co., 110 Pac. 603, 604, 15 N. M. 478.

"Labor," whether physical, intellectual, or a combination of the two, is not, by any fair rule of construction, an "article of trade, manufacture, or use," or an "article, commodity, or utility," which enters into the manufacture of "any article of utility," within the meaning of those words as used in the Anti-Trust Statute (Gen. Laws 1899, p. 487, c. 359; Rev. Laws 1905, § 5168). State v.

Duluth Board of Trade, 121 N. W. 395, 412, 107 Minn. 506, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1260.

An order for sashes and doors for a special purpose to be manufactured by the seller at a stated price, to be paid on completion of the work, is a contract for the sale of goods and not for "labor," within the statute of frauds. Tower Grove Planing Mill Co. v. McCormick, 106 S. W. 113, 114, 127 Mo. App. 349.

To keep open, manage, and superintend a theater and sell tickets therein on Sunday is "labor" within the meaning of an ordinance providing that every person who shall labor himself or compel a servant in his control to labor, other than household work or daily necessity or works of charity, on Sunday, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. City of Topeka v. Crawford, 96 Pac. 862, 864, 78 Kan. 583, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1156, 16 Ann. Cas. 403.

Selling tickets to a theater, printing a newspaper, serving as a police magistrate, serving as an attorney's clerk, and giving of theatrical exhibitions have all been held to be "laboring" within the intent and meaning of that term as used in the Sunday laws. Moore v. Owen, 109 N. Y. Supp. 585, 590, 58 Misc. Rep. 332 (citing Quarles v. State, 17 S. W. 269, 55 Ark. 10, 14 L. R. A. 192; Smith v. Wilcox [N. Y.] 19 Barb. 581; Id., 25 Barb. 341; Palmer v. City of New York, 2 Sandf. [4 N. Y. Super. Ct.] 318; Watts v. Van Ness [N. Y.] 1 Hill, 76; Lindenmuller v. People [N. Y.] 83 Barb. 548).

Baseball

Baseball is essentially and naturally in the nature of amusement, both for the participants and spectators, and is far removed from the ordinary meaning of the word "labor." Territory v. Davenport (N. M.) 124 Pac. 795, 798, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 407.

Mining claims

Work done in cleaning up and washing gold taken from a mining claim is "labor done upon the claim," for which the workmen are entitled to a lien under Civ. Code Alaska, § 262. Cascaden v. Wimbish, 161 Fed. 241, 246, 88 C. C. A. 277.

"Labor" and improvements, within the meaning of the mining law, are deemed to have been expended on a mining claim when the labor is performed or the improvements are made for its development, though in fact the labor and improvements may be at a distance from the claim itself, such as the building of a road to be used in general development. Sexton v. Washington Mining & Milling Co., 104 Pac. 614, 615, 55 Wash. 390 (citing St. Louis Smelting & Ref. Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636, 28 L. Ed. 875; Mt. Diablo, Mill & Mining Co. v. Callison, 5 Sawy. 439, 17 Fed. Cas. 918; Book v. Justice Mining Co., 58 Fed. 106).

Preaching

The common understanding of the term "labor" does not include preaching. Holy Trinity Church v. United States, 12 Sup. Ct. 511, 143 U. S. 457, 36 L. Ed. 226.

Running pool room

Pen. Code 1895, arts. 196, 197, prohibiting "labor" on Sunday, except as to ferrymen, etc., prohibits the running of a pool room. Ex parte Axsom, 141 S. W. 798, 68 Tex. Cr. R. 627, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 179, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 794.

Sale of liquor

The act of a steward of a club in separately selling two bottles of beer on Sunday does not constitute "labor" within the meaning of Pen. Code 1895, art. 196, prohibiting any person to labor on Sunday. Benson v. State, 85 S. W. 800, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 609.

Services of superintendent

Services of a superintendent in charge of dredging work under a contract with the United States, which were rather those of a foreman in charge of the manual work than those of a financier or general business manager, were in the nature of "labor," within a provision of his employer's bond, given as required by U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2523, providing that contractors shall promptly make full payments to all persons supplying labor and materials in the construction of the work. United States v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 123 N. Y. Supp. 938, 943, 139 App. Div. 262.

A superintendent of a mill, whose duties consist in overseeing the milling operations, conducting a commissary store, and keeping the books, and who does not perform any manual labor, is not a "laborer" within Const. art. 14, § 4, requiring the General Assembly to enact legislation giving mechanics and laborers a lien on the subject-matter of their labor, and does not perform "labor" within Code, § 1255, which carries the provisions of the Constitution into effect. Moore v. American Industrial Co., 50 S. E. 687, 688, 138 N. C. 304.

Work of architect

The work of a supervising architect, who furnishes plans and specifications and supervises the construction of a building pursuant to a contract with the owner for such services, is labor, for which he is entitled to a lien under Rev. Codes 1899, § 4788, giving a lien to any person who performs labor on a building. Friedlander v. Taintor, 104 N. W. 527, 14 N. D. 393, 116 Am. St. Rep. 697, 9 Ann. Cas. 96.

An architect preparing plans and specifications for a building and superintending its construction furnishes "labor" for the erection of such building and is entitled to a mechanic's lien under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3294, giving a lien to any person or firm, lumber dealer or corporation, artisan, laborer, mechanic or subcontractor, who may labor or furnish material, etc., to erect any house or improvement, or repair any building or improvement, even if such architect is not an "artisan," "laborer," or "mechanic," since, by the use of the expression "any person or firm, * * * who may labor," an intention is evidenced to provide a lien for any and all persons, whether artisans, laborers, mechanics, or not, who may labor to erect a house or improvement. Sanguinett & Staats v. Colorado Salt Co. (Tex.) 150 S. W. 490, 491.

LABOR AGENT

A person employed by a railway construction company as a day laborer was sent to a city to employ additional labor. He hired certain laborers and was endeavoring to induce others to enter its service. Held, that he was not a "labor agent," within Code 1904, p. 2247, imposing a fine on one conducting the business of a labor agent without having first obtained a license therefor; the statute requiring a strict construction as against the state, because it imposes a tax and is intended to reach persons who, for compensation, conduct the business of employing laborers for others. Watts v. Commonwealth, 56 S. E. 223, 106 Va. 851.

LABOR AGITATOR

Ordinarily the term "labor agitator" would justly apply to one actively engaged in the promoting of the interests of the laboring men. It does not imply the use of unlawful or improper means. The statement of a railroad company that a person was a "labor agitator" could not amount to a libel, where the statement was made in answer to an inquiry addressed to it by another railroad, which contemplated employing him. Wabash R. Co. v. Young, 69 N. E. 1003, 1005, 1006, 162 Ind. 102, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1091.

LABOR AND MATERIAL

The furnishing of scows to transport material in the prosecution of work under a government contract is not the furnishing of "labor and material," within a bond executed by the contractor under the federal statute requiring every contractor for public work to execute a bond to make payment to all persons supplying labor and materials in the prosecution of the work, and providing that the person supplying such labor and materials shall have the right to sue in the name of the United States on the bond. United States v. Conkling, 135 Fed. 508-512, 68 C. C. A. 220.

Comp. Laws 1897, § 10,743, provides that, when a public work is to be built at the expense of a city, etc., the agents contracting in behalf of such city shall require bond for the payment of the contractor and of subcontractors for all labor performed or materials furnished. Held, that the term "labor and materials furnished under the contract" in bond given by a city contractor meant such labor and materials as were necessary to construct the work in accordance with the contract, and the bond did not cover labor and material furnished in repairing a dredge, pumps, and machinery used by a contractor in connection with the work. City of Alpena, for Use of Besser, v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co., 123 N. W. 1126, 1127, 159 Mich. 329, 334; City of Alpena, for Use of Beaudrie, v. Murray Co., 123 N. W. 1128, 159 Mich. 336.

LABOR AND SKILL

"Labor and skill" are not articles of commerce, at least not in the same sense as the articles thereby produced, and a classification which distinguishes them, and provides for a diversity of legislation in respect to them, is reasonable and proper. Cleland v. Anderson, 92 N. W. 306, 308, 66 Neb. 252, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 136.

LABOR ORGANIZATION

A "labor organization" is a combination of workmen usually, but not necessarily, of the same trade or allied trades, for the purpose of securing by united action, the most favorable conditions as regards wages, hours of labor, etc., for its members. Stone v. Textile Examiners & Shrinkers Employers' Ass'n, 122 N. Y. Supp. 460, 462, 137 App. Div. 655.

LABOR PERFORMED

A claim for rental of scrapers is neither for "labor performed" nor "material furnished," within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5902, giving one who, at the owner's request, grades, etc., land, or a street in front thereof, a lien for the labor performed and the materials furnished. Hall v. Cowen, 98 Pac. 670, 671, 51 Wash. 295.

Under Revisal 1905, § 1181, providing that mortgages of corporations shall not exempt the corporation's property or earnings from execution for satisfaction of any judgment against such corporation for labor performed, a contractor who had installed a gas holder for the corporation, and had paid for labor in installing it, was entitled to no preference over the mortgage; the preference for "labor performed" being given only to laborers employed by the corporation, and not to contractors who employ labor under a contract to place betterments upon the company's property. Cox v. New Bern Lighting & Fuel Co., 67 S. E. 477, 478, 152 N. C. 164.

LABOR UNION

"Labor unions," which are associations to enable their members to negotiate matters arising between them and their employers through the intermediation of officers of the union, and to accomplish their ends through concerted action, are valid. Kemp v. Division No. 241, Amalgamated Ass'n of Street and Electric Ry. Employees of America, 99 N. E. 389, 392, 255 Ill. 213, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 847.

LABORER

See Chinese Laborer; Common Laborer; Contract Laborer; Farm Laborer; Person Who Performs Labor.

The word "laborer," in its ordinary and usual sense, implies the personal service and work of the individual employed. Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Parkinson, 94 N. W. 120, 122, 68 Neb. 819 (citing Balch v. New York & O. M. R. Co., 46 N. Y. 521).

"The word 'laborer' has a definite and fixed meaning in the Constitution and legislation of this state. In article 14, § 4, of the Constitution, it is provided that the General Assembly shall enact suitable legislation for the purpose of giving to mechanics and laborers an adequate lien on the subject-matter of their labor, and in pursuance of this provision the mechanic's and laborer's lien law (chapter 41 of the Code) was enacted by the General Assembly. Words used in legislation which have a technical meaning are supposed to be used in that sense. Worcester defines a laborer to be one who labors; one regularly employed at some hard work. Webster defines a laborer to be one who labors in a tiresome occupation; one who does work that requires little skill, as distinguished from an artisan." Moore v. American Industrial Co., 50 S. E. 687, 688, 138 N. C. 304.

Const. art. 5, § 3, provides for the appointment of assistant superintendents of public works, for the filling of vacancies in such office, etc., and declares that all other persons employed in the care and management of canals, except collectors of tolls, and those in the department of the state engineer and surveyor, shall be appointed by the inspector of public works, and be subject to suspension or removal by him. Relator, a Civil War veteran, was appointed bridge tender by a deputy surveyor in 1901, working during the season of canal navigation; his services being dispensed with and his pay stopped during the closed season. He was employed for successive seasons until the spring of 1911, when on his reporting for duty his position was refused him. The position of bridge tender is not an office created or recognized by statute, being left to the discretion of the superintendent of public works and the agreement of the parties; nor is the term of employment or compensation regulated by legislation. The position was placed in the noncompetitive class, was exempt from examination, and classed as "laborer." Held that, the word "laborer" being ordinarily used to designate persons whose employment is uncertain as to time and terminates when the works on which they are engaged ends, as distinguished from men who are employed for a definite or fixed term from year to year, relator was therefore subject to removal without the preferring of charges or the granting of a hearing. People ex rel. Schoenwald v. Treman, 137 N. Y. Supp. 64, 67.

To convict under Code 1907, § 6850, the servant or "laborer" enticed away must be under a written contract of employment at the time. Abingdon Mills v. Grogan, 52 South. 596, 599, 167 Ala. 146.

Whether an employe is a "laborer," within Civ. Code 1895, § 4732, making the daily, weekly, or monthly wages of day laborers exempt from garnishment, is generally a question of fact, dependent upon whether his duties are mainly physical or mental. Buchanan v. Echols & Nix, 70 S. E. 28, 8 Ga. App. 565.

Under a statute giving preference in the distribution of the assets of an insolvent corporation to claims for "wages of mechanics, workmen and laborers," the wages preferred and the class of persons within the statute depend upon the nature and kind of work done, rather than on the social position or professional character and standing of the person rendering the service, and, if the service is such as to bring the person rendering it within the statute, his compensation, whether large or small, or whether payable by the day, week, month, or year, is "wages," within the meaning of the statute, and preferred. Gay v. Hudson River Electric Power Co., 178 Fed. 499, 501.

Under L. O. L. § 7420, making it the duty of every original contractor to file his lien within 60 days from the completion of his contract, and of every mechanic or other person to file within 30 days, one engaged merely to work for an indefinite time, under the direction of the lessee of a house, is a mere "laborer," whose rights to a lien would expire within 30 days from his last day of work. Bernard v. Hassan, 118 Pac. 201, 60 Or. 62.

Under Laws 1897, p. 516, c. 418, § 3, giving a lien to a "contractor, subcontractor, laborer, or materialman, who performs labor or furnishes material for the improvement of real property," the terms "contractor," "subcontractor," "laborer," and "materialman," while they refer primarily to the man who has a formal contract with the owner, or a subcontractor with the contractor, or who performs manual labor or furnished material, also embrace the man who buys the labor and material which enter into the improvement. Kerwin v. Post, 104 N. Y. Supp. 1005, 1007, 120 App. Div. 179.

Masters, mates, engineers, firemen, crane men, deck hands, and scow men employed on tugs, dredges and scows used in dredging a harbor channel are not "laborers or mechanics" within the meaning of the act of August 1, 1892, forbidding contractors upon any public work of the United States or of the District of Columbia, under penalty of fine or imprisonment, to permit or require laborers and mechanics employed thereon to work more than eight hours each day. Ellis v. United States, 27 Sup. Ct. 600, 603, 206 U. S. 246, 51 L. Ed. 1047, 11 Ann. Cas. 589.

Defendant was a contractor engaged in constructing for the United States jetties near Cape May harbor, extending from the shore into the open sea. The jetties were built up with stone, thrown overboard from barges, which were towed across Delaware Bay, anchored, and as needed towed to the jetties and warped along while being discharged. As crews of such barges defendant employed engineers, boatmen, and hookmen, selected for their seafaring experience, who operated the barges and also discharged their cargoes. The work done and the time required to do it depended on tide, wind, and weather, which ordinarily required variable hours of service on the part of the men. Held, that such men were seamen, with the rights of such, including the right to a lien on the vessel for their wages, and could not be classed as "laborers" or mechanics, within the meaning of act Aug. 1, 1892, c. 352, § 1, 27 Stat. 340, which makes it unlawful for any contractor for government work to require or permit any laborer or mechanic employed by him thereon to work more than eight hours in any calendar day, except in case of extraordinary emergency. Breakwater Co. v. United States, 183 Fed. 112, 114, 105 C. C. A. 404.

Mode of payment

Under the ruling made in the cases of Oliver v. Macon Hardware Co., 25 S. E. 403, 98 Ga. 249, 58 Am. St. Rep. 300, and Moultrie v. Crocker, 54 S. E. 197, 125 Ga. 82, the defendant, whose employment was that of building cabs and pilots for railway locomotives, was a "laborer," within the meaning of Civ. Code 1895, § 4732, exempting the wages of journeymen, mechanics, and day laborers from process of garnishment. The fact that the laborer is paid according to the amount, and not the length of time of his work, does not preclude him from claiming the exemption. Prather v. Pantone, 54 S. E. 663, 125 Ga. 808 (citing Johnson v. Hicks, 48 S. E. 383, 120 Ga. 1002).

Skill used

The test for determining who is a "laborer" is whether the work of a particular person involves mental skill, business capacity, involving the exercise of the intellectual faculties, or whether the work depends on mere physical power and manual labor; in other words, whether mind or muscle preponderate in the performance of the work. Thompson v. Passmore, 72 S. E. 185, 186, 9 Ga. App. 771.

A person under a contract of employment contemplating services mainly of work requiring mental skill or business capacity, and involving the exercise of his mental faculties, rather than work the doing of which properly would depend upon a mere physical power to perform ordinary manual labor, is not a "laborer," whose wages are exempt from garnishment. Tabb v. Mallette, 47 S. E. 587, 588, 120 Ga. 97, 102 Am. St. Rep. 78.

Bartender

A person employed in a liquor store, whose duties were to open the store every morning during the week, to sweep the floors and dust and clean up the store, to wash counters and glasses and dust the shelves, to pour out drinks for the trade and to sell and deliver whiskies and wines in bottles, to receive into the house shipments of goods and to unpack shipments and place the same upon the shelves, to place beer in bottles on ice, tap and draw beer out of kegs, lift barrels of whisky onto the scaffolding, draw whisky out of them into bottles and place the same on the shelves to be sold, to build scaffolding on which to place the whisky barrels, and to erect fixtures in the bar, to handle the cash during his employer's absence, and to deposit and pay out the same according to directions, to give checks in the employer's absence when expressly directed to do so, and to keep such books as were incidental to the doing of a cash business, was a "laborer," within the meaning of the Laborers' Lien Law. Bluthenthal & Bickart v. Bennefeld, 56 S. E. 517, 518, 127 Ga. 444, 119 Am. St. Rep. 350 (citing Lowenstein v. Meyer, 40 S. E. 726, 114 Ga. 709; Oliver v. Boehm, 63 Ga. 172).

Bookkeeper

An employé of a contractor, who kept the books of his employer, superintended a part of the work, and was foreman of a squad of laborers, cannot be said, as a matter of law, to be such a "laborer" as would be entitled to a lien for his work, and there was no error in submitting this issue to the jury. Tuck v. Moss Mfg. Co., 56 S. E. 1001, 1003, 127 Ga. 729 (quoting and adopting definition in Oliver v. Macon Hardware Co., 25 S. E. 403, 98 Ga. 249, 58 Am. St. Rep. 300).

Clerk

An affidavit that affiant contracted with his employer "to clerk in his storehouse as a general clerk, in selling goods and doing other things in and about the storehouse and place of business" of the employer, at a named sum per month, did not show that he was a "laborer," so as to authorize foreclosure of a laborer's lien given by Code 1882, § 1974. Tuten v. Cudahy Packing Co., 66 S. E. 249, 133 Ga. 509.

A "laborer" is one who works at a toilsome occupation, a man who does work requiring little skill, as distinguished from an artisan, sometimes called a laboring man. Clerks, agents, cashiers of banks, and all that class of employes, whose employment is associated with mental labor and skill, are not considered laborers, so as to have a lien for their wages. Primarily the word, in the sense in which it is used in Civ. Code 1895, § 2792, giving a lien to laborers, does not include a clerk in a mercantile establishment, if his contract of employment contemplates that his services are to consist mainly of work requiring mental skill or business capacity and involving the exercise of his mental faculties rather than work, the doing of which properly would depend upon a mere physical power to perform ordinary manual labor. If, on the other hand, the work which his contract required him to do was, in the main, to be the performance of such labor as depended merely on physical power, he would be a laborer. The nature of the labor to be performed and whether the mental element preponderates or not is to be determined by the contract of employment, and one who claims a laborer's lien must be classified with reference to the character of the services required of him by his employer under the terms of his contract. Howell v. Atkinson, 59 S. E. 318, 319, 3 Ga. App. 58.

Conductor

A freight conductor, who has general control of the train and employes thereon, its running and management, procuring waybills, making reports, attending to the delivery of freight, and generally performing work requiring the exercise of his intellectual faculties and business capacity is not a "laborer," within Civ. Code 1895, § 4732, whose wages are exempt. Robinson v. McWilliams-Rankin Co., 64 S. E. 717, 6 Ga. App. 203.

Contractor

The mechanic's lien act of 1883 and amendments thereto, giving a lien to "mechanics, laborers, and materialmen," does not give a lien to contractors. Fleming v. Greener (Ind.) 90 N. E. 73, 75.

Where plaintiff contracted to haul logs at a specified rate per thousand feet, he was not entitled to a laborer's lien; the word "laborer," in Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3339a, giving such lien, meaning one who labors with his hands for wages, and not including one who contracts for the hauling of lumber with his wagon and team. Jackson v. Downs (Tex.) 149 S. W. 286, 287.

One who agrees to furnish or pay for labor for another's benefit is a contractor, and not a servant or "laborer," within Act Aug. 15, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 90), punishing one procuring money on a contract to perform services with intent to defraud. Coleman v. State, 65 S. E. 46, 47, 6 Ga. App. 393.

Contractor on railroad

Mechanic's Lien Act (Acts 1883, p. 140, c. 115), as amended in 1889 (Acts 1889, p.

257, c. 123), giving a lien to "mechanics, laborers," etc., was intended to protect the class of persons commonly known by those terms, who generally personally perform the work, and "laborers" does not embrace "contractors"; and hence section 12 of the act (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8305), giving liens to persons performing work in the construction of a railroad, etc., does not apply to contractors. Indianapolis Northern Traction Co. v. Brennan, 87 N. E. 215, 220, 174 Ind. 1, 80 L. R. A. (N. S.) 85.

Foreman

The services of a foreman who superintends and directs the laborers in the work of construction or repair are within Kirby's Dig. § 6661, giving a "laborer or other person who shall perform work or labor" a lien for his services. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Love, 86 S. W. 395, 397, 74 Ark. 528 (citing Phil. Mech. Liens, § 158; Stryker v. Cassidy, 76 N. Y. 50, 32 Am. Rep. 262; Mut. Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Rowland, 26 N. J. Eq. 389).

One who had a control over laborers in a mill, but who was hired as a millwright and general utility man, held, under the evidence, to be a "laborer" within the meaning of the statute relating to the guarding of machinery. Watt v. Mishawaka Paper & Pulp Co. (Ind.) 99 N. E. 1029, 1031.

General manager

The general manager of a corporation, though a director, is a "laborer" entitled to a preference, under the corporation act allowing a preference for wages due from an insolvent corporation to "all persons doing labor or service of whatever character in the regular employ of the corporation." The purpose of the statute is the preservation of the organized operative force of the corporation in a time of embarrassment, and the retention of the general manager as the important supervisory organizer of the operative force is peculiarly essential to the accomplishment of this purpose. Buvinger v. Evening Union Printing Co., 65 Atl. 482, 484, 72 N. J. Eq. 321.

Lawyer

Laws N. Y. 1897, c. 415, § 8, provides that, "upon the appointment of a receiver of a partnership or of a corporation organized under the laws of this state and doing business therein, other than a moneyed corporation, the wages of the employés of such partnership or corporation shall be preferred to every other debt or claim." Section 2 defines the word "employé" as used in the act as meaning "a mechanic, workingman or laborer who works for another for hire." Held that, under the construction placed upon a similar prior statute by the Court of Appeals of the state, an attorney at law employed by an electric company to procure options on certain property, and water power sites which the company desired to buy, at an understood compensation of $10 per day, and expenses for the time employed in the service, was not a "workingman" or "laborer," and hence not an "employé" entitled to preference under the statute. Gay v. Hudson River Electric Power Co., 178 Fed. 499, 501.

Night watchman

A person whose wages it was sought to garnish was employed by garnishee as night watchman. His duties consisted mainly in walking about the premises and keeping tramps away and seeing that fire did not break out, but he was without authority to arrest any one and only drove them off the premises when found loitering. He worked 12 hours a day and made a round each hour, about 20 minutes being occupied in making the same, and had to register 16 times during the round. He had a license to run an engine, and each morning, after making his eleventh round, fired the boiler, which took him about 30 minutes, and he was required to remain in the boiler room in all about 1 hour and 40 minutes. Held to authorize a finding that he was a "laborer," so as to exempt his wages. McAdams v. Ellis, 62 S. E. 1001, 5 Ga. App. 262.

Officer

Officers are not within Revisal 1908, § 1206, providing that, in case of insolvency of a corporation, "laborers" and "workmen" shall have a prior lien on its assets for work and labor. Alexander v. Farrow, 66 S. E. 209, 210, 151 N. C. 320.

Preacher

The common understanding of the term "laborers" does not include preachers. Holy Trinity Church v. United States, 12 Sup. Ct. 511, 513, 143 U. S. 457, 36 L. Ed. 226.

Servant synonymous

See Servant.

Stenographer

A stenographer to the assistant manager of a corporation, who receives letters by dictation and transcribes the same, preserves office records, addresses and mails letters, and performs generally the duties of amanuensis in the office, whose salary is payable semi-monthly, and whose term of service is not fixed, is a "laborer," whose wages are exempt from garnishment. Cohen v. Aldrich, 62 S. E. 1015, 1016, 5 Ga. App. 256.

Subcontractor

Laborer, as subcontractor, see Subcontractor.

The mechanic's lien act of 1883 and amendments thereto, giving a lien to "mechanics, laborers, and materialmen," does not give a lien to subcontractors. Fleming v. Greener (Ind.) 90 N. E. 73, 75.

The term "laborer," as used in Mechanics' Lien Law (P. L. 1898, p. 538) § 3, giving a lien to laborers to secure wages earned, would not include a subcontractor, who excavated the cellar of a building with his teams and laborers at a specified price per cubic yard. McNab & Harlin Mfg. Co. v. Paterson Bldg. Co. (N. J.) 63 Atl. 709, 717.

A "laborer" is one who furnishes his personal service, of a grade commonly performed by persons working by the day, while a subcontractor is one who agrees to do a particular act covered by a superior contract. There is no distinction between the term "laborer" and the term "employé," as regards the element of personal service. Commonly understood, the latter is broader than the former in that it includes persons in a higher degree of employment. The term "laborer" cannot be construed as designating one who contracts for and furnishes the labor and services of another, or one who contracts for and furnishes one or more teams for work, whether with or without his own services, but such person is properly described as a contractor. Farmer v. St. Croix Power Co., 93 N. W. 830, 834, 117 Wis. 76, 98 Am. St. Rep. 914 (citing Balch v. New York & O. M. R. Co., 46 N. Y. 521; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Canada & St. L. R. Co., 26 N. E. 784, 127 Ind. 250, 11 L. R. A. 740; Watson v. Watson Mfg. Co., 30 N. J. Eq. 588; Gurney v. Atlantic & G. W. R. Co., 58 N. Y. 358).

Superintendent

A superintendent in the employ of a contractor, who occasionally assists in laying cement blocks used in the construction of the building, but whose main duties are to employ, pay off, and discharge the laborers, and supervise and direct them while at work, is not a "laborer" within, and so entitled to the benefit of, Code 1906, § 3074, part of the mechanic's lien law; but, to constitute a person a "laborer" physical toil must be the main ingredient of the services rendered by him. Williams v. Alcorn Electric Light Co., 53 South. 958, 959, 98 Miss. 468, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 137.

A superintendent of a mill, whose duties consist in overseeing the milling operations, conducting a commissary store, and keeping the books, and who does not perform any manual labor, is not a "laborer" within Const. art. 14, § 4, requiring the General Assembly to enact legislation giving mechanics and laborers a lien on the subject-matter of their labor, and does not perform "labor" within Code, § 1255, which carries the provisions of the Constitution into effect. Moore v. American Industrial Co., 50 S. E. 687, 688, 138 N. C. 304.

Under Revisal 1905, § 2016, giving laborers and mechanics a lien for work done upon buildings, a "laborer or mechanic" is one engaged in manual labor or onerous work with his hands, and so one superintending the erection of a building is not entitled to a lien for his services. Stephens v. Hicks, 72 S. E. 313, 314, 156 N. C. 239, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 354, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 272.

Switchman

A railroad switchman is a "laborer" in the sense of Code Prac. art. 644, as amended by Acts 1876, p. 123, No. 79, exempting laborers' wages from seizure under execution. Schroeder v. Collins, 87 South. 722, 113 La. 778.

Teamster

The word "laborer" means one who labors with his hands for wages, and does not include one who contracts for the hauling of lumber with his wagon and team at a fixed price per 1,000 feet of lumber hauled. Where petitioners were engaged by an insolvent mill company to haul logs with their own teams at a certain price per 1000 feet, petitioners were not "laborers" and were not entitled to a preferred lien for the amount due them, under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3339a, providing that, whenever any "laborer" may labor or perform any service in any mill by virtue of any contract or agreement, etc., he shall have a first lien. Sparks v. Crescent Lumber Co., 89 S. W. 423, 424, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 222 (citing St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co. v. Mathews, 12 S. W. 976, 75 Tex. 94).

Workman distinguished

Workman is the general term which frequently applies to one who does relatively skilled work, as contrasted with a "laborer," whose work demands strength or exertion rather than skill. State v. City of Ottawa, 113 Pac. 891, 898, 84 Kan. 100.

LABORER FOR WAGES

The phrase "laborer for wages," in a statute giving a lien to such on agricultural products, means those who cultivate on shares and receive a portion of the crop in payment for their labor, as well as those who work for money. Betts v. Ratliff, 50 Miss. 561, 570.

LACE

Articles made of, see Articles.

The names given to articles by retailers puffing their wares, and by the women who buy them, do not control in the classification of merchandise under the tariff laws, and goods are not classifiable as lace simply because they are usually dealt in by the retail trade in this country as "lace" articles. The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule J, par. 339, 30 Stat. 181, for articles of "lace" and of imitation "lace," does not include women's collars and cuffs, composed of braids sewn together by hand, and ornamented with threads and other materials. D. S. Hesse & Bro. v. United States, 154 Fed. 171, 172 (citing Kleeberg v. United States, 72 Fed. 252, 254; Sidenberg v. Robertson, 41 Fed. 763).

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule J, par. 839, 30 Stat. 181, relating to "articles made * * * of lace," includes goods made by sewing together pieces of lace produced in shapes designed to be used in making the articles; the term "lace" not being restricted to articles made up from lace that is bought and sold by the yard. Goldenberg Bros. & Co. v. United States, 157 Fed. 1003, 85 C. C. A. 678.

Straw lace sewed with thread which constitutes a substantial element of its cost, and without which the material could not be held together or be a merchantable article is not within the provision in paragraph 400, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, 30 Stat. 189, for "lace" composed "wholly" of straw, but is dutiable as a manufacture in chief value of straw, under paragraph 449 of said act (30 Stat. 193). Kurtz, Stuboeck & Co. v. United States, 136 Fed. 268, 269.

LACHES

"Laches" is an equitable doctrine applied independently of the statute of limitations to assist in reaching an equitable result. Walther v. Null, 134 S. W. 993, 999, 233 Mo. 104.

"Laches" is an equitable doctrine, proceeding, regardless of the statute of limitations, to do equity, and is only applied to work out equitable results. Adams v. Gosom, 129 S. W. 16, 21, 228 Mo. 566.

In general, "laches" is neglect to do what in the law should have been done for an unreasonable or an unexplained length of time under circumstances permitting diligence. Newberry v. Wilkinson, 199 Fed. 678, 686, 118 C. C. A. 111.

The doctrine of "laches" is an equitable principle invoked to promote, but never to defeat, justice. It has no function where the analogous action at law is not barred and no unusual conditions invoke its application. Brun v. Mann, 151 Fed. 145, 154, 80 C. C. A. 513, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 154.

"Laches" is a defense peculiar to a court of equity, the practice of which is to deny affirmative relief to a party who applies therefor after unreasonable delay." Sheffield-King Mill Co. v. Sheffield Mill & Elevator Co., 117 N. W. 447, 449, 105 Minn. 315, 127 Am. St. Rep. 574.

"Laches" is an equitable defense, and is allowed, in order to do justice, in view of the relations of the parties to each other and to the subject-matter, under the particular circumstances of the case without regard to the statute of limitations or any fixed period. Rutter v. Carothers, 122 S. W. 1056, 1059, 223 Mo. 681.

"Laches" is an equitable defense, and the right to plead it is confined to claims for purely equitable remedies, and it cannot be properly pleaded in courts of law, especially in actions where plaintiff seeks to enforce a strict legal right. Waits v. Moore, 115 S. W. 931, 932, 89 Ark. 19.

"Laches" is negligence or omission reasonably to assert a right. It exists when the omission to assert the right has continued for an unreasonable and unexplained lapse of time, and under circumstances where the delay has been prejudicial to an adverse party, and when it would be inequitable to enforce the right. Leathers v. Stewart, 79 Atl. 16, 18, 108 Me. 96, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 366.

"Laches" is defined as such neglect or omission to assert a right, as taken in conjunction with the lapse of time, more or less great, and other circumstances causing prejudice to an adverse party, operates as a bar in a court of equity. In determining what will constitute such unreasonable delay, regard will be had to circumstances which justify the delay, to the nature of the case and the relief demanded, and to the question whether the rights of the defendant, or of other persons, have been prejudiced by such delay. Cahill v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 78 Pac. 467, 469, 145 Cal. 42 (citing Taylor v. Board of Councilmen of City of Bayonne, 30 Atl. 431, 57 N. J. Law, 378; People v. Common Council of Syracuse, 78 N. Y. 56; Chinn v. Trustees, 32 Ohio St. 236; Merrill, Mandamus, § 87; Wood, Mandamus, 40).

"Laches" is neglect or omission to assert a right." As parties who inherit lands of a grantor, in case he dies intestate, have no present right during his life to bring a suit to cancel his deed on the ground of mental incapacity, laches cannot be imputed to them until a legal right attaches in them by his death. Ring v. Lawless, 60 N. E. 881, 883, 190 Ill. 520.

"When the foundations of * * * equity jurisprudence were first laid, * * * it was declared that, whenever a party invoked the extraordinary powers of a court of equity to compel the specific performance of a contract, he must proceed with both diligence and promptness. The absence of this diligence has long since been crystallized in the legal term 'laches,' which is incapable of an exact definition, and * * * is not * * * dependent upon * * * the lapse of time. * * * The defense of laches is in no sense dependent upon the statute of limitations. The lapse of time and the stale-ness of the claim are undoubtedly the governing considerations which control the application of this rule, but the parties are always held bound to proceed with reasonable diligence in the enforcement of their rights." Woodruff v. Williams, 85 Pac. 90, 99, 35 Colo. 28, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 986 (quoting and adopting definition in Hagerman v. Bates, 38 Pac. 1104, 5 Colo. App. 402).

"Laches" is not like limitations, but is a question of the inequity of permitting a claim to be enforced, and it depends on whether, under all the circumstances, plaintiff is chargeable with a want of due diligence in failing to institute proceedings before he did. Venner v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 86 N. E. 266, 273, 236 Ill. 349.

The defenses of laches, waiver, and estoppel are in a certain sense akin to each other, and run into each other; yet they are distinct defenses. "Laches," with some supporting circumstances, may run into waiver, and likewise into estoppel; but each has its own individuality. Waiver may run into estoppel. Berwind-White Coal Min. Co. v. Metropolitan S. S. Co., 173 Fed. 806, 809.

There is no absolute rule as to what is "laches." If there has been an unreasonable delay in asserting claims, or if, knowing his rights, a party does not seasonably avail himself of means at hand for their enforcement, or suffers his adversary to incur expense, enter into obligations, or otherwise change his position, or if he in any way by inaction lulls suspicion of his demands to the harm of the other, or if there has been actual or passive acquiescence in the performance of the act complained of, equity will ordinarily refuse aid for the establishment of an admitted right, especially if an injunction is asked, diligence being a prerequisite to equitable relief of that nature; but so long as there is no knowledge of the wrong committed, and no refusal to embrace opportunity to ascertain facts, there can be no laches. On discovery of infringement of rights, such reasonable expedition is required in their prompt assertion as is consistent with due deliberation as to the proper means for relief; but one who openly defies known rights, in the absence of anything to mislead him, or to indicate assent or abandonment of intent to oppose on the part of others, cannot urge as a bar to relief failure to take the most instant conceivable resort to the courts. Mere lapse of time, although an important element, is not necessarily a decisive consideration. Stewart v. Finkelstone, 92 N. E. 37, 39, 206 Mass. 28, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 634, 138 Am. St. Rep. 370.

"Laches" is of the nature of estoppel. Courts apply it to suits in equity by analogy to the statute of limitations to protect innocent parties and to avoid inequitable results. In the absence of extraordinary circumstances, such as the destruction of muniments of title, the death or removal of parties, many innocent purchasers, radical changes in the condition or value of property or its speculative character, courts of equity never apply the doctrine of laches earlier than at the expiration of the time limited for the commencement of analogous actions at law." Brown v. Arnold, 131 Fed. 723, 727, 67 C. C. A. 125 (citing Kelley v. Boettcher, 85 Fed. 55, 62, 29 C. C. A. 14, 21).

Some degree of diligence in bringing suit is required under all systems of jurisprudence. In actions at law the question of diligence is determined by the language of the statute, and, if an action is brought a day before the statutory time expires, it will be sustained, but, if the day after, it will be defeated. In suits in equity the question is determined by the circumstances of each particular case. The statute of limitations consorts with the rigid principles of the common law, but is not adapted to the flexible remedies of a court of equity, since the statute frequently works great practical injustice, while the equity doctrine of "laches" never does. Lapse of time is one of the chief ingredients in laches, but there are other ingredients of almost equal importance, such as change in the value of the property and diligence in availing one's self of means of knowledge within his control. Mexican Nat. Coal, Timber & Iron Co. v. Frank, 154 Fed. 217, 235.

"The doctrine of 'laches' rests upon equitable principles, which are neither arbitrary nor technical, and what amounts to laches depends largely upon the circumstances of each particular case. The ultimate inquiry is on which side would fall the balance of justice in sustaining or denying the defense. The important elements to be considered are the length of time which has elapsed, the nature of the acts which have been done in the meanwhile, the knowledge which the complainant had of the fraud which he charged, and the time when he acquired that knowledge, and the change in the situation during neglectful repose, either as to the loss of evidence, which would have been available to the defendant, or the advance in value of the property which may be the subject of the suit." Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Boyd, 177 Fed. 804, 823, 101 C. C. A. 18 (citing Gallagher v. Cadwell, 12 Sup. Ct. 873, 145 U. S. 368, 36 L. Ed. 738; Wilson v. Wilson, 69 Pac. 923, 41 Or. 459).

What will constitute "laches" in a given case depends on the discretion of the court, and, unless that discretion is abused, it will not be interfered with. Evans v. Woodsworth, 72 N. E. 1082, 1083, 213 Ill. 404.

"In the application of the doctrine of 'laches,' the settled rule is that courts of equity are not bound by, but that they usually act or refuse to act in analogy to, the statute of limitations." Williams v. Neely,

134 Fed. 1, 18, 67 C. C. A. 171, 69 L. R. A. 282.

The rule as to "laches" invoked by courts of equity in analogy to statutory limitations of the time within which actions may be brought in courts of law to discourage the assertion of stale claims does not involve the laches contemplated by Civ. Code, § 1691, which provides that, upon discovering the fraud, rescission must be promptly sought, if the defrauded party is free from duress and aware of his right to rescind. Richards v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 94 Pac. 393, 398, 7 Cal. App. 387.

"Laches" cannot be predicated of one whose delay is occasioned by constant assurances of his resident agent that legal proceedings would be useless and by frequent promises that payment will be procured without such proceedings. Cushing v. Schoeneman, 96 N. W. 346, 348, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 482.

The maxim that "the laws serve the vigilant, and not those who sleep," is applied only to the case where the party is silent, and permits an interference with his alleged rights, without adequately and seasonably protecting them. Where complainant, a licensee of the exclusive right to use and sell patented phonographs and graphophones in a certain district, brought suit against defendant, a corporation, which succeeded to the rights of the licensor, for breach of covenant in the license within five years after defendant's incorporation, and within less than three years after the termination of fruitless negotiations to settle, and there was no evidence that complainant had acquiesced in defendant's intrusion into such field, complainant was not barred by "laches." New York Phonograph Co. v. Edison, 136 Fed. 600, 607 (citing Bradford v. Belknap Motor Co., 105 Fed. 63; Ide v. Trorlicht, Duncker & Renard Carpet Co., 115 Fed. 137, 53 C. C. A. 341; Richardson v. D. M. Osborne & Co., 93 Fed. 828, 36 C. C. A. 610; Saxlehner v. Elsner & Mendelson Co., 19 Sup. Ct. 886, 173 U. S. 704).

Change in status of parties or property

It is only prejudicial delay which constitutes "laches," but it does not follow that such prejudice must always be affirmatively shown. McNeill v. McNeill, 170 Fed. 289, 291, 95 C. C. A. 485.

"Laches" is not a matter of time merely, but of inequity, and delay will not bar a suit in equity before it would be barred at law by limitation, unless the delay has been prejudicial to the defendant. Brissell v. Knapp, 155 Fed. 809, 810 (citing Kelley v. Boettcher, 85 Fed. 55, 62, 29 C. C. A. 14; Williamson v. Monroe, 101 Fed. 322, 330; Gallher v. Cadwell, 12 Sup. Ct. 873, 875, 145 U. S. 368, 373, 36 L. Ed. 738).

"Laches" is such delay in enforcing one's right as works disadvantage to another, or such delay as will warrant the presumption that the party has waived his right. Snyder v. Charleston & S. Bridge Co., 63 S. E. 616, 619, 65 W. Va. 1, 131 Am. St. Rep. 947.

"Laches" is negligence by which another has been led into changing his condition as to the property or right in question, making it inequitable to allow the negligent party to be preferred on his legal right. Hughes v. Wallace (Ky.) 118 S. W. 324, 326.

"Laches" is not mere delay, but a delay in enforcing rights against another until the condition of the latter has in good faith become so changed that he cannot be restored to his former state. Tatum v. Arkansas Lum. Co., 146 S. W. 135, 136, 108 Ark. 251.

"Laches" is not, like limitation, a mere matter of time, but principally a question of the inequity of permitting the claim to be enforced and inequity founded upon some change in the condition of relations of the property of parties." Ryason v. Dunten, 73 N. E. 74, 77, 164 Ind. 85 (quoting and adopting definition in Gallher v. Cadwell, 12 Sup. Ct. 873, 145 U. S. 368, 36 L. Ed. 738).

"Laches," unlike limitation, does not depend upon time, but principally on the inequity of permitting the claim to be enforced; an inequity founded upon some change in the condition, or the relations of the property or the parties, and in legal significance constitutes not mere delay, but delay that works a disadvantage to another; and whether it exists in a particular case is a question addressed to the sound discretion of the court, depending upon all the surrounding facts. Shearer v. Hütterische Bruder Gemeinde, 134 N. W. 63, 65, 28 S. D. 509.

"Mere delay in bringing a suit will not deprive a party of his remedy, unless such neglect has so prejudiced the other party, by loss of testimony or means of proof or changed relations, that it would be unjust to now permit him to exercise his right." Farr v. Hauenstein, 61 Atl. 147, 69 N. J. Eq. 740 (citing Lundy v. Seymour, 35 Atl. 893, 55 N. J. Eq. 1, 9).

The lapse of time which might induce the application of the doctrine of laches is not a determined period, and depends upon the circumstances of the particular case. One principle pervades all cases involving the defense of laches, and that is that not only must there be a seemingly necessary delay on the part of the plaintiff in bringing or prosecuting his action, but that, by reason of some change in the condition or relations of the property or parties occurring during the period of delay, it would be inequitable to permit the claim of plaintiff to be enforced. London & San Francisco Bank v. Dexter, Horton & Co., 126 Fed. 593, 601, 61 C. C. A. 515 (quoting Gallher v. Cadwell, 12 Sup. Ct. 873, 145 U. S. 368, 36 L. Ed. 738; Halstead v. Grinnan, 14 Sup. Ct. 641, 152 U. S. 412, 38 L. Ed. 495; Wheeling Bridge & Terminal R. Co. v. Reymann Brewing Co., 90 Fed. 189, 32 C. C. A. 571).

"Statutes of limitation," as applied in courts of law, are inflexible and framed upon the theory that mere lapse of time, irrespective of other considerations, should bar the claim, while the doctrine of "laches," applied in courts of equity, is sufficiently flexible to give reasonable effect to the special circumstances of any case, and rests, not alone upon the lapse of time, but upon the inequity of permitting the claim to be enforced, because of some change in the condition or relations of the property or the parties. Stevens v. Grand Central Min. Co., 133 Fed. 28, 31, 67 C. C. A. 284 (citing Hammond v. Hopkins, 12 Sup. Ct. 418, 143 U. S. 224, 250, 36 L. Ed. 134; Townsend v. Vanderwerker, 16 Sup. Ct. 258, 160 U. S. 171, 186, 40 L. Ed. 383; Ward v. Sherman, 24 Sup. Ct. 227, 192 U. S. 168, 176, 48 L. Ed. 391; Bryan v. Kales, 10 Sup. Ct. 435, 134 U. S. 126, 135, 33 L. Ed. 829).

"'Laches' in bringing an action cannot be successfully interposed as a defense, unless delay in this respect has injuriously affected the party against whom suit is brought, or his position has been altered to his prejudice thereby." Where a husband fraudulently conveyed a boarding house to his wife, and continued the business in the same manner as before, and the wife devoted no more time or money in improving the property and business than she would have done had title remained in her husband, so that laches by the husband's creditor in instituting a creditors' suit not having been prejudicial to the wife, it was no defense to the bill. Helm v. Brewster, 93 Pac. 1101, 1105, 42 Colo. 25; Morgan v. King, 63 Pac. 416, 27 Colo. 539; Farris v. Wirt, 63 Pac. 946, 16 Colo. App. 1; Du Bois v. Clark, 12 Colo. App. 220, 55 Pac. 750).

"'Laches' will bar an equity, but lapse of time alone may not be sufficient to constitute laches. It depends upon whether conditions have been changed, resulting in injury to defendant on account of the delay." Where the state's deed to swamp lands is regular on its face, a suit by the state to cancel the deed on the ground of its insufficiency and the falsity of the affidavits as to the extent of cultivation may be barred by equitable limitations, and it is prima facie guilty of "laches," where more than the statutory period has elapsed since the execution of the deed, and the facts presented do not excuse the delay. State v. Warner Valley Stock Co., 106 Pac. 780, 786, 56 Or. 283.

"Laches" is not mere delay, but delay working a disadvantage to another, and, so long as parties are in the same condition, it matters little whether one presses a right promptly or slowly within limits allowed by law; and the doctrine of laches is founded on the maxims of equity that he who seeks equity must do equity, and that he who comes into equity must come with clean hands, and that the law serves the vigilant, and its object is to exact of a party fair dealing with his adversary. Comans v. Tapley, 57 South. 567, 573, 101 Miss. 203.

"'Laches,' in legal significance, is not mere delay, but delay that works a disadvantage to another. So long as parties are in the same condition, it matters little whether one presses a right promptly or slowly, within the limits allowed by law; but when, knowing his rights, he takes no steps to enforce them until the condition of the other party has in good faith become so changed that he cannot be restored to his former state if the right be then enforced, delay becomes inequitable, and operates as an estoppel against the assertion of the right. This disadvantage may come from loss of evidence, change of title, intervention of equities, and other causes, for, where the court sees negligence on one side and injury therefrom on the other, it is a ground for denial of relief." Chancellor v. Banks, 123 S. W. 650, 651, 92 Ark. 497 (quoting and adopting definition in Osceola Land Co. v. Henderson, 100 S. W. 896, 898, 81 Ark. 432, 439); Ruckman v. Cox, 59 S. E. 760, 762, 63 W. Va. 74.

"One important principle involved in the term 'laches' is that after a long lapse of years, during which testimony is impaired or destroyed, witnesses remove or die, their recollection is dimmed or lost, and papers, letters, documents, books, records, etc., are lost or destroyed, or, if not lost or destroyed, are in the hands of persons not familiar with their contents, liable to misinterpret them, unable to supply their defects, or correct the same, or explain them from the memory of living witnesses, the defendant is at the complete mercy of any claimants who may wish to take advantage of the situation. Time impairs and destroys evidence of the true facts, and makes it practically impossible to meet positive testimony of the complainants, whether the same be true or untrue. A court of equity, therefore, finding itself unable to render substantial justice between the parties, asserts the principle of laches on the ground of public policy and for the repose of property rights." This declaration of the master is in entire harmony with our view of what is shown by this record and the law applicable to it. Dempster v. Rosehill Cemetery Co., 68 N. E. 1070, 1074, 206 Ill. 261.

Delay alone insufficient

Mere delay is not of itself laches, but the delay must have worked injury to another. Wills v. Nehalem Coal Co., 96 Pac. 528, 535, 52 Or. 70.

"Laches" is not mere delay, but delay that works a disadvantage to another, and, so long as the parties are in the same condition, the failure to assert a right, before the running of statutory limitations, is not laches.

Stephens v. Dubois, 76 Atl. 656, 660, 31 R. I. 138, 140 Am. St. Rep. 741.

The doctrine of "laches" as a defense to a suit in equity implies something more than a mere lapse of time; and, to constitute a defense, it must be unreasonable. Baird v. Erie R. Co., 129 N. Y. Supp. 329, 347, 72 Misc. Rep. 162.

In order that "laches" may bar a suit in equity, it must appear that, beyond the mere lapse of time, it would be inequitable in some matter of substance to permit the claimant to assert his alleged right as against those having enjoyed the same in repose in the meanwhile. Stuart v. Holland, 179 Fed. 969, 971.

The defense of "laches" does not depend on any limitations, but is in the nature of an equitable estoppel, and a great lapse of time, if reasonably excused and without danger to defendant, may be ignored, while slight delay, accompanied by circumstances of negligence, apparent acquiescence, or danger of defendant's position, is sufficient to establish laches. Likens v. Likens, 117 N. W. 799, 801, 136 Wis. 321.

"Limitations" and "laches," when applied to the period within which an equitable right may be asserted, are not synonymous.

"Limitations" signify that fixed statutory period, whether expressly applicable to suits in chancery or followed by analogy, while "laches" signifies unreasonable delay independent of statute or any fixed period of time. "Laches" also involves prejudice, actual or implied, resulting from the delay. It does not arise from delay alone, but from delay which works disadvantage to another, as the defense of laches is neither a limitation nor an estoppel, but partakes of the characteristics of both. Wilder's Ex'r v. Wilder, 72 Atl. 203, 205, 82 Vt. 123.

"The general rule as to 'laches' is that, where the action is at law, mere delay will not bar the action, unless it covers the statutory period, and unless the doctrine of estoppel can be successfully invoked." Thomas v. Holmes, 120 N. W. 636, 142 Iowa, 288 (citing Doyle v. Burns, 99 N. W. 195, 123 Iowa, 488).

No arbitrary rule exists for determining when a demand becomes stale, or what delay will be excused; and the question of "laches" is to be decided upon the particular circumstances of each case. Unreasonable delay alone, independently of any statute of limitations, may operate as a bar to equitable relief. Generally, however, when a statute of limitations is applicable, lapse of time alone, short of the period of limitation, will not operate as bar. "In applying the doctrine of 'laches,' the inquiry should be whether the adverse party has been prejudiced by the delay in bringing the action, and whether a reasonable excuse is offered for the delay." Harrison v. Rice, 114 N. W. 151, 152, 78 Neb.

When the assertion of the right is neglected or omitted for a period of time more or less great, and under such circumstances as to cause prejudice to an adverse party, it may operate as a bar in equity. Although a proper ingredient in the law of "laches," the instances seem to be rare where courts have declared that mere lapse of time may effect a positive bar, even in case of purely equitable jurisdiction, while, on the other hand, relief has frequently been granted, notwithstanding great delay, when substantial justice could yet be done between the parties. Therefore mere lapse of time where the parties remain in the same relative position, the delay working no serious wrong to the adverse party and justice being possible, will not operate as a bar in equity. Roberts v. Braffett, 92 Pac. 789, 801, 33 Utah, 51 (quoting Hamilton v. Dooley, 15 Utah, 280, 49 Pac. 769, and citing 5 Words and Phrases, pp. 3969-3972).

It is a well-established doctrine that the defense of laches does not rest entirely upon lapse of time, nor require any specific period of delay, as does the statute of limitations. But, in order to constitute "laches," there must be something more than mere delay by the plaintiff, accompanied by an expenditure of money or effort on the part of the defendant. It must also appear that it will be inequitable to enforce the claim. Verdugo Canon Water Co. v. Verdugo, 93 Pac. 1021, 1029, 152 Cal. 655.

"Laches," in a general sense, is such negligence in bringing an action or otherwise asserting one's right as will preclude him from obtaining equitable relief. * * * Mere delay does not constitute laches, unless the circumstances were such as to make the delay blamable. Whether the delay has been culpable or not depends upon many circumstances, such as knowledge of the facts, infancy or other personal disability, mistake, undisturbed possession, and the consequences of the delay to others. * * * The practical question in each case is whether there has been such an unreasonable delay in asserting a known right, resulting in prejudice to others, as would make it inequitable to grant the relief prayed for." Lloyd v. Simons, 105 N. W. Rep. 902, 903, 97 Minn. 315 (citing and adopting 1 Thomp. Trials, § 1437; 16 Cyc. pp. 152, 167; 5 Words and Phrases, p. 3969; Sanborn v. Eads, 36 N. W. 338, 38 Minn. 211; Hayes v. Carroll, 78 N. W. 1017, 74 Minn. 134; Wall v. Melike, 94 N. W. 688, 89 Minn. 232).

A delay in the prosecution of a suit to foreclose a mortgage does not prevent the granting of proper relief where either party could have compelled a hearing, but both failed to act, especially since delay unaccompanied by circumstances, which in some way show inexcusable negligence, which will result in giving the party in fault an unfair advantage, or which will produce injustice in some way, is ordinarily, when standing alone, insufficient to prevent relief on the ground of laches. Utah Commercial & Savings Bank v. Fox (Utah) 120 Pac. 840, 845.

Knowledge of facts or rights implied

"Laches" is the creature of circumstance. It is inaction when, in good conscience, there should be action. Inactivity, when it is not blamable, is not laches. No one can be charged with negligence in the assertion of his rights unless he knew them, or is blamable for not knowing them. There is no such thing as acquiescence in a wrong, unless there is notice or knowledge of that wrong. Kessler & Co. v. Ensley Co., 129 Fed. 397, 418.

Where a petition to revoke a bankrupt's discharge for fraud alleged that the fraud was not known to petitioners until after the discharge, and they had no opportunity before that time to interpose the fraud in opposition to the discharge as alleged, they were not chargeable with "laches." In re Griffin Bros., 154 Fed. 537, 539.

Full knowledge of all the facts concurring with a delay for unreasonable length of time are the essential elements of the defense of laches, and laches does not begin to run until knowledge is shown to exist. Wills v. Nehalem Coal Co., 96 Pac. 528, 535, 52 Or. 70.

"Laches" rests in a large degree on acquiescence, which presupposes notice of a status opposed to the title or equity sought to be enforced. Butt v. McAlpine, 52 South. 420, 423, 167 Ala. 521.

The doctrine of "laches" carries with it the idea of acquiescence on the part of him charged, and so it cannot be invoked to bar the right of one non compos mentis to set aside a fraudulent conveyance made by his guardian. Bradley v. Singletary (Ala.) 59 South. 58.

"Laches is not, like limitation, a mere matter of time, but rather a question of the inequity of granting the relief." Laches cannot be successfully invoked in aid of a publisher of an infringing article, when it does not appear that the owner of the copyrighted article had knowledge of the infringement, or that he had notice of any fact sufficient to put him on inquiry. Encyclopædia Britannica Co. v. American Newspaper Ass'n, 130 Fed. 460, 467 (citing Gallihier v. Cadwell, 12 Sup. Ct. 873, 145 U. S. 368, 36 L. Ed. 738; Old Colony Trust Co. v. Dubuque Light & Traction Co., 89 Fed. 794).

"Laches" has been defined to be such neglect or omission to assert a right as, taken in conjunction with lapse of time more or less great and other circumstances causing prejudice to an adverse party, operates as a bar in court of equity. The petitioner, having no notice or knowledge of the proceedings to probate a will, who files a petition to set aside the probate within a year of the date of the probate, is not guilty of laches. Wright v. Simpson, 65 N. E. 628, 631, 200 Ill. 56.

As neglect of legal duty

Laches is such neglect to assert a right as taken in connection with lapse of time and other circumstances causing prejudice to another party operates as a bar in a court of equity, and, to constitute laches, there must be a legal duty to do some act, a failure to do that act, and attending circumstances which cause prejudice to the adverse party. Houck v. Houck, 76 Atl. 581, 585, 112 Md. 122.

"Laches" consists in an inexcusable delay in asserting a right. It involves negligence, and arises from a failure in duty. Without such failure there can be no laches. Allis v. Hall, 56 Atl. 637, 642, 76 Conn. 822.

"Laches" may be regarded as an equitable statute of limitations, and is applied to equity cases in analogy to legal statutes applied to cases at law. And generally he would not be barred in equity. In Babb v. Sullivan, 21 S. E. 277, 43 S. C. 436, 441, Judge Benet gives the following definition of laches: "Delay is not the sole factor that constitutes laches. If it were so, some period fixed by statute or by common law of the courts would afford a safe and unvarying rule. Laches connotes, not only undue lapse of time, but also negligence and opportunity to have acted sooner; and all three factors must be satisfactorily shown before the bar in equity is complete. Other factors of lesser importance sometimes demand consideration, such as the nature of the property involved, or the subject-matter of the suit, or the like. As a definition of laches, however, it is sufficiently correct to say that it is the neglecting or omitting to do what in law should have been done, and this for an unreasonable and unexplained length of time, and in circumstances which afforded opportunity for diligence." Brock v. Kirkpatrick, 52 S. E. 592, 596, 597, 72 S. C. 491 (citing Wagner v. Sanders, 39 S. E. 950, 62 S. C. 73, 89).

Quoting from Demuth v. Old Town Bank, 37 Atl. 266, 85 Md. 326, 60 Am. St. Rep. 322, "strictly speaking," "and using the term as it is understood in law, 'laches' is such neglect or omission to assert a right as, taken in conjunction with lapse of time more or less great, and other circumstances causing prejudice to an adverse party, operates as a bar in a court of equity." Lord Ellenborough observed in Sebag v. Abitbol, 4 Maule & S. 462: "Laches is a neglect to do something which by law a man is obliged to do." Obviously, then, there must be a duty to do some act, a failure to do that duty, and attendant circumstances which cause prejudice to an adverse party, before the doctrine can be successfully invoked. Mere lapse of time, without more, unless of sufficient duration to amount to and constitute the bar of the statute of limitations, will not be sufficient. In a suit filed April 22, 1901, to vacate a fraudulent conveyance of land on a claim of indebtedness of the vendor dating from 1885, the vendor and vendee were made defendants. The vendor answered on the day suit was filed, admitting the indebtedness, but denying fraudulent intent. The vendee answered May 28, 1901, denying the fraud, and filed with his answer as an exhibit the affidavit of the vendor that she had not authorized any person to file an answer for her, and that she was never indebted to plaintiff. Plaintiff died May 31, 1901. The vendor died January 29, 1902, and the vendee died May 1, 1902, having on January 3, 1902, deeded the property to another. On March 18, 1902, a corporation purchased the property, and on May 22, 1902, discovered the suit, filed a petition setting up interest, and asked to be made a party, which was granted. After various other steps in the proceedings, the plaintiff's administrator filed a petition on June 1, 1903, to revive the action, and have himself made plaintiff. Held, that "laches" could not be predicated of the administrator's failure, prior to the death of the vendor, to take notice of the vendor's affidavit. Nor was it laches for the administrator to fail to take notice of the fraudulent vendee's suggestion of the abatement of the suit by the death of the original plaintiff. The administrator's failure on February 14, 1902, at the time of procuring an order admitting him as plaintiff, to mention the death of the fraudulent vendor, and to make the first purchaser pendente lite a party, was not laches. Laches could not be imputed because of the administrator's delay of four days from the time letters were issued to him on the estate of the original plaintiff and the filing of his petition to be made plaintiff in the cause; it appearing that after her death a contest arose as to the appointment, which was not adjusted until three days before the letters were issued. Nor could laches be imputed on account of the staleness of the claim when suit was inaugurated; there being nothing on the face of the bill to indicate how long the indebtedness had been overdue. Sinclair v. Auxiliary Realty Co. of Baltimore City, 57 Atl. 664, 668, 99 Md. 223.

As a presumption

"It has always been a principle of equity to discourage stale demands, and 'laches' is often a defense wholly independent of the statute of limitations. * * * Mere delay is not always laches, and laches in the assertion of a right is not always sufficient to defeat it. The laches must be such as to afford a reasonable presumption of satisfaction or abandonment of the claim or such as to prevent a proper defense by reason of the death of the parties, loss of evidence, or otherwise. * * * Whether the lapse of time is sufficient to bar a recovery must of necessity depend upon the particular circumstances of each case." An absentee's delay of 15 years in suing for a legacy which had been paid to an administrator for him was not such "laches" as to bar his right of action, where the executor, whose duty it was to pay the legacy, was still living, and no evidence had been lost or destroyed, and there was no uncertainty in the amount due, nor any presumption of payment. Selden v. Kennedy, 52 S. E. 635, 637, 104 Va. 826.

LACTARENE

Casein is "lactarene," as enumerated in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 594, 30 Stat. 199. United States v. Brownell, 166 Fed. 1022, 92 C. C. A. 668.

So-called casein industrielle, which is produced by drying the substance left after drawing off the whey from skimmed milk that has been allowed to sour, held to be "lactarene," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 594, 30 Stat. 199. *B. Depressions locally called lakes or ponds which go dry at times, and, when not entirely dry are covered with stale stagnant water, with an unhealthful green scum, and which are largely formed from the backwater of a river in wet weather, are not "lakes" within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 6141, which provides that a drain shall not be located so close to any lake covering 10 acres of ground as to lower its water level, etc. Shields v. Pyles (Ind.) 99 N. E. 742, 745.

The fact that there is a current from a higher to a lower level does not make that a river which would otherwise be a "lake," nor does a lake lose its distinctive character because there is a current in it for a certain distance tending towards a river, which forms its outlet. Hastie v. Jenkins, 101 Pac. 495, 497, 53 Wash. 21.

As coloring matter

Lakes containing lead are more specifically provided for as "colors * * * containing lead," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 54, 30 Stat. 154, than as "lakes * * * not specially provided for," under paragraph 58, 30 Stat. 154. United States v. G. Selgle Co., 175 Fed. 885, 886.

LAMB

As sheep, see Sheep.

LAMP

As cruel and unusual weapon, see Cruel and Unusual Weapon.

Where a witness, in speaking of an electric light, spoke of it as the "lamp," it was held that the jury were not bound to believe that he referred to the glass bulb alone, in contradistinction to the whole arrangement of wires, bulb, and socket, which together, according to common speech, constituted the "lamp." Saures v. Stevens Mfg. Co., 82 N. E. 694, 696, 196 Mass. 543.

LAMP HOLE

"Lamp holes," in a resolution for the construction of a sanitary sewer, refer to small openings to permit lowering of a lamp for the purpose of inspection. They are common in the construction of sewers. Comstock v. City of Eagle Grove, 111 N. W. 51, 52, 133 Iowa, 589.
